CONTROLLER, Fr. contrerolleur, Lat. contrarotulator.] An Overseer or officer relating to public accounts, &c. And we have divers officers of this name; as controller of the King's Household; of the Navy; of the Customs; of the Excise; of the Mint, &c. And in our courts, there is the controller of the Hamper, of the Pipe, and of the Pell, &c. The office of Controller of the Household, is to control the accounts of the Green Cloth; and he sits with the Lord Steward and other officers in the counting-house, for daily taking the accounts of all expences of the household. The Controller of the Navy controls the payment of wages; examines and audits accounts; and inquires into rates of stores for shipping, &c. Controllers of the Customs and Excise, their office is to control the accounts of those revenues. And the Controller of the Mint, controls the payment of wages, and accounts relating to the same. Controller of the Hamper is an officer in the Chancery attending the Lord Chancellor daily in term-time, and upon seal-days; whose office is to take all things sealed from the Clerk of the Hamper, inclosed in bags of leather, and to note the just number and effect of all things so received, and enter the same in a book, with all the duties appertaining to his Majesty, and other officers for the same. The Controller of the Pipe is an officer of the Exchequer, who writes out summons twice every year to the sheriffs to levy the farms and debts of the Pipe; and keeps a controlment of the Pipes, &c. Controller of the Pell is also an officer of the Exchequer, of which sort there are two, who are the Chamberlain's clerks, that do or should keep a controlment of the Pell, of receipts and goings out: and this officer was originally such as took notes of other officers' accounts or receipts, to the intent to discover if they dealt amiss, and was ordained for the Prince's better security. Fleta. lib. 1. cap. 18: Stat. 12 Ed. 3. cap. 3. This last seems to be the original use and design of all Controllers.

CONTROVER, controveur] Signifies in our law one that of his own head deviles or invents false news. 2 Inst. 227.

CONVENABLE, Fr.] Agreeable. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 21. See Covenable.

CONVENIENT, conveniens.] Of the use of this word, Sir Edw. Coke in his Institute says,—Non solum quod licet sed quod est conveniens est considerandum, nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. 1 Inst. 66.

CONVENT, conventus.] Signifies the fraternity of an abbey or priory; as societas doth the number of fellows in a college. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35.—See title Monastery, Mortmain.

CONVENTICLE, conventiculum.] A private assembly or meeting for the exercise of religion; first used as a term of disgrace for the meetings of Wickliffe in this nation, above two hundred years since: and now applied to the illegal meetings of the Non-conformists: it is mentioned in the the statutes 2 Hen. 4. c. 15; 1 H. 6. c. 3. and 16 Car. 2. c. 4; which statute was made to prevent and suppress conventicles: and by Stat. 22 Car. 2. cap. 1, It is enacted, that if any persons of the age of sixteen years, subjects of this kingdom, shall be present at any conventicle, where there are five or more assembled, they shall be fined 5 s. for the first offence, and 10 s. for the second; and persons preaching incur a penalty of 20 l. Also suffering a meeting to be held in a house, &c. is liable to 20 l. penalty. Justices of peace have power to enter such houses, and seize persons assembled, &c. And if they neglect their duty, they shall forfeit 100 l. And if any constable, &c. know of such meetings, and do not inform a justice of peace, or chief magistrate, he shall forfeit 5 l. But the Stat. 1 W. & M. ft. 1. c. 18, ordains that protestant dissenters shall be exempted from penalties: though if they meet in a house, with the doors locked, barred, or bolted, such dissenters shall have no benefit from that statute. By Stat. 10 An. c. 2, Officers of the government, &c. present at any conventicle, at which there shall be ten persons, if the Royal family be not prayed for in express words, shall forfeit 40 l. and be disabled. See titles Heresy, Non-conformists, Religion.

CONVENTIO, A word used in ancient law-pleadings, for an agreement or covenant: as A. B. queritur, &c. de C. D. &c. pro eo quod non teneat conventionem, &c. There is a strange record of the court of the manor of Hatfield, in Com. Ebor. held anno 11 Ed. 3, relative to a convention to sell the Devil, and on earnest given, and non-delivery, action brought; which on hearing was adjudged in infernum.

CONVENTIONE, A writ that lies for the breach of any covenant in writing, whether real or personal: and it is called a Writ of Covenant. Pig. Orig. 115: F. N. B. 145.

CONVENTION, A parliament assembled, but in which no act is passed, or bill signed. Dict.

The term Convention, is rather applied to the meeting of the Lords and Commons, without the assent of, or being called together by, the King; and which can only be justified ex necessitate rei.

Of this nature was the Convention-Parliament, which restored King Charles II. and which met above a month before his return: the Lords by their own authority, and the Commons in pursuance of writs issued in the name of the keepers of the liberty of England by authority of parliament. And if this Convention had not so met, it was morally impossible that the kingdom should have been settled in peace.

In a similar manner, at the time of the Revolution, A. D. 1688, the Lords and Commons by their own authority, and upon the summons of the Prince of Orange, (afterward William III.) met in a Convention, and therein disposed of the Crown and Kingdom. And it is declared by Stat. 1 W. & M. ft. 1. c. 1. that this Convention was really the two houses of parliament, notwithstanding the want of writs or other defects of form.

If we may be allowed to suppose a possible case, that the whole Royal line should at any time fail and become extinct, which would indisputably vacate the throne; in this situation it seems reasonable to presume that the body of the nation, consisting of Lords and Commons, would have a right to meet and settle the government: otherwise there must be no government at all. But whenever the throne is full, no national meeting, nor any meeting pretending to be such, can be legal, but the parliament assembled by command of the King. See title Parliament. and 1 Comm. 151, 2.

The Constitution of Great Britain having placed the representation of the nation, and the expression of the national will in the parliament, no other meeting or Convention even of every individual in the kingdom, would be a competent organ to express that will; and meetings of such a nature tending merely to sedition, and to delude the people into an imaginary assertion of rights, which they had before delegated to their representatives in parliament, could only tend to introduce Anarchy and Confusion; and to overturn every settled principle of government. An act of parliament was passed in Ireland, in the year 1793 to prevent any such meetings or Conventions; and a few ignorant individuals, who in the same year had dared to assemble under that title in Scotland, were quickly dispersed, and their leaders convicted of seditious practices; for which they were sentenced to transportation. See further titles Parliament, Treason, Seditious Assemblies.

CONVENTUAL CHURCH, A church that consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion; or of Dean and Chapter, or other societies of spiritual men.

CONVERSION, Is where a person finding or having the goods of another in his possession, converts them to his own use, without the consent of the owner, and for which the proprietor may maintain an action of Trover and Conversion against him.—And refusal to restore goods is, prima facie, sufficient evidence of a conversion, though it does not amount to a conversion. 10 Rep. 56: 3 Comm. 152. See title Trover.

CONVERSOS. The Jews here in England were formerly called Conversos, because they were converted to the Christian religion. King Hen. III. built an house for them in London, and allowed them a competent provision or subsistence for their lives; and this house was called Domus Conversorum. But by reason of the vast expences of the wars, and the increase of those converts, they became a burden to the Crown; so that they were placed in abbeys and monasteries for their support and maintenance. And the Jews being afterwards banished, King Ed. III. in the 51st year of his reign, gave this house which had been used for the converted Jews, for the keeping of the Rolls; and it is said to be the same which was till lately enjoyed by the Master of the Rolls. Blount. Hag: Co. Lit. 271 b.

CONVEYANCE, A deed which passes or conveys land from one man to another. Conveyance by feoffment, and livery, was the general conveyance at Common law; and if there was a tenant in possession, so that livery could not be made, then was the reversion granted, and the tenant always attorned: also upon the same reason, a lease, and release was held to be a good conveyance, to pass an estate; but the lessee was to be in actual possession, before the release. But the lease is now considered as operating so as to give the possession, which it does in point of law.

By the Common law, when an estate did not pass by feoffment, the vendor made a lease for years, and the lessee lessee actually entered; and the lessor granted the reversion to another, and the lessee attained afterwards, when a reversion was to be granted, then likewise was a lease for years usually made, and the lessee entered (as before) and then the lessor released to him. But after the statute of 28, it became an opinion, that if a lease for years was made upon a valuable consideration, a release might operate upon it without an actual entry of the lessee; because the statute did execute the lease, and raised an use present to the lessee: and Jessent v. Warr was the first who pressed this way. 2 M. 251, 252.

The most common uses now in use are uses of gift, bargain and sale, lease and release, fines and recoveries, settlements, &c.

The following further observations on conveyances at Common law and those which derive their effect from the statute of Uses, are abridged from the long and learned note on 1 Inst. 271 b, to which the curious enquirer is referred for a more particular investigation of the subject. See also this Dict. titles Deed; Estate; Lease and Release; Limitation; Trusts; Uses.

FEOFFMENTS and GRANTS were the two chief modes used in the Common law for transferring property. The most comprehensive definition which can be given of a FEOFFMENT seems to be, a conveyance of corporeal hereditaments, by delivery of the possession, upon, or within view of, the hereditaments conveyed. This delivery was thus made, that the lord and the other tenants met it by witnesses to it. No charter of feoffment was necessary, it only served as an authentication of the transaction, and when it was used, the lands were supposed to be transferred, not by the charter, but by the livery which it authenticated. Soon after the Conquest, or perhaps towards the end of the Saxon government, all estates were called fee, the original and proper import of the word feoffment is, the grant of a fee. It came afterwards to signify a grant with livery of seisin of a free inheritance to a man and his heirs, more respect being had to the perpetuity, than to the feudal tenure, of the estate granted. In early times, after the Conquest, charters of feoffment were various in point of form. In the time of Ed. I. they began to be drawn up in a more uniform stile. The more ancient of them generally run with the words ad, cum, et, et de. It was not till a later period that homo came into use. The more ancient feoffments were also usually made in consideration of the homage and service of the feoffee, and to hold of the feoffor and his heirs. But after the Stat. Quia emptores (18 Ed. I. 1) feoffments were always made to hold to the chief lords of the fee, without the words pro homine et feodo. See further, 1 Inst. 6 a. 271 b.

The proper limitation of a feoffment is to him and his heirs, but feoffments were often made of conditional fees, (or of estates, as they are now called,) and of life estates, to which may be added, feoffments of churches given in frankmarriage and frankalmoigne. To make the feoffment complete, the feoffor used to give the feoffee seisin of the lands: this is what the feudists call Inveiture. It was often made by symbolical tradition, but it was always made upon or within view of the lands. When the king made a feoffment he issued his writ to the sheriff, or some other person to deliver seisin: other great men did the same, and this gave rise to powers of attorney. See Mod. Form. p. 5.

A GRANT in the original signification of the word, is a conveyance or transfer of an incorporeal hereditament. As livery of seisin could not be had of these, the transfer of them was always made by writing, in order to produce that notoriety, which in the transfer of corporeal hereditaments was produced by delivery of the possession. But in other respects a feoffment and a grant did not materially differ.

Such was the original distinction between a feoffment and a grant; but from this real difference in their subjects matter only, a difference was supposed to exist in their operation. A feoffment visibly operated on the possession; a grant could only operate on the right of the party conveying. Now as possession and freehold were synonymous terms, no person being considered to have the possession of the lands but he who had at least an estate of freehold in them, a conveyance which was considered as transferring the possession, must necessarily be considered as transferring an estate of freehold; or, to speak more accurately, as transferring the whole fee. But this reasoning could not apply to grants, their essential quality being that of transferring things which did not lie in possession: they therefore could only transfer the right, that is, could only transfer that estate which the party had a right to convey. It is in this sense the expressions are to be understood, that a feoffment is a real and a grant a rightful conveyance. See title Gift.

This appears to have been the outline of conveyances at Common law. The introduction of uses produced a great revolution in this respect. Uses at the Common law, were, in most respects what trusts are now. When a feoffment was made to uses, the legal estate was in the feoffor. He held the possession, did the feudal duties, and was in the eye of the law the tenant of the fee. The person to whose use he was seized, called the cestui que use, had the beneficial property of the lands, had a right to the profits, and a right to call upon the feoffee to convey the estate to him, and to defend it against strangers. This right at first depended on the conscience of the feoffee: if he withheld the profits from the cestui que use, or refused to convey the estate as he directed, the feoffee was without remedy. To redress this grievance the writ of subpana was devised, or rather adapted from the Common-law courts, by the court of Chancery, to oblige the feoffee to attend in court and disclose the trust, and then the court compelled him to execute it.

This use, were established: they were not considered as issuing out of, or annexed to the land, as a rent or condition, or a right of common, but as a trust reposed in the feoffee, that he should dispose of the lands at the discretion of the cestui que use, permit him to receive the rents, and in all other respects have the beneficial property of the lands. To all other persons except the cestui que use, the feoffee was as much the real owner of the fee as if he did not hold it to the use of another. His wife was entitled to dower, his infant heir was in wardship to the lord, and upon his attainder the estate was forfeited.

To remedy these inconveniences, the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, was passed; by which the possession was devested out of the persons seized to the use, and transferred to the cestui que use. For by that statute it is enacted "that when when any person shall be seised of any lands to the use, confidence, or trust of any other person or persons, by reason of any bargain, sale, feoffment, fine, recovery, contract, agreement, will, or otherwise; in such case the persons having the use, confidence or trust, should from thenceforth be deemed and adjudged in lawful seisin, estate and possession of and in the lands, in the same quality, manner and form as they had before in the use."—There seems to be little doubt but that the intention of the Legislature in passing this act, was utterly to annihilate the existence of uses considered as distinct from the possession. But they have been preserved under the appellation of trusts. The courts hesitated much before they allowed them under this new name. And at length secret modes of transferring the possession itself, have been discovered, and have totally superseded that notorious and publick mode of transferring property, which the Common law required, and the statute intended to restore; and many modifications or limitations of real property have been allowed, which the Common law did not admit. See title Lease and Release.

A son did give and grant lands to his mother, and her heirs; though this was a defective conveyance at Common law, yet it was adjudged good by way of use, to support the intention of the donor, and therefore, by these words, an use did arise to the mother by way of covenant to stand seised 2 Lev. 225. A feoffment without livery and seisin, will not enure as a grant; but where made in consideration of a marriage, &c. it has been adjudged, that it did enure as a covenant to stand seised to uses 2 Lev. 213.

Tenant in fee, in consideration of marriage, covenanted, granted, and agreed all that messuage to the use of himself for life, then to his wife for life, for her jointure, then to their first son in tail male, &c. Now by these words, it appeared, that the husband intended some benefit for his wife, wherefore the court supplied other words to make the conveyance sensible. 1 Lutw. 782: 1 Inf. 271 l. n.

A conveyance cannot be fraudulent in part, and good as to the rest: for if it be fraudulent and void in part, it is void in all, and it cannot be divided. 1 Lil Abn. 311. Fraudulent conveyances to deceive creditors, defraud purchasers, &c. are void, by Stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 5: 27 Eliz. cap. 1.—See title Fraud.

CONVICT AND CONVICTION.

CONVICT, v. n. He that is found guilty of an offence by verdict of a jury. Statute P. C. 106. Compromission faith. The conviction is either when a man is outlawed, or apprehended and confessed, or is found guilty by the verdict; and when a statute excludes from clergy persons found guilty of felony, &c. it extends to those who are convicted by confession. Comp. full. 9. The law implies that there must be a conviction, before punishment, though it is not so mentioned in a statute: and where any statute makes a second offence felony, or subject to a heavier punishment than the first, it is always implied that such second offence ought to be committed after a conviction for the first. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 10 § 9: c. 41. § 3.

Justment amount to conviction; though it doth not follow that every one who is convicted, is adjudged. A conviction at the King's suit may be pleaded to a suit by an informer, on a penal statute; because while in force it makes the party liable to the forfeiture, and no one ought to be punished twice for the same offence: but conviction may not be pleaded to a new suit by the king. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. A person convicted or attainted of one felony, may be prosecuted for another, to bring accessories to punishment, &c. Fitz. Coram. 373.

Persons convicted of felony by verdict, &c. are not to be admitted to bail, unless there be some special motive for granting it; as where a man is not the same person, &c. for bail ought to be before trial, when it stands indifferent whether the party be guilty, or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 45, 80. See title Bail.—Conviction of felony, and other crimes, disables a man to be a juror, witness, &c. In our books, conviction and attainder are often confounded. See title Attainder.

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS are directed by several acts of parliament for the conviction of offenders, and the inflicting of certain penalties imposed by those acts. In these there is no intervention of a jury, but the party accused is acquitted or condemned by the suffrage of such person only, as the statute has appointed for his judge.

Of this summary nature are all trials for offences and frauds contrary to the laws of the Exchequer, and other branches of the Revenue; which are to be inquired into and determined by the commissioners of the respective departments, or by justices of peace in the country. And experience has shewn that such convictions are absolutely necessary for the due collection of the public money; and are in fact a species of mercy to the delinquents, who would be ruined by the expence and delay of frequent prosecutions by action or indictment.

Another branch of summary proceedings, is that before justices of the peace, in order to inflict divers petty pecuniary mulcts, and corporal penalties, denounced by act of parliament, for many disorderly offences; such as common swearing, drunkenness, vagrancy, idleness, and a vast variety of others subjected to their jurisdiction. See title Justice of Peace, and the titles of the various offences throughout this Dict. These offences used formerly to be punished by the verdict of a jury in the court leets, and sheriff's tourn, the King's ancient courts of law; and which were formerly much revered and respected, but are now fallen very much into disuse and contempt.

The process of these summary convictions is extremely speedy. Though the courts of Common law have thrown one check upon them, by making it necessary to summon the party accused before he is condemned; which is now held an indispensable requisite and is highly consonant to the general principles of justice. See Stat. 261, 678. Salk. 18. 2 Lil. Rep. 1405.—After this summons, the magistrate moves on to examine one or more witnesses, as the statute may require, upon oath; and then make his conviction of the offender in writing: upon which he usually issues his warrant, either to apprehend the offender, in case corporal punishment is to be inflicted on him; or else to levy the penalty incurred by distress and sale of his goods, according to the provisions of the several statutes which create the offence, and the punishment; and which usually chalk out a mode by which offenders are to be convicted of such petty offences.

See further this Dictionary title Justice of Peace.—Burn's Justice, title Conviction; and 4 Comm. c. 20, as to the policy of extending this summary mode of proceeding.

CONVICT RECUSANT, According to the statutes, See titles Recusant, Papist.

CONVIVIVM, Signifies the same thing among the laity, as procuratio doth with the clergy, viz. When the tenant by reason of his tenure is bound to provide meat and drink for his lord once or oftener in the year. Blount.

CONVOCATION, convocatio.] The assembly of the representatives of the Clergy, to consult of ecclesiastical matters in time of parliament. As there are two houses of parliament, so there are two houses of convocation; the one called the Higher or Upper House, where the archbishops and all the bishops sit severally by themselves; and the other, the Lower House of Convocation, where all the rest of the clergy sit, i. e. All deans and archdeacons, one proctor for every chapter, and two proctors for all the clergy of each diocese, making in the whole number one hundred and sixty-six persons. Each convocation house hath a prolocutor, chosen from among themselves, and that of the lower house is presented to the bishops, &c.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is the President of the Convocation, and prorogues and dissolves it by mandate from the King. The convocation exercises jurisdiction in making of canons, with the King's assent: for by the Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19, the convocation is not only to be assembled by the King's writ; but the canons are to have the royal assent: they have the examining and censuring of heretical and schismatical books, and persons, &c. But appeal lies to the King in Chancery, or to his delegates. 4 Inst. 322: 2 Rd. Abr. 225. But in case the King himself be a party, the appeal lies by Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 12, to all the bishops assembled in the Upper House of Convocation. See 3 Comm. 67.

Mr Christian, in his note on 1 Comm. 280, remarks that from the statement there given, the student would perhaps be apt to suppose that there is only one convocation at a time. But the King before the meeting of every new parliament, directs his writ to each archbishop to summon a convocation in his peculiar province.

Godolphin says, that the convocation of the province of York, constantly corresponds, debates and concludes the same matters with the provincial synod of Canterbury. God. 99. But they are certainly distinct and independent of each other; and when they used to tax the clergy, the different convocations sometimes granted different subsidies. In 22 Hen. 8, the convocation of Canterbury had granted the King 100,000*l.* in consideration of which an act of parliament was passed, granting a free pardon to the clergy for all spiritual offences; but with a proviso, that it should not extend to the province of York, unless its convocation would grant a subsidy in proportion; or unless its clergy would bind themselves individually to contribute as bountifully. This statute is recited at large in Gib Cod. 77.

All Deans and Archdeacons (as has been already observed) are members of the convocation of their province; each chapter sends one proctor or representative, and the parochial clergy in each diocese of Canterbury, two proctors: but on account of the small number of dioceses in the province of York, each archdeaconry elects two proctors. In York the convocation consists only of one house; but in Canterbury there are two houses, of which the twenty-two bishops form the Upper House; "wherein the Archbishop presides with regal state," (says Blackstone, 1 Comm. 279); and before the reformation, abbots, priors, and other mitred prelates sat with the bishops. The Lower House of Convocation, in the province of Canterbury, consists of twenty-two Deans, fifty-three Archdeacons, twenty-four Proctors for the Chapters, and forty-four Proctors for the Parochial Clergy.—Total 144.

By Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 1, the clergy in their attendance on the Convocation, have the same privilege in freedom from arrest as the members of the House of Commons in their attendance on Parliament.

CONUSANCE OF PLEAS, A privilege that a city or town hath to hold pleas. See Cognisance.

CONUSANT, Fr. connoissant.] Knowing or understanding: as if the son be conusant, and agreed to the feoffment, &c. Co. Lit. 159.

COOPERS, Shall make their vessels of seasonable wood, and mark them with their own marks, on pain of *3*s.* 4*d. forfeiture; and the contents of vessels are appointed to be observed under like penalty, as the beer barrel shall contain thirty-six gallons, a kilderkin eighteen, a firkin nine, &c. The wardens of the Coopers' company in London, with an officer of the mayor, are to search all vessels for ale, beer, and soap to be sold there; and to mark them that are right, and they may burn those that be not so. and if any cooper, &c. diminish a vessel by taking out the head, or a stave thereof, it shall be burnt, and the offender forfeit *3*s.* 4*d.—Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 4.

COOPERTIO, The head or branches of a tree cut down, though Coopertio Arborum is rather the bark of timber-trees felled, and the chumps and broken wood. Covell.

COOPERTURA, A thicket or covert of wood. Chart. de Foresta, cap. 12.

COPARCENERS, participes.] Otherwise called Parceners, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of an ancestor; and by law are the issue female, which, in default of heirs male, come in equality to the lands of their ancestors. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 30. They are to make partition of the lands; which ought to be made by coparceners of full age, &c. And if the estate of a coparcener be in part evicted, the partition shall be avoided in the whole. Lit. 243: 1 Inst. 173: 1 Rep. 87. The Crown of England is not subject to coparcenary; and there is no coparcenary in dignities, &c. Co. Lit. 27. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 22—See title Descent; Parceners.

COPARTNERSHIP. See title Partners and Partnership.

COPE, A custom or tribute due to the King, or lord of the soil, out of the lead mines in some part of Derbyshire; of which Man'ove saith:

*Egrefs and regrefs to the King's highway,
The miners have, and lot and cope they pay:
The third tenth dish of ore within their mine,
To the lord, for lot, they pay at measuring time;
Six-pence a load for cope the lord demands,
And that is paid to the berghmaller's hands, &c.*

See also Sir John Pettus's Fœdæ Regales, where he treats on this subject. This word, by Domesday Book, as Mr. Hagor hath interpreted it, signifies a hill: and Cope is taken for the supreme cover, as the cope of heaven. Also it is used for the roof and covering of a house; the upper garment of a priest, &c.

COPIA LIBELLI DELIBERANDA, A writ that lay where a man could not get the copy of a libel at the hand of a judge ecclesiastical, to have the same delivered to him. Reg. Orig. 51.

COPPA, A cop or cock of grafs, hay or corn divided into titheable portions; as, the tenth cock, &c. This word, in strictness, denotes the gathering or laying up the corn in copes or heaps, as the method is for barley or oats, &c. not bound up, that it may be the more fairly and justly tithed: and in Kent they still retain the word, a cop or cap of hay, straw, &c. Thorn in Chion.

COPPER AND COPPER ORE. Copper plates and copper fully wrought, to what duties liable, 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 5. sect. 2. All copper may be exported paying the lawful duties and customs, 5 W. & M. c. 17.—See title Navigation Acts.

COPPER-PLATE ENGRAVINGS.—See title Literary Property.

COPY, copia.] In a legal sense the transcript of an original writing; as the copy of a patent, of a charter, deed, &c. A clause out of a patent, taken from the chapel of the Rolls, cannot be given in evidence; but there must be a true copy of the whole charter examined: it is the same of a record. And if upon a trial, some part of an office copy is given in evidence to prove a deed, which deed is to prove the party's title to the land in question that gives it in evidence; if that part of the office copy given in evidence, be not so much of it as doth any ways concern the land in question, the court will not admit of it: for the court will have a copy of the whole given, or no part of it shall be admitted. 1 Lil. Abs. 312, 313. Where a deed is inrolled, certifying an attested copy is proof of the inrolment; and such copy may be given in evidence. 3 Lev. 387. A common deed cannot be proved by a copy or counterpart, when the original may be procured. 10 Rep. 92. And a copy of a will of lands, or the probate, is not sufficient; but the will must be shewn as evidence. 2 Roll. Abr. 74. Copies of court-rolls admitted as evidence. See at large title Evidence.

COPYHOLD.

TINURA per copiam totius curie] A tenure for which the tenant hath nothing to shew but the copy of the rolls, made by the steward of the lord's court; on such tenant's being admitted to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor. 4 Rep. 25. It is called base tenure, because held at the will of the lord: and Fitzherbert says, it was anciently tenure in villnage, and that copyhold is but a new name. See this Dict. title Tenures III. 13. Some Copyholds are held by the weige in ancient demesne; and though they are by copy, yet are they a kind of freehold; for if a tenant of such copyhold commit felony, the King hath the year, day and waite, as in the case of freeholders: some other copyholds are such as the tenants hold by common tenure, called mere copyhold, whose land, upon felony committed, escheats to the lord of the manor. Kitch. 81. But copyhold land cannot be made at this day; for the pillars of a copyhold estate are, that it hath been demised time out of mind by copy of court-roll; and that the tenements are parcel of, or within, the manor. 1 Infl. 58: 4 Rep. 24.

A copyhold cannot be created by operation of law: and therefore where wastes are severed from the manor, by a grant of the latter, with the exception of the former, VOL. I.

though the copyholders continue to have a right of common in the wastes by immemorial usage: yet if afterwards a grant of the soil of those wastes be made to trustees for the use of the copyholders in free socage, the lands, when inclosed, will be freehold, and not copyhold. 2 Term Rep. 415, 705.

A copyhold tenant had originally in judgment of law but an estate at will; yet custom so established his estate that by the custom of the manor it was descendible, and his heirs inherited it: and therefore the estate of the copyholder is not merely at the will of the lord, but at the will of the lord, according to the custom of the manor; so that the custom of the manor is the life of copyhold estates; for without a custom, or if copyholders break their custom, they are subject to the will of the lord: and as a copyhold is created by custom, so it is guided by custom. 4 Rep. 21. A copyholder, so long as he doth his services, and doth not break the custom of the manor, cannot be ejected by the lord; if he be, he shall have trespass against him: but if a copyholder refuses to perform his services, it is a breach of the custom, and forfeiture of his estate.

It appears that estates held by copy of court roll, but not at the will of the lord, have been deemed freehold by Lord Coke, (See 1 Infl. 59 b,) and others; and in order to distinguish them from the ordinary kind, have been denominated customary freeholds. In consequence of the prevalence of this notion, a considerable number of such tenants claimed a right of voting as freeholders at the election of knights of the Shire.—This gave occasion to a short treatise on this subject, in which the origin of lands held in this peculiar way is traced, and it is proved that though these tenures in some respects resemble freeholds, they are in truth nothing more than a superior kind of copyhold. Soon after the publication of this treatise, the Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 14, was passed, declaring that no person holding by copy of court-roll should be entitled to vote at the election of Knights of the Shire.

In some manors where the custom hath been to permit the heir to succeed the ancestor in his tenure, the estates are titled Copyholds of inheritance: in others, where the lords have been more vigilant to maintain their rights, they remain copyholds for life only. For the custom of the manor has in both cases so far superseded the will of the lord, that provided the services be performed, or stipulated for by fealty, he cannot in the first instance refuse to admit the heir of his tenant upon his death; nor in the second can he remove his present tenant so long as he lives, though he holds nominally by the precarious tenure of his lord's will. 2 Comm. 97, 147.—And see title Ancient Demesne.

If the lord refuses to admit he shall be compelled in Chancery. 2 Cro. 368.—And if the lord refuse to admit a surrenderee, on account of a disagreement about the fine to be paid, the court of B. R. will grant a mandamus to compel the lord to admit without examining the right to the fine. 2 Term Rep. 484.—But that court will not grant a mandamus to admit a copyholder by descent, because without admittance he has a complete title against all the world but the lord. 2 Term Rep. 198.

Copyholds descend according to the rules and maxims of the Common law, (unless in particular manors, where there are contrary customs, of great antiquity); but such customary inheritances shall not be assets, to charge the heir in action of debt, &c. 4 Rep. 22: Kitch. Though a lease for one year of copyhold lands, which is warranted by the Common law, shall be assets in the hand of an executor. 1 Vent. 163. Copyholders hold their estates free from charges of dower, being created by custom, which is paramount to title of dower. 4 Rep. 24. Copyhold inheritances have no collateral qualities, which do not concern the descent; as to make them assets; or whereof a wife may be endowed; a husband be tenant by the curtesy, &c. But by particular custom, there may be dower and tenancy by the curtesy. Cro. Eliz. 361. There may be an estate-tail in copyhold lands by custom, with the co-operation of the Stat. W. 2. And as a copyhold may be tailed by custom, so by custom the tail may be cut off by surrender. 1 Inst. 60.

Where by special custom a descent of copyholds may be, contrary to the rules of the Common law, such custom shall be interpreted strictly: thus, where there is a custom within a manor, that lands shall descend to the eldest sister, where there is neither a son nor a daughter; this shall not extend to an eldest niece: but in default of such son, daughter and sister, the lands must descend according to the rules of the Common law. 1 Term Rep. 466.

A copyhold may be barred by a recovery, by special custom; and a surrender may bar the issue by custom. A fine and recovery at Common law will not destroy a copyhold estate; because Common law assurances do not work upon the assurance of the copyhold: though copyhold lands are within the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24, of fines and proclamations, and five years non-claim, and shall be barred. 1 Rel. Abr. 506. See title Fines.

A plaint may be made in the court of the manor, in the nature of a real action, and a recovery shall be had in that plaint against tenant in tail, and such a recovery shall be a discontinuance to the estate-tail. 1 Brownl. 121. And the suffering a recovery by a copyholder tenant for life in the lord's court is no forfeiture, unless there is a particular custom for it. 1 Nelf. Abr. 507. Copyholders may entail copyhold lands, and bar the estails and remainders, by committing a forfeiture, as making lease without licence, &c. and then the lord is to make three proclamations, and seize the copyhold, after which the lands are granted to the copyholder, and his heirs, &c. This is the manner in some places, but it must be warranted by custom. 2 Danv. Abr. 191: Sul. 314.

Customs ought to be time out of memory; to be reasonable, &c. And a custom in deprivation or bar of a copyhold estate, shall be taken strictly; but when for making and maintaining, it shall be construed favourably. Comp. Cop. s. 33: Cro. El. 879. An unreasonable custom, as for a lord to exact exorbitant fines; for a copyholder for life to cut down and fell timber-trees, &c. is void. A copyholder for life pleaded a custom, that every copyholder for life might, in the presence of two other copyholders, appoint who should have his copyhold after his death; and that the two copyholders might assess a fine, so as not to be less than had been usually paid; and it was adjudged a good custom. 4 Leon. 238. But a custom to compel a lord to make a grant, is said to be against law; though it may be good to admit a tenant. Moor 788.

By the custom of some manors, where copyhold lands are granted to two or more persons for lives, the person first named in the copy may surrender all the lands. 1 Nelf. Abr. 497. There are customs ratione loci, different from other places: but though a custom may be applied to a particular place; yet it is against the nature of a custom of a manor to apply it to one particular tenant. 1 Nelf. 504: 1 Lutw. 126.

There are usually custom-rolls of manors, exhibited on oath by the tenants; setting forth the bounds of the manor, the royalties of the lord, services of the copyhold tenants, the tenures granted, whether for life, &c. concerning admittances, surrenders, and the rights of the copyholders, as to taking timber for repairs, fire-bote, &c. Common belonging to the tenants, payment of rent, suing in the court of the manor, taking heriots, &c. All which customs are to be observed. Comp. Court Keep. 21.

When an act of parliament altereth the service, customs, tenure, and interest of land, in prejudice of the lord or tenant, there the general words of such an act shall not extend to copyholds. 3 Rep. 7.—Copyholds are not within the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, of jointures; nor Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28, of leases, Copyholds being in their nature demisable only by copy: they are not within the statute of uses; nor are copyholds extendible in execution: but copyholds are within the statute of limitation of actions; and the statutes against bankrupts. The lord shall have the custody of the lands of ideots, &c. And a copyholder is not within the act 12 Car. 2. c. 24, to dispose of the custody and guardianship of the heir; for if there be a custom for it, it belongs to the lord of the manor. 3 Lev. 395: 1 Nelf. Abr. 492, 522.

Copyholders shall neither implead nor be impleaded for their tenements by writ, but by plaint in the lord's court held within the manor: and if on such plaint, erroneous judgment be given, no writ of false judgment lies, but petition to the lord in nature of a writ of false judgment, wherein errors are to be assigned, and remedy given according to law. Co. Lit. 60.

Where a man holds copyhold lands in trust to surrender to another, &c. if he refuses to surrender to the other accordingly, he may be compelled by bill exhibited in the lord's court, who, as chancellor, has power to do right. 1 Leon. 2. A copyholder may have a formedon in descender in the lord's court. Lassie of a copyholder for life for one year, shall maintain an ejectment. 4 Rep. 26: Moor 679. It is every day's practice to bring ejectments, to recover the possession of copyholds; for defendant by the rule, obliging himself to confess lease, entry, and ouster, the title only can come in question on the trial. But the lessor of plaintiff, before he brings his ejectment should be admitted. See title Ejectment.

A manor is lost when there are no customary tenants or copyholders: and if a copyhold comes into the hands of the lord in fee, and the lord leases it for one year, or half a year, or for any certain time, it can never be granted by copy after: but if the lord alien the manor, &c. his alienee may re-grant land by copy. If the lord keeps the copyhold for a long time in his hand, it is no impediment but that he may after grant it again by copy. 2 Danv. Abr. 176, 177. A copyholder in fee accepts of a lease, grant, or confirmation of the same land from the lord, this determines his copyhold estate. 2 Cro. 16: Cro. Jac. 253. If a copyholder bargains and sells his copyhold to a lessee for years, &c. of the manor, his copyhold is extinguished. 2 Danv. 205. A copyholder may grant his estate to his lord, by bargain and sale, re-lease, &c. for between lord and tenant the conveyance need not be according to custom. 1 Nelf. 504. A copyholder in other cases cannot alien by deed: though he that hath a right only to a copyhold may release it by deed. And if a copyholder surrenders upon condition, he may afterwards release the condition by deed. 2 Danv. 205: Cro. Jac. 36. Also one joint copyholder may release to another, which will be good without any admittance, &c. Ibid.

A Copyholder cannot convey or transfer his copyhold estate to another, otherwise than by surrender; which is the yielding up of the land by the tenant to the lord, according to the custom of the manor, to the use of him that is to have the estate: or it is in order to a new grant, and further estate in the same.

As to copyhold grants; which are made either in fee, or for three lives, &c. the lord of the manor that hath a lawful estate therein, whether he be tenant for life or years, tenant by statute merchant, &c. or at will, is dominus pro tempore, and may grant lands, herbage of lands, a fair, mill, tithes, &c. and any thing that concerns lands, by copy of court-roll, according to custom; and such grants shall bind those in remainder: the rents and services reserved by them shall be annexed to the manor, and attend the owner thereof after their particular estates are ended. 4 Rep. 23: 1 Rep. 18. And if a lord of the manor for the time being, lessee for life, years, &c. take a surrender, and before admittance he dieth, or the years or interest determine, though the next lord comes in above the lease for life or years, or other particular interest, yet he shall be compelled to make admittance according to the surrender. Co. Lit. 50. But a lord at will, of a copyhold manor, cannot licence a copyhold tenant to make a lease for years; though he may grant a copyhold for life according to the custom: if a lord for life gives licence to a tenant to make a lease for years, this lease shall continue no longer than the life of the lord. 2 Danv. Abr. 202.

If he that is lord of the manor for the time being admits one to a copyhold, he dispenses with all precedent forfeitures; not only as to himself, but also as to him in reversion; for such grant and admittance amount to an entry for the forfeiture, and a new grant; but a lord by tort cannot by such admittance purge the forfeiture as to the rightful lord. 1 Lev. 26. Grants by copy of court-roll by infants, &c. will be binding: and if a guardian in socage grants a copyhold in reversion, according to the custom of the manor, this shall be a good grant; 2 Rel. Abr. 41. If baron and feme seised of a manor in right of the feme grant a copyhold, this shall bind the feme notwithstanding her coverture. 4 Rep. 23. An executor may make grants of copyhold estates, according to the custom of the manor, where a devise is made that the executor shall grant copies for payment of debts. 2 Danv. 178.

A manor may be held by copy of court-roll, and the lord of such manor may grant copies; and such customary manor may pass by surrender and admittance, &c. A customary manor may be holden of another manor, and such customary lord may grant copies and hold courts: but a copyholder, lord of such a manor, cannot hold a court baron to have forfeitures, and hold pleas in a writ of right, &c. 1 Nelf. Abr. 524.

All grants of copyhold estates are to be according to the custom of the manor; and rents and services customary must be reserved; for what acts of the lord in granting copyholds are not confirmed by custom, but only strengthened by the power and interest of the lord, have no longer duration than the lord's estate continueth. Comp. Court-Keeper 421. If by the custom, a copyhold may be granted for three lives, and the lord grants it to one for life, remainder to such woman as he shall marry, and to the first son of his body; both these remainders are void: and a remainder limited upon a void estate in the creation, will be likewise void. But if by custom it is demisable in fee, a surrender may be to the use of one for life, remainder in tail, remainder in fee. 2 Danv. Abr. 203: Cro. Eliz. 373. It is held, where by the custom of a manor the lord can grant a copyhold for three lives, he may grant it for an estate coming within the intent of the custom; as to A. B. and his assigns, to hold to him and his assigns for the lives of three others, and of the longer liver of them successively, &c. 2 Ld. Raym. 994, 1000.

The lord of a manor may himself grant a copyhold estate at any place out of the manor; but the steward cannot grant a copyhold at a court held out of the manor. 4 Rep. 26. Though the steward may take surrenders out of the manor, as well as the lord. 2 Danv. Abr. 181. A steward is in place of the lord, and without a command to the contrary may grant lands by copy, &c. But if a lord command a steward that he shall not grant such a copy, if he grants it, it is void: and if the steward diminishes the ancient rents and services, the grant will be void. Cro. Eliz. 699.

Things of necessity done by a steward, who is but in reputed authority, are good if they come in by presentment of the jury; as the admittance of an heir upon presentment, &c. Though acts voluntary, as grants of copyhold, &c. are not good by such stewards. Cro. Eliz. 699. If an under-steward hold a court without any disturbance of the lord of the manor, though he hath no patent nor deputation to hold it, yet it is good; because the tenants are not to examine what authority he hath, nor is he bound to give them an account of it. Moo. 110. A deputy steward may authorise another to do a particular act; but cannot make a deputy to act in general. 2 Salk. 95.

In admittances, in court upon voluntary grants, the lord is proprietor; in admittances upon surrenders, the lord is not proprietor of the lands, but only a necessary instrument of conveyance; and in admittances by descent the lord is a mere instrument, not being necessary to strengthen the heir's title, but only to give the lord his fine. 4 Rep. 21, 22. The heir of a copyholder may enter, and bring trespass, before admittance, being in by descent; and he may surrender before admittance: but he is not compleat tenant to be sworn of the homage, or to maintain a plaint in the lord's court. And if the heir do not come in and be admitted, on the death of his ancestor, where the same is presented and proclamation made, he may forfeit his estate. Cro. El. 90: 4 Rep. 22, 27.

On surrender of a copyhold, the surrenderor or person making the same, continues tenant till the admittance of the surrenderee; and the surrenderee may not enter upon the lands, or surrender before admittance, for he hath no estate till then; though it is otherwise of the heir by descent, who is in by course of law, and the custom calls the possession upon him. Comp. Court-Keep. 436. A surrender is not of any effect until admittance, and yet the surrenderee cannot be defrauded of the benefit of the surrender; for the surrenderor cannot pass away the land to another or make it subject to any other incumbrances; and if the lord refuse the surrenderee admittance, he is compellable in Chancery. Comp. Cop. sect. 39. A grantee hath no interest vested in him till he is admitted: but admittance of a copyholder for life is an admittance of him in remainder, for they are but one estate; and the remainderman may, after the death of tenant for life, surrender without admittance. 3 Lev. 308: Cro. El. 504.

Every admittance upon a descent or surrender may be pleaded as a grant; and a person may allege the admittance of his ancestor as a grant; and shew the descent to him, and that he entered, &c. But he cannot plead that his father was seised in fee, &c. and that he died seised, and the land descended to him. 2 Danv. 208. Admittance on surrenders must, in all respects, agree with the surrender; the lord having only a customary power to admit secundum formam effectum sursum redditum. 4 Rep. 26. If any are admitted otherwise, they shall be seised according to the surrender: yet where a voluntary surrender is general, without saying to whose use, a subsequent admittance may explain it. 2 Danv. 187, 204.

In voluntary admittances, if the lord admits any one contrary to custom, it shall not bind his heir or successor. If a copyholder surrender to the use of another, and after the lord, having knowledge of it, accepts the rent of such other out of court, this is an admittance in law: and any act, implying the consent of the lord to the surrender, shall be adjudged a good admittance. 1 Nelf. Abr. 493. If the steward accept a fine of a copyholder, it amounts to an admittance. 2 Danv. 189. But delivering a copy is no admittance.

Where a widow's estate is created by custom, that shall be an admittance in law: and her estate arising out of that of her husband's, his admittance is the admittance of her. Hut. 18. And she who hath a widow's estate by the custom of the manor, upon the death of her husband, need not pay a fine to the lord for the estate; for this is only a branch of the husband's. Hob. 181. When a custom is, that the wife of every copyholder for life shall have her free bench, after the death of the baron, the law casts the estate upon the wife, so that she shall have it before admittance, &c. 2 Danv. 184. But if a wife is entitled to her free bench by custom, and a copyholder in fee surrenders to the use of another, and then dies; it has been adjudged, that the surrenderee should have the land, and not the wife; because the wife's title doth not commence till after the death of her husband; but the plaintiff's title begins with the surrender, and the admittance relates to that. 1 Inst. 59: 1 Salk. 185.

The widow's title commenceth not by the marriage; if it did, then the husband could do nothing in his lifetime to prejudice it: but it is plain he may alien or extinguish his right, so as to bind the estate of the widow: the free bench grows out of the estate of the husband; and it is his dying seised which gives the widow a title, and as the husband has a defeasible estate, so the wife may have her free-bench defeated. 4 Mal. Rep. 452, 453.

Admittances are never by attorney, for the tenant ought to do fealty: though surrenders are oftentimes by attorney. 2 Danv. 189. A copyholder in fee may surrender in court, by letter of attorney: but not out of court, without a special custom. 9 Rep. 75, 76. If one cannot come into court to surrender in person, the lord may appoint a special steward to go to him, and take the surrender. 1 Lon. 36. A copyholder being in Ireland, the steward of a manor here made a commission to one to receive a surrender from him there, and it was held good. 2 Danv. 181.

The intent of surrenders is, that the lord may not be a stranger to his tenant, and the alteration of the estate. As a Copyholder cannot transfer his estate to a stranger by any other conveyance than surrender; so if one would exchange a copyhold with another, both must surrender to each other's use, and the lord admit accordingly: and if any person would devise a copyhold estate, he cannot do it by his will: but he must surrender to the use of his last will and testament, and in his will declare his intent. Comp. Cop. sect. 39. Also where a copyholder surrenders to the use of his will, the lands do not pass by the will, but by the surrender; the will being only declaratory of the uses of the surrender. 1 Bulst. 200.

In case of a will, the Chancery will supply the defect of a surrender, in the behalf of children, if not to disinherit the eldest son; and for the benefit of creditors, where a copyhold estate is charged by will with the payment of debts, though there is no surrender to those uses, it will be good in equity. 4 Rep. 25: 1 Salk. 187: 3 Salk. 84. Yet it is held, that equity shall not supply the want of such surrender in favour of a grandchild; or bastard, who is not considered as a child; or a wife against the heir; nor in behalf of legatees: but where the surrender is refused, a will of copyhold may be sufficient without it. Abr. Cas. Fq. 122, 124.

There is no doubt but that the Courts of Equity will supply the surrender of a copyhold. It is said however to be now settled that, unless there be a valuable consideration, they will not interpose for such purpose, but in favour of three descriptions of persons only; Creditors, Wife and Children; and even in such cases they proceed subject to several restrictions. For though they will supply the surrender of copyholds in favour of creditors, if the other estates, liable to the payment of debts, are not sufficient; (Drake v. Robinson, 1 P. Wms. 444: Bixby v. Ely, 2 Bro. C.R. 325:) Yet if there be both freehold and copyhold estates devised for the payment of debts, and the freehold be sufficient for such purpose, they will not supply the surrender of the copyhold. Rastor v. Stock, 1 Eq. Ab. 123, 4: Hillier v. Fantant, Exc. Trin. 1791; and see 3 P. Wms. 98. in n.

In supplying a surrender in favour of a wife, or younger children, courts of Equity, as has been already observed, respect the claims of the heir at law; and therefore will not interpose, if the heir would thereby be left unprotected. Kettle v. Townshend, 1 Salk. 187: Hawkins v. Leigh, 1 Atk. 387.—But the heir whose claim is to be thus respected, must be one for whom the testator was under as strong a moral obligation to provide, as for the devisee. Chapman v. Gibson, 3 Bro. C.R. 229. And if the supplying of the surrender would not disinherit such heir, courts of Equity will supply it in favour of the wife, though she be otherwise provided for. Smith v. Baker, 1 Atk. 386.—But it was held in Ross v. Ross, 1 Eq. Ab. 124, that they ought not to supply a surrender for younger children against an elder, to make them in a better situation than the elder.—Yet see Cook v. Arnham, 3 P. Wms. 283: Forrester 35.

In those cases in which the Court will supply a surrender, it is to be understood that the effect of the surrender is bounded by the motive which induces the court to supply it; therefore where the testator devised a copyhold to trustees, in trust, to sell and to pay the interest of the produce to the wife during her life, and after her death to a stranger; the Court, though it supplied the surrender in favour of the wife, decreed that the customary heir should be at liberty to apply after her death. Marston v. Gowen, 3 Bro. C. R. 170.—Courts of Equity will in supplying the surrender of a copyhold estate in favour of a purchaser for a valuable consideration, go still further; for they will not only supply it against the party himself and his heir; (Barker v. Hill, 2 Ch. Rep. 113;) but will also supply it against his assignees and creditors, if he become a bankrupt. Taylor v. Wheeler, 2 Vern. 565.

In the case of copyholds devised to charitable uses, the want of surrender in such cases is made good, not by the discretion of the court, but by the strong and general words of Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. Attorney General v. Burdett, 2 Vern. 755: Duke's Char. Uses 84: Attorney General v. Andrews, 1 Ves. 225.

A cestui que trust may devise an interest in land, &c. without surrender; and if copyhold lands are in mortgage, the mortgagor can dispose of the equity of redemption by will, without any surrender made; because he hath at that time no estate in the land, whereof to make a surrender. Preced. Canc. 320, 322. One jointenant may surrender his part in the lands to the use of his will, &c. And where there are two jointenants of a copyhold in fee, if one of them make a surrender to the use of his will, and die, and the devisee is admitted, the surrender and admittance shall bind the survivor. 2 Cro. 100.

A surrender may not be to commence in futuro; as after the death of the surrenderor, &c. though copyholds may be surrendered to the use of a man's will. March 177. A copyholder cannot surrender an estate absolutely to another, and leave a particular estate in himself, though he may surrender to uses, &c. A copyholder surrendered to the use of his wife and younger son, without intentioning what estate: and adjudged, that they had an estate for life 4 Rep. 29. If a man having bought a copyhold to himself, his wife and daughter, and their heirs, afterwards surrenders it to another and his heirs, for securing a sum of money; after his death, the surrenderee shall not be entitled to the land, it being an advancement for the wife and daughter. 2 Vern. 120.

A feme covert may receive a copyhold estate, by surrender from her husband, because she comes not in immediately by him, but by the admittance of the lord, according to the surrender. 4 Rep. 29 b. A feme covert is to be secretly examined by the steward, on her surrendering her estate. Co. Lit. 59. An infant surrendered his copyhold, and afterwards entered at full age, and it was held lawful, though the surrenderee was admitted. Atton 597.

By the general custom of copyhold estates, copyholders may surrender in court, and need not allege any particular custom to warrant it: but where they surrender out of court, into the hands of the lord by customary tenants, &c. custom must be pleaded. 9 Rep. 75: 1 Rol. Abr. 500. Surrenders out of court are to be presented at the next court; for it is not an effectual surrender till presented in court. Where a copyholder in fee surrenders out of court, and dies before it is presented, yet the surrender, being presented at the next court, will stand good, and cestui que use shall be admitted: so if cestui que use dies before it is presented, his heir shall be admitted. But if the surrender be not presented at the next court, it is void. Co. Lit. 62: 2 Danv. 188. If the tenants by whose hands the surrender was made shall die, and this upon proof is presented in court, it is well enough. 4 Rep. 29.

Tenants refusing to make presentment, are compellable in the lord's court. And by surrender of copyhold lands to the use of a mortgagee, the lands are bound in equity, though the surrender be not presented at the next court. 2 Salk. 449. When a copyholder surrenders upon condition, and this is presented absolutely, the presentment is void; but where a conditional surrender is presented, and the steward omits entering the condition, on proof thereof the condition shall not be avoided; but the rolls shall be amended 4 Rep. 25. A copyholder may surrender to the use of another, reserving rent with a condition of re entry for non payment, and in default of payment may re-enter. lord 21.

If a copyholder of inheritance takes a lease for years of his copyhold estate, it is a surrender in law of his copyhold. Where there is a tenant for life, and remainder in fee, he in remainder may surrender his estate, if there be no custom to the contrary. 3 Leon. 329. If a surrender is made with remainders over, care lies, for him in remainder against a copyholder for life, who commits waste, &c. 3 Lev. 128. A surrenderee of a reversion of a copyhold is an assignee within the equity of the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 34, to bring action of debt or covenant against lessee, &c. 1 Salk. 185. A copyholder in fee surrenders to the use of one for life, with remainder to another for life, remainder to another in fee; as the particular estates and remainders make but one estate, there is but one fine due to the lord. 2 Danv. 191.

The fruits and appendages of a copyhold tenure, that it hath in common with free tenures are Fealty, Services, (as well in rents as otherwise,) Reliefs, and Incumbents. The two latter belong only to copyholds of inheritance: the former to those for life also. But besides these, Copyholds have also Heriots, Wardship and Fines. Heriots are incident to both species of copyhold; but wardship and fines to those of inheritance only.—Wardship in copyhold estates partakes both of that in chivalry, and that in socage. Like that in chivalry the lord is the legal guardian, who usually assigns some relation of the infant tenant to act in his stead: and he, like guardian in socage, is accountable to his ward for the profits. Of fines, some are in the nature of primer seisin due on the death of each tenant; others are mere fines for the alienation of the lands. In some manors only one of these sorts can be demanded; in some both, and in others neither. They are sometimes arbitrary and at the will of the lord, sometimes fixed by custom: but even when arbitrary, the courts of law, in favour of the liberty of copyholders have tied them down to be reasonable in their extent: otherwise they might amount to a disinheritance of the estate. No fine therefore is allowed to be taken upon descents or alienations (unless in particular circumstances) of more than two years' improved value of the estate. 2 Ch. Rep. 134. See 2 Comm. 97.

Fines are paid to the lord on admittances; and may be due on every change of the estate by lord or tenant: The lord may have an action of debt for his fine, or may distrain by custom. 4 Rep. 27: 13 Pep. 2.

An heriot is a duty to the lord, tendered at the death of the tenant, or on a surrender and alienation of an estate: and is the best beast or goods, found in the possession of the tenant deceased, or otherwise, according to custom. And for heriots, reliefs, &c. the lord may distrain, or bring action of debt. 1 And. 96. See title Heriot.

Relief is a sum of money which every copyholder in fee, or freeholder of a manor pays to the lord, on the death of his ancestor; and is generally a year's profits of his land. See titles Tenure; Relief.

Services signify any duty whatsoever accruing unto the lord from tenants; and are not only annual, and accidental; but corporal, as homage, fealty, &c. Corp. Court Keep. 7, 8, 9, &c.

Copyholds escheat, and are forfeited in many cases; escheat of a copyhold estate, is either where the lands fall into the hands of the lord for want of an heir to inherit them; or where the copyholder commits felony, &c. But before the lord can enter on an estate escheated, the homage jury ought to present it. Forfeitures proceeding from treasons, felonies, alienation by deed, &c. a presentment of them must be also made in court, that the lord may have notice of them. A copyholder refusing to do suit of court, being sufficiently warned, is a forfeiture of his estate; unless he be prevented by sickness, inundations of water, &c. If the lord demandeth his rent, and the copyholder being present, denies to pay it at the time required, this is a forfeiture; but if the tenant be not upon the ground when demanded, the lord must continue his demand upon the land, so that by continual denial in law, it may amount to a denial in fact: though it is said there must be a demand from the person of the copyholder, and a wilful denial, to make a forfeiture.

If a Copyholder do not perform the services due to his lord; or if he sue a replevin against the lord, upon the lord's lawful distress for his rent or services, these are forfeitures. If the lord upon admittance of a copyholder, the fine by the custom of the manor being certain, demandeth his fine, and the copyholder denieth to pay it upon demand, this is a forfeiture.

Upon the descent of any copyhold of inheritance, the heir by the general custom is tied, upon three solemn proclamations, made at three several courts, to come in and be admitted to his copyhold; or if he faileth therein, this failure worketh a forfeiture; but if an infant come not in to be admitted at three proclamations, it is no forfeiture: so of one beyond sea, &c.

An idiot, lunatick, &c. though able to take copyholds, they yet are unable to forfeit them: and in respect to others, forfeitures may be mitigated by custom, and the copyholder only amerced. By Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 23, On default of infants and feme coverts appearing to be admitted tenants to copyhold lands, the lord or his steward may name a person to be guardian or attorney for them, and by such guardian, &c. admit them: and if the usual fine thereon be not paid in three months, being demanded in writing, the lord may enter on the copyhold, receive the rents, &c. till the fine is paid with all charges. And by this statute no infant or feme covert shall forfeit any copyhold lands for their neglect to come to court to be admitted, or refusal to pay any fine.

The general custom of copyholds allows a copyholder to make a lease for one year of his copyhold estate, and no more, without incurring a forfeiture: but a copyholder may make a lease for one year, and covenant with the lessee, that, after the end of that year, he shall have the same for another year, and so from year to year during the space of seven years, &c. and be no forfeiture. Cro. Jac. 300. For this does not amount to a lease, but is only a covenant, subjecting the covenantor to an action for damages. Though a copyholder may not make a lease to hold for one year, and so from year to year during his life, excepting one day yearly, &c. which will be a forfeiture, bring a mere evasion. But a licence to lease may be had. A woman who was a copyholder in fee married, her husband made a lease for years, not warranted by the custom, which was a forfeiture; the husband died; and adjudged that the lord shall not take advantage of this forfeiture after his death, but the wife shall enjoy the estate. Cro. Car. 7. And see 4 Rep. 21 to 25, &c.

Livery upon any conveyance of a copyhold estate amounts to a forfeiture. And yet if a copyholder for life surrender to another in fee, this is no forfeiture; for it passeth by the surrender to the lord, and not by livery.

If copyholder for life cut down timber-trees, it is a forfeiture of his copyhold; though such copyholder may take house-bote, hedge bote, and plough-bote, upon his copyhold, of common right, as a thing incident to the grant; if he be not restrained by custom, to take them by the assignment of the lord or his bailiff. Where a copyholder for life sells timber-trees, the lord may take them, and the estate is forfeited; but if under-lessee for years of a copyholder cut down timber, this shall not be a forfeiture of the copyhold estate, but the lord is put to his action on the case against the lessee. 1 Bull. 150: Style 233. A copyhold granted to two for their lives successively, where the custom of the manor is, that they shall not fell trees; if the first copyholder for life cut down trees, &c. it is not only a forfeiture of his own estate for life, but of him in remainder. Moor 49.

In other cases, a copyholder for life, committing waste, shall not forfeit the estate of him in remainder. Cro. Eliz. 880. If copyholder for life, where the remainder is over for life, commits a forfeiture by waste, &c. he in remainder shall not enter, but the lord. 2 Danv. 198. A copyholder committing waste voluntary, or permissive, this is a forfeiture: voluntary, as if he pull down any house, though built by himself; lop trees, and sell them, plough up meadow, whereby the ground is made worse, &c. Permissive, if he suffer the roof of the house to let in rain, or the house to fall; or if he permit his meadow ground to be surrounded with water, so that it becomes marshy, or his arable land to be thus surrounded and become unprofitable, &c. these and the like are forfeitures. See 2 Danv. Abr. 192, 193, 196, &c.: 1 Nelf. Abr. 509, 510, &c.

If a feme copyholder for life takes husband, who commits waste and dies, the estate of the feme is forfeited: Though not if a stranger commit the waste, without the assent of the husband. 4 Rep. 37. Sed. qu. the difference between between copyholder for life, and copyholder in fee, in this respect; unless waste is distinguished from other forfeitures?

Most forfeitures are caused by acts contrary to the tenure: But a succeeding lord of a manor, shall not have any advantage of a forfeiture, by waste done by a copyholder in the time of his predecessor. 2 Sid. 8. And if a present lord doth any thing whereby he acknowledges the person to be his tenant after forfeiture, this acknowledgment is a confirmation of his estate, Coke's Cop. 61.

The court of Chancery will sometimes relieve against a forfeiture for waste, and compel the lord to re-admit, on receiving satisfaction for the injury he has sustained. Such relief is particularly given where the waste is committed, through ignorance; or where the waste is merely permissive, and there has not been an obstinate perseverance, in neglecting to repair after notice. 1 C. C. 95: Pre. Ch. 568. Another instance in which relief against forfeiture for waste is said to be proper, is where the lessee of a copyholder commits waste without his direction or privity. 1oth. 237. But in this latter case it may be doubted whether the waste is a forfeiture. See Mo 49.

Also, When the estate is forfeited for non-payment of rent, a fine, or such things, where a value may be set on them, and compensation made the lord on any laches of time, the tenant may be relieved; for there the land is but in nature of a security for those sums. Preced. Chan. 569, 572.

In case of making a lease for years, without licence, and not warranted by custom, found to be a forfeiture at law, equity has nothing to do with it, to give any remedy; it is like to a feoffment made, or fine levied by particular tenants, against which there can be no relief. Ibid. 574. Where copyhold lands are purchased in fee, in trust for an alien, the lands are not seizable by the king; nor is the trust forfeited to him; for if the lands were forfeited as purchased for such alien, then the lord of the manor would lose his fines and services, &c. Hud. 436.

By Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 26, Copyhold estates of poor prisoners, may be assigned to creditors, and the assignees admitted by the lord, on paying the usual fine due on a surrender, &c. and see Stat. 1 Geo. 3. c. 17 § 14, as to Infelents.

By Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 14. § 1, already mentioned, copyholders are not to vote for Knights of the Shire.—The admission of infants and feme coverts entitled by descent, or surrender to the use of a will is regulated by Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 29.—And the Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 46, (explained by 6 Geo. 3. c. 49.) compels the steward to receive the stamp duty on admission, &c. at the same time he receives the fees of court.

COPY-RIGHT. The exclusive right of printing and publishing copies of any literary performance; extended also to music, engravings, &c. See tit. Literary Property.

CORAGE, Coragium. A kind of extraordinary imposition, growing upon some unusual occasion, and seems to be of certain measures of corn: for corn tithe is a measure of wheat. See Barb. lib. 2. c. 116: Numb. 6. Numb. 8. Blount.

CORACLE, A small boat used by fishermen on some parts of the river Severn, made of an oval form, of split fallow twigs interwoven, and on that part next the water covered with leather, in which one man, being seated in the middle, will row himself swiftly with one hand, while with the other he manages his net or fish-tackle: and coming off the water, he will take the light vessel on his back, and carry it home. This boat is of the same nature as the Indian canoes: though not of the same form, or employed to the like use. But quere if not long out of use?

CORAM NON JUDICE, Is when a cause is brought and determined in a court whereof the judges have not any jurisdiction; then it is said to be coram non judice, and void. 2 Cro. 351.

CORBEL STONES, Are stones wherein images stand: the old English corbel, was properly a nich in the wall of a church, or other structure in which an image was placed for ornament or superstition; and the corbel stones were the smooth polished stones, laid for the front and outside of the corbels or niches. The niches remain on the outside of very many churches and steeples in England, though the little statues and reliques are most of them broken down. Paroch. Antiq. 575.

CORD OF WOOD, Is a quantity of wood eight feet long, four feet broad, and four feet high, ordained by the statute.

CORDAGE, Fi. Is a general appellation for all stuff to make ropes, and for all kind of ropes belonging to the rigging of a ship: it is mentioned in 15 Car. 2. c. 13. and see Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 56, against frauds in the manufacture of cordage for shipping.

CORDINER, See Cordwainer.

CORDUBANARIUS, A Cord-wainer; A shoemaker. Corbel. from the Fr. Corduaner, a shoemaker, we call him vulgarly a Cordwainer; and to this word is used in divers statutes; as 3 H. 8. c. 10: 5 H. 8. c. 7: 27 H. 8. c. 14: 5 and 6 Ed. 6. c. 13: 1 Jac. 1. c. 22, &c. By which last statutes the Masters and Wardens of the Cordwainers' Company in London, &c. are to appoint searchers and triers of leather; and leather is not to be sold before searched and sealed, &c.

CORETES, from the Brit. Cored, pools, ponds, &c. —Et cum suis piscibus et coretibz anguillarum et cum toto territorio suo. Du Fresne.

CORIUM FORISFACERE, Was where a person was condemned to be whipped; which was anciently the punishment of a servant. Cor in perire, the same: and corium redimere is to compound for a whipping.

CORN. As to the general provisions relative to the importation and exportation of Corn, See title Navigat. et Affs.—And as to the exportation of Corn to enemies in time of war. See Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 27; and tit. Trafscn.

No corn was formerly to be exported, without the King's licence: except for the victualling of ships, and in some special cases, from some ports only: and none might by Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 12. buy corn to sell again, without licence from justices. But now corn, as wheat, barley, oats, &c. may be exported to States in amity when they exceed not certain prices, regulated by many statutes: and the exporters of it shall pay no duty or custom, but be intitled to bounty-money or a certain allowance for exportation.

By Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 22, If any person use violence on another person to hinder him from buying or carrying off to any sea-port town to be transported, &c. he shall be imprisoned by two justices, for not more than exceeding three months, and be publicly whipped, &c. and committing a second offence, or destroying granaries, or corn in any boat or vessel, to be adjudged a felon, and transported for seven years: and the hundred to make good the damage, if not above 100 l. as in cases of robbery; where an offender is not apprehended and convicted within twelve months; but notice must be given to the constable in two days.—Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 56, ordains the bounty, on ground corn to be regulated by weight; and Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 15, appoints interest to be paid on debentures for the bounty of corn exported. A corn-market established at Westminster by Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 25. § 1. Forms of the certificates of prices of grain, to regulate the price of bread are settled by Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 29. See title Erard.

The last acts now in force to regulate the returns of the prices of grain are Stats. 31 Geo. 3. c. 30: 33 Geo. 3. c. 65, by the former of which, Stats. 1 Jac. 2. c. 19: 1 W. & M. c. 12: 5 Geo. 2. c. 12: 10 Geo. 3. c. 39: 13 Geo. 3. c. 43: 21 Geo. 3. c. 50. & 29 Geo. 3. c. 58, are all repealed; as also every provision in any other act for regulating the importation of wheat, &c. except such as relate to the making of malt for exportation and the exportation thereof.—So much of Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 7, as prohibits the buying of corn to sell again, and the laying it up in granaries is also repealed.

By these Statutes 31 Geo. 3. c. 30: 33 Geo. 3. c. 65, bounties are granted on exportation at certain prices, and the exportation prohibited when at higher prices,—the quantity of corn to be exported to foreign countries is settled.—The maritime counties of England are divided into districts.—The exportation of corn to be regulated in London, Kent, Essex and Suffolk by the prices at the Corn-Exchange, the proprietors of which are to appoint an Inspector of corn returns, to whom weekly returns are to be made by the factors and he is to make up weekly accounts, and transmit the average price to the Receiver of the returns, to be transmitted to the officers of the customs, and inserted in the London Gazette—The exportation in other districts, and in Scotland, to be regulated by the prices at different appointed places, for which mayors justices, &c. are to elect Inspectors—Declarations are to be truly made by factors of the corn sold by them:—Orders of council may be made to regulate importation or exportation, from time to time. Such orders to be laid before parliament.—See also Stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 50, and 33 Geo. 3. c. 3, as to the exportation of wheat, and as to transshipping of corn brought coastwise.

[The above is a short abstract of the law on a very fluctuating subject; at the time this part of the work was passing through the press. January 1, 94]

CORN RENT, Cornagium, from the Lat. Cornu a horn] A kind of tenure in grand serfdom; the service of which was to blow a horn when any invasion of the Scots was perceived, and by this tenure many persons held their lands Northward, about the wall commonly called the Picts Wall. Cumb. Britan. 60. This old service of horn blowing was afterwards paid in money, and the sheriffs accounted for it under the title of Cornagium.—Sir E. Coke in his first Institute, pag. 107. says cornage is also called in the old books Horngeld; but they seem to differ much. See Ho. negeld.

CORNARE, To blow in the horn.—Mat. Paris p. 181.

CORN RENTS, By Stat. 18 El. c. 6, on college leases, one third of the old rent to be reserved in wheat or malt, &c. The invention of Lord Treasurer Burleigh, and Sir Tho. Smith, who observed the value of money to sink much, and the price of provisions to rise greatly, on our communication with the Indies; and therefore devised this method for upholding the revenues of the colleges. 2 Comm. 322.

CORNWALL, A royal duchy belonging to the Prince of Wales abounding with mines, and having Stannary courts, &c. It yields a great revenue to the Prince. How leases are to be made of lands in the duchy of Cornwall, for three lives, or thirty one years, under the ancient rents, &c. See Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 4. and 12 Ann. c. 22: 24 Geo. 2. c. 50: and 1 Geo. 3. c. 11. Affizes for Cornwall not confined to Launceston. 1 Geo. 1. c. 45. Leases by Prince of Wales of lands in Cornwall where good. 10 Geo. 2. c. 29. sect. 9, 10 & 11. What leases and grants by the king shall be good 33 Geo. 2. c. 10. See title King.

CORODY, Corodum.] Signifies a sum of money or allowance of meat, drink, and clothing due to the King from an abbey, or other house of religion, whereof he was founder towards the sustentation of such a one of his servants as he thought fit to bestow it upon. The difference between a corody and a pension seems to be, that a corody was allowed towards the maintenance of any of the King's servants in an abbey: a pension is given to one of the King's chaplains, for his better maintenance, till he may be provided of a benefice: And as to both these, See Fitz. Nat. Br. fol. 250; where are set down all the Corodies and pensions that our abbies, when they were standing were obliged to pay to the King.

Corody is ancient in our laws: And it is mentioned in Staundf. Prærog. 44. And by the Stat. of Wilm. 2. c. 25, it is ordained, that an assize shall lie for a corody. It is also apparent by Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 26, that corodies belonged sometimes to bishops, and noblemen, from monasteries: And in the New Terms of Law, it is said that a corody may be due to a common person, by grant from one to another, or of common right to him that is a founder of a religious house, not holden in Frank-almoigne; for that tenure was a discharge of all corodies in itself: By this book it likewise appears, that a corody is either certain or uncertain, and may be not only for life or years, but in fee. Term. d. Ley: 2 Inst. 630. See the Monasticon Anglicanum, for the form of a grant of a corody.

CORODIO HABENDO, A writ to exact a corody of an abbey or religious house. Reg. Orig. 264.

CORONA MALA, or MALA CORONA, The clergy who abused their character, were formerly so called. Blount.

CORONARE FILIUM, to make one's son a priest. Anciently lords of manors, whose tenants held by villengage, did prohibit them coronare filios, lest such lords should lose a villein by their entering into holy orders: For ordination changed their condition, and gave them liberty, to the prejudice of the lord, who could before claim them as his natives or born servants.—Homo Coronatus was one who had received the first tonsure, as preparatory to superior orders; and the tonsure was in form of a coronet, or crown of thorns. Cowel.

CORONER I.—II.

CORONER. CORONATOR, d. Corona. An ancient officer at the Common law. Mention is made of him in King Athelstan's charter to Beverly, Anno 925.

He is called Coroner, Coronator—because he hath principally to do with pleas of the crown, or such wherein the king is more immediately concerned, 2 Inft. 31: 4 Inft. 271. And in this light the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench is the principal Coroner in the kingdom, and may (if he pleases) exercise the jurisdiction of a coroner in any part of the realm. 4 Rep. 57. But there are also particular coroners for every county of England; usually four, but sometimes six, and sometimes fewer. F. N. B. 163. 'This office is of equal antiquity with that of sheriff, and was ordained together with him to keep the peace, when the earls gave up the wardship of the county. Mirror c. 1, § 3.

I. His Election; and Removal.

II. 1. His Power and Duty; 2. His Fees for the Execution of his Duty; and 3. His Punishment for the Breach of it.

I. HE IS STILL CHOSEN by all the freeholders in the county court; and by the policy of our antient laws, the sheriff and conservators of the peace, and all other officers were, who were concerned in matters that affected the liberty of the people. 2 Inft. § 58. And as verderors of the forest still are, whose business it is to stand between the Prerogative and the Subject in the execution of the forest laws. For this purpose there is a writ at common law de coronatore eligendo F. N. B. 163. in which it is expressly commanded the sheriff, "quod talem eligi faciat, qui melius et sciat, et velit, et possit, officio illi intendere." See post. And, in order to effect this the more surely, it was enacted by Stat. Westm. 1, 3 Ed. 1. c. 10, that none but lawful and discreet knights should be chosen; and there was an instance in the 5 Ed. III. of a man being removed from this office because he was only a merchant. 2 Inft. 32. But it seems it is now sufficient if a man hath lands enough to be made a knight; (which by the statutum de militibus, 1 Ed. II. were lands to the amount of 20 l. per annum;) whether he be really knighted or not, F. N. B. 163, 4. For the Coroner ought to have an estate sufficient to maintain the dignity of his office, and answer any fines that may be set upon him for his misbehaviour. Ibid. And if he hath not enough to answer, his fine shall be levied on the county, as the punishment for electing an insufficient officer. Mirror, c. 1. § 3: 2 Inft. 175. Now indeed, through the culpable neglect of gentlemen of property, this office has been suffered to fall into disrepute, and get into low and indigent hands; so that, although formerly no coroners would condescend to be paid for serving their country, and they were by the aforesaid Stat. Westm. 1, expressly forbidden to take a reward, under pain of great forfeiture to the king; yet for many years past they have only desired to be chosen for the sake of their perquisites: being allowed fees for their attendance. See post. II. 2.

By Stat. 28 Ed. 3. c. 6. it is enacted, "That all coroners of the counties shall be chosen in the full counties of the most mete and lawful people that shall be found in the same counties, to execute the said office; saved always to the King, and other lords, who ought to make such coroners, their seignories and franchises."

VOL. I.

The oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuratioⁿ, are to be taken, and then the oaths of office; when the coroner is elected, and sworn into his office, he is to remember the qualification^s, and in due time, to take the sacrament, and oaths of abjuration. Impey's Sheriff.

In the case of election by freeholders, where the majority cannot be determined by the view, upon the holding up of hands, the Sheriff upon the demand of a poll to be taken of the numbers, ought not to deny it; nor ought he to deny a scrutiny into the polls, when properly required, upon a suggestion that non-freeholders have polled: for how otherwise can the majority of freeholders be ascertained? It is an election at common law, and this scrutiny is as incident to enquire into the polls, as numbering of the polls is incident to the holding up of hands; nor can the just majority be otherwise duly discovered or declared. Freem. 17: 2 Vent. 25: 1 Vent. 206: 2 Lev. 50.

The Coroner is chosen for life: but may be removed, by either being made sheriff, or chosen verderor, which are offices incompatible with the other; or by the King's writ de coronatore evocando, for a cause to be therein assigned; as that he is engaged in other business, is incapacitated by years, or sickness, hath not a sufficient estate in the county, or lives in an inconvenient part of it. F. N. B. 163, 4: See post. And by Stat. 25 Geo. II. c. 29, extortion, neglect, or misbehaviour, are also made causes of removal. See post. II. 3.

There are Special Coroners, within divers liberties, as well as the ordinary officers in every county; as the Coroner of the Verge, which is a certain compass about the King's court; who is likewise called Coroner of the King's household. Crompt. Jurif. 102.

The King's coroner shall execute his office within the verge. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 20. sect. 7. Some corporations and colleges are licensed by charter to appoint their coroners within their own precincts. 4 Inft. 271. For what arises on the high sea, we read of coroners appointed by the King or his admiral. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 53. See post. Coroner of the King's Household.

It is said Coroners are of three kinds. 1, By virtue of an office. 2, By charter or commission. 3, By election.

1. The Chief Justice of K. B.—2. The Lord Mayor of London is by charter 18 E. 1V. Coroner of London. See post.—The Bishop of Ely also hath power to make coroners, by a charter of Hen. VII: and there are coroners of particular lords of franchises and liberties who by charter have power to create their own coroners, or to be coroners themselves, especially the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, as well as that of the verge above referred to.—3. The general coroners of counties.—See 1 Hale 52: 4 Rep. 57: 1 Comm. 384.

The Coroner of Portsmouth has jurisdiction on board a man of war lying in Portsmouth harbour: for though the Admiralty have a coroner of their own, he never takes inquisitions of jelo de jci. Sta. 1097: Andr. 231.

II. THE OFFICE OF CORONERS especially concerns the plea of the crown; and they are conservators of the peace in the county where generally elected. Their authority is judicial and ministerial: Judicial, where one comes to a violent death, and to take and enter appeals of murder, pronounce judgment upon outlawries, &c. And to inquire of lands and goods, and escapes of murderers, treasure-trove, wreck of the sea, deodands, &c. The ministerial power power is where the coroners execute the King's writs, on exception to the sheriff, as by his being party to a suit, kin to either of the parties, on default of the sheriff, &c. 4 Inst. 271: 1 Plowd. 73. And the authority of coroners does not determine by the demise of the King. 2 Inst. 174.

Where Coroners are empowered to act as judges, as in taking an inquisition of death, or receiving an appeal of felony, &c. the act of one of them is of the same force as if they had all joined; but after one of them has proceeded to act, the act of another of them will be void: And where they are authorised to act only ministerially, in the execution of a process directed to them upon the incapacity of the sheriff, their acts are void, if they do not all join. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 45. Hob. 70.

So that Coroners as ministers must all join; but as judges, they may divide. But two coroners ought to be judges in re disseisin; and though one serves to pronounce an outlawry, the entry ought to be in the name of all of them. And so of all processes directed to the coroners. Stamf. 53: Fenk. Cent. 85.

If the sheriff is either plaintiff or defendant, or one of the cognitees, the writ must be directed to the coroner, Cio Car 300. But the coroner is not the officer of B. R. but where the sheriff is improper; not where there is no sheriff, for if the sheriff die, the coroner cannot execute a writ. In case of two coroners, if one is challenged, the other may execute the writ, &c. yet both make but one officer: It is the same with two sheriffs of a city, &c. 1 Salk. 144. A vennefactus shall go to the coroner, where the sheriff is a party, or the defendant is a servant to the sheriff, &c. but it ought to be on a principal challenge to the favour. Moor 470.

On defaults of sheriffs, coroners are to impanel juries, and return issues on juries not appearing, &c. As the sheriff in his torn might enquire of all felonies by the Common law, saving the death of a man, so the coroner can enquire of no felony but of the death of a person, and that super visum corporis 4 Inst. 271. But in Northumberland the coroner by custom, may enquire of other felonies 35 H. 6 27. But without custom no coroner is authorised to take any other inquisition than on death 2 Hale 65 See Leach's Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 35. By Magna Charta, cap. 17. no sheriff, &c. or coroner shall hold pleas of the crown. But by Stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 10, it is enacted, that the coroners shall lawfully attach and present pleas of the crown; and that sheriffs shall have counter-rolls with the coroners, as well of appeals, as of inquests, &c.

Coroners, before the Stat. Magna Charta, might not only receive accusations against offenders, but might try them: But since that statute, they cannot proceed to try, and appeals before them, are removable into B. R. &c. by certiorari, directed to the coroners and sheriffs, &c. Though process may be awarded by the sheriff and coroner, or the coroner only, in the county court on appeals, till the exigent, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 41.

By the Stat. De officio coronatoris, 4 Ed. 1. c. 2, The Coroner is to go to the place where any person is slain or suddenly dead, and shall by his warrant to the bailiffs, constables, &c. summon a jury out of the four or five neighbouring towns, to make enquiry upon view of the body; and the coroner and jury are to inquire into the manner of killing, and all circumstances that occasioned the party's death; who were present, whether the dead person was known, where he lay the night before, &c. Examine the body if there be any signs of strangling about the neck, or of cords about the members, &c. Also all wounds ought to be viewed, and inquiry made with what weapons, &c. And the coroner may send his warrant for witnesses, and take their examination in writing; and if any appear guilty of the murder, he shall inquire what goods and lands he hath; and then the dead body is to be buried. A coroner may likewise commit the person to prison who is by his inquisition found guilty of the murder; and the witnesses are to be bound by recognisance to appear at the next assizes, &c.

When the jury have brought in their verdict, the coroner is to inroll and return the inquisition, whether it be brought in murder, manslaughter, &c. to the justices of the next gaol-delivery of the county, or certify it into B. R. where the murderers shall be proceeded against. 2 Rol. Abr. 32. Upon an inquisition taken before the coroner, he must put into writing the effect of the evidence given to the jury before him, and bind them to appear, &c. which is to be certified to the court with the inquisition; and neglecting it, the coroner shall be fined. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. 1 Lil. Abr. 327.

The word Murder is not necessary in a coroner's inquisition; though it is in an indictment for killing another person 1 Salk. 377. It is not necessary that the inquisition be taken in the place where the body was viewed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 25. But a coroner has no authority to take an inquisition of death without a view of the body; and if the inquest be taken by him without such view, it is void. 2 L. v. 140.

The coroner may in convenient time take up a dead body that hath been buried, in order to view it but if it be buried so long that he can discover nothing from the viewing it, or if there be danger of infection, the inquest ought not to be taken by the coroner, but by justices of peace, by the testimony of witnesses; for none can take it on view, but the coroner Bio Cin 167, 173. If the body is buried, the town shall be amerced, as it shall be if the body is sufficed to lie so long that it stinks. 2 Dan. Abr. 709, &c. Where the body hath lain for some time, that it cannot be judged how it came by its death, that must be recorded, that at the coming of the justices of assize, the town where, &c. may be amerced on sight of the coroner's rolls.

A coroner may find any nuisance by which the death of a man happens, and the township shall be amerced on such finding 1 Nelf. Abr. 536. If one is slain in the day and the murderer escapes, the town where he shall be amerced, and the coroner is to inquire thereof on view of the body, Stat. 3 Hin. 7. c. 1. A coroner may take an indictment upon view of the body; as also an appeal, within a year after the death of one slain. Westm. Inst. 491. But a coroner, super visum corporis, cannot make an inquisition of an accessory after the murder; though he may of accessories before the fact M. n. 29.

Coroners ought to sit and inquire on the body of every prisoner that dies in prison. They have no jurisdiction within the verge of the King's courts; nor of offences, committed at sea, or between high and low water mark when the tide is in; though they have in arms and crews of the sea 3 Inst. 134 See ant. l. a. finem. If a body is drowned, drowned, and cannot be found to the view, the inquisition must be taken by justices of peace, on the examination of witnesses, &c. 5 Rep. 110.

Where a coroner's inquest is quashed, he must make a new one super visum corporis: And a coroner may attend and amend his inquisition in matters of form: But if he misbehaves himself, and a melius inquirendum is granted upon it, that inquisition must be taken by the sheriffs or commissioners, upon affidavits, and not super visum corporis; because none but a coroner can take inquisition super visum, &c. and he is not to be trusted again. 1 Salk. 190: 2 Durr. Adv. 210.

A coroner's inquisition being final, the coroner ought to hear counsel and evidence on both sides. 2 Sid. 90, 101. The coroner must admit evidence, as well against the King's interest, as for it; but it hath been held, that if a person be killed by another, and it is certainly known that he did it, the coroner's jury are to hear the evidence only for the King; and inquire whether the killing were by malice, or without malice, &c. Per Hale, Ch. Just. Where a coroner would not admit of evidence against the King, to prove a felo de se to be non compos mentis, his inquisition was set aside; and a new inquisition taken, whereby it was found that the party was non compos. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 60. If there be an inquisition of manslaughter or murder, and also an indictment by the grand jury against one, and he is arraigned, and found Not Guilty on the indictment; here it is necessary to quash the coroner's inquisition, or to arraign the party upon it, and acquit him on that also: For otherwise it stands as a record against him, whereon he may possibly be outlawed. 2 Hale 65. And where a person found guilty by the coroner's inquest, pleads, and is acquitted by the petit jury; they must give in who it was that killed the man, which serves as an indictment against that other person; and if they cannot tell who, they may mention some fictitious name. Ibid.

2 By the Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 10, Coroners shall demand or take nothing for doing their offices. And by the ancient law of England, none having any office concerning the administration of justice, could take any fee for doing his office; and therefore this statute was only in affirmance of the Common law. By Stat. 3 Hen. 7. cap. 1, upon an inquisition taken on view of the body, the coroner shall have 13s. 4d. fee of the goods of the murderer; and if he be gone, then out of the amercement of the town for the escape. Though Stat. 1 H. 8. c. 7, enacts, that where a person is slain by misadventure, the coroner is to take no fee, on pain of 40s. Justices of assize and of peace have power to enquire of and punish extortions of coroners, and also their defaults Stat. Ibid.

By the Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 29, for every inquisition, not taken upon the view of a body dying in gaol, which shall be taken by any coroner in any township or place contributory to the rates directed by Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29, the sum of 20s. and for every mile which he shall travel from the place of his abode, the further sum of 9d. shall be paid him out of the money arising by the said rates. And for every inquisition taken upon the view of a body dying in gaol, so much money not exceeding 20s. shall be paid him as the justices at sessions shall think fit to allow, out of the money arising from the said rates. Provided that over and above the recompence by the statute appointed, the coroner who shall take an inquisition upon the view of a body slain or murdered, shall have the fee of 13s. 4d. payable by Stat. 3 Ed. 7. c. 1, out of the goods of the slayer or murderer, or out of the amercements upon the township, if the slayer or murderer escape. Coroners taking further fees guilty of extortion.

Provided that no Coroner of the King's household, and of the verge of the King's palaces, nor any coroner of the Admiralty, nor of the County Palatine of Durham, nor of the city of London and borough of Southwark, or of any of the franchises belonging to the said city, nor any coroner of any city, borough, town, liberty or franchise not contributory to the rates directed by Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29, or within which such rates have not been usually assessed, shall be intitled to any fee, recompence or benefit given by this act.

3. If a Coroner be remiss in coming to do his office, when he is sent for, &c. he shall be amerced by virtue of the above mentioned statute De coronatoribus. S. P. C. 51: Salk. 377: H. P. C. 170.

If a Coroner hath been guilty of any corrupt practices, bribery, &c. in taking the inquisition, a melius inquirendum may be awarded for taking a new one by special commissioners, &c. Coroners concealing felonies, &c. are to be fined, and suffer one year's imprisonment. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 9. Also for mismanagement in the coroner, the filing of the inquisition may be stopped. 1 Mod. 82. A coroner's inquisition is not traversable: If it be found before the coroner super visum corporis, that one was felo de se, the executors or administrators of the deceased, it is said, cannot traverse it. 3 Inst. 55. But it has been held that the inquest being moved into B. R. by certiorari, may be there traversed by the executor or administrator of the deceased. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 54. And it hath been adjudged, that the inquisition of felo de se is traversable; though fugari fecit is not. 2 Leo. 152.

If a Coroner be convicted of extortion, wilful neglect of duty or misdemeanor in his office, the court before whom he shall be so convicted, may adjudge that he shall be removed from his office.—See Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 29.—For further matter on this subject, see 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9, throughout.

CORONER OF THE KING'S HOUSEHOLD, Hath an exempt jurisdiction within the verge, which the Coroner of the County cannot intermeddle with; as the Coroner of the King's House may not intermeddle within the county out of the verge. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 15.—If an inquisition be found before the coroner of the county, and the coroner of the verge, where the homicide was committed in the county, and it is so entered and certified, it will be error. 4 Rep. 45. But if murder be committed within the verge, and the King removes, before any indictment taken by the Coroner of the King's Household; the coroner of the county, and the Coroner of the King's House shall inquire of the same: And according to Sir Edw. Coke, the coroner of the county might inquire thereof at the Common law. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 15: 2 Inst. 550. If the same person be coroner of the county, and also of the King's House, an indictment of death taken before him as coroner, both of the King's House, and of the county, is good. 4 Rep. 461 & Inst. 134.

By the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 32. §§ 1, 2, It is ordained, That all inquisitions made upon the view of persons slain, within any of the King's palaces or houses, or any other house or houses wherein his Majesty shall happen to be abiding in his royal person, shall be taken by the Coroner for the time being of the King's Household, without any affixing of another coroner of any shire within this realm; by the oaths of twelve or more of the yeoman officers of the King's Household, returned by the two Clerks Controllers, the Clerks of the Cheque, and the Clerk Marshal, or one of them, of the said Household, to whom the said Coroner of the Household shall direct his precept; and the said Coroner shall certify under his seal, and the seals of such persons as shall be sworn before him, all such inquisitions before the Master or Lord Steward of the Household; who hath the appointment of such coroner, &c.

CORONER OF LONDON. By the charter of King Ed. IV, the mayor and commonalty of London may grant the office of coroner to whom they please; and no other coroner but he that belongs to the city, shall have any power there: Also the Lord Mayor, &c. may chuse two coroners in Southwark. When any one is killed, or comes to an untimely death in London, the coroner upon notice shall attend where the body is, and forthwith cause the headles of the ward to summon a jury to make the necessary inquiry, how such person came by his death: And after inquisition taken, he shall give a certificate to the church-warden, clerk or sexton of the parish, to the intent the corpse may be buried: The coroner's fees here formerly amounted to 25 s. now to above double that sum; unless the friends of the deceased are poor, and then he shall execute his office for nothing. Cit. Lib. 46, 47. The Coroners in London and Middlesex, and in other cities, &c. may bail felons and prisoners, in such manner as hath been heretofore accustomed. Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. f. 6: 1 Lil. Abr. 327.

What anciently belonged to Coroners, you may read at large in Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 5, 6, 7 & 8: Britton, cap. 1. and Plea, lib. 1. c. 18.

CORONATORE ELIGENDO. A writ which lies on the death or discharge of any Coroner, directed to the Sheriff out of the Chancery, to call together the freeholders of the county, for the choice of a new coroner; and to certify into the Chancery, both the election and the name of the party elected, and also to give him his oath, &c. Reg. Orig. 177: F. N. B. 163. See title Coroner.

CORONATORE EXONERANDO. A writ for the discharge of a coroner, for negligence, or insufficiency in the discharge of his duty: and where coroners are so far engaged in any other public business, that they cannot attend the office; or if they are disabled by old age or disease, to execute it; or have not sufficient lands, &c. they may be discharged by this writ. 2 Infl. 32: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 12. But if any such writ be grounded on an untrue suggestion, the coroner may procure a commission from the Chancery to enquire thereof; and if the suggestion be disproved, the King may make a superjudeus to the sheriff, that he do not remove the coroner; or if he have removed him, that he suffer him to execute the office. Reg. Orig. 177, 178: P. N. B. 164. See title Coroner. As also the coroner's is an office of freehold, the court of Chancery, with whom the power of granting this writ resides, will not suffer it to issue, unless on affidavit, that the defendant has been served with notice of the petition for it. 3 Ark. 184. And on an election of a new coroner by a majority of the freeholders, the power and authority of the old one is ipso facto extinguished. See title Coroner.

CORPORATION.

CORONE, Fr.] All matters of the crown, were heretofore reduced to this law head or title; they are the things that concern treason, felony, and diverse other offences, by the Common law, and by statute. Shep. Epit. 367.

CORPORAL OATH, And how it is administered. See title Oath.

CORPORATION.

[CORPORATIO.] A Body politic or incorporate; so called as the persons composing it are made into a body, and of capacity to take and grant, &c. Or, it is an assembly and joining together of many into one fellowship and brotherhood, whereof one is head and chief, and the rest are the body; and this head and body knit together, make the Corporation: also it is constituted of several members like unto the natural body, and framed, by fiction of law, to endure in perpetual succession.

With respect to Corporations, or communities of old, the forming of cities into communities, corporations, or bodies politic, and granting them the privilege of municipal jurisdiction, contributed more than any other cause to introduce regular government, police and arts, and to diffuse them over Europe. Louis the Great, in France, to counterbalance his potent vassals, conferred new privileges on the towns situated within his domaine, called Charters of community, and formed the inhabitants into corporations, or bodies politic, to be governed by a council and magistrates of their own nomination. About the same period the great cities in Germany began to acquire like immunities; and the practice quickly spread over Europe, and was adopted in Spain, England, Scotland, and all the other feudal kingdoms. Robertson's Hist. Emp. C. V. v. 32, 34, &c.

Of Corporations some are sole, some aggregate; sole, when in one single person, as the King, a Bishop, Dean, &c. Aggregate, which is the most usual, consisting of many persons, as Mayor and Commonalty, Dean and Chapter, &c. Likewise corporations are spiritual or temporal; spiritual, of Bishops, Deans, Archdeacons, Parsons, Vicars, &c. Temporal, of Mayors, Commonalty, Bailiffs and Burgesses, &c. Some Corporations are of a mixt nature, composed of spiritual and temporal persons, such as heads of colleges and hospitals, &c. All corporations are said to be Ecclesiastical, or Lay.

Lay Corporations are of two sorts, civil and eleemosynary. The civil are such as are erected for a variety of temporal purposes. The King, for instance, is made a corporation to prevent in general the possibility of an interregnum, or vacancy of the throne, and to preserve the possessions of the Crown entire; for immediately upon the demise of one king, his successor is in full possession of the regal rights and dignity. Other lay corporations are erected for the good government of a town or particular district, as a mayor and commonalty, bailiff and burgesses, or the like; some for the advancement and regulation of manufactures and commerce; as the trading companies of London, and other towns: and some for the better carrying on of divers special purposes; as churchwardens, for conservation of the goods of the parish; the college of Physicians and company of Surgeons in London, for the improvement of the medical science; the Royal Society, for the advancement of natural knowledge; and the Society of Antiquaries for promoting the study of antiquities. And among these general corporate bodies, the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge must be ranked. 3 Burn. 1656.

CORPORATION I.—II.

The eleemosynary sort are, such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms, or bounty, of the founder of them to such persons as he has directed. Of this kind are all hospitals for the maintenance of the poor, sick, and impotent: and all colleges, both in our Universities, and out of them. Such as at Westminster, Eaton, Winchester, &c. which colleges are founded for two purposes; 1. For the promotion of piety and learning, by proper regulations and ordinances. 2. For imparting assistance to the members of those bodies, in order to enable them to prosecute their devotion and studies with greater ease and assiduity. And all these eleemosynary corporations are, strictly speaking, lay, and not ecclesiastical, even though composed of ecclesiastical persons, and although they in some things partake of the nature, privileges, and restrictions of ecclesiastical bodies. 1 Lil. Raym. 6. They are, in fact, lay corporations, because they are not subject to the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, or to the visitations of the Ordinary or Diocesan in their spiritual characters. 1 Comm. 471.

- I. How Corporations are created.
- II. Their Interest and Jurisdiction.
- III. How far their Acts are binding.
- IV. How they are visited.
- V. How they are dissolved.

I. BODIES POLITICAL or incorporate may commence and be established three manner of ways, viz. by prescription, by letters patent, or by act of parliament; but most commonly begin by patent or charter. 1 Inst. 250: 3 Inst. 202: 3 Rep. 73.

In making aggregate corporations, there must be, 1. Lawful authority. 2. Proper persons to be incorporated. 3. A name of incorporation. 4. A place, without which no corporation can be made. 5. Words sufficient in law to make a corporation. 10 Rep. 29, 123: 3 Rep. 73. The words incorpora, funla, &c. are not of necessity to be used in making corporations; but other words equivalent are sufficient: and of ancient time, the inhabitants of a town were incorporated, when the King granted to them to have Guillam Mercatoriam. 2 Dan. 114. He that gave the first possessions to the corporation, is the founder. The parishioners or townsmen of a parish or town; and tenants of a manor, are to some purposes a corporation. Co. Lit. 95, 342.

If the King grants lands to the inhabitants of B. their heirs and successors, rendering a rent, for any thing touching these lands, this is a corporation; though not to other purposes: but if the King grants lands to the inhabitants of B. and they be not incorporated before, if no rent be reserved to the King, the grant is void. 2 Danv. 214. If the King grants to the men of Islington to be discharged of toll, this is a good corporation to this intent; but not to purchase, &c. And by special words the King may make a limited corporation, or a corporation for a special purpose. Ibid.

London is a Corporation by prescription: but though a corporation may be by prescription, it shall be intended that it did originally derive its authority by grant from the King; for the King is the head of the commonwealth, and all the commonwealth, in respect of him, is but one corporation; and all other corporations are but limbs of the greater body. 1 Lil. Abs. 330. A mayor and commonalty or corporation, cannot make another corporation, or commonalty. 1 Sid. 290. The city of London cannot make a corporation, because that can only be created by the crown; but London, or any other corporation, may make a fraternity. 1 Salk. 193.

The parliament, by its absolute and transcendent authority, may perform this, or any other act whatsoever: and actually did perform it to a great extent, by Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5; which incorporated all hospitals and houses of correction founded by charitable persons, without farther trouble: and the same has been done in other cases of charitable foundations. But otherwise it has not formerly been usual thus to intrench upon the prerogative of the Crown; and the King may prevent it when he pleases. And, in the particular instance before mentioned, it was done, as Sir Edward Coke observes, 2 Inst. 722, to avoid the charges of incorporation and licences of mortmain in small benefactions; which in his days were grown so great, that they discouraged many men from undertaking these pious and charitable works.

The King (it is said) may grant to a Subject the power of erecting corporations; (Bro. Abr. tit. Prærog. 53: Prærog. 88. pl. 16. though the contrary was formerly held. Year Book. 2 Hen. 7. 13;) that is, he may permit the Subject to name the persons and powers of the corporation at his pleasure; but it is really the King that erects, and the Subject is but the instrument: for though none but the King can make a corporation, yet qui facit per alium, facit per se. 20 Rep. 33. In this manner the Chancellor of the University of Oxford, has power by charter to erect corporations; and has actually often exerted it, in the erection of several matriculated companies, now subsisting, of tradesmen subservient to the students.

When a Corporation is erected, a name must be given to it; and by that name alone it must sue and be sued, and do all legal acts; though a very minute variation therein is not material. 10 Rep. 122. Such name is the very being of its constitution; and, though it is the will of the King that erects the corporation, yet the name is the knot of its combination, without which it could not perform its corporate functions. Gilb. Hist. C. P. 182. The name of incorporation, says Sir Edward Coke, is as a proper name, or name of baptism; and therefore when a private founder gives his college or hospital a name, he does it only as a godfather; and by that same name the King baptises the Corporation. 10 Rep. 28.

And it may change its name, as corporations frequently do in new charters, and will still retain its former rights and privileges. 4 Co. 87.

No persons shall bear office in any corporation, &c. but such as have received the sacrament of the church, and taken the oaths. Stat. 13 Car. c. 1. But see the Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 6, confirming officers in corporations. See title By Laws. Oaths, Nonconformists.

What persons are capable of being elected members of a corporation, See Hardw. 23.

II WHEN a Corporation is duly created, all incidents, as, to purchase and grant, sue and be sued, &c. are tacitly annexed to it; and although no power to make laws, statutes or ordinances, is given by a special clause to a corporation, it is included by law in the very act of incorporating. Co. Lit. 264. A new charter doth not merge or extinguish any of the ancient privileges of the old charter. And if an ancient corporation is incorporated by a new name, yet their new body shall enjoy all the privileges that the old corporation had. Revm. 439: 4 Rep. 37.

There are usually granted in charters to corporations, divers franchises; as felons' goods, wails, estrays, treasure-trove, deodands, courts, and cognisance of pleas, fairs, markets, assise of bread and beer, &c. 4 Rep. 65. Actions arising in corporations may be tried in the corporation courts; but if they try actions which arise not within their jurisdictions, and encroach upon the Common law, they shall be punished for it. Lutw. 1571, 1572. Actions triable there, must, in general, mean, those actions wherein the corporation is not interested.

There may be a corporation without a head: but where there is a head, all acts ought to be by and to the head; nor can they sue without such head: and if he dies, nothing can be done in the vacancy. 10 Rep. 30, 32: Co. Lit. 264. If land be given to a mayor and commonalty for their lives, they have an estate by indentment not determinable: so it is, if a feoffment be made of land to a dean and chapter, without mention of successors.

In a case of Sole Corporation, as bishop, dean, parson, &c. no chattel, either in action or possession, shall go in succession; but the executors or administrators of the bishop, parson, &c. shall have them: but it is otherwise of a corporation aggregate, as a dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, and the like: for they in the judgment of law never die. But the case of the Chamberlain of London differs from all these; his successor, in his own name, may have execution of a recognisance acknowledged to his predecessor for orphans' money; and the reason is, because the corporation of the chamberlain is by custom, which hath enabled the successor to take and have such recognizances, obligations, &c. that are made to his predecessor. Terms de Ley.

Though a Sole Corporation cannot generally take in succession goods and chattels, &c. yet it may take a feoffment in succession, by the word Successors. Co. Lit. 8, 9, 46. Aggregate corporations may take not only goods and chattels, but lands in fee-simple, without the word Successors, for the reason before-mentioned. 4 Inlt. 249. Succession in a body politic, is an inheritance in a body private. If a lease for years be made to a bishop and his successors, it is said his executors shall have it in autre droit; for regularly no chattel can go in succession in case of a sole corporation, no more than if a lease be made to a man and his heirs, it can go to his heirs. Co. Lit. 46.

Grants of corporations are to be by deed, under their common seal, and are good without delivery; for the common seal gives perfection to corporation deeds. Dial. 44. An obligation sealed with the common seal of a corporation, if the mayor signs it, he is suable, if the corporation be dissolved: but if two of the members sign it, the particular persons are not bound by it. 2 Lev. 137: Raym. 152. A release of a mayor for any sum of money due to the corporation, made in his own name, is not good in law; the corporation must join and do it by their common seal. Terms de Ley.

A Corporation which hath a head, may make a personal command without writing; but a corporation aggregate without a head cannot. Lutw. 1497. A corporation aggregate may employ any one in ordinary services, without deed; though not to appear for them, in any act which concerns their interest or title. 1 Term. 47, 48. Such a corporation may appoint a bailiff to take a distress, without deed or warrant. 1 Salk. 191. But cannot without deed command a bailiff to enter into lands for a condition broken; for such command without deed is void. Cro. 815.

Though a Corporation cannot do an act in pais without their common seal, they may do an act upon record; and the reason is, because they are elopped by the record to say it is not their act. 1 Salk. 192. A promise to a corporation is good without deed. 2 Lev. 252. The head of a corporation aggregate may not be charged with the act of his predecessor if it be not by common seal, or for such things as come to the use of the whole body or society. 1 And. 23, 195.

A Corporation may do an act in that capacity, to one of themselves in his natural capacity; and any member in his natural capacity may perform an act to the corporation in his politic capacity; and so they may sue one another, in their distinct capacities. 1 Shup. Abr. 436. Trespass for an assault and battery, &c. will not lie against a corporation, but it must be brought against the persons that do the trespass by their proper names: though if the heads of the corporation trespass on a man in his ground, action of trespass lies against them for this. Process of outlawry will not lie against a corporation; nor capias or exigent, but distress. 22 Aff. 67: 39 Ed. 3: 13: 21 Ed. 4.

A Corporation cannot sue, or appear in person, but by attorney: they cannot commit treason or felony, or be excommunicate, &c. They may not be executors, or administrators, be jointenants, trustees, &c. Nor shall the members of a corporation be regularly witnesses for the corporation. 10 Rep. 32: 11 Rep. 98: Co. Lit. 134. But they may be disfranchised, and then be witnesses; though not surrender by consent. Yet in some cases the judges now admit their testimony without disfranchisement, where the interest is remote. Attachment doth not lie against a corporation. Raym. 152.

Corporations may have power not only to infranchise freemen but to disfranchise a member, and deprive him of his freedom; if he doth any act to the prejudice of the body, or contrary to his oath, &c. Though for conspiring to do any thing contrary to his duty, or for words of contempt against the chief officer, he may not be disfranchised; but he may be committed till he find sureties for his good behaviour. 11 Rep. 98: 5 Mod. 257. A corporation cannot disfranchise for breach of a by-law. 1 Lil. 331. And one wrongfully disfranchised may be restored, and have his remedy by mandamus, &c. in B. R. An alderman or freeman of a corporation cannot be removed from his freedom or place without good cause, and a custom to remove them ad libitum is void, because the party hath a freehold therein. Cro. Jac. 547.

A person may be bound to the good behaviour for words spoke against mayors, &c. but he may not be indicted for it: and if justices of a corporation deny to do right, it is a forfeiture of their exemption from the inquiry of the justices of the county. Mod. Caf. 125, 164. Head officers of corporations are to redress abuses of merchant-strangers, &c. or the franchise shall be seized, Stat. 9 Eliz. c. 3. sect. 1; and have authority in many cases by statute; for which see title Mayors.

No strangers shall sell by retail any woollen or linen cloth, or mercery wares, in corporate towns, except at fairs, fairs, on pain of forfeiture, &c. But such persons may sell wares by wholesale, and cloth of their own making by retail. 1 & 2 P. & M. cap. 7. Bodies politic ecclesiastical may make leases for three lives, or twenty-one years, under the restrictions in the acts 1 Eliz. c. 19: 13 Eliz. c. 20.—See title Leases. If land is given in fee to a dean and chapter, or to a mayor and commonalty, &c. and after, such body politic or incorporate is dissolved, the donor shall have the land again, and not the lord by escheat. Co. Lit. 31.

The Corporation of the city of London is to answer for all particular misdemeanors, which are committed in any of the courts of justice within the city; and for all other general misdemeanors committed within the city; so it is conceived of all other corporations. 1 Lil. Abr. 329. If a common officer of a town doth any thing for their common use, it is reasonable the corporate town should be answerable for it. 1 Leon. 215.

III. A CORPORATION is properly an investing the people of the place with the local government thereof, and therefore their laws shall be binding to strangers; but a Fraternity is some people of a place united together in respect of a mystery and business into a company, and their laws and ordinances cannot bind strangers, for they have not a local power. Salk. 193.

No masters and wardens, &c. of any mystery, or other corporation, shall make any by-laws or ordinances in diminution of the King's prerogative, or against the common profit of the people; except the same be approved by the Lord Chancellor, or Chief Justices, &c. on pain of 40*l*. And such bodies corporate shall not make any acts or ordinances for the restraining persons to sue in the King's courts for remedy, &c. under the like penalty. Stat. 19 Hen. 7. cap. 7. Ordinances made by corporations, to be observed on pain of imprisonment, or of forfeiture of goods, &c. are contrary to Magna Charta. 2 Inst. 4, 54.

But penalties may be inflicted by by-laws, which may be recovered by distress or action of debt: and a custom for the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, to commit a citizen for not accepting of the livery, &c. was held a good custom, being for the good government of the city. 5 Mod. 320.

Corporations may not, by bond, or otherwise, restrain any apprentice, &c. from keeping shop in the corporation, under the penalty of 40*l*. Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 5.—See title By-Laws.

In acts done by corporations, the consent of the major part shall be binding. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 27.

This act clearly vacates all private statutes, both prior, and subsequent to its date, which require the concurrence of more than a majority to give validity to any grant or election. Blackstone, (1 Comm. 478,) is of opinion, that it has not affected the negative given by the statutes to the Head of any society; but it seems that this opinion may be questioned; especially in cases where, in the first instance, he gives his vote with the members of the society. It is the usual language of college statutes to direct that many acts shall be done by guardians & major pars sociorum, or magister, or procurator et major pars; and it has been determined by the Court of King's Bench, (Corp. 377) and by the visitor of Clare-Hall, Cambridge, and also by the visitors of Dublin college, that this expression does not confer upon the warden, master, or provost, any negative; but that his vote must be counted with the rest, and he is concluded by a majority of votes against him.

IV. CORPORATIONS being composed of individuals, subject to human frailties, are liable, as well as private persons, to deviate from the end of their institution. And for that reason the law has provided proper persons to visit, inquire into, and correct all irregularities that arise in such corporations, either sole, or aggregate, and whether ecclesiastical, civil, or eleemosynary. With regard to all ecclesiastical corporations, the Ordinary is their visitor, so constituted by the canon law, and from thence derived to us. The Pope formerly, and now the King, as supreme Ordinary, is the visitor of the archbishop or metropolitan; the metropolitan has the charge and coercion of all his suffragan bishops; and the bishops in their several dioceses, are in ecclesiastical matters the visitors of all deans and chapters, of all parsons and vicars, and of all other spiritual corporations. With respect to all lay corporations, the founder, his heirs, or assigns, are the visitors, whether the foundation be civil or eleemosynary; for in a lay incorporation, the Ordinary neither can nor ought to visit. 10 Rep. 31.

The founder of all corporations in the strictest and original sense is, the King alone, for he only can incorporate a society; and in civil incorporations, such as mayor and commonalty, &c. where there are no possessions or endowments given to the body, there is no other founder but the king: but in eleemosynary foundations, such as colleges and hospitals, where there is an endowment of lands, the law distinguishes and makes two species of foundation; the one fundatio incipiens, or the incorporation, in which sense the King is the general founder of all colleges and hospitals; the other fundatio perficiens, or the dotation of it, in which sense the first gift of the revenues is the foundation, and he who gives them is in law the founder: and it is in this last sense that we generally call a man the founder of a college or hospital. 10 Rep. 33. But here the King has his prerogative; for, if the King and a private man join in endowing an eleemosynary foundation, the King alone shall be the founder of it. And, in general the King being the sole founder of all civil corporations, and the endower the perficiens founder of all eleemosynary ones, the right of visitation of the former, results, according to the rule laid down, to the King; and of the latter to the Patron or endower.

The King being thus constituted by law visitor of all civil corporations, the law has also appointed the place, wherein he shall exercise this jurisdiction: which is the Court of King's Bench; where, and where only, all misbehaviours of this kind of corporations are inquired into and redressed, and all their controversies decided. However though the Court of King's Bench, upon a proper complaint and application, can prevent and punish injustice in civil corporations, as in every other part of their jurisdiction; it is not the language of the profession, to call that part of their authority a visitatorial power. 1 Comm. 481. n.

As to eleemosynary corporations, by the dotation, the founder and his heirs are of common right the legal visitors; but, if the founder has appointed and assigned any other person to be visitor, then his assignee so appointed is invested with all the founder's power, in exclusion of his his heir. Eleemosynary corporations are chiefly hospitals, or colleges in the Universities; these were all of them considered, by the popish clergy, as of mere ecclesiastical jurisdiction: however, the law of the land judged otherwise; and, with regard to hospitals, it has long been held, (Y. B. 8 Ed. 3. 28. 8 Aff. 293) that if the hospital be spiritual, the bishop shall visit; but if lay, the patron. This right of lay patrons was indeed abridged by Stat. 2 Hen. 5. c. 1; which ordained, that the Ordinary should visit all hospitals founded by Subjects; though the King's right was reserved, to visit by his commissioners such as were of royal foundation. But the Subject's right was in part restored by Stat. 14 Eliz. c. 5; which directs the bishop to visit such hospitals only, where no visitor is appointed by the founder thereof: and all hospitals founded by virtue of the Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5, are to be visited by such persons as shall be nominated by the respective founders. But still, if the founder appoints nobody, the bishop of the diocese must visit. 2 Inst. 275.

Colleges in the Universities, (whatever the common law may now, or might formerly judge) were certainly considered by the popish clergy, under whose direction they were, as ecclesiastical, or at least as clerical corporations; and therefore the right of visitation was claimed by the Ordinary of the diocese. This is evident, because in many of our most ancient colleges, where the founder had a mind to subject them to a visitor of his own nomination, he obtained for that purpose a papal bull, to exempt them from the jurisdiction of the Ordinary; several of which are still preserved in the archives of the respective societies. And in some of our colleges, where no special visitor is appointed, the bishop of that diocese, in which Oxford was formerly comprised, has immemorially exercised visitatorial authority; (that is, the Bishop of Lincoln, from whose diocese that of Oxford was taken;) which can be ascribed to nothing else, but his supposed title as Ordinary to visit this, among other ecclesiastical foundations.

But, whatever might be formerly the opinion of the Clergy, it is now held as established Common law, that colleges are lay corporations, though sometimes totally composed of ecclesiastical persons, and that the right of visitation does not arise from any principles of the canon law, but of necessity was created by the common law. Ld. Raym. 8. And yet the power and jurisdiction of visitors in colleges was left so much in the dark at common law, that the whole doctrine was very unsettled till the famous case of Philips v. Bay. (Ld. Raym. 5: 4 Mod. 106) In this the main question was, whether the sentence of the Bishop of Exeter, who, (as visitor) had deprived Doctor Bay, the Rector of Exeter college, could be examined and redressed by the Court of King's Bench. And the three puisne judges were of opinion, that it might be reviewed, for that the visitor's jurisdiction could not exclude the common law; and accordingly judgment was given in that court. But Lord Chief Justice Holt was of a contrary opinion; and held, that by the common law, the office of visitor is to judge according to the statutes of the college, and to expel and deprive upon just occasions, and to hear all appeals of course: and that from him, and him only, the party aggrieved ought to have redress: the Founder having reposed in him so entire a confidence, that he will administer justice impartially, that his determinations are final, and examinable in no other court whatever. And, upon this, a writ of error being brought into the House of Lords, they concurred in Sir John Holt's opinion, and reversed the judgment of the Court of King's Bench. To which leading case all subsequent determinations have been conformable. But, where the visitor is under a temporary disability, there the Court of King's Bench will interpose, to prevent a defect of justice. Sira 797. Also it is said, (2 Inst. c. 1566.) that if a founder of an eleemosynary foundation appoints a visitor, and limits his jurisdiction by rules and statutes, if the visitor in his sentence exceeds those rules, an action lies against him; but it is otherwise, where he mistakes in a thing within his power.

No particular form of words is necessary for the appointment of a visitor. Sit visitor, or visitatorem commendamus, will create a general visitor, and confer all the authority incidental to the office; (1 Burr. 199;) but this general power may be restrained and qualified, or the visitor may be directed by the statutes to do particular acts, in which instance he has no discretion as visitor; as where the statutes direct the visitor to appoint one of two persons, nominated by the fellows, to be the Master of a college, the Court of King's Bench will examine the nomination of the fellows, and if correct, will compel the visitor to appoint one of the two. 2 Term Rep. 290. New ingrafted fellowships, if no statutes are given by the founders of them, must follow the original foundation, and are subject to the same discipline and jurisdiction. 1 Burr. 203. It is the duty of the visitor, in every instance, to effectuate the intention of the founder, as far as he can collect it from the statutes, and the nature of the institution; and in the exercise of this jurisdiction, he is free from all control. Lord Mansfield has declared, that the visitatorial power, if properly exercised, without expence or delay, is useful and convenient to colleges; and it is now settled and established, that the jurisdiction of a visitor is summary, and without appeal from it. 1 Burr. 200.—See 1 Comm. 479, &c.

V. A CORPORATION may be dissolved, for it is created upon a trust; and if that be broken it is forfeited. 4 Mod. 58.

Corporations are dissolved by forfeiture of their charter, misuser, &c. upon the writ quo warranto brought; by surrender, or by act of parliament; and if they neglect to choose officers, or make false elections, &c. it is a forfeiture of the corporation. 4 Rep. 77.

Corporations may be dissolved in several ways, which, dissolution is the civil death of the corporation; and in this case their lands and tenements shall revert to the person, or his heirs, who granted them to the corporation; for the law doth annex a condition to every such grant, that if the corporation be dissolved, the grantor shall have the lands again, because the cause of the grant faileth. Co. Lit. 13. The grant is indeed only during the life of the corporation; which may endure for ever; but, when that life is determined by the dissolution of the body politic, the grantor takes it back by reversion, as in the case of every other grant for life. The debts of a corporation, either to or from it, are totally extinguished by its dissolution; so that the members thereof cannot recover, or be charged with them, in their natural capacities. 1 Lev. 237.

A Corporation may be dissolved, 1. By act of parliament; which is boundless in its operations. 2. By the natural death of all its members, in case of an aggregate corporation. 3. By surrender of its franchises into the hands of the king, which is a kind of suicide. 4. By forfeiture of its charter, through negligence or abuse of its franchise: in which case the law judges that the body politic has broken the condition upon which it was incorporated, and therefore the incorporation is void. And the regular course is to bring an information in nature of a writ of quo warranto, to inquire by what warrant the members now exercise their corporative power, having forfeited it by such and such proceedings: The exertion of this act of law, for the purposes of the State, in the reign of King Charles and King James the Second, particularly by seizing the charter of the City of London, gave great and just offence, though perhaps, in strictness of law, the proceedings in most of them were sufficiently regular: but the judgment against that of London was reversed by act of parliament. Stat. 2 W. & M. c. 8, after the Revolution; and by the same Stat. it is enacted, that the franchises of the City of London shall never more be forfeited for any cause whatsoever. And, because by the Common law corporations were dissolved, in case the mayor or head officer was not duly elected on the day appointed in the charter, or established by prescription, it is now provided by Stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4, that no corporation shall be dissolved, for any default to choose a mayor, &c. but the electors are still to proceed to election; and if no election be made, the court of King's Bench shall issue a mandamus requiring the electors to choose such mayor, &c.

By Stat. 2 Ann. c. 20. Where persons intrude into the office of mayor, &c. of a corporation, a quo warranto shall be brought against the usurpers, who shall be ousted, and fined: and none are to execute an office in a corporation for more than a year. See further on this subject Kyd's Treatise of the Law of Corporations;—and see also particularly this Dict. titles Mortmain; Mandamus; Quo warranto.

To prevent improper conduct in trading corporations in elections, and in disposing of the joint-stock, it is by Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 48, enacted, that no member of such corporations shall be admitted to vote in the general courts, until he shall have been six months in possession of the stock necessary to qualify him: unless it comes to him by bequest, marriage, succession or settlement.—And by the same statute, only one half yearly dividend is to be made by one general court, five months at least from the preceding declaration of a dividend; and questions for increasing the dividend are to be decided by ballot. See title East India Company.

To facilitate the proceedings in cases of mandamus and quo warranto, and to prevent any undue advantage on either side, the Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 21, provides that where any person shall be entitled to be admitted a freeman, &c. of any corporation, &c. and shall apply to the proper officer to be admitted, and shall give notice of his intention to move the court of King's Bench for a mandamus in case of refusal, the officer shall pay all the costs of the application.—And the same statute enacts, that the proper officer shall, on the demand of two freemen, permit them and their agents to inspect the entries of admission of freemen, and to take copies and extracts; under penalty of 100*l*.

CORPSE, stealing of. If any one in taking up a dead body steals the shroud, or other apparel, it will be felony, 3 Inft. 110: 12 Rep. 113: 1 Hal. P. C. 515. But stealing the corpse itself, only, is not felony, but it is punishable as a misdemeanor by indictment at Common law. 2 Comm. 236.

CORPUS CHRISTI DAY. A feast instituted in the year 1264, in honour of the blessed sacrament: to which also a college in Oxford is dedicated. It is mentioned in the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 21.

CORPUS CUM CAUSA. A writ issuing out of the Chancery, to remove both the body and record, touching the cause of any man lying in execution upon a judgment for debt, into the King's Bench, &c. there to lie till he have satisfied the judgment. F. N. B. 251. See title Habeas Corpus.

An infection growing to the state of a man, and to his issue, and is where a person is attainted of treason or felony, by means whereof his blood is said to be corrupted, and neither his children, nor any of his blood, can be heirs to him or any other ancestor: also if he is of the nobility, or a gentleman, he and all his posterity by the attainder are rendered base and ignoble: but by pardon of the King, the children born afterwards may inherit the land of their ancestor, purchased at the time of the pardon or after; but so cannot they, who were born before the pardon. Terms de Ley.

If a man that hath land in right of his wife hath issue, and his blood is corrupt by attainder of felony, and the King pardons him; in this case, if the wife dies before him, he shall not be tenant by the curtesy, for the corruption of the blood of that issue: though it is otherwise, if he hath issue after the pardon; for then he should be tenant by the curtesy, although the issue which he had before the pardon be not inheritable. 13 H. 7. 17.

A son attainted of treason or felony in the life of his ancestor, obtains the King's pardon before the death of his ancestor, he shall not be heir to the said ancestor, but the land shall rather escheat to the lord of the fee by the corruption of blood. 26 Aff. pl. 32 H. 8.

If the father of a person attainted die seised of an estate of inheritance, during his life, no younger brother can be heir; for the elder brother, though attainted, is still a brother, and no other can be heir to his father, while he is alive; but if he die before the father, the younger brother shall be heir. 2 Hutch. P. C. c. 49. § 49. See further Co. Lit. 8, 391: Dyer 48: 3 Inft. 211.

Corruption of blood from an attainder is so high that it cannot be absolutely saved but by act of parliament; for the King's pardon doth not restore the blood so as to make the person attainted capable either of inheriting others, or being inherited himself by any one born before the pardon. 1 Inft. 391, 392: 2 Hutch. —. A statute which saves the corruption of blood, impliedly saves the descent of the land to the heir; and it prevents the corruption of blood.

blood so far also it saves the wife's dowry, &c. But nevertheless the land shall be forfeited for the hit of the offender. 3 Inst 47. 1 Hawk P. C. c. 41 § 5 — See further titles Attainder; Forfeiture; Escheat; Life; &c.

CORSELET, Fr in Lat Corsilectum] A little body. The name of an ancient armour used to cover the body or trunk of a man, wherewith pikes commonly set in the front and flanks of the battle were formerly armed, for the better resistance of the assaults of the enemy, and the surer guard of the soldiers placed behind, who were more slightly armed for their speedier advancing to and retreating from the attack. 4 Inst 5 P. J. W. 2.

CORSEPLESEN From the Fr cors pleser] A mortuary — and the reason why it was thus termed seems to be, that where a mortuary became due on the death of any man, the best or second best beast was according to custom, offered or pledged to the priest, and carried with the corpse. See Stat 21 H. 8 c. 6. and this Dict title Mortuary.

CORSED BREAD, panis commutatus] O' bal lal it was a kind of superstitious trial used among the Saxons, to purge themselves of any accusation, by eating a piece of barley bread, and eating it with solemn oaths and execrations, that it might prove poison, or their last morsel, if what they asserted or denied were not punctually true. These pieces of bread were first execrated by the priest, and then offered to the suspected person to be swallowed by way of purgation for they believed a person, if guilty, could not swallow a morsel so accursed, or if he did, it would choke him.

The form was thus Woe I beseech thee, O Lord, if I be guilty of this trespach, or in the execration, that I have offered to him in order to discover the truth, that I may be released, but, I beseech thee so narrow that he may not swallow it, that he may cast it out of his mouth, and receive it. Dr Cange. The old form, or corosimus panis borders a dictum and probatum et, is extant in Letterbrogius, p. 107. And in the laws of King Canute cap 6 — Si quis alius minus panis in accusatur, et amicus distitutus, ut si accusatus non sit, et alius dicitur, proinde et alius accusatus et sit sententia dicitur, nisi suum sententiam corosimus panem pertrahat ut se perget. from which it is conjectured, that coried bread was originally the very sacramental bread, consecrated and devoted by the priest, and received with solemn adjuration and devout expectance that it would prove mortal to those who dared to swallow it with a lie in their mouths; till at length the bishops and clergy were afraid to prostitute the communion bread to such vain and conceited uses, when to indulge the people in their superstitious fancies, and idle customs, they allowed them to practise the same judicial rite, in eating some other morsels of bread, beef or cust to the like uses.

It is recorded of the perfidious Godwin, Earl of Kent, in the time of King Edward the Confessor, that on his abjuring the murder of the King's brother, by this way of trial, as a just judgment of his solemn perjury, the bread stuck in his throat, and choked him Ingulph. This with other barbarous ways of purgation, was by degrees abolished though we have still some remembrance of this superstitious custom in our usual phrases of adjuration, as, I will take the sacrament upon it; — May this bread be my poison — or, May this not be my last, &c. See title Ordeal.

COSTS

EXPENSES] In the prosecution and defence of actions, the parties are necessarily put to certain expence, or as they are commonly called costs, consisting of money paid to the King and Government for fines and stamp duties, to the officers of the court; and to the counsel and attorneys for their fees, &c.

These costs may be considered either as between attorney and client, being what are payable in every case to the attorney, by his client, whether he ultimately succeed or not, or as between party and party, being those only which are allowed, in some particular cases, to the party suceeding against his adversary. As between party and party, they are interlocutory or final, the former are given on various interlocutory motions and proceedings in the course of the suit — the latter, (to which the term of costs is most generally applied, and the rules respecting which are of the most consequence) are not allowed till the conclusion of the suit.

The following abstract of the law relating hereto, is taken principally from Tidd's Law of Costs, a short and comprehensive abridgement; to which, and the various other productions on the subject, the practitioner must necessarily have frequent recourse in nice and particular cases.

It will be sufficient for the present purpose, to arrange the information on this subject in the following manner.

COSTS I.

- I. In what Cases Costs are given to the Plaintiff.
- II. In what, to the Defendant.
- III. Of double and treble Costs.
- IV. Of taxing and recovering Costs.

I. No costs were recoverable by the plaintiff or defendant at Common law. 2 Inst. 288: Hard. 152. But by the Stat. of Gloucester, (6 Edw. 1.) c. 1. § 2, it is provided, "that the demandant may recover against the tenant the costs of his writ purchased; (which, by a liberal interpretation, has been construed to extend to the whole costs of his suit, 2 Inst. 288.), together with the damages given by that statute and that this act shall hold place, in all cases where a man recovers damages." This was the origin of costs de momento. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 195. And hence the plaintiff has, generally speaking, a right to costs, in all cases where he was entitled to damages, antecedent to, or by the provisions of the Stat. of Gloucester; (10 Co. 116 a: as in assumpsit, covenant, debt on contract, case, trespass, replevin, ejectment, &c.; or where, by a subsequent statute, double or treble damages are given, in a case where single damages were before recoverable; (10 Co. 116 a: 2 Inst. 289 Cowp. 368;) as upon Stat. 2 Hen. 4. c. 11, for suing in the Admiralty Court; (10 Co. 116 a, b. Dyer 159 b. Cal. 297;) upon Stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 9, for a forcible entry; (10 Co. 115 b: Co. Lit. 257 b: 2 Inst. 289: Co. El. 582;) or upon Stat. 2 & 3 W. & M. Jiff. 1 c. 5, for releasing a distress for rent (Carth. 321: 1 Salk. 205: 1 Ld. Pavm. 19: Skin. 555 1 P. 172 S. C.) And he hath also a right to costs, in all cases where a certain penalty is given by statute to the party grieved; (Cro. Car. 360: 1 K. L. Abr. 57: Stim. 363: Carth. 230: 1 Salk. 206: 1 Ld. Raym. 172: Say. Costs 11: H. Black. 10;) for otherwise the remedy might prove inadequate.

But the Stat. of Gloucester did not extend to cases where no damages were recoverable at Common law, as in restitution, prohibition, (Co. b. 20,) &c.; nor where double or treble damages were given by a subsequent statute, in a new case where single damages were not before recoverable; as in waste against tenant for life or years; (2 Hen. 4. 17: 9 Hen. 6. 66 b: 10 Co. 116 b: 2 Inst. 289;) upon the Stat. of Gloucester, (6 Edw. 1. c. 5,);—for not setting out tithes; (Moor 915: Noy 136: Hard. 152;) upon Stat. 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 13;—or for driving a distress out of the hundred, (2 Inst. 289: Dyer 177: But see Cro. Car. 560: 1 Roll. Abr. 574,) upon Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12—Nor does this statute extend to popular actions, where the whole or part of a penalty is given by statute to a common informer; (1 Roll. Abr. 574: 1 Vent. 133: Carth. 231: 1 Salk. 206: 1 Ld. Raym. 172: Cyf. Pr. C. B. 87: Barnes 124. S. C: Cowp. 366: 1 H. Black. 10: Bull. N. P. 333;) as upon Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. § 31, for exercising a trade, without having served an apprenticeship; or upon the Stat. of Usury, 12 Ann. Stat. 2. c. 16. In these and such like cases, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to costs, unless they are expressly given him by the statute; but wherever they are so given, he is of course entitled to them.

Where single damages are given by a statute, subsequent to the Stat. of Gloucester, in a new case wherein no damages were previously recoverable, it has been doubted whether the plaintiff shall recover costs, if they are not mentioned in the statute. The rule in Pifford's case is, that he shall not; (10 Co. 116 a;) and accordingly it is holden, that he is not entitled to costs in quare impedit; (2 Hen. 4. 17: 27 Hen. 6. 10: 10 Co. 116 a: 2 Inst. 289, 362: Barnes 140: And see Cro. Car. 360: Carth. 231: Cowp. 367, 8;) wherein damages are given by the Stat. of Westminster 2. (13 Edw. 1.) c. 5. § 3. But the rule in Pifford's case is contradicted by Lord Coke himself, (2 Inst. 230,) who says, that "this clause (respecting the St. of Gloucester's holding place, in all cases where a man recovers damages,) doth extend to give costs, where damages are given to any demandant or plaintiff in any action by any statute made after this parliament." And the rule has been since narrowed, by several modern decisions; from whence it may be collected, that the plaintiff is entitled to costs, in all cases where single damages are given by statute to the party grieved, although costs are not particularly mentioned in the statute. 2 Wiff. 91: Barnes 151. S. C: 3 Bur. 1723: 1 Term Rep. 71: But see the opinion of Aston, Just. Court. Cowp. 367, 8.

In several of the foregoing cases, wherein costs were not recoverable by the plaintiff at Common law, they are expressly given him by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, by which it is enacted, that "in all actions of waste, and actions of debt upon the statute for not setting forth tithes, wherein the single value or damage found by the jury shall not exceed the sum of twenty nobles; and in all suits upon any writ or writs of scire facias, and suits upon prohibitions, the plaintiff obtaining judgment, or any award of execution, after plea pleaded or demurrer joined therein, shall likewise recover his costs of suit; and if the plaintiff shall become nonsuit, or suffer a discontinuance, or a verdict shall pass against him, the defendant shall recover his costs, and have execution for the same by capias ad satisfaciendum, fiat facias, or elegit."

The plaintiff's general right to Costs being thus settled and established, upon the footing of the Stat. of Gloucester, has been since altered, restrained and modified by several subsequent statutes.

To prevent trifling and malicious actions for words, for assault and battery, and for trespass, it is enacted by Stats. 43 Eliz. c. 6: 21 Jac. 1. c. 16: 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 9. § 136, that where the jury who try any of these actions shall give less damages than 40s. the plaintiff shall be allowed no more Costs than damages: unless the judge before whom the cause is tried shall certify under his hand, on the back of the record, that an actual battery (and not an assault only) was proved; or that in trespass the freehold or title of the land came chiefly in question. Also by Stats. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, if the trespasses were committed in hunting or sporting, by an inferior tradesman, or if it appear to be wilfully and maliciously committed, the plaintiff shall have full Costs; though his damages, as assessed by the jury, amount to less than 40s.

The Legislature has also been obliged to interfere still further, to guard against trifling and vexatious actions, by means of what are commonly called the Court of Conscience Acts: Such are Stats. 3 Jac. 1. c. 15. § 4: 14 G. 2. c. 10; which provide that if an action be brought for less than 40s. against a defendant living in London, and liable to the jurisdiction of the Court of Requests there, the plaintiff shall not recover any Costs, but shall pay them to the defendant.

COSTS II.

Several other acts of parliament have been also made, establishing Courts of Conscience in various districts, in and about the metropolis; as in the town and borough of Southwark, &c. by Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 47; in the city and liberty of Westminster, and part of the Duchy of Lancaster, by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 27, (explained and amended by Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 42); and in the Lower hamlets, by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 10. And by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 33, the county court of Middlesex was put on a different footing, for the more easy and speedy recovery of small debts. See titles County-Courts, Courts of Conscience.

In general where the act is not placid, the proper mode to obtain the costs, is for the defendant to apply to the court, by affidavit, for leave to enter a suggestion on the roll, of the facts necessary to entitle him to the benefit of the act suited to his case; which suggestion may be traversed or demurred to.

These statutes might perhaps have been with equal propriety classed under the 2d division of this title; but are introduced here, as forming an exception to the general title of a plaintiff to Costs in the cases already instanced.

The principal statute, made for restraining the plaintiff's right to costs, is Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9, (extended to Wales, and the Counties Polarne, by Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 9); by which it is enacted, that "in all actions of trespass, assault and battery, and other personal actions, wherein the judge, at the trial of the cause, shall not find and certify under his hand, upon the back of the record, that an assault and battery was sufficiently proved by the plaintiff against the defendant, or that the freehold or title of the land mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration was chiefly in question; the plaintiff, in case the jury shall find the damages to be under the value of forty shillings, shall not recover or obtain more costs of suit, than the damages so found shall amount unto." It seems to have been the intention of this statute, that the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages, in any personal action whatsoever, if the damages be under forty shillings, except in cases of battery or freehold; and not even in these, without a certificate. And this construction was adopted, in some of the first cases that arose upon the statute. 3 Keb. 121, 247. But a different construction soon prevailed; and it is now settled, that the statute is confined to actions of assault and battery; and actions for local trespasses, wherein it is possible for the judge to certify, that the freehold or title of the land was chiefly in question. T. Raym. 487: F. Jon. 232: 2 Shov. 258 S. C.: 3 Mod. 39: 1 Salk. 208. 1 Str. 577: Gilb. Eq. Rep. 195: Barnes 134: 3 Wils. 322, S. C. 1 H. Black. 294. Therefore it does not extend to actions of debt, covenant, assumpsit, trover, (3 Keb. 31: 1 Salk. 208, or the like; or to actions for a mere assault; (3 T. R. 391;) or for criminal conversation; (3 Wils. 319;) or battery of the plaintiff's servant, (3 Keb. 184: 1 Salk. 208: 1 Str. 192,) per quod consortium vel servitium amissit.—In all these cases, though the damages be under 40*s.* the plaintiff is entitled to full costs without a certificate.

The certificate required by this statute need not, it seems, be granted at the trial of the cause. 11 Mod. 198. And where the defendant lets judgment go by default, (Bull N. P. 329,) or justifies the assault and battery, or pleads in such a manner, as to bring the freehold or title of the land in question, on the face of the record, or a view is granted, (1 Ld. Raym. 76: 2 Salk. 665,) a certificate is holden to be unnecessary; but it is necessary, where, to a plea of a right of way, there is a replication of extra viam. Cochran v. Harrison, T. 22 Geo. 3 But where, in an action for an assault and battery, the defendant justifies the assault only, (3 T. R. 391,) or an assault only is certified by the judge, (2 Lev. 102,) the plaintiff, recovering less than forty shillings, is not entitled to more costs than damages; though, in the latter case, to entitle him to full costs, the judge may certify, on Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, that the assault was wilful and malicious. 3 Wils. 326.

None of the statutes, made for restraining the plaintiff's right to costs, extend to actions brought in an inferior court, and removed by the defendant into a superior one: (2 Lev. 124: 4 M. l. 378, 9: 1 Ld. Raym. 395) and it has been holden, that Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 10, and Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9, only restrain the Court from awarding more costs than damages, but the jury, not being restrained thereby, may give what costs they please.

It often happens that there are several counts, or pleas, the issues upon which are some of them found for the plaintiff, and some for the defendant. In this case, in the court of C. P. where the declaration consists of several counts, and the plaintiff succeeds upon any one of them, he is entitled to the costs of the whole declaration, though the defendant succeed upon the other counts. Bull N. P. 335: 2 Black. Rep. 800, 1199. But it is otherwise in the court of K. B. for there neither party is allowed costs as to those counts the issues upon which are found for the defendant. Sid. Cost. 212: Doug. 8vo. 677. But see 1 Wils. 331. But if there be two distinct causes of action, in two separate counts, and as to one the defendant suffers judgment to go by default, and as to the other takes issue, and obtains a verdict, he is entitled to judgment for his costs on the latter count, notwithstanding the plaintiff is entitled to judgment and costs on the first count. 3 Term Rep. 654.

As to the certificate on the Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16, allowing double pleas, (See title Pleading;) and costs thereon, where the judge refuses to grant the certificate, the Court have not a discretionary power, whether they will allow the defendant any costs at all; but are bound by the statute to allow him some costs, though the quantum is left to their discretion. Barnes 140: 2 Term Rep. 394, 5. The intention of the legislature was, that if there be several matters pleaded, some of which are found for the plaintiff, he shall be entitled to the costs of those, notwithstanding other matters are found for the defendant, which entitle him to judgment upon the whole record; unless the judge, before whom the cause was tried, shall certify, that the defendant had a probable cause to plead the matters which are found against him.

II. It has already been observed, that no costs were recoverable by a defendant at common law: and the reason seems to be, that if the plaintiff failed in his suit, he was amerced to the King pro falso clamore, which was thought to be a sufficient punishment, without subjecting him to the payment of costs. The first instance of costs being given to a defendant, was in a writ of right of ward, by the statute of Marlberge, (52 Hen. 3. c. 6,) Afterwards, costs were given to the defendant in error, by Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10; and in replevin, by Stat. 7 Hen. 8. c. 4.

COSTS II.

8. c. 4. and Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19, &c. But in one of these cases, the defendant is to be considered as an actor; and in the other of them, the provision is virtually for the benefit of the plaintiff in the original action. See Costs 70.

In error, brought by the defendant before execution, (Cro. Jac. 636,) or by the plaintiff upon a judgment for the defendant, if the judgment be affirmed, the writ of error discontinued, or the plaintiff in error nonsuited, the defendant in error is entitled to costs, by Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10. and 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 2; upon the former of which statutes it has been holden, that costs are recoverable in error, for the delay of execution, although none were recoverable in the original action. Dyer 77: Cro. Eliz. 617, 659: 5 Co. 101. S. C.: Cro. Car. 145: 1 Str. 262: 2 Str. 1084: but see Cro. Car. 425: 1 Lev. 146: 1 Vent. 38, 106: 4 Mol. 245: Carth. 261. S. C. fmb. contra. By Stat. 13 Car. 2. stat. 2. c. 2. § 10, if the judgment be affirmed after verdict, the plaintiff shall pay to the defendant in error, his double costs. And by Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 23, for preventing vexation, from suing out defective writs of error, it is enacted, that "upon the quashing of any writ of error, for variance from the original record, or other defect, the defendant shall recover against the plaintiff in error his costs, as he should have had, if the judgment had been affirmed, and to be recovered in the same manner." 2 Str. 834: Caf. temp. Hardw. 137. But none of the statutes before mentioned give costs, upon the reversal of a judgment. (1 Str. 617.)

In replevin, or second deliverance, the defendant, in king avowry, cognizance, or justification, for rents, customs, or services, or for damage feasant, is entitled to costs, by Stat. 7 Hen. 8. c. 4, and Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. § 3; if the avowry, cognizance, or justification be found for him, or the plaintiff be nonsuit, or otherwise barred: which statutes extend to avowries, &c. made by an executor; (2 R. Rep. 437.) or for an estray; (Cro. Eliz. 330.) and, as it should seem, for an amercement by a court leet; (Cro. Jac. 520 sed vide Cro. E. 300.) but not to pleas of prisel en autre lieu, upon which the writ is abated, (Com. Rep. 122,) or to pleas of property in the thing distrained. Hard. 153. By Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7. § 2, the defendant obtaining judgment thereon, for the arrearages of rent, or value of the goods distrained, is also entitled to his full costs of suit. And by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 22, if the defendant avow, or make cognizance, according to that statute, upon a distress for rent, relief, heriot, or other service, and the plaintiff be nonsuit, discontinue his action, or have judgment against him, the defendant shall recover double costs of suit. But this latter statute does not extend to a seizure for a heriot-custom.

At length, costs were given to defendants by Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 15. § 1. "in trespass upon Stat. 5 Ric. 2. debt, covenant, detinue, account, trespass, on the case, or upon any statute for an offence or wrong personal, immediately supposed to be done to the plaintiff," in cases of nonsuit, or verdict for the defendant.

The King, and any person suing to his use, (Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 8.) shall neither pay nor receive costs; for besides that he is not included under the general words of the statutes, as it is his prerogative not to pay them to a subject, so it is beneath his dignity to receive them. And it seems reasonable to suppose that the Queen consort has the same privilege: for in actions brought by her, she was not at the common law obliged to find pledges of prosecution, nor could be amerced in case there was judgment against her. F. N. B. 101: 1 Inff. 133. And on this principle of the King not paying or receiving costs, no costs are due on a certiorari removing summary proceedings; unless a recognizance be entered into at the time of removing the proceedings. 1 Term Rep. 82.

Paupers, (that is such as will swear themselves not worth five pounds,) are by Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 12, to have original writs and subpoenas gratis, and counsel and attorney assigned them without fee; and are excused from paying costs when plaintiffs, by the Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 15. § 2; but shall suffer other punishments at the discretion of the judges. And it was formerly usual on such paupers being nonsuited to give them their election either to be whipped or pay the costs; though that practice is now disused. 1 Sid. 261. 7 Mod. 114: Salk. 506. And in cases of misconduct, or in certain other circumstances they may be dispaupered; that is deprived of their privilege of suing as paupers.—It seems however agreed that a pauper may recover costs, though he pays none: for the counsel and clerks are bound to give their labour to him, but not to his antagonists. 1 Eq. Ab. 125.

Executors and Administrators are not particularly excepted out of Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 16; yet, as that statute only relates to contracts made with, or wrongs done to the plaintiff, (2 Str. 1107,) it has been uniformly holden, (Cro. Eliz. 503: Cro. Jac. 229: 2 Bull. 261: 1 Salk. 207, 314. 3 Bur. 1586: Sav. Costs 97,) that they are not liable to costs, upon a nonsuit or verdict, where they necessarily sue in their representative character, and cannot bring the action in their own right; as upon a contract entered into with the testator or intestate, (T. Jen. 47: 2 Ld. Raym. 1414: 1 Str. 682 S. C.: Caf. Pr. C. B. 157: Pr. Reg. 118. S. C.: Barnes 141,) or for a wrong done in his life-time. (Barnes 129.) But where the cause of action arises after the death of the testator or intestate, and the plaintiff may sue thereon in his own right, he shall not be excused from the payment of costs, though he bring the action as executor or administrator; as upon a contract, (6 Mod. 91, 161: 1 Salk. 207. S. C.: 1 Ld. Raym. 436: 1 Str. 682: Barnes 119: 2 Str. 1106. 4 T. R. 277,) express or implied; or in trover (Com. Rep. 162: Caf. Pr. C. B. 61: Barnes 132: Caf. temp. Hardw. 204. But see 3 Lev. 60 fmb. contra.) for a conversion, after the death of the testator or intestate. An executor or administrator is liable to costs, upon a judgment of non pros: (Caf. Pr. C. B. 14. 157, 8: 3 Bur. 1585.) and where he has knowingly brought a wrong action, or otherwise been guilty of a wilful default, he shall pay costs upon a discontinuance, (Caf. Pr. C. B. 79: 3 Bur. 1451: 1 Bur. Rep. 451. S. C.) or for not proceeding to trial according to notice; (Caf. Pr. C. B. 158: 3 Bur. 1585;) but otherwise he is not liable to costs, in either of these cases. (2 Str. 871: Barnes 133: 4 Bur. 1927.) Nor, where he merely sues en autre droit, is he liable to costs, upon a judgment as in case of a nonsuit. 4 Bur. 1928.

The Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 15, only relates to cases where the plaintiff is nonsuited, or has a verdict against him. But by Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 2, "upon process issuing out of the court of King's Bench, if the plaintiff do not declare in three days after bail put in, or if after declaration he do do not prosecute his suit with effect, but willingly suffer the same to be delayed or discontinued, or he be nonsuited therein, the judges, by their discretions, shall award to the defendant his costs, damages, and charges in that behalf sustained."

The plaintiff, it has been observed, is not entitled to costs in a popular action, for the whole or part of a penalty given by statute to a common informer, unless they are expressly given him by the statute. Nor was the defendant entitled to costs in such an action, until they were given by the Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 5. § 3, made perpetual by Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 10.

There being still many cases in which the defendant was not aided by the provisions of the before-mentioned statutes, the Stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 3, gives the defendant costs on a nonsuit or verdict, in all cases where the plaintiff would have been entitled to them if he had obtained judgment.—The Stat. 13 C. 2 §. 2. c. 2 § 3; 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. §. 2, give costs to a defendant also in cases of non prof. and demurrer: and the latter Stat. § 1, gives costs to one of several defendants in trespass, assault, false imprisonment, or ejectment acquitted; though the other defendants are convicted.

When a feigned issue is ordered by a court of law, whether it be in a civil or criminal proceeding, the costs always follow the verdict, and must be paid to the party obtaining it. 1 Lill. P. R. 344: Barnes 130: 1 Hall. 261, 331: Say Rep. 24: 1 Will. 324. But when a feigned issue is ordered by a court of Equity, the costs do not follow the verdict, as a matter of course; but the finding of the jury is returned back to the court which ordered it, and the costs there are in the discretion of the court. Where the issue is ordered by a court of law, on a rule for an information, (Say Rep. 229: 1 Burr 603,) or motion for an attachment, (Say Rep. 253,) the costs of the original rule, or motion, do not in general follow the verdict, but only the costs of the feigned issue; which costs are to be reckoned, from the time when the feigned issue was first ordered and agreed to. 1 Burr. 604. Yet, where it was ordered, by the consent rule, that the costs should abide the event of the issue, the court directed the whole costs to be paid under it. 2 Burr. 1021.

III. WHERE the plaintiff recovers single damages, he is only entitled to single costs; unless more be expressly given him by statute. But if double or treble damages be given by statute, in a case wherein single damages were before recoverable, the plaintiff is entitled to double or treble costs, although the statute be silent respecting them; (Say. C. R. 228;) as in an action upon Stat. 2 Hen. 4. c. 11, &c. In some cases, double and treble costs are expressly given to the plaintiff; as upon the game laws, by Stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 19 § 5. And wherever a plaintiff is entitled to double or treble costs, the costs given by the court de incremento are to be doubled or trebled, as well as those given by the jury. 2 Leon. 52: Cro. Eliz. 582: 3 Lev. 351: Carth. 297, 321: 2 Str. 1048. but see 1 Term Rep. 252. But double or treble costs are not to be understood to mean, according to their literal import, twice or thrice the amount of single costs. Where a statute gives double costs, they are calculated thus: 1. The common costs; and then half the common costs. If treble costs, 1. The common costs; 2. Half of these; and then half of the latter.

Double or treble costs are also in some cases expressly given to the defendant; as in actions against parish officers, by Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 19;—against justices of the peace, constables, &c. by Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5;—for distresses for rents and services, by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 21, 2;—and against officers of the excise or customs, by Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 34: 24 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 47. § 35. In these, and such like cases, where it does not appear, on the face of the record, that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the act, (as where he pleads the general issue,) and there is no particular mode appointed for recovery of the costs, the proper mode, after a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant, is to apply to the court, upon an affidavit of the facts, for leave to enter a suggestion on the roll. 1 Str. 49, 50: Cas. Pr. C. B. 16: Cas. temp. Hardw. 125: Id. 138: 2 Str. 1021. S. C.: Say. Rep. 214: 3 Will. 442: Cas. temp. Hardw. 125. But where a particular mode is appointed by statute, for the recovery of double or treble costs, as by the certificate of the judge who tried the cause, on Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5, there that particular mode must be observed: (2 Vent. 45: Doug. 8vo. 307, 8: but see Doug. 8vo. 308. n.) so that if the judge certify, there is no need of a suggestion; and if he do not, it is useless, except where judgment goes by default. Cas. temp. Hardw. 138, 9.

IV. COSTS are taxed, as between party and party, by the Master in the King's Bench, or by one of the Prothonotaries in the Common Pleas, upon a bill made out by the attorney for the party entitled; or frequently, without a bill, upon a view of the proceedings; and if there have been any extra expences, which do not appear on the face of the proceedings, there should be an affidavit made of such expences, to warrant the allowance of them; which is called an affidavit of increased costs. Imp. K. B. 348. It is usual, among fair practitioners, to give notice to the opposite attorney, of the time when the costs are intended to be taxed; Id. 349. But in order to enforce it, there must be a rule to be present at taxing costs: which rule is obtained from the clerk of the rules in the King's Bench, or one of the secondaries in the Common Pleas, and should be duly served; after which, if the costs are taxed without notice, the taxation is irregular, and the attorney liable to an attachment.

The means of recovering Costs, as between party and party, are by action or execution, upon a judgment obtained for them; or by attachment, upon a rule of court. Thus, in ejectment, where there is a verdict and judgment against the tenant, an action may be brought, or execution taken out thereon, for the costs: Run. Eject. 140, 141. But where the plaintiff is nonsuited, for not confessing lease entry and ouster, the lessor of the plaintiff must proceed by attachment, upon the consent rule. Id. ibid.: 1 Salk. 259: Barnes 182. And so where the nominal plaintiff is nonsuited upon the merits, or has a verdict and judgment against him, the only remedy is by attachment against the lessor of the plaintiff. Run. Ej. 142, 3. See title Attachment.

Besides the ordinary method of proceeding, there are certain auxiliary means for the recovery of Costs, as between party and party. These means are by moving to stay the proceedings, until security be given for the payment of Costs; or until the Costs are paid of a former action action for the same cause; or by deducting the Costs of one action, from those of another. As examples of these means, it may be mentioned, that in Weymouth, (1 Str. 681,) and actions qui tam, (Id. 697, 705: Barnes 126,) where the plaintiff, or his lessor, is unknown to the defendant, and in case the plaintiff is a foreigner residing abroad, (1 Term Rep. 267, 362, 491,) the defendant may call for an account of his residence, or place of abode, from the opposite attorney; and if he refuse to give it, or give in a fictitious account of a person who cannot be found, the court will stay the proceedings, until security be given for the payment of costs.

The practice of deducting or setting off the Costs, in one action against those in another, however agreeable to natural justice, does not seem to have obtained till lately in the court of K. B. 2 Str. 891, 1203: Bull N.P. 336: 4 Term Rep. 121. But in C. P. it has been frequently allowed; and that not only where the parties have been the same, but also where they have been in some measure, different Barnes 145: 2 Black Rep. 826: Bull N.P. 336.

As between Attorney and Client, the former may maintain an action against the latter for the recovery of his costs. Geo. C. 150, 160—But by the Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 7. § 1, attorneys and solicitors must deliver a bill to their clients before bringing an action: and by Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. § 23, (explained by Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 13. and made perpetual by Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 19 § 75,) no attorney nor solicitor shall commence any action, till the expiration of one month after the delivery of his bill; which is directed by the acts to be in a common legible hand, in English, except law-terms, and subscribed with the attorney's hand.

The said Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23, also directs the mode of taxation of attorneys' bills by the officers of the several courts; and directs that if the bill taxed be less by a sixth part than the bill delivered, the attorney shall pay the costs of taxation: but if it shall not be less, the costs shall lie in the discretion of the court.

If the whole bill be for contingency, or for business done at the quarter, year, &c. it cannot be taxed. But where an attorney had delivered two separate bills, one of which was for fees and disbursements in causes, and the other for making conveyances, a rule was made for taxing both. And so, where it was moved, that the Master might be directed to tax those articles in an attorney's bill, which related to conveyancing and parliamentary business, the rest being for management of causes in the court of King's Bench, Lord Mansfield said, there was no doubt but the master might tax the whole. 11 C. B. 141, 2: 4 Term Rep. 124: Say Rep. 233. Sav. Costs 320.

It is not necessary for the executor or administrator of an attorney, to deliver a bill of costs, for business done by his testator or intestate, before the commencement of an action; (Cas. Pr. C.B. 58;) the Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. § 23, being confined to actions brought by the attorney himself, and not extending to his personal representatives. And, in the court of Common Pleas, they will not suffer such a bill to be taxed: (Barnes 119, 122;) but in the court of King's Bench it is otherwise; (2 Str. 1056: Sav. Costs 324, 5: Imp. K. B. 482;) for there, the bill may be referred to be taxed, on the defendant's undertaking to pay what is due.

COTE

If an attorney refuse to deliver a bill to his client, the latter may compel him, by taking out a summons before a judge; and if the attorney, on being served therewith, do not attend, an order will be made for delivering it, within a reasonable time. If he still neglect to deliver it, the order should be made a rule of court; and on serving the same, and making affidavit thereof, the court on motion will grant an attachment. Doug. 8vo. 199. in 11 Imp. K. B. 479. The bill being delivered, the client may apply for a judge's summons, to shew cause, why it should not be referred to the proper officer to be taxed; upon which an order will be made, the client undertaking to pay what shall appear to be due upon such taxation. Imp. K. B. 479, 480. If the attorney do not attend, an order will be made of course. But the client cannot have a summons for delivery of the bill, and taxing it, together. Id. 480. Barnes C. B. 126.

COSTS IN EQUITY. Are allowed for failing to make an answer to a bill exhibited; or making an insufficient answer: and if a first answer be certified by a master to be insufficient, the defendant is to pay 40s Costs; 3l. for a second insufficient answer; 4l. for a third, &c. But if the answer be reported good, the plaintiff shall pay the defendant 40s Costs. An answer is not to be filed, (till when, it is not reputed an answer,) until Costs for contempt in not answering are paid. By Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16, if a plaintiff in Chancery dismisses his own bill, or the defendant dismisses the same for want of prosecution, Costs are allowed to the defendant.

In other cases it seems that the matter of Costs to be given to either party is not in equity held to be a point of right, but merely discretionary, under Stat. 17 R. 2. c. 6, according to the circumstances of the case. Yet the Stat. 15 H. 6. c. 14, which requires surety to satisfy the party grieved his damages, on granting the subpoena, seems expressly to direct that, as well damages as costs shall be given to the defendant, if wrongfully vexed in this court.

In case of a great fraud, a person may be obliged to pay such Costs as shall be ascertained by the injured party's oath. 2 Fern. 123.

COT, In the old Saxon signifies cottage, and so is still used in many parts of England.

COTARIUS, A cottager. the cotarius, or cottagers, are mentioned in Domesday.

COTE AND COT. The names of places which begin or end with these words or syllables, have the signification of a little house or cottage; there are likewise dove cotes, which are small houses or places for the keeping of doves or pigeons. See title Pigeon-House.

COTELLUS, COTERIA, A small cottage, house, or homestead. Concl.

COTERELLUS. Cotarius and coterellus, according to Spelman and Du Fresne, are servile tenants; but in Domesday and other ancient MSs. there appears a distinction as well in their tenure and quality, as in their name. For the cotarius held a free socage tenure, and paid a stated firm or rent in provisions or money, with some occasional customary services; whereas the coterellus seems to have held in mere villenage, and his person, issue and goods, were disposable at the pleasure of the lord. Paroch. Antiq. 310.

COTESWOLD. Is used for sheep-cotes and sheep feeding on hills: from the Sax. cote and wold, a place where there is no wood.

COIGART,

COTGARE, A kind of refuse wool, so elung or clotted together, that it cannot be pulled asunder. By Stat. 13 R. 2. cap. 9, it is provided, that neither demizen nor so-reigner shall make any other refuse of wools but cotgare and villen.

COTLAND and COTSETHLAND, Land held by a cottager, whether in socage or villenage.—Paroch. Antiq. 532.

COTSETHLA, COTSETLE, The little seat or mansion belonging to a small farm. Curial. Malinflow. MS.

COTSETHUS, A cottage-holder, who, by servile tenure, was bound to work for the lord. Cotset are the meanest sort of men, now termed cottagers. And cotset are those who live in cottages. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 30.

COTTAGE, cotagium.] A little house for habitation, without lands belonging to it.

By the Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 7, cottages were prohibited to be erected without laying at least four acres of land to the same; and divers other restrictions were thereby imposed. But this was repealed by Stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 32, setting forth that the said Stat. of 31 Eliz. had laid the industrious poor under great difficulties to procure habitations, and tended very much to lessen population; and in divers other respects was inconvenient to the labouring part of the nation in general.

COTTON LIBRARY, For better settling and preserving the library kept in the house at Westminster, called Cotton-house, in the name and family of the Cottons for the benefit of the Public, a statute was made 12 W. 3. c. 7. See Stat. 5 Ann. c. 30: 26 Geo. 2. c. 22.

COTTONS, Not within 27 Hen. 8, concerning the true making of cloth, 27 H. 8. c. 12. sect. 3. See title Callico: Manufacturers; Navigation-Acts.—Stealing cotton out of places used for whitening or dying it, felony without clergy. Stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 27.

COTUCA, Coat armour. Walsing. 114.

COTUCHANS, Boors or husbandmen, of which mention is made in Domesday.

COUCHER, or COURCHER, A factor that continues abroad in some place or country for traffick; as formerly in Gascogn, for buying of wines. Stat. 37 Ed. 3. c. 16. This word is also used for the general book wherein any corporation, &c. register their particular acts. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 10.

COVENABLE, Fr. convenable, Lat. rationabilis.] What is convenient or suitable.—Every of the same three sorts of goods, &c. shall be good and covenable, as in old time hath been used. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 2. Covenable indowed, that is, indowed as is fitting. St. 4 H. 8. c. 12. See Plowd. 472.

COVENANT,

CONVENTIO.] The agreement or consent of two or more by deed in writing, sealed and delivered; whereby either, or one of the parties doth promise to the other that something is done already or shall be done afterwards: he that makes the covenant is called the covenantor; and he to whom it is made, the covenantee. See Shep. Touchst. 160, and on the whole of this subject at length.

I. The several Kinds of Covenants, and by what Words they are created.

II. What Covenants are good and binding, and by what Words they may be made.

III. Who shall take Advantage of Covenants, and who are bound by them.

IV. What shall be a Performance, and what a Breach of Covenant.—And of Penalties for Non-performance.

I. A Covenant is generally either in fact or in law; in fact is that which is expressly agreed between the parties, and inserted in the deed; and in law, is that covenant which the law intends and implies, though it be not expressed in words; as if a lessor demise and grant to his lessee a house or lands, &c. for a certain term, the law will intend a covenant on the lessor's part, that the lessee shall, during the term, quietly enjoy the same against all incumbrances. 1 Inst. 384.

There is also a Covenant real, and Covenant personal: a covenant real is, that whereby a man ties himself to pass a thing real, as lands or tenements; or to levy a fine of lands, &c. And covenant personal, is where the same is annexed to the person and merely personal; as if a person covenants with another by deed to build him a house, or to serve him, &c. F. N. B. 145: 5 Rep. 10.

Covenants are likewise inherent, that tend to the support of the land or thing granted; or are collateral to it; and are affirmative, where somewhat is to be performed; or negative; executed, of what is already done, or executory: a covenant being to bind a man, to do something in future, is for the most part executory. 1 Vent. 176: Dyer 112, 271.

A covenant to settle or convey particular lands, will not at law create a lien upon the lands; but in equity such a covenant, if for a valuable consideration, will be deemed a specific lien on the lands, and decreed against all persons claiming under the covenantor, except purchasers for valuable consideration, and without notice of such covenant. Finch v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 P. Wms. 282: Freemount v. Dedre, 1 P. Wms. 42: Coventry v. Coventry; best reported at the end of Francis's Maxims; For Equity considers that as done, which being distinctly agreed to be done, ought to have been done. Grounds and Rudiments of Law and Equity, p. 75.

A general covenant to settle lands of a certain value, without mentioning any lands in particular, will not create a specific lien on any of the lands of the covenantor, and therefore cannot be specifically decreed in equity. Freemount v. Dedre, 1 P. Wms. 430. But if the covenantor expressly declare the settlement to be in execution of his power, though the particular lands to be charged be not specified, equity will ascertain them, Coventry v. Coventry, Francis's Maxims: Gillb. Rep. 160.

It is held in all cases where words that begin any sentence are conditional, and give another remedy, they shall not be construed a covenant; and yet if words of condition and covenant are coupled together in the same sentence, as Provided always, and it is covenanted, &c. in that case they may be adjudged both a condition and covenant. Marsh 103.

The law does not seem to have appropriated any set form of words, as absolutely necessary to be made use of in creating a covenant; and therefore it seems that any words will be effectual for that purpose, which shew the party's concurrence to the performance of a future act: as if lessee for years covenants to repair, &c. Provided always, and it is agreed, that the lessor shall find great timber, &c. this makes a covenant on the part of the lessor to find great timber, by the word grant; and it shall not be a qualification of the covenant of the lessee. 1 New. Abr. 527. See 1 Durr. 290.

"The dependence or independence of covenants, is to be collected from the evident sense and meaning of the parties; and however transposed they may be in a deed, their precedency must depend on the order of time in which the intent of the transaction requires their performance." Per Lord Mansfield, Jones v. Beakley, Dougl. 605. See also Hudon v. The East-India Company, 1 Term Rep. 538. Where the participle doing, performing, paying, repairing, is prefixed to a covenant, it is clearly a mutual covenant, and not a condition precedent. Boone v. Eves, 2 Black. Rep. 1312; Allen v. Badington, Sid. 280. Atkinson v. Morrice, 12 Mod. 503. But where the covenant goes to the whole consideration on both sides, there it is a condition precedent. Duke of St. Alban's v. Shore, 1 H. Black. Rep. 276.

If one makes a lease for years, reserving a rent, action of covenant lies for non-payment of the rent; for the redemption of the rent is an agreement for payment of it, which will make a covenant. 2 Darr. 230. A lease is made to two, and one seals the deed, but the other doth not; if he accepts the estate and occupies the land, he is bound to perform the covenants for payment of the rent, reparations and the like. 1 Shep. Abr. 458.

If one man covenants to pay another 20*l.* at a day; although he may have action of debt for the 20*l.* yet it is said he may have covenant at his election. 1 Darr. 229.

It is agreed that A. B. shall pay to C. D. 100*l.* for lands in B. this is a mutual covenant, whereon action of covenant may be brought if C. D. will not convey. 1 Sid. 423. But where there are mutual covenants, and the one not to be performed before a precedent covenant, in such case one covenant is not enforceable till the other is performed; though if the covenants are distinct and mutual, several actions may be brought by and against the parties. 1 Lil. Abr. 350; 2 Mod. 74. In a covenant to pay another so much money, he making him an estate in such land, &c. it has been adjudged, that if he tender the covenantor a feoffment, and offer to make livery, he may have action of covenant for the money, as if he had made a title. 3 Salk. 107.

Where a man covenants that he hath power to grant, and that the grantee shall quietly enjoy notwithstanding any claiming under him; these are distinct covenants, for one goes to the title, and the other to the possession. 1 Mod. 101.

There is this difference however between a covenant and condition; a condition gives entry, and covenant gives an action only. Owen 54. A person cannot have action of covenant upon a verbal agreement, for it cannot be grounded without writing, except by special custom. F. N. B. 145.

II. ALL covenants between persons must be to do what is lawful, or they will not be binding; and if the thing to be done be impossible, the covenant is void. Dyer 112. But where the thing is lawful at the time of the covenant made, and afterwards the matter agreed to be done is prohibited by act of parliament, yet such covenant will be binding. 3 Mod. 39. And if a man covenants to do a thing before a certain time; and it becomes impossible by the act of God, this shall not excuse him, inasmuch as he hath bound himself precisely to do it. 2 Didd. Abr. 84.

VOL. I.

Though a covenant to stand seised of lands to be after purchased be void as law, unless there be some act to be done, yet it seems, that a covenant to settle lands of such a value, will charge after-purchased lands, though the covenantor had died at the time of executing the covenant. Test. v. Hedges, 2 Vern. 97.

If a person covenants expressly to repair a house, and it is burnt down by lightning, or any other accident, yet he ought to repair it; for it was in his power to have provided against it by his contract. Allen 26, 27: 1 Lil. Abr. 146. But he is not so bound by covenant in law. Where houses are blown down by tempest, the law excuses the lessee in an action of waste, though in a covenant to repair and uphold, it will not. 1 Flou. 29. If a lessee for years, rendering rent, covenants for him and his assigns to repair the house, and after the lessee assigns over the term, and the lessor accepts the rent from the assignee, and then the covenant is broken; notwithstanding acceptance of rent from the assignee, action of covenant lies against the first lessee, on his express covenant to repair; and this personal covenant cannot be extinguished by the acceptance of the rent. 2 Darr. Abr. 216. See also Assignment, and post. III.

Action of covenant also lies on covenant for payment of rent against such lessee; but not action of debt after acceptance. 3 Rep. 24. In covenant upon a demise, rendering rent, the defendant cannot say, that part of it was to be allowed; for this is a covenant against a covenant. Comb. 21.

An infant within age may bind himself apprentice, but neither at Common law nor by statute may be bound by covenant for his apprenticeship, so as to make him liable to an action of covenant, if he departs, &c. But by the custom of London he may bind himself by his covenant at fourteen years old. 1 Cro. 129; Witch. 63.

III. THERE may be an agreement and covenant, only to be performed by the parties themselves; and there are some covenants which none, but the party and his heirs may take advantage of, being such as concern the inheritance, and descend to the heir, as knit to the estate: covenants in gross go to the executors, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 520; 2 Darr. 235. Not only parties to deeds, but their executors and administrators, shall take advantage of inherent covenants, though not named; and every assise of the land may have the benefit of such covenants; likewise executors and assigns are bound by them, although not named, as a covenant to repair, &c. 5 Rep. 16, 17: 1 Cro. 552. If a man covenants with another to do any thing, his heir shall not be bound, unless he be expressly named; and yet where a lessee covenants to repair, the heir shall have the benefit of the covenant, though not named, because it runs with the land. 2 Lev. 92; 5 Rep. 8.

The executors and administrators of the covenantor will be bound by the covenant, though not named, unless the covenant be of such a nature as not to allow of its being performed by any other person but the Covenantor. See Dyer 14. pl. 69. 1 Roll. Abr. 519. h. 351. Hude v. Dean & Canons of Windsor, Cro. Eliz. 553.

All persons to whom the land descended, were by the common law, entitled to the benefit of covenants which run with the land; but grantees of the reversion were not. The Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 34, therefore enacted, "That all grantees, &c. of reversions, should have the like advantages against the lessees, their executors, &c. by entry for non-payment of the rent, or for doing waste, or other breaches, and the same remedy by action only, for not performing other conditions, covenants, or agreements contained in the lease, against the lessee; as the lessor or grantor had." The statute also gives the lessee the same remedy against the grantee of the reversion, when they might have had against their grantors. It must not, however, be understood from the general words of the statute, that the grantee of the reversion can take benefit of every forfeiture by force of a condition, Land Tax concerning the operation of the statute to be confined to such conditions as are either incident to the reversion, as rent; or for the benefit of the State, as for not doing of waste, for keeping the houses in repair, for mending of fences, or such like; and not for the payment of any sum in gross, delivery of corn, wood, or the like. See Co. Li. 215, where a variety of resolutions upon this statute are stated, and the authorities referred to. See also 6 Fin. Ab. Covenant (Ch. 3) §. 397; Widd v. Russell, 3 T. R. 309. See further Enc. Ab. Covenant, (Ch. 6); Ab. Covenant, (Ch. 3).

The liability of the assignee does not extend to covenants broken before the assignment; as a covenant to build within a certain time, which was not broken before the assignment. Grescott v. Green, 1 Salk. 199; St. Saviour's Southwark v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1271; 1 Bl. R. 351. Nor is the assignee to be affected by any covenant broken after he has assigned over. Boulton v. Canon, 1 Freem. 336.

A collateral covenant to be done upon the land, as to build de novo, shall bind the assignee by express words; in this case, the assignees are bound by the terms of the covenant, for unless named they would not be bound by law; "for the covenant concerns a thing which was not in use, at the time of the demise made; but to be newly built after, and therefore shall bind the covenantor, his executors and administrators, and not the assignee; for the law will not annex the covenant to a thing which hath no being." Spencer's Case, 5 Co. 166. But as the law would sustain such a covenant against the covenantor and his assigns, if expressly included in the covenant, and give damages for its non-performance, it should seem to follow, that the covenantee would be intitled in equity to a decree for the specific performance of such covenant to build; and of this opinion Lord Hardwicke appears to have been, in the case of the City of London v. Nash, 3 Atk. 515; 1 Vex. 12. But in the case of Lucas v. Commerford, 3 Bos. C. R. 166, Lord Thurlow C. held, "That there could not be a decree to rebuild in pursuance of a covenant, for that he could no more undertake the conduct of a rebuilding than of a repair."

As law the assignee is liable only for the rent actually incurred, or covenants broken during his possession. Boulton v. Canon, 1 Freem. 336. If therefore he assign the very day before the rent becomes due, the lessor cannot maintain his action for it. Facey v. Pitcher, Carth. 177; 4 Mod. 71; 3 Co. 22; 1 Salk. 81; 1 Freem. 326. Nor will the circumstance of such assignment being for fraud, as to a beggar, alter the case. Lewis v. Nash, Str. 1221; Buller's N. P. 159. But see Kilfoe v. Freeman, 2 Freem. 220, 231; T. Rayn 303; T. Jones 109; in which the validity of such assignment was denied. But whatever may be the rule of law upon this point, it seems to be well settled, that courts of equity will compel an assignee of a term to account for the rent the whole time he enjoyed the term. Wood v. Call, 1 Perm. 185. Where the equity will go on to demand the full rent, under any circumstances, depends upon the terms of the assignment to a beggar or insolvent person, who is discharged but not determined, in the case of William v. Jones, 2 Atk. 519. If the assignee offers to give up the possession to the lessor on reasonable terms, and the latter refuses, or except such surrender it were clearly too much for a court of equity, in violation of a legal right, to prevent the assignment. Psallans v. Dudmire, 2 Atk. 545. But supposing the lessor to be willing to accept of a surrender of the term, and the assignee wantonly to insist on his legal right to assign, when and to whom he pleased, it seems that, under certain circumstances, a court of equity might without impropriety interpose to prevent the abuse of such right; and this Lord Hardwicke appears to admit, in Psallans v. Dudmire; for having stated the legal right and the propriety of courts of equity in general, following the rule of law, he observes, "but it is true in some sort of assignments made by tenants, the court has interposed;" nor does the difficulty reported to have occurred to Lord Hardwicke, in Philip v. Haire, appear upon examination, to have been intitled to much attention. His Lordship is reported to have said, "As to the accruing rents, it is a point of more difficulty; for the covenant in this lease not to assign, does not run with the land to the assignee, because assignees are not bound by name in the covenant." Whence it might be inferred, that if assigns had been expressly included in the covenant, his Lordship would have considered them bound by the covenant. But whether assignees be bound or not by a covenant, does not, (except in the case of a collateral covenant to be done upon the land,) depend upon their being named in the covenant; for if the covenant run with the land, assignees are bound, whether named or not; and if the covenant do not run with the land, but is a personal contract, or respect something to be done purely collateral to, and not on the land, they are not bound, though they be expressly named. See Spencer's case, 5 Co. 166; 17 a. Therefore, whether the assignee was named or not, was immaterial to the question, Whether the assignee was bound by the covenant not to assign without consent of the lessor? Nor does it appear as having been necessary in order to determine whether a court of equity should restrain an assignment to a beggar, previously to determine, whether the assignee was bound by the covenant not to assign; for supposing the assignee to be bound at law by the covenant, equity may restrain the wanton and fraudulent breach of a covenant; and supposing him not to be bound, yet he may be affected in conscience upon the same principle that the assignee of a merely personal covenant may be affected in conscience, though not bound at law. See City of London v. Richmond, 2 Freem. 421.—Treat. of Equity; 350. in n.

The grantee of a reversion may bring action of covenant against a lessee, as well in the county where the demise was made, as in the county where the lands lie. Cartharv 183. A person covenants with another, to pay him money at a time to come, and does not pay to his executors, &c. if the covenantor die before the day, yet his executors or administrators shall have the money. Dyer 112, 257. And in every case where the testator is bound by a covenant, the executor shall be bound by it; if it be not determined by his death, 48 Ed. 3, 2; 2 Dan. 232.

allege that he is ~~not~~ ready to perform it; whereas, at law, if the covenants be not precedent, but distinct and independent, the plaintiff need not allege a performance of his covenants, to entitle him to recover against the defendant for the breach of his. Parlage v. Cole, 1 Salk. 329; Nichols v. Raymbred, Hob. 88. But see Calonel v. Briggs, 1 Salk. 111; Goodison v. Nunn, 4 Term Rep. 761.

Where the covenants are mutual and distinct, the defendant cannot plead a breach by the plaintiff, in bar of the plaintiff's action for a breach by the defendant; for the damage may be unequal, and therefore each party must recover against the other, the damages he sustained. Cole v. Shallett, 3 Lev. 41; Thompson v. Noel, 1 Law. 16; Hovelt v. Strickland, Comw. 56: but see Calonel v. Briggs, 1 Salk. 122; Goodison v. Nunn, 4 Term Rep. 761.

When a breach is assigned, it must ~~not~~ be general, but must be particular; as in action of Covenant for not repairing of houses, the breach ought to be assigned particularly, what is the want of reparation. Civ. Jac. 369.

But on mutual promise for one to do an act, and in consideration thereof another to do some act, as to sell goods, &c. for so much money, a general breach that the defendant hath not performed his part, is well assigned. 3 Lev. 319.

Breaches assigned ought to be according to the very words of the condition or covenant: when they may be well enough, though too general. 1 Lutw. 325.

Where a thing is to be done by a person or his assigns, the breach is to be, that it was not done either by the one or the other. 5 Mod. 133. If a person is to tender a conveyance, &c. to another, his heirs or assigns, breach assigned that the defendant did not tender a conveyance to the plaintiff, without the words, "his heirs or assigns," is good: but if the tender be to be made by another man, his heirs, &c. and not to him, it is otherwise. 1 Salk. 139.

Where a lessee for years is to leave all the timber on the land, which was growing there at the time of the lease, and he cut down any trees, though he leaves the timber on the land at the end of his lease, this is a breach of covenant: for in contracts the intention of the parties is chiefly to be considered. Raym. 464. If several breaches are assigned, and the defendant demurs upon the whole declaration, the plaintiff shall have judgment for all that are well assigned, for they are as several actions. Civ. Jac. 557.

Covenants are generally taken most strongly against the covenantor, and for the covenantee. Plowd. 287. But it is a rule in law, that where one thing may have several intendments, it shall be construed in the most favourable manner for the covenantor. 1 Lut. 450. The common use of covenants is for assuring of land; quiet enjoyment free from incumbrances; for payment of rent reserved; and concerning repairs, &c. And in deeds of covenant, sometimes a clause for performance, with a penalty, is inserted in the body of the deed; at other times and more frequently, bonds for performance, with a sufficient penalty, are given separate; which last being sued, the jury must find the penalty; but on covenant, only the damages. Wood's Inst. 250. Vide the Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. And vide ante § 99. and tit. Bond.

Covenant for non-payment of rent, was referred to the jury as to the rent, and on payment thereof provided to say as to that, but there being another breach as to not repairing, the plaintiff might proceed for that. Ann. Mag. Rep. Dec. 1. p. 25. In an action of covenant, it is not necessary to aver that the plaintiff performed his covenants. Judicell v. Gould, Rep. temp. Hardw. 343. 4.

By Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. In actions on bonds, for performance of covenants, plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he pleases, and the jury on the trial of the action, or on a writ of enquiry, may assess damages: on defendant's paying damages, execution may be stayed, but judgment shall remain to answer any further breach, and plaintiff may have a scire facias against the defendant. See title Bond VI.

"Where a penalty is intended, merely to secure the enjoyment of a collateral object, the enjoyment of the object is considered as the principal intent of the deed, and the penalty only as accessorial, and therefore only to secure the damage really incurred." Per Thurlow, C. Stoman v. Walter, 1 Bro. Rep. 418. And upon this construction of a penalty, courts of equity will interpose, to restrain proceedings at law to recover the penalty. But the principles of equal justice require, that courts of equity should enforce the specific performance of the act agreed to be done, or restrain from the doing of that, which was agreed should not be done. And upon this principle, wherever the primary object of the agreement be the securing of the specific subject of the covenant, the party covenanting is not entitled to elect, whether he will perform his covenant, or pay the penalty. See Hobson v. Treven, 2 P. Wms. 191; Parks v. Wilson, 10 Mod. 517; Chilliner v. Chilliner, 2 Vez. 528. But if the covenant be to do, or not to do, some particular act, or doing it, or neglecting to do it, to pay a certain sum, by way of liquidated damages, courts of equity will not relieve against the payment of such damages. East-India Company v. Blake, Finch's Rep. 117; Ponsonby v. Adams, 2 Bro. P. C. 431; Russe v. Peterfon, 2 Bro. P. C. 436. (8vo ed.) Louze v. Peeri, 4 Burr. 2228.—See also Small v. Lord Fitzwilliam, Pre. Ch. 102. And as courts of equity will not relieve against stipulated damages, they will not, in general, interpose to enforce the performance of the covenant, or to restrain its violation. Therefore, where the lessee covenanted not to plough certain land, or if he did, to pay 20s. per acre, per ann. the court refused to restrain the lessee from ploughing. Woodward v. Gyles, 2 Vern. 119. But there are some circumstances which will induce the court to interfere, though stipulated damages be reserved; as where the lessee had covenanted not to plough ancient meadow, or if he did, to pay an increase of rent, the court, upon his threatening to plough, appears to have granted an injunction. Webb v. Clarke, 8th of May, 1782.—See also Dulwich College v. Davis, M. 1787.

It is held an action of covenant may be laid in London, for non-payment of rent on a lease of lands in any other place. 1 Sid. 401. And if, in this action, a sum be mis- cast, either too little or too much, it is amendable; and not like to the action of debt, which if alleged less than it is, without shewing the rest to be satisfied, it is ill. 3 Kyb 39: 2 Cro. 247. In action of covenant, the plaintiff must have recourse to the deeds or writings, and the circumstances of time, place, &c. and take notice what particular covenant in the deed it is best to insist upon, to lay a breach right, &c. the words of covenanting are,

This word Covenant, is also taken for the Solemn League and Covenant; which was a seditious conspiracy, invented in Scotland, voted illegal by parliament, and against which provision is made by Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 4.

COVENANT TO STAND SEISED TO USES, is when a man that hath a wife, children, brother, sister, or kindred, doth by covenant in writing under hand and seal agree that for their or any of their provision or preferment, he and his heirs will stand seised of land to their use; either in fee simple, fee-tail, or for life. The use being created by the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, which conveyeth the estate as the uses are directed, this covenant to stand seised is become a conveyance of the land since the said statute. The considerations of these deeds, are natural affection, marriage, &c. and the law allows in such cases consideration of blood and marriage, to raise uses, as well as money and other valuable consideration when a use is to a stranger. See Plowd. 302. There are no considerations now to raise uses upon covenants to stand seised, but natural love and affection, which is for advancement of blood; and consideration of marriage, which is the joining of the blood and marriage together: other considerations, as money, &c. for land, though the words in the deed are stand seised, yet they are bargains and sales, and without assent they raise no use. See Cro. Jac. 233.

The usual covenant to stand seised to uses need not be by deed intended and enrolled. And where a man makes his estate to the use of his wife for life, this imports a sufficient consideration in itself; also if a person covenants to stand seised to the use of his wife, son, or cousin, it will raise an use without any express words of consideration; for sufficient consideration appears. See 7 Rep. 40.

In case of a covenant to stand seised, so much of the estate the owner does not dispose of, remains still in him. See 1 Wood 374. And where an use is raised by way of covenant, the covenantor continues in possession; and there the uses limited, if they are according to law, shall rise and draw the possession out of him; but if they are not, the possession shall remain in him until a lawful use arise. See 1 Law. 197; 1 Mod. 159, 160.

If a covenant to stand seised to uses, no use doth arise, yet it may be good by way of covenant and give remedy to the covenantee in an action; as if the covenant be future; that, in consideration of a marriage, lands shall descend or remain to a son and the heirs of his body on the body of his wife; in this case the covenantee may have writ of covenant upon the covenant against the covenantor. But if a covenant be that a man and his heirs shall from henceforth stand and be seised to such and such uses, and the uses will not arise by law: here no action of covenant lies on the covenant; for this action will never lie upon any covenant but such as is either to do a thing hereafter, or where the thing is already done, and not when it is for a thing present. See Plowd. 307, 398; Finnel's Law. 49.—See title Conveyance.

COVERTURE, Pr.] Any thing that covers; as apparel, a coverlet, &c. but it is by our law particularly applied to the state and condition of a married woman, who is sub potestate viri; and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the damage of herself or husband, without his consent and privity, or his allowance and confirmation thereof. See Bract. lib. 1. c. 10. lib. 2. c. 15, &c. See Bro. Abr. When a woman is married, she is called a Feme Covert; and whatever is done concerning her, during the marriage, is said to be during the coverture: all things that are the wife's, are the husband's; nor hath the wife power over herself, but the husband: and if the husband alien the wife's land, during the coverture, she cannot avoid it during his life; but after his death, she may recover by cui in vita. Terms de Ley.—See title Baron and Feme; Cui in vita.

COVIN, Covina.] A deceitful compact between two or more to deceive or prejudice others; as if tenant for life or in tail, conspires with another, that he shall recover the land which he the tenant holds, in prejudice of him in reversion. See Plowd. 546. Covin is commonly conversant in and about conveyances of land by fine, lease, recovery, &c. And then it tends to defeat purchasers of the lands they purchase, and creditors of their just debts; and so it is used in deeds of gift of goods; it may be likewise sometimes in suits of law, and judgments had in them. But wherever covin is, it shall never be intended, unless it appears and be particularly found: for covin and fraud though proved, yet must be found by the jury, as it will not be good. See Brownl. 188; Bridgm. 112.

If one make a lease to a person by words, and another grant another lease to another quasi sine, but without any deed or deed with this take the second lease may not avoid the first lease, because he is not a purchaser that comes in for money. 3 Rep. 83. On recovery by a good title, there may be coverture; as where a tenant for life by assent, is suffered a recovery by Nich. without making any defence; and if a man hath a rightful and just cause of action, and of covert and confess shall raise up a tenant by wrong against whom he may recover; the covert doth in substance the right, that the recovery, although it be upon good title, shall not bind. See Covin 47: Co. Lit. 292: 1 Step. Abr. 365. A. is tenant for life, remainder in tail to B. and a præcipe is brought against them as joint tenants, by covert between the demandant and A. and an answer procured for B. or joint tenant; and they join the wife, (or issue) and after make default; whereby final judgment is given; this shall not defeat the estate of B. who may bring a writ of disseisin, and shall be restored to his land. Rel. Abr. 621.

If a man that has a right to certain lands, by covert causes another to oust the tenant of the lands, in the intent to recover it from him, and he recovers accordingly against him by action tried; yet he shall not be permitted to his ancient right; but is in of the estate of him who made the ouster; and an assize lies against him. 2 Dart. 309. Land is aliened, pending a writ of debt, by covert, to avoid the extent thereof for the debt; the land so aliened shall be extended, when the covert appears upon the return of the elegit by the sheriff. Ibid. 311. If a man makes a deed of gift, &c. of his goods in his lifetime by covert, to oust his creditors of their debts, after his death the donee or vendee shall be charged for them. See the several statutes of Frauds. If goods are sold in market overt by covert, on purpose to bar him that hath right, this shall not bar him thereof. 2 Inst. 713: See title Frauds, &c.

COUNCIL. In the city of London, there are common council-men chosen in every ward at a court of wardmote held by the aldermen of the respective wards on St. Thomas's day yearly: they are to be chosen out of the most sufficient men; and sworn to give true counsel for the common-profit of the city, &c. See London. 127. In the court of common-council, are made laws for advancement of trade; and committees yearly appointed, &c. Resolutions made by them, are to have the assent of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, by Stat. 21 Geo. 1. c. 11. See this Diss. title London.

COUNSELLOR, Confiliarius.] A person retained by a client to plead his cause in a court of judicature. A Barrister: See title Barrister.—To what is there noticed may be added.—That by Stat. 5 Edm. 1. c. 14. counsellors shall not be punished for shewing a false deed in evidence. No recusant convict, or non-conformist shall practise the law, as a counsellor, or otherwise, under penalties. See Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5: 7 W. 3. c. 24: 13 Geo. 3. c. 61: 2 Geo. 4. c. 13. COUNTY, Comitatium from the Lat. computare.] The name of two prisons in London, the County counter, and County prison, (supra consolidated) into one new-built prison for the use of the city, to confine debtors, peace-breakers, &c. Co. Lit.

COUNTERFEITS. See title Counterfeits. Counterfeiting the King's seal or money, &c. is treason, See title Treason: And counterfeiting Exchequer bills, bank-bills, lottery orders, &c. is felony. See title Felony, Forgery, &c.

COUNTERMAND, Contremandatum.] Is where a thing formerly executed, is afterwards by some act or ceremony made void by the party that first did it. And it is either actual, by deed; or implied; virtual, where a power to execute any authority, &c. is by a formal writing, for that very purpose put off for a time, or made void: and implied, is where a man makes his last will and testament, and thereby devises his land to A. B. if he afterwards enfeoffs another of the same land, here this feoffment is a countermand to the will, without any express words for the same, and the will is void as to the disposition of the land: Also if a woman seized of land in fee-simple, makes a will and deviseth the same to C. D. and his heirs, if he survive her; and after she intermarries with the said C. D. there, by taking him to husband, and coverture at the time of her death, the will is countermanded. Terms de Ley. But if a woman makes a lease at will, and then marries, this marriage is no countermand to the lease, without express matter done by the husband to determine the will.

Where land is devised; and after a lease made thereof for years only; it shall not be a countermand of the will, which is good notwithstanding, for the reversion after the lease for years is ended; but in case a man have a lease for years, and gives it by his will, and after surrenders it; it is a countermand of the devise; and the devise shall not have his lease. See 27 Geo. 3. c. 24. See title Devise. If a copyholder, like to die, do surrender his house to the use of his wife or children, without any consideration of money, &c. and he recovers before the presentment and admittance, it may be countermanded. It is otherwise if it be to the use of a stranger. Kitch. 82. If there be a feoffment with lease of attorney to make livery and seisin; and before it is made, the feoffor makes a feoffment, or bargain and sale, of the land, or lease to another; it will be a countermand in law of the authority given

COUNTY.

Of these three, the county of Durham is now the only one remaining in the hands of a subject. For the earldom of Ulster, or Cumula territory, was united to the crown by Hen. III. and has ever since given title to the King's eldest son. And the County Palatine, or Duchy of Lancaster, was the property of Henry Beaufort, the son of John of Gaunt, at the time when he wrested the crown from King Richard II. and assumed the title of Henry IV. But he was too prudent to suffer this to be united to the crown; lest if he lost one, he should lose the other also. For as Plowden (215.) and Sir Edward Coke (4 Inst. 235.) observe "he knew he had the Duchy of Lancaster by title and indefeasible title, but that his title to the crown was not so assured; for that after the decease of Richard II. the right of the crown was in the heir of Leon I Duke of Clarence, second son of Edward III; John of Gaunt, father to this Henry IV. being but the fourth son." And therefore he procured an act of parliament, in the first year of his reign, ordaining that the duchy of Lancaster, and all other his hereditary estates, with all their royalties, and franchises, should remain to him and his heirs for ever, and should remain, descend, be admitted, and governed, in like manner as if he never had attained the regal dignity; and thus they descended to his son and grandson, Henry V. and Henry VI; many new territories, and privileges being annexed to the Duchy by the former. Parl. 2 Hen. 5. c. 30; 3 Hen. 5. c. 15.—Henry VI. being attainted in 1 Edw. IV. this duchy was declared in parliament to have become forfeited to the crown; (1 Fenn. 155.) and at the same time an act was made to incorporate the Duchy of Lancaster, to continue the County Palatine; (which might otherwise have determined by the attainder, 1 Fenn. 157.) and to make the same parcel of the Duchy; and, farther, to vest the whole in King Edward IV. and his heirs, Kings of England, for ever; but under a separate guiding and governance from the other inheritances of the crown. And in 1 Hen. 7. another act was made, to resume such part of the Duchy lands as had been dismembered from it in the reign of Edward IV. and to vest the inheritance of the whole in the King and his heirs for ever; as simply and largely, and in like manner, form, and condition, separate from the crown of England and possession of the same, as the Three Henries and Edward IV. or any of them, had and held the same.

The Isle of Ely is not a County Palatine, though sometimes erroneously called so, but only a royal franchise, the bishop having, by grant of King Henry the First, jure regalia within the Isle of Ely; whereby he exercises a jurisdiction over all causes, as well criminal as civil. 2 Inst. 220.

The Counties Palatine are reckoned among the superior courts: And are privileged as to pleas, so as no inhabitant of such counties shall be compelled by any writ to appear or answer out of the same; except for error, and in cases of treason, &c. and the Counties Palatine of Chester and Durham, are by prescription, where the King's writ ought not to come, but under the seal of the Counties Palatine; unless it be writs of proclamation. Crompt. Jurif. 137: 1 Dunv. Abr. 750.

But certiorari lies out of B. R. to justices of a County Palatine, &c. to remove indictments, and proceedings before them. 2 Hawk P. C. c. 27. § 23.

There is also a court of Chancery in the Counties Palatine of Lancaster and Durham, over which there are Chancellors; that of Lancaster called Chancellor of the Duchy, &c. See title Chancellor.—And there is a court of Exchequer at Chester, of a mixed nature, for law and equity, of which the Chamberlain of Chester is judge. There is also a Chief Justice of Chester; and other justices in the other Counties Palatine, to determine civil actions and pleas of the crown.

The Bishop of Durham has that County Palatine; and if any erroneous judgment be given in the courts of the bishoprick of Durham, a writ of error shall be brought before the Bishop himself; and if he give an erroneous judgment thereon, a writ of error shall be sued out returnable in B. R. 4 Inst. 218.

Infants in Counties Palatine enabled to convey by order of the respective courts belonging to those counties. 4 G. 3. c. 16.

The King may make a County Palatine by his letters patent without parliament. 4 Inst. 201.

As to further matter relative to the several Counties Palatine, see titles Chester, Durham and Lancaster; and particularly as to Chester, Stats. 43 Eliz. c. 15: (and this Dict. title Fines;) 22 Geo. 2. c. 46: 26 Geo. 2. c. 34: 27 Geo. 3. c. 43.

COUNTIES CORPORATE, are certain cities and towns, some with more, some with less territory annexed to them, to which out of special grace and favour, the Kings of England have granted the privilege to be Counties of themselves, and not to be comprized in any other county; but to be governed by their own sheriffs and other magistrates, so that no officers of the county at large have any power to intermeddle therein.

The Stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15, for the regulation of the office of sheriffs, enumerates 12 cities, and 5 towns, which are counties of themselves, and which have consequently their own sheriffs. The Cities are London (by grant of Hen. 1) Chester (42 Eliz.) Bristol, Coventry, Canterbury, Exeter, Gloucester, Litchfield, Lincoln, Norwich, Worcester, York (32 Hen. 8.)—The Towns are Kingston upon Hull, Nottingham, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Pool, Southampton. 1 Comm. 116—119. To these Gloucester is added in Impey's Sheriff; but on what authority does not clearly appear.

COUNTY COURT, Comitia Comitatus] Is by Lambert called Conventus, in his explication of Saxon words, and divided into two sorts; one retaining the general name, as the County-court held every month, by the sheriff or his deputy: the other called the town, held twice in every year, viz. within a month after Easter and Michaelmas; of both which See Crompt. Jurif. fol. 241. All administration of justice was at first in the King's hands; but afterwards, when by the increase of the people the burden grew too great for him, as the kingdom was divided into counties, hundreds, &c. so the administration of justice was distributed amongst divers courts; of which the sheriff had the County-court for government of the county, and lords of liberties had their leets and law-days, for the speedier and easier administering justice therein, &c.

Before the courts at Westminster were erected, the County-courts were the chief courts of the kingdom: And among the laws of King Edgar it is ordained, that there be two County-courts kept in the year, in which there shall be a bishop and an alderman, or earl, as judges; one to judge according to the Common law, and the other according to the Ecclesiastical law; But these united powers of a bishop and earl to try causes, were separated by William the First, called the Conqueror; and soon after the business of ecclesiastical cognifance was brought into its proper courts, and the Common law business into the King's Bench. Blount.

That the County-court in ancient times, had the cognifance of Pleas of the Crown, indictments of felony, &c. appears by Glanv. lib. 1. cap. 2, 3, 4. by Bratton, and Britton.

COUNTY-COURT.

Briton, in divers places, and Flota, lib. 2. c. 62. But the power of this court was much reduced by Magn. Chart. c. 17; and by 1 Ed. 4. cap. 2; by the former of which it is expressly provided, that "no sheriff shall hold pleas of the crown." It had formerly, and now hath the determination of certain debts, &c. under 40*s*. Over some of which causes the inferior courts have by the express words of the Stat. of Gloucester 6 E. 1. c. 8, a jurisdiction totally exclusive of the King's superior courts.

This Court may also hold plea of many real actions, such as dower, right-patent, right of ward. 4 Inst. 266: 3 Inst. 312. And of all personal actions to any amount, by virtue of a writ of justicies, which is in nature of a commission to the sheriff to do it. 4 Inst. 266. Here the plaintiff takes out a summons, and if the defendant do not appear, an attachment or disfringas is to be made out against him; but if the defendant appears, the plaintiff is to file his declaration, and after the defendant has put in his answer or plea; and the plaintiff having joined issue, the trial proceeds, &c. whereupon if verdict is given for the plaintiff, judgment is entered, and a fi ri facias may be awarded against the defendant's goods, which may be taken by virtue thereof, and be appraised and sold to satisfy the plaintiff: But if the defendant hath no goods, the plaintiff is without remedy in this court; for no capias lies therein, but an action may be brought at Common law, upon the judgment entered. Greenwood of Courts, p. 22: Finch 313: F. N. B. 152.

No sheriff is to enter in the County-court, any plaint in the absence of the plaintiff; nor above one plaint for one cause, under penalties: The defendant in the County-court is to have lawful summons; and two justices of peace are to view the estates of the sheriffs, before they issue them out of the County court, &c. By Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 15, Causes are to be removed out of the County court, by reco. lare, pone, and writ of false judgment, into B. R. &c. The Stats. 9 H. 3. c. 35: 2 E. 6. c. 25, enact, that no County-court shall be adjourned for longer than one month, consisting of 28 days.

All popular elections which the freeholders are to make, as formerly of sheriffs and conservators of the peace, and still of coroners, verderors and knights of the shire must ever be made in full County-court.

As this court hath of ancient times belonged to the Sheriff, and is incident to his office, the King cannot grant by letters patent the office of County-clerk nor the fees: but it of right belongs to the sheriff. 4 Co. Miton's case.

See Stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 25, as to the County courts in Yorkshire: and 27 H. 8. c. 26: 34 H. 8. c. 26, as to those in Wales. Blackstone, (3 Comm. 82,) observes, on the late erection of numerous Courts of Conscience (see that title post.) that it is to be wished that the proceedings in the County and Hundred-courts could be again revived and improved; an experiment that has been tried and succeeded in Middlesex. For by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 33, it is enacted—1. That a special County-court shall be held, at least once a month, in every hundred of the county of Middlesex, by the County-clerk.—2. That twelve freeholders of that hundred, qualified to serve on juries, and struck by the sheriff, shall be summoned to appear at such court by rotation; so as none shall be summoned oftener than once a year.—3. That in all causes not exceeding the value of 40*s*. the County-clerk and twelve suitors shall proceed in a summary way, examining the parties and witnesses, on oath, without the formal process anciently used; and shall make such order therein as they shall judge to be agreeable to conscience.—4. That no plaints shall be removed out of this court, by any process whatsoever, but the determination herein shall be final.—5. That if any action be brought in any of the superior courts, against a person resident in Middlesex, where the jury shall find less than 40*s*. damages, the plaintiff shall not recover, but pay, costs. (See title Costs).—6. Lastly, A table of very moderate fees is prescribed and set down in the act, which are not to be exceeded.

It seems indeed, as the learned commentator remarks, that this plan wants only to be generally known, to secure its universal reception.

COUNTY-RATES. By Stat. 12 G. 2. c. 29, Justices of peace at their quarter sessions, [and by Stat. 13 Geo. II. c. 18, Justices of liberties and franchises not subject to the County commissioners,] may make one general rate, to answer all former distinct rates, which shall be assessed on every parish, &c. and collected and paid by the high constables of hundreds to treasurers appointed by the justices; which money shall be deemed the public stock, and be laid out in repairing of bridges, gaols, or houses of correction, on presentment made by the grand jury at the assises or quarter-sessions, of their wanting reparation; but appeal lies by the church-wardens and overseers of the poor of the parishes to the justices at the next sessions, against the rate on any particular parish. And as to this appeal see also Stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 17. See titles Bridges; Gaols.

COUNTING-HOUSE OF THE KING'S HOUSEHOLD. Domus Computus Hospitii Regis. Usually called the Board of Green Cloth; where sit the Lord Steward, and Treasurer of the King's House, the Comptroller, Master of the Household, Collierer, and two Clerks of the Green Cloth, &c. for daily taking the accounts of all expences of the Household, making provisions, and ordering payment for the same; and for the good government of the King's Household servants, and paying the wages of those below stairs. Stat. 39 Eliz. cap. 7.

COURIER. From the Fr. Courir to run.] An express messenger of haste.

COURRACIER. Fr.] A horse-courser. 2 Inst. 719.

COURTS.

A COURT, Curia.] The King's palace, or mansion; but more especially the place where justice is judicially administered. Co. Lit. 58. The Superior Courts are those at Westminster; and of Courts, some are of record, and some not; which are accounted base Courts, in respect of the rest.

A Court of record is that Court which hath power to hold plea, according to the course of the Common law, of real, personal, and mixed actions, where the debt or damage is 40*s*. or above; as the King's Bench, Common Pleas, &c. A Court, not of record, is where it cannot hold plea of debt or damages amounting to 40*s*. but of pleas under that sum: or where the proceedings are not according to the course of the Common law, nor inrolled; as the County-court, and the Court-Baron, &c. 1 Inst. 117: 260: 4 Rep. 52: 2 *Rel. COURTS—BARON.

Every Court of record is the King's Court, in right of his crown and dignity, though his subjects have the benefit of it; and therefore no other Court hath authority to fine and imprison: so that the very erection of a new jurisdiction, with power of fine or imprisonment, makes it instantly a Court of record. Salk. 200: 12 Mod. 388: Finch L. 231. The free use of all Courts of record and not of record, is to be granted to the people: 'The feet and tourn are the King's Courts, and of record.' 2 Darr. 259. The rolls of the superior Courts of record are of such authority, that no proof will be admitted against them; and these records are only triable by themselves. 3 Inst. 71. But as the County-court, Court-baron, &c. are not Courts of record, the proceedings therein may be denied, and tried by a jury; and upon their judgments, a writ of error lies not; but writ of false judgment. 1 Inst. 117. See post. Court-law.

In the Courts at Westminster, the plaintiff need not show at large in his declaration, that the cause of action arises within their jurisdiction, it being general: Inferior Courts are to show it at large, because they have particular jurisdictions. 1 Lil. Abt. 371. Also nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction of an inferior Court, but what is expressly so alleged: And if part of the cause arises within the inferior jurisdiction, and part thereof without it, the inferior Court ought not to hold plea. 1 Lev. 104: 2 Rep. 16. See title Abatement 1. 1.

An inferior Court, not of record cannot impose a fine, or imprison: But the courts of record at Westminster may fine, imprison, and amerce. 11 Rep. 43.

The King being the supreme magistrate of the kingdom, and intrusted with the executive power of the law, all Courts, superior or inferior, ought to derive their authority from the crown. Staudf. 54. Though the King himself cannot now, as anciently, sit in judgment in any Court upon civil causes, nor upon indictments, because there he is one of the parties to the suit. 2 Howk. P. C. c. 1. § 1, 2. 'The King hath committed all his power judicial to one Court or the other. 4 Inst. 71. And by Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 1, it is enacted, that all persons shall receive justice in the King's Courts, and none take any distress, &c. of his own authority, without award of the King's Courts.

It is said the customs, precedents, and common judicial proceedings of a Court, are a law to that court: And the determinations of courts, make points to be law. 2 Rep. 12: 4 Rep. 53: Hob. 298. All things determinable in Courts, that are Courts by the Common law, shall be determined by the judges of the same Courts; and the King's writ cannot alter the jurisdiction of a Court. 6 Rep. 11. 'The Court of B. R. regulates all the inferior Courts of law in the kingdom, so that they do not exceed their jurisdictions, nor alter their terms, &c. And as the Court of King's Bench hath a general superintendency over all inferior Courts, it may award an attachment against any such Court, usurping a jurisdiction not belonging to it: But it is sometimes usual first to award a writ of prohibition, and afterwards an attachment, upon its continuing to proceed. 2 Howk. P. C. c. 22. § 25.

If a Court, having no jurisdiction of a cause depending therein, do nevertheless proceed, the judgment in such Court is coram non iudice, and void; and an action lies against the judges who give the judgment, and any officer that executes the process under them: Though where they have authority, and give an ill judgment, there the party who executes the process, &c. upon the judgment, shall be answerable. 1 Lil. Abt. 370.

Judges of inferior Courts may be punished for misbehaviour either by information or attachment. Moravia's case. Hudob. 135. Any defects in the proceedings of an inferior Court cannot be amended, by the return which is not part of the record. The King v. Holmes, Id. 365. Where an inferior Court returns its proceedings, no diminution can be alledged. Ibid. Sayer v. Curtis, 367.

Action on the case lies against the plaintiff for suing one in an inferior Court, where the cause of action is out of its jurisdiction. 1 Vent. 369. And if a plaintiff on a contract for a large sum, splits it into several actions for small sums to give an inferior Court jurisdiction, a prohibition shall go. Mol. Cas. 90.

Striking, in the Courts at Westminster, is punished by cutting off the right hand, and forfeiture of goods, &c. How contempt to Courts are punishable by fine and imprisonment, &c. See title Attachment. See further as to particular Courts, post. Court-baron, &c. and under titles King's Bench, Chancery, Common Pleas and Eschequer.

Court of Admiralty, See title Admiralty.

Court-baron, curia baronis.] A court which every lord of a manor hath within his own precinct; it is an inseparable incident to the manor: and must be held by prescription, for it cannot be created at this day. 1 Inst. 58: 4 Inst. 268. A Court baron must be kept on some part of the manor: and is of two natures;

1. By Common law, which is the barons' or freeholders' court, of which the freeholders being suitors are the judges; and this cannot be a Court-baron without two suitors at least. The steward of this court is rather the register than the judge.

2. By custom, which is called the Customary court: and concerns the customary tenants and copyholders, whereof the lord, or his steward, is judge. See title Copyhold.

The Court baron may be of this double nature, or one may be without the other: but as there can be no Court-baron at Common law without freeholders; so there cannot be a Customary court without copyholders or customary tenants. 4 Rep. 26: 6 Rep. 11, 12: 2 Inst. 119. See title Copyhold.

The Freeholders' court, whose most important business is to determine, by writ of right, all controversies relating to lands within the manor; and which hath also jurisdiction for trying actions of debt, trespasses, &c. under 40s. may be held every three weeks; and is something like a County court, and the proceedings much the same: though on recovery of debt, they have not power to make execution, but are to distrain the defendant's goods, and retain them till satisfaction is made.

The proceedings on a writ of right may be removed into the County courts by a precept from the sheriff called a cessi (quia tollit causam), 3 Rep. Pref.—And the proceedings in all other actions, may be removed into the superior courts by the king's writs of pone, or accedas ad curiam, according to the nature of the suit. F. N. B. 4, 70: Finch L. 444, 5.

After judgment given also, a writ of false judgment lies to the courts at Westminster to re-hear and re-view the cause; and not a writ of error: for this is not a court of of record: and therefore in some of these writs of removal, the first direction given is to cause the plaint to be recorded; recordari facias loquendam. F. N. B. 18.

The other Court baron, for taking and passing of estates, surrenders, admittances, &c. is held but once or twice in a year, (usually with the court-leet) unless it be on purpose to grant an estate; and then it is holden as often as requisite. In this court the homage jury are to inquire that their lords do not lose their services, duties, or customs; but that the tenants make their suits of court; pay their rents and heriots, &c. and keep their lands and tenements in repair; they are to present all common and private nuisances, which may prejudice the lord's manor; and every public trespass must be punished in this court, by amercement, on presenting the same. By Stat. Extent. Man. 4 E. 1, it shall be inquired of customary tenants, what they hold, by what works, rents, heriots, services, &c. And of the lord's woods, and other profits, fishing, &c.

COURT OF CHIVALRY, curia militaris.] Otherwise called the Marshal court; the judges of it are the Lord High Constable of England, and the Earl Marshal; this court is said to be the fountain of the marital law, and the Earl Marshal hath both a judicial and ministerial power; for he is not only one of the judges, but to see execution done. 4 Inst. 123. See title Court-Martial.

The Court of Chivalry is the only Court Military known to, and established by the permanent laws of the land; it was formerly held before the Lord High Constable and Earl Marshal of England, jointly, but since the extinguishment of the former office, it hath usually, with respect to civil matters, been before the Earl Marshal only. See title Constable.—From the sentence of this court an appeal lies immediately to the King in person. 4 Inst. 125. This court was in great reputation in times of pure Chivalry, and afterwards, during our connexions with the Continent, by the territories which our princes held in France; but is now grown almost entirely out of use, on account of the feebleness of it's jurisdiction, and want of power to enforce its judgments. 3 Comm. 68.

The jurisdiction of this court is declared by Stat. 13 R. 2. c. 2, to be this: "that it hath cognizance of contracts touching deeds of arms, or of war, out of the realm; and also of things which touch war within the realm, which cannot be determined or discussed by the Common law; together with other usages and customs to the same matters appertaining." So that wherever the Common law can give redress, this court hath no jurisdiction: which has thrown it entirely out of use, as to matters of contract, all such being usually cognizable in the courts of Westminster-hall, if not directly, at least by fiction of law: as if a contract be made at Gibraltar, the plaintiff may suppose it made at Westminster, &c. for the locality, or place of making it, is of no consequence with regard to the validity of the contract.

The words, "other usages and customs," support the claim of this court, 1. To give relief to such of the nobility and gentry as think themselves aggrieved in matters of honour; and 2. To keep up the distinction of degrees and quality. Whence it follows, that the civil jurisdiction of this court of Chivalry is principally in two points; the redressing injuries of honour; and correcting encroachments in matters of coat-armour, precedence, and other distinctions of families.

As a court of honour, it is to give satisfaction to all such as are aggrieved in that point; a point of a nature so nice and so delicate, that its wrongs and injuries escape the notice of the Common law, and yet are fit to be redressed somewhere; such, for instance, as calling a man coward, or giving him the lie; for which, as they are productive of no immediate damage to his person or property, no action will lie in the courts of Westminster; and yet they are such injuries as will prompt every man of spirit to demand some honourable amends, which by the ancient law of the land was appointed to be given in the court of Chivalry. Year Book, 37 Hen. 6. 21: Selden of Duch. c. 10: Hal. Hist. C. L. 37. But modern resolutions have determined, that how much soever such a jurisdiction may be expedient, yet no action for words will at present lie therein. Salk. 533; 7 Mod. 125; 2 Harok. P. C. c. 4. 67, 8. And it hath always been most clearly holden, (Hal. Hist. C. L. 37,) that as this court cannot meddle with any thing determinable by the Common law, it therefore can give no pecuniary satisfaction or damages, inasmuch as the quantity and determination thereof is ever of Common-law cognizance. And therefore this court of Chivalry can at most only order reparation in point of honour; to compel the defendant mandatum sibi ipse imponere, to take the lie he has given upon himself, or to make such other submission as the laws of honour may require. 1 Ro. Ab. 128: Neither can this court, as to the point of reparation in honour, hold a plea of any such word, or thing wherein the party is relieveable by the courts of Common law. As if a man give another a blow, or calls him thief or murderer; for in both these cases the Common law has pointed out his proper remedy by action.

As to the other point of it's jurisdiction, the redressing of encroachments and usurpations in matters of heraldry and coat-armour; it is the business of this court, according to Sir Matthew Hale, to adjust the right of armorial ensigns, bearings, crests, supporters, pennons, &c. and also rights of place or precedence, where the King's patent or act of parliament, (which cannot be over-ruled by this court,) have not already determined it.

The proceedings in this court are by petition, in a summary way; and the trial not by a jury of twelve men, but by witnesses, or by combat. Co. Lit. 261. See title Battel. But as it cannot imprison, not being a court of record, and as by the resolutions of the superior courts, it is now confined to so narrow and restrained a jurisdiction, it has fallen into contempt and disuse. The marshalling of coat-armour, which was formerly the pride and study of all the best families in the kingdom, is now greatly disregarded; and has fallen into the hands of certain officers and attendants upon this court, called heralds, who consider it only as a matter of lucre and not of justice: whereby such falsity and confusion have crept into their records (which ought to be the standing evidence of families, descents, and coat-armour) that, though formerly some credit has been paid to their testimony, now even their common seal will not be received as evidence in any court of justice in the kingdom. 2 Roll. Abr. 686: 2 Jon. 224. But their original visitation-books, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to enquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. And it is much to be wished, that this practice of visitation at certain periods were revived; for the failure of inquisitions post mortem, by the abolition of military tenures, combined with the negligence of Heralds in omitting their usual progresses, has rendered the proof a modern descent, for the recovery of an estate or succession to a title of honour, more difficult than that of an ancient. This will be indeed remedied for the future, with respect to claims of peerage, by a standing order (11 May 1767.) of the House of Lords; directing the Heralds to take exact accounts, and preserve regular entries of all peers and peeresses of England, and their respective descendants; and that an exact pedigree of each peer, and his family shall, on the day of his first admission, be delivered to the house by Garter, the principal King-at-arms. But the general inconvenience, affecting mere private successions, still continues without a remedy. 3 Comm. 102—6.

COURT CHRISTIAN, curia Christianitatis.] The ecclesiastical judicature, opposed to the civil court, or lay tribunal: and as in secular courts, human laws are maintained, so in the Court Christian, the laws of Christ should be the rule. And therefore the judges are divines; as archbishops, bishops, archdeacons, &c. 2 Inst. 488. See o. n. title Courts Ecclesiastical.

COURTS OF CONSCIENCE, curia conscientie.] In the 9th year of King Hen. 8. the Court of Conscience, or Court of Requests, in London, was erected: there was then made an act of common council, that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen should assign monthly two Aldermen and four discreet Commoners, to be Commissioners to sit in this court twice a week, to hear and determine all matters brought before them between party and party, between citizens and freemen of London, in all cases where the debt or damage was under 40*s.* And this act of Common Council was confirmed by Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 14; which empowered the Commissioners of this court to make such orders between the parties touching such debts, as they should find stand to equity and good conscience. The Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 45, fully establishes this court; the course and practice whereof is by summons, to which if the party appear, the commissioners proceed summarily; examining the witnesses of both parties, or the parties themselves on oath, and as they see cause give judgment. And if the party summoned appear not, the commissioners may commit him to the Compter prison till he does; also the commissioners have power to commit a person refusing to obey their orders, &c.

By Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 10, the proceedings of the Court of Conscience are regulated; and in case any person affront or insult any of the commissioners, on their certifying it to the Lord Mayor, he shall punish the offender by fine, not exceeding 20*s.* or may imprison him ten days.

There are many other Courts of Conscience established of late years by act of parliament. See title Courts, and also title Debts.

Courts of Conscience have been established at the following places: Albany's, St. town of, by 25 Geo. 2. c. 38; Bath, by 6 Geo. 3. c. 16; Beverly in Yorkshire, by 21 Geo. 3. c. 38; Birmingham, by 25 Geo. 2. c. 34; Blackheath, Brackley, Buxton, Kirkstall, Roxley Little, and Leigh, &c.

COURT OF DELEGATES. See post. title Courts Ecclesiastical b.

COURTS ECCLESIASTICAL, curia ecclesiastica, Spiritual Courts.] Are those Courts which are held by the King's authority as supreme governor of the church, for matters which chiefly concern religion, 4 Inst. 321. And the laws and constitutions whereby the church of England is governed, are, 1. Divers immemorial customs. 2. Our own provincial constitutions; and the canons made in convocations, especially those in the year 1603. 3. Statutes or Acts of Parliament concerning the affairs of religion, or causes of ecclesiastical cognizance; particularly the rubrics in our Common Prayer-Book, founded upon the statutes of uniformity. 4. The articles of religion, drawn up in the year 1562, Articuli Cleri, 9 E. 2. and established by 33 Eliz. cap. 12. And it is said, by the general Canon law, where all others fail.

As to suits in spiritual or Ecclesiastical Courts, they are for the reformation of manners, or for punishing of heresy, defamation, laying violent hands on a clerk, and the like; and some of their suits are to recover something demanded, as tithes, a legacy, contract of marriage, &c. And in causes of this nature the courts may give costs, but not damages: things that properly belong to these jurisdictions are matrimonial and testamentary; and such defamatory words, for which no action lies at law; as for calling one adulterer, fornicator, usurer, or the like. 11 Rep. 54; Dyer 240.

The proceedings in the Ecclesiastical courts are according to the Civil and Canon law, by citation, Ubi, answer upon oath, proof by witnesses, and presumptions, &c. and after sentence, for contempt, by excommunication; and if the sentence is disliked, by appeal.

The jurisdiction of these courts is voluntary, or contentious; the voluntary is merely concerned in doing what no one opposes, as granting dispensations, licences, faculties, &c.

COURTS- -ECCLESIASTICAL.

The punishments inflicted by these courts are censures, punishments pro salute animæ, by way of penance, &c. They are not courts of record. See further title Prohibition.

Much oppression having been exercised through the channel of these courts, on persons charged with trifling offences within their spiritual jurisdiction, the Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 44, limits the time of commencing suits for defamatory words to six months;—and for incontinence and beating in the church-yard to eight months.—See titles Limitations, Fornication.

In briefly recounting the various species of Ecclesiastical Courts, or as they are often styled, Courts-Christian, (cursæ Christianitatis) we may begin with the lowest, and so ascend gradually to the supreme court of appeal.

1. The Archdeacon's Court is the most inferior court in the whole ecclesiastical polity. It is held in the Archdeacon's absence before a judge appointed by himself, and called his official: and its jurisdiction is sometimes in concurrence with, sometimes in exclusion of, the Bishop's Court of the diocese. From hence however by Stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12, an appeal lies to that of the bishop.

2. The Consistory Court of every diocesan bishop, is held in their several cathedrals, for the trial of all ecclesiastical causes arising within their respective dioceses. The Bishop's Chancellor, or his Commissary, is the judge; and from his sentence an appeal lies, by virtue of the same statute, to the Archbishop of each province respectively.

3. As to the Court of Arches, See title Arches Court.

4. The Court of Peculiars, is a branch of and annexed to the Court of Arches. It has a jurisdiction over all those parishes dispersed through the Province of Canterbury in the midst of other dioceses, which are exempt from the Ordinary's jurisdiction, and subject to the Metropolitan only. All ecclesiastical causes, arising within these peculiar or exempt jurisdictions, are, originally, cognizable by this court; from which an appeal lay formerly to the Pope, but now by the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19, to the King in Chancery.

5. The Prerogative Court is established for the trial of all testamentary causes, where the deceased hath left bona notabilia within two different dioceses. In which case the probate of wills belongs to the archbishop of the province, by way of special prerogative. And all causes relating to the wills, administrations, or legacies of such persons, are, originally, cognizable herein, before a judge, appointed by the Archbishop, called the judge of the Prerogative Court, from whom an appeal lies by Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19, to the King in Chancery, instead of the Pope as formerly.

6. The Great Court of Appeal in all ecclesiastical causes, viz. the Court of Delegates, (judices delegati) appointed by the King's commission under his Great Seal, and issuing out of Chancery, to represent his royal person, and hear all appeals made to him by virtue of the before-mentioned Stat. of Hen. 8. This commission is frequently filled with Lords, spiritual and temporal, and always with judges of the courts at Westminster, and Doctors of the Civil Law. Appeals to Rome were always looked upon by the English nation, even in the times of popery, with an evil eye; as being contrary to the liberty of the subject, the honour of the crown, and the independence of the whole realm; and were first introduced in very turbulent times in the sixteenth year of King Stephen (A. D. 1151); at the same period (Sir Henry Spelman observes) that the civil and canon laws were first imported into England. Cod. Vet. Leg. 315. But, in a few years after, to obviate this growing practice, the constitutions made at Clarendon, 11 Hen. II. on account of the disturbances raised by Archbishop Becket, and other zealots of the Holy See, expressly declare (chap. 8.) that appeals in causes ecclesiastical ought to lie, from the Archdeacon to the Diocesan; from the Diocesan to the Archbishop of the Province; and from the Archbishop to the King; and are not to proceed any farther without special licence from the crown. But the unhappy advantage that was given in the reigns of King John, and his son Henry III. to the encroaching power of the Pope, who was ever vigilant to improve all opportunities of extending his jurisdiction hither, at length riveted the custom of appealing to Rome in causes ecclesiastical so strongly, that it never could be thoroughly broken off; till the grand rupture happened in the reign of Henry VIII. when all the jurisdiction usurped by the Pope in matters ecclesiastical was restored to the crown, to which it originally belonged; so that the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. was but declaratory of the antient law of the realm. 4 Inst. 324. But in case the King himself be party in any of these suits, the appeal does not then lie to him in Chancery, which would be absurd; but by the Stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12, to all the Bishops of the realm assembled in the upper house of Convocation.

7. A Commission of Review, is a commission sometimes granted, in extraordinary cases, to revise the sentence of the Court of Delegates; when it is apprehended they have been led into a material error. This commission the King may grant, although the Stats. 24 & 25 Hen. 8. before cited, declare the sentence of the delegates definitive; because the Pope as supreme head by the canon law used to grant such commission of review; and such authority as the Pope heretofore exerted, is now annexed to the Crown by Stats. 26 Hen. 8. c. 1. and 1 Eliz. c. 1. But it is not matter of right, which the Subject may demand ex debito iustitiæ; but merely a matter of favour; and which therefore is often denied.

These are now the principal courts of ecclesiastical jurisdiction; none of which are allowed to be Courts of Record; no more than was another much more formidable jurisdiction, but now deservedly annihilated, viz. the Court of the King's High Commission in causes ecclesiastical. This court was erected and united to the regal power by virtue of the Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1. instead of a larger jurisdiction which had before been exercised under the Pope's authority. It was intended to vindicate the dignity and peace of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempts and enormities. Under the shelter of which very general words, means were found in that, and the two succeeding reigns, to veil in the High Commissioners extraordinary, and almost despotic powers of fining and imprisoning; which they exerted much beyond the degree of the offence itself, and frequently over offences by no means of spiritual cognizance. For these reasons this Court was justly abolished by Stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 2.—See 3 Crum. 64. & seq.

COURT OF HUSTINGS, curia hustingi] The highest Court of Record, holden at Guildhall, for the City of London, before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, the Sheriffs, and Recorder. 4 Inft. 247. This court determines all pleas real, personal, and mixed; and here all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, rents and services, within the city of London and suburbs of the same, are pleadable in two Hustings; one call Hustings of plea of lands, and the other Hustings of common pleas. In this court the burgesses to serve for the city in parliament, must be elected by the Livery of the respective companies.

In the Hustings of plea of lands, are brought writs of right patent directed to the sheriffs of London, on which writs the tenant shall have three summonses at the three hustings next following; and after the three summonses, there shall be three essoins at three other hustings next ensuing; and at the next hustings after the third essoin, if the tenant makes default, process shall be had against him by grand cape, or petit cape, &c. If the tenant appears, the demandant is to declare in the nature of what writ he will; without making provision to sue in nature of any writ: then the tenant shall have the view, &c. and if the parties plead to judgment, the judgment shall be given by the Recorder: but no damages, by the custom of the city, are recoverable in any such writ of right patent.

In the Hustings of common pleas are pleadable, writs ex gravi querela, writs of quaredam, of deceit, waste, &c. also writs of exigent are taken out in the hustings; and at the fifth hustings the outlawries are awarded, and judgment pronounced by the Recorder.

If an erroneous judgment is given in the hustings, the party grieved may sue a commission out of Chancery, directed to certain persons to examine the record, and thereupon do right. 1 Roll. Ab. 745.—See further the Privilegia Londoni; and this Dict. title London.

COURT-LEET; or LEET.

The word Leet is not to be found either in the Saxon law, or in Glanvil, Bracon, Britton, Flota, or the Mirror, our most antient law writers; nor in any statute prior to Stat. 27 E. 3. c. 28, though it is allowed to occur in the Conqueror's charter for the foundation of Battle Abbey, and not unfrequently in Domesday Book, Spelman v. Letia. It seems to be derived from the Saxon, leod, plebs; and to mean the populi curia, or folk mote, as the sheriff's tourn or Leet of the county (at least) appears to have been once actually called (See Spelman in verb. Folk/mote;) in contradiction, perhaps, to the Halmote or Court Baron, which consisted of the free tenants only, who, being few in number, might conveniently assemble in the Lord's Hall; whereas the Leet, which required the attendance of all the residents, within the particular hundred, lordship, or manor, and concerned the administration of public justice, was usually held in the open air. Spelman in verb. Malleobogium. According to H. Skins, (Leach's Hæsk. P. C. ii. 112. which see;) a Court-Leet is a Court of Record, having the same jurisdiction within some particular precinct, which the sheriff's tourn hath in the county. See also 4 Comm. 273.

The view of Frank-pledge, visus franciplegii, means the examination or survey of the free-pledge, of which every man, not particularly privileged, was antiently obliged to have nine, who were bound that he should be always forth-coming to answer any complaint. The better to understand this, we are to be informed, that the kingdom being divided by King Alfred into counties or shires, and each county into hundreds, and each hundred into tithings, each tithing containing ten families or households, the heads of these families were reciprocally bound and responsible for each other; so that, in fact, of every ten householders throughout the kingdom, each man had nine pledges or sureties for his good behaviour.

Leet is also a word used for a Law day in several of our antient statutes. See Dyer 30 b.

That the Leet is the most antient court in the land, (for criminal matters, the Court Baron, being of no less antiquity in civil,) has been pronounced by the highest legal authority, 7 H. 6. 12 b. 1 Roll. Rep. 73. For though we do not meet with the word among the Saxons, there can be no doubt of the existence of the thing.

Lord Mansfield states that this court was coeval with the establishment of the Saxons here, and its activity "marked very visibly both amongst the Saxons and the Danes." 3 Burr. 1860. In those times whoever possessed a vill or territory, with the liberties of soc, free, &c. (a long string of barbarous words) was the lord of a manor, had a court-leet, court-baron, and in a word, every privilege which it seems to have been possible for the monarch to bestow, or for the subject to acquire. See Spelman in verb. Mancium.

The Leet is a Court of Record for the cognizance of criminal matters, or pleas of the crown, and necessarily belongs to the King; though a Subject, usually the Lord of a Manor, may be and is entitled to the profits, consisting of the essoign-pence, fines and amerciaments.

It is held before the steward, (or was, in antient times, before the bailiff) of the Lord; Mirror, passim; Finch's Law 248.—See also Kennet's P. A. 319.—This officer who should be a barrister of learning and ability, is a judge of record, may take recognizance of the peace, may fine, imprison, and in a word, as to things to which his power extends, hath equal power with the justices of the Bench.—By Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 5, he is prohibited from taking to the value of 12d. for his own use, by colour of any grant of the profits of this court.

This court is held sometimes once, sometimes thrice, but most commonly twice in the year; that is, within a month after Easter, and a month after Michaelmas; and cannot, unless by adjournment, be held at any time not warranted by antient usage. See Mug. Chan. c. 35, and Spelman in v. Letia; according to whom this court should be held regularly only once a year; though sometimes by custom twice, when it is called residuum leet. As to the place in which it is held, that, it has been said, may be any where within the precinct, 8 H. 7. 3: Owen 35; but more strictly speaking, ought to be certain and accustomed. Rastall's Entries 151.

All persons above the age of twelve years, and under sixty, except peers, clerks, women, and aliens, resident within the district, whether masters or servants, owe personal suit and attendance to this court, and ought to be here sworn to their fealty and allegiance. 2 Inft. 120.

121. And here also, by immemorial usage and of common right, that most ancient constitutional officer the constable, (4 Inst. 265,) and sometimes by prescription the mayor of a borough, (See Stat. 2 Geo. 1. c. 4.) are elected and sworn.

The general jurisdiction of the court extends to all crimes, offences, and misdemeanors at the Common law, as well as to several others which have been subjected to it by act of parliament. These are enquired after by a body of the suitors, elected, sworn and charged for that purpose, who must not be less than twelve, nor more than twenty-three; and who, in some manors, continue in office for a whole year; while, in others, they are sworn and discharged in the course of a day. Whatever they find they present to the steward; who if the offence be treason or felony, must return the presentment, (in these cases called an indictment), to the King's justices of oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery. See Stats. W. 2. c. 13: 1 E. 3. st. 2. c. 17. In all other cases he has power, upon the complaint of any party grieved, or upon suspicion of the concealment of any offence, to cause an immediate enquiry into the truth of the matter by another jury. See Stats. 33 H. 8. c. 6. and 1 Eliz. c. 17. § 10. But the presentment, being received, and the day passed, shall be held true, and unless it concern the party's freehold, shall not be shaken or questioned by any tribunal whatever. Hale P. C. 151, 5: Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 111, 112: and 11 Co. 44. Upon every presentment of the jury retained by the court, an amercement follows of course, which is afterwards assessed, in open court agreeable to Magna Charta, c. 14. by the parcs curies, that is, the peers, or equals of the delinquent; and assessed or reduced to a precise sum, by two or more suitors sworn to be impartial. 8 Rep. 39. See also Stat. W. 1. c. 6. And that these statutes were in this particular but in affirmation of the Common law, See 8 Rep. 39 b: 2 Inst. 27. The amercements thus ascertained are then extracted (or extracted) from the roll or book in which the proceedings are recorded and levied by the bailiff, by distress and sale of the party's goods, (8 Rep. 41:) by virtue of a warrant from the steward to that effect, or may be recovered by other means as by process of levari facias, (Hond. 471.) or action of debt. (Bull. N. P. 167.) No crime in those remote ages appears to have been punished by death; unless it were that of open theft, where the offender was taken with the mainour, that is, with the thing stolen upon him: and of this crime, and this only, the cognizance did not belong to the Leet. All other offences of what nature or degree soever, subjected the party to mulct or pecuniary fine, which was, in many cases determined and fixed. This pecuniary composition, with respect to certain capital offences, was abrogated, and the punishment of death substituted in its place by King Henry 1. Spelman in v. Felo, Wilkins. LL. Sav. 304.

It is not improbable that the distinction of indictments for felonies, and presentments of inferior offences, owes its origin to the above measure.

It has been said, that by the clause nullus vicecomes, &c. in the Great Charter, c. 17. the jurisdiction of the Leet was abridged, and its power to hear and determine taken away; but this has been said and repeated without due attention either to the nature and constitution of the court, or to the law of the time. No offence, it is well known, is at this day, or, for aught that appears, ever was, heard and determined in the Leet. (nor before the period referred to, by any other criminal-court in the kingdom), otherwise than upon the presentment of twelve men, or what we now in most courts call the Grand Jury. This presentment, as has been already observed, found and established the fact; and judgment, whether of misericordia, mutilation or death, followed as an incident or matter of course; precisely, indeed, as the punishment does at this day on the verdict for the king of the petty jury. In fact, therefore, the jurisdiction of the Leet was not in the least abridged or affected by that charter: nor is it at all probable that the barons would either seek or suffer the diminution of their own privileges, of which on the contrary, there is an express saving.

That this court has no power to enquire of the death of a man, or of rape, is a more ancient, but not less erroneous opinion. The contrary is most directly and expressly held in the Statutum Wallie. in Briton, Flota, the Mirror, and the Stat. of 18 E. 2. (which statute, though it enumerates certain particulars of the jurisdiction of the Leet does not confine it to them only); all much older and better authorities than the book of Assises, 41 E. 3. p. 40. in which that opinion first appears.

The steward of a Leet may award to prison, persons either indicted or accused of felony before him, or guilty of any contempt in the face of the court. Stat. Wilm. 2. c. 13. which however seems to apply only to the sheriff's tourn. See Crump. J. P. 92 b: Ow. 113.

See further for the whole of this subject, Com. Dig. title Leet.

The Court-Leet has now been for a long time in a declining way; its business as well as that of the tourn having for the most part gradually devolved on the quarter sessions. See 4 Comm. 274: 3 Barr. 1864.

This last circumstance is very pathetically lamented by the ingenious author, from whom the above account of the Court-Leet is principally drawn; and to whom the editor of the present work is indebted for much of the information under title Constable. How far the restoration of the powers of the Court Leet in the present extensive deluge of crimes is advisable or not, is a question not to be determined in the compass here allotted to the subject. Every one desirous of being accurately informed of the foundations of the English law, will wish that the learned author from whom the above extracts have been made, would spend his time rather in examining the ancient, than condemning the present state of our jurisprudence. For the former task he is eminently qualified; the latter is only worthy of inferior talents.

COURT OF MARSHALSEA, Curia palatii] A court of record to hear and determine causes between the servants of the King's household and others within the verge; and hath jurisdiction of all matters within the verge of the court, and of pleas of trespass, where either party is of the King's family and of all other actions personal, wherein both parties are the king's servants; and this is the original jurisdiction of the court of marshalsea. 1 Bull. 211. But the curia palatii, erected by King Charles. 1. by letters-patent, in the 6th year of his reign, and made a court of record, hath power to try all personal actions, as debt, trespass, slander, trover, actions on the case, &c. between party and party, the liberty whereof extends tends twelve miles about Whitehall; Stat. 13 R. 2. §. 1. c. 3. Which jurisdiction was confirmed by King Charles II.

The judges of this court are the steward of the King's household, and knight-marshal for the time being, and the steward of the court, or his deputy, being always a lawyer. Crompt. Jurisd. 102; Kirch. 179, &c. 2 Inst. 548.

This court is kept once a week, in Southwark; and the proceedings here are either by capias or attachment; which is to be served on the defendant by one of the knight-marshal's men, who takes bond with sureties for his appearance at the next court; upon which appearance, he must give bail, to answer the determination of the court; and the next court after the bail is taken, the plaintiff is to declare, and set forth the cause of his action, and afterwards proceed to issue and trial by a jury, according to the custom of the Common law courts. If a cause is of importance, it is usually removed into B. R. or C. B. by an habeas corpus cum causa; otherwise causes are here brought to trial in four or five court-days. The inferior business of this court hath of late years been much reduced, by the new courts of conscience in and near London; for which the four counsel belonging to the court were indemnified by salaries during their lives, by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 27.

By Stat. 28 E. 1. c. 3., the steward and marshal of the King's house are not to hold plea of freehold, &c. Error in the Marshalsea court may be removed into the King's Bench. Stat. 5 E. 3. c. 2: 10 E. 3. §. 2. c. 3. And the fees of the Marshalsea are limited by the Stat. 2 H. 4. c. 23—This Marshalsea is that of the household; not the King's Marshalsea, which belongs to the King's Bench. See Court of the Lord Steward, &c.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Curia Martialis.] A Court for trying and punishing the military offences of Officers and Soldiers.

- I. Of the Origin.
- II. Of the Jurisdiction, } Of Courts-Martial.

I. THOUGH the authority of the Court of Chivalry, with regard to matters of war, &c. both within and without the realm, not determinable by the general municipal law, was first established by the Common law, and afterwards confirmed by several statutes; and was never objected to, even in criminal cases, till the post of High Constable was laid aside; (See titles Constable; Court of Chivalry;) yet we find its jurisdiction encroached upon much earlier; for by the Stat. 18 H. 6. c. 19. desertion from the King's army was made felony, and by Stat. 7 H. 7. c. 1: 3 H. 8. c. 5. benefit of Clergy is taken away, and authority given to justices of peace to enquire thereof, and hear and determine the same. And Rapin quotes an instance of H. VII. having ordered those accused of holding intelligence with the enemy after the battle of Stoke, 1487, to be tried by commissioners of his own appointing, or by Courts-martial, according to the Martial law; instead of the usual court of justice, which was not so favourable to his design of punishing them only by fines. This however seems to have been an avaricious, arbitrary and illegal exertion of power; not authorised by any law of the land.

From the time the Court of Chivalry was abridged of its criminal jurisdiction, by the suppression of the post of High Constable until the Revolution, there appears to have been no regular established court for the administration of Martial law. For although the Court of Chivalry still continued to be held from time to time by the Earl Marshal, its authority extended only to civil matters; and notwithstanding desertion was by Stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 2. made felony without benefit of clergy, and other military crimes were made punishable by fines, imprisonment, &c. and by Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 17. idle and wandering soldiers and mariners were to be reputed as felons, and to suffer as in cases of felony, without benefit of clergy (with some exceptions); and the justices of assize and gaol-delivery were to hear and determine these offences; yet there are instances during this period, of other courts being erected for the administration of Martial law; and not only military persons made subject to it, but many others punished thereby; some entirely at the discretion of the crown, and others by appointment of the parliament only; and it was a circumstance of nearly a similar nature, that occasioned the enacting the Petition of Right § C. 1. c. 1; one clause of which was, that the commissions for proceeding by Martial law should be dissolved and annulled; and no such commission be issued for the future.

Though undoubtedly these commissions were illegal, yet the necessity of subordination in the army, and the impossibility of establishing that subordination without Martial law, soon became apparent; and the two Houses of Parliament, in the beginning of their rebellion against Charles I. passed an Ordinance, appointing commissioners to execute Martial law; which was certainly at least as un-constitutional an act without the assent of the King, as any proceedings of his had been without consent of Parliament. So true is it that Necessity has no law; and that usurped power is always obliged to have recourse to means to support itself, at least as severe as, and generally more violent than, those which it previously condemns in a lawful government; which it may for a while succeed in overturning on false and specious pretexts of undefined liberty.

This ordinance was passed in 1644, and afterwards renewed by the Parliament; and in process of time adopted as a model for the Mutiny act passed after the Revolution: as many other regulations made during the powerful but tyrannical usurpation of sovereign authority, were afterwards modified to the true genius of the British constitution.

At the Restoration, one of the first steps taken by the parliament was, to disband the army, and to regulate the militia, among whom a military subordination was established, whenever they were drawn out; and fines and imprisonments imposed on them for particular delinquencies. See title Militia.

Charles II. however kept up 5000 regular troops, for guards and garrisons, by his own authority; which his successor, Jac. II. by degrees increased to 30,000 and more numerous armies were occasionally raised by authority of parliament; yet we find no statute for the government of these troops; nor was it till after the Revolution that a regular act of the whole Legislature passed for punishing mutiny and desertion, &c. by Courts-martial.

This act was first occasioned by a mutiny, in a body of English and Scott troops, upon their being ordered to Holland, to replace some of the Dutch troops which

COURTS—MARTIAL.

H.H. III., had brought over with him and intended to keep in England. The King immediately communicated this event to the Parliament, who readily agreed to give their sanction to punish the offenders, and on the 3d April 1689, (1 W. & M.) passed an act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion, &c. which was to continue in force only until November following.—It was however renewed again in January, and has with the interruption of about three years only, from April 1698 to February 1701, been annually renewed ever since, with some occasional alterations and amendments, as well in times of peace as war.

II. MARTIAL LAW, as formerly exercised at the discretion of the Crown, and too often made subservient to bad purposes, justly became obnoxious to the people; and not only the propriety but the legality of its being executed in times of peace, has been absolutely denied. It is laid down (3 Inst. 52,) that if a lieutenant or other, that hath commission of Martial-law, doth in time of peace, hang or otherwise execute any man by colour of Martial-law, this is murder, for it is against Magna Charta.—And Hale, (Hist. C. L. c. 2,) declares Martial law to be in reality no law, but something indulged rather than allowed as law; that the necessity of order and discipline is the only thing which can give it countenance; and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the King's courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land: and if a Court martial put a man to death in time of peace, the officers are guilty of murder. See H.P.C. 46.

As future exigencies however have arisen in the State, it has become necessary to alter and amend the old laws and enact new ones; and since the custom of keeping up standing armies in time of peace as well as war has become prevalent and general throughout Europe, (a custom as it seems originally introduced by Charles VII. of France about 1445,) the Legislature of Great Britain has also judged it necessary, for the safety of the kingdom, the defence of its possessions, and the balance of power in Europe, (as the preamble to the Mutiny-act expresses it,) to maintain, even in times of peace, a standing body of troops; and to authorize the exercise of Martial law among them.

A proper distinction then should be made between Martial-law, as formerly executed, entirely at the discretion of the Crown, and unbounded in its authority, either as to persons or crimes, and that at present established, which is limited with regard to both.—Courts-Martial are at present held by the same authority as the other courts of judicature of this kingdom: and the King, (or his Generals, when empowered to appoint them) has the same prerogative of moderating the rigor of the law, and pardoning and remitting punishments, as in other cases; but he can no more add to, nor alter the sentence of a Court-martial, than he can a judgment given in the courts of law. Martial-law is now exercised within its proper limits, by the advice and concurrence of parliament, and the condemnation of criminals by Courts-martial acting under such authority, cannot be regarded as illegal or contrary to Magna Charta; since during the existence of the statute by which these Courts are held, Martial-law, so modified and restrained, is as much part of the law of the land as Magna Charta itself.

VOL. I.

Courts-Martial cannot sit before 8 in the morning, or after 3 in the afternoon, except in cases which require an immediate example: the attendance therefore of the members does not exceed 7 hours at a time: and they are at liberty to adjourn from day to day till they have fully considered the matter before them: and when they come to give their opinions, they are not under the necessity of being unanimous, but the prisoner is condemned or acquitted by a majority of voices; except in cases of death, where 9 out of 13 or two-thirds, if there be more than 13 present, must concur in opinion. Articles of War, § 15, a. 8, 9.

As to general Courts-martial, the Mutiny-act and Articles of War are very explicit, both as to the number they shall consist of, and the rank of the officers who are to compose them: it being expressly directed, that no General Court-martial shall consist of less than 13 members, whereof none are to be under the degree of a commissioned officer.—That the President shall not be under the degree of a field officer, unless such an one cannot be had, in which case the next in seniority to the commander, not being under the degree of a captain, shall preside: and no field officer is to be tried by any person under the degree of a captain.—And it is a general custom not to put subaltern officers, particularly those but of short standing in the army, on General Courts-martial, provided a sufficiency of field-officers and captains can be conveniently assembled. See Art. of War, § 15 a. 8, 9. 12: Mutiny act, § 12.

Although a President and 12 members are sufficient to constitute a legal court, yet it is frequently judged necessary to assemble and swear in more; in order as far as possible to guard against accidents arising from sickness, or other causes the non-attendance of some of the court. Whilst there is a quorum of 13, the president included, of those originally sworn in, the court may proceed to business, although others of the court do not attend; but if it become necessary to call in a new member, the court must proceed de novo.

The Crimes that are cognisable by a Court-martial, as repugnant to military discipline, are pointed out by the Mutiny-act and Articles of War; which every military man is or ought to be fully acquainted with, and therefore not necessary to be recited here: and as to other crimes which officers and soldiers being guilty of, are to be tried for in the ordinary course of law, it is needless to enter into a detail of them.

By the last article in the code of Military-laws, Courts-martial are authorized to take cognizance of all crimes not capital, and all disorders and misdemeanors, which officers and soldiers may be guilty of, to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, which are not enumerated in the preceding articles, and punish them at their discretion. Art. of War, § 20 a. 3. Upon the authority of this article it has been too much the custom in the army to try soldiers by Courts-martial, for thefts and other crimes cognisable before the courts of law. But it seems questionable, whether an exception might not in many such cases be made to their jurisdiction: for the Mutiny-act, § 62, and Articles of War, § 11 a. 1, expressly direct, that any officer, non-commissioned officer or soldier who shall be accused of any capital crime, violence or offence, against the person, estate or property of any of his Majesty's subjects, punishable by the laws of the land, shall be delivered over to the civil magistrate by the commanding officer, under penalty of his being cashiered in case of refusal.—There was formerly an article, of late omitted, particularly authorizing Courts-martial to take cognisance of all soldiers accused of stealing from their comrades.

The Persons liable to Martial-law are likewise enumerated in the Act and the Articles. The latter mention only Officers, Soldiers and persons serving with the armies in the field. But Hale and others are of opinion, that aliens who in a hostile manner invade the kingdom, whether their King were at war or peace with ours, and whether they come by themselves or in company with English traitors, cannot be punished as traitors, but must be dealt with by Martial-law. H. P. C. cc. 10, 15: 3 Inst. 11.—This however means Martial-law in the strict sense of the word, in which it cannot be applied to proceedings under the Mutiny-act; and which kind of Martial law is unknown in this kingdom.—The receiving pay as a soldier, subjects the receiver to military jurisdiction. The court of C. P. therefore refused to grant a prohibition to prevent the execution of the sentence of a Court-martial, passed against one who received pay as a soldier; but who assumed the military character merely for the purpose of recruiting, in the usual course of that service—and this though the proceedings of the Court-martial, appeared, in some instances, to be erroneous. Grant v. Sir Charles Gould, 2 H. Black. Rep. 69.

The Articles of War, in a few cases, point out the express Sentence to be passed on criminals, without any alternative: in some an optional power is given, of punishing with death or otherwise, and in others, offenders are punished at the discretion of the Court, omitting the word death; evidently meaning thereby to exclude the power of punishing capitally in such cases.

In cases where an optional power is vested in the Court to punish with death or otherwise, the question to follow that of guilty or not guilty, (upon the Court or the majority of it declaring for the former,) is, whether or not the prisoner shall suffer death? If two-thirds of the Court do not concur in the affirmative, the votes of the affirmants are considered as void. A lesser number than two-thirds being, as was before said, incompetent to give judgment of death, another question becomes necessary to be proposed to every member, what punishment, other than death, shall the prisoner undergo? And each member gives his voice, de novo, on this question, wherein a majority is competent to determine.

The crimes cognizable by a Court-martial may be divided into felonies and misdemeanors; or more properly, into capital offences, and offences only criminal and not capital; and if on the evidence a prisoner does not appear guilty of a crime of so capital a nature, as is set forth in the charge, the Court may find him guilty in a less degree; but they cannot declare him guilty of a mutiny, or any other distinct crime or offence, unless it be likewise in the charge given against him, before the trial commences.

The judgments of Courts-martial, besides being open to the disapprobation of the King, or his commanders in chief, are liable like those of other courts, to be taken en quittance of, and the members punished for illegal proceedings; for the Court of King's Bench being the supreme court of Common law, hath not only power to reverse erroneous judgments given by inferior courts, but also to punish all inferior magistrates, and all officers of justice, for all wilful and corrupt abuses of authority against the known, obvious, and common principles of justice. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 10: c. 27. § 22.—The Mutiny-act directs, that every action against any member or minister of a Court-martial, in respect to any sentence, shall be brought in some of the courts of record at Westminster, &c. § 63. And there have been many instances of prosecutions of this nature in Westminster-hall.—An officer on a Court martial however is not liable to be punished for mere mistakes which an honest well-meaning man may innocently fall into. And if the plaintiff or prosecutor becomes nonsuited, or the defendant has a verdict, he shall recover treble costs. Mutiny-act, § 62.—There is also another tribunal before which the proceedings of Courts-martial are liable to censure at least, namely, the House of Commons.

It is enacted by § 12 of the Mutiny-act, that no officer or soldier being acquitted or convicted of any offence, shall be liable to be tried a second time by the same or any other Court-martial, for the same offence, unless in the case of an appeal from a regimental to a general Court-martial; and by the Articles of War “If upon a second hearing the appeal shall appear to be vexatious and groundless, the person so appealing shall be punished at the discretion of the General Court-martial.”—No sentence given by any Court-martial, and signed by the President, is liable to be revised more than once. And this may be rather deemed an appeal to the same court than a new trial; since in this case the same persons only are to re-consider what they have already done, without any new judges being added to them, or any new witnesses produced.

A distinction is made in the Oath taken by the President and Members of a Court martial, and that of the Judge-Advocate. The former are sworn, not only to conceal the vote or opinion of each particular member, but also the sentence of the Court, until it shall be approved by his Majesty, or by some person duly authorized by him; the latter is only sworn not to divulge the opinion of any particular member of the Court-martial.

For further particulars, See Adye's Treatise on Courts-Martial; from whence most of the above is abridged—See also this Dict. title Solators.—And as to Naval Courts-martial, title Navy.

COURT OF PIEPOWDERS, cursa pedis pulverisati.] Is a court held in fairs, to do justice to buyers and sellers, and for redress of disorders committed in them: so called, because they are most usual in Summer, when the suitors to the court have dusty feet; and from the expedition in hearing causes proper thereunto, before the dust goes off the feet of the plaintiffs and defendants. 4 Inst. 272: or from Pied poulheaux appellat. Barrington, Arc. Stats. 337. It is a court of record incident to every Fair; and to be held only during the time that the Fair is kept. Dott. & Stud. c. 5. As to the jurisdiction, the cause of action for contract, slander, &c. must arise in the fair or market, and not before at any former fair, nor after the fair: it is to be for some matter concerning the same fair or market; and must be done, complained of, heard and determined the same day. Also the plaintiff must make oath that the contract, &c. was within the jurisdiction and time of the fair. Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2: 2 Inst. 220.

The Court of Piepowders may hold a plea of a fura above 40s. and it is said, judgment may be given at another other fair, at a court held there, and a writ of error lies upon a judgment given. Dyer 133: F. N. B. 18. This court may not meddle with any thing done in a market, without a special custom for it; but for what is done in a fair only: and not there for scandalous words, unless they concern matters of contract in the fair; as where it is for slandering the wares of another, and not of his person in the same fair. Moor, Ca. 854. The steward before whom the court is held, is the judge: and the trial is by merchants and traders in the fair; and the judgment against the defendant shall be quod amercietur. If the steward proceeds contrary to the Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2, he shall forfeit 5 l.

From this court a writ of error lies in the nature of an appeal to the courts at Westminster. Cro. Eliz. 773.—And those courts are now bound by the Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. to issue writs of execution in aid of its process, after judgment, where the person or effects of the defendant are not within the limits of this inferior jurisdiction.

COURT OF REQUESTS, curia requisitionum.] Was a court of equity, of the same nature with the court of Chancery, but inferior to it; principally instituted for the relief of such petitioners, as in conscionable cases addressed themselves by supplication to his majesty. Of this court, the Lord Privy Seal was Chief Judge, assisted by the Masters of Requests; and it had beginning about the 9 H. 7, according to Sir Julius Caesar's Treatise on this subject: though Mr. Gwyn, in his Preface to his Readings, saith it began from a commission first granted by King Hen. VIII.

This court having assumed great power to itself, so that it became burdensome, Mich. anno 40 & 41 Eliz. in the court of Common Pleas it was adjudged, upon solemn argument, that the Court of Requests, was no court of judicature, &c. And by the Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 10. it was taken away. 4 Inst. 97.—See title Courts of Conscience.

COURT OF THE LORD STEWARD OF THE KING'S HOUSE. The Lord Steward, or, in his absence, the treasurer and controller of the King's house, and Steward of the Marshalsea, may inquire of, hear and determine in this court, all treasons, murders, manslaughter, blood-sheds, and other malicious strikings, whereby blood shall be shed, in any of the palaces and houses of the King; [or within the limits i. e. 200 feet from the gate. 4 Comm. 276;] or in any other house where his royal person shall abide. And this jurisdiction was given by the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12: 3 Inst. 140. But this court was at first intended only to inquire of and punish felonies, &c. by the King's servants against any lord or other person of the King's council. 3 H. 7. c. 14.

COURT OF STAR-CHAMBER, Curia cameræ stellatæ.] A Court of very antient original, but new-modelled by Stats. 3 H. 7. c. 1: 21 H. 8. c. 20; which ordained, That the Lord Chancellor, Treasurer, and Lord Privy Seal, calling a Bishop, and Lord of the King's Council, and the two Chief Justices to their assistance, on bill or information might make process against maintainers, rioters, persons unlawfully assembling, and for other misdemeanors, which, through the power and countenance of such as did commit them, lifted up their heads above their faults, and punish them as if the offenders had been convicted at law, by a jury, &c. But this act was repealed, and the Court dissolved by Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 10; having been used to oppress the Subject, particularly in matters of state.

COURTS OF UNIVERSITIES.] These are the Chancellor's courts in the two Universities of England; Oxford and Cambridge. Which two learned bodies enjoy the sole jurisdiction, in exclusion of the King's courts, over all civil actions and suits whatsoever, when a scholar or privileged person is one of the parties; excepting in such cases where the right of freehold is concerned. And these, by the University charter, they are at liberty to try and determine, either according to the Common law of the land, or according to their own local customs, at their discretion; which has generally led them to carry on their process in a course much conformed to the civil law.

These privileges were granted, that the students might not be distracted from their studies by legal process from distant courts, and other forensic avocations.—The oldest charter, it appears, containing this grant to the University of Oxford, was 28 Hen. 3. A. D. 1244. And the same privileges were confirmed and enlarged by almost every succeeding prince, down to King Henry VIII, in the fourteenth year of whose reign the largest and most extensive charter of all was granted. One similar to which was afterwards granted to Cambridge in the third year of Queen Elizabeth. But yet, notwithstanding these charters, the privileges granted therein, of proceeding in a course different from the law of the land, were of so high a nature, that they were held to be invalid; for though the King might erect new courts, yet he could not alter the course of law by his letters patent. Therefore in the reign of Queen Elizabeth a statute was passed, (13 Eliz. c. 29.) confirming all the charters of the two Universities, and those of 14 Hen. 8: and 3 Eliz. by name. Which statute established this high privilege without any doubt or opposition. Jenk. Cent. 2. pl. 88: Cent. 3. pl. 33: Hard. 504: Godb. 201: Hist. C. L. 33.

This privilege, so far as it relates to civil causes, is exercised at Oxford in the Chancellor's court; the judge of which is the Vice-chancellor, his deputy, or assessor. From his sentence an appeal lies to delegates appointed by the congregation; from thence to other delegates of the house of Convocation; and if they all three concur in the same sentence it is final: at least by the statutes of the University (Tit. 21. § 18,) according to the rule of the civil law (Cod. 7. 70, 1). But, if there be any discordance or variation in any of the three sentences, an appeal lies in the last resort to judges delegates, appointed by the Crown under the great seal in Chancery. 3 Comm. 83—5.

COURTS OF WALES, Curia principality Walliæ.] The Courts of the principality of Wales.

These Courts upon the thorough reduction of that kingdom, and the settling of its polity in the reign of Hen. VIII. were erected all over the country; principally by the Stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 26, though much had before been done, and the way prepared by the Stat. of Wales, 12 Ed. 1, and other statutes. By the Stat. of Hen. 8. before-mentioned, courts-baron, hundred, and county-courts are there established as in England. A Session is also to be held twice in every year in each county, by judges, (See Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 8.) appointed by the King. This Session is to be called the Great Sessions of the several counties in Wales; in which all pleas of real and personal actions shall be held, with the same form of process, and in as simple a manner, as in the courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, at Westminster. See, for farther regulation of the practice of these courts, Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 25: 8 Eliz. c. 20: 8 Geo. 1. c. 25. § 6: 6 Geo. 2. c. 14: 13 Geo. 3. c. 51. Writs of error shall lie from judgments in this great sessions, it being a court of record, to the Court of King's Bench at Westminster. But the ordinary original writs of process from the King's courts at Westminster, do not run into the principality of Wales, (2 Rol. Rep. 141;) though process of execution does; (2 Bulst. 156: 2 Sand. 193: Raym. 206;) as do also prerogative writs, as writs of certiorari, quo minus, mandamus, and the like. Cro. Jac. 484.—And even in causes, between subject and subject, to prevent injustice through family factions or prejudices, it is held lawful (in causes of freehold at least, and it is usual in all others) to bring an action in the English courts, and try the same in the next English county, adjoining to that part of Wales where the cause arises, and wherein the venue is laid. Vaugh. 413: Harb. 66. But, on the other hand, to prevent trifling and frivolous suits, it is enacted by Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 51, that in personal actions, tried in any English county, where the cause of action arose, and the defendant resides in Wales, if the plaintiff shall not recover a verdict for 1*l.* he shall be nonsuited, and pay the defendant's costs, unless it be certified by the judge that the freehold or title came principally in question, or that the cause was proper to be tried in such English county. And if any transitory action, the cause whereof arose, and the defendant is resident in Wales, shall be brought in any English county, and the plaintiff shall not recover a verdict for 1*l.* the plaintiff shall be nonsuited, and shall pay the defendant's costs, deducting thereout the sum recovered by the verdict.

By Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 9, it is enacted, that sheriffs in Wales, shall not hold to bail, on process, issuing out of any of his Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, unless the debt be sworn to be 20*l.*

For further satisfaction, as to the several Courts within this kingdom, see 4 Inst. and the Commentaries.

COURT-LANDS, Demains, or lands kept in the lord's hands, to serve his family. See Curtils Tenae.

COUSENAGE, See Coffnage.

COUTHUTLAUGH, from the Sax. couth, i. e. seins, and utlaugh, exlex.] A person that willingly and knowingly receives a man outlawed, and cherishes or conceals him: for which offence he was, in ancient times, to undergo the same punishment as the outlaw himself. Bract. lib. 3. cap. 2. cap. 13.

COWS, See title Cattle.

CRAIERA, crayer.] A small vessel of lading; a hoy or smack. Pat. 2 R. 2: Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 27.

CRILL, An engine made use of to catch fish. Blount.

CRANAGE, cranagium.] A liberty to use a crane for drawing up of goods and wares of burden from ships and vessels, at any creek of the sea or wharf, unto the land, and to make profit of it: it also signifies the money paid and taken for the same. Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 11.

CRANNOCK, An ancient measure of corn. Cartular. Abbat. Glasen. MS. f. 39.

CRASPICIS, A whale, viz. piscis crassus. Blount.

CRASTINO SANCTI VINCENTII, The morrow after the feast of St. Vincent the Martyr, i. e. the 22d of January; which is the date of the statutes made at Merton, anno 25 Hen. 3. There are likewise certain return days of assize in terms, in the courts at Westminster, beginning with Crastino, &c. as Crastino animalium, the Morrow of

All Souls, in Michaelmas term; Crastino Purificationis beate Marie Virginis, in Hilary term; Crastino Ascensionis Domini, in Easter term; and Crastino Sancta Trinitatis, in Trinity term. See Stat. 51 H. 3. ff. 2 & 3: 32 H. 8. c. 21: 16 Car. 1. c. 6: 24 Geo. 2. c. 48.—See Days in Bank Terms.

CRATES, Lat.] An iron grate before a prison, used in the time of the Romans. 1 Vent. 304.

CRAVARE, To impeach. Si homicida divadietur ibi vel cravetur, &c. Leg. H. 1. c. 30.

CRAVEN, or CRAVENT, The word of obloquy, where in the ancient trial by battel, the victory should be proclaimed, and the vanquished acknowledge his fault, or pronounce the word cravent, in the name of Reereantise, &c. and thereupon judgment was given forthwith; after which the reerant should become infamous, &c. 2 Inst. 248. If the appellant joined battel, and cried cravent, he should lose liberam legem; but if the appellee cried out cravent, he was to be hanged. 3 Inst. 221.—See titles Battel, Champion.

CREAMER, A foreign merchant; but generally taken for one who hath a stall in a fair or market. Blount.

CREANSOR, creditor, from Fr. creyance.] Signifies him that trusts another with any debt, money, or wares; in which sense it is used in Old Nat. Br. 66. and 38 Ed. 3. c. 5.

CREAST, or CREST, crista.] Any imagery, or carved work, to adorn the head of waincoat, &c. like our modern cornice: but this word is now applied by the heralds to their devices set over a coat of arms. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 573.

CRECHE, A drinking-cup. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 104.

CREDITORS, Shall recover their debts of executors or administrators, who in their own wrong, waile, or convert to their use the estate of the deceased, &c. Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 7. Wills and devises of lands, &c. as to creditors on bonds or other specialties, are declared void; and the creditors may have actions of debt against the heir at law and devisees. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14. And in favour of creditors, whenever it appears to be the testator's intent, in a will, that his lands should be liable for paying his debts; in such case equity will make them subject, though there are not express words; but there must be more than a bare declaration, or it shall be intended out of the personal estate. 2 Vern. Rep. 708. Where one devises that all his debts, &c. shall be first paid; if his personal estate is not sufficient to pay the creditors, it shall amount to a charge on his real estate for that purpose. Plead. Canc. 430.—See titles Assets, Copysold, Executor.

CRECK, creca, crecca.] A part of a haven where any thing is landed from the sea: so that it is observed, if when you are out of the main sea within the haven, you look round and see how many landing places there are, so many creeks may be said to belong to that haven. Cramp. Jurisd. M. 110. It is also said to be a shore or bank whereon the water beats, running in a small channel from any part of the sea; from the Lat. crepus. This word is used in the Stat. 4 H. 4. c. 20: 5 Eliz. c. 5.—See title Navigatum Adit.

CREMENTUM COMITATUS, The sheriffs of counties anciently answered in their accounts for the improvement of the King's rents above the ancient vicennial rents, rents, under the title of Crementum [incrementum, increase] Comitatus, or Firma de Cremento Comitatus. Hales's Sher. Acco. p. 36.

CREPARE OCULUM, To put out an eye; which had a pecuniary punishment of 60*s.* annexed to it. Leg. H. 1. c. 78.

CREST, See Crest.

CRETINUS, cretena.] A sudden stream or torrent. Histor. Croyland contin. 483, 617.

CRIMINAL CONVERSATION. See titles Adultery; Baron and Feme.

CROCARDS, A sort of old base money. See Pollards, and title Coin.

CROCIA, The crozier or pastoral staff, so called a similitudine crucis, which bishops, &c. had the privilege to carry as the common ensign of their religious office; being invested in their prelaties, by the delivery of such a crozier: hence the word crocia did sometimes denote the collation to, or disposal of bishopricks and abbies, by the donation of such pastoral staff; so as when the King granted large jurisdictions, exceptis crociis, it is meant, except the collation or investiture of episcopal sees, &c. Addit. to Corvel.—See title Bishops.

CROCIARIUS, The crociary or cross-bearer, who like our verger, went before the prelate, and bore his cross. Liber de Miraculis Tho. Episc. Heref. MS. anno 1290.

CROFT, Sax. croftum and crofta.] A little close adjoining to a dwelling-house; and enclosed for pasture or arable, or any particular use. In some old deeds crofta occurs as the Latin word for a croft; but cum toftis & croftis, is most frequent. Inglph. It seems to be derived from the old English word creast, signifying handy craft; because such grounds are usually manured and extraordinarily drest by the hand and skill of the owner.—See Toft.

CROISES, and croisado. See Croyses.

CROE, crocus.] Turning up the hair into curls or corks; whence comes crook, crooked, &c. Par. 21 H. 3.

CROP, cropta.] The seeds or products of the harvest in corn, &c. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 82.

CROSS-BOWS, None shall shoot in, or keep any cross-bow, hand-gun, hagbut, &c. but those who have lands of the value of 100*l.* per annum; and no person shall travel with a cross bow bent, or gun charged, except in time of war; or shoot within a quarter of a mile of any city, or market-town, unless for defence of himself or his house, or at a dead mark, under the penalty of 10*l.* Stat. 33 H. 8. cap. 6—See title Arms, Game.

CROSES, By Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2, Croffes, beads, &c. used by the Roman Catholics, are prohibited to be brought into this kingdom, on pain of a præmunire, &c. In ancient times it was usual for men to erect crosses on their routes, by which they would claim the privileges of the Templars to defend themselves against their rightful lords; but this was condemned by the Stat. Westm. 2. c. 37. It was likewise customary in those days to set up crosses in places where the corps of any of the nobility reled, as it was carried to be buried, that a transcumbens pro corpore anima deprecetur. Walsing. anno 1291. There were several of these crosses erected over England, especially in honour of the resting places of our Kings, on their bodies being transmitted to any distant place for burial: but these superstitions sunk in this kingdom with the Romish religion.

CROY, Marsh land. Inglphus, p. 853.—Blount.

CROYES, cruce signati.] Is used by Britton for pilgrims, because they wear the sign of the cross upon their garments. Of these and their privileges, Britton hath treated, lib. 5. part 2. cap. 2: part 5 cap. 9. Under this word are also signified the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, created for the defence of pilgrims; and likewise all those persons who in the reigns of K. Hen II.: Ric. I.: Hen. III.: and Ed. I. cruce signati took upon them the croisado, dedicating and lifting themselves to the wars, for the recovery of Jerusalem and the Holy Land. Greg. Syntag. lib. 15. cap. 13, 14. See a general account of the croisades in Robertson's Hist. Emp. C. V. vol. 1. p. 22, &c.

CROWN, See title King.

CROWN OFFICE. An Office belonging to the court of King's Bench, of which the King's Coroner or Attorney there is commonly Master. The Attorney General, and Clerk of the Crown exhibit informations in this office, for crimes and misdemeanors; the one ex officio, and the other usually by order of court; and here informations may be laid for offences and misdemeanors at Common law, as for batteries, conspiracies, libelling, nuisances, contempt, seditionous words, &c. wherein the offender is liable to pay a fine to the King. Finch 340: Show 109.

By Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, The Clerk of the Crown in B. R. is not to receive or file any information for trespass, battery, &c. without express order of court; nor to issue any process without taking a recognisance in 20*l.* penalty to prosecute with effect; and if the party appear, and the plaintiff do not procure a trial in a year, or if verdict pass for the defendant, &c. the court shall award the defendant costs: but this act doth not extend to informations in the name of the King's Coroner or Attorney, &c.

When a battery is committed privately, so that the person injured can make no proof thereof by witnesses at law; it is usual to bring an information in this office, or to prefer an indictment, the most legal method, where the party may be a witness for the King, it being his suit. See title Indictment, Information, King's Bench, Quo Warranto, &c.

CRUSTUM, Was a garment of purple, mixed with many colours. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. pag. 210.

CRY DE PAIS, On a robbery or other felony done, hue and cry may be raised by the country in the absence of the constable, which is called cry de pais. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 100—See title Hue and Cry.

CRYSTAL, A chapel or oratory under ground. Du Cange.

CUCKING STOOL, See title Castigatory.

CUDE, A cude cloth is a chrysom or face-cloth for a child baptized. Vide Chrysmale.

CUI ANTE DIVORTIUM, A writ for a woman divorced from her husband to recover her lands and tenements which she had in fee-simple, or in tail, or for life, from him to whom her husband did alienate them during the marriage, when she could not gainsay it. Reg. Orig. 233: F. N. B. 240. And the heir shall have a sur cui ante divortium, where the wife dieth before the action brought; as well as he shall have a sur cui in vita. F. N. B. 193. But of an estate-tail, the heir shall not have sur cui in vita, or ante divortium, but shall be put to his joinder in the defender. New Nat. Br. 454.—See title Entry.

COT

CUI IN VITA, A writ of entry, for a widow against him to whom her husband aliened her lands or tenelements in his life-time; which must contain in it, that during his life she could not withstand it. Reg. Orig. 232: F. N. B. 173. If husband and wife be jointenants before the coverture, and the husband alieneth all the land, and dieth, she shall have a cui in vita for a moiety, and no more: but if they are joint purchasers, during the coverture, and he alien all the land, and dieth, his wife shall have a cui in vita of the whole land; because that during the coverture, as to purchase, they are but one person in law. F. N. B. 187. And for this reason, if husband and wife, and a third person, purchase jointly, and the husband alieneth all in fee, and dieth, the wife shall have a cui in vita of a moiety. Ibid.

Where the husband and wife exchange the lands of the wife for other lands, if the wife agree unto the exchange after the husband's death, she shall not have a cui in vita. Also if the wife do accept of parcel of the land in dower, of which she hath a cui in vita, by that acceptance she shall be barred of the residue. New Nat. Br. 430. If the husband and wife lose by default the wife's lands, after the death of her husband, she shall have a cui in vita to recover those lands so lost by default. F. N. B. 187. By Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 3, Cui in vita is given to the wife where the deceased husband lost her lands by default in his life-time: and she shall be admitted to defend her right during his life, if she come in before judgment. Likewise if tenant in dower, by the curtesy, or for life, do make default, &c. the heirs and they to whom the reversion belongeth, shall be admitted to their answer, if they come before judgment: and if on default judgment happen to be given, such heirs, &c. shall have a writ of entry for recovery of the same, after the death of such tenants. See Booth on real actions, and F. N. B.—See the preceding article.

CULAGIUM, The laying up of a ship in the dock to be repaired. MS. Arth. Trexon. Arm. de Plac. Edw. 3.

CULM, See Coal.

CULPRIT, A prisoner accused for trial. The word arose originally from the reply of the proper officer in behalf of the King, affirming a criminal to be guilty, after he hath pleaded Not guilty, without which the issue to be tried is not joined: it is compounded of two words, viz. Cul and pit; the one an abbreviation of culpabilis, and the other derived from the French word prest, i. e. ready; and it is as much as to say that he is ready to prove the offender guilty. See 4 Comm. 339.

CULTURA, A parcel of arable land. Blount.

CULVERTAGE, Culvertagium.] Is said by some persons to be derived from Culum & Potere, to turn tail: and in this sense, sub nomine culvertagii, was taken to be on pain of cowardice, or being accounted cowards. And in this sense Spelman in voc. Niderling derives it from Culver a dove. But in the opinion of others, it rather signifies some base slavery, or the confiscation of an estate; being a feudal term for the lands of the vassal forfeited and encroaching to the lord: and sub nomine culvertagii, in this signification, was under pain of confiscation. Mitt. Paris. anno 1112.

CULWARD and CULVERD, A coward, or cowardice. Chart. Temp. E. 1.—See the preceding word.

CUNA CERVISIE, A tub of ale. Dumfries. But this word is truly Crua.

CURATE.

CUNEUS, A mint or place to coin money: C. i. num. monetum signifies the King's stamp for coinage; and from the word cune, is derived coin. See Coin.

CUNTEY-CUNTEY, A kind of trial, as appears by Bracton. Bract. lib. 4. naft. 3. c. 18, where it seems to intend the ordinary jury.

CURAGULUS, One who taketh care of a thing. Mon. Ang. tom. 2.

CURATE, Curator.] He who represents the incumbent of a church, parson or vicar, and takes care of divine service in his stead: in case of pluralities of livings, or where a clergyman is old and infirm, it is requisite there should be a Curate to perform the cure of the church. He is to be licensed and admitted by the bishop of the diocese, or by an Ordinary, having episcopal jurisdiction: and when a Curate hath the approbation of the bishop, he usually appoints the salary too; and in such case, if he be not paid, the Curate hath a proper remedy in the ecclesiastical court, by a sequestration of the profits of the benefice; but if he hath no licence from the bishop, he is put to his remedy at common law, where he must prove the agreement, &c. Right Clerg. 127.

By Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 11, such as serve a church during its vacancy, shall be paid such stipend as the Ordinary thinks reasonable out of the profits of the vacancy; or if that be not sufficient, by the successor, within fourteen days after he takes possession.

By Stat. 12 An. c. 12, where Curates are licensed by the bishop, they are to be appointed by him a stipend not exceeding 50*l.* per ann. nor less than 20*l.* a year, according to the value of the livings, to be paid by the rector or vicar: and the same may be done on any complaint made. One person cannot be Curate in two churches, unless such may satisfy the law, by reading both morning and evening prayers at each place: nor can he serve one cure on one Sunday, and another cure on the next; for he must not neglect to read morning and evening prayer in his church every Lord's day; if he doth he is liable to punishment. Comp. Incumb. 572. But it is otherwise where a church or chapel is a member of the parish-church; and where one church is not able to maintain a curate. Can. 48.

A Curate having no fixed estate in his curacy, not being instituted and inducted, may be removed at pleasure by the bishop or incumbent. Noy. But there are perpetual curates, as well as temporary, who are appointed where tithes are impropriate, and no vicarage endowed: these are not removeable; and the impropriators are obliged to find them, some whereof have certain portions of the tithes settled on them. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 8.

It was provided in 1603 by Can. 33, that if a bishop ordains any person not provided with some ecclesiastical preferment, except a fellow or chaplain of a College, or a Master of Arts of five years standing, who lives in the University at his own expence, the bishop shall support him till he prefer him to a living. 3 Burn. Eccl. L. 28.—The bishops before they confer orders require either proof of such a title as is described by the canon, or a certificate from some Rector or Vicar, promising to employ the candidate for orders bonâ fide as a curate, and to grant him a certain allowance till he obtains some ecclesiastical preferment, or shall be removed for some fault. In a case where the Rector of St Anne Westminster gave such a title, and afterwards dismissed his Curate

CURATE.

Curate without assigning any cause, the Curate recovered in an action of assumpsit the same salary for the time after his dismission which he had received before. Cowp. 437.—When the Rector had vacated St. Anne's by accepting the living of Rochdale, the Curate brought another action to recover his salary after the Rector left St. Anne's; but the Court of K. B. held that that action could not be maintained: as these titles are only binding upon those who give them, while they continue incumbents in the church for which such Curate is appointed. Doug. 137.

No Curate (or Minister) ought to perform the duties of any church, before he has obtained a licence from the Bishop. 2 Burn, 58.

The Bishop cannot increase the salary of the Curate, where there is a specific agreement between the Incumbent and the Curate. Ficm. 70.

Every clergyman that officiates in a church, (whether incumbent or substitute) is in our liturgy called a curate: Curates must subscribe the declaration, according to the act of Uniformity, or are liable to imprisonment, &c. See title Clergyman, Parson, Advocate, Chaplain, &c.

CURFEU, Fr. Couvrir, to cover; Feu, fire.] A bell which rang at eight o'clock in the evening, in the time of William the Conqueror; by which every person was commanded to rake up or cover over his fire, and put out his light: and in many places of England at this day, where a bell is customarily rung towards bed-time, it is said to ring curfew. Stowe's Annals.

In the Welsh language, cuſfa, signifies a beating; also, stroke. Richards's Antiquæ Lingue Britannicæ Thesaurus.

CURIA, This word was sometimes taken for the persons, as feudatory and other customary tenants, who did their suit and service at the court of the lord. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 139. And it was usual for the Kings of England, in ancient times, to assemble the Bishops, Peers, and great men of the kingdom to some particular place, at the chief festivals in the year; and this assembly is called by our historians curia; because there they consulted about the weighty affairs of the nation. And it was therefore called Solemnis Curia, Augustalis Curia, Curia Publica, &c. See title Court, Witenagemote.

CURIA ADVISARE VULT, Is a deliberation which a Court of judicature sometimes takes, where there is any point of difficulty, before they give judgment in a cause. New Book Entr. And when judgment is said, upon motion to arrest it, then it is entered by the judges curia advisare vult. Shep. Epit. 682.—See title Judgment.

CURIA CURSUS AQUÆ, A court held by the lord of the manor of Graveſend for the better management of barges and boats using the passage on the river Thames from thence to London, and plying at Graveſend bridge, &c. mentioned in Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 26.

CURIA CLAUDENDA, A writ to compel another to make a fence or wall, which he ought to make between his land and the plaintiff's, on his refusing or deferring to do the same. Reg. Orig. 155. This writ doth not lie but against him who hath a close adjoining to the plaintiff's land, who is obliged to inclose it; and it lieth not but for him who hath a freehold, &c. It may be sued before the sheriff in the county court, or in the common pleas: and the judgment is to recover the inclosure and damages. New Nat. Br. 282, 283. But, if the occupier of a close adjoining to mine, ought to repair the fence between the closes, and do not, and his cattle stray into my close and do damage, I may distrain them damage feasant, or drive them out, and bring an action of trespass. If my cattle stray into his close and do damage, he has not a right to distrain them, nor can he support trespass against me for the same. Should my cattle after straying into his close, stray out of the same into any highway, or other place, and be lost, or trespass in the ground of a third person, and be by him distrained damage feasant, and kept till replevied, or I have made satisfaction, I may maintain an action against the defaulter, i. e. against the occupier of the adjoining close, for not repairing his fence, whereby such damage hath happened to me. The writ of curia claudenda therefore is grown out of use. See title Trespass.

CURIA DOMINI, The lord's house, hall or court, where all the tenants attend at the time of keeping courts.

CURIA PENTICIARUM, Is a court held by the sheriff of Chester, in a place there called the Pendice or Pentice: and it is probable its being originally kept under a pent-house, or open shed covered with boards, gave it this denomination. Blount.

CURNOCK, A measure containing four bushels, or half a quarter. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 12.

CURRICULUS, The year, or course of a year: Actum est hoc annorum Domini incarnationis quatuor quinquagenis & quinq̄, quinis lustris, & tribus curriculis. This is the year 1028; for four times 50 make 200, and five times 200 make 1000. Then five lustra are twenty-five years, and three Curriculi, three years; making in all the very year. Blount.

CURRIERS, Persons that curry and dress leather. No currier shall use the trade of a butcher, tanner, &c. or shall curry skins insufficiently tanned, or gash any hides of leather, on pain of forfeiting for every hide or skin 6s. 8d. And persons in London putting leather to be curried to any but freemen of the Curriers' Company, and such curriers not currying the leather sufficiently, shall forfeit the ware or the value, &c. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. The clause relating to freemen is repealed; but if any currier do not curry leather sent him, within sixteen days between Michaelmas and Lady-Day, and in eight days at other times, on conviction before a justice, he shall forfeit 5*l.* to be levied by distress, &c. yet subject to mitigation. 12 Geo. 2. c. 25. Curriers and such as deal in leather, may cut and sell it in small pieces in their shops to any persons whatsoever. Stat. Ibid.—See titles Leather, Skins, &c.

CURSING, See Swearing.

CURSITORS, Clerici de Curſu.] Clerks belonging to the Chancery, who make out original writs; and are called Clerks of Course, in their oath appointed 18 Ed. 3. stat. 5. There are of these clerks twenty-four in number, which make a corporation of themselves; and to each clerk is allotted a division of certain counties, in which they exercise their functions. 2 Inſt. 670.—See title Proceſſi.

CURSONES TERRÆ, Ridges of land. Stat. 14 Ed. 2.

CURSORE, A sort of light ships or swift sailors. Hovacen R. 1.

CURTESY OF ENGLAND, Jus Curialitatis Angliæ.] Is where a man taketh a wife seised in fee-simple, or fee-tail general, or as heirless in special tail, and hath issue by her, male or female, born alive, which by any possibility bility may inherit, and the wife dies; the husband holds the lands during his life; and is called Tenens per legem Angliæ, or Tenant by the curtesy of England. See title Tenures III. 9.—Though this is called the Curtsey of England, it appears to have been the established law of Scotland, where it was called Curtialitas.—It is likewise used in Ireland by virtue of an ordinance of H. III.—So that probably the word curtesy is in this sense understood rather to signify an attendance upon the lord's courts, than to denote any peculiar favour. See 2 Comm. 126.

Four things are requisite to give an estate by the curtesy, viz. Marriage, seisin of the wife, issue, and death of the wife. Co. Lit. 30. If land descend to the wife after the husband hath issue by her; or if the issue be dead at the time of her death, being born alive; the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy. Also if a child is born alive, it is not material whether it is baptised, or ever heard to cry, to make the husband tenant by the curtesy; for if it is born alive, it is enough. Dy. 25: 8 Rep. 34.

The words in the general editions of Littlton, 1 Inst. 29, are overs on wife, but in Baron and Machlinia's edition they are next wife, and are translated by Lord Coke, born alive. May not the word wife in the first instance have been an error for life, meaning thereby that the issue must be heard, or seen; so as to ascertain its being alive?

But the child must be such as by possibility may inherit; and therefore if land be given to a woman, and the heirs male of her body, and she takes husband and hath issue a daughter, and dies; as this issue cannot possibly inherit, the husband shall not be tenant by the curtesy. Terms de Lev.

If the child is rip'd forth of the mother's belly, after her death, though it be alive, it will not cause tenancy by the curtesy; for this ought to begin by the issue, and be consummate by the death of the wife, and the estate of tenant by the curtesy should avoid the immediate descent. Ibid. A man shall not be tenant by the curtesy of a bare right, title, use, reversion, &c. expectant upon an estate of freehold, unless the particular estate is determined during the coverture; nor of a seisin in law: but if a wife dies before a rent becomes due; or in the case of an advowson, before the church becomes void; the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy, though the wife had only a seisin in law; for in this case no other seisin could be attained. F. N. B. 149: Co. Lit. 29, 30, 40.

Though in strictness of law there cannot be curtesy of Trusts, yet since Lord Coke's time our courts of equity have allowed curtesy, both of trusts and other interests which though in law mere rights and titles, are deemed estates in equity; and made to conform to many of the rules and consequences incident to estates in law. See in 1 Atk. 603, the case of Cashborn v. Inghib, in which Hardwicke C. decreed curtesy of an equity of redemption. See S. C. more fully reported in Vin. tit. Curtesy, E. pl. 23. However, a wife may in point of benefit have a trust of inheritance, which may be so declared as to prevent curtesy; as by directing the profits during the wife's life to be paid for her separate use; for in such case the intention to exclude the husband from curtesy is manifest, and he cannot have an equitable seisin. 3 Atk. 715. It is also proper to remark that though curtesy out of a trust is allowed, yet dower has been refused; a distinction not easily reconcilable with reason, however settled by the current of authorities. See 1 Inst. 29 a; n. 6.

As to Curtesy in Titles and Offices of honour, See 1 Inst. 29 b; and Mr. Hargrave's learned notes there, by which it seems that no such curtesy can take place; though the question appears not to be settled, a decision having been repeatedly avoided thereon.

There is no tenancy by the curtesy of copyhold lands, except there be a special custom for it. But in gavelkind lands, a husband may be tenant by the curtesy without having issue. 1 Inst. 30. But it is only of a moiety of the wife's land, and ceases if the husband marries again. Robins. Gavelk. l. 2. c. 1. Where a husband is entitled to this tenancy, if after the wife is an indent, and her estate in the land found: when she dies, he shall not be tenant by the curtesy, for the King's title by relation prevents it. Plowd. 261. If the wife be seised in fee of lands, and attaint of felony, but have issue by her husband, and she is hanged, &c. it is said the husband shall be a tenant by the curtesy: but yet the land will be forfeited; according to Kitch. 159: 21 Ed. 3. 49.

A woman seised of land had two daughters, and covenanted to stand seised to the use of E. her eldest daughter in tail; on condition that she should pay to her other daughter within a certain time 300*l.* And if E. made default, or died without issue before such payment, then the land to go to the second daughter; the mother dying, E. took a husband, and had issue, and died afterwards without any issue living, before the day of payment: it was here held, that her husband should be tenant by the curtesy. 1 Leon. ca. 233.—See Kitch. 159.

CURTEYN, Curtana.] The name of King Edward the Confessor's sword; which is the first sword carried before the Kings of England at their coronation: and it is said the point of it is broken as an emblem of mercy. Mat. Paris. in Hen. III.

CURTILAGE, Curtilagium, from the Fr. Cour, Court, and Sax. Leagb locus.] A court-yard, back-side, or piece of ground lying near and belonging to a dwelling house. See Stats. 4 Ed. 1. c. 1: 35 H. 8. c. 4: 39 Eliz. c. 10: 6 Rep. 64. and Spelm. And though it is said to be a yard or garden, belonging to a house; it seems to differ from a garden, for we find, cum quodam gardino & curtillagio. 15 Ed. 1. n. 34.

CURTILES TERRÆ, Court lands. It is recorded, that among our Saxon ancestors, that the Thanes or nobles who possessed Bockland, or hereditary lands, divided them into Inland and Outland: the Inland was that which lay most convenient for the lord's mansion-house; and therefore the lords kept that part in their own hands, for the support of their families, and for hospitality: afterwards the Normans called these lands Terras Dominicales, the demains, demesnes, or lord's lands: the Germans termed them Terras Indominicatas, lands in the lord's own use: and the Feudists, Terras Curtiles, lands appropriate to the court or house of the lord. Spelm. of Feuds, c. 5.

CUSTANTIA, Custagium, costs.

CUSTODE ADMITTENDO, AND CUSTODE AMOVENDO, writs for the admitting or removing of Guardians. Reg. Orig.

CUSTODES LIBERTATIS ANGLIÆ AUTHORITY PARLIAMENTI, The title in which writs and all judicial process did run during the grand rebellion, from the murder of King Charles I. till the Usurper Oliver was declared Protector, &c. mentioned and declared traitorous, by Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 3.

CUSTOM.

CUSTODIAM DARE, Was taken for a gift or grant for life. Du Cange.

CUSTOM, consuetudo.] Is a law not written, established by long usage, and the consent of our ancestors. No law can oblige a free people without their consent: so, wherever they consent and use a certain rule or method as a law, such rule, &c. gives it the power of a law; and if it is universal, then it is common-law: if particular to this or that place, then it is custom. 3 Salk. 112. As to the rise of customs, when a reasonable act once done was found to be good and beneficial to the people, then they did use it often, and by frequent repetition of the act, it became a custom; which being continued without interruption time out of mind, it obtained the force of a law, to bind the particular places, persons, and things concerned therein. Thus a custom had beginning and grew to perfection.

To make a particular custom good, the following are necessary requisites.

1. Antiquity.—That it have been used so long, that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. So that, if any one can show the beginning of it, within legal memory, that is within any time since the first year of Richard I. it is no good custom. For which reason no custom can prevail against an express act of parliament, since the statute itself is a proof of a time when such a custom did not exist. Co. Lit. 113. Therefore a custom that every pound of butter sold in a certain market, should weigh eighteen ounces, is bad; being directly contrary to Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 26, which directs it to contain 16 oz. 3 Term Rep. 271.

2. It must have been continued. Any interruption would cause a temporary ceasing: the revival gives it a new beginning, which will be within time of memory, and thereupon the custom will be void. But this must be understood with regard to an interruption of the right; for an interruption of the possession only, for ten or twenty years, will not destroy the custom. Co. Lit. 114. As if the inhabitants of a parish have a customary right of watering their cattle at a certain pool, the custom is not destroyed, though they do not use it for ten years; it only becomes more difficult to prove: but if the right be any how discontinued for a day, the custom is quite at an end.

3. It must have been peaceable, and acquiesced in; not subject to contention and dispute. Co. Lit. 114. For as customs owe their original to common consent, their being immemorially disputed, either at law or otherwise, is a proof that such consent was wanting.

4. Customs must be reasonable; (Litt. § 212;) or rather, taken negatively, they must not be unreasonable. Which is not always, as Sir Edward Coke says, (1 Inst. 62,) to be understood of every unlearned man's reason, but of artificial and legal reason, warranted by authority of law. Upon which account a custom may be good, though the particular reason of it cannot be assigned; for it sufficeth, if no legal reason can be assigned against it. Thus a custom in a parish, that no man shall put his beasts into the common till the third of October, would be good; and yet it would be hard to show the reason why that day in particular is fixed upon, rather than the day before or after. But a custom, that no cattle shall be put in till the lord of the manor has first put in his, is unreasonable, and therefore bad: for peradventure the lord will never put in his; and then the tenants will lose all their profits. Co. Copyb. § 33.

5. Customs ought to be certain. A custom, that lands shall descend to the most worthy of the owner's blood, is void: for how shall this worth be determined? But a custom to descend to the next male of the blood, exclusive of females, is certain, and therefore good. 1 Ro. Abr. 565. A custom to pay two-pence an acre in lieu of tithes, is good; but to pay sometimes two-pence, and sometimes three-pence, as the occupier of the land pleases, is bad for its uncertainty. Yet a custom to pay a year's improved value for a fine on a copyhold estate, is good; though the value is a thing uncertain; for the value may be ascertained at any time; and the maxim of law is, id certum est, quod certum reddi potest.—A custom that poor house-keepers shall carry away rotten wood in a chase is bad; being too vague and uncertain. 2 Term Rep. 758.

6. Customs, though established by consent, must be (when established) compulsory; and not left to the option of every man, who he will use them or no. Therefore a custom that all the inhabitants shall be rated toward the maintenance of a bridge, will be good; but a custom, that every man is to contribute thereto at his own pleasure is idle and absurd; and indeed no custom at all.

7. Lastly, customs must be consistent with each other: one custom cannot be set up in opposition to another. For if both are really customs, then both are of equal antiquity, and both established by mutual consent: which to say of contradictory customs is absurd. Therefore if one man prescribes that by custom he has a right to have windows looking into another's garden, the other cannot claim a right by custom to stop up or obstruct those windows: for these two contradictory customs cannot both be good, nor both stand together. He ought rather to deny the existence of the former custom. 9 Rep. 58: See Doug. 190.

As to the Allowance of special customs. Customs in derogation of the Common law must be construed strictly. This rule is founded upon the consideration that a variety of customs in different places upon the same subject is a general inconvenience: the courts therefore will not admit such customs but upon the clearest proofs. 1 Term Rep. 466. Thus by the custom of gavelkind, an infant of fifteen years may by one species of conveyance (called a deed of feoffment) convey away his lands in fee-simple. Yet this custom does not empower him to use any other conveyance, or even to lease them for seven years, for the custom must be strictly pursued. Co. Cop. § 33.—And moreover all special customs must yield to the King's prerogative. Therefore if the King purchases land of the nature of gavelkind, where all the sons inherit equally; yet on the King's demise, his eldest son shall succeed to those lands alone. Co. Litt. 15.

A custom contrary to the public good, or injurious to a multitude, and beneficial only to some particular persons, is repugnant to the law of reason, and consequently void. 2 Danv. 424, 427. Customs ought to be beneficial to all, but may be good where against the interest of a particular person, if for the public good. Dyer 60. A custom is not unreasonable for being injurious to private persons or interests, so as it tends to the general advantage of the people. 3 Salk. 112.

A custom may be good in some cases where a prescription is not: But customs that are good for the substance and matter of them, may yet be bad for the manner; if they are uncertain, or mixed with any other custom that is unreasonable, Sc. 2 Bull. 166: 2 Brownl. 198.

A Custom extends over some place or will: A prescription extends only to particular persons. Hardw. 293. A prescription must always be had by way of que estate. Ibid. See title Prescription.

Custom that every one who passeth over such a bridge, within the lord's manor, and which the lord doth repair, shall pay him one penny, is a good custom; but if it be to pay the lord 12 d. it will be naught, for it is unreasonable. Cuth. Cop. 35: 1 Bull. 203.

A custom that a lord shall have within his manor liberam fildam, or free fold throughout the village; and that no other shall have it but by agreement with him, and if any take it, the lord may abate the same; this hath been held a good custom. 1 Rel. 560. Custom for inhabitants, as such, to have common adjudged void. Gutewood's case. 6 Co. 60. A custom, that tenants of a manor shall grind all the corn they spend in their own houses, in the lord's mill, Sc. is good: But a custom that every inhabitant of a house held of the lord, shall grind the corn that he spends, or shall sell, at his mill, is void. Moor, ca. 1217: Hob. 149. Custom to have a common bakehouse in a manor or parish, for all the tenants or inhabitants, is a good custom. 2 Bull. 158.

Custom is and must always be alleged to be in many persons; and so it may be claimed by copyholders, or the inhabitants of a place, and when it is claimed, it must be as within such a county, hundred, city, borough, manor, parish, hamlet, Sc. Co. Lit. 110, 113: 4 Rep. 31. A good custom or prescription hath the force of a grant; as where one and his ancestors have had a rent time out of mind, and used to distrain, Sc. But a custom that begins by extortion of lords of manors, is judged wanting a lawful commencement, and therefore void: and where custom is amongst many, and they are all dead but one, the custom is gone. Flowd. 322: Dyer 199.

Customs for an eldest daughter to inherit, or a youngest son, may be good: For these, though contrary to a particular rule of law, may have a reasonable beginning. Nelf. Abr. 579. And by custom a woman may be endowed of a moiety of the husband's lands, Sc. Also by custom, infants may bind themselves apprentices, Sc. 2 Danv. Abr. 438.

Regularly a man cannot alledge a custom against a statute, because that is the highest matter of record in law: But a custom may be alleged against a negative statute, which is made in affirmation of the Common law, 1 Inst. 115. Acts of parliament do not always take away the force of customs. 2 Danv. Abr. 436. A custom is to be positively alleged, by usage in fact. Lutw. 1319.

General customs which are used throughout England, and are the Common law, are to be determined by the judges: But particular customs, such as are used in some certain town, borough, city, Sc. shall be determined by a jury. Doct. & Stud. c. 7, 10: 1 Inst. 110. Consuetudo pro lege servatur, Sc. Smith Bracton, lib. 3. c. 3. And custom is said to be altered. But the judges of the court of B. R. for C. B. can over rule a custom though it be one of the customs of London, if it be against natural reason, Sc. 1 Mod. 212.

The law takes particular notice of the custom of Gavelkind and Borough English; (Co. Litt. 175;) and there is no occasion to prove that such customs actually exist, but only that the lands in question are subject thereto. All other private customs must be particularly pleaded; (Lit. § 265;) and as well the existence of the custom must be shewn, as that the thing in dispute is within the custom alleged. The trial in both cases is by a jury of 12 men, and not by the judges; except the same particular custom has been before tried, determined and recorded in the same court. Doct. & Stud. 1, 10: 1 Comm. 76.

As to the manner of laying a custom, and the difference between alleging a thing by way of custom, or by way of prescription, See 6 Co. 60: Hob. 113: Cro. Eliz. 441: Poph. 201: Style 479: 1 Lev. 176: 1 Vent. 386: 3 Lev. 160: Cuth. 192. See further title Prescription, and as to particular customs relative to Inheritance, Dower, Sc. See titles Copyhold; Gavelkind, Sc.

THE CUSTOMS OF LONDON, differ from all others in point of trial, for if the existence of the custom be brought in question, it shall not be tried by a jury, but by certificate of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, by the mouth of the Recorder. Cro. Car. 516.—Unless it be such a custom as the Corporation itself is interested in, as a right of taking toll, Sc. for then the law permits them not to certify in their own behalf. Hob. 85.—And when a custom has once been certified by the Recorder, the judges will take notice of it, and will not suffer it to be certified a second time. Dougl. 365.—As to the form in which the recorder shall certify a custom, See 1 Burr. 248.

These Customs of London relate to divers particulars, with regard to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans, Sc. As to the custom relative to the distribution of a free-man's estate, and which now in consequence of Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 18. § 17, extends only to cases of intestacy, or express agreements made in consideration of marriage, See title Executor, V. 9.—As to the custom of Foreign Attachment, See title Attachment Foreign.—As to the custom of a feme covert being a sole trader, See titles Baron & Feme; Bankrupt.—And further in more particular detail, as to the general and local customs of London, See this Dict. under title London.

It is said, 1 Ro. Rep. 106, that the courts at Westminster of course take notice of the customs of London, but not of any other place.—But this is only where they have been certified; See ante title Custom.

The Customs of London are confirmed by act of parliament. 8 Rep. 126: Cro. Car. 347.

THE CUSTOM OF MERCHANTS, Lex Mercatoria.] A particular system of customs used only among one set of the King's subjects; which however different from the rules of the Common law, is yet ingrafted into it, and made part of it; being allowed for the benefit of Trade, to be of the utmost validity in all commercial transactions; for it is a maxim in law that cuilibet in arc sua credendum est. 1 Comm. 75.

It seems that this Custom of Merchants, is only so far considered as law, that it affords the rule of construction in cases of contracts, agreements, Sc. and other transactions in Trade and Commerce. Mr. Christian in his note on the above passage of the Commentaries, truly remarks, that the lex mercatoria like the lex & consuetudo parliamenti, describes only a great division of the laws of England. The laws relating to bills of exchange, insurance, and all mercantile contracts are as much the general law of the land, as the laws relating to marriage or murder.—And the opinion of Mr. Justice Egler is, that the Custom of Merchants is the general law of the kingdom, and therefore ought not to be left to a jury after it has been settled by judicial determinations. 2 Burr. 1226.

CUSTOMS ON MERCHANDISE. These are enumerated, (1 Comm. 313.) among the perpetual taxes; and are there explained to be the Duties, Toll, Tribute or Tariff payable upon merchandize exported and imported.

The considerations, says the Commentator, upon which this revenue, or the more antient part of it which arose only from exports, was invested in the King, were said to be two.—1. Because he gave the subject leave to depart the kingdom, and to carry his goods along with him.—2. Because the King was bound of common right to maintain and keep up the ports and havens, and to protect the merchants from pirates. Dyer 165.—Some have imagined they were called with us customs, because they were the inheritance of the King, by immemorial usage, and the common law, and not granted him by any Stat. Dy. 43. pl. 24.—But Sir Edward Coke, 2 Inst. 58, 9, hath clearly shewn that the King's first claim to them was, by grant of parliament. 3 E. 1. And indeed this is in express words confessed by Stat. 25 E. 1. c. 7; wherein the King promises to take no customs from merchants without the common assent of the realm “saving, to us and our heirs, the customs on wool, skins and leather formerly granted to us by the commonalty aforesaid.” These were formerly called the hereditary Customs of the Crown, and were due on the exportation only of the said three commodities, and of none other: which were still the staple commodities of the kingdom, because they were obliged to be brought to those ports where the King's staple was established, in order to be there first rated and then exported. Danv. 9. They were denominated in the barbarous Latin of our antient records, custuma; not consuetudines, which is the language of our law, whenever it means merely usages. The duties on wool, sheep-skins, or wool-fells, and leather, exported, were called custuma antiqua sive magna; and were payable by every merchant, as well native as stranger; with this difference, that merchant-strangers paid an additional toll, viz. half as much again as was paid by natives. The custuma parva et nova were an impost of 3d. in the pound, due from merchant strangers only, for all commodities as well imported as exported; which was usually called the aliens' duty, and was granted in 31 Edw. 1: 4 Inst. 29. But these antient hereditary customs, especially those on wool and wool-fells, came to be of little account, when the nation became sensible of the advantages of a home manufacture, and prohibited the exportation of wool by St. 11 Ed. III. c. 1.

There is also another very antient hereditary duty belonging to the crown, called the prisa or butlerage of wines: which is considerably older than the customs, being taken notice of in the great roll of the Exchequer, 8 Ric. 1. still extant. Madox. Hist. Exch. 526, 532. Prisa was a right of taking two tons of wine from every ship (English or Foreign) importing into England twenty tons or more; one before, and one behind, the mast: which by charter of Edw. 1, was exchanged into a duty of 2s. for every ton imported by merchant strangers, and called butlerage, because paid to the King's butler. Danv. 8: 2 Bulst. 234: Stat. Est. 16 Edw. 2: Com. Journ. 27, 4, 1689.

Other Customs payable upon exports and imports were distinguished into subsidies, tonnage, poundage and other imposts. Subsidies were such as were imposed by parliament upon any of the staple commodities before mentioned over and above the custuma antiqua et magna: tonnage was a duty upon all wines imported, over and above the prisa and butlerage aforesaid: poundage was a duty imposed ad valorem, at the rate of 12d. in the pound on all other merchandize whatsoever, and the other imposts were such as were occasionally laid on by parliament, as circumstances and times required. Danv. 11, 12.

These distinctions are now in a manner forgotten, except by the officers immediately concerned in this department; their produce being in effect all blended together, under the one denomination of The Customs.

By these we understand, at present, a duty or subsidy paid by the merchant, at the quay, upon imported as well as exported commodities, by authority of parliament; unless where, for particular national reasons, certain rewards, bounties or drawbacks, are allowed for particular exports or imports. Those of tonnage and poundage, in particular, were at first granted, as the old statutes (and particularly 1 Eliz. 19,) express it, for the defence of the realm, and the keeping and safeguard of the seas, and for the intercourse of merchandize safely to come into and pass out of the same. They were at first usually granted only for a stated term of years, as, for two years in 5 Ric. II. Danv. 12. but in Henry the Sixth's time, they were granted him for life by a statute in the thirty-first year of his reign; and again to Edward IV. for the term of his life also: since which time they were regularly granted to all his successors for life, sometimes at the first, sometimes at other subsequent parliaments, till the reign of Charles the First.

Upon the Restoration, this duty was granted to King Charles the Second for life, and so it was to his two immediate successors; and by three several Stat. 9 Ann. c. 6: 1 Geo. 1. c. 12: 3 Geo. 1. c. 7, it was made perpetual and mortgaged for the debt of the Public. The customs thus imposed by parliament were, till the Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, contained in two books of rates, set forth by parliamentary authority; Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 4: 11 Geo. 1. c. 7. Aliens used to pay a larger proportion than natural subjects, generally called the aliens' duty; now repealed by Stat. 24 Geo. III. sess. 2. c. 16. except as to scavage duties granted to the city of London.

By Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, called the Consolidation act, all the former statutes imposing duties of customs and excise, were repealed with regard to the quantum of the duty; and the two books of rates above-mentioned were declared to be of no avail for the future; but all the former duties were consolidated, and were ordered to be paid according to a new book of rates annexed to that statute. Before this act was passed it could not be supposed that many persons besides Excise-men and Custom-house-officers could be acquainted with the various duties payable upon the different articles of commerce, which, in many instances, were numerous on the same article, and lay dispersed among many acts of parliament. But now by the excellent improvement, may be found the duty upon the importation or exportation of any article; or what excise duty any commodity is subject to, in an alphabetical table.

Bullion, Wool, and some few other commodities may be imported duty-free. All the articles enumerated in the tables or book of rates pay upon importation or exportation, the sum therein specified, according to their weight, number or measure. And all other goods and merchandize, not being particularly enumerated or described, and permitted to be imported and used in Great Britain, shall pay upon importation 27 l. 10 s. per cent. ad valorem, or for every 100 l. of the value thereof; but subject to a draw-back of 25 l. per cent. upon exportation. Very few commodities pay a duty upon exportation; but where that duty is not specified in the tables, and the exportation is not prohibited, all articles may be exported without payment of duty, provided they are regularly entered and shipped; but on failure thereof, they are subject to a duty of 5 l. 10 s. per cent. ad valorem. And to prevent frauds, in the representation of the value, a very simple and equitable regulation is prescribed by the act, viz. the proprietor shall himself declare the value, and if this should appear not to be a fair and true estimate, the goods may be seized by the proper officer; and four of the commissioners of the customs may direct that the owner shall be paid the price, which he himself fixed upon them with an advance of 10 l. per cent. besides all the duty which he may have paid; and they may then order the goods to be publicly sold, and if they raise any sum beyond what was paid to the owner, and the subsequent expences, one half of the overplus shall be paid to the officer who made the seizure, and the other half to the publick revenue.—This statute (says Mr. Christian in his note on 1 Comm. 316, from whence the above is extracted) is of infinite consequence to the commercial part of the world; it has reduced an important subject from a perfect chaos, to such a plain and simple form, as to induce every friend to his country to wish that similar experiments were made upon other confused and entangled branches of our Statute law.

For further matter relating to, or at least intimately connected with, the above subject, See titles Navigational; Smugglers.

If goods and merchandize are brought by a merchant to a port or haven, and there part thereof sold, but never put on land, they must pay the customs; and discharging them out of the ship into another upon the sale, amounts in law to a putting them upon the land, so that if the custom duties are not paid, the goods will be forfeited. Hill. 24 Eliz. 12 Co. 18.

A very great number of Acts of Parliament have been passed to prevent frauds in this branch of the revenue, as well as in the Excise; and it is more to be wished than hoped, that the measure, pursued respecting the quarant of the duties, by the Consolidation act, could be followed by a general act restraining every fraud, and containing every regulation, with a precise statement of the punishment for each offence. But while the dishonest are ingenious to find out means of evading the most explicit laws, the honest part of the Community must forego the length and intricacy of statutes which ultimately lose their liberty and property.

The following are short extracts of such statutes as seem most material to the present purpose; besides those already mentioned.

By Stat. 14 R. 2. c. 10, no Customier or comptroller of the customs, shall have any ships of his own, or meddle with the freight of ships. And by Stat. 20 H. 6. c. 5, no searcher, surveyor, &c. or their clerks, deputies, or servants, may have any such ships of their own; nor shall use merchandize, keep a wharf, inn or tavern, or be factor, attorney, &c. to a merchant, under the penalty of 40 l.—By Stat. 3 H. 6. c. 3, Customers, collectors, or comptrollers, shall not conceal customs duly entered and paid, on pain to forfeit the treble value of merchandize so customed, and to make fine and ransom to the king. By Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. § 19. If any persons employed about the customs and subsidies take a bribe, or connive at any false entry, they shall forfeit 100 l. and be incapable of any employment under the king; and the person giving the bribe shall forfeit 50 l.—By Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 11 § 24, &c. if an officer of the revenue, shall make any collusive seizure of foreign goods, to the intent the same may escape payment of the duties, he is to forfeit 500 l. and be incapable of serving his Majesty; and the importer and owner shall forfeit treble the value of the goods so collusively seized, &c.—By Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 28. § 7, officers of the customs, &c. are not to trade in brandy, coffee, &c. or any exciseable liquor, on pain of 50 l. and forfeiture of offices.

Officers of the customs may search ships. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. § 4. Having writ of assistance, may search houses, § 4. The penalty of abusing officers, § 6. keepers of wharfs, quays, &c. landing or shipping goods, without the presence of some officer of the customs, shall forfeit 100 l.

By Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 21, Where officers of the Customs are hindered in the execution of their duty, by persons armed to the number of eight, the offenders are to be transported for seven years.

By Stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 18, If any goods are put into any vessel to be carried beyond sea: or be brought from beyond sea, and unshipped to be landed, the duties not being paid, nor agreed-for at the Custom house; the same shall be forfeited, one moiety to the king, the other to the seizer, &c. And by subsequent statutes, foreign goods taken in at sea, by any coasting vessel, &c. shall be forfeited, and treble value.

By Sat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35, Where three persons are assembled and armed with fire arms, &c. to be assisting in the running of goods, they shall be guilty of felony and transported, and 50 l. be paid for apprehending such offenders: also the like reward to any of them for discovering others. All persons two or more in company, found pulling within five miles from the sea-coasts, with any horses, cart, &c. wherein are put above six pounds of tea, or five gallons of brandy, or other foreign goods of 30 l. value, landed without entry, and not having permits, and who shall carry offensive weapons, &c. or assist any of the officers, of the Customs, shall be adjudged runners of goods, and be transported as felons, and all the goods to be seized and forfeited: and suspected persons lurking near the coasts, not giving a good account of themselves, may be sent by a justice to the house of correction for a month; and informers to have 20 s. for every offender so taken.

CUSTOMS.

If any person offers any tea, brandy, &c. to sale, without a permit, the persons to whom offered may seize and carry it to the next warehouse belonging to the Customs or Excise; and the seizure shall have a third part, &c. And watermen, carmen, porters, &c. in whose custody run goods are found, shall forfeit treble value, or be committed for three months.

Ships and vessels from foreign parts, having on board tea, or brandy, rum, &c. in casks under fifty gallons, (except for the use of seamen) found at anchor or hovering near any port, or within two leagues of the shore, and not proceeding in their voyages, unless in cases of unavoidable necessity, all such tea, &c. shall be forfeited.

Persons offering any bribe to officers of the Customs, to connive at the running of goods, to forfeit 50*l.* and obstructing such officers in entering or searching ships, incurs a forfeiture of 100*l.* And if an officer be wounded or beaten on board a ship, the offenders to be transported, &c.

By Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 34. If any persons, to the number of three, or more, armed with offensive weapons, shall be assembled in order to be aiding in the illegal exportation of goods prohibited to be exported, or the running uncultomed goods, or the illegal relanding any goods, or rescuing the same, after seizure, from any officer, or from the place where they shall be lodged, or in the rescuing any person apprehended for any offence made felony by any act relating to the Customs or Excise, or preventing the apprehending any person guilty of any such offence; or in case any persons to the number of three, or more, so armed, shall be so assisting, or, if any person shall have his face blacked, or wear any mask, or other disguise, when passing with such goods, or shall forcibly hinder, obstruct, assault, oppose, or resist any officer of his majesty's revenue, in seizing such goods, or shall maim or dangerously wound any such officer in his attempting to go on board any vessel, or shoot at or dangerously wound any such person when on board and in the execution of his office, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and suffer death. § 1.

On information on oath of any person's being guilty of any of the above offences, the justice may certify the information to one of the Secretaries of State, who is to lay it before his Majesty; whereupon his Majesty may make an order, requiring the offender to surrender himself in forty days after publication thereof in the Gazette; and in default thereof, the order being published twice in the Gazette, and proclaimed in two markets near where the offence was committed, and a copy thereof affixed in some public place there, the offender shall be attainted of felony, and suffer death. § 2. Any person harbouring or aiding any such offender after the time for his surrender expired, knowing him to have been so required to surrender, being prosecuted within a year, shall be transported for seven years. § 3. Offences made felony by this act, may be sued in any county. § 5.

If any officer, &c. in the seizing, &c. such goods, or in the endeavouring to apprehend any such offender, shall be beat, wounded, maimed, or killed, or the goods be rescued, the inhabitants of the rape, lath or hundred, unless the offender be convicted within six months, shall forfeit 100*l.* to the executors of any officer killed; and pay damages to any officer beat, &c. not exceeding 40*l.* and for any goods rescued, not exceeding 200*l.* § 6. A reward of 300*l.* for apprehending any offender; a person wounded in apprehending an offender to have 50*l.* extraordinary, and the executors of a person killed, to have 100*l.* § 10.

By Stat. 13 & 14. Car. 2. c. 11, Ships and vessels outward-bound, are not to take in any goods, till the vessel, &c. is entred with the collectors of the Customs; and before departure, the contents of the lading are to be brought in under the hands of the masters, &c. Also when ships arrive from beyond sea, the masters are to make a true entry upon oath, of the lading, goods, ship, &c. under the penalty of 100*l.* And if any concealed goods are found after clearing, for which the duties have not been paid, the master of the vessel shall be subject to the like penalty.

CUSTOMS AND SERVICES, belonging to the tenure of lands, are such as tenants owe unto their lords; which being withheld from the lord, he may have a writ of customs and services. See titles Consuetudinibus & Servitiis.

CUSTOMARY FREEHOLD See title Copyhold.

CUSTOS BREVIUM, A principal clerk belonging to the court of Common Pleas, whose office is to receive and keep all the writs returnable in that court, and put them upon files, every return by itself; and to receive of the prothonotaries all the records of nisi prius, called the Posseas; for they are first brought in by the clerk of assize of every circuit to the prothonotary, who enters the issue in the causes, to enter the judgment: and four days after the return thereof, the prothonotary enters the verdict and judgment thereupon, into the rolls of the court; whereupon he afterwards delivers them over to the custos brevium who binds them into a bundle. He makes entry likewise of all writs of covenant, and the concord upon every fine; and maketh forth exemplifications, and copies of all writs and records in his office, and of all fines levied.

The finis after they are egrossed, are divided between the custos brevium and the chirographer; the chirographer always keeps the writ of covenant and the note, and the custos brevium the concord and the foot of the fine; upon which foot of the fine the chirographer causeth the proclamations to be indorsed, when they are proclaimed. This officer is made by the king's letters patent: and in the court of King's Bench, there is also a custos brevium & rotularius, who fileth such writs as are in that court filed, and all warrants of attorney, &c. and whose business it is to make out the records of nisi prius, &c. See titles Chirographer; Common Pleas.

CUSTOS PLACITORUM CORONÆ, An officer which seems to be the same with him we now call custos rotulorum. Bratt. lib. 2. c. 5.

CUSTOS ROTULORUM, Keeper of the Rolls or records of the county. The officer who hath the custody of the rolls or records of the sessions of the peace, and also of the commission of the peace itself. He is always a justice of the peace of the quorum in the county where appointed, and usually some person of quality: but he is rather termed an officer or minister, than a judge. Lamb. Eiren lib. 4. cap. 3. p. 373. By Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 1, (altered by Stat. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 1, but restored by 1 W. & M. c. 21.) the Custos rotulorum in every county, is appointed by a writing signed by the King's hand, which shall be a warrant to the

CUSTOS.

Lord Chancellor to put him in commission; and he may execute his office by deputy; and hath power to appoint the clerk of the peace, &c. See title Clerk of the Peace. The Custos rotulorum, two justices of the peace, and the clerk of the peace, are to inroll deeds of bargain and sale of lands of papists, &c. by 3 Geo. 1. cap. 18. See title Papists.

CUSTOS OF THE SPIRITUALTIES, See Guardian.

CUSTOS OF THE TEMPORALTIES, See Guardian.

CUT-PURSE. If any person clam & secretè, and without the knowledge of another, cut his purse or pick his pocket, and steal from thence to the value of 12d. it is felony without benefit of clergy. Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 4. See title Felony.

CUTTS. Flat-bottomed boats, built low and commodiously, used in the channel for transporting of horses. Stow. Annal. p. 412.

CYR

CUTTER OF THE TALLIES, An officer in the Exchequer, to whom it belonged to provide wood for the tallies, and to cut the sum paid upon them, &c. See title Exchequer.

CUVE, Is a French word, in English keever, from whence comes keever, a tub or vat for brewing. Coxvel.

CYCLAS, A long garment close upwards, and open or large below. See Mart. Paris Anno 1236.

CYNEBOTE. This words signifies the same with Conegild. Blount.

CYRICBRYCE, (Sax.) Irruptio in ecclesiam. Leg. Eccl. Canoni Regis. See title Sacrilege.

DA, Fr.] A word affirmative for yes. Law. French Dictionary.

DAG, A gun; un dagg, a small gun, or hand-gun. See Haque.

DAGENHAM-BREACH, A duty is granted on coals imported into London to repair the walls, and banks thereof; to be collected and disposed by trustees, &c. Stats. 12 Ann. St. 2. c. 17: 7 Geo. 1. c. 20. Sec. 32.

DAGUS or DAIS, The chief or upper table in a monastery; from a cloth called dais, with which the tables of kings were covered.

DAKIR, See Dicker.

DALMATICA, A garment with large open sleeves, at first worn only by bishops, though since made a distinction of degrees; so called, because it came originally from Dalmatia.

DALUS, DAILUS, DAILIA, A certain measure of land.—Et totam Dailiam marisci tam de rossa quam de prato, &c. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 211. In some places it is taken for a ditch or vale, whence comes dale. The dali grati have been esteemed such narrow slips of pasture, as are left between the ploughed furrows in arable land: which in some parts of England are called doles: the present Welsh use this word for low meadow by the river side. And this seems to be the original name and nature of Deal in Kent, where Cæsar landed, and fought the Britons: Cæsar ad Dole bellum pugnavit.—Cowel.

DAMAGES.

DAMNA.] This term signifies generally any hurt or hindrance that a man receives in his estate: but particularly, a part of what the jurors are to enquire of and bring in, when an action passeth for the plaintiff: for after verdict given of the principal cause, the jury are asked touching costs and damages, which comprehend a recompence for what the plaintiff hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant. Co. Lit. 257. This word damage is taken in law, in two several significations, the one properly and generally, the other relatively: properly, as it is in cases wherein damages are founded upon the statutes where costs are included within the word damages, and taken as aamages.

But when the plaintiff declares for the wrong done to him, to the damage of such a sum, this is to be taken relatively for the wrong which passed before the writ brought, and is assessed by reason of the foregoing trespass, and cannot extend to costs of suit, which are future, and of another nature. 10 Rep. 116, 117. See title Costs.

recoverable, because none were demanded by the count or writ: Whereas in actions personal, the plaintiff counts ad dampnum for the injury; and if he recovers no damages, he hath no costs. 10 Rep. 111, 117. In a personal action, the plaintiff shall recover damages only for the tort done before the action brought; and therein he counts for his damages: In a real action, he recovers his damages pending the writ; and therefore never counts for his damages. 10 Rep. 117. By the Stat. of Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 1, damages are given in real actions, assises of novel disseisin, mort d'ancestor, &c. and shall be recovered against the alienage of a disseisor, as well as against the disseisor himself; and the demandant shall have of the tenant likewise costs of suit; but not expences for trouble and loss of time. 2 Inst. 288. See further the said Stat. 6 Ed. 1. c. 1: Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 10: 2 Inst. 284, 286: 2 Danv. Abr. 448.

No damages could be recovered at the Common law, but against the wrong-doer, and by him to whom the wrong was done. 2 Inst. 284. Damages shall be recovered in writ of admeasurement of dower; but not in a writ of admeasurement of pasture. 2 Danv. 457. In writ of partition, by one co-parcener against another, it is said no damages shall be had. In a formedon, no damages shall be recovered: so in a nuper obit, writ of account, writ of execution, &c. Ibid. 455, 456. Damages and costs are due in a writ of annuity; and if the jury find for the plaintiff, and do not assess damages, it will be error; though he may after verdict release the damages, and take judgment for the annuity. 11 Rep. 56: Dyer 320, 369.

In battery, imprisonment, and taking of goods, against three persons; one commits the battery, another the imprisonment, the third takes the goods, all at one time, all are guilty of the whole, and to be charged in damages. 3 Lev. 324. See 10 Rep. 66, 69.

II. In real actions, damages are assessed by writ of inquiry: When the jury find the issue for the plaintiff, they are to assess the damages. And in actions upon the case, &c. where damages are uncertain, it is left to the jury to inquire of them: In debt, which appears certain to the court what it is, the damages assessed by the jury are small, in fact only nominal, as one shilling; and the master in B. R. taxeth the costs; which are added thereto, and called damages. 1 Lill. 390. When judgment is given by default, in action of debt, the court is to assess the damages, and not the jury; So if judgment by nil dicit, in action of debt.

Where excessive damages have been given, or there hath been any misdemeanor in executing a writ of inquiry; the court hath sometimes relieved the defendant by a new writ of inquiry. 2 Danv. 464. And where damages are excessive, on motion, the defendant may have a new trial. Style 465: 1 Nelf. lib. 537. In trespass against two, one comes and pleads Not guilty, and it is found against him; and afterwards another comes and pleads the like, and is found Guilty by another inquest; in in this case, the first jury shall assess all the damages for the trespass. New Nat. Br. 236. Trespass against divers defendants, they plead Not guilty severally, and the jury finds them all Guilty: The jury must assess the damages jointly, for it is but one entire trespass, and made joint by the declaration. 11 Rep. 5.

If action is brought for two several causes of action, one of which is not actionable, if intire damages are given, the verdict is void: Contra if the damages are severed. And where damages are intirely assessed, and they ought not to be given for some part; no judgment can be given on the verdict. 10 Rep. 130. Where damages are awarded for delay of execution, and being kept out of the money, they are usually assessed by allowing the party what lawful interest he might have. 1 Salk. 208.

For money lent, interest shall be given from the time the money was payable, to the time of liquidating the debt, by the court's giving judgment. 2 Burr. 1081, 6.—So on a bill of exchange, it is usual to calculate the interest up to the time when judgment may be entered up. And it is now settled as a general rule, that where a new action may be brought, and a new satisfaction obtained on that, for duties or demands arisen since the commencement of the depending suit, these shall not be included in the judgment on the former action. But where the interest is an accessory to the principal, and the plaintiff cannot bring a new action for interest grown due between the commencement of the action and judgment it shall be included. Id. 1086, 7.—As to interest from the time of the original judgment to the affirmance, in case of a writ of error. See Doug. 752 in n: 2 Term Rep. 57, 59, 78, and the Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 10.—A jury may, and now frequently do, give interest on book-debts in the name of damages. See Doug. 676.

Where the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages, unless the jury finds more than 40s. See title Costs.

In action upon the case the jury may find less damages than the plaintiff lays in his declaration; but ought not to find more, though costs may be increased beyond the sum mentioned in the declaration for damages: The plaintiff may release part of the damages, upon entering up his judgment. 10 Rep. 115. If he does not, but takes judgment for damages (exclusive of costs) to a larger amount, than laid in the declaration, it is error, and not within any of the statutes of amendment or jeofails, Sandiford v. Been. MSS. In debt against a sheriff or gaoler for an escape, the jury cannot give a less sum than the creditor would have recovered against the prisoner, viz. the sum indorsed on the writ and the legal fees of execution. 2 Term Rep. 126.

In actions upon any bond, &c. for non-performance of covenants, the jury shall assess damages for those the plaintiff proves broken; and the plaintiff may assign as many breaches as he thinks fit. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. See titles Bond; Covenants. In debt for a penalty in articles the jury ought to assess damages on the breach assigned, under this statute, and shall not find the debt. 2 Wils. 377.

Damages are not to be given for that which is not contained in the plaintiff's declaration; and only for what is materially alleged, 1 Lill. 381.

When damages double or treble are given in an action newly created by statute; if no damages were formerly recoverable, there the demandant or plaintiff shall recover those damages only, and shall not have costs, being a new creation in recompence where there was none before: As upon Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12, for driving of distresses out of the hundred, &c. whereby damages are given, the plaintiff shall recover no costs, only his damages, because this action is newly given. But in an action upon the Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9, of forcible entry, which giveth treble damages, the plaintiff shall recover his damages and his costs to the treble amount, by reason he was entitled to single damages before by the Common law; and the statute, as part of the damages, increases the costs to treble; and when a statute increases damages, costs shall likewise be increased. 2 Inst. 289: 10 Rep. 116.

Double, treble damages, &c. are allowed, in several cases, by a very great variety of statutes; as, for not setting forth tithes; distresses wrongfully taken; rescous, though if it be not found by the jury, that the plaintiff hath sustained some damage, in cases where treble damages, &c. are inflicted by law, no damages can be awarded. 2 Danv. Abr. 449.

How damages given to a person sued for an act done in the execution of his office, are to be assessed and recovered, See Valentine and Fawcett, Harb. v. 138, 139.

Plaintiff may take judgment de melioribus damnis where several damages are given, or enter a remittitur. Sabin v. Long, 1 Wils. par. 1. fo. 30.

The court in their discretion may increase the damages in mayhem. Brown v. Seymour, Wils. par. 1. fo. 5. and vide 3 Salk. 115: 2 Inst. 200: 2 Danv. 447, 452.

In what cases double, treble, and quadruple damages are given, see the several statutes, and further as to Damages in general, Com. Dig. in title Damages.

DAMAGE-CLEER, damna clericorum.] Was a fee assessed of the tenth part in the Common Pleas, and the twentieth part in the King's Bench and Exchequer, out of all damages exceeding five marks, recovered in those courts, in actions upon the case, covenant, trespass, battery, &c. wherein the damages were uncertain; which the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the probonotary, or the chief officer of the court wherein recovered, before he could have execution for the damages: this was originally a gratuity given to the probonotaries and their clerks, for drawing special writs and pleadings; but it is taken away by statute, and if any officer in the King's courts, take any money in the name of damage cleer, or any thing in lieu thereof, he shall forfeit treble the value. Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 6.

DAMAGE-FEASANT, or faisant.] Is when a stranger's beasts are found in another person's ground without his leave or licence, (and without the fault of the possessor of the close, which may happen from his not repairing his fences,) and there doing damage, by feeding, or otherwise, to the grass, corn, woods, &c. In which case, the tenant whom they damage, may distrain and impound them, as well by night as in the day, lest the beasts escape before taken; which may not be done for rent, services, &c. only in the day-time. Stat. 51 H. 3. stat. 4: 1 Inst. 142. If a man take my cattle, and put them into the land of another, the tenant of the land may take these cattle damage-feasant, though I who am the owner, was not privy to the cattle's being there damage-feasant; and he may keep them against me till satisfaction of the damages. 2 Danv. Abr. 364.

But

DAMAGE.

But if one comes to distrain damage-feasant, and to seize the cattle, and the owner drives them out before they are taken, he cannot distrain them damage-feasant, but is put to his action of trespass; for the cattle ought to be actually upon the land damage-feasant, at the time of the distress. 1 Hyl. 161: 9 Rep. 22. He that hath but the possession of, and no title to the land, may justify taking a distress damage-feasant. Plowd. 431. If a man puts cattle to pasture at so much a week with another, who after gives notice that he will not have them there any longer; in this case the owner of the ground may distrain them damage-feasant, though the cattle be in lawfully at first: so where a lessee holds after his estate is ended. 43 Ed. 3: Keilw. 69. But the owner of the cattle should have proper notice and reasonable time allowed for taking away his cattle.

Beasts belonging to the plough, or beasts of husbandry, sheep, horses joined to a cart, and it is said a horse with a rider on it, may be distrained damage-feasant, though not for rent. 1 Sid. 422, 440. But the owner may tender amends, before the cattle are impounded; and then the detainer is unlawful: also if when impounded the pound door is open, the owner may take them out. 5 Rep. 76.

A greyhound may be taken damage-feasant, running after conies in a warren: so a man may take a ferret that another hath brought into his warren, and taken conies with. If a person bring nets and gins through my warren, I cannot take them out of his hands. 2 Danv. 633. But if men are rowing up my water, and endeavouring with nets to catch fish in my several piscary, I may take their oars and nets, and detain them as damage-feasant, to stop their further fishing; though I cannot cut their nets. Co. Car. 228. See titles Distress; Trespass.

DAM, A boundary, or confinement; as to dam up, or dam out: infra damnum suum, within the bounds or limits of his own property or jurisdiction. Bract. lib. 2. c. 37.

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA. If one man keeps a school in such a place, another may do so likewise in the same place, though he draw away the scholars from the other school; and this is damnum absque injuria, a loss without an injury; but he must not do any thing to disturb the other school. 3 Salk. 10.

DAN. Anciently the better sort of men in this kingdom had the title of Dan; as the Spaniards Don, from the Lat. Dominus.

DANEGELT, or DANE GELD, danegildam.] Is compounded of the words dane and gelt, money or tribute, and was a tax of 1 s. and after of 2 s. upon every hide of land through the realm, laid upon our ancestors the Saxons by the Danes, when they lorded it here. Camd. Brit. 83, 112. According to some accounts, this tax was levied for clearing the seas of Danish pirates; which heretofore greatly annoyed our coasts; but King Ethelred being much distressed by the continual invasions of the Danes, to procure peace, was compelled to charge his people with very heavy payments called danegelt, which he paid to the Danes at several times. Hoveden par. pess. Anal. 344: Ingulp. 510: Selden's Mare Claus. 150. This danegelt was released by Edward the Confessor; but levied again by William the First and Second: then it was released again by King Henry the First, and finally by King Stephen.

DANGERIA, A payment in money made by forest tenants, that they might have liberty to plough and sow in time of parnage or malt-feeding. Manv. For. Larus.

DAPIFER, a dapus ferendo.] Was at first a domestick officer, like unto our Steward of the Household; or rather Clerk of the Kitchen: but by degrees it was used for any fiduciary servant, especially the chief steward or head bailiff of an honour or manor. There is mention made in our ancient records of dapifer regis; which is taken for Steward of the King's Household. Cowel.

DARDUS, i.e. A dart: In Wales an oak is called a dar.

DARE AD REMANENTIAM, To give away in fee, or for ever. Glanv. lib. 7. cap. 1. This seems to be only of a remainder.

DARREIN, Is a corruption from the Fr. dernier, viz. ultimus, the last; in which sense we use it: as darrein continuance, &c.

DARREIN PRESENTMENT, Last Presentation.] See title Advowson III. An assise of Darrein Presentment lies when a man, or his ancestors, under whom he claims, having presented a clerk to a benefice, who is instituted; afterwards upon the next avoidance a stranger presents a clerk, and thereby disturbs him that is real patron; in which case the patron shall have this writ, (2 N. R. 31.) directed to the sheriff to summon an assise or jury, to inquire who was the last patron that presented to the church now vacant, of which the plaintiff complains that he is deposed by the defendant: and, according as the assise determines that question, a writ shall issue to the Bishop; to institute the clerk of that patron, in whose favour the determination is made, and also to give damages, in pursuance of Stat. West. 2. (13 E. 2.) c. 5. This question, it is to be observed, was, before the Stat. 7 Ann. c. 13, entirely conclusive, as between the patron or his heirs and a stranger: for, till then, the full possession of the advowson was in him who presented last, and his heirs; unless, since that presentation, the clerk had been evicted within six months, or the rightful patron had recovered the advowson in a writ of right; which is a title superior to all others. But that statute having given a right to any person to bring a quare impedit, and to recover (if his title be good) notwithstanding the last presentation by whomsoever made; assises of darrein presentment, now not being in any-wise conclusive, have been totally disused; as indeed they began to be before; a quare impedit being a more general, and therefore a more usual, action. For the assise of darrein presentment lies only where a man has an advowson by descent from his ancestors; but the writ of quare impedit is equally remedial, whether a man claims title by descent or by purchase. 2 Hyl. 355.

DATE, or a DATE. Is the description of the time, viz. the day, month, year of our Lord, year of the reign, &c. in which the deed was made. 1 Hyl. 6. But the ancient deeds had no dates, only of the month and the year; to signify that they were not made in haste, or in the space of a day; but upon longer and more mature deliberation. Bovat. If in the date of a deed, the year of our Lord is right, though the year of the King's reign be mistaken, it shall not hurt it. Co. Jac. 261. A deed was dated 30th March 1701, without anno Domini and anno Regni; and it was adjudged that both the year of the Lord and of the King were implicitly in the deed. 2 Salk. 658. A deed is good, though it hath no date of the day or place, or if the date be mistaken, or though it hath an impossible date, as the 30th of February, &c. But he that doth plead such a deed, without any date, or with an impossible date, must set forth the time when it was delivered. 2 Rep. 5: 1 Inst. 46. If no date of a deed be set forth, it shall be intended that it had none; and in such case it is good from the delivery; for every deed or writing hath a date in law, and that is the day in which it is delivered: and a deed is no deed till the delivery, and that is the date of it. Mod. Ca. 244: 1 Nelf. Abr. 525.

An impossible date of a bond, &c. is no date at all; but the plaintiff must declare on the bond as made at a certain time: and if the express date be insensible, the real date is the delivery. 2 Salk. 463. Where there is none, or an impossible date, the plaintiff may count of any date. 1 Lill. Abr. 393. If there be a mistaken date, or a date be impossible, &c. the plaintiff may surmise a legal date in the declaration, whereupon the defendant is to answer to the deed, and not to the date. Telw. 194. If a deed bears date at a place out of the realm, it may be averred that the place mentioned in the deed is in some county in England; and here the place is not traversable; without this the deed cannot be tried. 1 Inst. 261. A deed may be dated at one time, and sealed and delivered at another: but every deed shall be intended to be delivered on the same day it bears date, unless the contrary is proved. 2 Inst. 674. Though there can be no delivery of a deed before the day of the date; yet after, there may. Telw. 138. So that a deed may be dated back on a time past, but not at a day to come. See title Deed.

DATIVE, or DATIF, dativus] Signifies that which may be given or disposed of at will and pleasure. Stat. 9 R. 2. c. 4.

DAVATA TERRÆ, DAWACH, A portion of land so called in Scotland. Skene.

DAY, dies.] A certain space of time, containing twenty-four hours; and if a fact be done in the night, you must state it in law proceedings, in the night of the same day. The natural day consists of twenty-four hours, and contains the solar day and the night: and the artificial day begins from the rising of the sun, and ends when it sets. See 1 Inst. 135. Day, in legal understanding, is the day of appearance of the parties, or continuance of the suit where a day is given, &c. And there is a day of appearance in court by the writ, and by the roll; by writ, when the sheriff returns the writ; by roll, when he hath a day by the roll, and the sheriff returns not the writ, there the defendant, to save his freehold, and prevent loss of issues, imprisonment, &c. may appear by the day he hath by the roll. Co. Lit. 135.

In real actions there are dies communes, common days; and in all summonses there must be fifteen days after the summons before the appearance; and before the statute of articuli super chartas, in all summons and attachment in plea of land, there should be contained fifteen days. Co. Lit. 134.

As to offences in B. R. if the offence be committed in another county than where the court sits, and the indictment be removed by certiorari, there must be fifteen days between every process and the return thereof; but if it be committed in the same county where the bench sits, they may sit de die in diem; but this they will very rarely do. 1341. There is a day called dies specialis, as in an assize in the King's Bench or Common Pleas, the attachment need not be fifteen days before the appearance; otherwise it is before justices assigned; but generally in assizes the judges may give a special day at their pleasure, and are not bound to the common days; and these days they may give as well out of term as within.

There is also a day of grace, dies gratia; and generally this is granted by the court at the prayer of the demandant or plaintiff, in whose delay it is; but it is never granted where the King is party, by aid prius of the tenant or defendant; nor where any lord of parliament, or peer of the realm is tenant or defendant.

And sometimes the day that is quarto die post, is called dies gratia, for the very day of return is the day in law, and to that day the judgment hath relation, but no default shall be recorded till the fourth day be past; unless it be in a writ of right, where the law alloweth no day but the day of the return. Co. Lit. 135.—See titles Judgment; Term.

There are several return days in the terms; and if either of them happen upon a Sunday, the day following is taken instead of it; for Sunday is dies non judicant; and so is Ascension day in Easter term, St. John Baptist in Trinity term, All Saints and All Souls in Michaelmas term, and the Purification of the Virgin Mary in Hilary term. 2 Inst. 264.—See title Term.

Days in Bank are days set down by statute, or order of the court, when writs shall be returned, or when the party shall appear upon the writ served. See Stat. 51 H. 3. Stat. 2. c. 3; 32 Hen. 8. cap. 21; 16 Car. 1. c. 6; and 24 Geo. 2. c. 48. And by the statute de anno bissextili, 21 H. 3, the day increasing in the leap-year, and the day next going before are to be accounted but one day.

It is commonly said that the day of Nisi prius, and the day in the Bank, is all one day; but this is to be understood as to pleading, not to other purposes. 1 Inst. 135. But after issue found for the plaintiff at the Nisi prius, if a day be given in Bank, and the defendant makes default, judgment shall be given against him. 2 Daro. Ab. 477. and vide Id. 476.

To be dismissed without day, is to be finally dismissed the court: and when the justices before whom causes were depending, do not come on the day to which they were continued, whether such absence be occasioned by death, or otherwise, they are said to be put without day; but may be revived, or recontinued by re-summmons, re-attachment, &c. See Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 7. Also by the Common law, all proceedings upon any indictment, &c. whereon no judgment had been given, were determined by the demise of the King, and nothing remained but the indictment, original writ, &c. which were put without day, till re-continued by re-attachment to bring in the defendants to plead de novo: though this is remedied by Stats. 4 & 5 W. 3. c. 18; 1 An. c. 8; by which such process, &c. are to continue in the same force after the King's demise, as they would have done if he had lived. See titles Discontinuance, Process, King.

In action of trespass, if the day laid in the declaration be either before or after the actual day on which the trespass is committed, it is not material, if a trespass be proved. Co. Lit. 28; a. But N. B. The day laid must be before before the first day of that term of which the declaration is intituled, or if the trespass be committed within the term, there must be a special memorandum of some particular day, (if by bill) or of some general return day, (if in C. P. or B. R. by original writ) subsequent to the day whereon the trespass was committed: and so as to other actions, where the cause of action arises within the term. See title Declaration, Pleading.

DAY-LIGHT, See titles Burglary, Robbery.

DAY-RULE, See Day writ.

DAYWERE or LAND. Diurnal, Diuturna.] As much arable land as could be ploughed up in one day's work; or one journey, as the farmers still call it.

DAY-WRIT, or DAY-RULE; a rule or order of court, permitting a prisoner in custody in the King's Bench prison, &c. to go without the bounds of his prison for one day. By a rule of the Court of K. B. Easter 30 Geo. 3, a prisoner shall not have day rules above three days in each term; and to return to prison before nine in the Evening. The King may grant writs of warrantia diei to any person, which shall save his default for one day, be it in plea of land or other action, and be the cause true, or not; and this by his prerogative, quod nota. Br. Prerogative, pl. 142. cites F. N. B. 7.

It is against law to grant liberty to prisoners in execution, by other writs than day-writs, (or rules) Chan. Rep. 67.

No prisoner committed by B. R. ought to have the benefit of the day-rule of going abroad in term-time; for their imprisonment is their punishment for their contempt, or misbehaviour. 2 Shov. 88. pl. 80.

One in execution had a habeas corpus from the Lord Keeper (which they call a day-writ) returnable three or four days after its teste. By virtue of this writ, he went to the wine-licence office, but never to any inn of court or Chancery, or to the Lord Keeper's, and this in the vacation. Per Pemberton Ch. J. This is a habeas out of Chancery, which they may send at any time, and by virtue of the King's writ, the party was brought out of the prison house, and that is justifiable. Then all the day, so long as there was a keeper with him, he was in custody still, and returning to prison at night, it is well enough, and no escape; though Chancery may examine the contempt, that is nothing to B. R. 2 Shov. 298. pl. 229.

A prisoner taken on an escape-warrant before the sitting of the court the same day, shall be discharged, if his name was entered with the clerk the night before; but not if it was entered the same morning only. 8 Mod. 80.

DAYERIA, Dairy, from day, dies, Sax. dag.] Was at first the daily yield of milch cows, or profit made of them. In Lorrain and Champaign they use the word dayer, for the meeting of the day-labouring people to give an account of their daily work, and receive the wages of it. A dairy in the North is called milknefs; as the dairy-maid is in all parts a milk-maid: she is termed androcobia by Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 87. and See Paroch. Antiq. 548.

DAYS-MAN, In the North of England, an arbitrator, or elected judge, is usually termed a dies-man, or days-man: and Dr. Hammond says, that the word day in all idioms signifies judgment.

DEADLY FEUD, Is a profession of an irreconcilable hatred, till a person is revenged even by the death of his enemy. It is mentioned in Stat. 43 El. c. 13. And such enmity and revenge were allowed by the old Saxon laws; for where any man was killed, if a pecuniary satisfaction was not made to the kindred of the slain, it was lawful for them to take up arms against the murderer, and revenge themselves on him: and this is called deadly feud; which it is conjectured was the original of an appeal. Blount.—See Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 13; and this Dict. title Feud, Malicious Mischief, Felony.

DEAD PLEDGE, mortuum vadium.] A pledge of lands or goods. See Mortgage.

DEAF, DUMB, and BLIND. A man who is born deaf, dumb and blind, is looked upon by the law in the same state as an idiot: he being supposed incapable of any understanding; as wanting all those senses which furnish the human mind with ideas. 1 Comm. 304: See F. N. B. 233.—See titles Idiot, Lunatic.

A man who could neither speak nor hear committed felony, and was arraigned and therefore was commanded to prison. Br. Co. ent. pl. 216. cites 26 Edw. 3. See Thel. Dig. 6. lib. 1. c. 7.

One who had made his will, and became ill, and (as it seems) had lost his speech; the same will was delivered in to his hands, and it was said to him, that he should deliver it to the vicar, if it should be his last will, otherwise he should retain it; and he delivered it to the vicar, and this was held a good will. *Thel. It appearing by oath, that the defendant was both senseless and dumb, and therefore could not instruct his counsel to draw his answer; it was ordered that no attachment, or other process of contempt, should be awarded against the defendant for not answering, without special order of the court. Cary's Rep. 132, cites 22 Eliz. Altham v. Smith.

One that is deaf and wholly deprived of his hearing cannot give, and so one that is dumb and cannot speak. Yet (according to the opinion of some) they may consent by signs: but it is generally held, that he that is dumb cannot make a gift, because he cannot consent to it. 1 Inst. 107.

If however, a blind man has understanding, he may deliver a deed sealed by him. Jenk. 222. pl. 75.

DEAFFORESTED, Disafforstatus.] Discharged from being forest; or freed and exempted from the forest laws. 17 Car. 1. c. 16. There is likewise dewarrenata, as well as deafforstatus; which is when a warren is diswarrened, or broke up and laid in common.

DEAN, Decanus; from the Greek Δευα, decem.] An ecclesiastical governor or Dignitary, so called, as he presides over ten Canons or Prebendaries at the least. And we call him a Dean, that is next under the bishop, and chief of the chapter, ordinarily in a cathedral church; the rest of the society being called capitulum, the chapter. As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new, the new erected by King Hen. VIII. so there are two means of creating these Deans: for those of the old foundation, as the Dean of St. Paul's, York, &c. are exalted to their dignity much like bishops; the the King first sending out his commissio d'office to the chapter to choose such Dean, and the chapter then choosing, the King afterwards yielding his royal assent, and the bishop confirming him, and giving his mandate to install him.

Those of the new foundation, whose deaneries were translated from priories and convents, to Dean and Chapter, are donative, and installed by a shorter course, by virtue of the King's letters patent, without either election or confirmation; and are visitable only by the Lord Chancellor, or by special commission from the King; but the letters patent are presented to the bishop for institution, and a mandate for installment goes forth. 1 Inst. 95: Dean 36, 47.

The new Deaneries and chapters to old bishopricks are eight, viz. Canterbury, Norwich, Windsor, Exeter, Lincoln, Worcester and Gloucester. The new Deaneries and chapters to new bishopricks are five, Peterborough, Shefford, Gloucester, Bristol and Oxford. 1 Inst. 95 a. n. 3.

Of the four Welsh Cathedrals, two are without Deans; or rather the dignities of Bishop and Dean unite in the same person, the bishop being deemed quasi-decanus; and having, it is said, both an episcopal throne, and a decanal stall allotted to him in the choir. Of this kind are the Cathedrals of St. David's and Llandaff.—St. Asaph and Bangor, the two other Welsh Cathedrals, have the dignity of Dean distinct from that of Bishop, but the patronage of both deaneries is in the respective bishops, they being neither elective by the Chapter, nor donative in the Crown. 1 Inst. 95 a. n. 4.

In Ireland it seems that the King appoints to deaneries, as to bishopricks by letters patent. Id. ib.

Various kinds of Deans, besides Deans of Chapters, are known to our law; and several divisions seem necessary to distinguish them properly.

Considered in respect of the difference of office, Deans are of six kinds. 1. Dean of Chapter, who are either of cathedral or collegiate churches; though the members of churches of the latter sort may more properly be denominated clergy than chapters. See title Chapter.—2. Dean of Peculiar; who have sometimes both jurisdiction and cure of souls, as the Dean of Battel in Suffex; and sometimes jurisdiction only, as the Dean of the Archdeaconry in London; (See title Archdeacon) and the Deans of Bocking in Essex, and of Croydon in Surry.—3. Rural Deans, who had first jurisdiction over deaneries, as every diocese is divided into archdeaconries and deaneries; but afterwards their power was diminished, and they were only the bishops' substitutes to grant letters of administration, probate of wills, &c. And now their office is wholly extinguished, for the archdeacons and chancellors of bishopricks exercise the authority which Rural Deans had through all the dioceses of England. 1 Nat. Hist. 59 a. n. 507, and see 1 Comm. 383.—4. Deans in the Colleges of our Universities; who are officers appointed to superintend the behaviour of the members, and to enforce discipline.—5. Honorary Deans; as the Dean of the Chapel Royal at St. James's, who is so styled on account of the dignity of the person over whose chapel he presides. As to the chapel of St. George in London, there being Canons as well as a Dean, it is something more than a mere chapel, and except in name, resembles a collegiate church.—6. Deans of Priories; or as they are sometimes called Deans of Bishopricks. Thus the Bishop of Lon- don, is Dean of the Province of Canterbury; and to him as such, the Archbishop sends his mandate for summoning the Bishops of his Province, when a Convocation is to be assembled; which may perhaps account for calling him Dean of the Bishops; what the other parts of his office are, the books do not explain, nor do they mention whether there is a Dean for the Province of York. See Lynd. v. Gibbs: 1 Inst. 95 (a) in n.

Another division of Deans, arising from the nature of their office, is into Deans of Spiritual promotions, and Deans of Lay promotions. Of the former kind are Deans of Peculiars, with cure of souls, Deans of the Royal Chapels, and Deans of Chapters; though as to these last, a contrary opinion formerly prevailed. Perhaps too, Rural Deans might be added to the number. Of the latter kind are Deans of Peculiars, without cure of souls, who therefore may be, and frequently are, persons not in holy orders.

In respect of the manner of appointment, Deans are—1. Elective; as Deans of Chapters of the old foundation; though they are only so (like Bishops) nominally, and in form; the King, being in fact the real patron.—2. Donative, as those Deans of Chapters of the New Foundation, who are appointed by the King's letters patent, and are installed, under his command to the Chapter, without referring to the Bishop either for admission, or for a mandate of installment; if that mode of promoting still prevails in respect to any of the new deaneries. Deans of the Royal Chapels are also donative, the King appointing to them in the same way. So too may Deans of Peculiars, without cure of souls, be called; as the Dean of the Arches, who is appointed by commission from the Archbishop of Canterbury; but this must be understood in a large sense of the word donative, it being most usually restrained to spiritual promotions.—3. Presentative; as some Deans of Peculiars with cure of souls, and the Deans of some chapters of the New Foundation, if not all. Thus the Dean of Battel is presented by the patron to the Bishop of Chichester, and from him receives institution. This Deanery was founded by William the Conqueror. He hath ecclesiastical jurisdiction within the liberty of Battel, and is presentable by the Duke of Montagu, and though instituted and inducted by the Bishop of Chichester, is not subject to his visitation. 1 Nat. Hist. Thus too the Dean of Gloucester is presented by the King to the Bishop, with a mandate to admit him, and to give orders for his installment.—4. By virtue of another office; as the Bishop of London is Dean of the Province of Canterbury; and the Bishop of St. David's, is Dean of his own Chapter.

As to further particulars relative to the manner of coming to the possession of Deaneries, see a long and learned historical account in 1 Inst. 95 (a) a. n. 4; from which it appears that the right to appoint Deans of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and the mode of appointing them, must generally depend, almost wholly, upon charter, usage, or acts of parliament; and if a case should, by bare possibility, arise, where neither of those rules could be had recourse to, foundership seems the only true criterion of patronage.

In respect of the manner of holding, Deans are either absolute, or in commendam. But this applies only to spiritual Deaneries. It is said there are also Dputy Deans. A commendatory Dean may, with the Chapter, choose a bishop.

bishop. And if a Dean be elected bishop, and before consecration doth obtain dispensation to hold his deanery in commendam, such Dean may well confirm, &c. for his old title remains, and therefore confirmations, and other acts done by him, as Dean, are good in law. Latch 237, 250: Palm. Rep. 465.

A Dean and Chapter are the bishop's council, to assist him in the affairs of religion, &c. to consult in deciding difficult controversies, and consent to every grant which the bishop shall make to bind his successors, &c.

A Dean that is solely seized of a distinct possession, hath an absolute fee in him as well as a bishop. 1 Inst. 325. A Deanery is a spiritual promotion, and not a temporal one, though the Dean be appointed by the King; and the Dean and Chapter may be in part secular, and in part regular. Dee 10: Palm. 500. As a deanery is a spiritual dignity, a man cannot be Dean and Prebendary in the same church. Dee 23.

DEATH OF PERSONS. There is a natural death of a man, and a civil death: natural, where nature itself expires, and extinguishes; and civil, is where a man is not actually dead, but is adjudged so by law; as where he enters into religion, &c. By Stat. 19 C. 2. c. 6, If any person for whose life any estate hath been granted, remain beyond sea, or is otherwise absent seven years, and no proof made of his being living, such person shall be accounted naturally dead; though if the party be after proved living at the time of extinction of any person, then the tenant, &c. may re-enter, and recover the profits. And by Stat. 6 An. c. 18, persons in reversion or remainder, after the death of another, upon affidavit that they have cause to believe such other dead, may move the Lord Chancellor to order the person to be produced; and if he be not produced, he shall be taken as dead; and those claiming may enter, &c. See further titles Occupancy, Life Estate.

A man seized in fee of lands, made a lease in reversion to L. D. for ninety-nine years, to commence after the deaths of J. D. and E. D. who had then a lease in possession for the like term, if they or either of them so long lived: the plaintiff positively proved the death of J. D. but as to the death of E. D. the proof was that he had been reputed dead, and nobody had heard of him for fifteen years past; and the defendant not being able to prove that he was alive at any time within seven years, this case was adjudged within the Stat. 19 C. 2. c. 6. Cartmew 246.

In law proceedings, the death of either party, between the verdict and judgment, shall not be error; for a judgment be entered in two terms. 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 3. See titles Amendment, Error.

A Corporation never dies. 1 Wils. 184.

DEBATING SOCIETIES. See this Dict. title's Holidays, Advertisements.

DE BENE ESSE. To take or do any thing de bene esse, is to accept or allow it as well done for the present; but when it comes to be more fully examined and tried, to stand or fall according to the merit of the thing in its own nature. As in Chancery, upon motion to have one of the less principal defendants in a cause examined as a witness, the Court (not then thoroughly examining the justice of it, or not hearing what may be objected on the other side) will often order such a defendant to be examined de bene esse, viz. That his depositions shall be taken, and allowed or suppressed at the hearing of the cause, upon the full debate of the matter, as the Court shall think fit; but in the interim they have a well-being, or conditional allowance. 3 Ch. 68.

Where a complainant's witnesses are aged, or sick, or going beyond sea, whereby the plaintiff thinks he is in danger of losing their testimony, the Court will order them to be examined de bene esse; so as to be valid, if the plaintiff hath not an opportunity of examining them afterwards; as if they die before answer, or do not return, &c. In either of which cases, the depositions may be made use of in the court of Chancery, or at law: but if parties are alive and well, or do return, &c. after answer, these depositions are not to be of force, for the witnesses must be re-examined.

So also at Common law, the judges frequently take bail de bene esse, that is, to be allowed or disallowed upon the exception, or approbation of the plaintiff's attorney; however, in the interim, they are good, or have a conditional allowance. Cowd. Declarations likewise are sometimes delivered de bene esse. See titles Declaration, Practice, Process, &c.

DEBENTURE. A soldier's debenture, (sipendia debita) is in the nature of a bond or bill, to charge the Government to pay the soldier creditor, or his assigns, the sum due upon the auditing the account of his arrears: it was first ordained by an act made during the Usurpation, anno 1649, and is mentioned in the act of oblivion, 12 C. 2. c. 8. They use debentures likewise in the Exchequer; and debentures are given to the King's servants, for the payment of their wages, board-wages, &c. Also there are custom-house debentures, &c.

DEBET ET DETINET, He oweth and detaineth.] An action shall be always in the debet et detinet, when he who makes a bargain or contract, or lends money to another, or he to whom a bond is made, bringeth the action against him who is bounden, or party to the contract and bargain, or unto the lending of the money, &c. See New Nat. Br. 119.—See post title Debt II.

DEBET ET SOLET. If a person sues to recover any right, whereof his ancestor was disseised by the tenant of his ancestor, then he useth the word debet alone in his writ, because his ancestor only was disseised, and the estate discontinued: but if he sue for any thing that is now first of all denied him, then he useth debet et solet, by reason his ancestor bore him, and he himself usually enjoyed the thing sued for, until the present refusal of the tenant. Reg. Orig. 140. The writ of scire facias ad satisfactionem is a writ of right, in the debet et solet, &c. P. N. B. 98.

DEBT.

DEBITUM.] In common parlance is a sum of money due from one person to another. And if an action be brought, and the plaintiff recovers judgment, he may by law take either the person, or his real or personal estate in execution, i. e. the moiety of his real estate, or the whole of the personal, if not more than sufficient for payment of the sum recovered and charges.

DEBT I.

In the legal sense of the word, debt is said to be an action which lieth where a man oweth another a certain sum of money, either by a debt of record, by specialty or by simple contract; as on a judgment, obligation, or bargain for a thing sold, or by contract, &c. and the debtor will not pay the debt at the day agreed; then the creditor shall have action of debt against him for the same. See 2 Comm. 464. If a man contract to pay money for a thing which he hath bought; and the seller takes bond for the money, the contract is discharged, so that he shall not have action of debt upon the contract, but on the bond. New Nat. Br. 268.

- I. In what Cases Action of Debt will lie; and by whom, and against whom it may be brought.
- II. In what Manner it may be brought; as where in the debt and detinet, and where in the detinet only.
- III. How it may be extinguished.

I. THE legal acceptation of debt, is a sum of money due by certain and express agreement: as, by a bond for a determinate sum; a bill, or note; a special bargain; or rent reserved on a lease, where the quantity is fixed and specific, and does not depend upon any subsequent valuation to settle it. The non-payment of these is an injury, for which the proper remedy is by action of debt, (F. N. B. 119.) to compel the performance of the contract, and recover the specific sum due. This is the shortest and surest remedy; particularly where the debt arises upon a specialty, that is, upon a deed or instrument under seal. So also, if I verbally agree to pay a man a certain price for a certain parcel of goods, and fail in the performance, an action of debt lies against me; for this is also a determinate contract: but if I agree for no settled price, I am not liable to an action of debt, but a special action on the case, according to the nature of my contract. And indeed actions of debt are now seldom brought but upon special contracts under seal; wherein the sum due is clearly and precisely expressed; for, in case of such an action upon a simple contract, the plaintiff labours under two difficulties; First, the defendant has here the same advantage, as in an action of detinue, that of waging his law, or purging himself of the debt by oath, if he thinks proper. 4 Rep. 94. Secondly, in an action of debt, the plaintiff must prove the whole debt he claims, or recover nothing at all. For the debt is one single cause of action, fixed and determined; and which therefore, if the proof varies from the claim, cannot be looked upon as the same contract, whereof the performance is sued for.—But in actions of debt, where the contract is proved or admitted, if the defendant can shew that he has discharged any part of it, the plaintiff shall recover the residue. 1 Roll. Rep. 257; Sulk. 664: Comm. 54.

When also the damages can be reduced by the averment to a certainty, debt will lie; as on a covenant to pay so much per load for wood, &c. So if in an action, in which the plaintiff can only recover damages, there be judgment for him, he can afterwards bring debt for those damages. Bull. N. P. (8vo.) 167.—And as to cases in which on actions of debt it is not necessary to prove the exact sum laid in the declaration, See at large Doug.

If one binds himself in a single obligation, or with condition, to pay money at a day; or to deliver corn, or the like, and do not perform it accordingly, the obligee may bring action of debt for it. F. N. B. 120. A man acknowledges by deed; that he hath so much of the money of J. S. due to him in his hands; here debt may be brought: and debt will lie on a talley sealed. F. N. B. 122: 1 H. 6. 55. A. delivers 20*l.* to B. to buy goods, and B. gives a receipt to A. testifying the delivery and receipt of the 20*l.* but doth not promise to deliver the goods, &c. A. may maintain debt upon this receipt. Dyer 20: 2 Eulst. 256. If one binds himself to pay A. B. 10*l.* at one day, and 10*l.* at another, after the first day action of debt lies for 10*l.* being a several duty. 2 Darv. Abr. 501. The nature of the bond, and of the condition, (if there is any) must be carefully attended to, to see if by non-payment of the first sum the bond is forfeited. Vide Co. Lit. 292 b.

Action of debt lies upon a parol contract, and so doth action on the case. 1 Lil. 403. And vide 9 Rep. 87. If goods or money are delivered to a third person for my use, I may have action of debt or account for them. 2 Darv. 404. Where money is delivered to a person, to be re-delivered again, the property is altered, and debt lies: but where a horse, or any goods are thus delivered, there detinue lies, because the property is not altered; and the thing is known, whereas money is not. Owen, 86: 1 Nelf. Abr. 603.

Action of debt lies against the husband, for goods which were delivered or sold to the wife, if they come to the use of the husband. 1 Lil. 400. If one delivers meat, drink, or clothes, to an infant, and he promises to pay for them, action of debt, or on the case, will lie against the infant. Though debt may not be brought on an account stated with an infant: and what is delivered must be averred to be for the necessary use of the infant. 1 Lil. Abr. 401.—See title Infant. An attorney shall have action of debt against his client, for money, which he hath paid to any person for the client, for costs of suit, or unto his counsel, &c.

An heir mediate may be sued in debt as if he were immediate heir, &c. The heir may not bring action of debt for a debt due to his ancestor; though it be by specialty, by which the party is bound to pay it to him and his heirs: the executor shall nevertheless have the action. Dyer 368: F. N. B. 120. Action of debt lies not against executors, upon a simple contract made with the testator. 9 Rep. 87.

Before the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 37, the heirs or executors of a man seised of a rent-service, rent-charge, &c. in fee-simple, or fee-tail, had no remedy for the arrearages incurred in the life-time of the owner of such rents: but by that statute, the executors and administrators of tenants in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life, of any rent, shall have action of debt for all arrearages of rent due in the life of the testator. 1 Hist. 162: 2 Darv. 492.

A ferre sole seised of a rent in fee, &c. which is behind and unpaid, takes husband, and the rent is behind again, and then the wife dieth, by the said Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 37, the husband shall have the arrears due before marriage, and he hath a double remedy for the same. 1 Hist. 162.

But by Stat. 8 An. c. 17, Any person having rent in arrear upon any lease for life or lives, may bring action of debt for such rent, as where rent is due on a lease for years. Action of debt will lie against a lessee, for rent due after the assignment of the lease; for the personal privity of contract remains, notwithstanding the privity of estate is gone. 3 Rep. 22. But after the death of the lessee, it is then a real contract, and runs with the land. Cro. Eliz. 555. When a lease is ended, the duty in respect of the rent remains, and debt lieth by reason of the privity of contract between lessor and lessee. 2 Cro. 227: 1 Nels. Abr. 604. If debt be brought by an executor for arrears of rent ended, it is local still, and must be laid where the land lies. Hob. 37. Action of debt may be had against the lessee in any place; but if it be brought against an assignee, it must be where the land lieth: and upon the privity of contract, it is to be brought against the lessee where the land is. Latch 197, 271: 2 Leon. c. 28.

Debt for rent on a lease against assignee is local. Barker v. Dornier, 1 Show. 191.

In some cases action of debt will lie, although there be no contract betwixt the party that brings the action, and him against whom brought; for there may be a duty created by law, for which action will lie. 2 Saund. 343, 366. Debt lieth against a sheriff, for money levied in execution. 1 Lil. Abr. 403. Action of debt lies against a gaoler for permitting a prisoner committed in execution to escape; because thereupon the law makes the gaoler debtor: but where the party is not in execution, there action on the case only lies for damages suffered by the escape. 1 Saund. 218: 1 Lil. Abr. 402.

A person may have debt upon an arbitrament: also debt lies for money recovered upon a judgment, &c. And upon a recovery in the superior courts at Westminster, the plaintiff must bring the action in Middlesex, the record being there; but a fi. fac. to execute judgment, must be where the original was, and follow it. New Nat. B. 267, 268, &c.

When judgment is had in the King's Bench, and a writ of error brought in the Exchequer chamber, or in Parliament; yet an action of debt will lie on the judgment: in this case, if the plaintiff levies part of his money, by elegit, he may likewise bring debt for the residue. 1 Sid. 184, 236.

Whatever the laws order any one to pay, that becomes instantly a debt, which he hath before-hand contracted to discharge. And this implied agreement it is, that gives the plaintiff a right to institute a second action, founded merely on the general contract, in order to recover such damages or sum of money, as are assessed by the jury, and adjudged by the court to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff in any former action. So that if he hath once obtained a judgment against another for a certain sum, and neglects to take out execution thereupon, he may afterwards bring an action of debt upon this judgment; (1 Rol. Abr. 600, 1;) and shall not be put upon the proof of the original cause of action; but upon showing the judgment once obtained, still in full force, and yet unsatisfied, the law immediately implies, that by the original contract of society the defendant hath contracted a debt, and is bound to pay. This method seems to have been invented, when real actions were more in use than at present, and damages were permitted to be recovered thereon; in order to have the benefit of a writ of capias, to take the defendant's body in execution for those damages; which process was allowable in an action of debt, (in consequence of the Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 17,) but not in an action real. Wherefore, since the disuse of those real actions, actions of debt upon judgment in personal suits have been pretty much discountenanced by the Courts, as being generally vexatious and oppressive, by harrassing the defendant with the costs of two actions instead of one. 3 Comm. 160.

Debt will lie upon the judgment of a Foreign Court, and the plaintiff need not show the ground of the judgment; but it is not to be declared on as a matter of record, for it is here but of the nature of a simple-contract debt: therefore in such case the judgment is sufficient only to establish a demand, and put the defendant to impeach the justice of it, or show the same to have been unduly or irregularly obtained. And as it is but a simple contract, assumpsit will also lie on it.—Walker v. Witter, Doug. 1—6; in which several other cases on the same point are also cited and reported.

If a man recovers debt or damages in London, on action brought there by the custom of the city, which lies not at Common law; when it is become a debt by the judgment, action of debt lies in the courts at Westminster upon this judgment. 2 Danv. 449.

Action of debt will lie for breach of a by-law; or, for amercement in a court-leet, &c. 1 Lil. 400: 5 Rep. 64: Hob. 259. And action of debt is sometimes grounded on an act of parliament; as upon Stat. 2 Ed. 6. c. 13, for not setting out tithes: Stat. 27 El. c. 13, against the hundred for a robbery, &c. Against physicians in London, for practising without licence, by Stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 5.—By assignees of a commission of bankrupt, Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15, &c.—A college shall have action of debt for commons of any student; adjudged, Pasch. 9 Jac. B. R.—And in general, all the cases show that wherever indebitatus assumpsit is maintainable, debt also is. Doug. 6. per Buller J.

For debt to a bishop, or parson, after his death, his executors shall have the action: but of a dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, &c. the successors are intitled to the action of debt. F. N. B. 120. Action of debt lies on a recognisance; so upon a statute-merchant, it being in nature of a bond or obligation: but it is otherwise in case of a statute-staple. 2 Danv. 497.

In bringing this action, it is a general rule, that the party himself, to whom the debt is originally due, whilst he doth live, must bring the action; and after his death, his executors, &c. And the action must be brought against the party himself that doth originally owe the debt, whilst he is living; and after his death, it may be brought against the executor, if he make any; or otherwise against the administrator; and if the Ordinary appoint none, against the Ordinary himself; and if he die possessed of the goods, against his executor, &c. And also against executors of executors in infinitum. Dyer 24, 471: 3 Rep. 9: 2 Brownl. 207.

II. The form of the writ of debt is sometimes in the debet & detinet, and sometimes in the detinet only; that is, the writ states, either that the defendant owes, and unjustly detains the debt or thing in question, or only that he unjustly detains it. It is brought in the debet, as well as detinet, when sued by one of the original contracting parties who personally gave the credit, against the by will to dispose of their lands; and thus making out thereof. Heald, 112.

In debt upon a writ of habeas corpus, for maintaining forth claims, Not guilty, or non est are good answers. 1 Inst. 61. 81 P. Because by the action the defendant is charged with wrong, and if he is not guilty of the tort, he does not buy the writ.

DEBT TO THE KING. Under this word, debitor all things due to the King are comprehended, as all rents, fines, issues, and amercements, and other duties required or levied by the sheriff, a for debt in the larger sense signifies whatever any man owes. 2 Inst. 198. The King's debt is to be satisfied before that of a subject, and until his debt be paid, he may protect the debtor from the arrest of others. And by Stat. 33 H. 3. c. 39, all obligations made to the King shall have the same force as a Statute-Staple: 1 Inst. 130. But by Stat. 25 E. 3. R. 5. c. 19, notwithstanding the King's protection, creditors may proceed to judgment against their debtors, with a cessat executio till the King's debts be paid. Lands, &c. of the King's debtor and accountant, may be sold as well after his death, as in his life-time: But if the accountant or debtor to the King had a quietus during his life, his heir shall be discharged of the debt. Stat. 27 E. 3. cap. 3. A person being in debt to the King, purchases a lease to him and his wife, and dies: the term in the wife's hands is liable to the debt. *3 Rep. DEBTOR-EXECUTOR. If a person indebted to another makes his creditor or debtor his executor, or if such creditor obtains letter of administration to his debtor, he may retain sufficient to pay himself before any other creditors, whose debts are of equal degree. Plowd. 543. See title Executors.

DEBTORS. A work of the method of Old Dictionary is by no means adapted to political institutions or the propriety of imprisonment for debt—nor to historical details of the proceedings of foreign nations on the subject. The Legislature, who are the proper, and indeed, by the legal judges, of what regulations on the subject are necessary, have repeatedly interfered for the relief of debtors, unfortunate debtors, (too generally a small part of the number confined,) by insolvent acts; and the liberty of the subject, in this particular, has in the present age been much favoured by the laws relative to arrests, and the Arrests; Prisoners. What further, in a Commodious sense like Great Britain may be safe and necessary, will not be done without any hints or suggestions of private persons; whose opinions, however respectable, can be of very little public weight.

By Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 45, for the Courts of Conscience in London, Middlesex and Somerset, the provisions of which are extended by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 38, nearly veridim verbis, to all Courts for the recovery of small debts;—No debtor committed to gaol for a debt not exceeding 10*l.* shall be kept in custody in any private wharfhouse, more than twenty days;—nor for a debt between that and 40*l.* more than forty days;—then to be discharged without payment of fees, on forfeiture by the gaoler of 5*l.*—In case only of fraudulent concealment of money or goods by the debtor, the time of confinement may be enlarged, in the first instance to 30 days, and in the latter to 60.

DECEIT, [Deceit.] A subtle trick or device, whereunto may be referred all manner of craft and collusion, used to deceive and defraud another, by any means whatsoever, which hath no other or more proper name than deceit to distinguish the offence. Wyl. Syn. 487. 68.

There is a writ called a Writ of Deceit that lies for one that receiveth injury or damage from him that doth any thing deceitfully in the name of another person; by which he is deceived or injured, which writ is either original or judicial. Reg. Orig. 112. Old Nat. Br. 50.

Deceit is an offence at common law, and by statute; and all practices of defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another by his rights are punishable by fine and imprisonment; and if by cheating by pilory, &c. See title Obtort. Serjeants, counsellors, attorneys, and others doing any manner of deceit, are to be imprisoned a year and a day; also pleaders by deceit shall be expelled the court. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 29.

If a fine be levied by deceit, or if one recover land by deceit, the fine, and the recovery, shall be void. 3 Rep. 77. and if a man be attorney for another in a real action against the defendant, and afterwards by collusion between such attorney and the defendant, the attorney makes default, by which the land is lost, the tenant who lost the land shall have a writ of deceit against the attorney.

DECEIT.

F. N. B. 95. So writ of deceit lies to set aside a fine and recovery in C. B. of lands in ancient demesne. 2 Wils. 17.

In a præcipe quod reddat, if the sheriff return the tenant summoned, where he was not summoned, by which the defendant loseth his land by default at the grand capé returned; the tenant shall have a writ of deceit against him who recovered, and against the sheriff for his false return; and by that writ the tenant shall be restored unto his land again: and the sheriff shall be punished for his falsity. F. N. B. 97. If a man bring a writ of deceit against him that recovers in the first action, and the sheriff return him summoned, upon which for non-summmons in that action on finding the same the recovery is reversed; in this case the defendant shall not have writ of deceit to recover the land again, if he were not summoned: but he shall have his remedy against the sheriff. Roll. Abr. 621. And where debt was brought, and the defendant pleaded in abatement, and the plea was over-ruled, the attornies on both sides by deceit between them, to the end the plaintiff might recover his debt, entered another judgment when it should have been a respondens offer; and it was held that the writ of deceit would not lie to reverse the record, but only to recover damages. ibid. 622.

If in a suit or action, another person shall come into court and pretend he is party to the suit, and so let judgment be had, or some other damage done to the party himself; or if one have cause to have an action, and another brings it in his name, and lets judgment go by non-suit, or the like; the injured party may have this writ of deceit. F. N. B. 96: March 48.

If any one forge a statute, &c. in my name, and sueth a capias thereupon, for which I am arrested; I shall have a writ of deceit against him that forged it, and against him who sued forth the writ of capias, &c. And if a person procure another to sue an action against me to trouble me, I shall have a writ of deceit. F. N. B. 95.

There are many frauds and deceits provided against by statute, relating to artificers, bakers, brewers, victuallers, false weights and measures, &c. which are liable to penalties and punishment in proportion to the offence committed. And writ of deceit lies in various cases, for not performing a bargain; or not selling good commodities, &c. 1 Inst. 357.

On almost all occasions, where a person is deceived or injured, and where anciently remedy was sought by the writ of deceit, an action on the case for damages, in nature of a writ of deceit is now more usually brought. And indeed it is the only remedy for a lord of a manour in or out of ancient demesne, to reverse a fine or recovery had in the king's court, of lands lying within his jurisdiction, which would otherwise be thereby turned into frank-fee. And this may be brought by the lord against the parties and cestui que use of such fine and recovery; and thereby he shall obtain judgment not only for damages (which are usually remitted) but also to recover his court and jurisdiction over the lands, and to annul the former proceedings. 3 Lev. 415, 419: Rast. Ent. 100 b: Lutw. 711, 749.

DECENNARY, A town or tithing consisting (originally) of ten families of freeholders. Ten tithings composed an hundred. The institution of decennaries (or frankpledges) is imputed to Alfred. In these decennaries the whole neighbourhood or tithing of freemen were mutually pledged for each other's good behaviour. 1

DECEM TALES. When a full jury doth not appear at a trial at bar; then a writ goes to the sheriff apponer decem tales, &c. whereby a supply is made of jurymen to proceed in the trial. See title Jury.

DECIES TANTUM, A writ that lies on Stat. 38 E. 3. c. 12, against a juror, who hath taken money of either party for giving his verdict to recover ten times the sum taken. See title Jury. This writ also lies against embracers that procure such an inquest; who shall be further punished by imprisonment for a year. Reg. Orig. 188: F. N. B. 171: Stat. 38 E. 3. cap. 12.

DECIMATION, Decimatio.] The punishing every tenth soldier by lot, was termed decimatio legionis: it likewise signifies tithing, or paying a tenth part. There was a decimation during the time of the Usurper 1655.

DECINERS, DECENNIERS, OR DOZINERS, Decennarii.] In our ancient law, such as were wont to have the oversight of the Friburghs, or views of frank-pledge, for the maintenance of the King's peace; and the limits or compass of their jurisdiction was called Decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; as every person, bound for himself and his neighbours to keep the peace, was stiled Decennier. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 15.

These seem to have had large authority in the time of the Saxons, taking knowledge of causes within their circuits, and redressing wrongs by way of judgment, and compelling men thereunto, as appears in the laws of King Edward the Confessor, Lambard, Numb. 32. But of late decennier is not used for the chief man of a dizein, or dozein; but he that is sworn to the king's peace, and by oath of loyalty to the prince, is settled in the society of a dozein.

A dozein seemed to extend so far as a leet extendeth; because in leets the oath of loyalty is administered by the steward, and taken by all such as are twelve years old, and upwards, dwelling within the precinct of the leet where they are sworn. F. N. B. 161. There are now no other dozeins but leets; and there is a great diversity between ancient and modern times, in this point of law and government. 2 Inst. 73. See 1 Comm. 114: 4 Comm. 252: and ante Decennary.

DECLARATION.

Declaratio, Narratio.] A legal specification, on record, of the cause of action, by a plaintiff against a defendant.

In the King's Bench, when the defendant is brought into court by bill of Middlesex, upon a supposed trespass, in order to give the court a jurisdiction, the plaintiff may declare in whatever action, or charge the defendant with whatever injury he thinks proper, unless he has held him to bail by a special ac etiam; which the plaintiff is then bound to pursue. And so also, in order to have the benefit of a capias to secure the defendant's person, it was the ancient practice, and is therefore still warrantable, in the Common Pleas, to sue out a writ of trespass quare clausum fregit, for breaking the plaintiff's close: and when the defendant is once brought in upon this writ, the plaintiff declares in what action the nature of his true injury may require; as in an action of covenant, or on the case for breach of contract, or other less forcible transgression: (2 Ventr. 159.) unless, by holding the defendant to bail on a special ac etiam, he has bound himself to declare accordingly. 3 Comm. 293. See titles Ac etiam; Capias; Common-Pleas.

In

DECLARATION.

In either case, the declaration should correspond with the process, in the names and descriptions of the parties: for if there be a material variance, the court will set aside the proceedings: unless where the process is taken out against the defendant by a wrong name, and he appears by his right name, there the plaintiff may declare against him by the name in which he appears, stating that he was arrested by the other name: for by appearing, the defendant admits himself to be the person sued; and so the variance is immaterial. 3 Term Rep. 611.

The substantial rules of pleading according to which declarations are to be drawn are founded in strong sense and the soundest and closest logic, and so appear when well understood and explained; though by being misunderstood and misapplied, they are often made use of as instruments of chicane. 1 Burr. 319.

Rules respecting the form of the Declaration.—The parties plaintiff or demandant, defendant or tenant, ought to be well named.—The time of a matter charged in the declaration ought to be certainly alledged: and therefore in assumpsit, the day being omitted on which the promise is made, it is bad. Til. 94: Pl. Com. 24.—A certain place ought to be alledged where every fact material and traversable was done. Kitch. 226.—The gift, and every thing, that is of the essence of the plaintiff's action, must be set forth in the declaration. That seems properly to be the essence of the action without which the court could have no sufficient grounds to give judgment. Doe. Pl. 85.—If the declaration be not sufficient on which to found a judgment, this may be moved in arrest of judgment after verdict. Ibid.—The declaration must shew a title in the plaintiff. See Cro. Eliz. 325: Moor. 598.—In all cases where an interest or estate commences upon condition, the plaintiff ought to shew it in his declaration, and aver the performance of it, but when the interest of the estate passes presently, and vests in the grantee, and is to be defeated by condition; there the plaintiff may count generally, and the condition shall be pleaded by him who is to take advantage of it. 7 Co. 10: Lit. Rep. 418.

The declaration must contain such certain affirmation that it may be traversed; for if there be no certain affirmation to make the declaration itself traversable, it will not be cured after a verdict, because it is a defect in substance. Co. Lit. 303: Cro. Jac. 361: 2 Bulst. 214: Cro. Eliz. 33, 441: 2 Saund. 319.—If a declaration be good in part, though bad as to another part, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for so much as is well alledged, especially if it be not of an entire demand. 10 Co. 115: Rel. Abr. 784, 5; 2 Sbro. 103: 1 Salk. 133: Vide 3 Burr. 1235.

For preventing unnecessary length of declarations, it has been specially ordered, that in actions of covenant, the declaration is not to repeat more of the deed than is necessary for the assignment of the breach, and not to repeat the covenant in the conclusion.—In actions of slander, long preambles to be forborn, and no more inducement than what is necessary for the maintenance of the action; but when it requires a special inducement, or colloquium.—In actions upon general statutes, the declaration not to repeat the statute, but to conclude "against the form of the statute in such case made and provided."—In actions of debt upon judgment had in the Courts at Westminster, to recite only the judgment; but if on a judgment had by, or against an executor or administrator, then the action of debt upon that judgment, to repeat the declaration and judgment. R. M. 1654. § 13.—In a declaration on action founded on a deed, the plaintiff need not set forth more than that part which is necessary to entitle him to recover. Cowp. 665. And it will be sufficient to state the substance and legal effect even of such part; which is shorter, and not liable to mis-recitals and literal mistakes. The distinction is between that which may be rejected as surplusage (which might have been struck out on motion) and what cannot: where the declaration contains impertinent matter, foreign to the cause, and which the Master on a reference to him would strike out (irrelevant covenants for instance), that will be rejected by the Court and need not be proved. But if the very ground of the action is misstated, as where the plaintiff undertakes to recite that part of a deed on which the action is founded, and it is mis-recited, that will be fatal: for then the case declared on is different from that which is proved, and he may recover secundum allegata et probata. Doug. 665. Briflow v. Wright and another; and the notes there.

Of Declarations, in Chief, De bene esse, and By-the-by.—There are two ways in which the plaintiff may declare, the one on the return day of the writ, which is called, de bene esse, conditionally, until special, or common bail be filed; the other after the day for filing common bail, or when the defendant has justified his bail, which is called in chief. If to speed the cause, the former is the best way of proceeding. And a rule to plead may be given on the same day.—When a Declaration is filed de bene esse, till common bail or appearance entered, or till special bail be filed, notice that it is so filed must be given to the defendant in writing. Impey K. B.

The plaintiff cannot declare in chief, unless common bail be filed by the defendant, or plaintiff has done it for him. Smith v. Painter, 2 Term Rep. 719: 1 Term. Rep. 635: Cooke v. Raven. And it must be filed the term the writ is returnable. Hardw. 138.

When the defendant has filed common or special bail for himself, any person may deliver or file a Declaration against him by-the-by, at any time during the term wherein the process against the defendant is returnable, sedente curia; and the practice hath been, that the plaintiff, at whose suit the process is, might declare against the defendant in as many actions as he thinks fit, before the end of the next term, after the return of the process. Impey K. B. 177. See 4 Burr. 2180.

Of the time of declaring.—The plaintiff must declare before the end of the term next after the return of the process; or the defendant may sign a non-pros (except in replevin) without entering any rule to declare, and the defendant shall have costs taxed as usual. Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 2. § 5. And no rule to declare need be given in K. B. either by bill or original.

By the general rules of law, a plaintiff must declare against a defendant within twelve month after the return of the writ. But by the rules of the court, if he do not deliver his Declaration within two terms, the defendant may sign judgment of non-pros. Though unless he takes such advantage of the plaintiff's neglect, the plaintiff may still deliver a Declaration within the year. 2 Term Rep. 112: 3 Term Rep. 123. The defendant cannot sign a non-pros, unless he enter his appearance within the term the writ is returnable. Hardw. 138: 2 Term

DECLARATION.

Rep. 719. To prevent a non-pros being signed, the plaintiff may get a Side-bar rule, if the defendant is not in custody, the last day of the second term, for time to declare, until the first day of the next term; and he may have as many rules as he likes, from term to term, but there must be two in a term, viz. one from the first day of the term to the last day, and the other from the last day to the first day of the next term. But the defendant may, if he thinks proper, move the court, that the last rule may be peremptory. Imry, K. B.

In all Notices of Declarations, care is to be taken that the cause be properly named, as well as the court in which the suit is instituted; and in notices of Declaration, the nature of the action is to be expressed, and at whose suit prosecuted, and the time limited to plead to such Declaration. R. T. 1 Geo. 2.

Of entitling, and laying the day and place in Declarations.—It is usual when the cause of action will admit of it, to entitle the Declaration generally, of the term in which the writ is returnable; but it should always be entitled, after the time when the cause of action is stated to have accrued: therefore where the cause of action is stated to have accrued after the first day of the term in which the writ is returnable, the Declaration should be entitled of a subsequent day in that term, and not of the term generally; for as a general title refers to the first day of the term, upon such a title it would appear, that the action was commenced before the cause of it accrued. Yet where the cause of action was stated to have accrued on the first day of the term, the court on demurrer held, that the declaration might be entitled of the term generally, for the delivery of the declaration is the act of the party, and in ancient times it could not have been delivered till the sitting of the court; so that the cause of action might well have accrued, before the actual delivery of the Declaration. 1 Term Rep. 116: Vide 2 Lev. 176: and 3 Term Rep. 624.

If the cause of action arises within the term the Declaration is of, then do not entitle it as of the term generally, but make a special day after the cause of action accrued, as, "Thursday next after the Morrow of All Souls, in Michaelmas Term, in the 32d year of the reign of King George 3." instead of "Michaelmas Term" generally.

If the plaintiff declares on a note, the day is material, and an essential part of the agreement, from which he cannot vary; so on a bond or other writing; but in the case of a common assumpsit, the day is alledged only for form, and therefore the defendant cannot confine the plaintiff to the day alledged in the Declaration. Str. 21: Fide Co. Lit. 283: Plowd. Com. 24 a.

In other cases, as in trespass, assault, battery, &c. the day is immaterial, but is in general laid after the cause of action accrued, and before the term or time of which the Declaration is intitled.

In local actions, where possession of land is to be recovered, or damages for an actual trespass, or for waste, &c. affecting land, the plaintiff must lay his Declaration, or declare his injury to have happened in the very county and place where it really did happen; but in transitory actions, for injuries that might have happened any where, as debt, detinue, slander, and the like, the plaintiff may declare in what county he pleases, and then the writ must be had in that county in which the Declaration is laid. 3 Comm 294. See titles Action; Venue.

In action of debt, upon a bond, the plaintiff in his declaration must alledge a place where the bond was made, because the jury should come from that place; and if this be omitted, the declaration is ill. Dyer 15, 39: 1 Nelf. Abr. 619.

It is good to lay large and sufficient damages in declarations; and damages shall not be given for that which is not contained in the declaration, and only for what is materially alledged. 10 Rep. 115: 1 Lill. Abr. 381.

Where a declaration is defective, it is sometimes aided by the statutes of amendment and jeofails, &c. but they help only matters of form, not matters of substance. 5 Rep. 35. See titles Amendment: Practice.

On filing Declarations, copies thereof are served on the defendants or their attorneys, &c. And by an order of all the judges, (12 W. 3.) the plaintiff's attorney is not obliged to deliver the defendant's attorney the original Declaration; but instead of it, is to deliver a true copy of the Declaration; upon delivery or tender whereof, the defendant's attorney shall pay for such copy after the rate of 4 d. per sheet, &c. and if any person refuse to pay for the copy tendered, the said copy is to be left in the office, with the clerk that keeps the files of Declarations, and thereupon the plaintiff's attorney giving rule to plead, may, for want of a plea, sign judgment; and before any plea shall be received, the defendant's attorney is to pay for the copy of the declaration,

And by another order, (Trin 2 Geo. 2.) in every cause, where special or common bail is filed, and notice given to the plaintiff, a copy of the Declaration shall be delivered to the attorney for the defendant, who shall pay for it according to the usual rate; but if the defendant's attorney, or his clerk in his absence, refuses to pay for such copy; or if it happens the habitation of the attorney for the defendant, be unknown to the attorney for the plaintiff; then it shall be lawful to leave the copy with the officer of the court appointed for filing Declarations, which shall be good, giving notice, &c.—There are several other rules of Court as to the filing and delivering Declarations, &c. for which see the several books of Practice, and further this Dict. titles Practice: Process, Prisoner, &c.

DECREE. The judgment of a court of equity on any bill preferred. See title Chancery.

A decree in Chancery is of the like nature with a judgment at Common-law. Chan. Rep. 234.

Where there is but one witness against the defendant's answer, the plaintiff can have no decree. 1 Vern. 161.

Where no ordinary process upon the first decree will serve for the execution thereof, there must be a new bill to pray execution of the first decree by a second decree. 2 Chan. Rep. 127, 128. See title Chancery.

Verbal agreement, though subsequent to the decree, yet shall not stay the execution of it, but the remedy must be by original bill. 2 Chan. Cases 8.

Whenever a decree is entered by consent, the merits of it shall never after be enquired into, unless there be an objection, that the word consent be struck out of the order. MS. Norcot v. Norcot.

Several questions and disputes were heretofore warmly agitated, as to the authority of the Master of the Rolls to hear and determine causes; and as to his general power power in the Court of Chancery: to quiet which, it was declared by Stat. 3. Geo. 2. c. 30. that all orders and decrees by him made, except such as by the course of the court were appropriated to the great seal alone, should be deemed to be valid, subject nevertheless to be discharged or allowed by the Lord Chancellor; and so as they shall not be enrolled till the same are signed by his Lordship.

If either party to the suit thinks himself aggrieved by a decree, he may petition the Chancellor for a re-hearing, whether it was heard before the Chancellor himself or any of the Judges sitting for him, or before the Master of the Rolls. For in all cases it is the Chancellor's decree and must be signed by him before it is enrolled; which is done of course, unless a re-hearing be desired. Every petition for a re-hearing must be signed by two counsel, usually such as have been concerned in the cause; certifying that they apprehend the cause is proper to be re-heard. And upon the re-hearing, all the evidence taken in the cause, whether read before or not, is then admitted to be read; because it is the decree of the Chancellor himself, who only sits to hear reasons why it should not be enrolled and perfected, at which time all omissions of either evidence or argument may be supplied. Gill. Rep. 151, 2.—But after the decree is once signed and enrolled, it cannot be re-heard or rectified but by Bill of Review, or by appeal to the House of Lords.

A Bill of Review, may be had upon apparent error in judgment, appearing upon the face of the decree; or by special leave of the court, upon oath made, of the discovery of new matter or evidence, which could not possibly be had or used at the time when the decree passed. But no new evidence or matter then in the knowledge of the parties, and which might have been used before, shall be a sufficient ground for a Bill of Review. 3 Comm. 454. See further this Dict. title Chancery; and Vin. title Decree.

On a new bill to carry a decree into execution, the Court may vary and alter what is thought proper; but on a re-hearing, no farther than the petition extends; but if the petition be against the decree in general, though particular reasons are given, the whole is open; but otherwise it is, if the petition be only against one or two particulars. Sol. Cases in Chan. 13, 14.

The rule of court is, that on appeal the whole cause is open; but on a re-hearing, only so much as is petitioned against; if all do not petition, it is open only to the petitioners. S. C. C. 24.

Decree may be altered upon proper application, the same term it is pronounced, without a re-hearing.—No original bill can be to vacate a decree signed and enrolled.—Matters, proper to be excepted to upon the Master's report, shall never be objected to a decree after the report confirmed. 7 Vin. Abr. 400.

A decree gained by fraud, may be set aside by petition, as well as a judgment at law by motion; a fortiori may such decrees be set aside by bill. 3 P. Wms. 111. If a decree be obtained and enrolled, so that the cause cannot be re-heard, then there is no remedy but by bill of review, which must be on error appearing on the face of the decree, or on matters subsequent thereto, as a release, or a receipt discovered since. 3 P. Wms. 374.

DECRETALS. Decretales.] A volume of the Canon Law, so called, containing the decrees of sundry Popes; or a Digest of the canons of all the councils that pertained to one matter under one head. See title Canon Law.

DECURIARE. To bring into order. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 243.

DEDI. This word amounts to a warranty in law; as if it be said in a deed or conveyance, That A. B. hath Given, &c. to C. D. it is a warranty to him and his heirs. Co. Lit. 304. Also dedi imports a power of giving any thing. Hob. 12. See titles Conveyance; Deed.

DEDICATION-DAY. Festum Dedicationis.] The feast of dedication of churches, or rather the feast-day of the Saint and Patron of a church; which was celebrated not only by the inhabitants of the place, but by those of all the neighbouring villages, who usually came thither; and such assemblies were allowed as lawful: It was usual for the people to feast and drink on those days; and in many parts of England, they still meet every year in villages for this purpose, which days are called Feasts or Wakes. Cowel.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM. Is a writ or commission given to one or more private persons, for the speeding some act appertaining to a judge, or some court: And it is granted most commonly upon suggestion, that the party who is to do something before a judge, or in court, is so weak that he cannot travel; as where a person lives in the country, to take an answer in Chancery; to examine witnesses in a cause depending in that court; to levy a fine in the Common Pleas, &c.—On renewing the commission of the peace, there cometh a writ of dedimus potestatem out of Chancery, directed to some ancient justice, to take the oath of him, which is newly inserted. See title Justices.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM DE ATTORNATO FACIENDO. As the words of writs do command the defendant to appear, &c. anciently the judges would not suffer the parties to make attornies in any action or suit, without the King's writ of Dedimus Potestatem, to receive their attornies: But now by statutes, the plaintiff or defendant may make attornies in suits without such writs. New Nat. Br. 55, 56. See title Attornies.

DEED.

FACTUM.] An instrument in parchment, or paper, but chiefly in parchment, comprehending a contract or bargain between party and party; or an agreement of the parties thereto, for the matters therein contained: And it consists of three principal points, writing, sealing and delivery; writing, to express the contents; sealing, to testify the consent of the parties; and delivery, to make it binding and perfect. Terms de Ley.

I. What a Deed is.

II. The Requisites to make a good Deed.

III. How a Deed may be avoided.

IV. Shortly, of the inrolling, exposition and pleading of Deeds.

I. A DEED is a Writing sealed and delivered by the parties. 1 Inst. 171. It is sometimes called a charter, carta, from

D E E D I I.

From its materials; but most usually, when applied to the transaction of private subjects, it is called a deed, in Latin factum, because it is the most solemn and authentic act that a man can possibly perform, with relation to the disposal of his property; and therefore a man shall always be stopped by his own deed, or not permitted to aver or prove any thing in contradiction to what he has once so solemnly and deliberately avowed. Plowd. 434. If a deed be made by more parties than one, there ought to be regularly as many copies of it as there are parties, and each should be cut or indented (formerly in acute angles, inftar dentium, like the teeth of a saw, but at present in a waving line) on the top or sides to tally, or correspond with the other; which deed, so made, is called an Indenture. Formerly, when deeds were more concise than at present, it was usual to write both parts on the same piece of parchment, beginning at the middle and continuing to the contrary ends, with some word or letters of the alphabet written between them; through which the parchment was cut, either in a straight or indented line, in such a manner as to leave half the word on one part and half on the other. Deeds thus made were denominated syngrapha by the canonists, and with us chirographa, or hand-writings. Mirror, c. 2. § 27; the word chirographum or cyrographum being usually that which is divided in making the indentures of a fine. See title Chirograph.—But at length indenting only has come into use, without cutting through any letters at all; and it seems at present to serve for little other purpose, than to give name to the species of the deed. See further 1 Inst. 229 (a) in n.—When the several parts of an indenture are interchangeably executed by the several parties, that part or copy which is executed by the grantor is usually called the Original, and the rest are Counterparts; though of late it is most frequent for all the parties to execute every part, which renders them all originals. A deed made by one party only is not indented, but poll'd or shaved quite even; and therefore called a deed-poll, or a single deed. Litt. § 371, 2.

A deed poll is said to be a deed testifying that only one of the parties to the agreement hath put his seal to the same, where such party is the principal or only person, whose consent or act is necessary to the deed: and it is therefore a plain deed, without indenting, and is used when the vendor, for example, only seals, and there is no need of the vendee's sealing a counterpart, because the nature of the contract is such, as to require no covenant from the vendee, &c. Co. Lit. 55.

The several parts of deeds by indenture, are belonging to the feoffor, grantor, or lessor, who have one; the feoffee, grantee, or lessee, who have another; and some other persons, as trustees, a third, &c. and the deed-poll which is single, and of but one part, is delivered to the feoffee, or grantee, &c.

All the parts of a deed indented, in judgment of law, make but one intire deed; but every part is of as great force as all the parts together, and they are esteemed the mutual acts of either party, who may be bound by either part of the same, and the words of the indenture are the words of either party, &c. But a deed-poll is the sole deed of him that makes it, and the words thereof shall be said to be his words, and bind him only. Plowd. 434, 421; Litt. f. 370.

II. 1. THE FIRST REQUISITE of a deed is, that there be persons able to contract and be contracted with, for the purposes intended by the deed; and also a thing, of subject matter to be contracted for; all which must be expressed by sufficient names. Co. Lit. 35. So as in every grant, there must be a grantor, a grantee, and a thing granted; in every lease, a lessor, a lessee, and a thing demised.

Some persons are disabled to contract by Common-law, and some by statute; some absolutely, and some secundum quid only; as in case of infants, feme coverts, idiots, persons non compos mentis, aliens, tenants in tail, ecclesiastical persons, and others; some of which may not make any deeds or estates by them at all, others but so and to limited and qualified. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 28.—See tit. Leases.

Disabilities to make deeds, &c. are chiefly amongst persons of non-sane memory, infants, aliens, women who have husbands, men who have wives, &c. persons born deaf and dumb, persons attaint of treason or felony, or, in a praemunire, clerks convicted, tenant in tail, ecclesiastical persons, as bishops, parsons, and the like, with respect to lands, &c. which they hold as such; joint-tenants, tenants in common, coparceners, disseisors, disseisees, &c. See these several titles.

He who has only an estate for his own or another's life, or a lease for years of land, may give, grant, or charge it at his pleasure for so long as his estate lasts; and it will be good to all purposes, and against all persons for that time.

And a man who has an estate in land to him and his wife, and his heirs, may make what estate he will of it, and this will be good against all but his wife, and that for her life only. 7 Co. 12: Co. Lit. 42: Park. § 182.

The King for the greatness of his person, is disabled to take by deed in pais; and therefore if a feoffment be made to him there, and livery of seisin be made upon it, this will be void; but he is to take by matter of record, which is of an higher nature than a deed. Fitz. Feud and Feoffment 21.

Leases made to the King by colleges, deans and chapters, or any other, having a spiritual or ecclesiastical living, against the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 10, are restrained by the same act, as well as leases made to common persons. 5 Co. 14.

The names of the parties to deeds serve to distinguish persons, and to make the person intended certain; yet mistakes in this, unless they be very gross, will not hurt, nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat. Bulst. 21, 22: 2 Bulst. 302, 303: Co. Lit. 3: Park. § 36.

But if the name of baptism or surname be mistaken, as John for Thomas, &c. this is dangerous. Moor 407, 897. And see 2 Bulst. 70: Park. § 39.

It is also prudent to add the addition of each party, as the place of residence, with his or her degree, profession, or mystery.

There are many descriptions of grantors and grantees; as (1) Proper names of baptism and surnames, and the names of corporations, or bodies politic or corporate. (2) Names of dignities, offices, and the like. And these (of both sorts) will admit a description made good by reputation. And so land will pass to one, by the name of a son, who is a bastard; so to one by the name of a wife, who who is not a wife, 27 Ed. 3. 85; Bulst. 3; if they be reputed or known by that name. Hob. 32.

There must be such a person in esse at the time of the deed made as is named, and the parties must be able to give, and capable to receive that which is given or granted by the deed. Plowd. 345; Co. Lit. 2, 3; Perk. 43, 52.

And therefore if an annuity be granted to the right heirs of J. S. he being then living, this is void; for there is none such, nor can be whilst he lives. Perk. § 52. See Cro. Car. 22.

If a man gets another name by common esteem than his right name, and he is known by his other name, his deed made by this other name may be good. 6 Co. 36: Co. Lit. 3; Perk. § 41.

The mistake is less dangerous where any other part of the deed, or some other addition, shall make the person intended certain. 6 Co. 36: Co. Lit. 3; Perk. § 40.

As to the subject-matter of Contracts, Grants, &c. See this Dict. title Grant, and other proper titles.

2. The deed must be founded upon good and sufficient consideration. Not upon an usurious contract, (Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 8,) nor upon fraud or collusion, either to deceive purchasers bona fide, (Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4,) or just and lawful creditors; (Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5;) any of which bad considerations will vacate the deed, and subject such persons, as put the same in ure, to forfeitures, and often to imprisonment. A deed also or other grant, made without any consideration, is as it were, of no effect; for it is construed to inure, or to be effectual only to the use of the grantor himself. Perk. § 533. The consideration may be either a good or a valuable one. See further title Consideration, and post. III.

In deeds, the consideration is a principal thing to give them effect: and the foundation of deeds ought always to be honest. That a deed was executed upon a corrupt agreement, debors the deed, may be averred in pleading. See the case of Collins and Blantem, a new and very peculiar case. 2 Willf. 341, &c.

3. The deed must be written, or (as is the case at present with many instruments, such as Bonds, Policies of Insurance, &c.) printed; for it may be in any character, or any language; but it must be upon paper or parchment. For if it be written on stone, board, linen, leather, or the like, it is no deed. Co. Litt. 229: F. N. B. 122.

All the matter and form of a deed, must be written before the sealing and delivery of it; for if a man seals and delivers an empty piece of parchment or paper, although he therewithal gives commandment that an obligation or other matter shall be written in it, which is done accordingly, yet this will not make it a good deed. Co. Litt. 171: Perk. §. 118, 119: See Moor 28: Hesley 136, 7.

A deed may be written in any hand, as in text, court or Roman hand; or in any language, as in Latin or French, and is as good as a deed written in English, and in a secretary hand. 2 Co. 3.

It may be written either in a piece of loose paper or parchment, or in a paper or parchment sewed in a book. Bio. Oblig. 67: Co. Litt. 137, 139.

A deed must also have the regular Stamps, imposed on it by the several statutes, for the increase of the public revenue; else it cannot be given in evidence.

Formerly many conveyances were made by parol, or word of mouth only, without writing; but this giving a handle to a variety of frauds, the Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, enacts, that no lease, estate, or interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, made by livery of seisin, or by parol only (except leases not exceeding three years from the making, and whereupon the reserved rent is at least two-thirds of the real value) shall be looked upon as of greater force than a lease or estate at will; nor shall any assignment, grant, or surrender of any interest in any freehold hereditaments be valid; unless in both cases the same be put in writing, and signed by the party granting, or his agent, lawfully authorised in writing. See title Frauds.

4. The matter written must be legally and orderly set forth; that is, there must be words sufficient to specify the agreement, and bind the parties; which sufficiently must be left to the courts of law to determine. Co. Litt. 225. For it is not absolutely necessary in law, to have all the formal parts that are usually drawn out in Deeds, so as there be sufficient words to declare clearly and legally the party's meaning. But, as these formal and orderly parts are calculated to convey that meaning in the clearest, distinctest, and most effectual manner, and have been well considered and settled by the wisdom of successive ages, it is prudent not to depart from them without good reason or urgent necessity; therefore they shall be recapitulated in their usual order: See 1 Inst. 6.

It may in the first place be generally observed with regard to the words requisite in a deed; that they depend upon the estate intended to be conveyed. If a man would purchase lands or tenements in fee-simple, it behoves him to have these words in his purchase, To have and to hold to him and to his heirs; for these words, his heirs, (only) make the estate of inheritance, in all feoffments and grants. But this is to be understood of natural bodies: for if lands be given to a sole body politic or corporate, (as to a bishop, parson, vicar, master of an hospital, &c.) there, to give him an estate of inheritance in his politic or corporate capacity, he must use these words, To have and to hold to him and his successors. Co. Litt. 8, &c.

If an estate-tail is intended to be created, the words must be, To have and to hold to him and to the heirs of his body. See title Fee.

The insertion of the word heirs or successors, as the case requires, is therefore absolutely necessary in conveyances of estates of inheritance; for if a man purchase lands by these words, To have and to hold to him for ever, he has but an estate for term of life. See Co. Litt. 8 b, &c.

We may now proceed more particularly to observe on the formal and orderly parts of a Deed.

The Premises are used to set forth the number and names of the parties, with their additions or titles. They also contain the recital, if any, of such deeds, agreements, or matters of fact, as are necessary to explain the reasons upon which the present transaction is founded; and herein also is set down the consideration upon which the deed is made. And then follows the certainty of the grantor, grantee, and thing granted.

Next come the Habendum and Tenendum. The office of the habendum, is properly to determine what estate or interest is granted by the deed; though this may be performed, and sometimes is performed in the premises.

or other alteration in any material part; unless a memorandum be made thereof at the time of execution and attestation. 11 Rep. 27.—2. By breaking off, or defacing the seal. 5 Rep. 23.—3. By delivering it up to be cancelled; that is, to have lines drawn over it in the form of a lattice-work or cancelli; though the phrase is now used figuratively for any manner of obliteration or defacing it.—4. By the disagreement of such, whose concurrence is necessary, in order for the deed to stand; as a husband where a feme-covert is concerned; an infant, or person under duress, when those disabilities are removed; and the like.—5. By the judgment or decree of a court of judicature. This was anciently the province of the court of Star-chamber, and now of the Chancery: when it appears that the deed was obtained by fraud, force, or other foul practice: or is proved to be an absolute forgery. Toib. 24: 1 Ventr. 348. In any of these cases the deed may be avoided, either in part or totally, according as the cause of avoidance is more or less extensive.

More particularly.—If there be any alteration, rasure, or interlining made in any part of the deed before the delivery of it, this will not hurt the deed.

But in such cases it is policy to make a memorandum of it upon the back of the deed, and to give the witnesses notice of it, (this is now usually done in the attestation of the deed thus: Sealed and delivered, the word—being first interlined, &c.) For otherwise, if it be in any place material, as in the name of the grantor, grantee, in the limiting of the estate, or the like, and it cannot be proved to be done before the sealing and delivery of it, especially if it be a deed poll, it is very suspicious. Co. Lit. 37, 225: Park. § 125, 126, 127, 128, 155.

Where an estate cannot have its essence without a deed, there, if the deed is rased in any material part, after the delivery, it makes the estate void: but if the estate may have essence without a deed, then, notwithstanding it is created by deed, and that deed is rased, it shall not destroy the estate, but the deed. 1 Nels. Abr. 625.

When a chose in action is created by deed, the destruction of such deed is the destruction of the duty itself; as in case of a bond, bill, &c. though it is not so, where an estate or interest is created by a deed. 3 Salk. 120.

If a deed be suppressed, on proof made that it came to the party's hands, and of its contents, the person injured, will have the same benefit to hold the estate, as if the deed could be produced. 2 Vern. 280. A person committed for burning a deed, see 2 Vern. 561: Abr. C. of Eq. 169. An indorsement on a deed, at the time of the sealing and delivery, is a part of the same: but if an indorsement be after the delivery, it is a new deed. Mosh. Cusl. 237.

Deeds, if fraudulently made; when got by corrupt agreement, as on usurious contract; and when made by force or duress, &c. are void: so they are for uncertainty, and by reason of infancy, coverture, or other disability in the makers, &c. 2 Roll. Abr. 28: 1 Inst. 253: 11 Rep. 27.

A deed may be good in part, and void in part; or good against one person, and void as to another: if all the parts of a deed may by law stand together, no one part shall make the whole void. And if a deed by any construction of law be construed to have legal operation, the law will not make it utterly void, though it may not operate according to the purport of the deed: also the law will transpose and marshal clauses in deeds, to come at their true meaning; but not to confound them. Where the words of a deed may have a double intentment, one standing with law, and the other contrary to it, the intentment that standeth with law shall be taken. 1 Lil. Abr. 421: 1 Inst. 42, 217: 1 Shep. Abr. 540.

IV. DEEDS of Bargain and Sale are to be inrolled, by Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 16. A copy of a bargain and sale inrolled, shall be as sufficient as the original deed, by Stat. 10 An. c. 18. sect. 3. But estates in fee are now generally granted and conveyed by indentures of lease and release. All deeds are to be registered in the counties of York and Middlesex. Stat. 2 & 3 An. c. 4: 5 An. c. 18: 6 An. c. 35: 7 An. c. 20: 8 Geo. 2. c. 6: 25 Geo. 2. c. 4. And it is much to be wished that registers were universally established throughout the kingdom. See further titles Bargain and Sale, Conveyance, Inrollment, &c.

It may here be cursorily observed, that of conveyances by the Common law, some may be called original, or primary conveyances; which are such by means whereof the benefit or estate is created, or first arises: others are derivative, or secondary; whereby the benefit or estate, originally created, is enlarged, restrained, transferred, or extinguished.

Original conveyances are,—1. Feoffment;—2. Gift; 3. Grant;—4. Lease;—5. Exchange;—6. Partition. Derivative, are,—7. Release;—8. Confirmation;—9. Surrender;—10. Assignment;—11. Defeasance.—See those titles, and also particularly title Conveyance, and 2 Comm. 295,—310.

There are four grounds for the exposition of deeds. 1. That they may be beneficial to the taker. 2. That where the words may be employed to some intent, they shall never be void. 3. That the words be construed according to the intention of the parties, and not otherwise; and the intent of the parties shall take effect, if it may possibly stand with law. 4. That they are to be consonant to the rules of the law. And deeds shall have a reasonable exposition, without injury against the grantor, to the greatest advantage of the grantee. They are to be expounded upon the whole, and if the second part contradicts the first, such second part shall be void; but if the latter part expounds or explains the former, which it may do, both of them shall stand. Plowd. 160: Raym. 142: 6 Rep. 30: 1 Inst. 313: 1 Roll. Rep. 375.

The first deed of a person, and last will, stand in force. In deeds indented, all parties are elopped, or concluded, to say any thing against what is contained in the deed. 1 Inst. 45. And where a deed is by indenture between parties, none can have an action upon that deed, but he who is a party to it; but where it is a deed-poll, one may covenant with another who is not a party to it, to do certain acts, for the non-performance whereof he may bring an action. 2 Lev. 74.

Where a man justifies title under a deed, he is to produce the deed: if a deed is alledged in pleading, it must be shewed to the court, that the Court may judge of the validity of it, and whether there are sufficient words to make a good contract; and when it is shewn to the court, the deed shall remain in court all the term, in the hands of the custos brevium; but at the end of the term, it shall be delivered to the party. If the deed is denied, it must remain remain in court till the plea is determined. 10 Rep. 88: Wood 235. A deed, set forth with a profert hic in curia, remains in court in judgment of law all that term; and any person may, during that term, have benefit by it, though he hath it not ready to shew: the adverse party may take any advantage by the deed that it will afford him. 5 Rep. 74: 1 Nelf. 625.

But now the deed is not actually brought into court, but generally remains in the hands of the party's attorney, who gives oyer and copy of it to the attorney of the other party, if demanded.

DEEDS, stealing of. At Common-law, bonds, bills, and notes, which concern mere choses in action, were held not to be such goods whereof larceny might be committed: but by Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, they are put upon the same footing, with respect to larcenies, as the money they were meant to secure. See titles Felony; Robbery.

DEEMSTERS, from the Sax. dema, a judge or umpire.] Are a kind of judges in the Isle of Man, who, without process, or any charge to the parties decide all controversies in that island; and they are chosen from among themselves. Cam. Brit.

DEER-FALD, A park, or deer-fold; Sax. deer, fera, and fald, stabulum. Cowel.

DEER-HAYES, Are engines, or great nets made of cords to catch deer; and no person not having a park, &c. shall keep any of these nets, under the penalty of 40s. a month. Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 11. See title Game.

DEER-STEALERS Much of the law relating to these offenders is implicated in the general rules relative to hunting in forests, &c. for which see this Dict. title Game, more at large.

Several ancient statutes have been made to punish Deer-stealers; and a very severe one 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, known by the name of the Black Act against those and other offenders.—See title Black Act.

See the Statutes 3 E. 1. c. 20, against trespassers in parks: 21 Ed. 1. ff. 2, de malefactoribus in parvis: 1 H. 7. c. 7, of unlawful hunting in parks by night: 1 Jac. 1. c. 27, against sellers and buyers of deer who are to forfeit 40s. Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 28, by which wounding or killing deer in a park is punishable with transportation.

The above (except the last statute 5 Geo. 1. c. 28.) are at least superseded in use if not repealed by Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30; which though like some others of the game laws inaccurately penned, or copied on record, is now generally pursued for the punishment of Deer stealers.

By this Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30, If any persons shall hunt, or take in a snare, or kill or wound any red or fallow deer in any forest, chase, &c. whether inclosed or not; or in any inclosed park, paddock, &c. or be aiding in such offence, they shall forfeit 20*l.* for the first offence; and also 30*l.* for each deer wounded, killed or taken. A game-keeper offending to forfeit double.—For a second offence offenders shall be transported for 7 years. § 1. Justices to transmit convictions to the sessions. § 2.—Justices may grant warrants to search for heads, skins, &c. of stolen deer and for toils, snares, &c. and persons having such in their possession to forfeit from 30*l.* to 10*l.* at the discretion of the justices. §§ 4, 5, 6.—Persons unlawfully setting nets or snares, to forfeit for the first offence from 10*l.* to 5*l.*—and for every other offence from 20*l.*

to 10*l.* § 7.—Persons pulling down pales or fences of any forest, chase, park, paddock, wood, &c. subject to the penalties annexed to the first offence for killing deer, § 8.—Dogs, guns and engines may be seized by park-keepers; and persons resisting shall be transported for seven years. § 9.—Penalties may be levied by distress; in default of which offenders to be committed for twelve months. § 11. &c.—No certiorari to be allowed, unless the party convicted become bound to the prosecutor in 100*l.* to pay him all costs and damages and to the Justice in 60*l.* to prosecute the certiorari with effect. § 19, 20: and see § 23, by which latter § it seems that convictions are not removeable by certiorari on mere points of informality, in case the facts alleged are sufficient to support the conviction.—See Burn's Just. tit. Game V. 1. ii.—1 Hawk. P.C. c. 27. § 60: and this Dict. title Certiorari.—Appeal given to the sessions § 21, &c.—Prosecutions limited to 12 months from the time of the offence committed. § 25.

By Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 19, destroying gosh, furze and fern in forests and chases, being the covert for deer, subjects the offenders to a penalty from 5*l.* to 40*s.* or to 3 months' imprisonment.

DE ESSENDO QUIETUM DE TOLONIO, Is a writ that lies for those who are by privilege free from the payment of toll; on their being molested therein. F. N. B. 226. See titles Corporation; Toll.

DE EXPENSIS MILITUM, A writ commanding the sheriff to levy the expences of a knight of the shire for attendance in parliament, being 4*s.* per diem by statute; and there is a like writ de expens. civium & burgensium, to levy 2*s.* per diem, for the expences of every citizen and burges of parliament. See Stat. 23 Hen. 6. cap. 14: 4 Inst. 46: and further title Parliament.

DE FACTO, Signifies a thing actually done; that is done in deed. A king de facto (in fact) is one that is in actual possession of a crown, and hath no lawful right to the same; in which sense it is opposed to a king de jure, (of right,) who hath right to a crown, but is out of possession. 3 Inst. 7.

DEFAMATION, defamatio.] Is when a person speaks scandalous words of another, as of a magistrate, &c. whereby they are injured in their reputation; for which the party offending shall be punished according to the nature and quality of his offence; sometimes by action on the case at common law, sometimes by statute, and sometimes by the ecclesiastical laws.

Defamation is also punishable by the spiritual courts; in which courts it ought to have three incidents. viz. First, It is to concern matters spiritual, and determinable in the ecclesiastical courts; as for calling a man heretick, schismatick, adulterer, fornicator, &c. Secondly, that it be a matter spiritual only; for if the defamation concern any thing determinable at the common law, the ecclesiastical judges shall not have cognisance thereof. And Thirdly, although such defamation be merely spiritual, yet he that is defamed cannot sue for damages in the ecclesiastical courts; but the suit ought to be only for punishment of the fault, by way of penance. Terms de Leg. See titles Action; Courts-Ecclesiastical; Prohibition.

DEFAULT, Fr. defaute.] Is commonly taken for non-appearance in court, at a day assigned; though it extends to any omission of that which we ought to do. Bract. lib. 5. trac. 3. Co. Lit. 259. If a plaintiff makes default in appearance appearance in a trial at law, he will be non suited: and where a defendant makes default, judgment shall be had against him by default. See titles, Judgment; Non suit.

Tenant in tail, tenant in dower, by the curtesy, or for life, losing their lands by default, in a precipe quod reddat brought against them; they are to have remedy by the writ quod ei deforciet, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 4. And in a quod ei deforciet, where the tenant joined issue upon the mere right, and the jury appearing, the defendant made default; it was adjudged, that in such case final judgment shall be given: but if the tenant had made default, it would be otherwise, for then a petit cap must issue against him, because it may so happen that he may save his default. 1 Nels. Abr. 627.

By default of a defendant, he is said to be generally out of court to all purposes, but only that judgment may be given against him: and no judgment can be afterwards given for the defendant. Ibid. 628.

When two are to recover a personal thing, the default of one is the default of the other: contra, where they are to discharge themselves of a personalty; where the default of the one is not the default of the other. 6 Rep. 25: 1 Litt. Abr. 425. In an action of debt, if the process be determined against one, and the other appears; he shall be put to answer, notwithstanding the default of his companion. 2 Dum. Abr. 480. Where the baion is to have a corporal punishment for a default, there the default of the wife shall not be the default of the husband: but otherwise it is where the husband is not to have any corporal punishment by the default. Ibid. 472. 473.

If a defendant impair to another day in the same term, and make default at the day, this is a departure in despite of the court: and when the defendant after appearance, and being present in court, upon demand makes departure, it is in despite of the court. Co. Lit. 139.

Suffering judgment to go by default, is an admission of the contract declared on. Sta. 612. After the inquest is taken by default, the defendant can make no suggestion on the roll. Sta. 46.

Default, and laver of default, made a large title in the old books of law. See Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 9, 13, 18, 24: 3 E. 1. c. 1: 42, &c.

DEFAULT IN CRIMINAL CASES. An offender indicted appears at the capias, and pleads to issue, and is let to bail to attend his trial, and then makes default; here the inquest in case of felony shall never be taken by default, but a capias ad audiendum judicium shall issue, and if the party is not taken, an exigent; and if he appear on that writ, and then make default, an exigi facias de novo may be granted: but where upon the capias or exigent the sheriff returns cepi corpus, and at the day hath not his body, the sheriff shall be punished, but no new exigent awarded, because in custody of record. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202.

DEFAULT OF JURORS. If jurors make default in their appearance for trying of causes, they shall lose and forfeit issues, unless they have any reasonable excuse proved by witnesses, in which case the justices may discharge the issue for default. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 6. See title Jury.

DEFEASANCE. From the Fr. defaire, to defeat or undo] Is of two sorts. 1. A collateral deed made at the same time with a feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone. In this manner mortgages were in former times usually made; the mortgagor enfeoffing the mortgagee, and he at the same time executing a deed of defeasance, whereby the feoffment was rendered void, on repayment of the money borrowed at a certain day. And this, when executed at the same time with the original feoffment, was considered as part of it by the ancient law; and therefore only indulged: no subsequent secret revocation of a solemn conveyance, executed by livery of seisin, being allowed in those days of simplicity and truth; though when uses were afterwards introduced, a revocation of such uses was permitted by courts of Equity. But things that were merely executory or to be completed by matter subsequent, (as rents of which no seisin could be had till time of payment; annuities, conditions, warranties and the like,) were always liable to be recalled by defeasances made subsequent to the time of their creation.—2. A Defeasance on a bond, recognisance, or judgment recovered, is a condition which when performed defeats that, in the same manner as the foregoing Defeasance of an estate.—It differs only from the common condition of a bond, in that the one is always inserted in the deed or bond itself, the other is made between the same parties by a separate, and frequently by a subsequent deed. This like the condition of a bond when performed, discharges and disincumbers the estate of the obligor. 2 Co. Inst. 327; 342: See 1 Inst. 236, 7: 2 Sand. 47.

The Defeasance may generally (as in the case of a bond, &c.) be indorsed on the back of the deed.

To make a good Defeasance it must be, 1. By deed; (in the case of indorsement by a deed-poll;) for there cannot be a Defeasance of a deed without deed; and a writing under hand doth not imply it to be a deed. 2. It must recite the deed it relates to, or at least the most material part thereof; or in case of indorsement refer thereto. 3. It is to be made between the same persons that were parties to the first deed. 4. It must be made at the time, or after the first deed, and not before. 5. It ought to be made of a thing defensible. 1 Inst. 236: 3 Lev. 234.

Inheritances executed by livery, such as estates in fee, or for life, cannot be subject to Defeasance afterwards, but at the time of making the feoffment, &c. only: but executory inheritances, such as leases for years, rents, annuities, conditions, covenants, &c. may be defeated by Defeasance made after the things granted. And it is the same of obligations, recognisances, statutes, judgments, &c. which are most commonly the subject of Defeasance, and usually made after the deed whereto they have relation. Plowd. 137: 1 Rep. 113.

If a man acknowledge a statute to another, and enters into a Defeasance, that if his lands in such a county should be extended, the statute should be void; the Defeasance, will be good and not repugnant, because it is by another deed: but the condition of a bond not to sue the obligation is void for repugnancy, being in the same deed. Moor 1035. Although the condition of an obligation, where it is repugnant to it, be void; it is otherwise in case of a Defeasance, made after the bond, for this shall be good notwithstanding: as where the obligee afterwards grants by deed to the obligor, that he will not sue thereon at all; or not till such a time, or that it shall be discharged, &c. 20 H. 7. 24: Fitz. Bar. 71.

Where

DEFESANCE.

Where a proviso goes by way of Defesance of a covenant, it must be pleaded on the other side, otherwise, where by way of explanation, or restriction of the covenant. 2 Salk. 574.

If A. be bound in bond to B. in 20*l.* and he makes a Defesance to C. that if he pay him the like sum, the obligation made by A. shall be void; this is no good Defesance, because it is not made between the same parties: though if a statute be entered into, to husband and wife, and the husband alone make a Defesance, it may be good. 14 H. 8. 101: 2 Shep. Abr. 488.

A statute, &c. may be defesanced on condition of performing a will, and paying legacies to other persons. 1 Cro. 837. If a Defesance of a statute be made, and after another Defesance is made by the same parties, the first Defesance becomes void thereby; and the second only is in force, as in case of a will. 2 Dan. s. Abi. 481. Where a statute is acknowledged to two persons, and one of them makes a Defesance, it is said to be a good discharge. Ibid. 480. If execution be sued out before the time in a Defesance is past, it shall be set aside. 1 Lil. 426.

In a Defesance of a deed of lands, the person to whom made covenants that on payment of a certain sum, on such a day, he will transfer and re-convey the estate back again; and that the maker shall enjoy, till default, &c. If the defesance be of a judgment, he covenants that on payment of the money, he will enter satisfaction on the record; if of a statute or bond, that on payment it shall be void, &c. See titles Conveyance: Deed; Mortgage.

DEFENCE, in its true legal sense, signifies, not a justification, protection, or guard, which is now its popular signification; but merely an opposing or denial [from the French défendre,] by the defendant of the truth or validity of the plaintiff's complaint. It is a general assertion that the plaintiff hath no ground of action, which assertion is afterwards extended and maintained in the defendant's plea. For it would be ridiculous to suppose that the defendant comes and defends (or in the vulgar acceptance, justifies) the force and injury, in one line, and pleads that he is not guilty of the trespass complained of, in the next. And therefore in actions of dower, where the demandant does not count of any injury done, but merely demands her endowment, (Russell v. Enr. 251.) and in assise of land, where also there is no injury alleged, but merely a question of right stated for the determination of the recognitors or jury, the tenant makes no such defence. Booth of Real Actions, 118. In writs of entry, where no injury is stated in the count, but merely the right of the demandant and the defective title of the tenant, the tenant comes and defends or denies his right, ius suum, that is (as it seems though with a small grammatical inaccuracy) the right of the demandant, the only one expressly mentioned in the pleadings; or else denies his own right to be such, as is suggested by the count of the demandant. And in writs of right the tenant always comes and defends the right of the demandant and his seisin, ius prædicti S. et seisinam ipsius, (Co. Enr. 182.) or else the seisin of his ancestor, upon which he counts, as the case may be, and the demandant may reply, that the tenant unjustly defends [i. e. denies] his, the demandant's right, and the seisin on which he counts. Nov. Narr. 230. edit. 1534. All which is extremely clear, if we understand by defence an opposition or denial, but it is otherwise inexplicably difficult. The true reason of this, says Booth, unaccountably, I could never yet find. Booth on Real Act. 94, 112.

The Courts were formerly very nice and curious with respect to the nature of the defence, so that if no defence was made, though a sufficient plea was pleaded, the plaintiff should recover judgment: Co. Lit. 127. And therefore the book entitled Novæ Narrationes or The New Talys, [edit. 1534,] at the end of almost every count, narratio, or tale, subjoins such defence as is proper for the defendant to make. For a general defence or denial was not prudent in every situation, since thereby the propriety of the writ, the competency of the plaintiff, and the cognizance of the court, were allowed. By defending the force and injury the defendant waived all pleas of misnomer; by defending the damages, all exceptions to the person of the plaintiff; and by defending either one or the other when and where it should behove him, he acknowledged the jurisdiction of the court. But of late years these niceties have been very deservedly discountenanced; though they still seem to be law, if insisted on. 3 Comm. 296—8.

A defendant cannot plead any plea, before he hath made a defence; though this must not be intended absolutely, for in a fine facias, a defence is never made. 3 Lev. 182.

DEFEND, defendere.] In our ancient laws and statutes signifies to forbid; and there is a statute intitled, Statutum de defensione portandi armis &c. 7 Ed. 1. In divers parts of England we commonly say, God defend, instead of God forbid. Blount.

DEFENDANT, defendens.] The party that is sued in a personal action; as tenant is he that is sued in an action real.

DEFENDEMUS, An ordinary word used in grants and donations; and hath this force, that it binds the donor and his heirs to defend the donee, if any one go about to lay any incumbrance on the thing given, other than what is contained in the deed of donation. Bract. lib. 2. c. 16. See title Warranty.

DEFENDER OF THE FAITH, fidei defensor.] A peculiar title belonging to the King of England, as Catholic, to the King of Spain; and Molt Christian to the King of France, &c. These titles were given by the Pope of Rome; and that of Defensor Fidei was first conferred by Pope Leo the Tenth on King Henry the Eighth, for writing against Martin Luther, and the bull for it bears date quinto Idus Octob. 1521. Lord Herbert's Hist. Hen. VIII. 105. But the Pope, on King Henry's suppressing the houses of religion, at the time of the Reformation, satily sentenced him to be deprived of his title, and deposed from his crown; though in the 35th year of his reign this title, &c. was confirmed by parliament; which hath continued to be used by all succeeding Kings to this day. Leg. Constitutis, 47, 48.

DEFENDERE SE per Corpus suum, To offer duel or combat as a legal trial and appeal. Bract. lib. 3. cap. 26. See title Battle.

DEFENDERE UNICA MANU. Words signifying to wage law, and a denial of the accusation upon oath. See Manus, Wages of Law.

DEFENSA. A park or place fenced in for deer, and defended as a property for that use and service. H. Knighton, sub. ann. 1352.

DEFENSIVA,

DEFENSIVA, A Lord or Earl, of the Marches; who were the wardens or defenders of their country. Cowel.

DEFENSO. That part of any open field or place that was allotted for corn and hay, and upon which there was no common or feeding, was anciently said to be in defenso: so of any meadow ground, that was laid in for hay only. It was likewise the same of a wood, where part was inclosed and fenced up, to secure the growth of the underwood from the injury of cattle. Mon. Angl. Tom. 3. p. 305.—Cowel.

DEFENSUM, An inclosure of land, or any fenced ground. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. p. 114.

DEFORCEMENT. Deforciamentum.] A species of injury by ouster or privation of the freehold, where the entry of the present tenant or possessor was originally lawful, but his detainer is now become unlawful. 3 Comm. 172.

For that at first the with-holding was with force and violence, it was called a deforcement of the lands or tenements: but now it is generally extended to all kind of wrongful with-holding of lands or tenements from the right owner.—There is a writ called a quod ei deforciat, which lieth where tenant in tail, or tenant for life, loseth by default, by the Stat. Westm. 2. c. 4, he shall have a quod ei deforciat against the recoveror; and yet he cometh in by course of law. 1 Inst. 331, b. See title Quod ei deforciat—and as to entries with actual force, tit. Forcible Entry.

Deforcement in its most extensive sense, is nomen generalissimum signifying the holding of any lands or tenements to which another person hath a right. Co. Litt. 277. So that this includes as well an abatement, an intrusion, a disseisin, or a discontinuance, as any other species of wrong whatsoever, whereby he that hath right to the freehold is kept out of possession. But, as contradictinghish from these, it is only such a detainer of the freehold, from him that hath the right of property, but never had any possession under that right, as falls not within any of those terms. As in case where a lord has a seignory, and lands escheat to him propter defectum sanguinis, but the seisin of the lands is with-held from him; here the injury is not abatement, for the right vests not in the lord as heir or devisee; nor is it intrusion, for it vests not in him who hath the remainder or reversion; nor is it disseisin, for the lord was never seised; nor does it at all bear the nature of any species of discontinuance; but being neither of these four, it is therefore a deforcement. F. N. B. 143. If a man marries a woman, and during the coverture is seised of lands, and aliens, and dies; is disseised, and dies; or dies in possession; and the alienee, disseisor, or heir, enters on the tenements, and doth not assign the widow her dower; this is also a Deforcement to the widow, by with-holding lands to which she hath a right. F. N. B. 147. In like manner, if a man lease lands to another for term of years, or for the life of a third person, and the term expires by surrender, efflux of time, or death of the cestuy que vie; and the lessee or any stranger, who, was at the expiration of the term in possession, holds over, and refuses to deliver the possession to him in remainder, or reversion, this is likewise a Deforcement. Finch L. 263: F. N. B. 201, 5, 6, 7.

Deforcements may also arise upon the breach of condition in law; as if a woman gives lands to a man by deed, to the intent that he marry her, and he will not when thereunto required, but continues to hold the lands:

this is such a fraud on the man's part, that the law will not allow it to develt the woman's right of possession, though his entry being lawful, it does develt the actual possession, and thereby becomes a Deforcement. F. N. B. 205.

Deforcements may also be grounded on the disability of the party deforced: as if an infant do make an alienation of his lands, and the alienee enters and keeps possession; now, as the alienation is voidable, this possession as against the infant (or, in case of his decease, as against his heir) is after avoidance wrongful, and therefore a Deforcement. Finch L. 264: F. N. B. 192. The same happens, when one of non-sane memory aliens his lands or tenements, and the alienee enters and takes possession, this may also be a Deforcement. Finch L. 264: F. N. B. 202.

Another species of Deforcement is, where two persons have the same title to land, and one of them enters and keeps possession against the other, as where the ancestor dies seised of an estate in fee-simple, which descends to two sisters as coparceners, and one of them enters before the other, and will not suffer her sister to enter and enjoy her moiety; this is also a Deforcement. Finch L. 293, 4: F. N. B. 197.

Deforcement may also be grounded on the non-performance of a covenant real; as if a man seised of lands, covenants to convey them to another, and neglects or refuses to do so, but continues possession against him; this possession being wrongful, is a Deforcement. F. N. B. 146. In levying a fine of lands, the person, against whom the fictitious action is brought, upon a supposed breach of covenant, is called the deforciant. And, lastly, by way of analogy, keeping a man by any means out of a freehold Office is construed to be a Deforcement; though, being an incorporeal hereditament the deforciant has no corporal possession. So that whatever injurious with-holding the possession of a freehold is not included under abatement, intrusion, disseisin, or discontinuance, (See those titles) is comprised under Deforcement. 3 Comm. 172, 4.

DEFORCEOR, deforcior, from the French forceur, expugnator.] One that overcometh, and casteth out by force. Britton, cap. 53: Old Nat. Brev. fol. 118: Bract. lib. 4. cap. 1. See title Deforcement.

DEFORCIANT, Mentioned in the Stat. 23 El. c. 3, is the same with a deforceor. See title Deforcement.

DEFORCIATIO, Is used for a distress, or holding of goods for satisfaction of a debt. Paroch. Antig. 293.

DEGRADATION, degradatio.] An ecclesiastical censure, whereby a clergyman is divested of his holy orders. There are two sorts of degrading, by the Canon law; one summary, by word only; the other solemn, by stripping the party degraded of those ornaments and rights which are the ensigns of his order or degree. Selden's Titles of Hon. 787.

Degradation is otherwise called deposition; and in former times the degrading of a clerk was no more than a displacing or suspension from his office: but the Canons have since distinguished between a deposition and a degradation; the one being now used as a greater punishment than the other, because the bishop takes from the criminal all the badges of his order, and afterwards delivers him to the secular judge, where he cannot purge himself of the offence whereof he is convicted, &c.

There

There is likewise a degradation of a Lord, or a Knight, &c. at Common law; when they are attainted of treason; as Hil. 18 Ed. 2. Andrew Harclay, Earl of Carlisle, who was also a Knight, was degraded, and when judgment of treason was pronounced against him, his sword was broken over his head, and his spurs hewn off his heels, &c. And there is a degrading by act of parliament; for by Stat. 13 Car. 2. cap. 16, William Lord Mordaunt, Sir Henry Mildmay, and others, were degraded from all titles of honour, dignities, and preeminences, and none of them to bear or use the title of Lord, Knight, Esquire, or Gentleman, or any coat of arms for ever after. See title Peers.

DEHORS, Fr. without.] A word used in ancient pleading, when a thing is without the land, &c. or out of the point in question. Vide Hors de son fief.

DE INJURIA SUA PROPRIA, absque tali causa. Are words used in replications, in actions of trespass. 1 Lil. Abr. 427. When one justifies by command or authority derived from another, or if a defendant justifies by authority at Common law, as a constable by arrest for breach of the peace; or if he justifies by act of parliament, &c. the plaintiff may reply, that he did it of his own wrong, without any such cause as the defendant has alleged. Cro. Eliz. 539: 2 Salk. 628. See and this Dict. titles Trespass; Pleading.

DEI JUDICIUM. The old Saxon trial by ordeal was so called: because they thought it an appeal to God, for the justice of a cause, and verily believed that the decision was according to the will and pleasure of Divine Providence. Domest. See title Ordeal.

DEIS. The high table of a monastery. See Dagus.

DELATURA, Saxon.] An accusation: and sometimes it hath been taken for the reward of an informer. Leges H. 1. c. 46: Leges Hen. 20, apud Brompton.

DEL CREDERE. A commission del credere is an undertaking by an insurance-broker, for an additional premium, to insure his principal against the contingency of the failure of the under-writer. See Grove & al^s v. Lubbois, 1 Term Rep. 112.

DELEGATES, Commissioners of appeal appointed by the King under the Great Seal, in cases of appeals from the Ecclesiastical Court, &c. by Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19. See title Count-Ecclesiastical, 6.

DELF. From the Sax. delfan, to dig, or delve.] A quarry or mine, where stone or coal, &c. are dug. Stat. 31 Eliz. 7. The word delve for dig, is still retained in some parts of this kingdom.

DELIVERANCE. When a criminal is brought to trial, and the clerk in court asks him whether he is Guilty, or Not guilty, to which he replies Not guilty, and puts himself on God and his country, the clerk wishes him a good deliverance.

DELIVERY OF DEEDS, See titles Date; Deed.

DEMAND, Fr. demande, Lat. postulatum.] A calling upon a man for any thing due. There are two manner of demands, the one in deed, the other in law: in deed, as in a preceptum quod reddat, there is an express demand. Every entry on land, distress for rent, taking of goods, &c. which may be done without words, is a demand in law. 8 Rep. 153.

It is also said there are three sorts of demands; one in writing without speaking, and that is in every preceptum; one without writing, being a verbal demand of the person, who is to do or perform the thing; and another made without either word or writing, which is a demand in law, in cases of entries on lands, &c. As an entry on land, and taking a distress, are a demand in law of the land and rent, so the bringing an action of debt for money due on an obligation is a demand in law of the debt. 1 Lil. 432: 1 Nelf. Abr. Debts, claims, &c. are to be demanded and made in time, by the statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, and other statutes; or they will be lost by law. See title Limitation of Actions.

Where there is a duty, which the law makes payable on demand, no demand need be made; but if there is no duty till demand, in such case there must be a demand, to make the duty. 1 Lil. 432: Cro. Eliz. 548. Upon a penalty the party need not make a demand, as he must in the case of a nomine pame; for if a man be bound to pay 20 l. on such a day, and in default thereof to pay 40 l. the 40 l. must be paid without demand. 1 Mod. 89. If a man leases land by indenture for years, reserving a rent payable at certain days, and the lessee covenants to pay the said rent at the days limited; the lessor is intitled to his rent, without demand, for the lessee is obliged to pay it at the days, by force of his covenant. 2 Dav. Abr. 101. But if a lessor makes a lease rendering rent, and the lessee covenants to pay the rent, being lawfully demanded, the lessee is not bound to pay the rent, without a demand, Ibid. 102.

A person makes a lease for life, or years, reserving a rent upon condition, that if the lessee doth not pay the rent at the day, that then without any demand it shall be lawful for the lessor to re-enter; by this special agreement of the parties, the lessor may enter on non-payment of the rent, without any demand. 2 Dav. Abr. 100. A lease for years, with condition to be void, on non-payment of the rent, is not void unless the rent be demanded; and an interest shall not be determined, without an actual demand, Hob. 67, 331: 2 Mod. 264. But now by the statutes relative to rents an ejectment may be maintained without an actual entry. See Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 2: 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 16: and this Dict. titles Ejectment; Lease; Rent.

A demand is to be legal, and made in such manner as the law requires: if it be for rent of a messuage and lands, it ought to be made at the messuage, at the fore door of the house, the most notorious place: where lands and woods are let together, the rent is to be demanded on the land, as the most worthy thing, and on the most public part thereof: if wood only be leased, the demand must be made at the gate of the wood, &c. 1 Inst. 201: Popb. 58: Vide Dyer 51: 1 Leon. 425: Cro. Eliz. 209.

He that would enter for a condition broken, which tends to the destruction of an estate, must,—1. Demand the rent.—2. Upon the land, if there is no house.—3. If there is a house, at the fore door; though it is not material whether any person be in the house or no.—4. If the appointment is at any other place off the land, the demand must be at that place.—5. The time of the demand is to be certain, that the tenant may be there, if he will, to pay the rent: and the last time of demand of the rent, must be such a convenient time before the sun-setting of the last day of payment, as the money may be numbered. The lessor or his sufficient attorney is to remain upon the land, the last day on which the rent due ought to be paid, until it be so dark that he cannot, cannot see to tell the money: and if the money thus demanded is not paid, this is a denial in law, though there are no words of denial; upon which a rent may be made. 2 Inst. 201, 202; 4 Rep. 73.—See further title Entry: As to demand of lands, See title Fine.

As a release of suits is more large than of quarrels or actions; so a release of demands is more large and beneficial than either of them. By a release of all demands, all executions, and all freeholds, and inheritances, executory, are released: by a release of demands to the disseisor, the right of entry in the land, and all that is contained therein, is released. And he that releaseth all demands, excludes himself from all actions, entries, and seizures; but a release of all demands, is no bar in a writ of error to reverse an outlawry. 8 Co. 153, 154.—See title Release.

DEMANDANT, petens.] All civil actions are prosecuted either by demands or plaintiffs, and the pursuer is called demandant, in actions real; and plaintiff, in personal actions: in a real action, lands, &c. are demanded. Co. Lit. 127.

DEMEINE, DEMAIN, DEMESNE, Fr.—Lat. dominium, domanium; also written domaine, and signifieth patrimonium domini.] Demeins according to common speech, are the lord's chief manor place, with the lands thereto belonging; tenementales, which he and his ancestors have from time to time kept in their own manual occupation, for the maintenance of themselves and their families; and all the parts of a manor, except what is in the hands of freeholders, are said to be demeins. Copyhold lands have been accounted demeins, because they that are the tenants hereof are judged in law to have no other estate but at the will of the lord; so that it is still reputed to be, in a manner, in the lord's hands; but this word is oftentimes used for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor hath in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee demised at a rack-rent, and such other land appertaining to the manor, which belongeth to free or copyholders. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 3. c. 9: Fleta, lib. 5. cap. 5. As demeins are lands in the lord's hands manually occupied, some have thought this word derived from de manu; but it is from the Fr. demaine, which is used for an inheritance, and that comes from dominium, because a man has a more absolute dominion over that which he keeps in his hands, than of that which he lets to his tenants. Blount.

Domanium properly signifies the King's lands in France, appertaining to him in property: and in like manner do we in some sort use it here in England; for all lands, it is said, are either mediately or immediately held of the Crown; and when a man in pleading would signify his land to be his own, he saith, that he is seised thereof in his demein, (or rather demesne) as of fee; whereby is meant, that although his land be to him and his heirs, it depends upon a superior lord, and is held by rent or service, &c. Lit. lib. 1. cap. 1. From this it hath been observed, that lands in the hands of a common person cannot be true demesnes: and certain it is, that lands in the possession of a subject, are called demeins in a different sense from the demein lands of the Crown. For demeins, or domains, in the hands of a subject, have their derivation à dmo, because they are lands in his possession for the maintaining of his house: but the domains of the Crown are held of the King, who is absolute lord, having proper dominion; and not by any feudal tenure of a superior lord, as of fee. Wood's Inst. 139.

Demein is sometimes taken in a special signification, as opposite to frank-fee: for example, Those lands which were in the possession of King Edward the Confessor are called ancient demains, or ancient demesne, and all others frank free; and the tenants which hold any of those lands are called tenants in ancient demain, or ancient demesne, and the others tenants in frank-fee, &c. Kitch. 98. See title Ancient Demesne.

DEMISE, demisso.] Is applied to an estate either in fee, for term of life, or years, but most commonly the latter: it is used in writs for any estate. 2 Inst. 483. The word demise, in a lease for years, implies a warranty to the lessee and his assignee; and upon this word action of covenant lies against the heir of the lessor, if he oust the lessee: it binds the executors of the lessor, who has fee-simple, or fee-tail, where any lessee is evicted, and the executor hath assets; but not the lessor for life's executors, without express words, that the lessee shall hold his whole term. Dyer 257: Jenk. Cent. 35.—See titles Lease; Covenant.

The King's death is in law termed, the demise of the King, to his royal successor, of his crown and dignity, &c. See King.

DEMISE AND REDEMISE, The conveyance by demise and redemise is where there are mutual leases made from one to another on each side, of the same land, or something out of it; and is proper upon the grant of a rent charge, &c.

DEMURRER, from the Lat. demorare, Fr. demeurer.] A pause or stop, put to any action upon a point of difficulty, which must be determined by the Court, before any farther proceedings can be had therein: for in every action the point of controversy consists either in fact or in law; if in fact, that is tried by the jury; but if in law, that is determined by the Court.

A demurrer therefore, is an issue upon matter of law. It confesses the facts to be true, as stated by the opposite party; but denies that by the law arising upon those facts, any injury is done to the plaintiff; or that the defendant has made out a lawful excuse; according to the party which first demurs, (demoratur, moratur in lege) rests or abides in law upon the point in question. As, if the matter of the declaration be insufficient in law, (as by not assigning any sufficient trespass, &c.) then the defendant demurs to the declaration.—If on the other hand the defendant's excuse or plea be invalid, (as if he pleads that he committed the trespass by authority from a stranger, without making out the stranger's right,) here the plaintiff may demur to the plea: and so in every other part of the proceedings.

The form of such demurrer is by averring the declaration or plea, the replication or rejoinder, to be insufficient in law to maintain the action or the defence; and therefore praying judgment for want of sufficient matter alleged. Sometimes demurrers are merely for want of sufficient form in the writ or declaration. But in case of exception to the form or manner of pleading, the party demurring, must by Stats. 27 Eliz. c. 5: 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, set forth the causes of his demurrer. See titles Amendment, Pleading.—And upon either a general or special demurrer, the opposite party must aver it to be sufficient, which is called a joinder in demurrer; and then the the parties are at issue in point of law; which issue, as above mentioned, the judges of the court before which the action is brought must determine. 3 Comm. 314: Finch L. lib. 4. c. 40: 1 Inst. 71.

A demurrer may be to the writ, (i. e. the original, where the proceedings are by original,) to the count, or declaration, or to any part of the pleadings.

A demurrer is admitting the matter of fact, since it refers the law arising on the facts, to the judgment of the Court; and therefore the fact is taken to be true on such demurrer, or otherwise the Court has no foundation on which to make any judgment. Gilb. Hist. of C. P. 55.

As a demurrer at Common law did confess all matters formally pleaded; so now by the statutes a general demurrer does confess all matters pleaded, though informally. Hob. 233. But a special demurrer admits only facts well pleaded.

Demurrers are general, without shewing any particular causes: or special, where the causes of demurrer are particularly set down: and the judgment of the court is not to be played upon an insufficient declaration or plea, otherwise than by a demurrer; when the matter comes judicially before the court. If in pleadings, &c. a matter is insufficiently alledged, that the court cannot give certain judgment upon it, a general demurrer will suffice; and for want of substance, a general demurrer is good: but for want of form, there must be a special demurrer, and the causes specially assigned. The practice is now, on a special demurrer, to take advantage of any real error, though not expressed, in the causes assigned.

A man who demurs generally, shall take advantage of all matters which are requisite to shew a good right or title in the plaintiff. Ploud. Com. 66 a: Hob. 301.

If a man demurs for form, he must shew specially the causes of demurrer. 2 Rol. 330: Stat. ubi supra: R. M. 1654. § 17.

If there be a general demurrer to the declaration, the plaintiff may apply to a judge for a summons for leave to amend; if not, he may proceed to join in demurrer, and make up the demurrer-book himself, a copy of which he is to deliver to defendant's attorney, and if not paid for on demand, sign judgment. R. Tr. 12 W. 3. In case of a demurrer to a plea, &c. by a plaintiff, the demurrer-book cannot be made up by the defendant, until default made by the plaintiff. R. Tr. 11 W. 3.

Demurrers likewise, are either in actions at law, or in suits in equity.

A Demurrer in Equity, is nearly of the same nature with a demurrer in law; being an appeal to the judgment of the court, whether the defendant shall be bound to answer the plaintiff's bill: as for want of sufficient matter of equity therein contained: or where the plaintiff upon his own shewing appears to have no right; or where the bill seeks a discovery of a thing which may cause a forfeiture of any kind, or may convict a man of any criminal misbehaviour. For any of these causes, a defendant may demur to a bill in equity; and if on demurrer the defendant prevails, the plaintiff's bill shall be dismissed; if the demurrer be over-ruled, the defendant is ordered to answer. 3 Comm. 446.

It is allowed a good cause of demurrer in Chancery, that a bill is brought for part of a matter only, which is proper for one entire account, because the plaintiff shall not split causes, and make a multiplicity of suits. Vern. 29.

VOL. I.

If an original bill be brought for matters, part of which are in a former bill and decree, and part new, or by way of supplemental bill; the court will, on a demurrer to so much as was contained in the former decree, send it to a master to see what was, and what was not in the first bill, and allow the demurrer accordingly. Gilb. E. R. 184. See farther, title Chancery.

After the plaintiff and defendant have joined issue in fact, which goes to the whole, neither of them can demur, without consent of the other. But there may be a demurrer to evidence. Though now it is more usual to take exceptions to evidence at the bar at Nisi prius, or tenns, which is tantamount to a demurrer. If doubts arise, cases are made, or points reserved, and a verdict taken, subject to the opinion of the court. See post. title Demurrer to Evidence.

If a defendant pleads to part, and demurs to part; the demurrer should first be determined, and the issue last; because upon the trial of the issue, the jury may assess damages as to both. Palm. 517. Where there is a demurrer in part, and issue is joined upon the other part, and the plaintiff hath judgment on the demurrer; here he may enter a Non-prof. as to the issue, and proceed to a writ of enquiry upon the demurrer: but otherwise he cannot have such writ of inquiry. 1 Salk. 219: See 1 Stra 532, 574.

If there be three counts in the declaration, to which there is a general demurrer; if any one of the counts be good, judgment must be for the plaintiff, if such count can be joined with the other two. 1 Wyl. 252.

A demurrer is to be signed, and argued on both sides by counsel. After a demurrer is joined, the plaintiff having entered it on the roll, delivers the roll to the Secondary, and makes a motion for a Consilium or day to argue it, which the court grants of course, on the Secondary's reading the record; then the demurrer must be entered by the plaintiff in the court-book with the Secondary, who, on his rule sets down the day appointed for argument, at least four days before the demurrer is argued: and paper-books, containing all the proceedings at length, which are afterwards entered on record, are made and delivered to the judges, two days before argument. See Imp. K. B.

The demurrant argues first, and the Court will hear but two counsel on a day, viz. one of a side; and, if desired on either side, (unless the case be very plain,) the court will hear further arguments the next term. If the major part of the judges of the court cannot determine the matter on the demurrer, it is to be sent into the Exchequer-chamber to be determined by all the judges of England. 1 Inst. 71. Demurrers are now frequently put in for delay. In such cases, the party wishing to avoid the delay, makes up four demurrer books, and delivers to the judges, two days before the day when judgment is moved for; which is given of course without argument.

When the Court gives judgment on demurrer in debt for the plaintiff in the action, the judgment is for the plaintiff to recover his debt, costs and damages; but if it be in action on the case, a writ of inquiry of damages must be awarded, before the plaintiff can have final judgment. If judgment on the demurrer is for the defendant in the action, the judgment is, that the plaintiff take nothing by his writ, bill, &c. and that the defendant go without day. Wood's Inst. 603.

General demurrer being entered, it cannot be afterwards waived, without leave of the court, but a special demurrer generally may, unless the plaintiff hath lost a term, or the assizes by the defendant's demurring. Impey, K. B.

DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE. This happens where a record or other matter is produced in evidence, concerning the legal consequences of which there arises a doubt in law: in which case the adverse party may, if he pleases, demur to the whole evidence; which admits the truth of every fact that has been alledged, but denies the sufficiency of them all in point of law to maintain or overthrow the issue, as the case may be. 1 Inst. 72: 5 Rep. 104. This draws the question of law from the cognizance of the jury to be decided, as it ought, by the court, out of which the record is sent. 3 Comm. 372.

So if the plaintiff brings witnesses to prove a fact, and a matter of law ariseth upon it; if the defendant admits their testimony to be true; there also the defendant may demur in law; and so may the plaintiff demur upon the defendant's evidence. And in these cases, the counsel for the plaintiff and defendant agree the matter of fact in dispute; and the jury are discharged; and the matter of law is referred to the judges to determine.

But where evidence is given for the King, in an information or other suit, and the defendant offers to demur upon it, the King's counsel are not obliged to join therein; but the Court ought to direct the jury to find the special matter. And, indeed, because juries of late usually find a doubtful matter specially, demurrers upon evidence are now seldom used. See 5 Rep. 104: 1 Inst. 72: 2 Jur. 426.

If the Court doth not agree to a demurrer to evidence in a civil cause; they ought to seal a bill of exceptions, &c. 9 Rep. 13—See title Bill of Exceptions.

DEMURRER TO INDICTMENTS. This is incident to criminal cases, as well as civil, when the fact as alledged is allowed to be true, but the prisoner joins issue upon some point of law in the indictment; by which he insists that the fact, as stated, is no felony, treason, or whatever the crime is alledged to be. Thus, for instance, if a man be indicted for feloniously stealing a greyhound, which is an animal in which no valuable property can be had, and therefore it is not felony, but only a civil trespass to steal it: in this case the party indicted may demur to the indictment; denying it to be felony, though he confesses the act of taking it. Some have held, (2 Hal. P. C. 257,) that if on demurrer, the point of law be adjudged against the prisoner, he shall have judgement and execution, as if convicted by verdict. But this is denied by others; (2 Hawk. P. C. c. 32. § 5, 6;) who hold, that in such case he shall be directed and received to plead the general issue, Not guilty, after a demurrer determined against him. Which appears the more reasonable, because it is clear, that if the prisoner freely discovers the fact in court, and refers to the opinion of the court, whether it be felony or no; and upon the fact thus shewn, it appears to be felony; the court will not record the confession, but admit him afterwards to plead not guilty. 2 Hal. P. C. 225. And this seems to be a case of the same nature, being for the most part a mistake in point of law, and in the conduct of his pleading; and though a man, by mis-pleading, may in some cases lose his property, yet the law will not suffer him by such niceties to lose his life. However, upon this doubt, demurrers to indictments are seldom used; since the same advantages may be taken upon a plea of Not guilty; or afterwards in arrest of judgment, when the verdict has established the fact. See Smith v. Bowen, Mich. 7 An. in which case the demurrer was continued on the record with a cesset triatio exitus, &c. and after the demurrer was determined against the defendant, a Vener was awarded. See Salk. 59, 60: Dyer 38: 2 Hawk. P. C. ubi supra in n: 4 Comm. 333, 4.

DEMY-SANGUE, Half blood: where a man marries a woman, and hath issue by her a son, and the wife dying he marries another woman, by whom he hath also a son; now these two sons, though they are called brothers, are but brothers of the half-blood, because they had not both one father and mother: and therefore by law they cannot be heirs to one another; for he that claims freehold as heir to another by descent, must be of the whole blood to him from whom he claimeth. Terms de Ley.—See titles Descent, Executor.

DEN, from the Sax. Den. i. e. Vallis, Locus Sylvestris.] The name of places ending in den, as Biddenden, &c. signify the situation to be in a valley, or near woods. Blount.

DEN AND STROND, Is a liberty for ships or vessels to run or come ashore: and King Ed. 1. by charter granted this privilege to the Barons of the Cinque Ports. Placit. temp. Ed. 1.

DENA TERRÆ, A hollow place between two hills; and the word dena is used for a little portion of woody ground, commonly called a coppice. Domesday.

DENARII, A general term for any sort of pecunia numerata, or ready money. Pavob. Antiq. 320.

DENARII DE CARITATE, Customary oblations made to Cathedral Churches about the time of Pentecost, when the parish priests, and many of their people went in procession to visit their mother church: this custom was afterwards changed into a settled due, and usually charged upon the parish priest; though at first it was but a gift of charity, or present, to help to maintain and adorn the bishop's see. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. f. 15.

DENARIUS, An English penny: it is mentioned in the Stat. Ed. 1. de compositione mensurarum, &c.

DENARIUS DEI, God's penny, or earnest money given and received by the parties to contracts, &c. Cart. Ed. 1. The earnest money is called Denarius Dei, or God's penny, because, in former times, the piece of money so given to bind the contract, was given to God, i. e. To the church, or the poor.

DENARIUS S. PETRI, An annual payment of one penny from every family to the Pope, during the time that the Roman Catholic religion prevailed in this kingdom, paid on the feast of St. Peter. See Peter-Pence.

DENARIUS TERTIUS COMITATUS, Of the fines and other profits of the county-courts, originally when those courts had superior jurisdiction before other courts were erected, two parts were reserved to the King, and a third part or penny to the Earl of the county; who either received it in specie at the assizes and trials, or had an equivalent composition for it out of the Exchequer. Paroib. Antiq. 418.

DENBERA,

DENBERA, From the Sax. Den, a vale, and berg, a barrow or hog. A place for the running and feeding of hogs, wherein they are penned; by some called a Swinecomb. Convel.

DENIZEN, See title Alien.

DENSHIRING OF LAND, Is the casting parings of earth, turf, and stubble into heaps, which when dried are burnt into ashes, for a compost on poor barren land. This method of improvement is used on taking in and inclosing common and waste ground; and in many parts of England is called burn-beating, but in Staffordshire and other counties, they term it denshiring of land.

DE NON DECIMANDO Molus. To be discharged of tithes. See Modus Decimandi.

DE NON RESIDENTIA CLERICI REGIS, An ancient writ where a person was employed in the King's service, &c. to excuse and discharge him of non-residence. 2 Inst. 624.

DEODAND, Deo dandum.] By this is meant whatever personal chattel is the immediate occasion of the death of any reasonable creature: which is forfeited to the King to be applied to pious uses, and distributed in alms by his high almoner, though formerly destined to a more superstitious purpose. 1 H. P. C. 419: Fleta lib. 1. c. 25.

It seems to have been originally designed as an expiation for the souls of such as were snatched away by sudden death; and for that purpose ought properly to have been given to Holy Church, in the same manner as the apparel of a stranger who was found dead, was applied to purchase masses for the good of his soul. And this may account for that rule of law, that no deodand is due, where an infant under the age of discretion is killed by a fall from a cart or horse, or the like, not being in motion; whereas, if an adult person falls from thence, and is killed, the thing is certainly forfeited. 3 Inst. 57: 1 H. P. C. 422. Such infant being presumed incapable of actual sin, and therefore not needing a deodand to purchase propitiatory masses. 1 Comm. 300.

Thus stands the law, if a person be killed by a fall from a thing standing still. But if a horse, or ox, or other animal of his own motion, kill as well an infant, as an adult; or if a cart run over him, they shall in either case be forfeited as deodands; which is grounded upon this additional reason, that such misfortunes are in part owing to the negligence of the owner; and therefore he is properly punished by such forfeiture. Bract. l. 3. c. 5.

Where a thing not in motion is the occasion of a man's death, that part only which is the immediate cause is forfeited; as if a man be climbing up the wheel of a cart, and is killed by falling from it, the wheel alone is a Deodand. 1 H. P. C. 422.—But wherever the thing is in motion, not only that part which immediately gives the wound (as the wheel which runs over his body,) but all things which move with it, and help to make the wound more dangerous, (as the cart and loading, which increase the pressure of the wheel,) are forfeited. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

It matters not whether the owner of the thing moving to the death of a person were concerned in the killing or not: for if a man kills another with my sword, the sword is forfeited. Dr. & Stud. d. 2. c. 51. And therefore in all indictments for homicide, the instrument of death, and the value, are presented and found by the Grand Jury; (as that the stroke was given by a certain penknife, value 6d.) that the King or his grantee may claim the Deodand. For it is no Deodand, unless it be presented as such by a jury of twelve men. 3 Inst. 57: 5 Rep. 110: 1 Inst. 144.

No Deodands are due for accidents happening upon the high sea, that being out of the jurisdiction of the Common law: but if a man falls from a boat or ship in fresh water and is drowned, it hath been said that the vessel and cargo are in strictness of law a Deodand. 3 Inst. 58: 1 H. P. C. 423: Moll. de Jur. Marit. 2. 225.

Juries however have of late perhaps too frequently taken upon themselves to mitigate these forfeitures, by finding only some trifling thing, or part of an entire thing to have been the occasion of the death. But in such cases, although the finding by the jury be hardly warrantable by law, the court of K. B. hath generally refused to interfere on behalf of the Lord of the Franchise, to assist so unequitable a claim. Test. on Homic. 266.

Deodands, as well as other forfeitures in general, wrecks, treasure-trove, &c. may be granted by the King to particular subjects as a Royal Franchise: and indeed they are for the most part granted out to the lords of manors or other liberties; to the perversion of their original design. 1 Comm. 299. & seq.

If a man riding over a river, is thrown off his horse by the violence of the water, and drowned, his horse is not Deodand; for his death was caused per cursum aquæ. 2 Co. 483.

If a person wounded by any accident, as of a cart, horse, &c. die within a year and a day after, what did it, is Deodand: so that if a horse strikes a man, and afterwards the owner sells the horse, and then the party that was stricken dies of the stroke, the horse, notwithstanding the sale, shall be forfeited as Deodand. Plowd. 260: 5 Rep. 110.

Things fixed to the freehold; as a bell hanging in a steeple, a wheel of a mill, &c. unless severed from the freehold, cannot be Deodands. 2 Inst. 281. And there is no forfeiture of a Deodand, till the matter is found of record, by the jury that finds the death; who ought also to find and appraise the Deodand. 5 Rep. 110: 1 Inst. 144. After the coroner's inquisition, the sheriff is answerable for the value, where the Deodand belongs to the King; and he may levy the same on the town, &c. Wherefore the inquest ought to find the value of it. 1 Hawk. P. C.

Grants of Deodands how to be inrolled, 3 & 4 H. & M. c. 22. sect. 1. The goods and chattels of felio de se, &c. were likewise anciently held to be Deodands, and are now forfeitable to the Crown. See title Felio de se. 1 Lit. 443.

DE ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONIS, A writ where a person is distrained for rent, that ought to be paid by others proportionably with him. F. N. B. 234. If a man hold twenty acres of land, by fealty and twenty shillings rent; and he aliens one acre to one person, and another acre to another, &c. the lord shall not distrain one alienee for the whole rent, but for the rate and value of the land he hath purchased, &c. And if he be distrained for more, he shall have this writ. Nova Nat. Br. 586.

DEPARTURE.

DEPARTURE. A term of law properly applied to a defendant, who first pleading one thing in bar of an action, and being replied unto, in his rejoinder, quits that and shews another matter, contrary to, or not pursuing his first plea, which is called a departure from his plea; also where a plaintiff in his declaration sets forth one thing, and after the defendant hath pleaded, the plaintiff in his replication shews new matter different from his declaration, this is a departure. Plowd. 7, 8: 2 Inst. 147. But if a plaintiff in his replication depart from his count, and the defendant takes issue upon it; if it be found for the plaintiff, the defendant shall take no advantage of that departure: though it would have been otherwise, if he had demurred upon it. Ravn. 86: 1 Lil. Abr. 444.

If a man plead a general agreement in bar, and in his rejoinder alledge a special one, this is a departure in pleading: and if an action is brought at Common law, and the plaintiff by his replication would maintain it by virtue of a custom, &c. it hath been held a departure. 1 Nelf. Abr. 638. Where a matter is omitted at first, it is a departure to plead it afterwards. Ibid. If in covenant, the defendant pleads performance; and after rejoins that the plaintiff ousted him, it is a departure from his plea. Raym. 22. In debt upon bond for performance of covenants in a lease, the defendant pleaded performance; and afterwards in his rejoinder set forth that so much was paid in money, and so much in taxes, &c. upon demurrer, it was adjudged a departure from the plea; because he had pleaded performance, and afterwards set forth other matter of excuse, &c. 1 Salk. 221.

Debt upon bond for performance of an award, made for payment of money; if the defendant plead performance, and the plaintiff having replied and assigned a breach of non-payment, &c. the defendant rejoins that he is ready to pay the money at the day, &c. this is a departure from his plea; for performance is payment of the money; and payment, and ready to pay, are different issues. Sid. 10: 4 Leon. 79. In debt upon bond for non-performance of an award; the defendant pleads that the award was, that he should release all suits to the plaintiff, which he had done; the plaintiff replies that such an award was made, but that the award was further, that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff such a sum, &c. the defendant rejoins that true it is, that by the award he was to pay the plaintiff the said sum, but that the award was also, that the plaintiff should release to the defendant all actions, &c. which he had not done; on demurrer this was held a departure from the plea, being all new matter. 2 Bull. 39: Godb. 155: 1 Nelf. 637. After nullum fuerunt arbitrium, the defendant cannot plead that the award is void, without being a departure from the former plea: and if where ad idem agitur is pleaded, then the award is set forth, and a joinder that it was not tendered, it is a departure. 1 Lev. 133: Lut. 385.

A departure must be always from something that is material; or it will not be allowed: if in trespass for taking goods, the plaintiff reply, that after the taking, the defendant converted them to his own use, this being an abuse, makes a trespass; and the conversion is either trover or trespass at the plaintiff's election, so that by his replication he may make it trespass, and be no departure. 1 Salk. 221, 222. In circumstances of time, &c. laid as to promises, the plaintiff is not tied to a precise day; for if the defendant by his plea, force the plaintiff to vary, it is no departure from his declaration. 1 Nelf. 640, 641. And if another place be mentioned in the replication, in action of debt; as this is a personal thing, it is no departure, because he who is indebted to another in one place, is so in every place. Sid. 228.

If new matter which explains or fortifies the bar be rejoined by the defendant, it is not a departure. 1 Wils. 8; 97, 8: Co. Lit. 304 a.

A departure being a denial of what is before admitted, is a saying and un saying, and for that an issue cannot be joined upon it, it is bad for the incertainty. 1 Lil. 444. See further titles Pleading: Novel Assignment: Trespass.

DEPOPULATIO AGRORUM, Destroying and ravaging a country; an offence where the benefit of clergy was denied at common law. 2 Hals. Pl. 333. See title Clergy, benefit of.

DEPOPULATION, Depopulatio.] Is a wasting or destruction; a desolation or unpeopling of any place, by fire, sword, pestilence, &c. 12 Rep. 30.

DEPOPULATORES AGRORUM, These were great offenders, by the ancient common law; so called, because by prostrating and ruining of houses for habitation of the King's people, they, as it were, depopulated towns and villages, leaving them without inhabitants. See Stat. 4 Hen. 3. c. 2: 3 Inst. 204. and title Clergy, benefit of.

DEPOSITION, Depositio.] The testimony of a witness, otherwise called a deponent, put down in writing by way of answer to interrogatories exhibited for that purpose, in Chancery, &c. Proof in the High Court of Chancery is by depositions of witnesses; and the copies of such regularly taken and published, are read as evidence at the hearing. For the purposes of examining witnesses in or near London there is an examiner's office appointed: but for such as live in the county, a commission to examine witnesses is usually granted to four commissioners, two named of each side, or any three or two of them to take the depositions there. And if the witnesses reside beyond sea, a commission may be had to examine them there, upon their own oaths; and, if foreigners, upon the oaths of two skilful interpreters. And it hath been established that the deposition of an Heathen who believes in the Supreme Being taken by commission in the most solemn manner according to the custom of his own country may be read in evidence. 1 Aik. 21.—The commissioners are sworn to take the examinations truly and without partiality, and not to divulge them till published in the Court of Chancery; and their clerks are also sworn to secrecy. The witnesses are compellable by process of subpoena, as in the courts of Common law, to appear and submit to examination. And when their depositions are taken they are transmitted to the court with the same care that the answer of a defendant is sent. 3 Comm. 449.

After a witness is fully examined, the examinations are read over to him, and the witness is at liberty to alter, or amend any thing; after which he signs them, and then, and not before, the examinations are complete, and good evidence. 1 P. Wms. 415. The same practice prevails in the Commons, in Ecclesiastical causes.

Where

POSITION.

Where a witness was examined in a cause in Chancery, and, before signing his examination died, the Master of the Rolls, upon advising with the Master in Chancery then in court, denied the making use of the depositions, as being not perfect. 1 P. Wms. 414.

But where, after an order for publication, defendant examined a witness, and then perceiving the irregularity (it being after publication) the defendant on the usual affidavit by himself, his clerk in court, and solicitor, that they had not seen, nor would see any of the depositions, got an order to re-examine this witness; but before re-examination the witness died; upon affidavit of this, Id. Ch. Parker ordered that the defendant might make use of the depositions, the re-examination being prevented by the act of God. 1 P. Wms. 415.

Depositions in the Chancery after a cause is determined, may be given in evidence in a trial at bar in B. R. in a suit for the same matter, between the same parties, if the party that deposed be dead; but not otherwise, for if he be living, he must appear in person in court to be examined, &c. 1 Lil. Abr. 445.

See further as to the admission of written depositions in evidence at Common law. Bull. N. P. 229, 239—242, and this Dict. title Evidence.

Depositions of informers, &c. taken upon oath before a coroner, upon an inquisition of death; or before justices of peace on a commitment or bailment of felony, may be given in evidence at a trial for the same felony; if it be proved on oath that the informer is dead, or unable to travel, or kept away by the procurement of the prisoner; and oath must be made that the depositions are the same that were sworn before the coroner or justice, without any alteration. 2 Hawk. P. C.

Depositions taken before a coroner, cannot be given in evidence upon an appeal for the same death; because it is a different prosecution from that wherein they were taken: And it has been adjudged, That the evidence given by a witness at one trial, could not, in the ordinary course of justice, be made use of against a criminal, on the death of such witness, at another trial. 2 H. P. C.

The examinations of witnesses abroad, and of such as are aged or going abroad de bene esse, to be read in evidence, if the trial should be deferred till after their death or departure, are now very frequently effected by mutual consent in trials at Common law, if the parties are open and candid: and this may also be done indirectly at any time, through the channel of a Court of Equity: but such a practice has never yet been adopted directly as a rule of a court of law. Yet where the cause of action arises in India, and a suit is brought thereupon in any of the courts of Westminster, the Court may issue a commission to examine witnesses upon the spot, and transmit the depositions to England. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63.

DEPOSITION is used in the law in another sense, viz. To signify the depriving a person of some dignity, See titles Degradation; Deprivation.

Deposition is also taken for death; and dies depositionis, the day of one's death. Litt. Dict.

DEPRIVATION, Deprivatio.] A depriving or taking away; as when a bishop, parson, vicar, &c. is deposed from his preferment. Of deprivations there are two sorts, deprivatio à beneficio, and ab officio; the deprivation à beneficio is when for some great crime, &c. a minister is wholly deprived of his living: And deprivation ab officio is where a minister is for ever deprived of his orders, which is also called deposition or degradation; and is commonly for some heinous offence meriting death, and performed by the bishop in a solemn manner. Blount. See Degradation.

Deprivatio à beneficio is an act of the Spiritual Court, grounded upon some crime or defect in the person deprived by which he is discharged from his spiritual promotion or benefice, upon sufficient cause proved against him. 1 Nelf. Abr. 641.

Deprivation may also be by a particular clause in some act of parliament: the deprivation of bishops, &c. is declared lawful by statute 39 Eliz. c. 8. And by the King's commission, as he hath the supremacy lodged in him, a bishop may be deprived: for since a bishop is vested with that dignity by commission from the King, it is reasonable he should be deprived, where there is just cause, by the same authority: but the canons direct, that a bishop shall be deprived in a synod of the province; or, if that cannot be assembled, by the archbishop; and twelve bishops at least, not as his assistants, but as judges. It has been adjudged, that an archbishop may deprive a bishop for simony, &c. for he hath power over his suffragans, who may be punished in the archbishop's court for any offence against their duty. 1 Salk. 134. See title Bishop.

The causes of deprivation are many: if a clerk obtain a preferment in the church, by simoniacal contract; if he be an excommunicate, a drunkard, fornicator, adulterer, infidel, schismatic or heretick; or guilty of murder, manslaughter, perjury, forgery, &c. If a clerk be illiterate and not able to perform the duty of his church; if he is a scandalous person in his life and conversation; or bastardy is objected against him: if one be a mere layman, and not in holy orders; or under age, viz. the age of twenty-three years; be disobedient and incorrigible to his ordinary; or a con-nonformist to the canons; if a parson refuse to use the Common Prayer, or preach in derogation of it; do not administer the Sacraments, or read the Articles of Religion, &c. See titles Parson; Clergy.

If any parson, vicar, &c. have one benefice with cure of souls, and take plurality, without a faculty or dispensation: or if he commit waste in the houses and lands of the church, called Dilapidations, all these have been held good causes for deprivation of priests. Degg's Parson's Counselor, 98, 99, &c. 3 Inst. 204. See titles Advowson, II; Chaplain; Cession. And refusing to use the Common Prayers of the church, plurality of livings, &c. are causes of deprivation ipso facto, in which case the church shall be void, without any sentence declaratory; and avoidances by act of parliament need no declaratory sentence: But in other cases there must be a declaratory sentence. Dyn. 275. See title Parson.

Where a benefice is only voidable, but not void before sentence of deprivation, the party must be cited to appear; there is to be a libel against him, and a time assigned to answer it, and also liberty for advocates to plead, and after all a solemn sentence pronounced: Though none of these formalities are required, where the living is made ipso facto void. Can. 122. If a deprivation be for a thing merely of ecclesiastical cognizance, no appeal lies; but the party has his remedy by a commission of review, which is granted by the King of mere grace. Moor 781.

DEPUTY.

DEPUTY, Deputatus.] One that exercises an office, &c. in another man's right; whose forfeiture or misdemeanor, shall cause him, whose deputy he is, to lose his office. The Common law takes notice of deputies in many cases, but it never takes notice of under-deputies; for a deputy is generally but a person authorised, who cannot authorise another. 1 Lill. Abr. 446. A man cannot make his deputy in all cases; except the grant of the office justify him in it, and where it is to one, to execute by deputy, &c.

And there is a great difference between a deputy and assignee of an office; for an assignee hath an interest in the office itself, and doth all things in his own name; for whom his grantor shall not answer, unless in special cases. But a deputy hath not any interest in the office, but is only the shadow of the officer, in whose name he doth all things. And where an officer hath power to make assigns, he may implicitly make deputies. And a sheriff may make a deputy, or under-sheriff, although he have not such express words in his patent. 9 Rep. 49.—Cowel.

A deputy can not make a deputy; because it implies an assignment of his whole power, which he cannot assign over; but he may empower another to do a particular act. 1 Salk. 96: Lit. 379.

Judges cannot act by deputy, but are to hold their courts in person; for they may not transfer their power over to others. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 9. But it has been adjudged, that recorders may hold their courts by deputy. 1 Lev. 76. The office of Custos Brevium and Chirographer in C. B. cannot be executed by deputy. 1 Nelf. Abr. 644. A steward of a court may make a deputy; and acts of an under-steward's deputy have been held good in some cases. Cro. Eliz. 534.

A coroner ought not to execute his office by deputy, it being a judicial office of trust; and judicial offices are annexed to the person. 1 Lil. 446. If the office of parkership be granted to one, he may not grant this to another; because it is an office of trust and confidence. Terms de Ley.

A bailiff of a liberty, may make a deputy. Cro. Jac. 240. And a constable may make a deputy, who may execute the warrant directed to the constable, &c. 2 Danv. 482. See title Constable.

When an office descends to an infant, idiot, &c. such may make a deputy of course. 9 Rep. 47. Where an office is granted to a man and his heirs, he may make an assignee of that office; and by consequence a deputy.

A Deputy of an office, hath no interest therein, but doth all things in his master's name, and his master shall be answerable; but an assignee hath an interest in the office, and doth all things in his own name, for whom his grantor shall not answer, unless in special cases. Terms de Ley.

A superior officer must answer for his deputy in civil actions, if he is not sufficient: but in criminal cases it is otherwise, where deputies are to answer for themselves. 2 Inst. 191, 466: Dott. & Stud. c. 42.

religion. Stat. 31 H. 8. cap. 6. And deraignment and discharge of their profession. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 29. Which is spoken of those religious men that forsook their orders or profession; and so doth Kitcher use it, where he says the lessee entered into religion, and afterwards was derained. p. 157.

In our Common Law this word is used diversly; but generally to prove, viz. to deraign that right, deraign the warranty, &c. Glanv. lib. 2. cap. 6: F. N. B. 146. If a man hath an estate in fee with warranty, and enfeoffs a stranger with warranty, and dies; and the feoffee vouches the heir, the heir shall derain the first warranty, &c. Plowd. 7. And jointenants and tenants in common shall have aid, to the intent to deraign the warranty paramount. 31 H. 8. cap. 1: See Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 28. Britton applieth this word to a summons that they be challenged as defective, or not lawfully made, cap. 21. And Skene confounds it with our waging and making of law. See Lex Derainia.

Perhaps this word deraign, and the word deraignment derived from it, may be used in the sense of to prove and a proving, by disproving of what is asserted in opposition to truth and fact.

DERELICT, Derelictus.] Any thing forsaken or left; or wilfully cast away. Derelict lands suddenly left by the sea belong to the King: but if the sea shrink back so slowly that the gain be by little and little, i. e. by small and imperceptible degrees, it shall go to the owner of the lands adjoining. See 2 Comm. 261.

DESCENDER, Writ of formdon in. A writ which lieth, where a gift in tail is made, and the tenant in tail alienes the lands entailed, or is disseised of them and dies; the heir in tail shall have this writ against him, who is then the actual tenant of the freehold. F. N. B. 211, 212, See title Formdon.

DESCENT, or HEREDITARY SUCCESSION;

Lat. Descensus: Fr. Discent; in which latter way the term is usually spelt in all old law books.] The title whereby a man, on the death of his ancestor, obtains the freehold estate of such ancestor, by right of representation, as his Heir-at-law.—It is otherwise defined; The order or means whereby lands or tenements are derived unto any man from his ancestor.—An Heir is he upon whom the law casts the estate immediately on the death of his ancestor; and the estate so descending, is in law called the Inheritance. See 2 Comm. 200. lib. 2. c. 14; from whence much of the following matter is abridged.

It may not be an useless preliminary observation, that the law of Descents of real estates, is totally distinct from that of the Distribution of personal property; for which latter see title Executor III: V. 8.

Descent, being created by law, and the most ancient title, it is termed the worthiest means by which land can be acquired; and an Heir is in by that, in preference to a grant, or devise, &c. which are called titles by purchase. It is a rule in law, that a man cannot raise a fee-simple to his own right heirs, by the name of heirs, as a purchase, either by conveyance or devise; for if he devise lands to one who is the heir at law, the devise is void, and he shall take by descent. Dyer 54, 126. And it is the same where the lands will come to the heir, either in a direct or collateral line; or where the heir comes to an estate by way of limitation, when the word heirs is not a word word of purchase. Ibid. A father hath two sons by several venters, and devises his land to his wife for life, and after her decease to his eldest son; though the son doth not take the estate presently on the death of his father, he shall be in by descent, and not by purchase, and the devise shall be void as to him. Style 148: 1 Nelf. Abr. 645. But it is said he may make his election, and take by devise, if he pleases.

A man being seised of lands which he had by the mother's side, devised them to his heirs on the part of his mother; and it was adjudged, that the devisee shall take by descent. 3 Lev. 127. And when the heir takes that which his ancestor would have taken if living, he shall take it by descent, and not by purchase. 3 Danv. 557. But generally, where an estate is devised to the heir at law, attended with a charge, as to pay money debts, &c. in such case he takes by purchase, and not by descent. Though conditions to pay money have been construed only a charge in equity; and that they do not alter the descent at Common law. 1 Lut. 593. 1 Salk. 241. See further, titles Limitation; Purchase; Estate; Will.

If one die seised of land, in which another hath right to enter, and it descends to his heir; such descent shall take away the other's right of entry, and put him to his action for recovery thereof. Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 33. Co. Lit. 237. But a descent of such things as lie in grant, as advowsons, rents, commons in grofs, &c. puts not him who hath right to his action. Co. Lit. 237: 2 Danv. Abr. 561. And a descent shall not take away the entry of an infant; nor of a feme covert, where the wrong was done to her during the coverture. 2 Danv. 563.

The Doctrine of Descents, or law of inheritance in fee-simple, is a point of the highest importance, and is indeed the principal object of the law of real property in England. All the rules relating to purchases, whereby the legal course of descents is broken and altered, perpetually refer to this settled law of inheritance, as a datum or first principle universally known, and upon which their subsequent limitations are to work.

In order therefore to treat a subject of this universal consequence the more clearly, it seems better to lay aside such matters as will only tend to cause embarrassment and confusion. The question, who are, and who are not capable of being heirs, comes more properly under the titles Heir; Attainder; Escheat; which see. We may also pass over the frequent division of descents, into those by Custom, Statute and Common law. As to descents by particular customs, as to all the sons in gavelkind, or to the youngest in Borough English, see those titles, and title Custom; and as to descents by statute, or fees-tail per formam doni, in pursuance of the Stat. of Westm. 2; see titles Estate; Limitations; Tenures.

As the law of Descents depends not a little on the nature of kindred, and the several degrees of consanguinity, it will be previously necessary to state, briefly, the true notion of this kindred or alliance in blood.

CONSANGUINITY, or kindred, is defined by the writers on these subjects to be vinculum personarum ab eodem scriptis descendendum; the connexion or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor. This consanguinity is either lineal or collateral.

Lineal consanguinity, is that which subsists between persons, of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between a man and his father, grandfather, and great grandfather, and so upwards, in the direct ascending line: or between a man and his son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. Every generation, in this lineal direct consanguinity, constitutes a different degree, reckoning either upwards or downwards: the father is related in the first degree, and so likewise is the son; grandfire and grandson in the second; great grandfire and great grandson in the third. This is the only natural way of reckoning the degrees in the direct line, and therefore universally obtains, as well in the civil and canon, as in the Common law.

Collateral kindred answers to the same description: collateral relations agreeing with the lineal in this, that they descend from the same stock or ancestor; but differing in this, that they do not descend one from the other. Collateral kinsmen are such then as lineally spring from one and the same ancestor, who is the stipes, or root, the stipes, trunk, or common stock, from whence these relations are branched out. As if a man hath two sons, who have each a numerous issue; both these issues are lineally descended from him as their common ancestor; and they are collateral kinsmen to each other, because they are all descended from this common ancestor, and all have a portion of his blood in their veins, which denominates them consanguineos.

The very being of collateral consanguinity, consists in this descent, from one and the same common ancestor. Thus A. and his brother are related; Why? Because both are derived from one father: A. and his first cousin are related; Why? Because both descended from the same grandfather; and his second cousins' claim to consanguinity is this, that they are both derived from one and the same great grandfather. In short, as many ancestors as a man has, so many common stocks he has, from which collateral kinsmen may be derived.

The method of computing these degrees in the canon law, which our law has adopted (Co. Litt. 23,) is as follows. We begin at the common ancestor, and reckon downwards; and in whatsoever degree the two persons, or the most remote of them, is distant from the common ancestor, that is the degree in which they are related to each other. Thus A. and his brother are related in the first degree; for from the father to each of them is counted only one; A. and his nephew are related in the second degree; for the nephew is two degrees removed from the common ancestor; viz. his own grandfather, the father of A.

The learned Commentator then proceeds to lay down a series of Rules, or Canons of Inheritance, according to which, estates are transmitted from the ancestor to the heir, with an explanatory comment.

I. THE FIRST RULE is, that Inheritance shall lineally DESCEND to the issue of the person who last died actually seised, in infinitum; but shall never lineally ASCEND.

By law no inheritance can vest, nor can any person be the actual complete heir of another, till the ancestor is previously dead. Nemo est heris viventis. Before that time the person who is next in the line of succession is called an heir apparent, or heir presumptive. Heirs apparent are such, whose right of inheritance is indefeasible, provided they outlive the ancestor; as the eldest son or his issue, who must by the course of the Common law be heir to the father whenever he happens to die. Heirs presumptives are such, who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would in the present circumstances of things be his heirs; but whose right of inheritance may be defeated seated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born: as a brother or nephew, whose presumptive succession may be destroyed by the birth of a child; or a daughter, whose present hopes may hereafter be cut off by the birth of a son. Nay even if the estate hath descended, by the death of the owner, to such brother, or nephew, or daughter; in the former cases, the estate shall be devested and taken away by the birth of a posthumous child; and in the latter, it shall also be totally devested by the birth of a posthumous son. Bro. tit. Descent 58.

And besides this case of a posthumous child, if lands are given to a son who dies, leaving a sister his heir; if the parents have at any distance of time afterwards another son, this son shall devest the descent upon the sister, and take the estate as heir to his brother. Co. Lit. 11: Doct. & Stud. d. 1. c. 7. So the same estate may be frequently devested by the subsequent birth of nearer presumptive heirs, before it fixes upon an heir apparent. As if an estate is given to an only child, who dies; it may descend to an aunt, who may be stripped of it by an after-born uncle; on whom a subsequent sister may enter, and who will again be deprived of the estate by the birth of a brother, the heir apparent. Christian's note on 2 Comm. 208.

It seems determined that every one has a right to retain the rents and profits which accrued whilst he was thus legally possessed of the inheritance. 1 Inst. 11. in u: 2 Wils. 526.—See further as to the entry of a posthumous heir, Watkinson Descent, c. 4.

No person can properly be such an ancestor, as that an inheritance of lands or tenements can be derived from him, unless he hath had actual seisin of such lands, either by his own entry, or by the possession of his own or his ancestor's lessee for years, or receiving rent from a lessee of the freehold: (Co. Litt. 15:) or unless he hath had what is equivalent to corporal seisin in hereditaments that are incorporeal; such as the receipt of rent, a presentation to the church in case of an advowson, and the like. Co. Litt. 11. But he shall not be accounted an ancestor, who hath had only a bare right or title to enter, or be otherwise seised. The seisin therefore of any person, thus understood, makes him the root, or stock, from which all future inheritance by right of blood must be derived: which is very briefly expressed in this maxim, seisina facit stipitem. Flet. l. 6. c. 2. § 2.

Though it be necessary the ancestor be seised, yet it is not required that the seisin continue till the death of such ancestor: for if he had been seised at any time during his life, and afterwards disseised, still if he had not parted with his right or property, his heir shall inherit. 1 Inst. 237 b.—See Watkinson Descent. If the hereditaments descending be in reversion or remainder, expectant on an estate of freehold, the heir may obtain what will be equivalent to an actual seisin, by granting them over for life or in tail. See post. VI. as to possessio fratris.

When therefore a person dies so seised, the inheritance first goes to his issue: as if there be grandfather, father, and son, and the father purchases lands and dies; his son shall succeed him as heir, and not the grandfather, to whom the land shall never lineally ascend, but shall rather escheat to the lord. Litt. § 3. This rule, that the inheritance shall never lineally ascend, clearly appears to be of feudal original, and the propriety of, it is well defended at some length by the learned Commentator, to whom we refer the reader desirous of investigating the subject, as a matter rather of curiosity than utility.

Though an estate cannot lineally ascend, the father may take his son's estate by an intermediate descent; for if the son has neither issue, nor brothers or sisters, the estate will descend to an uncle, or some collateral relation, to whom the father may on his decease be the next heir. And in some cases, the father or mother may inherit immediately from a child. As if either of them are cousin to the child; a case of which nature occurs in 2 P. Wms. 613; where a son died, seised in fee of land, without issue, brother or sister, but leaving two cousins, his heirs at law, one of whom was his own mother, the question was, whether the mother could take as heir to her son. The Master of the Rolls was of opinion, that though the heir was also mother, this did not hinder her from taking in the capacity or relation of cousin. See 2 Comm. 212. in n.

In 1 Inst. 8. It is said, that if a man hath issue an elder son, born out of the King's allegiance, and after hath another son born within the realm; the younger son shall have lands by descent from his father in this case, and not the elder who had never any inheritable blood in him. Co. Lit. 8.—But if the father in this case is to be supposed a natural-born subject at the birth of the issue, the child would now be also a natural-born subject by force of Stats. 7 An. c. 5: 4 Geo. 2. c. 21. But the children of persons attainted of, or liable to the penalties of, treason, or in the service of a foreign state in enmity with Great Britain, are excepted from the benefit of this provision. See Stat. 25 E. 3. § 2., which declares that at Common law, the children of the King wherever born, may inherit. The same statute enables children born abroad to inherit, if at their birth both their parents are within the King's allegiance, and their mothers pass the sea, with the licence of their husbands. See 1 Inst. 8. in n.

Lord Coke also lays it down for law, that if an alien hath issue in England two sons, though these sons are indigenæ, subjects born, they cannot inherit to each other. But in the case of Collingwood v. Pace, this was denied to be law, and it was expressly held that such sons of aliens were inheritable to each other. See 1 Sid. 193: 1 Vent. 413. And now by Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 6. natural-born subjects may derive a title by descent through their parents, though aliens; but Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 39. confines the benefit of the former statute to such heirs as shall be living, and capable of taking at the death of the person last dying seised; unless such heirs happen to be daughters, and there is afterwards a son or another daughter, for which cases the statute makes a special provision. Both these acts are extended to Scotland by Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 52. The principle, on which it has been adjudged that the children of an alien may be heirs as between themselves, though not to their father, seems to reach the case of children born after their father's attainder. See 1 Inst. 8. in n.—And further this Dict. titles Alien, Attainder.

II. A SECOND GENERAL RULE, or canon is, that the male issue shall be admitted before the female. Thus sons shall be admitted before daughters; or, as our law expresses it, the worthiest of blood shall be preferred. Hal. H. C. L.

DESCENT.

235. As if one hath two sons, and two daughters, and dies; first the eldest son, and (in case of his death without issue) then the youngest son shall be admitted to the succession in preference to both the daughters.

The reason of this, as well as of the preceding rule, must be deduced from feudal principles: for, by the genuine and original policy of that constitution, no female could ever succeed to a proper feud; inasmuch as females were incapable of performing those military services, for the sake of which that system was established. But our law does not extend to a total exclusion of females, as the Salic law, and others, where feuds were most strictly retained: it only postpones them to males; for, though daughters are excluded by sons, yet they succeed before any collateral relations.

III. A THIRD RULE, or Canon of descent, is; that where there are two or more males in equal degree, the eldest son shall inherit; but the females all together.

As if a man hath two sons, and two daughters, and dies; his eldest son shall alone succeed to his estate, in exclusion of the second son and both the daughters; but, if both the sons die without issue before the father, the daughters shall both inherit the estate as coparceners. Litt. § 5: Hal. C. L. 238. This rule is also of feudal original, and arose from thence on the establishment of that constitution in England, by William the Conqueror.

Yet we find, that socage estates frequently descended to all the sons equally, so lately as when Glanvil wrote, in the reign of Henry II. and it is mentioned in the Mirror, (c. 1. § 3.) as a part of our ancient constitution, that knights' fees should descend to the eldest son, and socage fees should be partible among male children.

However, in Henry III.'s time, we find by Bracton, (l. 2. c. 30, 1.) that socage lands, in imitation of lands in chivalry, had almost entirely fallen into the right of succession by primogeniture, as the law now stands; except in Kent, where they gloried in the preservation of their ancient gavelkind tenure, of which a principal branch was the joint inheritance of all the sons; and except in some particular manors and townships, where their local customs continued the descent, sometimes to all, sometimes to the youngest son only, or in other more singular methods of succession.

As to the females, they are still left as they were by the ancient law; for they were all equally incapable of performing any personal service: and therefore one main reason for preferring the eldest male, such preference would have been injurious to the rest: and the other principal purpose, the prevention of the too minute subdivision of estates; was left to be considered and provided for by the lords, who had the disposal of these female heiresses in marriage. However, the succession by primogeniture, even among females, took place as to the inheritance of the Crown; wherein the necessity of a sole and determinate succession, is as great in the one sex, as in the other. 1 Inst. 165. And the right of sole succession, though not of primogeniture, was also established with respect to female dignities and titles of honour. For if a man holds an earldom to him and the heirs of his body, and dies, leaving only daughters; the eldest shall not of course be Countess, but the dignity is in suspense or abeyance till the King shall declare his pleasure; for he, being the fountain of honour, may confer it on which of them he pleases. Ibid.—See titles Abeyance, Peers.

IV. A FOURTH RULE, or Canon of descent, is; that the lineal descendants, in infinitum, of any person deceased, shall represent their ancestor; that is, shall stand in the same place as the person himself would have done, had he been living.

Thus the child, grandchild, or great grandchild, (either male or female) of an eldest son, succeeds before a younger son, and so in infinitum. Hal. H. C. L. 236, 7. And these representatives shall take neither more nor less, but just so much as their principals would have done. As if there be two sisters, and one dies, leaving six daughters; and then the father of the two sisters dies, without other issue: these six daughters shall take among them exactly as much as their mother would have done, had she been living; that is, a moiety of the lands in coparcenary: so that, upon partition made, if the land be divided into twelve parts, the surviving sister shall have six parts, and her six nieces, one part each.

This taking by representation, is called succession in stirpes according to the roots; since all the branches inherit the same share that their root, whom they represent, would have done. So if the next heirs of a man be six nieces, three by one sister, two by another, and one by a third; his inheritance by the laws of England, is divided only into three parts, and distributed per stirpes, thus; one third to the three elder children who represent one sister, another third to the two who represent the second, and the remaining third to the one child who is the sole representative of her mother.

This mode of representation is a necessary consequence of the double preference given by our law, first to the male issue, and next to the first born among the males. For if all the children of three sisters were to claim per capita, in their own right, as next of kin to the ancestor, without any respect to the stocks from whence they sprung, and those children were partly male, and partly female, then the eldest male among them would exclude not only his own brethren and sisters, but all the issue of the other two daughters, or else the law in this instance, must be inconsistent with itself, and depart from the preference which it constantly gives to the males, and the first born, among persons in equal degree. Whereas, by dividing the inheritance according to the roots, or stirpes, the rule of descent is kept uniform and steady; the issue of the eldest son excludes all other pretenders, as the son himself (if living) would have done; but the issue of two daughters divide the inheritance between them, provided their mothers (if living) would have done the same: and among these several issues, or representatives of the respective roots, the same preference to males, and the same right of primogeniture obtain, as would have obtained at the first among the roots themselves, the sons or daughters of the deceased. As 1. if a man hath two sons, A. and B. and A. dies, leaving two sons, and then the grandfather dies; now the eldest son of A. shall succeed to the whole of his grandfather's estate: and if A. had left only two daughters, they should have succeeded also to equal moieties of the whole, in exclusion of B. and his issue. But 2. if a man hath only three daughters, C. D. and E.; and C. dies leaving two sons, D. leaving two daughters, and E. leaving leaving a daughter and a son, who is younger than his sister: here when the grandfather dies, the eldest son of C. shall succeed to one third, in exclusion of the younger; and the two daughters of D. to another third in partnership; and the son of E. to the remaining third, in exclusion of his eldest sister. And the same right of representation, guided and restrained by the same rules of descent, prevails downwards in infinitum.

How far the two immediately preceding, and other, cases in the course of this title may be explained by the following scheme, the student is left to determine. It may perhaps afford a hint for statements in more complicated cases of descent. For regular tables of Consanguinity and Descent, See 1 Inst; The Commentaries; and Watkins's Treatise on Descent.

1. The PERSON dying seised.

2. The PERSON dying seised.

King John, however, who kept his nephew Arthur from the throne, by disputing this right of representation, did all in his power to abolish it throughout the realm. Hale H. C. L. 217, 229. But in the time of his son King Henry III. the rule was indisputably settled in the manner here laid down, Braff. l. 2. c. 30. § 2; and so it has continued ever since. And thus much for lineal descents.

V. A FIFTH RULE is, that, on failure of lineal descendants, or issue of the person last seised, the inheritance shall descend to his collateral relations, being of the blood of the first purchaser, subject to the three preceding rules. Thus if A. purchase land, and it descend to B. his son, who dies seised thereof without issue; whoever succeeds to this inheritance, must be of the blood of A. the first purchaser of this family. Co. Litt. 12. The first purchaser, perquisitor, is he who first acquired the estate to his family, whether the same was transferred to him by sale or by gift, or by any other method, except only that of descent.

This is a rule almost peculiar to our own laws, and these of a similar feudal original; and this rule or canon cannot otherwise be accounted for than by recurring to feudal principles, which did not originally permit the descent of lands to any but one of the lineal descendants of the first purchaser, who in the case of a feudum novum, or estate purchased by the ancestor himself, could only be his own offspring; so that such estate could not descend even to his brother. See this Dict. title Tenures; I. 3.

But when the feudal rigour was in part abated, a method was invented to let in the collateral relations of the grantee to the inheritance, by granting him a feudum novum to hold ut feudum antiquum; that is, with all the qualities annexed of a feud derived from his ancestors; and then the collateral relations were admitted to succeed even in infinitum, because they might have been of the blood of, that is descended from, the first imaginary purchaser.

Of this nature, are all the grants of fee-simple estates of this kingdom; for there is now in the law of England, no such thing as a grant of a feudum novum, to be held ut novum; unless in the case of a fee-tail, and there this rule is strictly observed, and none but the lineal descendants of the first donee (or purchaser) are admitted; but every grant of lands in fee-simple, is with us a feudum novum, to be held ut antiquum, as a feud whose antiquity is indefinite: and therefore the collateral kindred of the grantee, or descendants from any of his lineal ancestors, by whom the lands might possibly have been purchased, are capable of being called to the inheritance.

Yet, when an estate hath really descended in a course of inheritance to the person last seised, the strict rule of the Feudal law is still observed; and none are admitted, but the heirs of those through whom the inheritance hath passed; for all others have demonstrably none of the blood of the first purchaser in them, and therefore shall never succeed. As, if lands come to A. by descent from his mother; no relation of his father (as such) shall ever be his heir of these lands; and, vice versa, if they descended from his father, no relation of his mother (as such) shall ever be admitted thereto; for his father's kindred have none of his mother's blood, nor have his mother's relations any share of his father's blood. And so, if the estate descended from his father's father, the relations of his father's mother, shall for the same reason never be admitted, but only those of his father's father.

Hence the expression heir at law must always be used with reference to a specific estate; for if an only child has taken by descent an estate from his father, and another from his mother; upon his death without issue, these estates will descend to two different persons. So also, if his two grandfathers and two grandmothers, had each an estate, which descended to his father or mother, being only children, then these four estates will descend to four different heirs. 2 Comm. 222 in n.

This

DESCENT.

This then is the great and general principle, upon which the law of collateral inheritances depends; that, upon failure of issue in the last proprietor, the estate shall descend to the blood of the first purchaser; or, that it shall result back to the heirs of the body of that ancestor, from whom it either really has, or is supposed by fiction of law to have originally descended: according to the rule laid down in the year books; M. 12 Ed. IV. 14; Fitzherbert. Abr. 1. Discent. 2; Brook. Ibid. 38; and Hale. H. C. L. 243; "That he who would have been heir to the father of the deceased, (and of course to the mother, or any other real or supposed purchasing ancestor) shall also be heir to the son;" a maxim that will hold universally, except in the case of a brother or sister of the half blood, which exception (as we shall see hereafter) depends upon very special grounds.

VI. A SIXTH RULE, or canon is, that the collateral heir of the person last seised, must be his next collateral kinsman, of the whole blood.

First, he must be his next collateral kinsman, either personally, or jure representationis; which proximity is reckoned according to the canonical degrees of consanguinity. Therefore, the brother being in the first degree, he and his descendants shall exclude the uncle and his issue, who is only in the second. And herein consists the true reason of the different methods of computing the degrees of consanguinity, in the civil law on the one hand, and in the canon and common laws on the other.

When the paternal and maternal lines are both admitted to the inheritance, the most remote collateral kinsman in the paternal line, will inherit before the nearest in the maternal. So that the expression that the collateral heir, must be the next collateral kinsman, is qualified by the general rules of descent which prefer the male line to the female.

The designation of person, however, in seeking for the next of kin, will come to exactly the same end; (though the degrees will be differently numbered,) whichever method of computation we suppose the law of England to use; since the right of representation of the parent by the issue, is allowed to prevail in infinitum. Indeed it may be questioned how far the introduction of the computation of kindred, either by the canon or civil law, is of use in the Common-law doctrine of Descents.

This right of representation being established, the former part of the present rule amounts to this; that, on failure of issue of the person last seised, the inheritance shall descend to the other subsisting issue of his next immediate ancestor. Thus, if A. dies without issue, his estate shall descend to his eldest brother, (if more than one) or his representatives; he being lineally descended from A.'s father his next immediate ancestor. On failure of brethren, or sisters, and their issue, it shall descend to the uncle of A. the lineal descendant of his grandfather; and so on in infinitum.

The eldest brother of the whole blood shall have land by descent, purchased by a middle or younger brother, if such die without issue; for as to descents between brethren, the eldest is the most worthy of blood to inherit to them as well as to the father. Lit. 3: 3 Rep. 40.

Here it must be observed, that the lineal ancestors though (according to the first rule) incapable themselves of succeeding to the estate, because it is supposed to have already passed them, are yet the common stocks from which the next successor must spring.—But though the common ancestor be thus the root of the inheritance, yet it is not necessary to name him in making out the pedigree or descent. For the descent between two brothers, is held to be an immediate descent; and therefore title may be made by one brother, or his representatives, to or through another, without mentioning their common father... Sid. 195: 1 Fentr. 423: 1 Lec. 60: 12 Mod. 619.

The law takes no notice of the disability of the father in case of descent, but only of the immediate relation of brothers and sisters, as to their estates; so that the inability of the father doth not hinder the descent between them: for example; A man had issue a son and a daughter, and was attainted of treason, and died; the son purchased lands and died without issue; and it was adjudged that notwithstanding the attainder of the father, the daughter shall take by descent from her brother, because the descent between them was immediate, and the law doth not regard the disability of the father. 4 Leon. 5. See 4 Rep. 31, 124.

Where a person seised of lands, hath issue two daughters, if one of them commits felony, after the father's death, both daughters being alive, a moiety shall descend to one daughter, and the other shall escheat. Co. Lit. 153.

But, secondly, the heir need not be the nearest kinsman absolutely, but only sub modo; that is; he must be the nearest kinsman of the whole blood; for, if there be a much nearer kinsman of the half blood, a distant kinsman of the whole shall be admitted, and the other entirely excluded: nay, the estate shall escheat to the lord, sooner than the half blood shall inherit.

A kinsman of the whole blood is he that is derived, not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors. For, as every man's own blood is compounded of the bloods of his respective ancestors, he is only properly of the whole or entire blood with another, who hath (so far as the distance of degrees will permit) all the same ingredients in the composition of his blood that the other hath. Thus the blood of A. being composed of those of his father and his mother, therefore his brother being from both the same parents hath entirely the same blood with A.; or in other words he is his brother of the whole blood. But if, after the death of A.'s father, his mother had married a second husband, and had issue by him; the blood of this issue, being compounded of the blood of A.'s mother only, on the one part, but of that of the second husband, on the other part, it hath therefore only half the same ingredients with that of A. himself; so that such issue is only A.'s brother of the half blood; and for that reason they shall never inherit to each other. So also if the father has two sons, A. and B. by different wives, or wives; these two brethren are not brethren of the whole blood, and therefore shall never inherit to each other, but the estate shall rather escheat to the lord. Nay even if the father dies, and his lands descend to his eldest son A. who enters therein, and dies seised without issue; still B. shall not be heir to this estate, because he is only of the half blood to A. the person last seised: but it shall descend to a sister (if any) of the whole blood to A.; for in such cases the maxim is, that possessio fratris facit sororem esse heredem; the seisin or possession of the brother makes the sister to be heir. Yet, had A. died without entry then B.

DESCENT.

might have inherited; not as heir to A. his half brother, but as heir to their common father, who was the person last actually seised. Hale H. C. L. 238.

Of some inheritances there cannot be a seisin, or possessio fratris: as if the eldest brother dies before a presentation to an advowson, it will descend to the half brother, as heir to the person last seised, and not to the sister of the whole blood. 1 Bur. Ec. 11. So of reversions, remainders and executory devises, there can be no seisin or possessio fratris; and if they are reserved or granted to A. and his heirs, he who is heir to A. when they come into possession is entitled to them by descent: that is the person who would have been heir to A. if A. had lived so long and had then died actually seised. 2 Woddl. 256: Fearne 418: 2 Willf. 29. and see further this title ad finem relative to the descent of reversions, &c.—But though a possessio fratris cannot properly be of a remainder or reversion expectant upon an estate of freehold, yet by the exertion of certain acts of ownership, as by granting them over for term of life, a possessio fratris of them may be made. 8 Rep. 35 b: 1 Inst. 15 a; 191 b.—There can be no possessio fratris of an estate-tail; nor of honorary dignities. Nor of the descent of the crown, and its possessions; nor of a mere right. See Watkins on Descents. c. 1. § 4. and the authorities there cited.

The total exclusion of the half blood from the inheritance being almost peculiar to our own law, is looked upon as a strange hardship by such as are unacquainted with the reasons on which it is grounded. But these censures arise from a misapprehension of the rule, which is not so much to be considered in the light of a rule of descent as of a rule of evidence; an auxiliary rule, to carry a former into execution.

To illustrate this rule by example. Let there be A. and B. brothers, by the same father and mother, and C. another son, of the same mother by a second husband. Now if A. dies seised of lands, but it is uncertain whether they descended to him from his father or mother; in this case his brother B. of the whole blood, is qualified to be his heir; for he is sure to be in the line of descent from the first purchaser, whether it were the line of the father or mother. But if B. should die before A. without issue, C. the brother of the half blood is utterly incapable of being heir; for he cannot prove his descent from the first purchaser, who is unknown; nor has he that fair probability which the law admits as presumptive evidence, since he is to the full as likely not to be descended from the line of the first purchaser, as to be descended: and therefore the inheritance shall go to the nearest relation possessed of this presumptive proof, the whole blood.

And, as this is the case in feudis antiquis, where there really did exist a purchasing ancestor, who is forgotten, it is also the case in feudis novis held ut antiquis, where the purchasing ancestor is merely ideal, and never existed but only in fiction of law. Of this nature are all grants of lands in fee-simple at this day, which are inheritable as if they descended from some uncertain indefinite ancestor, and therefore, any of the collateral kindred of the real modern purchaser, (and not his own offspring only) may inherit them, provided they be of the whole blood; for all such are, in judgment of law, likely enough to be derived from this indefinite ancestor: but those of the half blood are excluded, for want of the same probability. Nor should this be thought hard, that a brother of the purchaser, though only of the half blood, must thus be disinherited, and a more remote relation of the whole blood admitted, merely upon a supposition and fiction of law; since it is only upon a like supposition and fiction, that brethren of purchasers (whether of the whole or half blood) are entitled to inherit at all.

This rule as to the exclusion of the half blood, is certainly a very fine-spun and subtle nicety: but, considering the principles upon which our law is founded, it is not an injustice, nor always a hardship; since even the succession of the whole blood was originally a beneficial indulgence, rather than a strict right of collaterals: and though that indulgence is not extended to the demi-kindred, yet they are rarely abridged of any right which they could possibly have enjoyed before. See this Dist. title Tenures III. 5. The doctrine of the whole blood was calculated to supply the frequent impossibility of proving a descent from the first purchaser; without some proof of which (according to our fundamental maxim) there can be no inheritance allowed of. And this purpose it answers, for the most part, effectually enough. It seems however that in some instances, the practice is carried farther than the principle upon which it goes will warrant. It is more especially over-strained, when a man has two sons by different venters, and the estate on his death descends from him to the eldest, who enters, and dies without issue; in which case the younger son cannot inherit this estate, because he is not of the whole blood to the last proprietor. This, it must be owned, carries a hardship with it, even upon feudal principles: for the rule was introduced only to supply the proof of a descent from the first purchaser; but here, as this estate notoriously descended from the father, and as both the brothers confessedly sprung from him, it is demonstrable, that the half brother must be of the blood of the first purchaser, who was either the father or some of the father's ancestors.

It is moreover worthy of observation, that the Crown, (which is the highest inheritance in the nation) may descend to the half blood of the preceding sovereign. Plowd. 245: Co. Litt. 15; so that it be the blood of the first monarch, purchaser (or in the feudal language) conqueror, conqueror, of the reigning family. Thus it actually did descend from king Edward VI. to queen Mary, and from her to Queen Elizabeth, who were respectively of the half blood to each other. For, the royal pedigree being always a matter of sufficient notoriety, there is no occasion to call in the aid of this presumptive rule of evidence, to render probable the descent from the royal stock, which was formerly king William the Norman, and is now (by Stat. 12 Will. III. c. 2.) the Princess Sophia of Hanover. Hence also it is, that in estates-tail, where the pedigree from the first donee must be strictly proved, half blood is no impediment to the descent. Lit. § 14, 15; because when the lineage is clearly made out, there is no need of this auxiliary proof. Also in titles of honour half blood is no impediment to the descent; but a title can only be transmitted to those who are descended from the first person ennobled. 1 Inst. 15. See this Dist. title Peers. How far it might be desirable to amend the law of descents in one or two instances, and ordain that the half blood might always inherit, where the estate notoriously descended from its own proper ancestor, and, in cases of new-purchased lands or uncertain descents, should never be excluded by the whole blood in a remoter degree; or how far a private inconvenience inconvenience should be still submitted to, rather than a long established rule should be shaken, is for the Legislature to determine. See further 2 Comm. 233. in n.

The rule then, together with its illustration, amounts to this; that in order to keep the estate of A. as nearly as possible in the line of his purchasing ancestor, it must descend to the issue of the nearest couple of ancestors that have left descendants behind them; because the descendants of one ancestor only are not so likely to be in the line of that purchasing ancestor, as those who are descended from both.

In order then to avoid the confusion and uncertainty that might arise between the several stocks wherein the purchasing ancestor may be sought for, another qualification is requisite, besides the proximity and entirety; which is that of dignity, or worthiness, of blood. For,

VII. THE SEVENTH and last rule or canon is, that in collateral inheritances the male stocks shall be preferred to the female; (that is, kindred derived from the blood of the male ancestors, however remote, shall be admitted before those of the blood of the female, however near;) unless where the lands have, in fact descended from a female.

Thus the relations on the father's side are admitted in infinitum, before those on the mother's side are admitted at all. Litt. § 4. And the relations of the father's father, before those of the father's mother, and so on.—This rule seems to have been established in order to effectuate and carry into execution the fifth rule, or principal canon of collateral inheritance, before laid down; that every heir must be of the blood of the first purchaser.

That this was the true foundation of the preference of the agnate or male stocks, in our law, will farther appear, if we consider, that, whenever the lands have notoriously descended to a man from his mother's side, this rule is totally reversed: and no relation of his by the father's side, as such, can ever be admitted to them: because he cannot possibly be of the blood of the first purchaser. And so, converso if the lands descended from the father's side, no relation of the mother, as such, shall ever inherit. 1 Inst. 14.—See Watkins on Descent, c. 5.

But it has been resolved, that a fine and render of lands, claimed by a party, as heir at law ex parte materna, will alter the quality of the estate; so that it shall descend to the heir ex parte paterna. 6 Rep. 63: Carthew 141.

Also if a man seized of land, as heir of the part of his mother, make a feoffment and take back an estate to him and his heirs; this, as a purchase, alters the descent, and if he die without issue, the heir of the part of the father shall inherit it. Co. Lit. 12.

The short Result of all the above rules and explanations is, that when a man (A.) dies seized of an estate in fee-simple, it shall,—1. In the first place, descend to his eldest son and heir or his issue.—2. If his line be extinct, then to the second or other sons of A. respectively, in order of birth; or their issue; the issue of an elder brother being still preferred to the person of a younger, that is to say, the children of the second son, to the 3d son himself, and so on.—3. In default of sons, or their issue, then to all the daughters of A. together, or their issue. See ante III. IV.—4. On failure of descendants from A. himself, then to the issue of his father and mother; the eldest brother of the whole blood, or his issue; or on failure of them, the other whole brothers of A. respectively, in order of birth, or their issue; or on failure of them, the sisters of A. of the whole blood respectively, or their issue.—5. On failure of descendants from the father and mother of A. then to the issue of his grand-father and grand-mother by the father's side; still tracing the line of relationship on the father's side, till it entirely fails; when and not before, recourse must be had to the relations of his mother in the same regular successive order as in the paternal line. See more fully and accurately, 2 Comm. c. 14, p. 203.—240; on the whole of this subject, which in some points seems at first intricately intricate; but will soon unfold itself to the researches of the diligent student; who to understand many parts of it should be intimately acquainted with the law of Tenures. See that title in this Dictionary.

As to the DESCENT OF REVERSIONS AND REMAINDERS expectant upon estates of freehold, see Watkins's Essay on the Law of Descents (1793); from whence some curious observations have already been adopted, and the following extract from which, on this part of the subject, may be deserving attention.

“The principles which apply to the descent of an estate in possession do not apply to the descent of an estate in remainder or reversion, expectant on an estate of freehold, but they apply when the particular estate is only for years: a tenant for years being considered merely as the bailiff of the freeholder and to hold the possession for him. 1 Inst. 239. b. n. 2.

“When a reversion or remainder, expectant upon an estate of freehold, continues in a course of descent, without certain acts of ownership exerted, such reversion, &c. still continually devolves, on the death of each particular heir, to the person who can then make himself heir to the donor or purchaser; without any regard to the very heir of the precedent person who succeeded to it by descent; till when the particular estate is determined, it ultimately vests in possession in him, who at such determination, is the right heir of such donor, purchaser or original remainder-man. For as there was no intermediate person actually seized of such reversion or remainder, no one could be the mean of turning its descent, and becoming a new stock or terminus; but such stock must yet be the donor, purchaser or remainder-man, and must so continue, (if no alienation be made) till such estate shall become vested in possession; and consequently, it will be absolutely necessary to prove, on every devolution, a descent, not from the immediate predecessor who took by descent, (for with him, as such, in this case, there is nothing to do) but from the donor, purchaser, or original remainder-man. Whoever, therefore, can make himself heir to such donor, &c. will be entitled to the inheritance in reversion or remainder, though expectant; but yet not so as to be capable of transmitting it to his own right heirs, (as such) except by granting it over; till it becomes vested in possession, by the determination of the particular estate which supported it, or whereon it was expectant, (when it would cease to be a reversion or remainder,) in him who should be, at that time, the right heir of the donor, &c. which person would then become the stock of descent, and him from whom the future pedigree must run on his obtaining an actual seisin of it. DESCENT.

"So also with respect to contingencies and executory devises.—Thus on a devise to G. in fee; but if he happened to die under the age of twenty-one years, leaving no issue, then to P. in fee; after the decease of the testator, P. died in the life-time of G. who afterwards died under the age of twenty-one and without issue; it was held that the lands vested in P's heir at law, upon the happening of the contingency, (viz. on the death of G. under age, and without issue,) but that the interest, while it was contingent, did not so attach in G. who was heir at law to P. on his decease, as to carry it, on his death, to his heir at law, who was not heir at law to P. but that it vested in that person who was heir at law to P. (the first purchaser) at the time of the contingency happening. See 2 Willf. 29. Goodright and Searle; and cited also in *Fearne on Con. DESCRIPTION, [descriptio.] In deeds and grants there must be a certain description of the lands granted, the places where the lands lie, and of the persons to whom granted, &c. to make them good. But wills are more favoured than grants as to those descriptions; and a wrong description of the person will not make a devise void, if there be otherwise a sufficient certainty what person was intended by the testator. 1 Nelf. Abr. 647.

Where a first description of land, &c. is false, though the second is true, a deed will be void: contra, if the first be true, and the second false. See 3 Rep. 2, 3. 8. 10. 28. 33, 34, &c. See titles Deed; Will.

DETINUE, [detinendo.] In the Common law is like actio depositi in the Civil law; and is a writ which lies against him, who having goods or chattels delivered to keep, refuseth to re-deliver them. In this action of detinue is necessary to ascertain the thing detained in such a manner as that it may be specifically known and recovered. Therefore it cannot be brought for money, corn or the like, for that cannot be known from other money or corn; unless it be in a bag or a sack, for then it may be distinguishably marked. In order therefore to ground an action of detinue, which is only for the detaining, these points are necessary; See 1 Inst. 286; 1. That the defendant came lawfully into possession of the goods, as either by delivery to him or by finding them.—2. That the plaintiff have a property.—3. That the goods themselves be of some value.—4. That they be ascertained in point of identity: Upon this the jury, if they find for the plaintiff, assess the several values of the several parcels detained, and also damages for the detention. And the judgment is conditional; that the plaintiff recover the said goods; or, if they cannot be had, their respective values, and also the damages for detaining them. Co. Ent. 170: Cro. Jac. 681.

There is one disadvantage which attends this action, viz. that the defendant is herein permitted to wage his law; (that is, to exculpate himself by oath; See title Wager of Law;) and thereby defeat the plaintiff of his remedy; which privilege in this case is grounded on the confidence originally reposed in the bailor by the bailor, in the borrower by the lender, or the like: from whence arose a strong presumptive evidence, that in the plaintiff's own opinion, the defendant was worthy of credit. See 1 Inst. 295.

For this and other reasons the action of detinue is now much disused, and has given place to the action of Trover. See title Trover; and also title Bailment.

The following cases on the subject of Detinue, may prove matter of use as well as of curiosity, and see further Viner, title Detinue, and Bull. N. P. 49—51.

Detinue may be brought for a piece of gold, of the price of 21 s. though not for 21 s. in money; for here is a demand of a certain particular piece. Bull. N. P. 50.

If a man receiving money from a banker, put part thereof into his bag, and while he is telling the rest, the bag is stolen; no action of detinue, &c. lies; because by putting up the money, he had appropriated it to his own use. Comb. 475. A man lends a sum of money to another, detinue lies not for it, but debt; but if A. bargains and sells goods to B. upon condition to be void, if A. pays B. a certain sum of money at a day; now if A. pays the money, he may have detinue against B. for the goods, though they came not to the hands of B. by bailment, but by bargain and sale. Cro. Eliz. 867; 2 Dauv. 510.

If a man delivers goods to A. to deliver to B. B. may have detinue, for the property is in him: and where he delivers them to B. and after grants them to D. he shall not have detinue after the grant, but the grantee shall have it. Yelv. 241: 1 Bulst. 69. When goods are delivered to one, and he delivers them over to another, action of detinue may be had against the second person, and if he delivers them to one that has a right thereto, yet it is said he is chargeable: also if a person to whom a thing is delivered dieth, detinue lieth against his executors, &c. or against any person to whom a thing comes. 2 Dauv. 511.

A man may have a general detinue against another that finds his goods: though if I deliver any thing to A. to re-deliver, and he loses it, if B. finds it and delivers it to C. who has a right to the same, he is not chargeable to me in detinue, because he is not privy to my delivery. 7 H. 6. 22: 9 H. 6. 58.

In actions of detinue, the thing must be once in the possession of the defendant; which possession is not to be altered by act of law, as seizure, &c. And the nature of the thing must continue, without alteration, so intitle one to this action. F. N. B. 138. If I find goods, and before the owner brings his action, I sell them; or they are recovered out of my hands upon an execution, or out-lawry against the owner, &c. he cannot have detinue against me. 12 E. 4. 8: 37 H. 8. 13. But action of detinue will lie against him that finds goods, if they are wasted by wilful negligence. Dr. & Stud. 129.

A man buys cloth or other things of another, on a good and perfect contract; if the seller keeps the things bought, detinue lieth. Dyer 30, 203. Where one takes my goods into his custody to keep them for me, and refuses to restore them; although he have nothing for the keeping of them, this action will lie. 4 Rep. 84: 29 Aff. pl. 28. If I deliver to one a trunk that is locked, with things in it, and keep the key myself, and something be taken out of it, writ of detinue lieth not for this; but if the trunk, and all that is in it be taken away, there it lies. 11 Rep. 89: 4 E. 3.

This action will not lie, where a man delivers goods to me, and I bid him take them again, if he refuses to do it; or where one takes my goods or cattle by wrong as a trespasser; or by way of distress for rent or as damage-feasant, &c. Nor for a horse sick, when it is taken or lent; if he dies of that sickness. Bro. Latin. 242: 43 E. 3. 21: 21 E. 4. And if it be a ring that is delivered to another, and he breaks it, it is doubted whether action of detinue may lie; because the thing is altered, and cannot be returned as it was: but action on the case lieth. And although, where goods are found, and sold, &c. detinue lies not: yet action upon the case of trover and conversion may be brought. 12 E. 4. 8: 18 E. 4. 22.

DETINUE OF CHARTERS. A man may have detinue for deeds and charters concerning land; but if they concern the freehold, it must be in C. B. and no other court. Action of detinue lies for charters which make the title of lands; and the heir may have a detinue of charters, although he hath not the land: if my father be disseised, and dieth, I shall have detinue for the charters, notwithstanding I have not the land; but the executors shall not have the action for them. New Nat. Br. 308. If a man keep my charters from me, concerning the inheritance of my land, and I know the certainty of them, and the land; or if they be in a chest locked, &c. and I know not their certainty, I may recover them by this writ: so where lands are given to me and J. S. and my heirs, and he dies, if another gets the deeds, and if tenant in tail give away the deed of entail, and then die, his issue may bring a writ of detinue of charters. Co. Lit. 286: 1 Rep. 2: F. N. B. 138. But if the tenant in fee-simple do give away his deeds of the land, his heir may not have this action: and in case a woman great with child by her deceased husband keeps the charters from his daughter and heir that concern the land, during the time she is with child, this writ will not lie against her. 41 E. 3. 11.

Detinue was brought for a deed, and the plaintiff had a verdict, that the defendant detained the deed, and the jury gave 20*l.* damages, but did not find the value of the deed; and then there issued out a distingas to deliver the deed, or the value, and afterwards a writ of inquiry was awarded for the value: whereupon the jury found a different value from what the first verdict found; and it was adjudged good. Raym. 124: 1 Nels. Abr. 649. In detinue of charters, if the issue be upon the detinue, and it is found that the defendant hath burnt the charters, the judgment shall not be to recover the charters, which it appears cannot be had; but it is said it shall be for the plaintiff to recover the land in damages. 2 Rol. Abr. 101: 2 Danv. Abr. 511. For detaining of deeds and charters concerning the inheritance of lands, or an indenture of lease, the defendant shall not wage his law, as he may in a common action of detinue. 1 Inst. 295.

DETINUE OF GOODS IN FRANK-MARRIAGE, is on a divorce between a man and his wife; after which, the wife shall have this writ of detinue for the goods given with her in marriage. Mich. 35 E. 1: New Nat. Br. 308.

DETRACTARI, To be torn in pieces with horses — Apostata, sacrilegi, & bujismodi, detractari debent & comburi. Flota, lib. 1. cap. 37. But we know not, now, of any such punishment by our laws.

DETUNICARE, To discover or lay open to the world. Matth. Westminster. 1240.

DEVADIATUS, Is where an offender is without sureties or pledges. Domesday.

DEVASTAVIT; OR DEVASTAVERUNT BONA TESTATORIS. A writ that lies against executors or administrators, for paying debts upon simple contract, before debts on bonds and specialties, &c. for in this case they are liable to action, as if they had squandered away, or wasted the goods of the deceased, or converted them to their own use; and are compellable to pay such debts by specialty out of their own goods, to the value of what they so paid illegally. Dyer 232. But if an executor pays debts upon simple contract, before he hath any notice of bonds, it is no devastavit; and regularly this notice is by an action commenced against him, for the law doth not oblige him to take notice of it himself, nor of a judgment against his testator, because he is not privy to acts done either by or against him. 1 Mol. 175: 1 Lev. 215.

Where an executor payeth legacies before debts, and hath not sufficient to pay both, it is a devastavit. Also where an executor sells the testator's goods at an under-value, it is a devastavit; but this is understood where the sale is fraudulent; for if more money could not be had, it is otherwise. Keilw. 59: 1 Nels. Abr. 649. Executors keeping the goods of the deceased in their hands, and not paying the testator's debts; or selling them, and not paying off debts, &c. or not observing the law which directs them in the management thereof; or doing any thing by negligence or fraud, whereby the estate of the deceased is misemployed, are guilty of a devastavit, or waste; and they shall be charged for so much de bonis propriis, as if for their own debt. 8 Rep. 133. But the fraud or negligence of one executor is not chargeable on the rest, where there are several executors. 1 Rol. Abr. 929.

There are some cases in the old books, in which it hath been held, if an executor wastes the goods of the testator, and afterwards makes his executor, and dies, leaving assets, that an action of debt will not lie against the executor of the wasting executor, upon a suggestion of a devastavit or waste by the first executor; because it is a personal wrong which died with him. 3 Leon. 241. But in this case there is a difference between a lawful executor, and an executor de son tort; for as an executor de son tort possesses himself of the goods wrongfully, if he afterwards wastes them, and dies, leaving assets, his executor ecutor shall be charged upon the suggestion of a devastavit in his testator, because he came wrongfully by the goods, and therefore the wrong shall not die with his person. 2 Lev. 133—See title Executor, V. 1. And before the Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 7, it was decreed in equity against the executor of a lawful executor, who had wasted the goods, and died, that such executor should be liable to make good to the creditors of the testator, so much as the first executor had wasted, and so far as he had assets of the said first executor. 1 Chanc. Rep. 257.

By the said Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 7, it is enacted, That if an executor de son tort wastes the goods, and dies, his executors shall be liable in the same manner as their testator would have been, if he had been living. And it has been since adjudged, that a rightful executor, who wastes the goods of the testator, is in effect an executor de son tort for abusing his trust; 3 Mod. 113. And his executor or administrator is made liable to a devastavit, by Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24, which statute makes the Stat. 30 C. 2. c. 7, perpetual.

Debt lies against an executor in the debet and detinet, where there is a judgment against his testator, upon a suggestion only, that he had wasted the goods; and this is a more expeditious way than the old method of sci. fac. inquiry, which was issued to shew cause why the plaintiff should not have execution against the executor de bonis propriis, and thereupon the sheriff returned a devastavit, &c. 1 Lev. 147: 1 Nelf. 653.

A husband is to be charged for waste done by his wife dum sola; but the husband is not chargeable after the death of a wife executrix, on suggestion of a devastavit in a declaration against him. Cro. Car. 603: Lutw. 672. And it has been adjudged, that a feme covert executrix cannot do any waste during the coverture; though for waste done by the husband she shall be charged, if she survive him; but then it must be on a judgment obtained against him, and not on a bare suggestion of a devastavit, &c. 2 Lev. 145. If an executor or administrator confesses judgment, or suffers it to go by default, he thereby admits assets, and is estopped to say the contrary in an action on such judgment suggesting a devastavit. 1 Will. 258.—See titles Debt; and further, particularly title Executor, VI. 2.

DEVENERUNT, A writ heretofore directed to the escheator on the death of the heir of the King's tenant under age and in custody, commanding the escheator that by the oaths of good and lawful men he inquire what lands and tenements by the death of the tenant came to the King. Dyer 360. This writ is now disused; but see Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 11, for preventing frauds and abuses in his Majesty's Customs.

DEVEST, devestire.] Is opposite to invest. As to invest signifies to deliver the possession of any thing to another, so to devest signifieth to take it away. Feud. lib. 1. cap. 7.

DEVISE, from the Fr. deviser, to divide or sort into parcels.] A gift of lands, &c. by a last will and testament. The giver is called the devisor; and he to whom the lands are given, the devisee. A devise in writing is, in construction of law, no deed; but an instrument by which lands are conveyed.

To DEVISE, is to give by will.

The word was formerly, particularly applied to bequests of land; but is now generally used for the gift of any legacies whatever.

For the law relating to Devisees, as well of real as personal estates, See fully this Dist. title Will. As to Executory Devisees, See title Executory Devise, Estate, Limitation, Remainder.

DEVOIRES or CALEIS, Fr. Devoir, Duty.] The customs due to the King, for merchandise brought into or carried out of Calais, when our staple remained there. Stat. 2 R. 2. Stat. 1. c. 3.—See Stat. 34 Ed. 1. c. 18.

DEXTRARIUS, One at the right hand of another. And the word dextrarius has been used for light horses, or horses for the great saddle; from the Fr. deffrier, a horse for service.

DEXTRAS DARE, Shaking of hands in token of friendship; or a man's giving up himself to the power of another person. Walsingh. p. 312.

DIARIUM, Is taken for daily food; or as much as will suffice for the day. Du Cange.

DIASPERATUS, Stained with many colours. Mon. rom. 3. pag. 314.

DICA, A tally for accounts, by number of tailles, cuts or notches. Lib. Rub. Scaccar. fol. 30.

DICKAR, or DICKER OF LEATHER, Is a certain quantity, consisting of ten hides, by which leather is bought and sold. Vide Stat. 51 H. 3. St. 1. There are also dickers of iron, containing ten bars to the dicker. This word is thought to come from the Greek δύναμις, which signifies ten. Domesday.

DICTORES AND DICTUM. The one signifies an arbitrator; and the other the arbitrament. Malm. p. 348.

DICTUM DE KENELWORTH. An edict or award, between King Henry the Third and his Barons and others, who had been in arms against him: so called, because it was made at Kenelworth Castle in Warwickshire, anno 51 Hen. 3. It contained a composition of those who had forfeited their estates in that rebellion, which composition was five year's rent of the lands and estates forfeited.

DIEM CLAUSIT EXTREMUM, A writ which issued out of the court of Chancery to the escheator of the county, upon the death of any of the King's tenants in capite, to inquire by a jury of what lands he died seised, and of what value, and who was the next heir to him. This writ to be granted at the suit of the next heir, &c. for upon that, when the heir came of age, he was to sue livery of his lands out of the King's hands. F. N. B. 251.

DIES, See Day.

DIES DATUS, Is a day or time of respite given to the defendant in a suit by the court. Broke.—See Day.

DIES MARCHIÆ, Was the day of congress or meeting of the English and Scotch, appointed annually to be held on the marches or borders, to adjust all differences between them, and preserve the articles of peace. Tho. Walsingham, in Ric. 2. p. 307.

DIETA, A day's journey. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 28; Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 16.

DIE'T, conventus.] A legislative assembly; as the diet of the Empire, of Ratisbon, &c. See this Dist. titles Parliament, Wittenagemote.

DIEU ET MON DROIT, God and my Right; the motto of the royal arms, intimating, that the King of England holds his empire of none but God; first given by King Rich. 1.

DIEU SON ACT, Are words often used in our old law: and it is a maxim in law, That the act of God, or inevitable inevitable accident, shall prejudice no man. Therefore, if a house be blown down by tempest, thunder or lightning, the lessee or tenant for life or years, shall be excused in waste: likewise he hath by the law a special interest to take timber, to build the house again for his habitation. 4 Rep. 63: 11 Rep. 82. So when the condition of a bond consists of two parts in the disjunctive, and both are possible at the time of the obligation made, and afterwards one of them becomes impossible by the act of God, the obligor is not bound to perform the other part. 5 Rep. 22. And where a person is bound to appear in court, at a certain day, if before the day he dieth, the obligation is saved, &c. See particularly relative to this term, titles Bailment, Carrier.

DIGEST. The book of Pandects of the Civil law; which hath its name from its containing Legalia præcepta excellenter Digesta. Du Cange.—See title Civil Law.

DIGNITY, dignitas.] Signifies honour and authority; reputation, &c. And dignity may be divided into superior and inferior: as the titles of Duke, Earl, Baron, &c. are the highest names of dignity; and those of Baronet, Knight, Serjeant at Law, &c. the lowest. Nobility only can give so high a name of dignity, as to supply the want of a surname in legal proceedings: and as the omission of a name of dignity may be pleaded in abatement of a writ, &c. so it may be where a peer, who has more than one name of dignity, is not named by the Most Noble. See title Abatement. No temporal dignity of any foreign nation can give a man a higher title here than that of Esquire. 2 Inst. 667.—See titles Addition; Descent; Peer.

DIGNITY ECCLESIASTICAL dignitas ecclesiastica.] Is defined by the Canonists to be administratio cum jurisdictione & potestate aliqua conjuncta; of which there are several examples in Duarenus, de Sacris Eccl. Sc. lib. 2. c. 6. Dignitates ecclesiasticae, are mentioned in the Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 31 & 32. And of church dignities, Cambden in his Britannia, p. 161, reckons in England 544.

DIGNITARIES, dignitarii.] Those who are advanced to any dignity ecclesiastical; as a Bishop, Dean, Archdeacon, Prebendary, &c. But there are simple Prebendaries, without cure or jurisdiction, which are not dignitaries. 3 Inst. 155.

DILAPIDATION, dilapidatio.] Is where an incumbent on a church living suffers the parsonage house or out-houses to fall down, or be in decay for want of necessary reparation: or it is the pulling down or destroying any of the houses or buildings, belonging to a spiritual living, or destroying of the woods, trees, &c. appertaining to the same; for it is said to extend to the committing or suffering any wilful waste, in or upon the inheritance of the church. Degge's Purf. Counf. 89. It is the interest of the church in general to preserve what belongs to it for the benefit of the successors; and the old canons, and our own provincial constitutions require the clergy sufficiently to repair the houses belonging to their benefices; which, if they neglect or refuse to do, the bishop may sequester the profits of the benefice for that purpose, &c. Right's Clerg. 143. And by the Canon law, dilapidations are made a debt, which is to be satisfied out of the profits of the church; but the Common law prefers debt on contracts, &c. before debt for dilapidations. Hern. 136.

The prosecution in these cases may be brought either against the incumbent himself, or against his executors or administrators; and the executor or administrator of him in whose time it was done or suffered, must make amends to the successor: and if the proceedings are against the incumbent, then they ought to be in the spiritual court. That court may also proceed against an executor, or the successor may have an action of the case or debt at the Common law, in which action he shall recover damages in proportion to the dilapidations. 1 Nelf. Abr. 656: Purf. Counf. 97, 98: Carter 224: 3 Lev. 268.

It is also said to be good cause of deprivation, if the Bishop, Parson, Vicar, or other ecclesiastical person dilapidates the buildings, or cuts down timber growing on the patrimony of the church unless for necessary repairs. 1 Ro. Rep. 86: 11 Rep. 98: Godb. 259. And that a writ of prohibition will also lie against him in the courts of Common law. 3 Bullst. 158: 1 Ro. Rep. 335.

By Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 10, if any Parson, &c. shall make a gift of his goods and personal estate to defraud his successor of his remedy for dilapidations, such successor may have the same remedy in the spiritual court against the person to whom such gift is made, as he might have against the executors of the deceased parson. And by Stat. 14 Eliz. c. 11, money recovered for dilapidations, is to be employed in the reparations of the same houses suffered to be in decay, or the party recovering shall forfeit double the value of what he receives, to the King.

If a parson suffers dilapidations, and afterwards takes another benefice, whereby his former benefice becomes void, his successor may have an action against him, and declare that by the custom of the kingdom he ought to pay him so much money as shall be sufficient to repair the dilapidations. 3 Lev. 268. In case a parson comes to a living, the buildings whereof are in decay by dilapidations, and his predecessor did not leave a sufficient personal estate to repair them, so that he is without remedy, he is to have the defects surveyed by workmen, and attested under their hands in the presence of witnesses, which may be a means to secure him from the incumbrance brought upon him by the fault of his predecessor. Country Parson's Companion 60.

DILATORY PLEAS, Are such as are put in merely for delay; and there may be a demurrer to a dilatory plea, or issue may be taken on the fact, if false. If the plea is true in fact, and good in law, and is in abatement, the plaintiff must enter up judgment of causatur, before he commences a new suit. If the plea is adjudged ill, on demurrer, there must be a resp. nunciasse, and defendant must plead another plea. If verum in fact, is taken, and found by the jury, for plaintiff, in case, &c. they assess the damages. In debt, the judgment for plaintiff is final, &c. The truth of dilatory pleas is to be made out by affidavit of the fact, &c. by Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 11.—See title Pleading.

DILLIGROUT, Pottage formerly made for the King's table, on his coronation day: and there was a tenure in feignancy, by which lands were held of the King, by the service of finding this pottage, at that solemnity. 39 H. 3.

DIMIDIETAS, Used in records for a moiety, or one half.

DIMINISHING the coin. See title Coin.

DIMINUTION, diminutio.] Is where the plaintiff or defendant, on an appeal to a superior court, alleges that part of the record is omitted, and remains in the inferior court not certified; whereupon he prays that it may be certified by certiorari. Co. Ent. 232, 242. Of course diminution is to be certified on a writ of error; though if issue be joined upon the errors assigned, and the matter is entered upon record, which is made a confilium, in this case there must be a rule of court granted for a certiorari to certify diminution. 1 Lil. Abr. 245. Diminution cannot be alleged of a thing which is fully certified; but in something that is wanting, as want of an original, or a warrant of attorney, &c. 2 Lev. 206: 1 Nelf. Abr. 658. And if on diminution alleged, and the plaintiff in error certify one original, &c. which is wrong; and the defendant in error certifies another that is true; the true one shall stand. Ch. Jac. 577. Cro. Car. 91.

After a writ of error brought, and the defendant hath pleaded in nullo est erratum, he cannot afterwards alledge diminution; because by that plea he affirmeth or alloweth the record to be such as is certified upon the writ of error. Godb. 266. But in some cases, diminution hath been alleged, after in nullo est erratum pleaded, ex gratia curiæ; though not ex rigore juris. Palm. 85. And there is an instance, that the court in such a case hath awarded a certiorari, to inform their conscience of the truth of the record in C. B. where the defendant in error had not joined in nullo est erratum. 1 Nelf. 658.—See further title Judgment, Reversal of.

DIMISSORY LETTERS, literæ dimissoriæ] Are such as are used where a candidate for holy orders has a title in one diocese, and is to be ordained in another: the proper diocesan sends his letters dimissory directed to some other ordaining bishop, giving leave that the bearer may be ordained, and have such a cure within his district. Cowel.

DIOCESE, diocesis.] Signifies the circuit of every bishop's jurisdiction. For this realm hath two sorts of divisions: one into shires or counties, in respect to the temporal state; and another into dioceses, in regard to the ecclesiastical state, of which we reckon twenty-one in England, and four in Wales. Co. Lit. 94. Also the kingdom is said to be divided in its ecclesiastical jurisdiction into two provinces of Canterbury and York; each of which provinces is divided into dioceses, and every diocese into archdeaconries, and archdeaconries into parishes, &c. Howell's Inst. 2.

The bounds of Dioceses are to be determined by witnesses and records, but more particularly by the administration of divine offices. To which purpose, there are two rules in the Canon law. In one case, upon a dispute between two bishops upon this head, the direction is, that they proceed in the business, by ancient books or writings, and also by witnesses, reputation, and other sufficient proof: in the other case, where the question was, by whom a church built upon the confines of two dioceses should be consecrated, the rule laid down is, that it should be consecrated by the bishop of that city, who, before it was founded, baptized the inhabitants, and administered to them other divine offices. Gibf. 133.

The jurisdiction of the city is not included in the name of diocese, so saith the Canon law: and accordingly, in citations in general visitations, directed to the clergy, it is ordered to cite the clergy of the city and diocese. Gibf. 133.

A bishop may perform divine offices, and use his episcopal habit, in the diocese of another, without leave; but may not perform therein any act of jurisdiction, without permission of the other bishop. Gibf. 133.

A clergyman dwelling in one diocese, and beneficed in another, and being guilty of a crime, may, in different respects, be punished in both; that is, the bishop in whose diocese he dwells, may prosecute him; but the sentence, so far as it affects his benefice, must be carried into execution by the other bishop. Gibf. 134.—See titles Bishop; Clergy; Convocation.

DISABILITY, disabilitas.] An incapacity in a man to inherit any lands, or take that benefit which otherwise he might have done: which may happen four ways; by the act of an ancestor, or of the party himself, by the act of God, or of the law.

1. Disability, by the act of the ancestor, is where the ancestor is attainted of treason, &c. which corrupts the blood of his children, so that they may not inherit his estate. See title Attainder, Descent.

2. Disability, by the act of the party, is where a man binds himself by obligation, that upon surrender of a lease, he will grant a new estate to the lessee; and afterwards he grants over the reversion to another, which puts it out of his power to perform it.

3. Disability, by the act of God, is where a person is of non-sane memory, whereby he is incapable to make any grant, &c. So that if he passeth an estate out of him, it may after his death be made void; but it is a maxim in law, that a man of full age shall never be received to disable his own person. See title Lunacy.

4. Disability, by the act of the law, is where a man by the sole act of the law, without any thing done by him, is rendered incapable of the benefit of the law; as an alien born, &c. Terms de Ley: 4 Rep. 123, 124: 5 Rep. 21: 8 Rep. 43.—See title Alien.

There are also other disabilities, by the Common law, of idocy, infancy, and coverture, as to grants, &c. And by statute in many cases: as papists are disabled to make any presentation to a church, &c. Officers not taking the oaths, are incapable to hold offices: Forfeigners, though naturalized, to bear offices in the government, &c. See the proper titles. A person shall not be admitted to disavow himself to avoid an office of charge, &c. no more than a man shall be allowed to say that he was an idiot, &c. to avoid an act done by himself. Carth. 307. As to the disability of Defenders, See that title, and title Non-conformists. As to pleas of disability in the person of the plaintiff, See title Abatement.

DISADVOCARE, To deny, or not acknowledge a thing. Hingham Magna, cap. 4.

DISAGREEMENT, Will make a nullity of a thing, that had essence before: and disagreement may be to certain acts, to make them void, &c. Co. Lit. 380.—See title Agreement.

DISALT, According to Littleton, is to disable a person. Lit. title Discontinuan &c.

DISBOSCATIO, A turning wood ground into arable or pasture.

DISCARCARE,

DISCA

DISCARCARE, From Dis, and Cargo.] To unlade a ship or vessel by taking out the cargo or goods. Placit. Parl. 18 Ed. 1.—See Carcatus.

DISCEIT, See Decit.

DISCENT, See Descent.

DISCHARGE, On writs and process, &c. is where a man is confined by some legal writ or authority, and doth that which by law he is required to do; he is released or discharged from the matter for which he was confined. If one be arrested by a launt out of B. R. and the plaintiff do not file a declaration against the defendant in prison in two terms, he shall be discharged on common bail. 1 Lil. Abr. 470. Also where a defendant on arrest is admitted to baill, if the bail bring in the principal before the return of the second seire facias issued out against them, they shall be discharged. If an obligor discharges one joint obligor, where several are jointly bound, it discharges the others. Murb. 129. And a man may discharge a promise made to himself, &c. Cro. Jac. 483.—See titles Accord; Acquittal; Habeas Corpus; Satisfaction; Bond, &c.

DISCLAIMER, disclamium, from Fr. clamer, with the privative dis.] Is a plea containing an express denial, or renouncing of a thing; as if a tenant sue a replevin, upon the distress of the lord, and the lord avows the taking, saying the tenant holds of him as of his lord, and that he distrained for the rent not paid, or service not performed: now, if the tenant say he doth not hold of him, this is called a disclaimer, and the lord proving the tenant to hold of him, on a writ of right for disclaimer brought, the tenant shall lose his land. Terms de Ley.

This Disclaimer by a tenant, is considered as a civil crime, and punished accordingly, by forfeiture of lands to the lord, on reasons most apparently feudal. Finch. 270, 1. So if in any court of record, the particular tenant does any act which amounts to a virtual disclaimer; if he claims any greater estate than was granted him at the last infeodation; or takes upon himself those rights which belong only to tenants of a superior class. 1 Iust. 2: 2: if he affirms the reversion to be in a stranger by accepting his fine, attorning as his tenant, collusive pleading, and the like; such behaviour amounts to a forfeiture of his particular estate. 1 Iust. 253: 2 Comm. 275: 3 Comm. 233.

If a writ of precipe be brought against two persons for land, and one of them, the tenant, saith that he is not tenant, nor claims any thing in the lands; this is a disclaimer as to him, and the other shall have the whole land. Terms de Ley. And when a tenant hath disclaimed, upon action brought against him, he shall not have restitution on writ of error, &c. against his own act; but is barred of his right to the land disclaimed. 8 Rep. 62. But a verbal disclaimer shall not take place against a deed of lands: nor shall the disclaimer of a wife during the coverture bar her entry on her lands. 3 Rep. 26.

Baron and Feme may disclaim for the wife; though if the husband hath nothing but in right of his wife, he cannot disclaim. 2 Danv. Abr. 569. Such person as cannot lose the thing perpetually in which he disclaims, shall not be permitted to disclaim: a bishop, &c. may not disclaim, for he cannot divest the right out of the church. Though in a quo warranto, at the suit of the King, against a bishop or others for franchises and liberties, if the bishop, &c. disclaims them, this shall bind the successors. Co. Lit. 102, 103. If a man be vouched because of a reversion on a lease made by himself, he cannot disclaim: but an heir may disclaim, being vouched upon a lease made by his ancestor. 2 Danv. 569.

A person may disclaim in the principal; and not in the incident; as he that is vouched because of a reversion, cannot disclaim in the reversion, saving the seignior, 40 Ed. 3. 27. If the lord disclaims his seignior, in a court of record, it is extinct, and the tenant shall hold of the lord next paramount to the lord disclaiming. Lit. sec. 146.

It is said not to be necessary, that the writ of right for disclaimer should be brought against the person that disclaims; for if it be only against him that is found tenant of the land, though he be a stranger, it is not material. 2 Danv. 570. By plea of non-tenure, nothing is disowned but the freehold, which may be good where the tenant hath the reversion in fee, and not the freehold; but when such tenant disclaims, or pleads non-tenure and disclaims, the demandant shall have the whole, as the whole is disclaimed. Ibid.

By Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. s. 5. In all actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, wherein the defendant shall disclaim any title to the land, and the trespass be by negligence or involuntary, the defendant shall be admitted to plead a disclaimer, and that the trespass was by negligence or involuntary, and a tender of sufficient amends before the action brought; and if the issue be found for the defendant, or the plaintiff be nonsuited, the plaintiff shall be barred from the said action, and all suits concerning the same. See title Pleading.

Besides these disclaimers by tenants of lands, there are disclaimers in divers other cases: for there is a disclaimer of blood, where a person denies himself to be of the blood or kindred of another, in his plea. F. N. B. 102. And a disclaimer of goods, as well as lands; as if a man disclaimeth goods, on arraignment of felony, when he shall lose them, though he be cleared. Standf. P. C. 186. In Chancery, if a defendant by his answer renounces the having any interest in the thing in question, this is likewise a disclaimer. See title Chancery. And there is a deed of disclaimer of executorship of a will, &c. where an executor refuses, and throws up the same.

DISCONTINUANCE.

DISCONTINUATIO, from Fr. discontinuer, cessare.] An interruption or breaking off. An injury to real property, which consists in the keeping out the true owner of an estate, by a tenant whose entry was at first lawful, but who wrongfully detains the possession afterwards.

This happens when he who hath an estate-tail, maketh a larger estate of the land than by law he is entitled to do: in which case the estate is good, so far as his power extends who made it, but no further. Finch. L. 190. As if tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee-simple, or for the life of the feoffee, or in tail; all which are beyond his power legally to make, for that by the Common law extends no farther than to make a lease for his own life: in such case, the entry of the feoffee is lawful during the life of the feoffor; but if he retains the possession after the death of the feoffor, it is an injury which is termed a discontinuance; the ancient legal estate, which ought to have survived to the heir in tail being gone; or at least suspended, and for a while discontinued. For, in this case, on the death of the alienors neither the heir in tail, nor they in remainder or reversion expectant on the determination of the estate-tail, can enter on and possess the land so aliened: but must bring their writ, and seek to recover possession by law. 3 Comm. 172: 1 Inst. 325: F. N. B. 191, 4.

In the case of a Disseisin. (see that title) while the possession remains in the disseisor, it is a mere naked possession unsupported by any right; and the disseisee may restore his own possession, and put a total end to the possession of the disseisor by an entry on the land, without any previous action: but if the disseisor dies, his heir comes to the possession of the estate by a lawful title: it is the same if the disseisor aliens: the alienee comes in by a lawful title. By reason of this lawful title, the heir in the first instance, and the alienee in the second, acquires a presumptive right of possession, which is so far good, that even the person disseised loses by it his right to recover the possession by entry; and can only recover it by an action at law. When the right of entry is thus lost, and the party can only recover by action, the possession is said to be discontinued. This is the general import of the word discontinuance; but in its usual acceptation it signifies the effect of alienations made by husbands seised in right of their wives; by ecclesiasticks seised in right of their church; or by tenants in tail; those being the three instances adduced by Littleton of Discontinuance. Thus before the Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20, the alienation of a woman seised of an estate in dower, or of any estate of the gift of her husband, or of any of his ancestors, was said to be a discontinuance: and before the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 31: 14 Eliz. c. 8, recoveries suffered by tenants for life, tenants by the curtesy, or tenants in tail after possibility of issue extinct, or even by the feoffee of tenant for years, worked a discontinuance. See 1 Rep. 14.

It is to be observed, that there is a material difference between the situation or title of the alienee of any person, whose alienation makes a discontinuance, and the situation or title of the heir or alienee of a disseisor; for the heir and alienee of a disseisor immediately claim under a person coming in by a wrongful title, and their estates though not defeasible by entry, are immediately defeasible by action. But the alienee of every person, whose alienation is said to be a discontinuance, [or rather whose alienation causes a discontinuance,] claims by a person having a lawful estate; and the estate of the alienee is unimpeachable during the life of the alienor. It should also be observed, that a discontinuance extends to those cases only, where a person is dispossessed of an estate of freehold, and where though he has lost his right of entry, he can still recover the possession by action. The peculiar import of the word Discontinuance, where applied to the cases mentioned by Littleton, is thus shortly, but forcibly expressed by Houard, in his Ancient Laws of the French—"An interruption of the right, which one has on an estate, by the sale which another, charged to preserve that right, has made of it."—See 1 Inst. 325 4. And the long and learned note there on the doctrine of Discontinuance at large.

By the Common law, the alienation of an husband who was seised in right of his wife, worked a discontinuance of the wife's estate: till the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28, provided, that no act by the husband alone should work a discontinuance of, or prejudice the inheritance or freehold of the wife: but that after his death, she or her heirs may enter on the lands in question. Formerly also, if an alienation was made by a sole Corporation, as a Bishop or Dean, without consent of the Chapter, this was a discontinuance. F. N. B. 194. But this is now quite antiquated by the disabling Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 19: 13 Eliz. c. 10; which declare all such alienations absolutely void ab initio; and therefore at present no discontinuance can be thereby occasioned. 3 Comm. 172.

Having said thus much on the general nature of Discontinuance, a title which though of considerable extent in the old law, is now very much abridged by statute, the following selection on the subject may be sufficient in this place: to terrify the enquiring student to Com. Dig. title Discontinuance, and the other abridgements; for further information when necessary.

A Discontinuance taketh away an entry only: and to every discontinuance it is necessary there should be a deverting or displacing of the estate, and turning the same to a right; for if it be not turned to a right, they that have the estate cannot be driven to an action. Co. Lit. 327. And an estate-tail cannot be discontinued, but where he that makes the discontinuance, was once seised by force of the intail, where the estate-tail is executed; unless by reason of a warranty. Lit. Sect. 637, 641. Also if tenant in tail levies a fine, &c. this is no discontinuance, till the fine is executed; because if he dies before execution, the issue may enter. Co. Lit. 33: 2 Darv. Abr. 572.

A Discontinuance may be five ways, viz. by feoffment, fine, recovery, release and confirmation with warranty. 1 Rep. 44. A grant without livery, or a grant in fee without warranty, are no discontinuances: an exchange will not make a discontinuance; as if tenant in tail exchanges land with another, that is not any discontinuance, by reason no livery is requisite thereon. 2 Darv. 57. It is the same of a bargain and sale, &c. And an alteration of such things as lie in grant, and not in livery, works no discontinuance; for such grant does no wrong either to the issue in tail, or him in reversion or remainder, because nothing passeth but during the life of tenant in tail, which is lawful; and every discontinuance worketh a wrong. Co. Lit. 332.

If tenant in tail of a copyhold estate, surrenders to another in fee, this makes not any discontinuance, (except there be a custom for it) but the heir in tail may enter; though this hath been a great question. 1 Leon. 95: 2 Darv. 571. If there be tenant for life, remainder in tail, and remainder in tail, &c. And tenant for life, and he in the first remainder in tail levy a fine, this is no discontinuance of either of the remainders. 1 Rep. 76. But if there be tenant in tail, remainder in tail, &c. and tenant in tail enfeoffs him in reversion in fee: or where there is tenant for life, remainder in tail, reversion in fee, and tenant for life enfeoffs the reversioner; these are discontinuances, because there is a mean or immediate estate. 1 Rep. 140: Co. Lit. 335: 3 Darv. 575.

If there be tenant in tail, remainder to his right heirs, and he makes feoffment in fee, this is a discontinuance; though such tenant that made the feoffment, hath the fee in him. 2 Darv. 572. A man is tenant for life, the remainder in tail, remainder in fee, and the tenant for life makes a feoffment to him in remainder in fee; this is such a discontinuance of the estate-tail, as produceth a forfeiture. 3 Rep. 59. If a tenant in tail be disseised, and after, after release with warranty to the disseisor, it will be a discontinuance: so if he release or confirm to tenant for life. Lit. Sect. 135: 1 Rep. 44. And if, where there is a tenant for life, and remainder in tail, the tenant for life levies a fine to his own use; and after tenant for life and he in remainder join in a feoffment by letter of attorney, this is a discontinuance of the estate-tail and the fee. Dyer 327.

If tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, and the condition is broken, the issue may enter notwithstanding this discontinuance. Lit. 632. Tenant in tail grants all his estate to another, though without livery and seisin; and if that other person make a feoffment in fee, it will not be a discontinuance to take away the entry of him in reversion or remainder. Lit. 145: 1 Rep. 46: 10 Rep. 97. A lease is made for life, remainder in tail; and he in remainder in tail disseises the tenant for life, and makes a feoffment in fee, and dies without issue, and then tenant for life dieth; this is no discontinuance to him in reversion. Lit. 146: 1 Brown. 36. And if tenant in tail of a rent, common, advowson, or the like, grant it in fee, it is not a discontinuance: nor where such tenant granteth any thing out of land, &c. Lit. 138: Finch's Law 193.

Where a tenant in tail of a manor makes a lease for life, not warranted by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28, of part of the demesnes, this is a discontinuance of this parcel; and it is said makes it no parcel of the manor. 2 Rol. Abr. 58.

There can be no discontinuance by tenant in tail of the gift of the Crown, Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 20. Nor by tenant in tail of fee-farm rents, to bar the remainder vested by the statute; Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 24. s. 6. And some discontinuances at Common law are now made bars as to the issue in tail; though they still remain discontinuances in some cases, to him in remainder, &c. such as fines, with proclamations by Stat. 4 H. 7. cap. 24: 32 H. 8. cap. 36. If the husband levy a fine with proclamations, and dieth, the wife must enter, or avoid the estate of the confuser within five years, or she is barred for ever, by the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. For the Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 28, doth help the discontinuance, but not the bar. Co. Lit. 326. Husband and wife tenant in special tail, the husband alone levied a fine to his own use, and afterwards he devised the land to his wife for life, the remainder over, rendering rent, &c. The husband dies, the wife enters and pays the rent, and dies: in this case it was adjudged, that the fine had barred the issue in tail, but not the wife. Dyer 351. The entry of the wife in this case was a disagreement to the estate of inheritance, and an agreement to the estate for life: but if the wife had not waived the inheritance, the estate tail as to the wife had remained. 9 Rep. 135.

If lands be given to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies, and the husband maketh a feoffment in fee, and dieth; the wife is helped by Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28; and so is the issue of both their bodies 1 Inst. 326. The husband is tenant in tail, the remainder to the wife in tail, the husband makes a feoffment in fee; by this, the husband, by the Common law, did not only discontinue his own estate tail, but his wife's remainder: but by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28, after the death of the husband without issue, the wife may enter by the said act. Though if the husband hath issue, and maketh a feoffment in fee of his wife's land, and his wife dieth;

the heir of the wife shall not enter during the husband's life, neither by the Common law nor by the statute. 1 Inst. 326.

A Discontinuance may be defeated, where the estate that worked it is defeated: as if a husband make a feoffment of the wife's land upon condition, and, after his death, his heir enters on the feoffee for the condition broken; now the discontinuance is defeated, and the feme may enter upon the heir, Co. Lit. 336.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PLEA, Is where divers things should be pleaded to, and some are omitted: this is a discontinuance. 1 Nelf. Abr. 660, 661. If a defendant's plea begin with an answer to part, and answers no more, it is a discontinuance: and the plaintiff may take judgment by nil dicit, for what is not answered: but if the plaintiff plead over, the whole action is discontinued. 1 Salk. 139. Debt upon bond of 500*l.* the defendant as to 225*l.* part of it, pleads payment, &c. And upon demurrer to this plea, it was adjudged that there being no answer to the residue, it is a discontinuance as to that, for which the plaintiff ought to take judgment by nil dicit. 1 Salk. 180. Where no answer is given to one part, if the plaintiff pleads thereto, he cannot have judgment according to his declaration; for which reason it may be a discontinuance of the whole. 1 Nelf. 660. But this is helped after verdict by Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 30. See titles Amendment & Pleading.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PROCESS. This Discontinuance is somewhat similar to a nonsuit; for when a plaintiff leaves a chasm in the proceedings of his cause, as by not continuing the process regularly from day to day, and time to time as he ought to do, the suit is discontinued; and the defendant is no longer bound to attend; but the plaintiff must begin again by suing out a new original, usually paying costs to his antagonist. Antiently by the demise of the King all suits depending in his courts were at once discontinued; but to prevent the expence as well as delay attending this rule of law the Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 7, enacts that no action shall be discontinued by such death of the King. The continuance of the suit by improper process, or by giving the party an illegal day, is properly a mis-continuance.

Where an action is long depending, and continued from one term to another, the continuances must be all entered, otherwise there will be a discontinuance; whereupon a writ of error may be brought, &c. 1 Nelf. Abr. 660. If the plaintiff in a suit doth nothing, it is a discontinuance, and he must begin his suit again: and where it is too late to amend a declaration, &c. or the plaintiff is advised to prosecute in another court, he is to discontinue his suit, and proceed de novo. But a discontinuance of an action is not perfect till it is entered on the roll, when it is of record. Cro. Car. 236.

The plaintiff cannot discontinue his action after a demurrer joined, and entered; or after a verdict, or a writ of inquiry, without leave of the court. Cro. Jac. 35: 1 Lill. Abr. 473. In actions of debt or covenant, after a demurrer joined, the court will give leave to discontinue, if there be an apparent cause, as if the plaintiff through his own negligence is in danger of losing his debt: but if the demurrer be argued, then he shall not have leave to discontinue; nor where he brings another action for the same cause, and this is pleaded in abatement of the first action. Sid. 84.

DISCONTINUANCE.

It has been ruled, upon a motion to discontinue, that the court may give leave after a special verdict; which is not complete and final; but never after a general verdict. 1 Salk. 178. See Harkn. 200, 1. So after enquiry executed and returned, Carth. 81.

After issue and a verdict plaintiff cannot discontinue without consent of defendant, for if plaintiff will not enter up judgment defendant may. Salk. 178.—After demurrer argued and allowed, discontinuance may be allowed on payment of costs. 8 Rep. 76, 116: 3 Lev. 440.

And where a man hath a just cause of action, for a matter of any consequence, and unadvisedly demurs to a plain bar, &c. and defendant joins in demurrer, and it is argued, and the court are of opinion the plea is good in law, tho' it may be false in fact, the court will, even after giving their opinions, but before judgment given, on motion, permit the plaintiff to withdraw his demurrer, on payment of costs, and take issue.

The plaintiff may if he sees occasion discontinue before, or after declaration delivered by a side bar rule on payment of costs N. on R. Mich. 10 Geo. 2. But in replevin the avowant cannot have such rule.

An appeal may as well be discontinued by the defect of the process or proceeding in it, as it may be by the insufficiency of the original writ, &c. For by such defect, the matter depending is as it were out of court. 1 L'lt. 473. A discontinuance or miscontinuance, at common law reverses a judgment given by default; and discontinuance upon a demurrer is error; but a miscontinuance after appearance is not so. 8 Rep. 150: 46 Ed. 3. 30.

Discontinuance of process is helped at Common law by appearance, and by Stat. 32 II. 8. cap. 30. All discontinuances, miscontinuances and negligences therein, of plaintiff or defendant, are cured after verdict. See tit. Amendment.

DISCOVERT. The law term for a woman unmarried or widow, one not within the bonds of matrimony. Law Fr. Dict.

DISCOVERY. The act of revealing or disclosing any matter by a defendant in his answer to a bill filed against him in a court of equity. See title Chancery.

To administer to the ends of justice, without pronouncing a judgment which may affect any rights, the Courts of equity in many cases compel a discovery. This jurisdiction is exercised to assist the administration of justice, in the prosecution or defence of some other suit, either in the Court of Equity itself or in some other court; and a discovery has been compelled to aid the jurisdiction of a foreign court. But if a bill is brought to aid, by a discovery, the prosecution or defence of any proceeding not merely civil, in any other court, as an indictment or information, a Court of Equity will not exercise its jurisdiction to compel a discovery; and the defendant may demur. 2 Vez. 398. And in the case of suits merely civil in a Court of ordinary jurisdiction, if that Court can itself compel the discovery required, a Court of Equity will not interfere. 1 Atk. 288: 1 Vez. 205: 2 Vez. 451.

A bill for a discovery must shew an interest in the plaintiff in the subject to which the required discovery relates; and such an interest as intitles him to call on the defendant for the discovery. See Finch Rep. 36, 44: 1 Vern. 399.

As the object of a Court of Equity in compelling a discovery is either to enable itself or some other court to decide on matters in dispute between the parties, the discovery sought must be material, either to the relief prayed by the bill, or to some other suit actually instituted, or capable of being instituted. If therefore the plaintiff does not shew by his bill such a case as renders the discovery which he seeks, material to the relief, if he prays relief; or does not shew a title to sue the defendant in some other court; or that he is actually involved in litigation with the defendant or liable to be so; and does not also shew that the discovery, which he prays, is material to enable him to support or defend a suit; he shews no title to the discovery; and consequently a demurrer to the bill for such purpose will be allowed. See Finch Rep. 214: 1 Vez. 205: 2 Vez. 396, 9: 2 Atk. 388: 1 Vern. 204.

The situation of a defendant may render it improper for a court of equity to compel a discovery; either, 1. because the discovery may subject the defendant to pains and penalties, or to some forfeiture or something in the nature of a forfeiture; or 2. it may hazard his title in a case where in conscience he has at least an equal right with the person requiring the discovery; though that right may not be clothed with a perfect legal title; as to which latter, see 1 Vez. 205: 3 Atk. 453.—It is a general rule that no one is bound to answer to as to subject himself to punishment, in whatever manner that punishment may arise; (as by pains and penalties, a criminal prosecution, &c.) or whatever may be the nature of the punishment. 2 Vez. 245, 451: 1 Vez. 246: 1 Eq. Ab. 131. p. 10: 1 Atk. 450: 2 Atk. 393: Finch title Uses Q. 4: Tolb. 135.

But if the plaintiff alone is intitled to the penalties, and expressly waves them by his bill, the defendant shall be compelled to make the discovery; for it can no longer subject him to a penalty. 1 Vern. 60.—And though a discovery may subject a defendant to penalties, to which the plaintiff is not entitled, and which consequently he cannot wave, yet if the defendant has expressly covenanted, not to plead or demur to the discovery sought, which is the common case with respect to servants of the East India Company, he shall be compelled to answer. 1 Eq. Ab. 77, 8. Where too a person by his own agreement subjects himself to a payment in the nature of a penalty on his doing a particular act a demurrer, to discovery of that act will not be allowed.

It seems however that a demurrer will be allowed to any discovery which may tend to shew the defendant guilty of any moral turpitude, as the birth of a child out of wedlock. Park. 163: but see 2 Vez. 451.—But a mother may in some cases be compelled to discover where her child was born, though it may lead to prove the child an alien. 2 Vez. 287, 494.

A defendant may likewise demur to a bill which may subject him to any forfeiture of interest; as if a bill is brought to discover whether a lease has been assigned without licence; or whether a defendant entitled during widowhood, or liable to forfeiture of a legacy in case of marriage without consent is married; or to discover any matter, which may subject a defendant intitled to any office or franchise to a quo warranto. See Tolb. 69: 1 Vez. 56: 2 C. R. 68: 2 Atk. 392: 2 Vez. 265: 1 Eq. Ab. 131. c. 10.

A defendant may in the same manner demur to a discovery, which may subject him to any thing in the nature of a forfeiture; as to a discovery whether he was educated in the popish religion, by which he might incur the incapacities incapacities in stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. which the stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60. does not entirely remove: or whether a clergyman was presented to a second living which avoided the first. See 3 Atk. 457: 2 Comm. 661: 3 Bac. Abr: 3 Atk. 453.

DISCRETION, Discretia.] When any thing is left to any person to be done according to his discretion, the law intends it must be done with sound discretion, and according to law: and the court of B. R. hath a power to redress things that are otherwise done, notwithstanding they are left to the discretion of those that do them. 1 Lil. Abr. 477.

Discretion is to discern between right and wrong; and therefore whoever hath power to act at discretion, is bound by the rule of reason and law. 2 Inst. 56, 298. And though there be a latitude of discretion given to one, yet he is circumscribed, that what he does be necessary and convenient; without which no liberty can defend it. Hob. 158. The assessment of fines on offenders committing affrays, &c. and the binding of persons to the good behaviour, are at the discretion of our judges and justices of peace. And in many cases, for crimes not capital, the judges have a discretionary power to inflict corporal punishment on the offenders. Infants, &c. under the age of discretion, are not punishable for crimes; and want of discretion is a good exception against a witness. See title Age; and other apposite titles.

To DISFRANCHISE, Is to take away one's freedom or privilege: it is the contrary to enfranchisement. And corporations have power to disfranchise members, in certain cases. See titles Corporation; By-Laws.

DISHERISON, A disinheritent: mentioned in stat. 20 Ed. 1: 8 R. 2.

DISHERITOR. One that disinheriteth, or puts another out of his inheritance. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 39.

DISMES, Ducumæ.] Tithes, or the tenth part of all the fruits of the earth, and of beasts, or labour, due to the clergy. It signifieth also the tenths of all spiritual livings given to the prince, which is called a perpetual dime. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 3. cap. 35. And formerly this word (tithes) signified a tax or tribute levied of the temporality. Hollingsh. in H. 2. f. 111. For the laws of the dismes or tithes. See titles Tithes; Taxes.

DISPARAGEMENT. In the time of the old tenures; the matching an heir in marriage under his degree, or against decency. Co. Lit. 107: Magn. Chart. c. 6. See this Dict. title Tenures.

TO DISPAUPER. When a person by reason of his poverty, is admitted to sue in forma pauperis; if afterwards, before the suit is ended, the same party have any lands or personal estate fallen to him or be guilty of any thing whereby he is liable to have this privilege taken from him, then he is put out of the capacity of suing in forma pauperis, and is said to be dispaupered. See title Costs II.

DISPENSATION. See title Bishops; and as to Dispensations to hold pluralities; see titles Chaplains; Cession.

DISPENSATIONS OF THE KING. If a dispensation by the Archbishop of Canterbury, is to be in extraordinary matters, or in a case that is new, the King and his council are to be consulted: and it ought to be confirmed under the broad seal. The King's authority to grant dispensations remains as it did at common law; notwithstanding stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21: Cro. Eliz. 542, 601. See further as to the dispensing power of the Crown by non obstante, &c. this Dict. title King.

DISPERSONARE, To scandalise or disparage. Blount.

DISSIGNARE. To break open a seal—Scipulo patre testamentum dissignatum est. Neubrigenfis, lib. 2. c. 7.

DISSEISIN. From the Fr. Disseisin.]

A species of injury by ouster to the freehold estate of another.—A wrongful putting out of him that is seised of the freehold. 1 Inst. 277. As where a person enters into lands or tenements, and his entry is not lawful, and keeps him that hath the estate from the possession thereof. Bract. lib. 4. c. 3. And disseisin is of two sorts; either single disseisin, committed without force of arms; or disseisin by force; but this latter is more properly deforcement. Brit. cap. 42, 43.

Seisin is a technical term to denote the completion of that investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into the tenure, and without which no freehold could be constituted, or pass. Disseisin must therefore mean the turning the tenant out of his tenure and usurping his place and feudal relation—Lord Mansfield in the case of Taylor ex dem. Atkins v. Hodge, 1 Burr. 60: 5 Bro. P. C. 247.

Now however from the several statutes, first restraining and at length abolishing all military tenures, little more is left than the names of seignior, seisin, tenure and freeholder, without any precise knowledge of the things originally signified by those terms. Ibid.

In the same case Lord Mansfield said “Disseisin is a complicated fact, and differs from dispossessing. The freeholder by disseisin differs from a possessor by wrong.—Though the term disseisin happens to be the same, the thing signified by that word as applied to the two cases of actual disseisin, or disseisin by election is very different.” In this case it was attempted to support a common recovery, by supposing the tenant to the precept, to have gained a freehold by disseisin—The nature of a disseisin was therefore elaborately investigated by the counsel; and the idea of a freehold being gained thereby, learnedly repelled by Lord Mansfield. See further title Fine.

Disseisin therefore seems to imply the turning the tenant out of his fee, and usurping his place and relation.—To constitute an actual disseisin it was necessary that the disseisor had not a right of entry; (or to use the old law expression that his entry was not congeable;) that the person disseised was at the time of the disseisin, in the actual possession of the lands; that the disseisor expelled him from them by some degree of constraint or force; and that he substituted himself to be tenant to the Lord. But how this substitution was effected, it is difficult, perhaps impossible now to discover. 1 Inst. 266. b. in n; 330. b. in n. the latter a very long and abstruse note on the subject and entering fully into the principles of the case abovementioned.

The injuries of Abatement and Intrusion, (see those titles) are by a wrongful entry where the possession is vacant; but this of Disseisin is an attack upon him who is in actual possession, and turning him out of it. The former were an ouster from a freehold in law; this is an ouster from a freehold in deed. Disseisin may be effected either in corporeal inheritances, or incorporeal. Disseisin of things corporeal, as of houses, lands, &c. must be by entry and actual dispossession of the freehold. Co. Litt. 181; as if a man enter either by force or fraud into the house of another, and turns, or at least keeps, him or his servants out of possession. Disseisin of incorporeal hereditaments, as not be an actual dispossessing, for the subject itself is neither capable of actual bodily possession, nor dispossessing: but it depends on their respective natures and various kinds; being in general nothing more than a disturbance of the owner in the means of coming at, or enjoying them. But all disseisins of hereditaments incorporeal, are only so at the election and choice of the party injured; if, for the sake of more easily trying the right, he is pleased to suppose himself disseised. Litt. § 588, 9. Otherwise as there can be no actual dispossessing, he cannot be compulsively disseised of any incorporeal hereditaments.

And so too, even in corporeal hereditaments, a man may frequently suppose himself to be disseised, when he is not so in fact, for the sake of entitling himself to the more easy and commodious remedy, of an assize of novel disseisin, instead of being driven to the more tedious process of a writ of entry. Heng. Parv. c. 7: 4 Burr. 110.

The true injury of an actual or compulsive disseisin according to what has been already stated seems to be that of dispossessing the tenant, and substituting oneself to be the tenant of the lord in his stead; in order to which in the times of pure feudal tenure the consent or connivance of the lord, who upon every descent or alienation personally gave, and who therefore alone could change, the seisin or investiture, seems to have been considered as necessary. But when in process of time the feudal form of alienations wore off, and the lord was no longer the instrument of giving actual seisin, it is probable that the lord's acceptance of rent or service, from him who had dispossessed another, might constitute a complete disseisin. Afterwards no regard was had to the lord's concurrence, but the dispossessor himself, was considered the sole disseisor: and this wrong was then allowed to be remedied by entry only, without any form of law, as against the disseisor himself; but required a legal process against his heir or alienee. And when the remedy by assize was introduced under Henry II. to redress such disseisins, as had been committed within a few years next preceding, the facility of that remedy induced others, who were wrongfully kept out of the freehold, to feign or allow themselves to be seised, merely for the sake of the remedy. 3 Comm. 169. &c.

By Magna Charta, c. 29, No man is to be disseised or put out of his freehold, but by lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land: and by Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 33. the dying seised of any disseisor or of in any lands, &c. having no right therein, shall not be a descent in law to take away an entry of a person having lawful title of entry; except the disseisor hath had peaceable possession five years, without entry or claim by the person having lawful title. But if a disseisor having expelled the right owner hath such peaceable possession of the lands five years without claim, and continues in possession so as to die seised, and the land descends to his heirs, they have a right to the possession thereof till the person that is owner recovers at law; and the owner shall lose his estate for ever, if he do not prosecute his suit within the time limited by the statute of limitations. Bac. Elem. And if a disseisee levy a fine of the land whereof he is disseised, unto a stranger, the disseisor shall keep the land for ever; for the disseisee against his own fine cannot claim, and the donee cannot enter, and the right which the disseisee had, being extinct by the fine, the disseisor shall take advantage of it. 2 Rep. 56. But this is to be understood, where no use is declared of the fine by the disseisee; when it shall

If a feme sole be seised of lands in fee, and is disseised, and then taketh husband; in this case, the husband and wife, as in right of the wife, have right to enter, and yet the dying seised of the disseisor, shall take away the entry of his wife, after the death of the husband. Co. Litt. 246. If a person disseises me, and, during the disseisin, he or his servant cut down the timber growing upon the land, and afterwards I re-enter into the land, I shall have action of trespass against him; for the law, as to the disseisor and his servants, supposes the freehold to have been always in me: but if the disseisor be disseised by another, or if he makes a feoffment, gift in tail, lease for life or years, I shall not have an action against the second disseisor, or against those who come in by title: for all the mesne profits shall be recovered against the disseisor himself. 11 Rep. 52: Keilw. 1.

A disseisor in assize, where damages are recovered against him, shall recover as much as he hath paid in rents chargeable on the lands before the disseisin. Jenk. Cent. 189. But if the disseisor or his feoffee sows corn on the land, the disseisee may take it whether before or after severance. Dyer 31, 173: 11 Rep. 46. Where a man hath a house in fee, &c. and locks it, and then departs; if another person comes to his house, and takes the key of the door, and says that he claims the house to himself in fee, without any entry into the house, this is a disseisin of the house. 2 Danv. Abr. 624. If the feoffor enters on the land of the feoffee, and makes a lease for years, &c. it is a disseisin, though the intent of the parties to the feoffment, was, that the feoffee should make a lease to the feoffor for life. 2 Rep. 59. If lessee for years is ousted by his lessor; this is said to be no disseisin. Co. Jac. 678.

A man who enters on another's land, claiming a lease for years, who hath not such lease, is a disseisor: though if a man enters into the house of another by his sufferance, without claiming any thing, it will not be a disseisin. 9 H. 6. 21, 31: 2 Danv. 625. If a person enters on lands by virtue of a grant or lease, that is void in law; he is a disseisor. 2 Danv. 630. A lessee at will, makes a lease for years, it is a disseisin, at the election of the lessor at will: but it is the disseisin of the lessee at will, not of the lessor for years. Hill. 7 Car. B. R. If a man enters into the land of an infant, though by his assent; this is a disseisin to the infant, at his election. 11 Ed. 3: 2iff. 87. And if a person commands another to enter upon lands, and make a disseisin, the commander is a disseisor, as well as such other; unless the command be conditional, when it may be otherwise. 22 Aiff. 99: 2 Danv. 631.

If a man forces another to swear to surrender his estate to him, and he doth so, it will be a disseisin of the estate. So, forcibly hindring a person from tithing his land, is a disseisin of the land. Co. Litt. 161. But if one enter wrongfully into the lands of another, and he accepts rent from such person, he shall not afterwards be taken for a disseisor. Dyer 173. Where any person is disturbed from entering on land, it is a disseisin: a denial of a rent, when lawfully demanded, is a disseisin of the rent. Co. Litt. 113. Also hindring a distress for rent, by force; or making rescous of a distress, are a disseisin of the rent. 2 Danv. 624, 625. An infant, or feme covert, may be a disseisor, but it must be by actual entry on lands, &c.

A feme covert shall not be a disseisor, by the act of the baron: if he disseises another to her use, she is not a disseisor; nor if the wife agrees to it during the coverture: yet if after his death, she agrees to it, she is a disseisor. 2 Danv. 626, 627. Affises that lie against disseisors are called writs of disseisin; and there are several writs of entry per disseisin, of which some are in the per, and others in le post, &c.

After all that has been here said on this head, we must conclude by observing that writs of assise on disseins, are now disused; and the feigned action of ejectment is introduced in their place. It is not amiss to be acquainted with this learning, but trepass and ejectment supply the place of almost every kind of assise. See those titles, and title Assise of Novel Disseisin.

DISSEISOR, Is in general he that disseiseth or puts another out of his land, without order of law: and a disseisor is he that is so put out. 4 Hen. 4. As the king in judgment of law can do no wrong, he cannot be a disseisor. 1 E. 5. 8. A disseisor is to be fined and imprisoned; and the disseisor restored to the land, &c. by Stat. 20 H. 3. c. 3. Where a disseisor is disseised, it is called disseisin upon disseisin. See title Disseisin.

DISSENTERS. Separatists from the Church and the service and worship thereof. Though the experience of the turbulent disposition of these Sectarists occasioned in former times several disabilities and restrictions (perhaps not entirely consistent with the spirit of true Toleration) to be laid upon them by abundance of statutes; (See statutes 23 Eliz. c. 1: 29 Eliz. c. 6: 35 Eliz. c. 1: 22 C. 2. c. 1;) yet at length the Legislature, with a spirit of true magnanimity, extended that indulgence to them which they themselves, when in power, had held to be countenancing schism, and had denied to the church of England. The penalties are conditionally suspended by the stat. 1 W. & M. 1. c. 18. "for exempting their majesties' protestant subjects, dissenting from the church of England, from the penalties of certain laws," commonly called the Toleration-act; which is confirmed by stat. 10 Ann. c. 2; and declares that neither the laws above-mentioned nor the statutes 1 Eliz. c. 2. § 14: 3 Jac. 1. cc. 4, 5, nor any other penal laws made against Popish recusants (except the Test Acts) shall extend to any Dissenters, other than papists, and such as deny the Trinity: Provided. 1. That they take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy; (or make a similar affirmation, being Quakers. See Stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 6;) and subscribe the declaration against popery; 2. That they repair to some congregation certified to, and registered in, the court of the bishop or archdeacon, or at the county sessions. 3. That the doors of such meeting house shall be unlocked, unbarred, and unbolted; in default of which the persons meeting there are still liable to all the penalties of the former acts.

Dissenting Teachers, in order to be exempted from the penalties of the Statutes 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4: 15 Car. 2. c. 6. 17 Car. 2. c. 2: 22 Car. 2. c. 1; are also to subscribe the articles of religion mentioned in Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12; (which only concern the confession of the true Christian faith, and the doctrine of the sacraments;) with an express exception of those relating to the government and powers of the church, and to infant baptism; or if they scruple subscribing the same, shall make and subscribe the declaration prescribed by 19 Geo. 3. c. 44, protesting themselves to be Christians and protestants, and that they believe the scripture to contain the revealed will of God; and to be the rule of doctrine and practice.

Thus, though the crime of non-conformity is by no means universally abrogated, it is suspended and ceases to exist with regard to these Protestant Dissenters, during their compliance with the conditions imposed by these statutes; and under these conditions, all persons who will approve themselves no papists or oppugners of the Trinity are left at full liberty to act as their conscience shall direct them, in the matter of religious worship. And if any person shall willfully, maliciously, or contemptuously disturb any congregation, assembled in any church, or permitted meeting-house, or shall misuse any preacher, or teacher there, he shall (by virtue of the same Stat. 1 W. & M.) be bound over to the sessions of the peace, and forfeit 20 l. But by Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 4, no Mayor or principal magistrate, must appear at any dissenting meeting with the ensigns of his office, on pain of disability to hold that or any other office; the Legislature judging it a matter of propriety, that a mode of worship, set up in opposition to the national, when allowed to be exercised in peace, should be exercised also with decency, gratitude, and humility.—Dissenters also who subscribe to the declaration in the Stat. 19 Geo. 3, are exempted (unless in the case of endowed schools and colleges) from the penalties of the Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4: & 17 Car. 2. c. 2; which prohibit (upon pain of fine and imprisonment) all persons from teaching school, unless they be licensed by the Ordinary, and subscribe a declaration of conformity to the liturgy of the church, and reverently frequent the divine service established by the laws of this kingdom.

Dissenters chosen to any parochial or ward offices, and scrupling to take the oaths may execute the office by deputy, who shall comply with the law in this behalf. Stat. 1 W. & M. 1. c. 18.—But it appears that they are not subject to fine on refusing to serve corporation offices.—For where a freeman of London, was elected one of the sheriffs, but refused to take the office on account of his being a dissenter, and as such not having received the sacrament according to the rights of the church of England, within a year before his election, an action was brought against him in the Sheriff's Court, for the penalty incurred by such refusal, and a judgment recovered; which judgment was affirmed, in a writ of error brought in the Court of Hustings. But the defendant having obtained a special commission of errors, the Judges Delegates reversed both judgments; and on a writ of error in Parliament, this judgment of reversal was affirmed; the judges being (except one) of opinion that the defendant was at liberty to object to the validity of his election on the ground of his own non-conformity. 3 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 465. Harrison v. Evans.

DISTRESS. I.

DISTRESS,

DISTRESS.] The taking of a personal chattel out of the possession of the wrong-doer, into the custody of the party injured, to procure a satisfaction for the wrong committed. 3 Comm. 6. The term Distress is also applied to the thing taken or distrained.

A man may take a distress for homage, fealty, or any services; for fines and amercements; and for damage-feasant, &c. And the effect of it is to compel the party either to replevy the distress, and contest the taking in an action against the distrainer; or, which is more usual, to compound or pay the debt or duty, for which he was distrained.

There are likewise distresses in actions compulsory to cause a man to appear in court: and of these there is a distress personal, of a man's moveable goods, and profits of lands, &c. for contempt in not appearing after summoned; and distresses real, upon immovable goods. And none shall be distrained to answer for any thing touching their freeholds, but by the King's writ. Stat. 52 Hen. 3. c. 1.

Distress is also divided into finite and infinite: Finite, is that which is limited by law, how often it shall be made to bring the party to trial of action, as once, twice, &c. And infinite, is without limitation, until the party appears; which is likewise applicable to jurors not appearing: then it hath had a further division into a grand distress, and ordinary distress; the former whereof extends to all the goods and chattels which the party hath within the county. F. N. B. 904: Old Nat. Br. 43, 113: Brit. c. 26. f. 52.

Let us now consider, more particularly;

I. 1. Who may distrain, and for what; 2. And what may be distrained.

II. At what Time, and in what Manner, generally the Distress should be made.

III. Of the Statutes regulating Distress.

I. 1. THE MOST USUAL INJURY for which a distress may be taken is, that of non-payment of rent; and it may now be laid down as an universal principle, that a Distress may be taken for ~~any~~ kind of rent in arrear. See post. III.—For neglecting to do suit to the lord's court, or other certain personal service, the lord may distrain of common right. Bro. Distress 15; 1 Inst. 46.—For amercements in a Court Leet, a distress may be had of common right; but not for amercements in a Court Baron, without a special prescription to warrant it. Brownl. 36. Another injury, for which distresses may be taken, is, where a man finds beasts of a stranger wandering in his grounds damage feasant; doing him hurt or damage by treading down his grails, &c. in which case the owner of the soil may distrain them, till satisfaction made to him for the injury he has sustained.—Lastly, for several duties and penalties inflicted by special Acts of Parliaments, remedy by distress and sale is given. See post. III.

Of common right a person may distrain for rents, and all manner of services; and for rent reserved upon a gift in tail, lease for life, years, &c. though there be no clause of distress in the deed, so as the reversion be in himself; but on a feoffment in fee, a distress may not be taken, unless expressly reserved in the deed. Co. Lit. 57, 205; Doctor and Student, cap. 9.—See Co. Lit. 204.

A man grants a rent out of the manor of D. and further, that if the rent be behind, the grantee shall distrain for it in the manor of S. this is a rent in the manor of D. and only a penalty on the other manor. 1 Shep. Abr. 567. If a person seised of land in fee, demise it to one upon condition to pay his wife 5*l.* a year rent, and if it be behind and in arrear, that she shall distrain for it; the wife may take a distress for the rent. Dyer 3, 48. There is a lord and tenant by 3*l.* rent and fealty, the lord dies, and his wife is endowed of the thirds of the feignory; here she may distrain for one pound, and the heir for two pounds: so if a rent be divided amongst parceners, each of them may have a distress for her part; but this may not be till the partition is made. Bro. 45.

If one jointenant make a gift in tail, of the land, reserving a certain rent, and the rent be in arrear; he may not distrain the beasts of the other jointenant. 33 H. 6. 35. But if A. and B. are tenants in common, and A. leases his moiety to C. for years, rendering rent, and C. lease it to B. if the rent is behind, A. may take a distress of the cattle of B. his fellow tenant in common. 7 Rep. 23; Moor 558.

To justify taking a distress, the party must see he hath good cause to distrain; that he have power to take the distress, and from the person from whom he takes it; that the thing, for the quality of it, be distrainable, and he distrain it in due time and place, &c. He who takes a distress for another, ought to have good warrant for doing it; and must do it in his name: and a bailiff or servant, may distrain for his master. 1 Cro. 748; 2 Cro. 436; Goob. 110. A distress ought to be made of such things whereof the sheriff may make replevin, and deliver again in as good plight and condition as they were at the time of the taking. Co. Lit. 47.

2. Distresses are to be of a thing valuable, whereof somebody hath a property; things fræ naturæ, as dogs, comets, &c. may not be distrained. 1 Rol. Abr. 664. 666. It is the same of cattle of the plough, beasts of husbandry, sheep, or horses joined to a cart, with a rider upon it. 1 Vent. 36. This means a distress for rent, &c. contra of distress damage feasant.

Sheep are equally privileged with averia caruæ, and cannot be taken if any other distress can be found. See 2 Inst. 133.—But it has been adjudged that beasts of the plough may be taken for the poor's rate, under Stat. 43 Eliz. because the remedy given by that and other statutes for compelling the payment of particular rates or sums of money, though called a distress, is in effect an execution. 1 Burr. 579.—See acc. Saund. on 22 C. 2. against Conventicles 39; referred to in Com. Dig. Distress, (C.) but not cited in 4 Burr.

A horse with a rider upon his back; or a horse in an inn, or put into a common; an ax in a man's hand, cutting down wood; or any thing a person carries about him; utensils and instruments of a man's trade or profession, or the books of a scholar; corn in a mill, or goods in a market to be sold for the use of the public; materials in a weaver's shop, for making of cloth; another person's garment in the house of a tailor, &c. are not distrainable; nor is any thing that is fixed to the freehold of a house, as a furnace, doors, windows, boards, &c. 1 Sid. 422, 440; Co. Lit. 47; 2 Danv. Abr. 461.

be questioned; for 1 Ro. Ab. 664. (A.) pl. 4: and the case in 7 E. 3. Fitz. Ab. Avowry 199, are directly contra. See also Cro. Eliz. 549, 596. Some also have inclined to think that horses drawing a cart laden with corn, though one is riding in the cart, may be distrained for rent; and for that purpose may be severed from the cart, if the person distraining doth not choose to take the cart with the corn also, all of which, as it seems, are equally liable to the distress. See 2 Keb. 529, 596: Raym. 18: 1 Vent. 36: 1 S. d. 422, 440; in which latter book the reporter makes a query, whether the man's being on the cart, should not privilege the whole team.—If ferrets and nets in a warren be taken damage feasant it is good; but if they are in the hands of a man, they cannot be distrained, any more (says the Reporter) than a horse on which a man is; nor can they be distrained if they are out of the warren, 2 E. 2. Avowry 182: 7 E. 3. ib. 199.—See Fin. title Distress, A.

Gooda, cattle, not of the plough, &c. sheaves of corn; corn in the straw, or threshed; and carts with corn, (but not victuals) hay in a barn, or ricks of hay; money in a bag sealed, though not out of a bag, &c. may be distrained for rent: and so may cattle or goods driving to market, if put into a pasture by the way. Co. Lit. 47: 1 Lutw. 214: Mod. 385. Beasts of the tenant feeding on commons or wastes, appendant or appurtenant to the demised premises, may be distrained for rent. 3 Comm. 11.

If a driver of cattle asks leave of the lessor to put his cattle into his ground for a night, and he gives leave, as well as the lessee; yet it is said he is not concluded from distraining them for rent. 2 Vent. 59: 2 Danv. 642.

Beasts that escape into the tenant's ground, may be distrained for rent, though they have not been levant and couchant. 1 Inst. 47. This doctrine has been objected to as too general; and several distinctions are taken, the sum of which seems to be, that if a stranger's beasts escape into another's land by default of the owner of the beasts, as by breaking the fences, they may be distrained for rent immediately, without being levant or couchant; but that if they escape there by default of the tenant of the land, as for want of his keeping a sufficient fence, then they cannot be distrained for rent or service of any kind, till they have been levant and couchant; nor afterwards by a landlord for rent on a lease, unless on notice, the owner of the beasts neglects to remove them: though it is said that such notice is not necessary, where the distress is by the lord of the fee for an ancient rent, or by the grantee of a rent charge.—See this subject argued at large in Kemp v Crewes, 2 Lutw. 1573.

If A. brings yarn to his neighbour's house to weigh, it cannot be distrained by the lord. Noy. n. 298: Vide 15 E. 3. Avowry 216.—See Noy. 68. and S. C. in Cro. Eliz. 549, 596.—For other cases in which the property of strangers is privileged from distress, for the sake of trade and commerce, See Francis v. Wyatt, 3 Burr. 1498. In that case the question was, whether a person's chariot, which stood at a common livery stable, could be distrained for rent due, from the keeper of the livery stable; and the Court after two arguments, appearing to be strongly inclined in favour of the distress, the owner of the chariot declined bringing the question to a third argument.

The goods of a Carrier are privileged, and cannot be distrained for rent, though the waggon wherein loaded, is put into the barn of a house, &c. on the road. 1 Salk. 249.

Now by Stat. 2 H. 5. c. 5, sheaves or cocks of corn, or corn loose or in the straw, or hay in any hovel stack or rick, or otherwise on the land, may be distrained for rent on demise, lease, or contract.

At Common law corn growing could not be distrained, because it adheres to the freehold. 1 Ro. Ab. 666. H. pl. 4: but by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, Landlords are empowered to distrain all sorts of corn, grass, or other produce growing on the estate demised, and to cut and gather them when ripe.

Distresses for rent are to be reasonable, and not excessive; and not to be taken in the King's highway, or the common street; or in the ancient sees of the church. 51 H. 3. Stat. 4: 52 H. 3. c. 1, 2, 3, 4, 15: 9 Ed. 2. st. 1. c. 9. Except in case of an amercement in the leet.

All distresses for rent must be made on the premises, by the Common law. And by Stat. 8 An. c. 14, if any tenant fraudulently removes goods from off the premises, the landlord may in five days seize such goods wherever found, as a distress for the rent in arrear; unless the goods are sold for a valuable consideration before the seizure. By Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, thirty days are allowed. And, whereas at Common law, for rent due the last day of the term, the lessor could not distrain; because the term ended before the rent was due, and the lessee had the whole day to pay it; nor where the lessee held over his term, for rent incurred during the term, (See 1 Inst. 47.) now, by the Stat. 8 An. c. 14, where leases are expired, a distress may be taken, provided it be done within six months, and during the landlord's title and tenant's possession.

Distresses for services are to be on the land: but for an amercement in a leet, the distress may be taken any where within the hundred, as well out of the land, as on it, wherever the cattle are of him that is amerced; for the amercement charges only the person, and not the land; and for this a distress may be taken in the high street. 2 Danv. Abr. 644, 645. The lord cannot distrain for amercements in a court-baron, without a prescription; though he may in the leet: and the goods and cattle of another, may not be taken in distress on my ground, for an amercement, &c. set upon me in a court-leet or court-baron. 11 Rep. 44: 12 H. 7. 13. For services a distress cannot be taken but where the services are certain; or may be reduced to a certainty. Co. Lit. 96.

II. ALL DISTRESSES must be made by day; unless in the case of damage feasant; an exception allowed lest the beasts should escape before they are taken. 1 Inst. 142.

The landlord might not formerly break open a house to make a distress, for that is a breach of the peace. But when he was in the house, it was held that he might break open an inner door. 1 Inst. 161: Comb. 17. By Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, (See post.) he may by assistance of the peace-officer, break open in the day time any place, whither the goods have been fraudulently removed, and locked up to prevent a distress; oath being first made in case it be a dwelling house, of a reasonable ground to suspect that such goods are concealed therein. See 3 Comm. 11.

Where a landlord comes to distrain cattle, which he sees on the tenant's ground, if the tenant, or any other, to prevent the distress, drives the cattle off the land, the landlord may make fresh pursuit, and distrain them: though though if before the distress, the owner of the cattle tenders his rent, and a distress is taken afterwards, it is wrongful. 2 Inst. 107, 160.

A distress of cattle must be brought to the common pound, or be kept in an open place; and if they are put into a common pound, the owner is to take notice of it at his peril; but if in any other open place, notice is to be given to the owner, that he may feed them; and then if the cattle die for want of food, the tenant shall bear the loss; and the landlord may distrain again for his rent. 5 Rep. 90: Co. Lit. 47, 96. Where one impounds cattle distrained, he cannot justify the tying them in the pound: if he ties a beast, and it is strangled, he must answer it in damages. 1 Salk. 248. If the person distraining damage-feasant put the distress in a broken pound, and the distress escapes, he can have no action for the same: it is otherwise if from a good pound, without his default, when he may have action for the trespass. Salk. Ibid. By Stats. 53 H. 3. c. 4: 1 P. & M. c. 12, none shall drive a distress out of the county, on pain to be fined and amerced: and no distress of cattle shall be driven out of the hundred where taken to any pound, except to a pound overt in the same county, and not above three miles distant; nor shall any distress be impounded in several places under the penalty of 5*l.* and treble damages.

By Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19 § 10, persons distraining for rent, may impound the distress on any convenient part of the land chargeable with the distress.

After a distress is in the pound, it is said to be in custodia legis, so that the owner of it hath no absolute property therein; and therefore he cannot sell or forfeit it, nor may the same be taken in execution, &c. but it must be as a pledge or means to help the party distraining to his debt or duty. Co. Lit. 190: Finch L. 135. Cattle distrained may not be used, because by law they are only as a pledge; unless it be for the owner's benefit, by milking, &c. Cro. Jac. 148.

When a distress is taken of household goods, or other dead things, they are to be impounded in a house, or other pound covert, &c. And if the distress is damaged, the distrainer must answer it. Wood's Inst. 191. And they are to be removed immediately; except corn or hay, by Stat. 2 W. & M. sess. 1. cap. 5. But if a landlord doth not remove goods immediately, but quits them till another day, during which time they are taken away, it is not a rescous, for want of possession. Mod. Ca. 215: 1 Nel. 672.—See post III.

Where goods are unlawfully distrained, the owner may replevy them, before they are impounded; but not afterwards. Co. Lit. 47. But the safest way is to replevy, as there are few cases, in law, where a man is allowed to be his own judge, if any.—If lands lie in several counties, a distress may be made in one county for the whole rent. Co. Lit. 154. And if a landlord comes into a house, and seizes upon some goods as a distress, in the name of all the goods in the house; this is a good seizure of all. 6 Mod. 215.

By Stat. 2 W. & M. c. 5, if any distress and sale be made where there is no rent due, the owner of the goods distrained shall recover double the value of the goods, and full costs. Also by the Common law, if a lord or other person shall distrain several times for his service or rent, when none is in arrear, the tenant may have an assise de siveint distress, &c. R. N. B. 176.

Where a man is entitled to distrain for an entire duty, he ought to distrain for the whole at once, and not for part at one time, and part at another. 2 Lutw. 1532. But if he distrains for the whole, and there is not sufficient on the premises, or he happens to mistake in the value of the thing distrained, and so takes an insufficient distress, He, his executors, &c. may take a second distress to complete his remedy. Cro. Eliz. 13: Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7: 4 Burr. 590.

Distresses must be proportioned to the thing distrained for. By the Stat. of Marlbridge, 52 H. 3. c. 4, if any man takes a great or unreasonable distress, for rent arriere he shall be heavily amerced for the same. As if the landlord distrains two oxen for 12*d.* rent, the taking of both is an unreasonable distress. 2 Inst. 407. But if there were no other distress nearer the value to be found, he might reasonably have distrained one of them; but for homage, fealty, or suit and service, as also for parliamentary wages (when they used to be paid) it is said no distress can be excessive. Bro. Ab. t. Assise 291: Prerog. 98. For as these distresses cannot be sold, the owner upon making satisfaction, may have his chattels again. 3 Comm. 12.

The remedy for excessive distresses is, by a special action on the Stat. of Marlbridge; for an action of trespass is not maintainable upon this account, it being no injury at the Common law. 1 Vent. 104: Fitzgib. 85: 4 Burr. 590.—See titles Avowry, Replevin, Rescous, &c.

III. SEE FURTHER as to Distress 3 Comm. 6, 145; and in the several abridgments titles Distress and Replevin, and also Gilbert on Replevins—See also Stats. 2 Wm. & M. st. 1. c. 5: 8 An. c. 14: 4 Geo. 2. c. 28: 11 Geo. 2. c. 19.

These statutes have made great alterations in the ancient law of distress, particularly by empowering persons who distrain for rent of any kind, to sell the distress for payment of rent in arrear, if the tenant or owner fails to replevy with sufficient security, within five days after taking of the distress, and giving the tenant notice of the cause; in this case the constable is bound to assist, the goods are to be appraised by two sworn appraisers, and the overplus, if any, left in the constable's hands for the use of the owner. This improvement of the remedy by distress, was first introduced by Stat. 2 W. & M. c. 5, with respect to rents due on demise, or contract; and afterwards by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, was extended to rents-seck, rents of assise, and chief rents. Before these two statutes, the remedy by distress was very imperfect; for the distress was merely taken nomine pence, to compel satisfaction, and could not be sold or used for the profit of the person distraining, except in case of the King and some few other instances.—See further as to distresses and other remedies for rent, this Dict. titles Cessavit, Rent, Lease, &c.

The following extracts will more fully explain the nature of distress by statute.

By Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, if any tenant of lands or tenements shall fraudulently carry away his goods, to prevent distress, the landlord may, within thirty days after, distrain them wherever they shall be found, as if they had been on the premises; but no such goods shall be distrained, distrained, if sold bona fide for valuable consideration before seizure, to any person not privy to the fraud. Tenants committing such fraud, or others assisting, shall forfeit double the value of the goods carried off, to be recovered by action of debt, &c. And where they shall not exceed 50*l.* value, the landlord may exhibit a complaint before two justices of peace, who are to examine the fact, and enquire into the value of the goods, and thereupon order the offender to pay double value, leviable by distress and sale; and, for want thereof, commit the offender to the house of correction for six months. Landlords, or their agents, may, with the assistance of a constable, seize any goods fraudulently concealed in any house, out-house, &c.

And in case of a dwelling-house, on oath first made to some justice, of reason to suspect that such goods are therein, may break open the same, and distrain them: they may also distrain for rent and cattle, or stock of their tenants, feeding in any common; or corn, grass, hops, fruits, &c. growing on the land, which they shall cut, gather, cure and lay up when ripe, in any proper place, giving notice to the tenant within a week where lodged, and dispose thereof towards the satisfaction of the rent and charges; the appraisement to be taken when cut or cured: but, if after a distress is taken, before the product be ripe and gathered, the tenant shall pay the rent, and charges of the distress, the said distress shall cease.

Persons may secure distresses lawfully taken, and sell them upon the premises in like manner as may be done off the same, by 2 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 5. And any persons may go to and from the premises, to view, appraise, buy, or take away the goods of the purchaser; and if a rescous be made of the distress, the persons aggrieved shall have the remedy given by the said statute.

Distresses made for rent justly due, shall not be unlawful, nor distrainers be trespassers ab initio, for any irregularity in the disposition thereof; but the parties grieved to have satisfaction for special damage, in an action on the case, &c. But no tenant shall recover by such action, if tender of amends, hath been made before the action brought. And in all actions of trespass, or on the case relating to the entry, distress, or sale, made by landlords for rents, the defendants may plead the general issue, and if the plaintiffs become non-suit, &c. shall recover double costs of suit.

By Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20, Justices of peace, in all cases, where they are impowered to levy penalties by any act of parliament, are in their warrants of distress, to limit a time for the sale of the goods; the Constable making such distress may deduct the reasonable charges of detaining, keeping, and selling such distress, out of the money arising by the sale; and the overplus, if any, after such charges, and also the penalty or sum of money, shall be fully paid, shall be returned to the owner of the goods distrained; and the Constable, if required, shall shew the warrant to the party whose goods are distrained, and suffer a copy thereof to be taken.—This act not to alter or repeal the Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34, and 1 Geo. 1. c. 6, relating to Distresses on Quakers for Tithes and Church Rates.

DISTRESS OF THE KING. By the Common law no Subject can distrain out of his fee or seignior; unless cattle are driven to a place out of the fee, to hinder the lord's distress, &c. But the King may distrain for rent-service, or fee-farm, in all the lands of the tenant wheresoever they be; not only on lands held of himself, but of others; where his tenant is in actual possession, and the land manured with his own beasts, &c. 2 Inst. 132: 2 Dauv. Abr. 643.

DISTRICT, [districus.] A territory, or place of jurisdiction; the circuit wherein a man may be compelled to appear; also the place in which one hath the power of distraining; and where we say bors de son fee, out of the fee, it has been used for extra districtum suum. Brit. c. 120.

DISTRINGAS, A writ directed to the Sheriff, or other officer commanding him to distrain a man for a debt to the King, &c. or for his appearance at a day affixed. There is a great diversity of this writ; which was sometimes of old called constringas. F. N. B. 138. There is also a distringas against Peers and persons intitled to privilege of parliament, under Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50; by which the effects (in law called the issues) levied may be sold to pay the plaintiff's costs. And it has been held that this statute extends to all writs of distringas. 5 Burr. 2726.—See titles Process; Parliament; (privilege of). In detinue after judgment, the plaintiff may have a distringas to compel the defendant to deliver the goods, by repeated distresses of his chattels. 1 Ro. Ab. 737: *Rass. DISTRINGAS JURATORES, A writ directed to the sheriff, to distrain upon a jury to appear; and return issues on their lands, &c. for non-appearance. Where an issue in fact is joined to be tried by a jury, which is returned by the sheriff in a panel upon a venire facias for that purpose; thereupon there goes forth a writ of distringas jurator, to the sheriff, commanding him to have their bodies in court, &c. at the return of the writ. 1 Lil. Abr. 483. The writ of distringas jur ought to be delivered to the sheriff so timely, that he may warn the jury to appear four days before the writ is returnable, if the jurors live within forty miles of the place of trial; and eight days if they live farther off. Ibid. 484. There may be an alias, or pluries distringas jur where the jury doth not appear. See titles Jury; Trial.

DIVISA, Hath various significations: sometimes it is used for a device, award or decree: sometimes for device of a portion or parcel of lands, &c. by will: and sometimes it is taken for the bounds or limits of division of a parish or farm, &c. as divisus perambularis, to walk the bounds of a parish; in which sense it has been extended to the division between counties, and given name to towns, towns, as to the Devises, a town in Wiltshire, situate on the confines, the Division of the West Saxon and Mercian kingdoms. Leg. H. 2. cap. 9: Leg. Inq. c. 44: Leg. H. 1. c. 57. Corwel.

DIVORCE, divortium; à divertendo.] The separation of two, de facto married together, made by law: it is a judgment spiritual; and therefore, if there be occasion, it ought to be reversed in the spiritual court. Co. Lit. 335. And, besides sentence of divorce, in the old law, the woman divorced was to have of her husband a writing called a bill of divorce, which was to this effect, viz. I promise that hereafter I will lay no claim to thee, &c.—See title Baron and Feme. III. 2: VI: and particularly XI. See also title Marriage.

There are many divorces, mentioned in our books; as causâ precontractûs; causâ frigiditytis; causâ consanguinitatis; causâ affinitatis; causâ professionis, &c. But the usual divorces are only of two kinds, i. e. à mensa & thoro, from bed and board; and à vinculo matrimonii, from the very bond of marriage. A divorce à mensa & thoro dissolveth not the marriage; for the cause of it is subsequent to the marriage, and supposes the marriage to be lawful: this divorce may be by reason of adultery in either of the parties, for cruelty of the husband, &c. And as it doth not dissolve the marriage, so it doth not debar the woman of her dower; or bastardize the issue, or make void any estate for the life of husband and wife, &c. Co. Lit. 235: 3 Inst. 89: 7 Rep. 43. The woman under separation by this divorce, must sue by her next friend; and she may sue her husband in her own name for alimony. Wood's Inst. 62.

A divorce à vinculo matrimonii, absolutely dissolves the marriage, and makes it void from the beginning, the causes of it being precedent to the marriage; as precontract with some other person, consanguinity or affinity, within the Levitical degrees, impotency, impuberty, &c. On this divorce dower is gone; and if by reason of precontract, consanguinity, or affinity, the children begotten between them are bastards. Co. Lit. 335: 2 Inst. 93, 687. But in these divorces, the wife, it is said, shall receive all again that she brought with her, because the nullity of the marriage arises through some impediment; and the goods of the wife were given for her advancement in marriage, which now ceaseth: but this is where the goods are not spent; and if the husband give them away during the coverture, without any collusion, it shall bind her: if she knows her goods unspent, she may bring action of detinue for them; and as for money, &c. which cannot be known, she must sue in the spiritual court. Dyer 62: Nelf. Abr. 675. This divorce enables the parties to marry again. But in the other cases, a power for so doing must be obtained by act of parliament.

Where lands were formerly given to husband and wife, and the heirs of their bodies in frank-marriage; if they had been afterwards divorced, the wife was to have her whole lands; and by divorce an estate-tail of baron and feme, it is said, may be extinct. Godb. 18. After a sentence of divorce is given in the spiritual court causâ precontractûs, the issue of that marriage shall be bastards, so long as the sentence stands unrepealed: and no proof shall be admitted at Common-law to the contrary. Co. Lit. 235: 1 Nelf. 674. In such case, issue of a second marriage may inherit until the sentence is repealed. 2 Leon. 207. If after a divorce à mensa & thoro, either of the parties marry again, the other being living, such marriage is a mere nullity; and by sentence to confirm the first contract, she and her first husband become husband and wife to all intents, without any formal divorce from the second. 1 Leon. 173. Also on this divorce, as the marriage continues, marrying again while either party is living, hath been held to be bigamy within the Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 11.—Cro. Car. 333: 1 Nelf. 674.

A divorce for adultery was anciently à vinculo matrimonii; and therefore in the beginning of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the opinion of the church of England was, that after a divorce for adultery, the parties might marry again; but in Foliambe's case, H. 44 El. in the star-chamber, that opinion was changed; and archbishop Bancroft, by the advice of divines, held, that adultery was only a cause of divorce à mensa & thoro. 3 Salk. 138.

Sentence of divorce must be given in the life of the parties, and not afterwards: but it may be repealed in the spiritual court, after the death of the parties. Co. Lit. 35, 244: 7 Rep. 44: 5 Rep. 98. Upon the divorce of a man and his wife, equity will not assist the wife in recovering dower, at the husband's death, but shall leave her to the law; neither ought the spiritual court to grant her administration, she not being such a wife as is intitled to it; nor will the Chancery decree her a distributive share. *Preced. DOCKET, or DOGGET. A brief in writing on a small piece of paper or parchment, containing the effect of a greater writing. West Symbol. par. 1. sect. 106. And when rolls of judgments are brought into C. B. they are docketed, and entered on the docket of that term; so that upon any occasion you may soon find out a judgment, by searching these dockets, if you know the attorney's name. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20.—See title Judgments. Exemplification of decrees in Chancery and Commissions of Bankruptcy, are also docketed.

DOCTRINES, illegal, asserting, or publishing. See titles Libel; Sedition; Treason.

DOGS, The law takes notice of a greyhound, mastiff dog, spaniel and tumbler; for trover will lie for them. Cro. Eliz. 125: Cro. Jac. 44. A man hath a property in a mastiff; and where a mastiff falls on another dog, the owner of that dog cannot justify the killing the mastiff; unless there was no other way to save his dog, as that he could not take off the mastiff, &c. 1 Saund. 84: 3 Salk. 139. The owner of a dog is bound to muzzle him if mischievous, but not otherwise: and if a man doth keep a dog, that useth to bite cattle, &c. if after notice given to him of it, or his knowing the dog is mischievous, the creature shall do any hurt, the master shall answer for it. Cro. Car. 254, 487: Stra. 1264.—See titles Action; Trespass.

By Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 18, If any person shall steal any dog or dogs, they shall be liable to forfeit for the first offence from 30 to 20*l.* or be committed to gaol, for from twelve to six months, at the discretion of two justices—for the second offence to forfeit from 50 to 30*l.* or be imprisoned for from eighteen to twelve months, and also whipped.—A punishment perhaps not too severe for notorious dog-stealers; but which may afford a dangerous handle for oppression: and Burn, title Dogs, seems seriously to doubt whether the statute extends to Bitches—a question that we believe has never yet been argued in a court of law.

DOG-DRAW,

DOG

DOG-DRAW, The manifest prehension of an offender against venison in a forest, when he is found drawing after a deer, by the scent of a hound led in his hand: or where a person hath wounded a deer, or wild beast, by shooting at him, or otherwise, and is caught with a dog drawing after him to receive the same. Manwood, par. 2. cap. 8 — See title Forest.

DOGGER, A light ship or vessel: as a Dutch dogger, &c. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 1. and Dogger fish, are fish brought in those ships. Stat. ibid.

DOGGER-MEN, Fishermen that belong to dogger-ships. 25 H. 8. c. 2.

DOITKIN, or doit. Was a base coin of small value, prohibited by the Stat. 3 H. 5. c. 1. We still retain the phrase, in common saying, when we would undervalue a man, that he is not worth a doit. See title Coin.

DO LAW, facere legem.] Is the same with to make law Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 14.

DOLE, dola] A Saxon word signifying as much as pars or portio in the Latin: and anciently where a meadow was divided into several shares, it was called a dole meadow. 4 Jac. 1. c. 11. See Dalus.

DOLEFISH. Seems to be the share of fish, which the fishermen, yearly employed in the North seas, do customarily receive for their allowance. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 7.

DOLG-BOFE, Sax] A recompence or amends, for a scar or wound. Sax. Diet. LL. Aluredi Reg. cap. 22.

DOLLAR, A piece of foreign coin, passing for about 4 s. 6 d. Lex Mercat.

DOM BEC or DOM BOC, Sax. See Doms-book.

DOME, or DOOM, from the Sax. dom.] A judgment, sentence, or decree. And several words end in dom: as kingdom, earldom, &c. from whence they may be applied to the jurisdiction of a lord, or a king. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. fol. 284.

DOME-BOOK, Liber judicialis] A book composed under the direction of Alfred, for the general use of the whole kingdom, containing the local customs of the several provinces of the kingdom. This book is said to have been extant so late as the reign of Ed. IV; but it is now lost. It probably contained the principal maxims of the common law, the penalties for misdemeanors and the forms of judicial proceedings. Thus much at least may be collected from the injunction to observe it which is found in the laws of Edward the Elder, son of Alfred, c. 1. See also Leg. Inac. c. 29. and Spelm. in verb. Domesb. This book was compiled by Alfred for the use of the Court Baron, Hundred and County Court, the Court Leet and Sheriff's tourn. See 1 Comm. 64: 4 Comm. 411. See post Domesday.

DOMESDAY or DOMESDAY-BOOK: Liber judicialis, vel censualis Angliæ.] A most ancient record, made in the time of William I called the Conqueror, and now remaining in the Exchequer fair and legible, consisting of two volumes, a greater and a less; the greater containing a survey of all the lands in England, except the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, Durham, and part of Lancashire, which it is said were never surveyed; and excepting Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk; which three last are comprehended in the lesser volume. There is also a third book, which differs from the others in form more than matter, made by the command of the same King. And there is a fourth book kept in the Exchequer which is called Domesday; and, though a very large volume, is only an

it of the others. Likewise a fifth book is kept in the Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, which has the name of Domesday, and is the very same with the fourth before mentioned. Our ancestors had many domes-books. King Alfred had a roll which he called Domesday; and the Domesday book made by Will. I. referred to the time of Edward the Confessor, as that of King Alfred did to the time of Ethelred; See ante Dome-book. The fourth book of Domesday having many pictures, and gilt letters in the beginning, relating to the time of King Edward the Confessor, this led him who made notes on Fimberbert's Register into a mistake in p. 14, where he tells us, that hæber Domesday factus fuit tempore regis Edwardi.

The book of Domesday was begun by five justices, assigned for that purpose in each county, in the year 1081, and finished anno 1086. And the question whether lands are antient demesne, or not, is to be decided by the Domesday of Will. I. from whence there is no appeal: and it is a book of that authority, that even the Conqueror himself submitted some cases, wherein he was concerned to be determined by it. The addition of day to this Dome book was not meant with any allusion to the final day of judgment, as most persons have conceived; but was to strengthen and confirm it, and signifieth the judicial decisive record or book of dooming judgment and justice. Hammond's Annot. Camden calls this book Gulielmi Librum Censualem, the Tax-Book of King William; and it was further called Magna Rolla Winton. The dean and chapter of York have a register styled Domesday; so hath the bishop of Worcester; and there is an ancient roll in Chester castle, called Domesday-Roll. Blount. A transcript of the Domesday book of W. I. has been made and published, by which the access to it is rendered more familiar to our Antiquaries and Historians. See Speml. in verb. Domesdei, and this Dist. title Tenures, II. 1.

DOMES MEN. Judges, or men appointed to doom, and determine suits and controversies, hence æg dem, I deem, or judge. Vide days men.

DOMICELLUS. An obsolete Latin word, anciently given as an appellation or addition to the King's natural sons in France, and sometimes to the eldest sons of noblemen there; from whence we borrowed these additions: as several natural children of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, are styled domicelli by the charter of legitimation. 20 R. 2. But according to Tiborn, the domicelli were only the better sorts of servants in monasteries.

DOMIGERIUM, Is sometimes used to signify danger; but otherwise, and perhaps more properly, it is taken for power over another; sub domigerio alicujus vel manu esse. Brañ. lib. 4. tract. 1. cap. 10

DOMINA, A title given to honourable women, who anciently in their own right of inheritance held a barony. Parorb. Antiq.

DOMINICA IN RAMIS PALMARUM, Palm Sunday. 23 Ed. 1.

DOMINIUM, right or regal power. Parorb. Antiq. 498.

DOMINUS. This word prefixed to a man's name, in ancient times usually denoted him a knight, or a clergyman; and sometimes a gentleman, not a knight, especially a lord of a manor.

DOMO REPARANDA, Is a writ that lay for one against his neighbour by the fall of whose house he feared a damage and injury to his own. Reg. Orig. 153.

DOMUS CONVERSORUM. An ancient house built or appointed by King Hen. III. for such Jews as were converted to the Christian faith; but King Ed. III. who expelled the Jews from this kingdom, deputed the place for the custody of the rolls and records of the Chancery. See Rolls.

DOMUS DEI, The hospital of St. Julian in Southampton, so called. Mun. Angl. tom. 2. 440. A name applied to many hospitals.

DONATIO CAUSA MORTIS. A death-bed disposition of property so called, viz. when a person in his last sickness, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers or causes to be delivered to another the possession of any personal goods, (under which have been included bonds, and bills drawn by the deceased upon his banker) to keep in case of his decease. This gift, if the donor dies, needs not the assent of his executor; yet it shall not prevail against creditors; and is accompanied with this implied trust, that, if the donor lives, the property thereof shall revert to himself, being only given in contemplation of death; or mortis causa. Prec. Chm. 269: 1 P. Wms. 404. 441: 3 P. Wms. 357: 2 Comm. 514: 2 Fez. 431: Ward v. Turner. This latter case collects all the law on the subject of donations causamortis; and particularly considers what shall be a sufficient delivery of different kinds of property to give effect to such donations.—There may be a donatio causa mortis of bonds bank notes and bills payable to bearer; but not of other promissory notes or bills of exchange, these being choses in action which do not pass by delivery. See further this Dict. titles Legacy; Will.

DONATIVE, donativum.] Is a benefice merely given and disposed of by the patron to a man, without either presentation to, or institution by, the Ordinary, or induction by his order. F. A. B. 35. Donatives are so termed, because they began only by the foundation and erection of the church. The King might of ancient time found a church or chapel, and exempt it from the jurisdiction of the Ordinary; so he may by his letters patent give licence to a common person to found such a church or chapel, and make it donative, not presentable; and that the incumbent or chaplain shall be deprived by the founder and his heirs, and not by the bishop; which seems to be the original of donatives in England. See 2 Comm. 22; and this Dict. title Abbayson.

When the King founds a church, &c. donative, it is of course exempted from the Ordinary's jurisdiction, though no particular exemption is mentioned; and the Lord Chancellor shall visit the same: and where the King grants a licence to any common person to found a church or chapel, it may be donative, and exempted from the jurisdiction of the bishop, so as to be visited by the founder, &c. Co. Litt. 134: 2 Rol. Abr. 230. The resignation of a donative must be to the donor or patron, and not to the Ordinary; and donatives are not only free from all ordinary jurisdiction, but the patron and incumbent may charge the glebe to bind the successor: and if the clerk is disturbed, the patron may bring quare impedit, &c. Also the patron of a donative may take the profits thereof when it is vacant. Co. Litt. 344: Cio. Jac. 63.

If the patron of a donative will not nominate a clerk, there can be no lapse: but the bishop may compel such patron to nominate a clerk by ecclesiastical censures; for though the church is exempt from the power of the Ordinary, the patron is not exempted: and the clerk must be qualified like unto other clerks of churches; no person being capable of a donative, unless he be a priest lawfully ordained, &c. Tilv. 61. Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 4: 1 Lill. 488.

There may be a donative of the King's gift with cure of souls, as the church of the Tower of London is: and if such donative be procured for money, it will be within the statute of simony. Mich. 9 Car. B. R. A parochial church may be donative, and exempt from the Ordinary's jurisdiction. Godolph. 262. The church of St. Mary le Bow in Middlesex is donative, and the incumbent being cited into the spiritual court, to take a licence from the bishop to preach, pretending that it was a chapel, and that the parson was a stipendiary; it was ruled in the King's Bench that it was a donative; and if the bishop visit, the court of B. R. will grant a prohibition. 1 Mod. 90: 1 Nelf. Abr. 676.

If a patron of a donative doth once present his clerk to the Ordinary, and the clerk is admitted, instituted, and inducted, then the donative ceaseth; and it becomes a church presentative. Co. Litt. 344. But when a donative is created by letters patent, by which lands are united upon the parson and his successors, and he is to come in by the donation of the King, and his successors; in this case, though there may be a presentation to the donative, and the incumbent come in by institution and induction, yet that will not destroy the donative. 2 Salk. 541. Abbotspricks being of the foundation of the King, they were in ancient time donative. 3 Rep. 75. See title Bishops.

Donatives have two peculiar properties; one, that the presentation does not devolve to the king as in other livings when the incumbent is made a bishop. C. Parl. 184.—The other that a donative is within the statute of pluralities, if it is the first living; but if a donative is the second benefice taken without a dispensation, the first would not be void; for the words of the statute are instituted and inducted to any other, which are not applicable to donatives. 1 Woodd. 330.—And therefore it seems if donatives are taken last they may be held with any other preferment.

DONIS, Statute de. The statute of Wesim. 2. viz. 13. Ed. 1. c. 1. called the statute de donis conditionalibus. This statute revives, in some sort, the ancient feudal restraints which were originally laid on alienations; by enacting, that from thenceforth the will of the donor be observed, and that the tenements so given, (to a man and the heirs of his body) should at all events go to the issue, if there were any, or if none, should revert to the donor. See 2 Comm. 12; and this Dict. titles Estate; Tail; Limitation.

DONOR AND DONEE. Donor is he who gives lands or tenements to another in tail, &c. And the person to whom given is the donee.

DOOMSDAY, See Domesday.

DORTURE, dormitorium.] The common room or chamber, where all the Fryars, or religious of one convent, slept and lay all night. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 11.

DOSSALE. Hangings or tapestry.—Mat. Par.

DOT, ASSIGNANDA, Is a writ that lay for a widow, where it was found by office, that the King's tenant was seized of lands in fee, or fee-tail at the day of his death, and and that he held of the King in chief, &c. In which case, the widow came into the Chancery, and there made oath, that she would not marry without the King's leave; whereupon she had this writ to the escheator, to assign her dower, &c. But it was usual to make the assignment of the dower in the Chancery, and to award a writ to the escheator, to deliver the lands assigned unto her. Stat. 15 Ed. 4. cap. 4: Reg. Orig. 297: F. N. B. 263. See title Dower.

NOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. A writ of dower, that lies for the widow against the tenant who bought land of her husband in his life-time, whereof he was solely seised in fee-simple or fee tail, and of which she is dowable. F. N. B. 147. See the law and the form of the writ in Booth's Real Actions 166. &c. See further title Dower.

DOTIS ADMENSURATIO. Admeasurament of dower, where the widow holds more than her share, &c. See titles Admeasurament; Dower.

DOTKIN. See Dotkin.

DOUBLE PLEA. duple placitum. Is where a defendant alledgeth for himself two several matters, in bar of the plaintiff's action, when one of them is sufficient; which shall not be admitted: as if a man plead several things, the one not depending upon the other, the plea is accounted double, and will not be allowed; but if they mutually depend on each other, and the party may not have the last plea without the first, then it shall be received. Kitch. 223. And where a double plea that is wrong, is pleaded, if the plaintiff reply thereto, and take issue of one matter; if that be found against him, he cannot afterwards move in arrest of judgment; for by the replication it is allowed to be good. 18 Ed. 4. 17.

If a man pleads two or more matters, when he is compelled to shew them, it makes not the plea double; so it is where two distinct things are pleaded, which require but one answer: and in case a man pleads two several matters or things, and only one is material, the other being surplusage, or but matter of inducement, and needing no answer, the plea is not double. Hob. 197. Where there are several inducements to a plea, they shall not make the plea double; and a duple plea is allowable in assizes of assault, &c. but not in other actions. Jenk. Cent. 75.

By Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. sect. 4. It shall be lawful for any defendant or tenant in any action or suit, or for any plaintiff in replevin, in any court of record, with the leave of the same court, to plead as many several matters thereto, as he shall think necessary for his defence. That is, in so many separate and distinct pleas, and where there are more pleas than one. By virtue of this statute defendant is said to plead double, by leave of the court.— See further title Pleading.

DOUBLE QUARREL. duple querela. Is a complaint made by any clerk, or other, to the archbishop of the province, against an inferior Ordinary, for delaying or refusing to do justice in some cause ecclesiastical; as to give sentence, institute a clerk, &c. and seems to be termed a double quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose suit justice is denied or delayed: the effect whereof is, that the archbishop taking notice of the delay, directs his letters under his authentical seal to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the Ordinary within a certain number of days to do the justice required, or otherwise to appear before him or his official, and there alledge the cause of his delay: and to signify to the Ordinary, that if he neither perform the thing enjoined, nor appear and shew cause against it, he himself, in his court of audience, will forthwith proceed to do the justice that is due. Covent.

DOUBLES. Fr. Letters patent. Stat. 14 H. 6. c. 6.

DOVER CASTLE. The constable of Dover castle shall not hold plea of any foreign county within the castle gates, except it concern the keeping of the castle; nor shall he distrain the inhabitants of the ports, to plead elsewhere or otherwise than as they ought, according to the charters, &c. Stat. 28 Ed. 1. c. 7. See title Cinque Ports.

DOW. To give or endow. from the Latin word do.

DOWAGER. dotata, dotifla A widow endowed; applied to the widows of Princes, Dukes, Earls, and other great personages.

DOWAGER. Queen. Is the widow of the King, and as such enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as Queen consort. But it is not high treason to conspire her death, or violate her chastity; because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. But no man can marry her, without special licence from the King, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. 2 Inst. 18. See Riley's Plac. Parl. 672: 1 Comm. 223. See title King.

DOWER.

DOTALIUM. The Portion which a Widow hath of the lands of her husband after his decease, for the sustentance of herself, and education of her children. 1 Inst. 30. See title Tenure, III. 8.

I. Of the several Kinds of Dower.

II. 1. What Woman shall be endowed; 2. Of what Estate.

III. Of the Assignment and Admeasurment of Dower.

IV. What shall be deemed a Bar and Forfeiture of Dower.

V. Of the Proceedings in Dower.

I. There were formerly five kinds of dower in this kingdom. 1. Dower by the Common law; which is a third part of such lands or tenements whereof the husband was sole seised in fee-simple, or fee tail, during the coverture; and this the widow is to enjoy during her life.

2. Dower by custom; which is that part of the husband's estate to which the widow is intitled after the death of her husband, by the custom of any manor or place, so long as she lives sole and chaste; and this is more than one third part, for in some places she shall have half the land, as by the custom of gavellkind; and in divers manors the widow shall have the whole during her life, which is called her free-bench: but as custom may enlarge, so it may abridge dower to a 4th part. Co. Litt. 33.

3. Dower ad optatum exstetia; made by the husband himself immediately after the marriage, who named such particular lands of which his wife should be endowed; and in ancient time it was taken, that a man could not by this dower, endow his wife of more than a third part, though of less he might: and as the certainty of the land was openly declared by the husband, the wife after his death might enter into the land of which she was endowed without any other assignment. Co. Litt. 34: Lit. § 39.

DOWER II. 1.

4. Dower ex assensu patris, which is only a species of the dower ad opus ecclesie; which likewise was of certain lands named by a son who was the husband, with the consent of his father then living and always put in writing as soon as the son was married; and if a woman thus endowed or ad opus ecclesie, after the death of her husband, entered into the land allotted her in dower, and agreed thereto, she was concluded to claim any dower by the Common law. Litt. §§ 40, 41.

5. Dower de la plus belle; which was where the wife was endowed with the fairest part of her husband's estate.

But of all these kinds of Dower, the two first are now only in use.

II. 1. A Woman to be endowed must be the actual wife of the party at the time of his decease. If she be divorced à vinculo matrimonii, she shall not be endowed; for ubi nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dō. 2 Inst. lib. 2. c. 39. § 4. But a divorce à mensa et thoro only, doth not destroy the dower; Co. Litt. 32: no, not even for adultery itself by the Common law. Yet now by Stat. Westm. 2. (13 Ed. 1. c. 34.) if a woman voluntarily leaves (which the law calls eloping from) her husband, and lives with an adulterer, she shall lose her dower, unless her husband be voluntarily reconciled to her. And in a case where John de Camoys had assigned his wife by deed, it was decided in parliament, that, notwithstanding the pretended purgation of the adultery in the spiritual court, the wife was not entitled to dower, 2 Inst. 435. If however after the elopement of a wife, her husband and she demean themselves as husband and wife, it is evidence of reconciliation. Dyer 106. Lady Percy's case, where the reconciliation was specially pleaded and allowed.—It was formerly held, that the wife of an idiot might be endowed, though the husband of an idiot could not be tenant by the curtesy. Co. Litt. 31. But as it seems to be at present agreed, upon principles of sound sense, and reason, that an idiot cannot marry, being incapable of consenting to any contract, this doctrine cannot now take place. By the ancient law the wife of a person attainted of treason or felony could not be endowed; to the intent, says Staudford de Jure, (P. C. b. 3. c. 3.) that if the love of a man's own life cannot restrain him from such atrocious acts, the love of his wife and children may: though Broom (c. 110.) gives it another turn; viz. that it is presumed the wife was privy to her husband's crime. However the Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. abated the rigour of the common law in this particular, and allowed the wife her dower. But a subsequent Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11. revived the severity against the widows of traitors, who are now barred of their dower; (except in the case of certain treasons relating merely to the coin; Stat. 5 Ed. 6. c. 11: 18 Ed. 6. c. 1: 8 & 9 H. 3. c. 20: 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 23.) but the widows of felons are not barred. An alien also cannot be endowed unless she be Queen consort; for no alien is capable of holding lands. Co. Litt. 31. See post at the end of this Dow. The wife must be above nine years old at her husband's death, otherwise she shall not be endowed. Litt. § 36. See 2 Comm. 130.

The wife of a man who is banished shall have dower in his life-time; it is held otherwise, if he is professed in religion; and a jointress of a banished husband shall enjoy her jointure, in his life. Co. Litt. 133: Perk. 5. 307.

If a woman be of the age of nine years, at the death of her husband, she shall be endowed of whatsoever age he is; because after the death of the husband, the marriage is adjudged lawful. Co. Litt. 53.

The wife of a felo de se shall have dower. Plow. 261 a. 262 a. So if the husband be outlawed in trespass, or any civil action, for this works no corruption of blood or forfeiture of lands. Bro. 82: Perk. 338: Co. Litt. 31 a.

If a woman being a lunatick kill her husband, or any other, yet she shall be endowed, because this cannot be felony in her who was deprived of her understanding by the act of God; so though she be of sound mind, and refused to bring an appeal of his death, when he is killed by another, yet she shall be endowed; for this is only a waiver of that privilege the law has given her to be avenged of her husband's murderer; so it seems if she refuses to visit and assist her husband in his sickness, yet she shall be endowed, for this is only undutifulness, which the law does not punish with the loss of her entire subsistence. Perk. 364, 365.

If a man take an alien to wife and dieth, she shall not be endowed, except the wife of the King, who shall be endowed by the law of the Crown.—And if a Jew born in England marry a Jewess also born here, the husband becomes a christian, purchases lands and dies.—The wife, (not being also a christian) shall not have dower. 1 Inst. 31 b: 32 a.

In the notes on Mr. Hargrave's edition of Co. Litt. the latter part of the above is confirmed; as to the former there is the following remarkable note. "Anciently a woman alien was not dowable; but by special act of parliament not printed, Rot. Parl. 8 H. 5. n. 15. all women aliens who from thenceforth should be married to English men by licence of the King, are enabled to demand their Dower after the death of their husbands, to whom they should in time to come be married, in the same manner as English women. But this act did not extend to those married before; and therefore in Rot. Parl. 9 H. 5. n. 9. there is a special act of parliament to enable Beauclerc countess of Shumbli born in Portugal to demand her Dower. Hal. MSS: See Acc. 1 Ro. Ab. 675."—See also 9 Vin. 210. (8vo. ed.)

2 A Woman is now by law entitled to be endowed of all lands and tenements, of which her husband was seized in fee simple, or fee-tail general at any time during the coverture; and of which any issue, which she might have had, might by possibility have been heir. Litt. § 36. 53. Therefore if a man, seized in fee-simple, has a son by his first wife, and afterwards marries a second wife, she shall be endowed of his lands; for her issue might by possibility have been heir, on the death of the son, by the former wife. But, if there be a donee in special tail, who holds lands to him and the heirs of his body begotten on A. his wife; though A. may be endowed of these lands, yet if A. dies, and he marries a second wife, that second wife shall never be endowed of the lands entailed; for no issue, that she could have, could by any possibility inherit them. Ibid. § 53.

But in case land be given to the husband and wife in tail, the remainder in tail to the husband, and the first wife dying without issue, he marries another wife; this second wife will be intitled to dower, after his death. Litt. § 53: 40 Ed. 3. 4: 2 Shep. Abr. 63. For here he hath hath an estate in tail. The wife of a tenant in common, but not a jointenant, shall have dower; and she shall hold her part in common with the tenants in common. Kitt. b. 160.

A feisin in law of the husband will be as effectual as a feisin in deed, in order to render the wife dowable; for it is not in the wife's power to bring the husband's title to an actual feisin, as it is in the husband's power to do with regard to the wife's lands; which is one reason why he shall not be a tenant by the curtesy, but of such lands whereof the wife, or he himself in her right, was actually seised in deed. Co. Litt. 31.—The feisin of the husband, for a transitory instant only, when the same act which gives him the estate conveys it also out of him again, (as where by a fine land is granted to a man, and he immediately renders it back by the same fine,) will not entitle the wife to dower. Co. Jac. 615: 2 Rep. 67: Co. Litt. 31: for the land was merely in transitu and never vested in the husband, the grant and render being one continued act. But, if the land abide in him for the interval of but one single moment, it seems that the wife shall be endowed thereof. And in short a widow may be endowed of all her husband's lands, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, under the restrictions before mentioned; unless there be some special reason to the contrary.

Thus, a woman shall not be endowed of a castle, built for defence of the realm. Co. Litt. 31, 5: 3 Lev. 401: Nor of a common without stint; for, as the heir would then have one portion of this common, and the widow another, and both without stint, the common would be doubly stocked. Co. Litt. 32: 1 Jon. 315. Copyhold estates are also not liable to dower, being only estates at the lord's will; unless by the special custom of the manor, in which case it is usually called the widow's free-tomb. 4 Rep. 22. See title Copyhold. But where Dower is allowable, it matters not though the husband alien the lands during the coverture; for he aliens them liable to dower. Co. Litt. 32.

It is now settled that although the husband may be tenant by the curtesy of a trust estate of inheritance, (see title Curtsey;) the wife is not entitled to Dower out of such an estate. 3 P. Wms. 229.—The reason assigned for this is that the wife was not endowed of a use at Common Law.—And from analogy to trusts it has been determined that a wife shall not be endowed of an equity of redemption, where the estate was mortgaged in fee by the husband previous to the marriage. 1 Bro. C. R. 316.

The following further particulars as to what estate a woman shall be endowed of are worthy the attention of the Student.

If lands are exchanged by the husband for other lands, the wife may be endowed of which lands she will, as the husband was seised of both; though she may not be endowed of the lands given and taken in exchange. Co. Litt. 31.

Where the estate, which the husband hath during the marriage, is ended, there the wife shall lose her dower. New. Nat. B. 333. But of an estate-tail in lands determined, a woman shall be endowed; in like manner as a man may be tenant by the curtesy of her lands. Co. Litt. 31. And if a wife be endowed of her third part, and afterwards evicted by an elder title, she shall have a new writ of dower, and be endowed of the other lands.

2 Danv. Abr. 670. Though this is, where it is the immediate estate descended to the heir; and not when it is the estate of an alienage. 9 Rep. 17. The wife is dowable where lands are recovered against the husband by default or covin: and a woman deceased of her dower shall recover damages, viz. the value of her dower from her husband's death. 13 E. 1: 20 H. 3. If the husband doth not die seised, after demand and refusal to assign dower to her, she shall have damages from the time of the refusal. Jenk. Cent. 45. She shall be endowed of a reversion, expectant on a term of years; and of a rent reserved thereon. Lutw. 729. If the husband hath only an estate for life, remainder to another in tail, though the remainder over is to his heirs, the wife shall not be endowed. 2 Danv. 656. A woman shall not be endowed of the goods of her husband; nor of a castle, or capital messuages: but of all other lands and tenements she may. Co. Litt. 35.

A grantee of a rent in fee or tail, dies without heir, his wife shall be endowed: but not where the rent arises upon a reservation to the donor and his heirs, on a gift in tail, and the donee dies without issue; for this is a collateral limitation. Plowd. 156: F. N. B. 149. If during the coverture, the husband doth extinguish rents by release, &c. yet she shall be endowed of them; for as to her dower in the eye of the law, they have continuance. Co. Litt. 32. And where a rent is descended to the husband but he dies before any day of payment; notwithstanding the wife shall be endowed of it. 1 H. 7. 17. If lands are given to the husband and wife in tail, and after the death of the husband, the wife disagrees, she may recover her dower; for by her waiving her estate, her husband in judgment of law was sole seised ab initio. 3 Rep. 27. If lands are improved, the wife is to have one third according to the improved value. Co. Litt. 32. And if the ground delivered her be sowed, she shall have the corn. 2 Inst. 81.

Dower is an inseparable incident to an estate in tail or fee, and cannot be taken away by condition. If one seised in fee of lands make a gift in tail, on condition that the wife shall not have dower, the condition is void. 6 Rep. 41. If tenant in tail die without issue, so that the land reverts to the donor; or in case he covenants to stand seised to uses, and dies, his wife will be endowed: and a devise of land by the husband to his wife by will, is no bar of her dower, but a benevolence. 8 Rep. 34: Yelv. 51: Bro. Dower. 69. See post. IV.

A person grants and conveys land to D. and his heirs, on condition, to re-demite the same back, &c. which afterwards he does, and dies; here D.'s widow may nevertheless be endowed. Ab. Cus. 217. A. is tenant in tail of lands, the remainder to B. in tail, remainder to A. in fee; if A. bargains and sells the land to C. and his heirs, the wife of the bargainee shall have dower, determinable upon the death of the tenant in tail. 10 Rep. 96. And if a feoffment be made upon condition to re-feoff, and the feoffee take a wife, she may have her dower till re-feoffment, or an entry made for not doing it: and so it is of other defeasible estates. 2 Rep. 59: Perk. §. 420. If one be disseised, and after doth marry, if he die before entry, his wife shall not have dower: and where a person recovers land in a real action, and before his entry or execution made he dieth, the wife shall not be endowed of this land. 2 Rep. 56: Perk. 377. In these cases the husband was not actually seized, sed quæ for, as before observed, where there is a seisin in law, she shall be endowed. Co. Litt. 31, 32, &c. So that these cases depend on the construction of what is, and what is not a seisin in law. And see post. Div. IV. towards the end, and Park 379, 380.

Although copyhold lands a woman shall not be endowed, unless there be a special custom for it; yet if there be a custom to be endowed thereof, then she shall have the assistance of such laws as are made for the more speedy recovery of dower in general, being within the same mischief, and therefore shall recover damages within the statute of Merton. 4 Co. 22: Hob 216: 5 Co. 116.

Of tithes women were not dowable till 32 H. 8. c. 7; for before that statute tithes were not a lay fee, but now they are dowable of them. Style's P. R. 122: 11 Co. 25: Co. Litt. 32 a. 159 a: 1 Roll. Abr. 682.

Of an advowson, be it appendant or in gross, a woman shall be endowed; for this may be divided as to the fruit and profit of it, viz. to have the third presentation. See Park 343, 344: F. N. B. 148, 150: Co. Litt. 32: Co. Jac. 621: Cr. Eliz. 360: 1 Roll. Abr. 683: Co. Litt. 379: 3 Leon. 155: Cr. Jac. 691.

III. By the old law, grounded on the feudal exactions, a woman could not be endowed without a fine paid to the lord: neither could she marry again without his licence; lest she should contract herself, and so convey part of the feud, to the lord's enemy. Magn. c. 1. § 3. This licence the lord took care to be well paid for; and, as it seems, would sometimes force the dowager to a second marriage, in order to gain the fine. But to remedy these oppressions, it was provided, first by the famous charter of Henry I. A. D. 1101, and afterwards by Magna Charta c. 7, that the widow shall pay nothing for her marriage, nor shall be distrained to marry afresh if she chooses to live without a husband; but shall not however marry against the consent of the lord; and further, that nothing shall be taken for assignment of the widow's dower, but that she shall remain in her husband's capital mansion-house for forty days after his death, during which time her dower shall be assigned. These forty days are called the widow's quarentine; a term made use of in law to signify the number of forty days, whether applied to this occasion or any other. The particular lands, to be held in dower, must be assigned, by the heir of the husband, or his guardian; Co. Litt. 34, 5. not only for the sake of notoriety, but also to entitle the lord of the fee, to demand his services of the heir, in respect of the lands to holden. For the heir by this entry becomes tenant thereof to the lord, and the widow is immediate tenant to the heir, by a kind of subinfeudation, or under-tenancy, completed by this investiture or assignment, which tenure may still be created, notwithstanding the statute of quia emptores, because the heir parts, not with the fee-simple, but only with an estate for life. If the heir or his guardian do not assign her dower within the time of quarentine, or do assign it unfairly, she has her remedy at law, and the sheriff is appointed to assign it. Co. Litt. 34, 5. Or if the heir (being under age) or his guardian assign more than she ought to have, it may be afterwards remedied by a writ of admonishment of dower. F. N. B. 148: Fin h. L. 114: fl. Westm. 2, 13 Ed. 1. c. 7. If the thing of which she is endowed be divisible, her dower must be set out by metes and bounds, but if it be indivisible, she must be endowed specially; as of the third presentation to a church, the third toll-dish of a mill, the third part of the profits of an office, the third sheaf of tithes and the like. Co. Litt. 32.

The assignment of the lands is for the life of the woman; and if lands are assigned to a woman for years, in recompense of dower, this is no bar of dower; for it is not such an estate therein as she should have. 2 Darr. 268. 668. Also where other land is assigned to the woman, that is no part of the lands wherein she claims dower; that assignment will not be good or binding: And there must be certainty in what is assigned; otherwise, though it be by agreement, it may be void. 4 Rep. 2: 1 Inst. 34. If a wife accept and enter upon less land than the third of the whole, on the sheriff's assignment she is barred to demand more. Moon 679. But if where a wife is intitled to dower of the lands of her first husband; her second husband accepts of this dower less than her third part, after his death she may refuse the same, and have her full third part. Fitz. Dower, 121.

If a wife having right of dower in the land, accept of a lease for years thereof after the death of her husband, it suspends the dower; though not such acceptance of a lease before the husband's death, &c. for then the wife has only a title to have dower, and not an immediate right of dower. Bro. Ca. 372: Jenk. Cent. 15. A widow accepting of dower of the heir, against common right, shall hold it subject to the charges of her husband; but otherwise it is if she be endowed against common right by the sheriff. 2 Darr. 672. By provision of law, the wife may take a third part of the husband's lands, and hold them discharged. Ibid. If dower be assigned a woman on condition, or with an exception; the condition and exception are void. Co. Eliz. 541.

Where there are three manors, one of them may be assigned to the wife in dower in lieu of dower in all three; though it is said that a third part of every manor ought to be assigned. Moon 12, 47. The sheriff may assign a rent out of the land in lieu of dower; and her acceptance of the rent will bar dower out of the same land, but not of other lands. 2 And. 31: Dyer 91: 1 Nelj. Abr. 680.

A woman intitled to dower cannot enter till it be assigned to her, and set out either by the heir, tenant or sheriff, in certainty. 1 Roll. Abr. 681: Dyer 345: Plowd. 529: Bro. 16: Co. Litt. 34 b. 37 a. b.

None can assign dower but those who have a freehold, or against whom a writ of dower lies; therefore a tenant by statute merchant, statute staple, or cognit, or lessee for years cannot assign dower, for none of these have an estate large enough to answer the plaintiff's demand. Park. 403, 404: Co. Litt. 35: Bro. 63, 94: 1 Roll. Abr. 681: 6 Co. 57.

If a woman be dowable of land, meadow, pasture, wood, &c. and any of these be assigned in lieu of dower of all the rest, it is good, though it be against common right, which gives her but the third part of each, for the heir's enjoyment of the residue sufficiently accounts for her title to what she has. 1 Roll. Abr. 683: Moor, pl. 47, 66.

If lands whereof a woman hath no right to be endowed, or a rent out of such lands be assigned in lieu of her dower, this does not bar her demand of dower, for she having no manner of title to those lands, cannot without livery and seisin be any more than tenant at will, which is no sufficient recompence for an estate for life, which her dower was to be. Park. 407: Co. Lit. 34: 4 Co. 1: Co. Lit. 169: Bro. 3.

If the heir within age assign to the wife more land in dower than she ought to have, he himself shall have a writ of admeasurement of dower at full age by the Common law: so if too much be assigned in dower by the heir within age, or his guardian in chivalry; and the heir dies, his heir shall have such writ, to rectify the assignment; but the heir, in whose time the assignment of too much was by the guardian, cannot have such writ till his full age, because till then the interest of the guardian continues; and if any wrong be done, it is to the guardian himself, and not to the heir; if a disseisor assigns too much, the heir of the disseisor shall have admeasurement by the Common law. F. N. B. 148, 332: Co. Lit. 39 a: 2 Inst. 367: 7 H. 2. 4. See Statutes 13 E. 1. c. 7 § 8.

If the heir within age, before the guardian enters, assigns too much in dower, the guardian shall have a writ of admeasurement of dower, by the Statute of H. 2. c. 7. before which Statute the guardian had no remedy because the writ of admeasurement being a real action, lay not for the guardian, who had but a chattel; also by the same Statute it is provided, that if the guardian pursue such writ feintly, or by collusion with the wife, the heir at full age shall have a writ of admeasurement, and may allege the feint pleading or collusion generally. 2 Inst. 367.

If the wife after assignment of dower improves the lands, so as thereby they become of greater value than the other two parts, no writ of admeasurement lies; so if they be of greater value, by reason of mines open at the time of the assignment, no writ of admeasurement lies, because the land in quantity was no more than she ought to have; and then it is lawful to work the mines, which were open at the time of such assignment. F. N. B. 149: 2 Inst. 368: 5 Co. 12.

IV. Upon preconcerted marriages, and in estates of considerable consequence, tenancy in Dower happens very seldom: for the claim of the wife to her dower at the Common law, discharging itself so extensively, it became a great clog to alienations, and was otherwise very inconvenient to families. Wherefore since the alteration of the ancient law respecting Dower ad optium ecclesiarum, which hath occasioned the entire disuse of that species of Dower, jointures have been introduced in their stead, as a bar to the claim at Common law.

A widow may be barred of her Dower, not only by elopement, divorce, being an alien, the treason of her husband, and other disabilities before-mentioned, (See ante II.) but also by detaining the title deeds, or evidences of the estate from the heir, until she restores them. Ibid. 39. Though if she denies the detainer, and it is found against her, she loses her Dower. Hob. 169: 9 Rep. 19. By the Stat. of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. c. 7, if a dowager aliens the land assigned her for Dower, she forfeits it ipso facto, and the heir may recover it by action. A woman also may be barred of her Dower, by levying a fine with her husband, or suffering a recovery of the lands during her coverture. Pig. of Recor. 66: 2 Rep. 74: Plowd. 514.—See title Fine and Recovery.

But the most usual method of barring Dower, is by jointures, as regulated by the Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10.

A Jointure, which, strictly speaking, signifies a joint estate, limited to both husband and wife, but in common acceptation extends also to a sole estate, limited to the wife only, is thus defined by Coke, 1 Inst. 36. "A competent livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands and tenements; to take effect, in profit or possession, presently after the death of the husband; for the life of the wife at least." This description is framed from the Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10, commonly called the Statute of Uses. (See title Uses.)—Before the making of that Statute, the greatest part of the land in England was conveyed to uses; the property or possession of the soil being vested in one man, and the use, and profits thereof, in another; whose directions, with regard to the disposition thereof, the former was in conscience obliged to follow, and might be compelled by a court of equity to observe. Now, though a husband had the use of lands in absolute fee simple, yet the wife was not entitled to any Dower therein; he not being seised thereof: wherefore it became usual, on marriage, to settle by express deed some special estate to the use of the husband and his wife, for their lives, in joint-tenancy, or jointure; which settlement would be a provision for the wife, in case she survived her husband. At length the Statute of uses ordained, that such as had the use of lands, should, to all intents and purposes, be reputed and taken to be absolutely seised and possessed of the soil itself. In consequence of which legal seisin, all wives would have become dowable of such lands as were held to the use of their husbands, and also entitled at the same time to any special lands that might be settled in jointure; had not the same Statute provided, that upon making such an estate in jointure to the wife before marriage, she shall be for ever precluded from her Dower. 4 Rep. 1, 2.

But in this case, these four requisites must be punctually observed.—1. The jointure must take effect immediately on the death of the husband.—2. It must be for the life of the wife herself at least, and not pur auter vie, or for any term of years, or other smaller estate.—3. It must be made to herself, and no other in trust for her.—4. It must be made in satisfaction of her whole Dower, and not of any particular part of it, and must be expressed to be in the deed; or it may be averred to be so. 1 Inst. 366: 4 Rep. 3: OW. 33.

If the jointure be made to her after marriage, she has her election after her husband's death as in Dower ad optium ecclesiarum, and may either accept it, or refuse it, and betake herself to her Dower at Common-law, for she was not capable of consenting to it during coverture.

So where a devise is expressed to be given in lieu and satisfaction of Dower, or where that is the clear and manifest intention of the testator, the wife shall not have both, but shall have her choice. 1 Inst. 366. in n.

If, by any fraud, or accident, a jointure made before marriage proves to be on a bad title, and the jointress is evicted, or turned out of possession; she shall then (by the provisions of the same Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10,) have her Dower pro tanto at the Common-law.

If a woman who is under age at the time of marriage, agrees to a jointure and settlement in bar of her Dower, and of her distributive share of her husband's personal property, in case he dies intestate; she cannot afterwards waive it; but is as much bound as if she were of age at the time of the marriage. Drury v. Drury, (or Buckingham B. v. Drury) 3 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 492.

DOWER V.

There are some advantages attending tenants in dower that do not extend to jointresses; and to vice versa, jointresses are in some respects more privileged than tenants in dower. Tenant in Dower by the old Common-law, is subject to no tolls or taxes; and hers is almost the only estate on which, when derived from the King's debtor, the King cannot dischain for his debt; if contracted during the coverture. Co. Lit. 31 a: P. N. B. 150. But on the other hand, a widow may enter at once, without any formal process, on her jointure land, as she also might have done on Dower at leg. et c. which a jointure in many point resembles; and the resemblance was still greater, while that species of Dower continued in its primitive state; whereas no small trouble, and a very tedious method of proceeding, is necessary to compel a legal assignment of Dower. Co. Lit. 36. And, what is more, though Dower be forfeited by the treason of the husband, yet lands settled in jointure remain unimpeached to the widow; 1 Inst. 37. Wherefore Coke very justly gives it the preference, as being more sure and safe to the widow, than even Dower at estium ecclesie, the most eligible species of art. 2 Comm. 135, &c. An additional advantage is, that a jointure is not forfeited by the adultery of the wife as Dower; and Chancery will decree against the husband a performance of marriage articles, though he alleges and proves that the wife lives separate from him in adultery. Silvey v. Silvey, 3 P. Wms. 269, &c. and the notes to that case.

Further as to the means by which a woman may be barred of her Dower.—Where a woman releases her right to him in reversion, her Dower may be extinguished. 8 Rep. 151.

If a woman takes a lease for life of her husband's lands after his death, she shall have no Dower, because she cannot demand it against herself; and if she takes a lease for years only, yet she shall not sue to have Dower during these years, because it was her own act to suspend the fruit and effect of her Dower during that time. Perk. 350: P. N. B. 149: M. pl. 403.

If a recovery be had against the husband by collusion, this shall not bar the wife of Dower; as if the recovery be by confession, or reddition, which are always understood to be by collusion, the husband always acting and concurring in obtaining of them; but it seems to have been a very great doubt, whether a recovery by default should not be a bar: and the better opinion being that such recovery was a bar at Common-law, therefore the Stat. W. 2. cap. 4. was made, which ordains that notwithstanding such recovery by default, &c. pleaded, the tenant shall moreover in bar of the Dower shew his right to the tenements recovered; and if it be found that he had no right, then shall the demandant recover her Dower notwithstanding such recovery by default against her husband. 2 Inst. 349: Perk. 376.

By Stat. W. 2. cap. 4. it appears, that if the recoveror had right, then the wife is barred; therefore if the heir of the disseisor be in by descent, and the disseisee enters upon him, and marries, and the heir of the disseisor recovers by default, or reddition, in a writ of entry, in nature of an assize, and the husband dies, his wife shall not have Dower, because he, who recovered, had right to the possession by the descent; aliter, if this disseisin, descent, &c. were after marriage, because the husband was seised before of a rightful estate during the coverture, whereof his wife had title of Dower, which cannot be defeated by the disseisin, descent and recovery, which all happened during the coverture. Perk. 379, 380.

If the husband levy a fine with proclamation of his lands, and dies, his wife is bound to make her claim within five years after his death; otherwise she shall be barred of her Dower; for though her title of Dower was not consummate at the time of the fine levied; yet it being initiate by the marriage and seisin of the husband, the fine begins to work upon it presently after the husband's death; and if she does not claim it within five years after, she shall be barred. 2 Co. 93: 10 Co. 49, 99: 3 Inst. 216: Hob. 265: M. pl. 151, 879: Dyer 224: 13 Co. 20.

V. The Wife is, as soon as she can after the decease of her husband, to demand her Dower, lest she lose the value from the time of his death: and in action of Dower, the first process is summons to appear: and if the tenant or defendant do not appear, nor call an essoin, a grand cape lies to seize the lands, &c. By Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3. every summons on the land is to be made fourteen days before the return of the writ, and proclamation made at the church door on a Sunday, or else no grand cape to be awarded, but an alias and pluries summons till proclamation. But on the return of the writ of summons, the attorney for the tenant or defendant may enter with the filazer that the tenant appears, and prays view, &c. Then a writ of view goes out, whereby the sheriff is to shew the tenant the land in question; upon the return of which writ of view, the tenant's attorney takes a declaration, and puts in a plea; the most general one is, ne unques seiseat, &c. viz. that the husband was never seised of any estate, whereof the wife can be endowed; and when issue is joined, you must proceed to trial, as in other actions; upon trial, the jury are to give damages for the mesne profits from the death of the husband (if he die seised) for which, execution shall be made out; and then you have a writ to the sheriff to give possession of a third part of the lands. The sheriff may give possession or seisin to the woman by a clod, or by grafs growing on the land, or by any beast being thereon. 40 E. 3: Fitz. Dower 48.—See Impey's Sheriff.

A widow may recover her Dower with a cessat executio, in case there be any thing objected, precedent to the title of Dower, &c. till that is determined. 1 Nelf. 684, 687: 1 Salk. 291. Judgment in Dower is to recover a third part of lands and tenements by metes and bounds. A wife may have her writ of dower against an heir, an alienee, a disseisor, &c. or against any one that has power to assign Dower; if the lord enters on the land for an escheat, she may bring it against him, but to the King she must sue by petition. 9 Rep. 10: Plowd. 141: Dyer 263: Co. Lit. 59. This writ was brought against eight persons seoffers of the husband after marriage, two confessed the action, and the other six pleaded to issue; here the demandant had judgment to recover the third part of two parts of the land, in eight parts to be divided: and after the issue being found for the demandant against the other six, she recovered against them the third part of the six parts of the same land as her Dower. Dyer 187: Co. Lit. 32.

At the Common-law, before the Stat. of W. 1. c. 39, if a woman had accepted any part of her Dower, though never so small, of any one tenant in any one county or town, she had no other remedy for the residue, but by a writ of right of Dower; for if she brought a writ of dower unde nihil habet, it was a good plea in abatement, that she had accepted such a part of such a tenant, in such a town or county; which being a great mischief to the woman is remedied by that statute, which provides that it shall be no plea in abatement, to say that she hath received part of her Dower of any other person before the writ purchased; and this extends as well to guardian in chivalry as to the tenant of the land, because such guardian is to render her Dower. 2 Inft. 261.

As to damages in Dower, they are given by the Stat. of Merton, c. 1; but that statute extends only to the possessory action of dower unde nihil habet, and not to the writ of right of dower, because they are intended to be given for the detention of the possession; and on writs of right, where the right itself is questionable, no damages are given, because no wrong done till the right be determined; also that statute extends only to lands, whereof the husband died seised; and therefore judgment for the damages was reversed, because the jury did not find that the husband died seised; for otherwise she shall have no damages; as if the husband aliens and takes back an estate for life, the wife shall recover Dower, but no damages; because this dying seised was only of an estate of freehold; but if he makes a lease for years only, rendering rent, she shall recover a third part of the reversion with a third part of the rent and damages, because there he died seised as the statute speaks. Co. Lit. 32: Dyer 284. pl. 33: Yelv. 112: Dr. & Stud. lib. 2. c. 13. § 166: 2 Inft. 80.

Damages must be after demand of Dower, for the heir is not bound to assign this provision till demanded, because the law casts the freehold of the whole upon him, which he cannot divide without the concurrence of the wife; but a demand in pais before good testimony is sufficient; and if the heir appear the first day on summons, and plead that he hath been always ready, and still is, to render her Dower; she may plead such request, and issue may be taken upon it; but the feoffee of the hen cannot plead non tempus praest. because he had not the land all the time since the death of the ancestor, and therefore she shall recover the mesne profits, and damages against him, and if he hath not provided his indemnity and recompence against the heir, it is his own folly. Co. Lit. 32.

If the heir or feoffee assign Dower, and the wife accepteth thereof, she loses her damages, because having the Dower, which is the principal, she cannot sue for the damages, which are but consequential or accessory. Co. Lit. 33 a.

Damages are given in Dower from the death of the husband and to the return of the writ of enquiry, though the writ of seisin issued a year before, but was not executed. Harb. 19, &c. Where there are two jointenants in Dower, and one dies after judgment for damages, and his heir and the other jointenant bring error, the value from the time of the judgment to the affirmation, cannot be recovered against the surviving plaintiff in error only. Id. 50.—See 2 Str. 271. On a writ of Dower, damages cannot be awarded by 16 Car. 2. without speeding a writ of enquiry. Harb. 51.

DOWL and DEAL, A division: from the Brit. Dal, diviso, from the Sax. dulan, i. e. dividere, and from thence comes the word dealing. So the stones which are laid to the boundaries of lands, are called dowle stones, i. e. such as divide the lands. Covent.

DOWRY, Don Mularia] Was in ancient time applied to that which the wife brings her husband in marriage; otherwise called maritagium, or marriage goods: but these are termed more properly, goods given in marriage, and the marriage portion. Co. Lit. 31. This word is often confounded with Dower; though it hath a different meaning from it.

DOZEIN, A territory or jurisdiction, mentioned in the statute of View and Frankpledge, Stat. 18 Ed. 2.—See Decret.

DOZEN PEERS. Were twelve peers, assigned at the instance of the barons in the reign of K. H. III. to be privy councillors to the King, or rather conservators of the kingdom.

DRACO REGIS, The standard ensign, or military colours, borne in war by our ancient Kings, having the figure of a dragon painted on them. Reg. Hoved. sub. ann. 1191.

DRAGS, Seem to be floating pieces of timber so joined together, that by swimming on the water they may bear a burden or load of other things down a river. Stat. 6 H. 6. c. 15.

DRANA, A drain or water-course; sometimes written dracca. MSS. antiq.

DRAPERY, Pannaria.] Is used as a head in our old statute-books, extending to the making and manufacturing of all sorts of woollen cloths. See titles Clothiers, Manufacturers.

DRAW-LATCHES, Were thieves and robbers: Lambert in his Firen. lib. 1. cap. 6, calls them thieves, wasfers, and robbersmen; the two last words are grown out of use. They are mentioned in Stats. 5 E. 3. c. 14. and 7 R. 2. c. 5.

DRELGHERMEN, Fishers for oysters, &c. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 19.—See titles Fish; Oysters.

DRIIT-DREIT, or DROIT-DROIT, jus duplicatum.] Are words signifying formerly a double right, viz. of possession, and of property or interest. Bract. lib. 4. cap. 27: Co. Lit. 266.—See 2 Comm. 199, and this Dict. title Estate.

DRENCHES, or DRENGES, Drengi.] Tenants in capite. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. fol. 598. And according to Spelman, they are such as at the coming of William the Conqueror, being put out of their estates, were afterwards restored thereunto; on their making it appear that they were owners thereof, and neither in auxilio, or consilio, against him. Spelm.

DRENGAGE, Drengagium.] The tenure by which the drenches or drenges held their lands. Tinn. 21 Ed. 3. Ebor. & Northumbrian l. Rot. 191.

DRIFT OF THE FOREST, Agitatio animalium in Foresta.] A view or examination of what cattle are in the forest, that it may be known whether it be surcharged or not; and whose the beasts are, and whether they are commonable, &c. These drifts are made at certain times in the year by the officers of the forest; when all the cattle of the forest are driven into some pound or place inclosed, for the purposes aforementioned; and to the end it may be discovered, whether any cattle of strangers be there, which which ought not to common. Manw. par. 2. c. 15: Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 13: 4 Inst. 309—See title Forest.

DRINKLEAN, in some records Potina Drinklean.] A contribution of tenants, in the time of the Saxons, to wards a potation, or ale, provided to entertain the lord, or his steward.

DROFDENE, Among the Saxons, a grove, or woody place, where cattle were kept; and the keeper of them was called Drofdena, Domesday.

DROFLAND, or DRYFLAND, Saxon.] A tribute or yearly payment made by some tenants to the King, or their landlords, for driving their cattle through a manor to fairs or markets. Cowel.

DROIT, Right, Is the highest writ of all other real writs whatsoever, and hath the greatest respect, and the most assidue and final judgment; and therefore is called a writ of right, and in the old books Droit. Co. Lit. 158. There are divers of these writs used in our law, as

DROIT DE ADVOWSON.

DROIT DE DOWER.

DROIT DE GARDE.

DROIT PATENT.

DROIT RATIONABILI PARTIB.

DROIT SUR DISCLAIMER.

As to all which several writs of right, and their various uses, see Refo, and Writs; and the several titles to which these writs belong.

Also consult Booth on Real Actions.

DROMONES, DROMOS, DROMUNDA, Ships of great burden; Men-of-war. Walsing. Anno 1292.—Mat. Paris. sub ann. 1191.

DROVERS, Those that buy cattle in one place to sell in another: they are to be married men and householders, and be licensed, by Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 12; that part of the statute directing them to be married and householders, is now totally disregarded. See title Cattle.

DRUGGERIA, A place of drugs, or drug-stee's shop.

DRUNKENNESS, Is an offence for which a man may be punished in the Ecclesiastical court; as well as by justices of peace by statute.

By Stats. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5: 21 Jac. 1. c. 7. If any person shall be convicted of drunkenness by the view of a justice, oath of one witness, &c. he shall forfeit five shillings for the first offence, to be levied by distress and sale of his goods; and for want of a distress shall sit in the stocks six hours; and for the second offence, he is to be bound with two sureties in ten pounds each, to be of the good behaviour, or be committed.

Tipling, is a species of drunkenness. By Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 9. § 2, 3: 1 C. 1. c. 4: 21 Jac. 1. c. 7. § 4. If any inn keeper, victualler, or ale-housekeeper, shall suffer any person (except travellers, and labouring people at their dinner hour) to continue drinking or tipling in an alehouse, &c. he shall forfeit 10s. to the poor, to be recovered by distress, or the party offending to be committed till payment; and disabled to keep an alehouse for three years.

By Stats. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. § 4: 1 Jac. 1. c. 9: 21 Jac. 1. c. 7: 1 C. 1. c. 4. The persons tipling shall forfeit 3s. 4d. or be set in the stocks for four hours. And an alehouse keeper tipling shall be disabled to keep an alehouse for three years. 7 Jac. 1. c. 10.

See further titles Churchwarden; Constable.

He who is guilty of any crime, through his own voluntary drunkenness, shall be punished for it as if he had been sober. Co. Lit. 247: 1 Harok. P. C. 3. It has been held, that drunkenness is a sufficient cause to remove a magistrate: and the prosecution for this offence by Stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5, was to be, and still may be, before justices of peace in their sessions, by way of indictment, &c.

Equity will not relieve against a bond, &c. given by a man when drunk, unless the drunkenness is occasioned through the management or contrivance of him to whom it is given. 3 P. W. 130 in n. 1 Inst. 247: Plowd. 19; and this Dict. titles Bond; Fraud; Chancery.

DRY EXCHANGE, Cambium Siccum.] A term invented in former times for the disguising and covering of usury; in which something was pretended to pass on both sides, whereas in truth nothing passed but on one side, in which respect it was called dry. Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 5.—See Cowel.

DRY RENT, A rent reserved without clause of distress. See Rent-fee.

DUCE TECUM, Is a writ commanding a person to appear at a certain day in the Court of Chancery, and to bring with him some writings, evidences, or other things which the court would view. Reg. Orig. So subpoenas duces tecum, are often sued out at Common-law, to compel witnesses, to produce, on trials, at Nisi prius, deeds, bonds, bills, notes, books, or memorandums, &c. which are in their custody or power, and which relate to the issue in question. But if they are in the possession or power of the adverse party or his attorney, it is customary to give notice to the attorney to produce them, and on proof made in open court, before the judge of Nisi prius, of such notice, the court generally compels the attorney, or his client to produce the same, if material. If not produced, proot evidence may be given of their contents. See titles Evidence; Trial.

DUCE TECUM LICET LANGUIDUS, A writ directed to the sheriff, upon a return that he cannot bring his prisoner without danger of death, he being aisco languidus; then the court grants a habeas corpus in the nature of a duces tecum licet languidus. Book Entr. But this is now out of use; and where the person's life would be endangered by removal, the law will not permit it to be done.

DUCKING STOOL. See Castigatory.

DUES, ecclesiastical, non-payment of. Various Dues to the clergy, are cognizable in the spiritual court; which makes decrees for their actual payment. Offerings, oblations, and obventions, not exceeding the value of 40s. may by Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 6, be recovered in a summary way, before two justices of peace.

DUEL, Duellum.] In our ancient law is a fight between persons in a doubtful case for the trial of the truth. Flota—See title Battel. But this kind of Duel is disused; and what we now call a Duel is, a fighting between two, upon some quarrel precedent: wherein, if a person is killed, both the principal and his seconds are guilty of murder, and whether the seconds fight or not. H. P. C. 47, 51.

If two persons quarrel over night, and appoint to fight the next day; or quarrel in the morning, and agree to fight in the afternoon; or such a considerable time a ter, by which it may be presumed the blood was cooled; and then they meet and fight a Duel, and one kill the other, it it is murder. 3 Inft. 52: H. P. C. 48: Kel. 56. And whenever it appears, that he who kills another in a Duel, or fighting on a sudden quarrel, was matter of his temper at the time, he is guilty of murder; as if after the quarrel he fall into another discourse, and talk calmly thereon; or alledge that the place where the quarrel happens is not convenient for fighting; or that his shoes are too high, it he should fight at present, &c. Kel. 56: 1 Lev. 180.

If one challenge another, who refuses to meet him, but tells him that he shall go the next day to such a place about business, and then the challenger meets him on the road, and assaults the other; if the other in this case kill him, it will be only manslaughter; for here is no acceptance of the challenge, or agreement to fight; and if the person challenged refuseth to meet the challenger, but tells him that he wears a sword, and is always ready to defend himself; if then the challenger attack him, and is killed by the other, it is neither murder nor manslaughter, if necessary in his own defence. Kel. 56.—See further at length title Murder; and as to Challenges, title Challenge to Fight.

DUKE, Lat. Dux, Fr. Duc, à Ducendo.] Signified among the ancient Romans, ducentem exercitum, such as led their armies; since which, they were called duces, and were governors of provinces, &c. In some nations, the sovereigns of the country are called by this name; as the Duke of Savoy, &c. In England, the title of Duke is the next dignity to the Prince of Wales: and the first Duke we had in England was Edward the Black Prince, so famed in our English histories for heroic actions; who was created Duke of Cornwall in the 11th year of King Ed. III. After which, there were more made in such manner as that their titles descended to their posterity. They are created with solemnity, per cincturam gladii, capite & circuli aurei in capite impositionem. Cambd. Brit. p. 166.—See title Pier.

DUM FUI INFRÆ ETATEM, A writ whereby an infant who had made a testament of his lands, when he came of full age, might recover those lands and tenements which were so aliened: and within age, he might enter into the land, and take it back again, and by his entry he should be remitted to his ancestor's right. 2 Ass. Pl. 426. If the husband and wife alien the wife's land, during the nonage of both of them, the wife at her full age after the death of the husband, shall have a writ of non fuit infra etatem. M. 14 E. 3. By this writ to the sheriff, he shall command A. that he render to B. who is of full age, two messuages and lands, &c. which B. demised to him, while he was within age, as he saith; or into which the said A. hath not entered, but by C. to whom the said B. the same demised; and unless, &c. F. N. B. 377.—See title Infant.

DUM NON FUI COMPOS MENTIS, Is a writ that lay where a man not of sound memory aliened any lands or tenements, against the alienee. And he shall alledge that he was not of sound memory, but being visited with infirmity, lost his discretion for a time, so as not to be capable of making a grant, &c. New Nat. B. 449. See title Disability; Lunatic; and F. N. B. 202.

DUN, Down, Which termination is now varied into don; it signifies a mountain or high open place; so that the names of those towns which end in dur, or don, as

Ashdon, &c. were either built on hills, or near them in open places. Domesday.

DUNSETT'S, Those who dwell on hills or mountains.

DUNUM; DUNA, Dunnarium, A down or hill. Chart. MSS.

DUODENA, A jury of twelve men. Walsing. 256.

DUODENA MANU, Twelve witnesses to purge a criminal of an offence. See titles Jurare duodecimā manū; Wager of Law.

DUPLEX QUERELA, A process ecclesiastical. See Double Quarrel.

DUPLICATE. Is used for the second letters patent, granted by the Lord Chancellor, in a case wherein he had before done the same; which were therefore thought void. Comp. Jurisd. fol. 215. But it is more commonly a copy or transcript of any deed or writing, account, &c. or a second letter, written and sent to the same party and purpose as a former, or a copy of dispatches for fear of a miscarriage of the first, or for other reasons. See Stat. 4 Car. 2. c. 10.

It is also the name of the discharge, given by the quarter sessions, &c. to an insolvent debtor, who takes the benefit of an act, for relief of insolvent debtors, with respect to the imprisonment of their persons.—See title Insolvency.—See also title Patent-makers.

DUPPLICITY in pleading. This must be avoided as it begets confusion. Every plea must be simple, intire, connected and confined to one single point: it must never be entangled with a variety of distinct independent answers to the same matter; which must require as many different replies, and introduce a multitude of issues upon one and the same point. See titles Double Plea; Pleading.

DURANTE ABSENTIA, Administration. An administration granted when the executor is out of the realm, to continue in force until his return. See this Dist. title Executor.

DURANTE MINORE ETATE, Administration. An infant cannot act as executor until seventeen, during which minority this administration is granted. See title Executor.

DURFEN, A thicket of wood in a valley. Corvel.

DURESS, Duress, Constraint.] Whatever is done by a man to save either life or limb, is looked upon as done by the highest necessity and compulsion. Therefore if a man through fear of death or mayhem, is prevailed upon to execute a deed, or do any other legal act, these, though accompanied with all other requisite solemnities, may be afterwards avoided, if forced upon him by a well-grounded apprehension of losing his life, or even his limbs in case of non compliance. 2 Inft. 485.—And the same is also a sufficient excuse for the commission of many misdemeanours. The constraint a man is under in these circumstances, is called in law Duress; of which there are two sorts, Duress of Imprisonment, where a man actually loses his liberty; and Duress per minas; (by threats) where the hardship is only threatened and impending.

If a man is under Duress of Imprisonment, or illegal restraint of liberty, until he seals a bond or the like, he may alledge this Duress, and avoid the extorted bond. But if a man be lawfully imprisoned, and either to procure his discharge, or on any other fair account, seals a bond or deed, this is not by Duress of imprisonment, and he is not at liberty to avoid it. 2 Inst. 482. See this Dict. title Prisoner.

Duress per minas, is either for fear of loss of life, or else for fear of mayhem or loss of limb. And this fear must be upon sufficient reason; non suspicio ejuslibet vini et meticulosi hominis, sed talis qui possit cadere in virum constantem. Bract. l. 2. c. 5.—A fear of battery, (or being beaten) though never so well grounded, is no Duress; neither is the fear of having one's house burned, or one's goods taken away and destroyed; because in these cases, should the threat be performed, a man may have satisfaction by recovering equivalent damages; but no suitable atonement can be made for the loss of life or limb. 2 Inst. 483.—See 1 Comm. 131, 6.

As to criminal cases—In time of war or rebellion, a man may be justified in doing many treasonable acts by compulsion of the enemy or rebels, which would admit of no excuse in time of peace. 1 Hal. P. C. 50. This however seems only or at least principally to hold as to positive crimes, so created by the laws of Society; and which therefore Society may excuse; but not as to natural offences so declared by the laws of God. Therefore though a man may be violently assaulted, and hath no other possible means of escaping death, but by killing an innocent person; this fear and force shall not acquit him of murder, for he ought rather to die himself than escape by such means. 1 Hal. P. C. 51. But in such a case he is permitted to kill the assailant; for there the law of nature and self defence have made him his own protector. 4 Comm. 30.—See this Dictionary, titles Baron and Feme; Felony; Murder, &c.

Further as to civil cases.—It has been adjudged, that if a man makes a deed by Duress done to him by taking of his cattle, though there be no Duress to his person, yet this shall avoid the deed. 2 Danv. Abr. 686. If a person threaten another to make a deed to a third person, it is by Duress, and void; as if such third person had made the threatening. 2 Inst. 482; 3 Inst. 92; 4 Inst. 97. And where a man is imprisoned until he makes a bond at another place; if afterwards he doth it when at large, the bond is by Duress, and void.

If a person be arrested upon an action at the suit of another, and the cause of action is not good, if he make a bond to a stranger, it is not Duress; though if he make it to the plaintiff, it is, and being sued upon the bond, he may plead it was made by Duress, and to avoid it: also the party shall have an action for the false imprisonment itself. 1 Rep. 119; Perk. § 10; Cromp. Jur. 256; 1 Ld. Abr. 491. If the arrest is under colour of legal process, the action must be a special action on the case, not an action of trespass or assumpsit.

If one imprisoned make an obligation by Duress, and after he is at large, takes a defeasance upon it; this will stop him to say it was made per Duress. And where A. and B. by Duress to B. seal a bond or deed, it may be good as to A. that was never threatened. 3 H. 6. 16; Bro. 17; Mich. 7 Jac. 1.—See 43 E. 3. 20; 2 Danv. 686.

A man shall not avoid a deed by Duress of a stranger: for it hath been held that none shall avoid his own bond for the imprisonment or danger of any other than of himself only. Cro. Jac. 187. Yet a son shall avoid his deed by Duress of the father: and the husband shall avoid a deed made by Duress of the wife; though a servant shall not avoid a deed made by Duress of his master, or the master the deed sealed by Duress of his servant. 2 Danv. 686. If a man is taken by virtue of a process issuing out of a court that hath not power to grant it; or in custody on a false charge of felony, &c. and for his enlargement and discharge gives bond, &c. this may be avoided, as taken by Duress. Cro. El. 646; 4 Inst. 97; Allen 92.

A statute merchant may be avoided by audita querela, because it was made by Duress, or imprisonment. A will shall be avoided by Duress or menace of imprisonment. A feoffment made by Duress is voidable; but not void. But no averment shall be taken against a deed enrolled, that it was made by Duress. 1 Rol. Abr. 862; 2 Danv. 685. A marriage had by Duress is voidable; and by Stat. 31 H. 6. c. 9, obligations, statutes, &c. obtained of women by force, to marry the persons to whom made, or otherwise, unless for a just debt, are declared void. If a person executes a deed by Duress, he cannot plead non est factum, because it is his deed; though he may avoid it by special pleading, and judgment Si agit, &c. 5 Rep. 119. Records may not regularly be said to be made by Duress, and therefore shall not be avoided by this plea or pretence. 2 Shep. Abr. 319.—See further this Dict. title Fraud; Fine, &c.

DURHAM, The bishoprick of Durham was dissolved, and the King to have all the lands, &c. by Stat. 7 Ed. 6. But this act was afterwards repealed, and the bishoprick newly erected, with all jurisdiction ecclesiastical and temporal annexed to the County Palatine. The justices of the County Palatine of Durham may levy fines of lands in the county: and writs upon proclamation, &c. are to be directed to the bishop. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 27; 31 Eliz. c. 2. Writs to elect members of parliament in the County Palatine of Durham shall go to the bishop or his chancellor, and be returned by the sheriff, &c. Stat. 25 Car. 2. c. 9.—See further title Counties-Palatine.

As to the Courts of which three Counties, and the Royal Franchise of Elfr, we may here insert what was there omitted. They are a species of private courts of a limited local jurisdiction, and having at the same time an exclusive cognizance of pleas in matters both of law and equity. 4 Inst. 213, 8; Finch. R. 452. In all these, as in the Principality of Wales the King's ordinary writs issuing under the Great Seal out of Chancery do not run; that is they are of no force. For as originally all jura regalia were granted to the Lords of these Counties-Palatine, they had of course the sole administration of justice by their own judges appointed by themselves, and not by the Crown. It would therefore be incongruous for the King to send his writ to direct the judge of another's court in what manner to administer justice between the suitors. But when the privileges of these Counties Palatine were adjudged by Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24, it was also enacted, that all writs and process should be made in the King's name, but should be tested or witnessed in the name of the owner of the Franchise. Wherefore all writs whereon actions are founded, and which have current authority here, must be under the seal of the respective franchises; the two former of which, Cheshire and Lancaster, are now united to the Crown, and the two latter (Durham and Ely) under the government of their several bishops. And the judges of assize who sit therein, sit by virtue of a special commission from the owners of the several franchises.

and under the seal thereof, and not by the usual commissions under the Great Seal of England. 3 Comm. 78.

DURSL.EY, Signifies blows without wounding or bloodshed, vulgo dry blows. Blount.

DUSTY-FOOT, See Court of Piepowder.

DUTCHY COURT OF LANCASTER, See titles Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; Counties-Palatine.

DUTIES of persons. Allegiance is the duty of the people, protection the duty of the magistrate; yet they are reciprocally the rights, as well as duties of each other. Allegiance is the right of the magistrate, and protection the right of the people. 1 Comm. 123.

DUTY, Any thing that is known to be due by law, and thereby recoverable, is a duty before it is recovered; because the party interested in the same hath power to recover it. 1 Lill. 495.

DWELLING-HOUSE, A man may assemble people together lawfully (at least if they do not exceed eleven) without danger of raising a riot, rout, or unlawful assembly, in order to protect and defend his house; which he is not permitted to do in any other case. 1 Hal. P. C. 547: 4 Comm. 224.—See titles Burglary; Riot.

DWINED, Consumed; from whence comes the word dwindle.

DYERS, By Stat. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 2, No dyer may dye any cloth with orchel; or with Brazil, to make a false colour in cloth, wool, &c. on pain of 20s. By Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 9, Dyers are to fix a seal of lead to cloths, with the letter M. to shew that they are well mathered, &c. or forfeit 3 s. 4 d. per yard. By Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 15, several penalties are inflicted on dyers, who dye any cloths deceitfully, and not throughout with woad, Indico and mather; dying blue with logwood to forfeit 20l. Dyers in London are subject to the inspection of the Dyers' Company, who may appoint searchers; and out of their limits, justices of the peace in sessions to appoint them: opposing the searchers, incurs 10l. penalty.—See this Dict. title Labourers; Manufacturers.

DYKE-REED, rather DYKE REVE, An officer that hath the care and oversight of the dykes and drains in fenny countries; as of Deeping fens, &c. mentioned in Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 11.

DYRGE or DIRGE, A mournful song over the dead; from the Teutonick dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol, whence it is a laudatory song. Cowel.

DYRENUM, A ditty or song.—Venire cum toto ac pleno dyreno; to sing harvest home. Paroch. Antiq. 320.

EAHALUS, from the Sax. Eale, Cervisia, & Hus, Domus.] An ale-house: In the laws of King Alfred we often find this word.

EALHORDA. The privilege of asising and selling ale and beer. It is mentioned in a charter of King Hen. II. to the abbot of Glastonbury.

EALDERMAN, or Ealdorman. Among the Saxons was as much as Earl with the Dance. Cumbr. Brit. 107. Also an elder, senator, &c. Ealdormen or aldermen, are now those that are associated to the mayor or chief officer in the common council of a city or borough town. Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13. See titles Aldermen; Saxons' Ang. Sax. Gov. 107, 161, 220, n. 257. n. and Lord Lyt. Hist. H. II. V. 2 215.

EARL. Sax. Eorle, Lat. Comes.] This it is said was a great title among the Saxons, and is the most ancient of the English peerage, there being no title of honour used by our present Nobility that was likewise in use by the Saxons, except this of Earl; which was usually applied to the First in the Royal Line. Verfegan deriveth this word from the Dutch Ear, i. e. Honour, and Ethel, which signifies Noble: But whencesoever it is derived, the title Earl was at length given to those who were associates to the King in his council and martial actions; and the method of investiture into that dignity was per cinctum gladii, without any formal charter of creation. Dugdale's Warwicksh 302. William the First, called the Conqueror, gave this dignity in fee to his Nobles, annexing it to this or that county or province; and allotting them for the maintenance of it a certain portion of money arising from the prince's profits, for the pleadings and forfeitures of the provinces Caunt. And formerly one Earl had divers shires under his government, and had lieutenants under him in every shire, such as are now Barons; as appears by divers of our old statutes. Cowel.

But about the reign of King John and ever since, our Kings have made Earls of counties, &c. by charter; giving them no authority over the county, nor any part of the profits arising out of it; only sometimes they have had an annual fee out of the Exchequer, &c. An Earl, Comit, was heretofore correlative with countatus; and anciently there was no Earl, but had a shire or county for his earldom; but of late times the number of Earls very much increasing, several of them have chosen for their titles some eminent part of a county, considerable town, village, or their own seats, &c. Besides these local Earls; there are some personal and honorary; as Earl-Marshal of England; See titles Constable; Count of Chivalry; and others nominal, who derive their titles from the names of their families. Lex Constitutionis, p. 78. Their place is next to a Marquis, and before a Viscount: And as in very ancient times, those who were created Counts or Earls, were of the blood royal; our British monarchs to this day call them in all public writings, "Our most dear Cousin:" They also originally did, and still may use the style of Nob. See titles Countess; Peers; Sheriff.

EARNEST. Money paid in part of a larger sum, or part of the goods delivered, on any contract, &c. which being done by way of earnest, the property of the goods is absolutely bound by it: And the buyer may recover the goods by action, as well as the vendor may the price of them. And by the statute of frauds, Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, No contract for sale of goods, to the value of 10*l.* or more, to be valid, unless such earnest is made or given. See title Frauds.

EASEMENT, Affamentum, from the Fr. Aise, Commoditas] Is defined to be a service or convenience, which one neighbour hath of another, by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his land, a sink, or such like. Kitch. 105. A person may prescribe to an easement in the freehold of another, as belonging to some ancient house, or to land, &c. And a way over the land of another; a gate-way, water-course, or washing place on another's ground, may be claimed by prescription as easements. But a multitude of persons cannot prescribe; though for an easement they may plead custom. Cro. Jac. 170: 3 Leon. 254: 3 Mod. 294. To allege an easement by consuetudine only, is the best way: And things of necessity shall not be extinguished by unity of possession; but a way of euse may be thus extinguished. Lit. Abr. 496. See title Prescription.

EASTER. The name of a goddess which the Saxons worshipped in the month of April, and so called, because she was the goddess of the East. Blanc. In our church it is the feast of the Pasche, in commemoration of the sufferings of our Saviour.

EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

A Corporation or "UNITED COMPANY OF MERCHANTS OF ENGLAND TRADING TO THE EAST INDIES;" which name is given to them in Stat. 6 Ann. c. 17 § 13. More explicitly, according to their charter, and the adjustment of their rights by Stat. 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 44 § 61; trading "into, and from, the East Indies, in the countries and parts of Asia and Africa, and in, to, and from the islands, ports, havens, cities, creeks, towns, and places of Asia, Africa and America, or any of them beyond the Cape of Good Hope, to the Straights of Magellan, where any trade or traffick of merchandize is or may be used or had, and to and from every of them."

EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

The laws relative to this important Company, shall be considered in the following order.

- I. The ORIGIN, and UNION of the Old and New East India Companies.
- II. The STATE of the present East India Company, and the Regulations by certain Statutes, and otherwise relating thereto.
- III. The RIGHTS, permanent and temporary, of the present East India Company.
- IV. STATUTES relative to the present East India Company; particularly the Statute 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, "for settling the Government and Trade of India, and for the Appropriation of the Territorial Revenues and Profits of the Trade."

I. THE PASSAGE by sea to the peninsula of India, and the Eastward part of the Continent of Asia, the present seats of our Asiatic trade, was not discovered till about the latter end of the 15th century; and, of the various attempts made from hence by individuals, to open a trade thither, none proved successful until Queen Elizabeth A. D. 1600, established the first incorporated Company by the name of the London East India Company. After a long series of disasters and losses this Company obtained from the country powers of India, at a great expence, the privilege of a limited trade in certain parts of India, and Persia; and of making small settlements or houses of trade called Factories for the residence of their factors and servants. In those times the charters of the crown, and the powers which they conveyed were not thought to require parliamentary sanction; nor was it till after the Restoration that the rights or authorities derived under them to the Company, were first called in question.

By the interruptions, however, of speculative adventurers, called Interlopers, who had begun to resist the exclusive claims of the Old Company, under their charters, on the ground of their wanting the sanction of parliamentary authority, and by occasional failures of investments of goods from abroad, and the then not unfrequent losses of ships in their passage, the commerce of the Company was often chequered with disasters and disappointments.

Notwithstanding these discouragements the Company, formed by degrees various factories and houses of trade, both in India and Persia. When by this means they had at length become more successful, various attempts were made to induce the Crown, and even Parliament itself to interpolate and revoke the charters of the Company; some on pretext that every man had an equal right to trade in the East as well as in the West Indies; while others hoped to effect it on proposals of terms of advantage in point of public finance, that they might themselves be erected into an exclusive Company.

Such was the state of things in 1693; when the Company, by an accidental failure in the payment of a small duty which had been imposed on their capital stock, (See Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 15. §§ 10, 12,) gave an opening to Government to determine their charters, rendered void by that default: and though in the same year the Crown to obviate all doubts revived their powers and exclusive privileges by a new charter, the Company were obliged to submit to a condition, that their capacity of trading should in future be determinable on three years' notice. The legal obstacle to the erecting a new Company being thus removed, the Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 44, was passed for borrowing two millions on a loan at 8 per cent. towards carrying on the war; and as an encouragement to subscribers it was declared, that they should be incorporated by a charter from the King into a general society; with liberty for each individual member to trade to India, and the other limits of the old Company's exclusive charter; so that the value of his exports exceeded not his share of this loan or capital: and that such of the subscribers as should choose to convert their subscriptions into a joint stock, should be at liberty so to do, and be incorporated by a separate charter by the name of The English East India Company; with the privilege of trading with and to the amount of such joint stock. All persons but those incorporated, and such as they should license were prohibited from this trade, except the old Company; who had time given them to wind up their commercial affairs.

The act reserved a power to determine the charters both of the General Society and the New Company after September 1711, on repayment of the loan and three years' notice.

The bulk of the subscribers having agreed to trade as a separate Company, with a joint stock, the old Company, to whose prejudice the two new corporations were to be erected, found means to become members for a very large proportion of the loan of two millions. With an interest thus acquired they joined with the English Company, and by means of their superior knowledge and possessions, they obtained a decided influence in the general courts of the new Company, and thus paved the way to that union, which afterwards took place in 1702; and which A. D. 1708 was confirmed by parliament, by Stat. 6 Ann. c. 17. By the terms of this union the warehouses at home and shipping, and also all the settlements and factories of the old Company in the East-Indies, Persia and China, including the islands of Bombay and Saint Helena with their dependencies, and all their rights and privileges however derived, became vested in the United Company; except their Body Politic which was surrendered to the Crown.

The curious reader may wish to learn what became of the General Society, whose members were individually authorized to trade, as far as the value of their subscriptions in goods exported from hence. All that can be discovered of them is, that though they were actually incorporated by the King's charter, and were therefore legally authorized to send ships to India or China, it does not with certainty appear that any one ship was ever fitted out by them; and that the superior advantages, of being concerned in the trade to be carried on with a joint stock, were so evident that at the time of the union of the two Companies, out of the whole loan of two millions, only 7, 200 l. then remained the property of the separate traders of the General Society; and that this sum also was soon absorbed in the United Company, whose capital or trading stock by which their dividend of profits was to be governed, thereupon became fixed at Two Millions.

EAST-INDIA COMPANY. II.

II. THE FIRST ENLARGEMENT of the Company's term took place in 1708: (Stat. 6 Ann. c. 17;) when the United Company bargained with the Public to advance £1,000,000 à la fin but without any interest; (or, which operated as the same thing, at a reduced interest of 5 per cent. on the two loans conjointly,) for an extension of their term, in the exclusive trade, of fifteen years; and thus their nominal trading capital on which the dividend was made, became advanced to 3,200,000*l*.

In 1712 the Company petitioned Parliament, (on the ground that the term which remained unexpired in their trade was too short to admit their risking the expenses of regaining and recuring the pepper trade, which had been engrossed by the Dutch;) that their corporate capacity might be continued, though the debt due to them from the Public should be redeemed. In consequence of this petition the Stat. 10 Ann. c. 28 passed for repealing all former provisions and powers of determining their trade or incorporation; but with power for the Public to redeem the debt at any time after September 1733. And thus the United Company were supposed to have obtained a perpetuity, as well in the exclusive trade as in all their chartered rights and capacities. They however submitted themselves in that respect, to the pleasure of Parliament in 1730; when the Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14. was passed for continuing to them their exclusive trade till 1766: for which they gave the Public a premium of 200,000*l*. without any return of either principal or interest, and also agreed to a reduction of the rate of interest to 4 per cent. on the debt of 3,200,000*l*. and to accept of payment of the principal by installments of 500,000*l*.

In 1744 they contracted for and obtained, by Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 17. a further addition of fourteen years in the exclusive trade; for which they lent to the public one million at 3 per cent.—And in 1750 they agreed by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 22. to a further reduction of the rate of interest on the former debt, to 3 per cent.

Thus grew the debt of 4,200,000*l*. from the Public to the United Company, carrying with it an annuity of 126,000*l*. This was called the 3 per cent. East India annuities; and are now consolidated with the 3 per cent. Bank annuities. See title National Debt.—But the Company's capital or nominal sum, by which their dividends were governed, continued as before at 3,200,000*l*; the million last lent having been raised by their bonds, and therefore not added to their former capital.

The next renewal, and the last previous to Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52; (stated at large post IV;) was made by contract with the public by Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65. § 9; when a further term, determinable in 1794, was granted in the exclusive trade on payment of 400,000*l*. in discharge of all claims on the Company by the Public, previous to March 1st, 1781. But it was provided that after payment of a yearly dividend of 8 per cent. to the holders of India stock, the surplus of all the net proceeds of their trade and revenues, should be applied, $\frac{1}{4}$ to the use of the Public, and the remaining $\frac{3}{4}$ to the use of the Company.

The debts incurred by the Company, in the wars subsisting in India at and after that period, prevented any such surplus from arising; and therefore no participation of revenue took place under this act.—On the contrary the pressure of those debts, and the compulsory clauses of an act of 1784, by which the Company were obliged to keep a stock of teas always in their ware houses, sufficient for one year's consumption, rendered it necessary for them to enlarge their actual trading capital, by new subscriptions to 3,000,000*l*. for which they had the sanction of Parliament granted them by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 12, (explained by Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 11;) and Stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 65.

In 1783 the Public agreed to forego any participation of the funds of the Company under the said Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 6; until certain debts should be discharged; and by the Relief Act of 1784, the participation, as settled in 1781, was to be resumed as soon as the debts therein specified were paid, and the bond debt reduced to a million and a half. See Stats. 22 Geo. 3. c. 83; 24 Geo. 3. c. 34.

Having said thus much relative to the rise and progress of the Company, it may not be unacceptable to state shortly the mode of what may be called its internal economy.

The books of the Company are at all times open for the admission of every description of persons, natives or foreigners, who may desire to become members, and have money to adventure. It knows no distinction of professions, religions or even sexes, and in the general courts there is the most perfect equality; every one present has the same right with another to speak his sentiments and give his advice. A difference is made only in voting, which when taken by the holding up of hands requires 500*l*. stock, and when by ballot 1000*l*. stock, for a single vote, 3000*l*. for two votes, 6000*l*. for three votes; and 10,000*l*. for four votes; which is the largest number of votes, any member is allowed to possess; 2000*l*. stock qualifies any member to become a candidate for the office of a Director or Chairman.

In the beginning of the year 1794, the number of votes was about 1700—that of actual voters however not much exceeding 1400.

A proprietor of stock to the amount of 1000*l*. whether man or woman, native or foreigner has a right to give a vote in the General Courts. The Directors are twenty-four in number, including the chairman and deputy chairman; who may be re-elected in turn, six each year for four years successively. (See post IV.) The meetings or courts of Directors are to be held at least once a week, but are commonly oftner, being summoned as occasion requires. Out of the body of Directors are chosen several committees, who have the peculiar inspection of certain branches of the Company's business; as the Committee of Correspondence; a Committee of Buying; a Committee of Treasury; a House Committee; a Committee of Warehouse; a Committee of Shipping; a Committee of Accounts; a Committee of Law Suits; and a Committee to prevent the growth of private trade. And under Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, a Committee of Secrecy. See post IV.

The bulk of the Company's Exports consists of camblets, cloth, and other woollens; metals, (particularly tin, lead, and copper); naval and military stores; and silver in bullion.

The Company reserved to themselves the exclusive export of cloth, woollens, copper, bullion and military stores; and also clocks, toys, and other articles ornamented with jewels.

Other

EAST-INDIA COMPANY. III.—IV.

Other articles exported from hence are chiefly purchased in India by Europeans, for their own consumption, and are carried abroad, (in what is called private trade,) by the commanders and officers of the Company's ships.—The Company may license whom they please, to trade in the East Indies. The officers and subordinates of their ships, being thirty in number for every ship, are allowed the benefit of it, both in export and import, according to their different ranks. This is called private trade; and what they pay for this permission and in lieu of freight is called Company's duties, and forms an article of the Company's profits. The servants abroad are also frequently permitted to remit home their fortunes in merchandize, for which they pay a freight to the Company. This latter trade is distinguished from the former by the name of privileged trade.

Besides this, abundance of British goods are sent to India by illicit trade carried on directly from Great Britain; and also by clandestine trade from various parts of Europe, in British ships under foreign colours.

See the Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, post. IV. in the 4, 5 and 6th divisions of the act as there arranged.

The goods Imported by the Company from India, consist chiefly of muslins, calicoes and other piece-goods, raw silk, cotton, indigo, pepper, salt-petre, opium and various sorts of drugs; and from China, tea, coffee, and japan and china-ware, the other articles are comparatively of a trifling value.—Sugar has occasionally been imported in small quantities but being at present (January 1794) subject to a heavy duty it is in effect nearly prohibited.

The whole average amount of the customs and inland duties on the Import-trade of India and China to Great Britain, may be estimated at upwards of a million per annum, and the sale amount thereof at nearly six millions per annum.

III. THE TEMPORARY RIGHTS of the Company, consist. 1st. Of the sole and exclusive trade with India, and other parts within the limits already described; so that none other of the King's subjects can go thither or trade there except it be by leave of the Company; or pursuant to the directions of Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, post. IV.—2nd. They have the administration of the government and revenues of the territories in India, acquired by their conquests during their term in the exclusive trade; subject nevertheless to the various checks and restrictions contained in the several statutes, which vest that administration in them.

The rights which the Company possess in perpetuity, are, to be a Body Corporate and Politick, with perpetual succession. See Stats. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14: 17 Geo. 2. c. 17: 21 Geo. 3. c. 65.—To purchase, acquire and dispose at will of lands and tenements in Great Britain. In their charter of 10 H. 3. the value in Great Britain was not restricted; but by Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14 § 14, the value therein is not to exceed 10,000*l. per annum.*—By the charter of King William, to make settlements to any extent, within the limits of their exclusive trade; build forts and fortifications; appoint governors; erect courts of judicature; coin money; raise, train and muster forces at sea and land, repel wrongs and injuries, make reprisals on the ravagers or disturbers of their peace; and continue to trade within the same limits, with a joint stock for ever, although their exclusive right of trading shall be determined by parliament. See the three statutes immediately above cited; and as to the forces, Stats. 27 Geo. 2. c. 9: 1 Geo. 3. c. 14: 21 Geo. 3. c. 65: 28 Geo. 3. c. 8, explained by Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 10.

These rights, it appears, the Company hold under the immediate authority of Parliament; they embrace all those of the old chartered Company which subsisted from the year 1600 to 1708, when, as has been already observed, they became vested or absorbed with all their fortresses, settlements and factories, and other property real and personal, in the present United Company.—They are a perpetual Corporation; and although their exclusive right to the trade, and their power of administering the government and revenues of India, were to be determined, they would still remain an incorporated Company in perpetuity; with the exclusive property and possession of Calcutta and Fort William, Madras and Fort St. George, Bombay, Bencoolen and St. Helena, and various other settlements and landed estates in India; and also a right of trading thither, with a joint stock; together with all their repositories and other conveniences adapted to their commerce and the preservation of their merchandize, both abroad and at home.

The only privileges they can be constitutionally deprived of, are, those of trading to the exclusion of others, and of governing the countries and collecting and appropriating the revenues of India. See post. IV. Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. Div. 4.

IV. THE STATUTES most interesting, and of most consequence, besides those already enumerated and referred to, are Stats. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63: 24 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 25: and 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, of which an abstract of some length seemed here necessary.

The other statutes now in force relative to the trade and concerns of the East-India Company, but which it does not seem expedient to state at large, are—Stat. 9 & 10 H. 3. c. 44. § 69; by which persons trading to the East-Indies, are first to give security for causing all goods laden on their account in India, to be brought, without breaking bulk, to some part of England or Wales, and there to be unladen and put on land. The amount of this security is regulated by Stat. 6 An. c. 3.—Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 5. §§ 32, 33, enabling the Company to borrow money on their Common Seal.—By Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 26, which is now expired, insurance of ships trading to India under foreign commissions, was prohibited.—Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 49. § 1, as to making dividends; and § 3, as to ballots.—See also on the same point Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 47. § 3.—The said Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 47. in § 4. Et. declares that crimes and oppressions against His Majesty's subjects in India may be punished by information in the Court of K. B. in England.—Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 54, as to building new ships.—Stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 8, as to the time of electing Directors.—Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 70, regulating in several particulars the power of the Supreme Court at Fort William; and of the Governor General and Council of Bengal.

By the Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63, "for establishing certain rules and orders for the management of the Affairs of the Company, as well in India as in Europe." Considerable alterations were made in the constitution of the Company.

EAST-INDIA COMPANY, IV.

It was enacted that the Court of Directors should in future be elected for four years; six members annually; but none to hold their seats longer than four years. That no person should vote at the election of the Directors, who had not possessed their stock twelve months.—This Stat. also increased the qualifications for a vote from 500*l.* to 1000*l.* (See ante II.)—The statute ordained that the Mayor's Court of Calcutta, should in future be confined to small mercantile causes, to which only its jurisdiction extended before the territorial acquisitions. That in lieu of this Court, a new one should be established at Fort William, under the title of the Supreme Court of Judicature, consisting of a Chief Justice, and three Puisne Judges; and that these judges be appointed by the Crown. That a superiority be given to the presidency of Bengal, over the other presidencies in India. That the power of nominating and removing the Governor-General and Council at Fort William and Bengal, should be vested in the Directors. [By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 25, it is declared that His Majesty's approbation of the appointment of the Governor-General and Council of Fort William, is not necessary.] The salaries of the Judges were also fixed at 8000*l.* to the chief justice, and 6000*l.* a year to each of the other three. The appointments of the Governor-General and Council were fixed the first at 25,000*l.* and the four others at 10,000*l.* each, annually.

It has been said, we know not on what foundation, that no proportionable benefit has resulted from this act to the Company; that on the contrary, this court of justice occasioned much discontent to the natives, as well as dissatisfaction to the Company's servants. This being a political question, the discussion of it is by no means applicable to the design of this work.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 25, three things were intended.—1. The establishing a power of conireul in this kingdom, by which the executive government in India, is connected with that over the rest of the empire.—2. The regulating the conduct of the Company's servants in India, in order to remedy the evils that had prevailed there.—3. The providing for the punishment of crimes which might reflect disgrace upon Great Britain.

1. Six persons are to be nominated by the King, as Commissioners for the affairs of India, of whom one of the Secretaries of State, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the time being shall be two, and the President is to have the casting vote if equally divided. (See post. Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. div. 1.) New Commissioners are to be appointed at the pleasure of the Crown.—The Members of this Board of Controul, are sworn to execute the several powers and trusts reposed in them, without favour or affection, prejudice or malice. The Court of Directors are to deliver to this Board, for their approbation or alteration, all minutes, orders, and resolutions of themselves, and of the Courts of Proprietors; and copies of all letters, orders, and instructions proposed to be sent abroad. None to be sent until after such previous communication on any pretence whatever. The Directors are to appoint the servants abroad, but power is given to the King by his Secretary of State, to recall the Governors and Members of the Councils, and all inferior Magistrates. The Council of Bengal are subjected to the direction of the Company at home; and in all cases, except those of immediate danger and necessity, restrained from acting without orders from England.

Another object of this Act is, to redress the grievances of the natives of India; to provide for the payment of the debts of the Nabob of Aree, which are a burden on his country; discriminating at the same time those which were justly incurred, from those which were forced upon him by the injustice and extortion of British oppressors; to ascertain the indeterminate rights and pretensions, on which so many differences arose between him and the Rajah of Tanjore; and to deliver the Zemindars, and other native landholders of India, from oppression; and to secure to them their possessions by permanent rules of moderation and justice.

2. A material part of this bill is directed also against the abuses said to have prevailed in the civil and military departments; enjoining a thorough revival of their establishment, together with the suppression of such places as are found to be useless, and of such expences as may be conveniently avoided. And in order to prevent any delusive show of retrenchment, or any future deviation, this reform is directed to be constantly submitted in its whole state and progress to Parliament. (See also Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 8. : 31 Geo. 3. c. 10.)

Cadets and writers were heretofore sent to India in such numbers as to remain a burden upon the Company's establishments. These are reduced to a certain complement not to be exceeded.

A system of succession by seniority is established by the act, to prevent the servants of the Company from rising, merely through interest without merit; leaving however to the Councils abroad the power of bringing forward, for reasons to be by them assigned, any persons of extraordinary merit or capacity. (See post. Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. div. 3.)

3. Security having been heretofore derived to delinquents in India, from the circumstance of their offences being committed within the territories of Indian princes; so as not to come within the cognizance of the British Government; this act provides against such evasions in future, by declaring the offence equally punishable, in whatever territory of India it is committed. The act of receiving presents, is declared to be in itself extortion, and punishable accordingly. The offences of disobeying orders, and bargaining for offices, are pronounced to be misdemeanors; and it is provided that offenders shall not compound for them with the Company; nor ever be restored to appointments in their service. Collectors and receivers are bound by oath not to receive any private gratuity over and above the legal tribute.

With a view to prevent, or more easily punish the misconduct of the Company's servants, several regulations were made by this statute for the discovery of their property on their return to England from India; but which were all repealed by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 57. § 31.

The Attorney-General or Court of Directors, may exhibit an information against any person guilty of the crime of extortion, or other misdemeanors committed in the East-Indies, after January 1, 1785; which information is to be tried by Commissioners selected from both Houses of Parliament.

The election of these Commissioners is regulated by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 57, which in substance directs as follows. The Lords are to ballot for twenty-six of their house, and the Commons for forty of their number; their names are again to be put into a box, to be drawn out by lot, in presence of three Judges, (one of the Court of K. B. one of C. P. and one of the Exchequer) and of the parties; and the defendant may peremptorily challenge thirteen peers and twenty commoners; and he as well as the prosecutor may challenge as many as they please for cause shown. The first five names of the Peers, and the first seven names of the Commoners which shall be drawn without challenging, shall be returned by the three judges to the Lord Chancellor, to insert their names, with those of the three Judges in a special commission, for them or any ten of them, of whom one of the Judges always to be one, to hear and determine every such information, and pronounce judgment thereon; such judgment to be enforced by the authority of the Court of K. B. and to be effectual and conclusive to all intents and purposes whatsoever.—This as well as the former act also, contains many other directions relative to the trial, as also relative to the dispensing justice, both in criminal and civil cases in India.

The above Stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25, is explained by Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 8. as to the forces, (See ante III. and Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 10.) the annual accounts (ante 2.) and the power of the Commissioners as to salaries and gratuities.

In consequence of the regulations adopted under this statute, it has been asserted, we believe with truth, that the administration of our Indian possessions and trade has become regular and efficient; the credit of the Company has increased; the price of India stock has advanced; the trade of the Company has been almost doubled; the duties paid to the Public augmented; tranquillity for many years maintained, and a necessary and politic war supported with dignity, and terminated (in 1793) with success and honour.

The Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, the commencement of which in India is appointed to take place on the 1st of February, 1794, being of the greatest importance on this subject is here presented in the form which seemed best adapted to elucidate the purposes for which it was past. As it concerns,—1. The Controul in Great Britain.—2. The Governments abroad.—3. Patronage and rule of promotion.—4. The general trade.—5. Limitations on the exclusive trade to and from India.—6. What shall at present be deemed illicit or clandestine trade.—7. Appropriations of the Company's revenue.—8. The method of suing for forfeitures and penalties, and proceeding as to seizures.—9. Regulations of general justice in India; and as to the Directors.—10. The statutes repealed.

1. The act provides for the continuation of the Board of Controul in all its parts; except that the person first named in the King's Commission is to be President; and instead of the Commissioners being limited to six Privy Councillors, the number is indefinite, resting in the King's pleasure; of which however the two principal Secretaries of State, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, are to be three; and His Majesty may if he pleases add to the list two Commissioners not of the Privy Council.

The King may give 5000*l.* a year among such of the Commissioners as he pleases; which together with the salary of the Secretary and Officers, and other expenses of the Board, are to be paid by the India Company, and not, as formerly, by the Civil List; the whole not to exceed 16,000*l.* per annum.

VOL. I.

Oaths are prescribed for the Commissioners and their officers. The office of a Commissioner, or chief Secretary, is not to be deemed a new office to disable them from sitting in parliament. Nor is the appointment of a Commissioner not having a salary, or of a Chief Secretary to vacate a seat. Three Commissioners must be present to form a Board.

The Powers of the Board are in substance the same as under former acts of parliament. They are to superintend, direct and control all acts, operations and concerns, which relate to the civil or military government and revenues of the British territorial possessions in India, subject to the restrictions after mentioned. They and their officers are to have access to the papers and records of the Company, and to be furnished with copies or extracts of such of them as shall be required. They are also to be furnished with copies of all proceedings of General Courts, and Courts of Directors, within eight days; and with copies of all dispatches from abroad, relating to matters of government or revenue, immediately after their arrival. No orders on those subjects are to be sent by the Company to India, until approved by the Board, and when the Commissioners vary or expunge any part of the dispatches proposed by the Directors, they are to give their reasons; and all dispatches are to be returned to the Court of Directors in fourteen days. The Directors may state their objections to any alterations, and the Commissioners are to reconsider them; and if they interfere, with what the Directors deem matters of Commerce, the Directors may apply to the King in Council to determine betwixt them. But the Board are restricted from the appointment of any of the Company's servants. If the Directors, on being called upon to propose dispatches, on any subject relating to government or revenue, shall fail to do so within fourteen days, the Board may originate their own dispatches on that subject.

The Board are not to authorise any increase of salaries, or any allowance or gratuity to be granted to persons employed in the Company's service, except the same shall be first proposed by the Company; and their intention and reasons for such grant are to be certified to both Houses of Parliament, thirty days before the salary can commence.

The Directors are to appoint three of their Members to be a Committee of Secrecy, through whom dispatches relating to government, war, peace, or treaties, may be sent to and received from India. This Committee and their clerks to be sworn to secrecy.

Orders of Directors concerning the government or revenues of India, once approved by the Board, are not subject to revocation by the general court of proprietors.

2. The forms of government over the presidencies of Bengal, Fort St. George, and Madras, are continued in all their essential parts. For Bengal by a Governor General and three Members of Council. For each of the others, a Governor and three Members. These latter with respect to treaties with the native powers of India, levying war, making peace, collecting and applying revenues, levying and employing forces, or other matters of civil or military government, are to be under the control of the Government-General of Bengal; and are in all cases whatever to obey their orders; unless the Directors shall have sent to those settlements, any orders repugnant thereto not known to the Government-general; of which in that case they are to give the Government-general immediate advice.

The Court of Directors are to appoint to these several governments; namely, the Governor-General, the two other Governors, and the Members of all the Councils; and likewise the Commander in Chief of all the Forces, and the three Provincial Commanders in Chief. None of the Commanders in Chief are; ex officio, to be of the Council, but they are not disqualified from being so, if the Directors shall think fit to appoint them: and when they are Members of the Council, they are to have precedence of the other Counsellors. The Civil Members of Council, are to be appointed from the list of Civil Servants who have resided twelve years in the service in India.

The Directors may appoint to any of these offices provisionally, but without salary, till the persons appointed shall actually succeed in possession. Any vacancy of Governor-General, or Governor, when no provisional successor is on the spot, is to be filled by the senior of the Civil Counsellors, till a successor shall arrive; and the vacant seat in Council thereby occasioned, shall be temporarily supplied from among the senior Merchants, at the nomination of the acting Governor-General, or Governor, if only one Counsellor shall then remain; and on other occasions, the Governor-General and Governors, may supply vacancies in Council from the list of senior Merchants, until successors duly appointed shall arrive to take their seats. In all these cases, the salaries and allowances are to follow the acting Members while in office. If the Directors fail to appoint to vacancies in two calendar months, after notification thereof, the King may supply them, and the Directors shall not remove any person so appointed. In all other cases, the Directors have the power of recalling or dismissing any servants; and the like general power is vested in the Crown. Appointments made before the act, not to be disturbed.

The Commander in Chief of all the Forces, when at either of the subordinate settlements, is to have a seat at the Council Board, but is to have no salary in respect thereof; and if the provincial commander is a Member of that Council, he may continue to deliberate, but his voice shall be suspended as long as the other shall remain.

Provision is made for supplying the place of any Member of Council disabled from attending by illness.

The departure of any Governor, or Member of Government, or Commander in Chief, from India, with intent to come to Europe, or any written resignation delivered in by them, shall be deemed an avoidance of office, and the coming into any part of Europe, shall be a sufficient indication of that intent. No salary shall be payable to any officer or his agent during absence, unless employed on actual service; and if any officer, unless absent on service, never returns, the salary is to be deemed to have ceased from the day of his quitting the settlement.

The act prescribes the order and method of conducting business at the several Council Boards. Powers are given to the Governor-General, or Governor, to act contrary to the opinions of the other Members of Council, taking upon themselves the sole responsibility.

Provision is made in case of the absence of the Governor-General, and his visiting any subordinate presidency; and in case he shall be in the field without a Council, all the governments and officers shall obey his orders, and he alone shall be responsible;

All the governments are laid under restrictions to prevent war or extension of dominion in India, unless hostilities against the Company or their Allies shall render war unavoidable. The Members of subordinate governments, acting contrary to this act, or to the directions of the Government-General, may be suspended or dismissed by that government, and further punished. The subordinate presidencies are also required to communicate all matters of importance to the superior government with all dispatch.

The Governor-General, and other Governors, are vested with powers of apprehending persons, suspected of illicit correspondence with the enemies of the Company or of Great Britain. Witnesses are to be examined, and cross examined, and their evidence recorded; and the parties may either be tried in India, or sent home; in the latter case, the depositions of the witnesses are also to be sent home, and are to be received in evidence, subject to impeachment in respect to the competency of the witnesses.

To the acting President of the several Council Boards, is given a casting vote, in all cases of equality of voices.

3. The Directors are to appoint so many cadets and writers only, as to supply vacancies according to returns from abroad. Their ages to be from fifteen to twenty-two; unless any cadet shall have been one year in the King's service, and then his age is not to exceed twenty-five years.

All shall have promotion by seniority of service only. Three years' service qualifies a civil servant for a place of 500*l.* a year—six years' for one of 1500*l.*—nine years 3000*l.*—twelve years 4000*l.* or upwards. None to take two offices, where the joint emoluments shall exceed this rule. (See ante Stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25. div. 2.)

Nearly the same regulations are made by this statute, relative to receiving presents, disobedience of orders, and bargaining for offices, as have been already mentioned in Stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25. div. 3. All the King's subjects are made amenable to all courts of competent jurisdiction abroad, and at home, for all crimes committed by them in India. The Company may compound civil actions, but are absolutely restricted from compounding or remitting any judgment or sentence whatever in criminal cases.

Servants of the Company, after five years absence, cannot return with their rank, nor serve again, unless detained by sickness; or unless it be by leave of the Company, on a ballot of three parts in four of the General Court. In case of sickness, the Directors are the judges in the civil service; and in the military, the Directors and the Board of Control jointly.

4. The Company's term is extended for twenty years, from March 1, 1794; subject to be determined at or after that period, on three years' previous notice by Parliament, signified by the Speaker of the House of Commons; subject however as to the trade to and from India to the following limitations, in favour of such private merchants as may choose to trade there. In other respects, and to and from China, and other places beyond the Cape of Good Hope, the former restrictions against private traders, are continued in force; and if the exclufive trade thus limited, shall be hereafter discontinued, the Company are still to retain their corporate capacity with power to trade, with a joint stock in common with other people. If however any new settlement shall be obtained from the Chinese government, separate from the Continent of Asia, an export trade thither is preserved to private merchants under certain regulations; and there is also a clause to preserve to the Southern Whalers the benefit of their carrying trade into the Pacific Ocean, by the way of Cape Horn, to the Northward of the Equator, limited to 180 degrees West Longitude of London: and ships from Noorka-Sound, are to be licensed to trade from thence with Japan and China; but are not to bring any goods of the produce or manufacture of those countries to Great Britain. See ante III.

5. All persons may export and import goods to and from India, in the Company's ships; except that they shall not export military stores, ammunition, masts, spars, cordage, anchors, pitch, tar, or copper; nor import India callicoos, dimities, muslins, or other piece-goods, made or manufactured with silk or cotton, or with silk or cotton mixed, or with other mixed materials, unless it be done by leave of the Company. If the market shall not be sufficiently supplied with excepted articles of import or export, (with an exception of military stores and copper,) the Board of Controul may open that trade also to individuals. If the Company should not export 1500 tons of copper annually, private traders may export copper, in the Company's ships, to the amount of the deficiency.

The Company are to furnish private traders, till 1796, with 3000 tons of shipping yearly, computed on the same principle as the Company's own tonnage is computed. The quantity may be increased by order of the Board of Controul, to meet the demands of the private traders; and if the Board order more than the Company approve, they may appeal from the order to the King in Council. And the Company are restricted from charging any higher freight than 5*l.* per ton outwards, and 15*l.* per ton inwards; except in time of war, or in circumstances incidental to war, or preparations for war, when they may charge an increased rate of freight, in a due proportion to the rates at which they shall take up their own shipping, but the proposed increase can only be made by the consent of the Board of Controul; before whom the Directors are also required, in 1794, and in every third year afterwards, to lay a statement of the affairs of shipping; and to abide by their order, touching any continuance, increase, or abatement of the rate of freight on private trade.

Private traders are required to notify to the Company's Secretary at home, and to the proper officers in India, at a time limited, the quantity of tonnage wanted by them for the ensuing season, with the place of destination, and the time when the goods will be ready for shipping. At home, this notice is to be given before the 31st of August for the ships of the ensuing season, and before the 15th of September, they are to deposit the sum for the tonnage, or give security to the Directors for payment of it. Before the 30th of October, they are to deliver a list of the sorts and quantities of the goods intended to be sent. In failure of having them ready, by the day specified in the notice, they are to forfeit their deposit or the security, and also their tonnage for that turn. Similar rules are prescribed for shipping goods, &c. in India; but it is left to the governments there to fix the times, and to name the officers, to whom notices are to be given. The Company is to have the benefit of all forfeited and vacant tonnage, and if more is demanded for private trade than the quantity limited, every person is to have his due proportion; and notice is to be given him thereof seven days before the day for making the deposits. All private trade is to be registered in the Company's books, and, in default of being registered, it is to be considered as illicit trade, and punishable accordingly.

The restrictions of the law against the Company's servants, or others, from acting as factors for foreigners, or lending money to foreign Companies, or on bottomry of their ships, or assisting them with remittances by bills, are repealed. And all legal impediments to the recovery of debts, under any pretence that they were incurred illicitly, and against the letter of these abrogated laws, are removed; and all persons in India, not specially prohibited by the Company, or restricted by their covenants, are authorized to act as mercantile agents for any who may choose to employ them; and if there shall be a want of factors (properly qualified and authorized) the Company are to licence free merchants, with the approbation of the Board of controul, so that there may be always a proper supply of agents for conducting the private trade abroad. But the becoming factors is not to exempt any persons from being amenable to the general authorities of the governments in India; and all agents are restricted from going beyond ten miles from some principal settlement, without special leave.

As a further relief to private traders, the duty of 5*per cent.* granted by an act of King William, on goods imported in private trade, is, in respect to the India trade, repealed; and the Company's former charge of 2*per cent.* discontinued, and in lieu of these, and in satisfaction of the expences of unshipping, hoyage, cartage, warehouse-room, sorting, lotting, and selling private goods, the Company is to have 3*l.* per cent. on the gross amount of the sales of private trade, the customs thereon included. The repeal or the allowance thus substituted, is however not to extend to special engagements made between the Company, and any of their officers touching their privileges.

For the ease of manufacturers, who may import any articles of raw materials; rules, or by-laws are to be framed and established for bringing them to as early a sale as possible; and for preventing any undue preference in the sales of the same commodity amongst any of the importers, whether the goods belong to the Company or to individuals, the sales are to be open and public, by inch of candle, and the whole consignment bought in by the private importer, is to be delivered out to him, on payment only of the duties and other dues thereon. All other goods imported in private trade, are to be sold and treated as heretofore, according to the by-laws of the Company; and all goods in private trade are to pay to Government the same customs as goods imported by the Company on their own account.

And inasmuch as the allowance of 3*per cent.* and the rates of freight, will be insufficient to indemnify the Company their actual charges upon private trade, the Legislature has exempted the Company from actions for losses or embezzlements which a common carrier might, in ordinary cases, be liable by law to make good to the owner. But the act provides that the Company's officers, and all persons through whose means or negligence any loss shall happen, shall be liable to make it good to the owner; and it gives a further remedy to the owner, in certain cases, to recover satisfaction, by enabling him to prosecute under the written engagements or securities taken by the Company for the safe keeping of their own merchandize. All the laws prohibiting the import of goods from any other place than that of their growth, and for continuing all prohibitory laws, in respect to the consumption or wearing of foreign manufactures are continued. (See title Navigation-Acts).

6. All the old laws for preventing Clandestine Trade with India, and from lending to or assisting, or being concerned with Foreign Companies, or Foreign Traders, are wholly abrogated; and the following provisions are substituted in their place, observing that the penalties are made to extend only to such of his Majesty's subjects as belong to Great Britain, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, Man, Faro Isles, or to the Colonies, Islands, or Plantations in America, or the West Indies, and that all vessels and goods forfeited, may be seized by any of the Company's Officers in India or China.

Persons going unlawfully to India, and trafficking there, forfeit ships, vessels, goods, and merchandize, and double the value thereof: one-fourth to the informers, and three-fourths to the Company, they paying thereout the costs of prosecution.

Persons unlawfully going to India, shall be deemed unlawful traders, and subject to the foregoing penalties and forfeitures, and may also be prosecuted as for a crime and misdemeanor, and be liable to fine and imprisonment. One moiety of the fine goes to the King, the other to the Company, if they prosecute, or else to any other informer.

Persons unlawfully resorting to India, may be seized and sent home for trial; and on arrival, they are to give bail, or be committed to prison.

Persons dismissed the service, or whose licenses shall have expired, if they continue in India, are to be considered as illicit traders, and are made subject to penalties and forfeitures of goods, &c. as such.

Goods shipped clandestinely, or such as are restricted by the act, and goods unshipped at sea, shall be seized and forfeited, with double the value, and the Master, or other officer, knowingly permitting or suffering the same, shall forfeit all his wages to the Company; to be deducted out of the monies payable to the owners, and be disabled from again acting in the service.

Any who shall solicit for, or accept a foreign commission to sail to, and trade in India, shall forfeit 500*l.* half to the Company, and half to the prosecutor, or the whole to the Company if they shall prosecute.

All Governors and Counsellors are prohibited from trading, except for the Company; and all Collectors, Supervisors, and others employed in the Revenues of Bengal, Bahar, and Orissa, or their Agents, or any in trust for them, are prohibited from inland trade, except for the Company. The Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Bengal, are absolutely prohibited from traffick; and none without the permission of the Company, shall trade in salt, beetle-nut, tobacco or rice, &c.

pain of forfeiture of the goods, and treble the value, one moiety to the Company, and the other to the prosecutor.

None shall send goods from India to the Continent of Europe, by any other channel than as allowed by the act, on pain of forfeiture of double the value: but this restriction is not to extend to matters of agency, only on the account bonâ fide of any foreign Company, or foreign Merchant.

7. APPROPRIATION. First in India. The territorial revenues are to be applied in the first place, in defraying all charges of a military nature. Secondly, In payment of the interest of the debts there already, or hereafter to be incurred. Thirdly, In payment of the civil and commercial establishments. Fourthly, In payment of not less than one million per annum for the Company's investments of goods to Europe, and remittances and investments to China; and the surplus, if any, is to be applied in the discharge of debts, or such other purposes as shall be directed from home. The sum allowed for investments, may from time to time be increased to the extent of the diminution made in the annual amount of the interest of debts, which shall be paid in India, or transferred home; for which transfer, provision is made to an extent of 500,000*l.* a year, by Bills of Exchange to be drawn upon the Company; and if the creditors shall not subscribe to that amount, other persons may subscribe, and the money advanced by them for bills is to be applied in discharge of such debts, and this rule is to be continued till the India debt shall be reduced to two millions. The Company may increase these transfers home, but the Governments abroad are restricted from exceeding the above amount without their orders. (See Stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. —)

Secondly at home. The net produce of the Company's funds at home, after payment of current charges, are thus appropriated. First, In payment of a 10 per cent. annual dividend, on the present, or any increased amount of the capital stock of the Company. Secondly, Of 500,000*l.* per annum to be set apart on the first of March, and the first of September, half yearly; and applied in the discharge of the before-mentioned Bills of Exchange, for the aforesaid reduction of the India debt. Thirdly, Of a like annual sum of 500,000*l.* to the Exchequer, to be applied by Parliament for the use of the Public, and to be paid on the first of January, and the first of July, half-yearly, by equal instalments. And, lastly, The surplus may be applied in the more speedy reduction of the India debt, till reduced to two millions; or in discharging debts at home, so as not to diminish the bond debt below 1,500,000*l.* Subject to these appropriations, and after the debt in India is reduced to two millions, and the bond debt at home to 1,500,000*l.* one-sixth part of the ultimate surplus is to be applied to an increase of dividend of the capital stock, and the remaining five-sixths, is to be made a guarantee fund, or collateral security for the Company's capital stock, and their dividend of 10 per cent. until such fund, by the monies paid by the Company, and the interest thereof, shall have amounted to twelve millions; and after that time, the said five-sixths of the surplus is to belong to the Public in full right. These five-sixths are to be paid into the Bank, and laid out in the purchase of redeemable annuities, in the names of the Commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, who are also to receive the dividends, and lay them out.

out in like manner, until twelve millions have been invested. That being accomplished, the annual dividends of the stock purchased therewith, are, in the first place, to make good any defalcation in the Company's revenues, to pay the 10 per cent. dividend, and subject thereto, those dividends are to belong to the Public. If on the Company's exclusive trade being determined, their own assets shall prove insufficient to make good their debts, and also their capital stock rated at 250 per cent. the excess of such guarantee-fund is to make good the deficiency, as far as it will extend; and in the event of the Company discontinuing their trade altogether, the excess is to belong to the Public. But if the Company shall continue to trade with a joint stock, then the overplus, and the annual dividends thereof, are to remain as a like guarantee for a dividend of 10 per cent. and for the capital rated at 200 l. per cent. as long as the Company shall trade with a joint stock; but subject to the making good any such deficiencies, the said fund is to be deemed the property of the Public.

If the bond debt at home, or the debts abroad, after being reduced to the sums before limited, shall be again increased, the former appropriation is to be revived until those debts shall be again diminished to their respective standards before limited.

Any deficiency in the funds to make good the 500,000 l. to the exchequer in any year, is to be made good in the excesses of subsequent years; unless it happens in time of war or by circumstances incidental to war; in which case the deficiencies are not to be carried forward as a debt on the annual funds of the Company, nor to be brought forward as a debt to be paid by the Company, unless only in the event of their assets, on the conclusion of the exclusive trade affording more than sufficient to make good the capital stock rated at 200 l. per cent.; but any excess of such assets beyond that amount, is liable to make good the deficiency of any such payments to the Public; no interest is to be computed in the mean time on such deficiency.

The securities given by the cashiers of the Bank, are to extend to the monies they may receive under this act, and the treasury is to direct the allowances for management; and if the Company make default in any payments, directed by the act, they may be sued, and shall pay 15 l. per cent. damages, with costs of suit.

The statute directs the manner in which receipts shall be given; and a power is lodged in the treasury, to give the Company further time for payment in cases of exigency. And it is declared that neither the claims of the Public, nor of the Company, to the territories in India, shall be prejudiced by the statute, beyond the prolongation of the term in the exclusive trade. The statute also contains a clause of mutual acquittal of all out-standing demands between the Crown and the Company, to the 24th day of December 1792.

The statute recognizes the rights of the Company to a sum of 467,896 l. 7 s. 4 d. in money and 9,750 l. East India stock; (which sums constitute the separate fund of the Company, established under the act of 1781;) and it is observed, that it will be more for the general interest of the Company to continue that money employed in trade, computing an interest upon it and to make it a fund for a permanent increase to their dividend of 10 per cent.

than to draw it from their trading capital for any sudden distribution. And it then authorizes and limits the Company to make a dividend from this separate fund, and the interest thereon, after the rate of 10 per cent. per annum during their further term in the exclusive trade; and at the end of the term, it gives them a power of disposing of the remainder of this fund as they shall think fit.

The Company are not to grant any pensions or new salaries beyond 200 l. per annum, to any one person, without the consent of the Board of Control; and they are to lay before Parliament annually, a list of all their establishments abroad and at home, in which all pensions and new salaries are to be particularly noticed; and also complete accounts of all their affairs, receipts and outgoings of the preceding year, with estimates for the following year.

8. The statute gives a right of suing by action, bill or information, in any of the courts of Westminster, (in which case the venue is to be laid in London or Middlesex;) or in the supreme court of judicature in Bengal, or the Mayor's court at Madras or Bombay; and in such suits the legality of seizures of persons, ships, or goods, is made cognizable. In cases of misdemeanors, the offenders are punishable by fine and imprisonment, and if abroad, they may be sent home, as part of the punishment; and a capias, for arrelling the accused party, is given in the first instance, which may be compounded for by bail.

For securing to the crown the duties for goods unlawfully trafficked with, in the cases of forfeiture of goods, the Attorney General may prosecute the offenders, or their partners, by bills in a court of Equity, waving penalties, and the defendants shall make full discovery of their illicit traffick upon oath, and shall be decreed to pay all the duties thereupon to Government, and 30 l. per cent. on the value of the goods to the Company, and shall be relieved against all other forfeitures. The Company may, in like manner proceed against offenders by bill in equity, and if they fail they shall pay costs. Defendants are to pay costs to the Crown and to the Company, when the decree shall be against them. Other usual regulations are made as to informers, pleading, &c.

9. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William, in causes of Admiralty, is made to extend to the High seas at large; whereby a defect in Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63, for constituting that court, is cured.

For increasing the number of magistrates in Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, the supreme court of judicature in Bengal is to issue commissions of the peace, in pursuance of orders issued in council for that purpose; and any of the justices, so appointed, may by order in council, sit also in the courts of oyer and terminer, taking the oaths of justices in England, (excepting the oath prescribed by the act of the 18 Geo. 2. relating to qualification by estate). The proceedings and judgments of justices may be removed to the court of oyer and terminer by certiorari, but cannot be set aside for want of form but on the merits only. The justices may also associate with the judges in causes appealed, when called upon so to do.

The Governments abroad may appoint coroners to take inquests upon the bodies of persons coming to an untimely end, and appoint fees to be paid for that duty.

The

The justices of the peace may appoint scavengers, and raise money by assessments for cleansing, watching and repairing the streets of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay; they may also licence houses for retailing spirituous liquors, and fix the limits of those towns; and none are to retail spirits but such as they shall so licence, under the penalties of the laws of Great Britain.

A special oath is prescribed to be taken in future by the Directors of the Company, prohibitory of their acting as Directors when concerned in buying from, or selling to, the Company any goods; and prohibitory of their being concerned in any shipping employed by the Company, or accepting any present for any appointment of office, or of being concerned in any private trade contrary to the act.

10. The Acts or parts of Acts repealed, are as follows: Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 24. § 81.—The whole of the temporary Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 21: and so much of the several statutes as continued it in force.—Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 21. § 1. to § 9.—The whole of Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 26.—Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14. § 9.—Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 17. § 11.—Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 47. § 1 & 2.—Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63. § 23. to 29. and § 32. to § 35.—Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65. § 29.—Stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25. § 3. 13. 9 and 31.—the whole of Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 16.—and Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 57. § 32, 33.

The repeal is not to extend to offences committed before the commencement of the act, nor is it to affect the powers of the former Board of Controul, until a new one shall be appointed; nor to affect the powers given to the board by Stats. 28 Geo. 3. c. 8: 31 Geo. 3. c. 10, concerning the forces in India.

EASTINTUS, Sax. East-Tyne.] An Easterly coast or country; also the East street, East side of a river, &c. Leg. h. Ed. 1.

EASTLAND COMPANY. This Company subsisted under a charter granted by Queen Elizabeth in 1579, for regulating the commerce into the East country; a name anciently given, and still continued by mercantile people, to the ports of the Baltic sea, more particularly those of Prussia and Livonia: They were by this charter to enjoy the sole trade, through the Sound, into Norway, Sweden, Poland, Lithuania, (excepting Narva which was within the charter of the Russia Company), Prussia and also Pomerania, from the river Odel, Eastward, Danzick, Elbing and Koningberg; also to Copenhagen and Elfsborg, and to Finland, Gotland, Bornholm and Oland. This charter was confirmed by another from Charles I. in 1629.

By the Stat. 25 Car. 2. c. 7, the following provisions were made for laying open a very considerable part of this trade: It was declared lawful for any native or foreigner at all times to have free liberty to trade into and from Sweden, Denmark and Norway, notwithstanding the charter to the Holland Merchants or any other charter.—And further that every person being a subject of this realm might be admitted into the fellowship of merchants of Eastland on paying 40 s. and no more. § 5, 6.—Which latter provision made the trade to the other parts within the limits of the charter easily accessible.

EAT INDE SINE DIE. Words used on the acquittal, &c. of a defendant that he may go without day, i. e. be dismissed. See title Judgment.

EAVES-DROPPERS. Persons that listen under walls or windows, or the eaves of a house, to hearken after discourse, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales, are a common nuisance, and presentable at the court-leet: or are indictable at the sessions, and punishable by fine, and finding sureties for good behaviour. Kitch. of Courts. 20: 4 Comm. 169. See title Good Behaviour.

EBDOMADARIUS. An ebdomadary or officer appointed weekly in cathedral churches, to supervise the regular performance of divine service, and prescribe the particular duties of each person attending in the choir, as to reading, singing, praying, &c. To which purpose the ebdomadary at the beginning of his week drew in form a bill or writing of the respective persons and their several offices, called tabula; whereupon the persons there entered were filed in tabulati: This is manifested in the statutes of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, digested by Dr. Ralph Baldock, Dean of St. Paul's, anno 1295, MSS.

EBEREMORTH, EBEREMORS, EBEREMURDER. Sax.] Bare, or downright murder. Leg. H. 1. c. 12. See title Abermurder.

ECCLESIA. Lat.] The place where God is served, commonly called a church: But in law proceedings, according to Fitzherbert, this word intends a parsonage; for so he expresses it in a question, whether a benefice was ecclesia five capella, &c. F. N. B. 32: 2 Inst. 363.

ECCLESIAE SCULPTURA. The image or sculpture of a church in ancient times, which was often cut out or cast in plate or other metal, and preserved as a religious treasure or relique; and to perpetuate the memory of some famous churches. Mon. Ang. Tom. 3. p. 309.

ECCLESIASTICAL. Denotes something belonging to, or set apart for the church; as distinguished from civil or secular, with regard to the world.

ECCLESIASTICAL CORPORATIONS. Are where the members that compose it are spiritual persons. They were erected for the furtherance of religion, and perpetuating the rights of the church. See title Corporation.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS. See title Courts Ecclesiastical.

ECCLESIASTICAL JURISDICTION. By Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 17, The doctors of the civil law, although they be laymen, &c. may exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAWS. See titles Canon Law; Courts Ecclesiastical.

ECCLESIASTICAL PERSONS OR ECCLESIASTICKS. Ecclesiastici.] Churchmen, persons whose functions consist in performing the service, and keeping up the discipline of the church. See title Clergy.

EDESTIA, From Edis, used in some old charters for buildings.

EDIA, Aid or Help: Thus Du Fresne interprets it; but Cowel says it signifies Ease.

EDICT, Edictum.] An ordinance or command; a statute, Lat. Law. Dist.

EEL-FARES. A fry or brood of eels Stat. 25 H. 8.

EFFORCIALITER, Forcibly; as applied to military force.—Mat. Paris. Anno 1213.

EFFRACTORES, Lat.] Breakers applied to burglars, that break open houses to steal.

EFTERS. Sax.] Ways, walks or hedges. Blount.

EFFUSIO SANGUINIS. The mulct, fine, or penalty imposed by the old English laws for the shedding of blood; which the King granted to many lords of manors: And his privilege, among others, was granted to the abbot of Glastonbury. Cartular. MSS.

EGYPTIANS.

EGY

EGYPTIANS. Egyptiani. Commonly called Gypsies.—These are a strange kind of common-wealth among themselves, of wandering impostors and jugglers who made their first appearance in Germany, about the beginning of the sixteenth century, and have since spread themselves all over Europe and Asia. They were originally called Zinganees by the Turks, from their captain Zinganeus, who, when Sultan Selim conquered Egypt, about the year 1517, refused to submit to the Turkish yoke, and retired into the deserts, where they lived by rapine and plunder, and frequently came down into the plains of Egypt, committing great outrages in the towns upon the Nile, under the dominion of the Turks. But being at length subdued, and banished from Egypt, they dispersed themselves in small parties, into every country in the known world; and as they were natives of Egypt, a country where the occult sciences, or black art, as it was called, was supposed to arrive to great perfection, and which in that credulous age, was in great vogue with persons of all religions and persuasions, they found the people wherever they came, very easily imposed on. Mod. Univ. Hist. Vol. 43. p. 271.

In the compass of a very few years, they gained such a number of idle proselytes, who imitated their language and complexion, and betook themselves to the same arts of chiromancy, begging and pilfering, that they became troublesome and even formidable to most of the States of Europe. Hence they were expelled from France in the year 1560, and from Spain in 1591. And the government in England, took the alarm much earlier, for in 1530, they are described by Stat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 10. as "outlandish people, calling themselves Egyptians, using no craft or feat of merchandize, who have come into this realm, and gone from shire to shire, and place to place in great company, and used great subtil, and crafty means to deceive the people; bearing them in hand, that they by palmestry could tell men, and women fortunes; and so many times by craft and subtilty have deceived the people of their money, and have also committed many heinous felonies and robberies." Wherefore they are directed to avoid [depart] the realm, and not to return, under pain of imprisonment, and forfeiture of their goods and chattels; and, upon their trials for any felonies which they might have committed, they shall not be entitled to a jury de medietate lingue. And afterwards it was enacted by Stats. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 4: 5 Eliz. c. 20. that if any such persons shall be imported into this kingdom, the importer shall forfeit 40*l.* And if the Egyptians themselves remain one month in this kingdom; or if any person being 14 years old, whether a natural born subject or stranger, which hath been seen or found in the fellowship of such Egyptians, or which hath disguised him, or herself like them, shall remain in the same one month, at one or several times; it is felony, without benefit of clergy. And Sir Matthew Hale informs us, that at one Suffolk assizes, no less than thirteen gypsies were executed upon these statutes, a few years before the Restoration. But, to the honour of our national humanity, there are no instances more modern than this, of carrying these laws into execution. 4 Comm. 165, 6. Now by Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 51. the said act of 5 Eliz. c. 20. is repealed. And the Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. (See title Vagrants) regards them only under the denomination of rogues and vagabonds.

EJECTIONE CUSTODIÆ. Ejectment de Gard.] Is a writ which lieth against him that calleth out the guardian from any land during the minority of the heir. Reg. Orig. 162: F. N. B. 139. There are two other writs not unlike this; the one termed ravishment de gard, and the other droit de gard. See title Guardian.

EJECTIONE FIRMÆ; OR EJECTMENT.

AN ACTION AT LAW by which a person ousted or removed from the possession of an estate for years, may recover that possession: and which action is now used as the general mode of trying disputed titles to lands and tenements.—See 3 Comm. 199. from whence the subsequent matter is extracted with addition from other sources.

A writ of Ejectione firmæ, or action of trespass in Ejectment, lieth where lands or tenements are let for a term of years, and afterwards the lessor, reversioner, remainder-man, or any stranger, doth eject or oust the lessee of his term, F. N. B. 220. In this case he shall have his writ of ejection or Ejectment; to call the defendant to answer for entering on the lands so demised to the plaintiff for a term that is not yet expired and ejecting him. And by this writ the plaintiff shall recover back his term or the remainder of it, with damages.

Since the disuse of real actions, this mixt proceeding is become the common method of trying the title to lands or tenements. It is therefore necessary to delineate it's history, the manner of it's process, and the principles whereon it is grounded.

The writ of covenant, for breach of the contract contained in the lease for years, was anciently the only specific remedy for recovering against the lessor a term from which he had ejected his lessee, together with damages for the ouster. But if the lessee was ejected by a stranger claiming under a title superior to that of the lessor or by a grantor of the reversion, (who might at any time by a common recovery have destroyed the term,) though the lessee might still maintain an action of covenant against the lessor, for non-performance of his contract or lease, yet he could not by any means recover the term itself. F. N. B. 145. If the ouster was committed by a mere stranger, without any title to the land, the lessor might indeed, by a real action recover possession of the freehold, but the lessee had no other remedy against the ejector but in damages, by a writ of ejectione firmæ, for the trespass committed in ejecting him from his farm. But afterwards, when the courts of equity began to oblige the ejector to make a specific restitution of the land to the party immediately injured, the courts of law also adopted the same method of doing complete justice; and, in the prosecution of a writ of ejectment, introduced a species of remedy not warranted by the original writ, nor prayed by the declaration; (which are calculated for damages merely, and are silent as to any restitution;) viz. a judgment to recover the term, and a writ of possession thereupon. This method seems to have been settled as early as the reign of Edward IV. though it hath been said to have first begun under Hen. VII. because it probably was then first applied to it's present principal use, that of trying the title of the land. Bro. Ab: F. N. B. 220.

EJECTMENT.

The better to apprehend the contrivance, whereby this end is effected, it is to be recollected that the remedy by ejectment is, in it's original, an action brought by one who hath a lease for years, to repair the injury done him by dispossession. In order therefore to convert it into a method of trying titles to the freehold, it is first necessary that the claimant do take possession of the lands, to empower him to constitute a lessee for years, that may be capable of receiving this injury of dispossession. For it would be an offence, called in our law maintenance, to convey a title to another, when the grantor is not in possession of the land: and indeed it was doubted at first, whether this occasional possession, taken merely for the purpose of conveying the title, excused the lessor from the legal guilt of maintenance. 1 Ch. Rep. 4p. 39.

When therefore a person, who hath a right of entry into lands, determines to acquire that possession, which is wrongfully with-held by the present tenant, he makes (as by law he may) a formal entry on the premises, and being so in the possession of the soil, he there, upon the land, seals and delivers a lease for years to some third person or lessee; and, having thus given him entry, leaves him in possession of the premises. This lessee is to stay upon the land, till the prior tenant, or he who had the previous possession, enters thereon a-fresh and ousts him; or till some other person (either by accident or by agreement before-hand) comes upon the land, and turns him out, or ejects him. For this injury the lessee is entitled to his action of ejectment against the tenant; or his casual ejector, which-ever it was that ousted him, to recover back his term and damages. But where this action is brought against such a casual ejector as is before mentioned, and not against the very tenant in possession, the Court will not suffer the tenant to lose his possession without an opportunity to defend it. Wherefore it is a standing rule, that no plaintiff shall proceed in ejectment to recover lands against a casual ejector, without notice given to the tenant in possession (if any there be) and making him a defendant if he pleases. And, in order to maintain the action, the plaintiff must in case of any defence, make out four points before the court; viz. Title, Lease, Entry, and Ouster. First, he must shew a good title in his lessor, which brings the matter of right entirely before the Court; then, that the lessor, being seised or possessed by virtue of such title, did make him the lease for the present term; thirdly, that he, the lessee, or plaintiff did enter or take possession in consequence of such lease; and then, lastly, that the defendant ousted, or ejected him. Whereupon he shall have judgment to recover his term and damages; and shall in consequence, have a writ of possession, which the sheriff is to execute by delivering him the undisturbed and peaceable possession of his term.

This is the regular method of bringing an action of ejectment, in which the title of the lessor comes collaterally and incidentally before the Court, in order to shew the injury done to the lessee by this ouster. This method must be still continued in due form and strictness, (save only as to the notice to the tenant,) whenever the possession is vacant, or there is no actual occupant of the premises; and also in some other cases. But, as much trouble and formality were found to attend the actual making of the lease, entry, and ouster, a new, and more easy method of trying titles by writ of ejectment, where there is any actual tenant or occupier of the premises in dispute, was invented by the Lord Chief Justice Rolle. Styl. Pract. Reg. 108. (edit. 1657).

This new method entirely depends upon a string of legal fictions; no actual lease is made, no actual entry by the plaintiff, no actual ouster by the defendant, but all are merely ideal, for the sole purpose of trying the title. To this end, in the proceedings, a lease for a term of years is stated to have been made, by him who claims title, to the plaintiff who brings the action; as by John Rogers to Richard Smith, which plaintiff ought to be some real person, and not merely an ideal fictitious one who hath no existence, as is frequently though unwarrantably practised. 6 Mod. 309. It is also stated that Smith the lessee entered; and that the defendant William Stiles, who is called the casual ejector, ousted him; for which ouster he brings this action. As soon as this action is brought, and the complaint fully stated in the declaration, Stiles, the casual ejector, or defendant, sends a written notice to the tenant in possession of the lands. e. g. George Saunders, informing him of the action brought by Smith, and transmitting him a copy of the declaration; withal assuring him that he, Stiles, the defendant, has no title at all to the premises, and shall make no defence; and therefore advising the tenant to appear in court and defend his own title: otherwise he, the casual ejector, will suffer judgment to be had against him; and thereby the actual tenant, Saunders, will inevitably be turned out of possession. On receipt of this caution, if the tenant in possession does not within a limited time apply to the court to be admitted a defendant in the stead of Stiles, he is supposed to have no right at all; and upon judgment being had against Stiles the casual ejector, Saunders, the real tenant, will be turned out of possession by the sheriff.

But, if the Tenant in possession applies to be made a defendant, it is allowed him upon this condition; that he enter into a rule of court to confess, at the trial of the cause, three of the four requisites for the maintenance of the plaintiff's action; viz. the lease of Rogers the lessor, the entry of Smith the plaintiff, and his ouster by Saunders himself, now made the defendant, instead of Stiles: which requisites being wholly fictitious, should the defendant put the plaintiff to prove them, he must of course be non-suited for want of evidence; but by such stipulated confession of lease, entry and ouster, the trial will now stand upon the merits of the title only.

This done the declaration is altered by inserting the name of George Saunders (the tenant) instead of William Stiles; and the cause goes down to trial under the name of Smith (the plaintiff) on the demise of Rogers, (the lessor) against Saunders, the now defendant. And herein the lessor of the plaintiff is bound to make out a clear title, otherwise his fictitious lessee cannot obtain judgment to have possession of the land for the term supposed to be granted. But, if the lessor makes out his title in a satisfactory manner, then judgment and a writ of possession shall go for Smith, the nominal plaintiff, who by this trial has proved the right of Rogers his supposed lessor.

Yet, to prevent fraudulent recoveries of the possession, by collusion with the tenant of the land, all tenants are obliged by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, on pain of forfeiting three years' rent, to give notice to their landlords, when they

they are served with any declaration in ejectment: and any landlord may, by leave of the court, be made a co-defendant to the action, in case the tenant himself appears to it, or, if he makes default, though judgment must be then signed against the casual ejector, yet execution shall be stayed, in case the landlord applies to be made a defendant, and enters into the common rule; a right which indeed the landlord had, long before the provision of this statute. (Syll. Pract. Reg. 108, 111, 266: 7 Mod. 70: Salk. 257: Burr. 1291:) in like manner as (previous to the statute of 1728, c. 13) if in a real action the tenant of the freehold made default, the remainder-man, or reversioner had a right to come in and defend the possession, lest, if judgment were had against the tenant, the estate of those behind should be turned to a naked right. Brass. Lib. 5. c. 10. § 14.

A tenant to a mortgagor who does not give him notice of an ejectment brought by the mortgagee to enforce an attornment, is not liable to the penalties of the Stat. 11 Geo. 2: 1 Term Rep. 647.

In ejectment for a chapel, the parson can only defend for a right to enter and perform divine service. Str. 914.—Notwithstanding 1 Salk. 250, no man is to be admitted tenant or defendant in ejectment by the common rule, unless he hath been in possession or received rent, and not a mere stranger. Comb. 209.

He who claims title, shall be joined as a defendant though the plaintiff opposes it. 1 Salk. 256. And therefore even the wife of the lessor 257.

The court permitted an heir, who had never been in possession, to come in and defend the ejectment. The father under whom he claimed, died just after having first obtained a similar rule. 4 Term Rep. 122. So a mortgagee. Comberb. 399. As to a cestui que trust, see 3 Term Rep. 783: 4 Term Rep. 122.

But if the new defendants whether land-lord, or tenant, or both, after entering into the common rule, fail to appear at the trial, and to confess lease, entry, and ouster, the plaintiff Smith must indeed be there non-suited, for want of proving those requisites: but judgment will in the end be entered against the casual ejector Stiles; for the condition on which Saunders (the tenant) or his land-lord, was admitted a defendant, was, that he should appear, and therefore the plaintiff is put again in the same position as if he never had appeared at all; the judgment of which (we have seen) would have been the same, if the plaintiff would have been entered for the plaintiff, and the defendant, by virtue of a writ for that purpose, would have turned out the tenant Saunders and delivered possession to Smith the plaintiff. The same process therefore as would have been had, provided no conditional rule had ever been made, must now be pursued as soon as the condition is broken.

The damages recovered in these actions, though formerly their only intent, are now usually (since the title has been considered as the principal question) merely nominal, as 11. In order therefore to complete the remedy, when the possession has been long detained from him that had the right to it, an action of trespass also lies, after a recovery in ejectment, to recover the mesne profits which the tenant in possession has wrongfully received. Which action may be brought in the name of either the nominal plaintiff in the ejectment, or his lessor, against the tenant in possession: whether he be made party to the ejectment, or suffers judgment to go by default. In this case the judgment in ejectment is conclusive evidence against the defendant, for all profits which have accrued since the date of the demise stated in the former declaration of the plaintiff; but if the plaintiff sue for any antecedent profits, the defendant may make a new defence. 4 Burr. 668.

Such is the modern way, of obliquely bringing in question the title to lands and tenements, in order to try it in this collateral manner; a method which is now universally adopted in almost every case. It is founded on the same principles as the ancient writs of assize, calculated to try the mere possessionary title to an estate, and hath succeeded to those real actions, as being infinitely more convenient for attaining the ends of justice; because the form of the proceeding being entirely fictitious, it is wholly in the power of the court to direct the application of that fiction, so as to prevent fraud and chicanery, and eviscerate the very truth of the title. The writ of ejectment and its nominal parties (as was resolved by all the judges) are judicially to be considered as the fictitious form of an action, really brought by the lessor of the plaintiff against the tenant in possession; invented, under the controul and power of the court, for the advancement of justice in many respects; and to force the parties to go to trial on the merits, without being entangled in the nicety of pleadings on either side: 4 Burr. 668. See also 3 Burr. 1294, 6.

But a writ of ejectment is not an adequate means to try the title of all estates, for on those things, whereon an entry cannot in fact be made, no entry shall be supposed by any fiction of the parties. Therefore an ejectment will not lie of an advowson, a rent, a common, or other incorporeal hereditaments. Bristol. 129: Cro. Car. 492: Str. 54. Except for tithes in the hands of lay appropriators, by the express purview of Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 7; which doctrine hath since been extended by analogy to tithes in the hands of the clergy. Cro. Car. 301: 2 Ld. Raym. 789. Nor will it lie in such cases, where the entry of him that hath right is taken away by descent, discontinuance, twenty years dispossession, or otherwise.

More particularly, for what things ejectment will lie. Ejectment ought to be brought for a thing that is certain; and if it be of a manor; the manor of A. with the appurtenances; if of a rectory, the rectory of B. Co. And so many messuages, cottages, acres of arable land, meadow, &c. with the appurtenances in the parish of, &c. For land, must be distinguished, how much of one sort, and how much of another, &c. Cro. Eliz. 339: 3 Leon. 13. Ejectment lies of a church, as of an house called the parish church of, &c. And a church is a messuage, by which name it may be recovered; and the declaration is to be served on the parson who performs divine service. 11 Rep. 25: 1 Salk. 256.

It lies de uno messuagio sine burgagio; but not de uno messuagio sine tenemento, unless it have a vicar A. Co. to make it good, because of the uncertainty of the word tenement. 1 Sid. 295. But for a messuage and tenement hath been allowed. 1 Term Rep. 11. So indeed for a messuage or tenement. 3 Wils. 23: 3 Mod. 328: 1 Sid. 295. It will lie for a moiety, or third part of a manor or messuage, &c. And for a chamber or room of a house well set forth. 11 Rep. 53, 59: 3 Leon. 210. It lieth de domo, which hath convenient certainty for the sheriff to deliver possession, &c. Cro. Jac. 654. It lies of a cottage or curtilage; of a coal-mine, &c. but not of a common, piscary, &c. Cro. Jac. 150. For underwood it lies, though a præcipe doth not. 2 Roll. Rep. 482, 483. But for use clause, or una peca terre, &c. without certainty of the acres, and their nature, it doth not lie. 11 Rep. 53: 4 Mod. 1. It lieth of a close, containing three acres of pasture, &c. Also of so many acres of land covered with water; though not de aqua cursu. Cro. Jac. 435: 1 Broml. 242. It lies for a prebendal stall, after collation to it. 1 Wils. 14.

Ejectment lies by the owner of the soil for land which is part of the King's Highway, or of an acre of land described only by the name of land, though there be a wall and porch and part of a house built on it. 1 Burr. 133.

In this action the law requires, that the thing demanded be so particularly specified, that the sheriff may certainly know what to give the possession of, if the plaintiff should recover; for the judgment is in order to execution, and the judgment would be vain, if execution could not be had of the thing specifically demanded; but in this action the judges did not confine themselves to those rules which govern the præcipe, but allowed some things to be recovered in this action, which could not be demanded in a præcipe; because since the establishment of that real action, many things have been added and improved by art, and acquired new appellations that are perfectly understood now by the law, which are not found in the ancient law-books; and as men began to contract by new names which were not known in the old law, so it was reasonable to suffer the remedy to follow the nature of such contracts. See 2 Ld. Raym. 1470: 2 Stra. 908: 1 Burr. 629. —And in general ejectment does not lie without shewing the quantity and quality of the land, and how many acres of arable, meadow and pasture, &c. 11 Co. 55: 1 Salk. 254: 4 Mod. 97.

An Ejectment is a possessory remedy, and only competent where the lessor of the plaintiff may enter; therefore it is always necessary for the plaintiff to shew that his lessor had a right to enter, by proving a possession within twenty years, or accounting for the want of it, under some exceptions allowed by the statute; twenty years' adverse possession, is a positive title to the defendant; it is not a bar to the action or remedy for the plaintiff only, but takes away his right of possession. 1 Burr. 119. Every plaintiff must shew a right of possession, as well as of property, and therefore the defendant needs not plead the statute, as in the case of actions. Ibid.

A judgment in ejectment is the recovery of the possession; (not of the seisin or freehold;) without prejudice to the right, as it may afterwards appear between the parties. He who enters under it in truth and substance, can only be possessed according to right, prout ten possidet. If the lessor have a freehold, he is in as a freeholder: if he has a chattel interest he is in as a termor; and in respect of the freehold, his possession endures according to right. If he has no title, he is in as a trespasser; and, without any re-entry by the true owner, is liable to account for the profits. 1 Burr. 114.

This action of ejectment is rendered a very easy and expeditious remedy to landlords whose tenants are in arrear, by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28; which enacts that every landlord, who hath by his lease a right of re-entry in case of non-payment of rent, when half a year's rent is due, and no sufficient distress is to be had, may serve a declaration in ejectment on his tenant, or on the same upon some notorious part of the premises which will be valid, without any formal re-entry or previous demand of rent. And a recovery in such ejectment shall be final and conclusive, both in law and equity, unless the rent and all costs be paid or tendered within six calendar months afterwards.

The true construction upon this act is, to take off the landlord the inconvenience of his continuing always liable to an uncertainty of possession; (from it's remaining in the power of the tenant to offer him a compensation at any time, in order to found an application for relief in equity;) and to limit and to confine the tenant to six calendar months after execution granted, for his doing this; or else that the landlord shall from thenceforth hold the demised premises discharged from the lease. 1 Burr. 619. As to the provision of Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 16, in cases of tenants at rack-rent being one year in arrear and deserting the premises, see this Dict. title Rent. — Two Justices of peace may in this case put the landlord in possession.

Where an ejectment is brought against a tenant, for the purpose of turning him out of his farm, &c. and the tenant actually holds the premises of the lessor of the plaintiff, it is sometimes necessary to give him notice to quit possession, in order to maintain an ejectment. Here we may observe, that demises, where no certain term is mentioned, are held to be tenancies from year to year, which neither party can determine, without reasonable notice to the other. This notice is, in most counties, six months, and it must in all such cases, expire at that part of the year, when the tenancy commenced; and therefore it hath been holden, that half a year's notice to quit possession must be given to such tenant; before the end of which time the landlord cannot maintain an ejectment; unless the tenant has attorned to some other person, or done some act disclaiming to hold as tenant; in which case no notice is necessary. And the same law will apply to the executor of such a tenant. 3 Wils. 25. See 1 Term Rep. 160: 4 Term Rep. 361. But after the expiration of a lease for a certain term, the tenant continuing in possession is deemed a trespassor; and therefore an ejectment which is an action of trespass may be brought against him without any notice to quit.

Form of process relating to ejectments. Where there is a tenant in possession, in order to proceed against him, prepare a declaration, the copy of which, upon stamp, you serve the tenant with; if there be more than one tenant, each must be served with a copy, but if the man is not at home, his wife will do (provided she be served on the premises, and so sworn to); this is necessary both in town and country causes. At the time of service, in all cases it is requisite to read over or explain the notice at the foot of the declaration to the person served. — Imper. K. B. which see at length.

The tenant's son, daughter, or servant, he being out of the way, must not be served, unless it appear to the court, that such declaration and notice came to his hands, in which case it has been held a good delivery; but if the tenant purposely keep out of the way to avoid being served, the court on affidavit will grant a rule to shew cause why that should not be deemed good service.

EJECTMENT.

In case the tenant, &c., be served, and motion be made that it be deemed good service, the tenant must swear that the declaration never came to his hands before the time of showing cause; or the court will make the rule absolute. Str. 30 Gr. 3. In this case to ground such a motion you must shew endeavours to serve him at several times, &c.

The declaration must be served before the assign-day of every term, either in town or country, and the notice must be made to appear in the next term after delivery; but the delivery on a Sunday, or on the assign-day of that term wherein the defendant is to appear, will not do.

If the premises be in London or Middlesex, the notice must be made to appear the first day of the next term after service; for if made generally, the tenant in possession has the whole term to appear in; but if the tenements lie in any other county, the notice must be to appear as of the next term generally.

Ejectment must be brought in the county where the lands lie, and the declaration must set forth the particular parish; and the day of the demise must be laid after the title accrues, otherwise the plaintiff will be non-suited; and the plaintiff must lay the commencement of his supposed lease, to have been precedent to the ejectment by the defendant. 1 Sid. 8: 2 New Ab. 171.

If the title of the lessor of the plaintiff accrue in Easter vacation, yet the plaintiff may deliver his ejectment as of Easter term, and shall recover thereon, because he makes up his issue, or takes judgment as of the next term; otherwise the act of the law which supposes the bill filed as of the first day of Easter term, before a title accrued to the plaintiff, would be an act of injury to him, and delay his right; for a man ejected out of a lease made in term time, could not complain till term was over. 2 Vent. 174: It must be brought within twenty years, by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16: 1 Sid. 432. See ante, and title Limitation of Actions.

It was formerly held that a declaration in ejectment could not be altered or amended after once delivered, in the most trivial matters; but it has since been held, that an ejectment is a mere fictitious action, and the demise mere matter of form, nor does it exist, and on application, the demise was ordered to be amended; but this was to save the plaintiff from being barred by a fine, if he had been obliged to bring a new ejectment; 4 Burr. 2447. Therefore as the demise may be altered, there can be no doubt but that other parts less material may also be amended; the action being invented under the control of the court, for the advancement of justice, and merely to try the right in question. 1 Burr. 665. The term may be amended without consent from five to ten years. Str. 1272, 1211.—A verdict cures a defect in setting out the title, though it cannot cure a defective title. 2 Burr. 1159. See title Amendment.

It is necessary to prove the defendant or his tenant in possession of the premises: for the rule is, that the landlord shall defend for the premises only whereof his tenants are in possession; and the party does not admit himself to be landlord of any premises which the plaintiff may make title to, but of such only as were in possession of those tenants. 1 Wils. 220.

A new trial may, upon proper grounds, be granted in ejectment, as well as in other cases. 4 Burr. 2224.

In real actions, where the freehold is recovered the demandant has execution, by the writ of habere facias possessionem; in ejectment, therefore, it is but just, that a similar remedy shall be permitted to the plaintiff, who, as he now has judgment to recover the possession of the land, may put the sentence of the law in execution by virtue of a writ of habere facias possessionem, directing the sheriff to give actual possession to the plaintiff, of the land recovered.

This writ may be sued out though the lessor of the plaintiff be dead, if tested the last day of the preceding term, 4 Barr. 1970. The legal relation to the day of the test is proper to be supported in maintenance of a writ of possession on a judgment in ejectment. Ibid.

In ejectment, where there are divers defendants, and the freeholds are several, no defendant may defend for more than is in his own possession; and the plaintiff may take judgment against his ejector for what remains. 2 Vent. 355: 2 Rob. 524, 531.

If there be two defendants in ejectment, and one of them appears and confesses lease, entry, and ouster, but the other does not appear, in that case the plaintiff may enter a non-pros. or retraxit against him, and go to trial, and have judgment against the other defendant. 1 Lord Raym. 717, 718. Also if an ejectment be brought against two persons, and after issue joined, one dies, and a verdict is awarded as to the two defendants, and a verdict against two; here, upon suggestion of the death of one of them upon the roll, judgment shall be given for the plaintiff against the other for the whole: for it is said this action is grounded upon torts, which are several in their nature, and one may be found guilty and the other acquitted. Ibid.

Where one brings ejectment of land in two parishes, and the whole lies in one, he shall recover: also if a person brings ejectment of one acre in B. and part of it lies in A. he shall recover for such part as lies in B. And if one having title to a part only of lands, bringeth an ejectment for the whole, he shall recover his part of the lands. Plowd. 429: Cro. Car. 13.

A plaintiff shall recover only according to the right which he hath at the time of bringing his action: and one who hath title to the land in question, may on motion be made a defendant in the action with the tenant in possession, to defend his title. 1 Nels. Abr. 694: 1 Lill. 497, &c. As the possession of the land is primarily in question, and to be recovered, that concerns the tenant; and the title of the land, which is tried collaterally, that concerns some other, who may be admitted to be a defendant with the tenant: but none other is to be admitted a defendant, but he that hath been in possession, or receives the rents, &c.

If the plaintiff can prove his title accrued before the time of the demise, and that the defendant hath been longer in possession, he shall recover antecedent profits; but in such case the defendant will be at liberty to controvert his title. Bull. Ni. Pri. 83.

As the plaintiff in ejectment is a mere nominal person, and a trustee for the lessor; if he release the action, the court may set aside the release, and he shall be committed for a contempt; so likewise if he release an action brought in his name for the mesne profits. 1 Salk. 260: Strm. 247. If a man is made plaintiff in ejectment without his knowledge, and the defendant appearing, the plaintiff thereupon becomes nonsuit, after which execution is sued out against him; if it appears by his oath that he was made plaintiff without his knowledge or order, he shall be discharged. 34 Car. B. R. 5 An. 1 Lil 500.

If there be a verdict and judgment against the plaintiff, he may bring another action of trespass and ejectment for the land, it being only to recover the possession, &c. wherein judgment is not final, and it is not like a writ of right, &c. where the title alone is tried. Wood's Inst. 547 In 23 Car. B. R.

The reason of an ejectment being never final is not laid down in the general books on this subject, but in the notes to Eunomus vol. 4. p. 189, it is thus ingeniously stated—The reason why it is not or cannot be final seems to be this.—That it is impossible from the structure of the record in this action, to plead a former, in bar of another, ejectment brought.—Because 1. The plaintiff and defendant are nominal and exist in most cases on record only; and consequently may be changed in a new action. But the identity both of plaintiff and defendant must be averred in pleading a former action in bar.—2. The term demised may be laid many different ways. An ejectment however, though in its nature not final at law, is capable of being made so in equity: and the Court of Chancery will on proper grounds grant a perpetual injunction, and not permit the possession of lands to be disturbed by a vain incessant litigation of the same question See 2 Eq. Ab. 171. c. 1. 243. c. 11. 222. c. 1: 1 Bro. P. C. 266, 671: 2 Str. 404.

FORM of the DECLARATION in EJECTMENT, by Original, against the Casual Ejector, who gives Notice thereupon to the Tenant in Possession.

Michaelmas, the 29th of King George the Third.

BEARS { WILLIAM STILES, late of Newbury, to wit. } the said county, Gentleman, was attached, to answer Richard Smith, of a plea, wherefore with force and arms he entered into one messuage, with the appurtenances, in Sutton in the county aforesaid, which John Rogers Esq. demised to the said Richard Smith, for a term which is not yet expired, and ejected him from his said farm, and other wrongs to him did, to the great damage of the said Richard and against the peace of the lord the King, &c. And whereupon the said Richard by Robert Martin his attorney, complains, that whereas the said John Rogers, on the 1st day of October in the twenty-ninth year of the reign of the lord the King that now is, at Sutton aforesaid, had demised to the same Richard the tenement aforesaid, with the appurtenances, to have and to hold the said tenement, with the appurtenances, to the said Richard and his assigns, from the feast of Saint Michael the Archangel then last past, to the end and term of five years from thence next following and fully to be complete and ended, by virtue of which demise the said Richard entered into the said tenement, with the appurtenances, and was possessed thereof; and the said Richard being so possessed thereof, the said William afterwards, that is to say, on the said 1st. day of October in the said 29th year with force and arms, that is to say, with swords, staves and knives entered into the said tenement, with the appurtenances, in the possession of the said Richard, which the said John Rogers demised to the said Richard in form aforesaid, for the term aforesaid, which is not yet expired, and ejected the said Richard out of his said farm, and other wrongs to him did, to the great damage of the said Richard, and against the peace of the said lord the King. Whereby the said Richard saith, that he is injured and damaged to the value of 20l. And thereupon he brings suit, &c.

Martin, for the plaintiff, } Pledget of } John Doe, Peters, for the defendant, } Prosecution, } Richard Roe.

Mr. George Saunders,

I am informed that you are in possession of, or claim, title to, the premises mentioned in this declaration of ejectment, or to some part thereof; and I, being sued in this action, as a casual ejector, and having no claim or title to the same, do advise you to appear next Hilary term in his Majesty's court of King's Bench whereforever he shall then be in England, by some attorney of that court, and then and there by a rule to be made of the same court, to cause yourself to be made defendant in my stead; otherwise I shall suffer judgment to be entered against me, and you will be turned out of possession.

Your loving friend

The form of the declaration by bill does not differ very materially; and the above is inserted by way of elucidation, chiefly to such tenants, &c. as may peruse this article.

ELECTION, electio.] In law, is when a man is left to his own free will, to take or do one thing or another, which he pleases. And if it be given of several things, he who is the first agent, and ought to do the first act, shall have the election: as if a person make a lease, rendering rent, or a garment, &c. the lessee shall have the election, as being the first agent, by the payment of the one, or delivery of the other. *Co. which of them he will pay: but if he pays it not before the said term, then afterwards it is at the election of B. to demand and have which he pleaseth. Dyer 18: 5 Rep. 59: 11, 12, 51.

If I give to you one of my horses in my stable, there you shall have the election; for you shall be the first agent, by taking or seizure of one of them. Co. Lit. 145. If things granted are annual, and to have continuance, the election (where the law gives it him) remains to the grantor, as well after the day as before: but it is otherwise when to be performed at once. Ibid. When nothing passes to the feoffee or grantee before election to have the one thing or the other, the election ought to be made in the life of the parties; and the heir or executor cannot make the election: but where an estate or interest passes immediately to the feoffee, donee, &c. there election may be made by them, or their heirs or executors. 2 Rep. 36, 37. And where one and the same thing passeth to the donee or grantee, and such donee or grantee hath election in what manner he will take it, there the interest passeth immediately, and the party, his heirs, &c. may make election when they will. Co. Litt. 145: 2 Danv. Abr. 761.

Where the election creates the interest, nothing passes till election; and if no election can be made, no interest will arise. Hob. 174. If the election is given to several persons, there the first election made by any of the persons shall stand: as if a man leases two acres to A. for life, remainder of one acre to B. and of the other acre to C. Now B. or C. may elect which of the acres he will have, and the first election by one binds the other. Co. Lit. 145: 2 Rep. 36. If a man leases two acres for life, the remainder of one in fee to the same person; and after licences the lessee to cut trees in one acre, this is an election that he shall have the fee in the other acre. 2 Danv. 762. A real election concerning lands is descendible; and election of a tenant in tail may prejudice his issue. He in remainder may make an election, after the death of tenant for life; but if the tenant for life do make election, the remainder-man is concluded. Moor, Ca. 247, 832.

A person grants a manor, except one close called N. and there are two closes called by that name, one containing nine acres, and the other but three acres; the grantee shall not in this case choose which of the said closes he will have, but the grantor shall have election which close shall pass. 1 Leon. 268. But if one grants an acre of land out of a waste or common, and doth not say in what part, or how to be bounded, the grantee may make his election where he will. 1 Leon. 30. If a man hath three daughters, and he covenants with another, that he shall have one of them to dispose of in marriage; it is at the covenantor's election which of his daughters the coveantee shall have, and after request she is to be delivered to him. Moor 72: 2 Danv. 762. Where there are three coparceners of lands, upon partition the eldest sister shall have the election: though if she herself make the partition, she loseth it, and shall take last of all. Ca. Lit. 166. See title Partition.

In consideration that a person had sold another certain goods, he promised to deliver him the value in such pipes of wine as he should choose: the plaintiff must make his election before he brings his action. Style 49. An election which of two things shall be done, ought not to be made merely by bringing an action; but before, that the defendant may know which he is to do, and it is said he is not bound to tender either before the plaintiff hath made his choice which will be accepted. 1 Mod. 217: 1 Nell. Abr. 697.

A condition of a bond is, that the obligor shall pay 30*l.* or twenty kine, at the obligee's election, within such a time; the obligee at his peril is to make his election within the time limited. 1 Leon. 69. Though in debt upon bond to pay 10*l.* on such a day, or four cows, at the then election of the obligee, it was adjudged, that it was not enough for the defendant to plead that he was always ready, &c. if the obligee had made his election; for he ought to tender both at the day, by reason the word then relates to the day of payment. Moor 246: 1 Nell. 694, 695.

If a man hath an election to do one of two things, and he cannot by any default of a stranger, or of himself; or the obligee, or by the act of God, do the one; he must at his peril do the other. 1 Lil. Abr. 506.

Where the law allows a man two actions to recover his right, it is at his election to bring which he pleaseth: and when a man's act may work two ways, both arising out of his interest, he hath election given him to use it either way. Dyer 20: 2 Rob. Abr. 787. Action of trespass upon the case, or action of trespass vi et armis, may be brought against one that rescues a prisoner, at the election of the party damaged by the rescous. And an action on the case, or an assise lies against him that surcharges a common, at the election of him that is injured thereby. 1 Lil. 504, 505. Also for a rent-charge out of lands, there may be a writ of annuity or distress, at the election of the grantee: but after the death of the grantor, if the heir be not charged, the election to bring annuity ceaseth. Dyer 344.

A man was indicted of felony for entering an house and taking away money, and found guilty, and burnt in the hand; after which the person who lost the money brought an action of trespass against the other for breaking his house, and taking away his money; and it was held that the action would lie; for though it was at his election at first, either to prefer an indictment or bring an action, yet by the indictment he had made no election, because that was not the prosecution of the party, but of the Crown. Style 347.

If a bargain and sale be made of lands, which is enrolled, and at the same time the bargainor levies a fine thereof to the bargaineer, he hath his election to take by one or the other. 4 Rep. 72. A wife hath her election which to take, of a jointure made after marriage, or her dower, on the death of the husband, and not before. Dyer 358. When a lessor hath election to charge the lessee, or his assignee, pro rent; if he accepts the rent of the assignee, he hath determined his election. 3 Rep. 24.

If a person hath election to pay or perform one of two things at a day, and he do neither of them at that day, his election is gone: and where a grant is made of two acres of land, the one for life, the other in fee, or in tail, and before any election the feoffee makes a feoffment of both; in this case the election will be gone, and the feoffor may enter upon which he will for the forfeiture. 2 Rep. 37. due method distributed them to pious and charitable uses. There was such a chief officer in all the religious houses and the greatest of our English bishops had anciently their almoners, as now the King hath. Lindwood's Provincial, lib. 1. tit. 12.—See title Almoner.

ELEEMOSYNARY CORPORATIONS, Corporations Bodies appointed over hospitals, &c. constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms, or bounty of the founder of them. See title Corporation.

ELEGIT, from the words in the writ, elegit sibi liberari, because the plaintiff hath chosen this writ of execution. See 3 Comm. 418. A writ of execution, founded on the Stat. W. 2. 13. E. 1. c. 18; that lies for him who hath recovered debt or damages, or, upon a recognizance in any court against one not able in his goods to satisfy the same; directed to the sheriff, commanding him to make delivery of a moiety of the party's land, and all his goods, beasts of the plough excepted: And the creditor shall hold the said moiety of the land so delivered unto him, until his whole debt and damages are paid and satisfied; and during that term he is tenant by elegit. Reg. Orig. 299. Co. Lit. 289.

Upon an elegit, the sheriff is to deliver one half of all houses, lands, meadows and pastures, rents, reversions, and hereditaments wherein the defendant had any sole estate in fee, or for life, into whose hands soever the same do afterwards come; but not of a right only to land, an annuity, copyhold lands, &c. Dyer 206: 7 Rep 49: Plowd. 224. And by it, the plaintiff, &c. elects omnia bona & caltalla of the defendant, preter boves & asinos & caruca sua; and also a moiety of all the lands which the defendant had at the time of the judgment recovered—but it ought to be sued within a year and a day after the judgment. F. N. B. 267.

But though by this statute, the lands of the debtor are made liable, as well as his personal estate, yet the creditor takes out an elegit, and it appears to the sheriff, that there are goods and chattels sufficient to satisfy the debt, he ought not to extend the lands. 2 Inst. 395. But an elegit executed upon goods only, is not a fieri facias, for a fieri facias is executed by sale by the sheriff; but the elegit by the appraisement of the goods by a jury, and delivery to the party. 1 Sid. 184: 1 Lew. 92: 1 Keb. 105, 261, 465, 556, 692.

Upon this writ the sheriff is to impanel a jury, who are to make inquiry of all the goods and chattels of the debtor, and to appraise the same, and also to inquire as to his lands and tenements; and upon such inquisition the sheriff is to deliver all the goods and chattels (except the beasts of the plough) and a moiety of the lands to the party, and must return his writ, in order to record such inquisition in that court, out of which the elegit issued: and when the jury have found the seisin and value of the land, the sheriff, and not the jury, is to set out and deliver a moiety thereof to the plaintiff, by metes and bounds. Cro. Car. 319.

All writs of execution may be good, though not returned, except an elegit, but that must be returned, because an inquisition is to be taken upon it, and that the court may judge of the sufficiency thereof. 4 Rep 65, 74. It has been ruled, that if more than a moiety of the lands is delivered on an elegit by the sheriff, the same is void for the whole. Sid. 91: 2 Salk. 563. And the sheriff cannot sell any thing, but what is found in the inquisition.

tion; and therefore if he sell a term for years, &c. misrecited in the inquisition, as to the commencement thereof, this sale is void. 4 Rep. 74.

In debt upon bonds, the defendant before the trial conveyed his lands to another, &c. but he himself took the profits; notwithstanding this conveyance, a moiety of his lands was extended by an elegit. 1207 294: 3 Rep. 78. If two persons have each of them a judgment against one debtor and he who hath the first judgment, brings an elegit, and hath the moiety of the lands delivered to him in execution; and then the other judgment creditor, sues out another elegit, he shall have only a moiety of that moiety, which was not extended by the first judgment. Cro. Eliz. 483.

When lands are once taken in execution on an elegit, and the writ is returned and filed, the plaintiff shall have no other execution. 1 Lev. 92. And if the defendant hath lands in more counties than one, and the plaintiff awards an elegit to one county, and extends the lands upon the elegit, and afterwards files the writ, he cannot, after that, sue out an elegit into the other counties: but he may immediately after entry of the judgment upon the judgment-roll, award as many elegits, into as many counties as he thinks fit, and execute all, or any of them, at his pleasure. 1 Lil. Abr. 509: Cro. Jac. 246.

A man had lands in execution, upon an elegit, and afterwards moved for a new elegit, upon proof that the defendant had other lands, not known to the creditor, at the time when the execution was sued out; and it was adjudged, that if he had accepted of the first by the delivery of the sheriff, he could not afterwards have a new elegit; but when the sheriff returns the writ, he may waive it, and then have a new extent. Cro. Eliz. 310: 1 Nels. Abr. 699. See qu.

If the defendant dies in prison, so that there is no execution with satisfaction, the plaintiff shall have an elegit afterwards. 5 Rep. 86. And if all the lands extended on an elegit be evicted by a better title, the plaintiff may take out a new execution. 4 Rep. 66. Where one having land by elegit, is wholly evicted out of it, he may have a further execution, either against the defendant's lands or goods, as he might have had at first; save only, he must bring a fiere facias against the defendant, or him that comes in under him; but if the eviction be of part of the land, or for a time only, so that the plaintiff may take his full execution by holding it over; there he cannot have any new execution, by the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 5. 2 Shep. Abr. 115.

Where an elegit is sued upon a judgment, the levying of goods thereon for part only, is no impediment, but the plaintiff may bring another elegit pro residuo, and take the lands. 1 Lev. 92. On a writ returned upon an elegit, there may be brought a captias ad satisfaciendum, or fiere facias. 1 Leon. 176. And an elegit may be sued after a fiere facias returned nulla bona, or where part is levied by it; and after a captias ad satisfaciendum returned non est inventus. Hob. 57.

A person in execution was suffered to escape, and then he died; the land which he had at the time of the judgment may be extended, by elegit, upon a fiere facias brought against his heir, as tenant. Dyer 271.

A man may have an assize of the land which he hath in execution by elegit, if he be desorced thereof. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 18. And if tenant by elegit alien the land in fee, &c. he who hath right shall have against him and the assize, an assize of novel disseisin. Ibid. At a trial at bar in C. B. the court delivered for law, that where lands are actually extended, and delivered upon an elegit, a fine levied on those lands, and non-claim, will bar the interest of the tenant by writ. 1 Mod. 217.

If tenant by elegit, be put out of possession before he hath received satisfaction for his debt, by the heir at law, &c. he may bring action of trespass, or re-enter and hold over till satisfied: but after satisfaction received, the defendant may enter on the waste by elegit. 4 Rep. 28, 67. Tenants by elegit, farmers, merchants, &c. are not punishable for waste by action of waste: but the party, against whom execution is sued, is to have a writ of venire facias ad computandum, &c. and then the waste shall be recovered in the debt: though it is said there is an old writ of waste in the Register, for him in reversion against tenant by elegit, committing waste on lands which he hath in execution. 6 Rep. 37: New Nat. Br. 130. On tenant by elegit's accounting, if the money recovered by the plaintiff is levied out of the lands, the defendant shall recover his land; and if more be received by waste, &c. he shall have damages. Terms de Ley—See this Dict. titles Estates; Extent; Execution.

ELF-ARROWS, Were flint-stones sharpened on each side in shape of arrow-heads, made use of in war by the ancient Britons; of which several have been found in England, and greater plenty in Scotland, where it is said the common people imagine they drop from the clouds; or are made by the elves or fairies.

ELISORS. Elisors] In cases of challenge to the sheriff and coroners for partiality, &c. the venue to summon a jury shall be directed to two clerks of the Court, or two persons of the county named by the Court and sworn. And these two who are called Elisors shall indifferently name or choose the jury, and their return is final; no challenge being allowed to their array. Forrest, de Laud. leg. 1. 25: Co. Lit. 158.

ELKE, A kind of yew to make bows of. Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 9.

ELOINE, from the Fr. éloigner] To remove or send a great way off: in this sense it is used where it is said that if such as are within age be eloined, so that they cannot come to sue personally, their next friends shall be admitted to sue for them. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 15.

ELONGATA, Is a return of the sheriff in raplovin, that cattle are not to be found, or are removed, so that he cannot make deliverance, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 454, 455.

ELOPEMENT, from the Belg. h'e matrimonium & loopen, carere; or more probably from the Sax. Gelooran, to depart; the Saxon r being easily perverted from its shape into a p. Blount] Is where a married woman of her own accord, goes away and departs from her husband, and lives with an adulterer. See titles Adultery, Baron and Feme.

ELY, A royal franchise or county palatine. See title Counties Palatine.

EMBARGO, A prohibition upon shipping, not to go out of any port, on a war breaking out, &c.

EMBASSADOR, See Ambassador.

EMBLEMENTS, from the Fr. emblare & le bled, corn sprung or put up above ground] The profits of sown land: but the word is sometimes used more largely, for any produce that arise naturally from the ground, as grass, fruit, &c. In some cases he who sowed the corn shall have the emblemments; and in others not: a lessee at will sows the land, he shall have the emblemments; though if the lessee determines the will himself, he shall not have them, but the lessor. 5 Rep. 116. If lessee at will sows the land with grain, or other thing yielding annual profit, and the lessor enters before severance; yet the lessee shall have it: but where the lessee plants young fruit-trees, or other trees, or sows the land with acorns, &c. he shall not have these: and if such tenant by good husbandry make the grass to grow in greater abundance; or sow the land with hay seed, by which means it is increased, if the lessor enters on the lessee, the lessee shall not have it, because grass is the natural profit of the soil. Co. Lit. 55, 56.

Where tenant for life sows the land, and dies, his executors shall have the emblemments, and not the lessor or him in reversion, by reason of the uncertainty of the estate. Co. Lit. 463. And if a tenant for life plants hops, and dies before severance, he in reversion shall not have them, but the executors of tenant for life. Cro. Car. 515. If tenant for years, (if he so long live) sow the ground, and die before severance, the executor of the lessee shall have the corn: and where lessee for life leases for years, if the lessee for years sow the land, and after lessee for life dies before severance, the executor of lessee for years shall have the emblemments. 2 Danv. Abr. 765.

So it is also if a man be tenant for the life of another, and cessus que vie, (he on whose life the land is held,) dies after the corn sown, the tenant per autem vic shall have the emblemments. The same is also the rule if a life-estate be determined by the act of law. Therefore if a lease be made to husband and wife during coverture, (which gives them a determinable estate for life,) and the husband sows the land; and afterwards they are divorced a vinculo matrimonii, the husband shall in this case have the emblemments; for the sentence of divorce is the act of the law. 5 Rep. 116. But if an estate for life be determined by the tenant's own act, (as by forfeiture for waste committed, or if a tenant during widowhood, thinks proper to marry;) in these and similar cases, as in that of a tenant at will determining his own tenure, the tenants shall not be entitled to take the emblemments. 1 Inst. 55.

If tenant for years sows ground, and before his corn is severed, the term which is certain expires; the lessor or he in reversion shall have the emblemments; but he must first enter on the lands. 1 Lil. Abr. 511. A lessee for life or years sows the land, and after surrenders, &c. before severance, the lessor shall have the corn. 2 Danv. 764. If there be lessee for years upon condition that if he commit waste, &c. his estate shall cease; if he sows the ground with corn, and after doth waste, the lessor shall have the corn. Co. Lit. 55. And where a lord enters on his tenant for a forfeiture, he shall have the corn on the ground. 4 Rep. 21.

Though if a feme copyholder for her widowhood sows the land, and before severance takes husband, so that her estate is determined, the lord shall have the emblemments; yet if such a feme copyholder durante viduitate, leases for one year according to custom, and the lessee sows the land, and afterwards the copyholder takes husband, the lessee shall have the corn. 2 Danv. 764. If a husband holds lands for life, in right of his wife, and sow the land and after she dies before severance, he shall have the corn.

ments. Dyer 316; 2 Inst. Abr. 701. And where the wife hath an estate for years, life, or in fee, and the husband sows the land, and dies, his executors shall have the corn. 1 Nels. 701. But if the husband and wife are joint tenants, though the husband sow the land with corn, and dies before severance, the wife and not his executors shall have the corn, he being the surviving jointenant. Co. Lit. 199.

When a widow is endowed with lands sown, she shall have the emblemments, and not the heir. 2 Inst. 81. And a tenant in dower may dispose of corn sown on the ground; or it may go to her executors, if she die before severance. 2 Inst. 80, 81. And by the particular provisions of Stat. 28 H. 8 c. 11, if a Parson sows his glebe, and dies, his executors shall have the corn: and such parson may by will dispose thereof. 1 Rol. Abr. 655.

If tenant by statute-merchant sows the land, and before severance a casual profit happens, by which he is satisfied, yet he shall have the corn. Co. Lit. 55. Lands sown are delivered in execution upon an extent, the person to whom delivered shall have the corn on the ground. 2 Leon. 54. And judgment was given against a person, and then he sowed the land, and brought a writ of error to reverse the judgment, but it was affirmed; and adjudged that the recoveror shall have the corn. 2 Bulst. 213.

If a disseisor sows the land, and afterwards cuts the corn, but before it is carried away, the disseisee enters, the disseisee shall have the corn. Dyer 31. 11 Rep. 52. A person seised in fee of land dies, having a daughter, and his wife provenient enfeint with a son; the daughter enters and sows the land, and before severance of the corn, the son is born; in this case the daughter shall have the corn, her estate being lawful, and defeated by the act of God; and it is for the public good that the land should be sown. Co. Lit. 55.

A man seised in fee simple sows land, and then devises the land by will, and dies before severance; the devisee shall have the corn; and not the devisors executors. Wincb 52. Cro. Eliz. 61. If a person devises his lands sown, and says nothing of the corn, the corn shall go with the land to the devisee: and when a man seised of land, in fee or in tail, sows it, and dies without will, it goes to the executor, and not the heir. 10 El. 4. 1 b: 21 H. 6. 30 a: 37 H. 6. 35 b. A devisee for life dies, he in remainder shall have the emblemments with the land. Hob. 132.

Tenant in fee sows the land, and devises it to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, and dies; A. dies before severance, B. in remainder shall have the corn, and not the executor of the first tenant for life. Cro. Eliz. 61, 464. Where there is a right to emblemments, ingress, egress and regress are allowed by law, to enter, cut and carry them away, when the estate is determined, &c. 1 Inst. 56.

EMBLERS DE GENTZ, Fr.] A stealing from the people: The word occurs in our old rolls of Parliament. Whereas divers murders, emblers de gentz, and robberies are committed, &c. Rel. Parl. 21 Ed. 3. n. 62.

EMBRACEOR, Fr. embrasour.] He that when a matter is in trial between party and party comes to the bar with one of the parties, having received some reward so to do, and speaks in the case; or privately labours the jury, or stands in the court to survey and overlook them, whereby they are awed or influenced, or put in fear or doubt.

doubt of the matter. Stat. 19 H. 7. cap. 13. But lawyers, attorneys, &c. may speak in the case for their clients, and not be embracers; also the plaintiff may labour the jurors to appear in his own cause; but a stranger must not do it: for the bare writing a letter to a person, or parcel request for a juror to appear; not by the party himself, hath been held within the statutes against embracery and maintenance. Co. Lit. 369: Hob. 294: 1 Saund. 391. If the party himself instruct a juror, or promise any reward for his appearance, then the party is likewise an embracer. And a juror may be guilty of embracery, where he by indirect practices gets himself sworn on the sides, to serve on one side. 1 Lil. 513. There are divers statutes relating to this offence and maintenance. See further title Maintenance, and post, Embracery.—See also titles Jury; Décies tantum.

EMBRACERY. An attempt to influence a Jury corruptly to one side, by promises, persuasions, entreaties, money, entertainments, and the like. The punishment for the person embracing, (the Embraceor) is by fine and imprisonment; and for the Juror so embraced, if it be by taking money, the punishment is, (by various Stats. of Ed. III. viz. 5 E. 3. c. 10: 34 E. 3. c. 8: 38 E. 3. c. 12.) perpetual infamy, imprisonment for a year, and forfeiture of ten-fold value. 4 Comm. 140: See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 85; and the preceding title.

EMBRING DAYS, from embers, cineris, so called either because our ancestors, when they fasted, sat in ashes, or strewed them on their heads.] Those days which the ancient Fathers called Quatuor Tempora jejuni, and of great antiquity in the church: they are observed on Wednesday, Friday and Saturday next after Quadragesima Sunday, (or the first Sunday in Lent) after Whitsunday, Holyrood-day in September, and St. Lucy's day about the middle of December. These days are mentioned by Britten, c. 53, and other writers; and particularly in the Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19. Our almanacks call them the Ember Weeks.

EMBROIDERY. By Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 36. No foreign embroidery, or gold or silver brocade, shall be imported, upon pain of being forfeited and burnt, and penalty of 100*l.* for each piece. No person shall sell or expose to sale any foreign embroidery, gold or silver thread, lace, fringe, brocade, or make up the same into any garment, upon pain of having it forfeited and burnt, and penalty of 100*l.* All such embroidery, &c. found, may be seized and burnt, and the mercer, &c. in whose custody it was found, shall forfeit 100*l.*—See title Munufactures, Navigation &c.

EMENDALS, emenda.] An old word still made use of in the accounts of the Society of the Inns Temple; where so much in emendals at the foot of an account, on the balance thereof, signifies so much money in the bank or stock of the houses, for reparation of losses or other emergent occasions: quod in restaurationem damni tribuitur. Spelm.

EMENDARE, Emendam solvere.] To make amends for any crime or trespass committed. Leg. Ekw. Confess. c. 35. Hence a capital crime, not to be attoned by fine, was said to be inmendabile. Leg. Canut. p. 2.

EMENDATIO, Hath been used for the power of amending and correcting abuses, according to stated rules and measures; as emendatio panni, the power of looking to the assize of cloth, that it be of just measure; emendatio panis & cervisie, the assizing of bread and beer, &c.

privile granted to lords of manors, and executed by their officers appointed in the court-leet, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 196.

EMPANEL, See Impanel.

EMPEROR, imperator.] The highest ruler of large kingdoms and territories; a title anciently given to renowned and victorious generals of armies, who acquired great power and dominion. And this title is not only given to the Emperor of Germany, as Emperor of the Romans; it was formerly belonging to the Kings of England, as is by a charter of King Edgar.

NBREVER, Fr.] To write down in short. Brit. 56.

ENCAUSTUM, See Incaustum.

ENCHESON, A French word used in our law books and statutes, signifying the occasion, cause or reason wherefore any thing is done. Stat. 5 Ed. 3. c. 3.

ENDEAVOUR. Where one who has the use of his reason endeavours to commit felony, &c. he shall be punished by our laws, but not to that degree as if he had actually committed it: as if a man assault another on the highway, in order to a robbery, but takes nothing from him, this is not punished as felony, because the felony was not accomplished; though as a misdemeanor, it is liable to fine and imprisonment. 3 Inst. 63, 69, 161: 11 Rep. 98. And in this case, by Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 21, the offender shall be transported. See titles Intendment; Robbery.

ENDOWMENT, The bestowing or assuring of dower on a woman. It is sometimes used metaphorically for the settling a provision upon a parson, or building of a church or chapel; and the severing a sufficient portion of tithes, &c. for a vicar, towards his perpetual maintenance, when the benefice is appropriated. See Stats. 15 R. 2. c. 6: 4 H. 4. c. 12.

ENEMY, inimicus.] Is properly an alien or foreigner, who in a public capacity, and in an hostile manner, invades any kingdom or country; and whether such persons come hither by themselves, or in company with English traitors, they cannot be punished as traitors, but shall be dealt with by martial law. H. P. C. 10, 15. But the subjects of a foreign prince coming into England, and living under the protection of the King, if they take up arms, &c. against the government, they may be punished as traitors, not as alien enemies. If a prisoner be rescued by enemies, the gaoler is not guilty of an escape; as he would have been if subjects had made the rescue, when he might have a legal remedy against them. See Hawk. P. C. and titles Alien; Escape; and as to adhering to and succouring the King's enemies, see title Treason.

ENFRANCHISE, Fr. enfranchi.] To make free, or incorporate a man into any society, &c. It is also used where one is made a free denizen, which is a kind of incorporation in the Commonwealth.

ENFRANCHISEMENT, Fr. from franchise, i. e. libertas.] Is when a person is incorporated into any society or body politick; and it signifies the act of incorporating. He that by charter is made a denizen, or freeman of England, is said to be enfranchised, and let into the general liberties of the subjects of the kingdom: and he who is made a citizen of London, or other city, or free burgess of any town corporate, as he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation, is in the common sense of the word a person enfranchised. And when a man is enfranchised into the freedom of any city or borough, he hath a freehold in his freedom during life; and may not, for endeavouring any thing only against the corporation, lose and forfeit the same. 11 Rep. 91. See title Corporation. A villein was said to be enfranchised, when he was made free by his lord, and rendered capable of the benefits belonging to freemen.

ENGLECCERY, or ENGLESCHIRE, Englecceria.] An old word signifying the being an Englismen. When Canutus the Dane came to be King of England, he at the request of the Nobility sent back his army into Denmark, but kept some Danes behind to be a guard to his person; and he made a law for the preservation of his Danes (who were often privately made away with by the Engliss) that if an Englismen killed a Dane, he should be tried for the murder; or if he escaped, the town or hundred where the fact was done, was to be amerced sixty-six marks to the King: so that after this law, whenever a murder was committed, it was necessary to prove the party slain to be an Englismen, that the town might be exempted from the amercement; which proof was called Engleccery, or Engleschire. And whereas if a person were privately slain, he was in ancient time accounted Francigena, which word comprehended every alien, especially the Danes: it was therefore ordained, that where any person was murdered, he should be adjudged Francigena, unless Engleccery were proved, and that it was made manifest he was an Englismen. The manner of proving the person killed to be an Englismen, was by two witnesses who knew the father and mother, before the Coroner, &c. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 15: Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 30: 7 Rep. 16. This Engleccery, by reason of the great abuses and trouble that afterwards were perceived to grow by it, was utterly taken away by Stat. 14 Ed. 3. ft. 1. c. 4.—See 4 Comm. 195: and this Dict. title Murder.

ENGLISH. Pleas, records, bonds, and proceedings in courts of justice, to be in English. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. And see Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 27: 6 Geo. 2. c. 14: and this Dict. titles Pleading; Process, &c.

ENGLISHMEN, The names of, to be certified into the Chancery who are abroad in Holland and Flanders, &c. and to pay such impositions as aliens do. Stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 4.

ENGRAVERS, That shall invent, design and engrave prints, to have the sole right of printing them for fourteen years, which shall be engraved with the names of the proprietors; and others copying, and selling such prints, though by varying, &c. without their consent, shall forfeit 5*l.* for every print, and also the plates and sheets, &c. Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 13.—See title Literary Property.

ENGROSSER, See Ingrosser; Forestaller.

TO ENHANCE. To raise the price of goods or merchandise. See title Forestaller.

ENPLEET, Anciently used for implead.—They may enpleat and be enpleeted in all courts. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. fo. 412.

ENSIENTURE, or Ensieny, Of any woman condemned for a crime, is no ground to stay judgment; but it may be afterwards alleged against execution. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 413.

ENTAIL. See title Tail.

ENTERPLEADER, See Interpleader.

ENTIERTIE, from the French entierité, entiereté.] Is a contradistinction in our books to moiety, denoting the whole: and a bond, damages, &c. are said to be entire, when they cannot be divided or apportioned.

ENTIRE TENANCY, Contrary to several tenancy, and signifying a sole possession in one man; whereas the other is a joint or common possession in two or more. Brook.

ENTRY, Fr. entrée, i. e. ingressus, introitus.] Signifies the taking possession of lands or tenements, where a man hath title of entry: and it is also used for a writ of possession. This entry into lands, is where any man enters into or takes possession of any lands, &c. in his proper person; and is an actual entry when made by a man's self, or by attorney by warrant from him that hath the right; or it is an entry in law, for a continual claim is an entry implied by law, and has the same force with it. Litt. § 419. There is a right of entry, when the party claiming may for his remedy either enter into the land, or have an action to recover it: and a title of entry, where one hath lawful entry given him in the lands, which another hath, but has no action to recover till he hath entered. Plowd. 558: 10 Rep. 48: Finch's Law 105.

ENTRY, may be defined to be an extrajudicial and summary remedy, against certain species of injury by ouster, used by the legal owner, when another person who hath no right, hath previously taken possession of lands or tenements. In this case, the party entitled may make a formal but peaceable entry thereon, declaring that thereby he takes possession; which notorious act of ownership, is equivalent to a feudal investiture by the lord: or he may enter on any part of it in the same county, declaring it to be in the name of the whole. Litt. § 417. But if it lies in different counties, he must make different entries; for the notoriety of such entry or claim to the paries or freeholders of Westmorland, is not any notoriety to the paries or freeholders of Suffex. Also if there be two disseisors, the party disseised must make his entry on both; or if one disseisor has conveyed the lands with livery to two distinct feoffees, entry must be made on both. Co. Litt. 252. For as their seisin is distinct, so also must be the act which deveys that seisin. If the claimant be deterred from entering by menaces or bodily fear, he may make claim as near to the estate as he can, with the like forms and solemnities: which claim is in force for only a year and a day. Litt. § 422. And this claim, if it be repeated once in the space of every year and day, (which is called continual claim) has the same effect with, and in all respects amounts to, a legal entry. Ibid. § 419, 23.—See this Dict. title Claim. Such an entry gives a man seisin; or puts into immediate possession, him that hath right of entry on the estate; and thereby makes him complete owner, and capable of conveying it from himself by either descent or purchase. Co. Litt. 15.

This remedy by entry takes place in three only of the five species of ouster, vis. Abatement, Intrusion, and Disseisin; for, as in these the original entry of the wrongdoer was unlawful, they may therefore be remedied by the mere entry of him who hath right. But, upon a Discontinuance, or Deforcement, the owner of the estate cannot enter, but is driven to his action: for herein the original entry being lawful, and thereby an apparent right of possession being gained, the law will not suffice that that right to be overthrown by the mere act or entry of the claimant. Yet a man may enter on his tenant by sufferance: for such tenant hath no freehold, but only a bare possession; which may be defeated, like a tenancy at will, by the mere entry of the owner. But if the owner thinks it more expedient to suppose or admit such tenant to have gained a tortious freehold, he is then remediable by writ of entry, ad terminum qui præterijt. 1 Inst. 57, 237, 8.—See title Disseisin.

On the other hand, in case of Abatement, Intrusion, or Disseisin, where entries are generally lawful, this right of entry may be toll'd, that is, taken away, by descent. Descents which take away entries, are when any one, seized by any means whatsoever of the inheritance of a corporeal hereditament, dies, whereby the same descends to his heir: in this case, however feeble the right of the ancestor might be, the entry of any other person who claims title to the freehold is taken away; and he cannot recover possession against the heir by this summary method, but is driven to his action to gain a legal seisin of the estate. Lit. § 385; 413.

In general therefore, no man can recover possession by mere entry on lands, which another hath by descent. Yet this rule hath some exceptions; especially if the claimant were under any legal disabilities, during the life of the ancestor, either of infancy, coverture, imprisonment, insanity, or being out of the realm: in all which cases, there is no neglect or laches in the claimant, and therefore no descent shall bar, or take away his entry. Co. Lit. 246. And this title of taking away entries by descent, is still further narrowed by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 33; which enacts, that if any person disseises or turns another out of possession, no descent to the heir of the disseisor shall take away the entry of him that has right to the land, unless the disseisor had peaceable possession five years next after the disseisin. But the statute, on feudal reasons, does not extend to any feoffee or donee of the disseisor, mediate or immediate. Ibid. 256.

By the statute of limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, it is enacted, that no entry shall be made by any man upon lands, unless within 20 years after his right shall accrue. And by Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, no entry shall be of force to satisfy the said statute of limitations, or to avoid a fine levied of lands, unless an action be thereupon commenced within one year after, and prosecuted with effect. See further title Claim.

This remedy by entry must be pursued, according to Stat. 5 Ric. 2. §. 1. c. 8, in a peaceable and easy manner; and not with force or strong hand. For, if one turns or keeps another out of possession forcibly, this is an injury of both a civil and a criminal nature. The civil is remedied by immediate restitution; which puts the ancient possessor in statu quo; the criminal injury or public wrong, by breach of the King's peace, is punished by fine to the King. See this Dict. title Forcible Entry.

THE WRIT OF ENTRY is a possessory remedy which disproves the title of the tenant or possessor, by showing the unlawful means by which he entered, or continues possession. Finch. L. 261. The writ is directed to the Sheriff, requiring him to, "Command the tenant of the land, that he render [in Latin, præste quod reddat] to the demandant the land in question, which he claims to be his right and inheritance; and into which, as he saith, the said tenant had not entry, but by (or after) a disseisin, intrusion, or the like, made to the said demandant, within the time limited by law for such actions; or that upon refusal he do appear in court on such a day, to shew wherefore he hath not done it." This is the original process, the præcipe, upon which all the rest of the suit is grounded; wherein it appears, that the tenant is required, either to deliver seisin of the lands, or to show cause why he will not. This cause may be either a denial of the fact, of having entered by or under such means as are suggested, or a justification of his entry, by reason of title in himself, or in those under whom he makes claim; wheresupon the possession of the land is awarded to him who produces the clearest right to possess it.

The Writs of entry are of divers kinds, distinguished into four degrees, according to which the writs are varied. The first degree is a writ of entry sur disseisin, that lieth for the disseisee, against a disseisor, upon a disseisin done by himself; and this is called a writ of entry in the nature of an assise.

Second, a writ of entry sur disseisin in le per, against the heir by descent, who is said to be in the per, as he comes in by his ancestor; and so it is if a disseisor make a feoffment in fee, gift in tail, &c. the feoffee and donee are in the per by the disseisor.

Third, A writ of entry sur disseisin in le per & cui, where the feoffee of a disseisor maketh a feoffment over to another; when the disseisee shall have this writ of entry sur disseisin, &c. of the lands in which such other had no right of entry, but by the feoffee of the disseisor, to whom the disseisor demised the same, who unjustly and without judgment disseised the demandant. 1 Inst. 238.

These three degrees thus state the original wrong, and the title of the tenant, who claims under such wrong. If more than two degrees, (that is two alienations or descents) were past, there lay no writ of entry at the Common-law. For, as it was provided for the quietness of men's inheritances, that no one, even though he had the true right of possession, should enter upon him who had the apparent right by descent or otherwise, but he was driven to his writ of entry to gain possession; so, after more than two descents, or two conveyances were passed, the demandant, even though he had the right both of possession and property, was not allowed this possessory action; but was driven to his writ of right, a long and final remedy, to punish his neglect in not sooner putting in his claim while the degrees subsisted; and for the ending of suits, and quieting of all controversies. 2 Inst. 153. But by the Stat. of Marlbridge 52 Hen. 3. c. 30, it was provided, that when the number of alienations or descents exceeded the usual degrees, a new writ should be allowed without any mention of degrees at all. And accordingly, Fourthly, A new writ has been framed, called a writ of entry in the post, which only alledge the injury of the wrongdoer, without deducing all the intermediate title from him to the tenant; stating it in this manner; that the tenant had not entry, unless after, or subsequent to, the ouster, or injury done by the original disposessor; and rightly concluding, that if the original title was wrongful, all claims derived from thence must participate of the same wrong. Upon the latter of these writs, it is, (the writ of entry sa. disseisin in the post.) that the form of our common recoveries of landed estates is usually grounded. See title Fine and Recovery.

This remedial instrument, of writ of entry, is applicable to all the cases of ouster, except that of Discontinuance of tenant in tail, and some peculiar species of Deformements. Such is that of the deforcement of dower by not assigning any dower to the widow within the time limited by the law; for which she has her remedy by writ of dower, unde nihil habet. F. N. B. 147.—See title Dower.

But in general the writ of entry is the universal remedy to recover possession, when wrongfully withheld from the owner. It were therefore endless to recount all the several divisions of writs of entry, which the different circumstances of the respective demandants may require, and which are furnished by the Laws of England, being plainly and clearly chalked out in that collection of legal forms, the Registrum omnium Breuium, or Register of such writs as are issuable out of the King's Courts; upon which Kutzbereit's Natura Breuium is a comment; which see; and the several appropriate titles in this Dict.

In the times of our Saxon ancestors, the right of possession seems to have been recoverable only by writ of entry. Gill. Ten. 42. This writ was then usually brought in the County Court; and the proceedings in these actions were not then so tedious, (when the Courts were held, and process issued from, and was returnable there in, at the end of every three weeks) as they became after the Conquest, when all causes were drawn into the King's Courts, and process issued only from Term to Term. Hence a new remedy was invented in many cases to do justice to the people, and to determine the possession in the proper counties by the King's Judges; this was the remedy by Assise; as to which, See title Assise in this Dict. and fully on this subject 3 Comm. 174, 184. *

Having said thus much in general on the titles Entry, and Writs of Entry, subjects now in some measure rather unusual than obsolete, the following observations, extracts, &c. may be of use to the enquiring Student: should any of them seem a repetition of what has already been said, it will be generally found they state the point more at large, or on different authorities.

A Writ of Entry in the per and cui, shall be maintained against none, but where the tenant is in by purchase or descent; for if the alienation or descent be put out of the degree upon which no writ may be made in the per and cui, then it shall be made in the post. Terms de Ley.

There are five things which put the writ of entry out of the degrees, viz. intrusion; disseisin upon disseisin; succession where the disseisor was a person of religion, and his successor enters; judgment, when a person hath had judgment to recover against the disseisor; and escheat, on the disseisor's dying without heir, or committing felony, &c. on which the lord enters, &c. In all these cases, the disseisee or his heir, shall not have a writ of entry within the degrees of the per, but in the post; because they are not in by descent, or purchase. Terms de Ley.

Degrees as to entries are of two sorts, either by act in law, as in case of a descent; or by act of the party by lawful conveyance. But no estate gained by wrong doth make a degree; so that abatement, intrusion, &c. work not a degree; nor doth every change by lawful title, as an estate of tenant by the curtesy, by judgment, &c. or of any others that come in the post; though a tenancy in dower by assignment of the heir doth work a degree, because she is in, by her husband; but an assignment of dower by a disseisor, doth not, by reason she is in the post. Co. Lit. 239.

Though Entry on lands is taken away by descent on disseisins, or discontinuance, &c. yet a descent shall not take away the entry of lessee for seven years, nor of tenant by elegit, &c. who have but a chattel, and so freehold; otherwise it is of any estate for life, or any higher estate. Co. Lit. 249.

If a disseisor leases for years, and dies seised of the reversion, the entry of the disseisee is taken away, because he died seised of the fee and freehold; but if he had leased for life, &c. the entry of the disseisee would not be taken away. Co. Lit. 239. Where the disseisor of an infant dies seised, and after the infant comes of age, and the heir of the disseisor dies before entry; though he died not seised of an actual seisin, but a seisin in law; yet his dying seised takes away the entry of the disseisee. Ibid. If a disseisor makes a feoffment upon condition, and the feoffee dies seised, and the feoffor enters upon the heir for the breach of the condition, the disseisee may enter upon him; for by the entry of the disseisor, the descent is utterly defeated. Lit. f. d. 409.

The title of entry in a feoffor, &c. that hath but a condition, cannot be taken away by any descent, because he has no remedy by action to recover the land; so that if a descent should take away his entry, it would bar him of his right for ever: and the condition remains, and cannot be develted and put out of possession, as the lands, &c. Co. Lit. 240. If a man recovers lands, and after a stranger to the recovery dies seised, this shall not take away the entry of the recoveror; as it was but a title. 2 Dunv. Abr. 561. But where a person recovers against another, and enters and sues execution, and after the recoverer disseises him, and dies seised; this descent shall take away the entry of the recoveror, for the recovery was executed. Ibid.

If after recovery against tenant for life, he dies, and he in remainder enters before execution, and dies seised, the entry of the recoveror is not taken away. Co. Lit. 238. The entry of the tenant for life, shall be good for him in remainder; and if tenant for life make a feoffment in fee, and a stranger enters for the forfeiture in the name of the reversioner; this will be good to vest the reversion in him. L. r. 128; 9 Rep. 106. If an infant under age, makes a deed of feoffment, and after his full age the feoffee dies seised; or a lessee for life aliens the land, and the alienee dies seised thereof, or a devise be of lands upon condition, and the heir of the disseisor enters and dies seised: in these cases the entry is gone, and the parties shall be put to their action. Lit. 96; 9 H. 6; 25.

If there be tenant for life, remainder to the right heir of J. S. and the tenant for life is disseised; a descent is cast, and after J. S. dies, and tenant for life also dies: by this, the entry of the heir of J. S. is not taken away, for his remainder was in custodia legis. 1 Rep. 134. Where an infant has cause of entry, and the descent happens while he is within age, it will not bar him of his entry: he that hath the right of entry, must be of age, within the four seas, of sound memory; and if it be a woman, she must be sole; and if the party be under age, beyond the seas, seas, non compescurus, in prison, or a feme covert, at the time of the descent, it shall not bar. Lit. 147, 408: 21 H. 6. 17.

The whole time from a disseisin is considerable; as where seine covert is disseised, and her husband dieth, and she takes another husband, and then a descent is cast; or if one ultra mare be disseised, and he return into England, and then go beyond sea again, and there is a descent; here the descent will bar the entry, because of the intersum. 9 H. 7. 24: Dyer 143: 32 H. 8. c. 33.

A woman tenant in tail took husband, who made a feoffment in fee, and died, and the wife without entry made a lease for years; and it was held, that the freehold was not reduced by the lease, without an entry made, 1 Leon. ca. 165. The entry of a disseisee, when he duly makes it, shall avoid all the mesne charges by the disseisor upon the land: but right of entry may be lost divers ways; as by acceptance of rent, by him who hath it, and the like. 1 Anderson 133: Noy Rep. 7. If a man is disseised of land whereunto a common is appendant, the disseisee cannot use the common till he enters on the land to which the common is appendant; for if the disseisee might use it, so might the disseisor, which would be a double charge on the common yet if a person be disseised of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant, he may present to the advowson before entry on the manor. Co. Lit. 122.

A disseisee enters into the land, and continues therein with the disseisor, and manures it with him, claiming nothing of his first estate; or if the disseisee enters, and takes the profit, as lessee, &c. of the disseisor; it is said these will be an entry that will reduce the first estate. 2 Danv. 790. If the disseisee commands a stranger to put in the cattle of such stranger in the land to feed there; this is an entry in law on the land. Co. Lit. 245.

Where entry may be made into land, or any thing, it shall not be in the party before entry, if entry cannot be made, but only claim, then it shall be in him by claim; and when neither entry, nor claim can be made, it shall be in him by act of law. 1 Plowd. 133. In case the possession of land is in no man, but the freehold in law is in the heir that enters, his general entry into one part reduces all into his actual possession but if an entry is to divest an estate, a general entry into parcel, is good only for that part. Co. Lit. 15. Where an entry is in any part, it must be in the name of all. If I enfeoff a person of an acre of ground upon condition, and of another acre on condition, and both conditions are broken, here entry into one in name of both acres is not good to reduce both but if a man make a feoffment of divers parcels upon condition that is broken, there entry into part in name of all the rest is sufficient. Co. Lit. 252: 9 H. 7. 25.

A man hath right to enter into lands in divers villages in one county, if he enter upon part of it in one village in the name of all in that county; by this he shall have possession of the whole. Co. Lit. 252: Dyer 227, 337. If a man disseise me of one acre at one time, and another acre at another time in the same county; my entry into one of them in the name of both is good: though it will not be good, if the disseisin be by two several persons, or if the acres lie in several counties; in which case there ought to be several entries and additions. Co. Lit. 252.

If he who hath right of entry into a freehold, enters into part of it, it shall be adjudged an entry into all posseised by one tenant; but if there be several tenants possessed of the freehold, there must be several entries on the several tenants. 1 Lit. Abr. 515, 516. Special entry into a house with which lands are occupied, claiming the whole, is a good entry as to the whole house and lands. Ibid. If a husband enters to the use of his wife; or a man enters to the use of an infant, or any other, where the entry is lawful; this settles the possession before agreement of the parties: though it is otherwise where a person enters to the use of one whose entry is not lawful; for this vests nothing in him till agreement, and then he shall be a disseisor. 2 Danv. 787. If two jointenants are disseised, and the disseisor aliens, and one jointenant enters upon the alienee to the use of both; this settles the freehold in both of them Ibid. 788. But if one coparcener, &c. enters especially claiming the whole land, she gains the part of her companion by abatement; and it shall not settle any possession in the other. Co. Lit. 243.

The heir is to enter into lands descended to him, to entitle him to the profits. Co. Lit. 214. If a younger son enters on lands in fee, where the eldest son dies leaving issue; though many descents are cast in his line, yet the heirs of the eldest son may make an entry on the lands; but if the youngest son convey away the lands in fee, and the feoffee dies seised, they may not enter; nor may they enter where the younger son disseises the eldest, and dies seised. Co. Lit. 237, 244: Lit. fect. 397.

A tenant in tail hath issue two sons, and the eldest dies, leaving his wife perpetuum ensent of a son, and the younger brother enters, and then the wife of the eldest is delivered of a son, he may enter upon the younger brother. 2 Danv. 557. See title Descent.

An estate of freehold will not cease, without entry or claim: also a remainder of an estate of freehold cannot cease without entry, &c. no more than estate of freehold in possession. Co. Eliz. 360. A right of entry preserves a contingent remainder. 2 Lea. 35. And a grantee of a reversion, may enter for a condition broken. Plowd. 1/6.

A lessee must enter into lands demised to him; and though the lessor dies before the lessee enters, yet he may enter and if the lessee dies before entry, his executors or administrators may enter. The lessee may assign his term before entry, having interests termini; but he may not take a release to enlarge his estate; or bring trespass, &c. till actual entry. Though if there be words bargain and sell in a lease, &c. for consideration of money, the lessee or bargainee is in possession on executing the deed, to make a release, &c. Lit. 59, 454: Co. Lit. 46, 57, 270.

Where a lessor enters on his lessee for years, the rent is suspended. 1 Leon. 110. But without entry and expulsion, the lessee is not discharged of his rent to the lessor; unless it be where the lessor is attainted of treason, &c. then the rent is to be paid to the King, who is in possession without entry. Sid. 399: 1 Nelf. Abr. 706.

There is no need of entry to avoid an estate in case of a limitation, because thereby the estate is determined without entry or claim; and the law casts it upon the party to whom it is limited. If A. devises lands to B. and his heirs, and dies, it is in the devisee immediately; but till entry he cannot bring a possessory action: and where a possession vests without entry, a reversion will vest without claim. 2 Mol. Rep. 7, 8. A bare entry on another, without an expulsion, makes only a seisin; so that that the law will adjudge him in possession who bath the right. 3 Salk. 135.

Where a person is in a house with goods, &c. the house may be entered when the doors are open, to make execution. Cro. Eliz. 759. But it must be averred that the goods were in the house. Lutw. 1428, 1434. And a man cannot enter into a house, the doors being open to demand a debt, unless he aver that the debtor is within the house at the same time. Cro. El. 6, 8. So entry may be made on a tenant where rent is in arrear, to take a distress, &c. See titles Execution; Rent; Demand.

In order to regain possession of lands by entry, &c. the manner of entry is thus. If it be a house, and the door is open, you go into it, and say these words.—I do here enter, and take possession of this house. But if the door be shut, then set your foot on the groundsel, or against the door, and say the before words: and if it be land, then go upon the land, and say, I here enter and take possession of this land, &c. If another do it for you, he must say, I do here enter, &c. to the use of A. B. And it is necessary to make it before witnesses, and that a memorandum be made of it. Litt. 385; Co. Lit. 237, 238.

Where an ejectment will lie, the confession of lease, entry, and ouster is sufficient in all cases, except in the case of a fine with proclamations, in which case it is necessary to prove an actual entry; and the lessor of the plaintiff directing one to deliver a declaration to the tenant in possession will not amount to such an entry. See title Ejectment.

ENTRY AD COMMUNEM LEGEM. Is the writ of entry which lies where tenant for term of life, or for term of another's life, or by the curtesy, &c. aliens and dies, he in the reversion shall then have this writ against whomsoever is in possession of the land. New Nat. Br. 461.

ENTRY AD TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT. A writ of entry anciently brought against tenant for years, who held over his term, and thereby kept out the lessor; See New Nat. Brev. 447, 8. But an ejectment is now the common mode of proceeding; and by Stat. 4 Geo. 2 c. 28, tenants for term of years, &c. holding over after demand made, are subject to double rent. See titles Rent; Ejectment; Tenant.

ENTRY IN CASU CONSIMILI. Is a writ that lies for him in reversion by Stat. W. 2 c. 24, against tenant for life, or tenant by the curtesy, who aliens in fee, &c. See Casu Consimili.

ENTRY IN CASU PROVISIO. Where a tenant in dower aliens in fee, or for term of life, or of another's life; then he in the reversion shall have this writ, provided by the Stat. of Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 7; by which statute it is enacted, "that if a woman alien her dower in fee, or for life, the next heir, &c. shall recover by writ of entry."—See title Dower. And the writ may be brought against the tenant of the freehold of the land, on such alienation, during the life of the tenant in dower, &c. New Nat. Br. 456.

The above four writs of entry may all be brought either in the per, or in the cur or post.

ENTRY SINE ASSENSU CAPITULI. A writ of entry that lay where a bishop, abbot, &c. aliened lands or tene-ments of the church, without the assent of the Chapter or Convent. F. N. B. 195.

EQUITY.

ENURE. In law, to take place or be available; it is as much as efficiatur: as for example; a release made to tenant for life, shall enure, and be of force and effect to him in the reversion. Litt.

HODORBRICE, from the Sax. codor, a hedge, and brice, ruptura.] Hedge-breaking: in which sense it is mentioned in the laws of King Alfred cap. 45.

EORLE. Sax. for earl, &c. though made use of by the Danes for barons. See Earl.

EPIPHANY. Expences or gifts. Blount.

EPIPHANY. The day when the star appeared to the wise men at Christ's Nativity, generally called Twelfth Day.

EPISCOPALIA. Synodals, or other customary payments from the clergy to their bishop or diocesan; which were formerly collected by the rural deans, and by them transmitted to the bishop.—Mon. Ang. tom 3 pag 61. These customary payments have been otherwise called onus episcopale; and were remitted by special privilege to free churches and chapels of the King's foundation, which were exempt from episcopal jurisdiction. Ken. Gloss.

EPISCOPUS PUERORUM. It was a custom in former times, that some lay person about a certain feast should plait his hair, and put on the garments of a bishop, and in them exercise episcopal jurisdiction, and do several ludicrous actions, for which reason he was called bishop of the boys: and this custom obtained here long after several constitutions were made to abolish it. Mon. Ang. tom. 3 pag. 169.

EQUALITY. The law delights in equality; so that when a charge is made upon one, the law ought to bear it, he shall have relief against the law. Rep 25. And where a man leaves a power to his wife to give an estate among three daughters, in such case, as she shall think fit it has been held that the law is equally; unless good reason be given to the contrary. Cane. 256. See title Equity.

In equity it is quasi, quasi equitas. See Francis's Maxims, fol. 10. EQUUS AURATUS. A knight, or a knightly; because anciently none but knights were allowed to gild their armour with gold, but in modern times used by the heralds than lawyers, for equus is not a word in our law for knight, but milites and formerly Chevaliers. 4 Inst. 5.

EQUITY.

(See generally in the CHANCERY.)

ÆQUITAS; quasi, æquitas.] Is defined to be a correction, or qualification of the law, generally made in that part wherein it faileth, or is too severe. In other words "the correction of that wherein the law, by reason of its universality, is deficient." 1 Comm. 62. It likewise signifies the extension of the words of the law to cases unexpressed, yet having the same reason; so that where one thing is enacted by statute, all other things are enacted that are of the like degree: for example; the statute of Glouc. gives action of waste against him that holds lands for life or years; and by the equity thereof, a man shall have action of waste against a tenant that holds but for one year, or half-year, which is without the words of the act, but within the meaning of it; and the words that enact the one, by equity enact the other. Term's de Ley.

EQUITY.

So that Equity is of two kinds; the one doth abridge and take from the letter of the law; and the other enlarge and add thereto. Æquitas est perfecta quædam ratio, quæ scriptum interpretatur et emendat. Co. Lit. 24. And statutes may be construed according to equity; especially where they give remedy for wrong, or are for expedition of justice, &c. Co. Lit. 24, 54, 76: 2 Inst. 106, 107. &c.

A Court of Equity cannot now be created by the King, but the same must be done by Act of Parliament.

The distinction between Law and Equity, as administered in different courts, is not at present known, nor seems to have ever been known, in any other country than England at any time.—With us the Aula regia which was anciently the supreme court of judicature, undoubtedly administered equal justice according to the rules of both or either, as the case might chance to require: and, when that was broken to pieces, the idea of a Court of Equity, as distinguished from a Court of Law, did not subsist in the original plan of partition. For though equity is mentioned by Bracton l. 2. c. 7. pl. 23, as a thing contrasted to strict law, yet neither in that writer, nor in Glanvill or Pleta, nor yet in Britton, (composed under the auspices and in the name of Edward I. and treating particularly of courts and their several jurisdictions,) is there a syllable to be found relating to the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery. It seems therefore probable, that when the courts of law, proceeding merely upon the ground of the King's original writs, and confining themselves strictly to that bottom, gave a harsh or imperfect judgment, the application for redress used to be to the King in person assisted by his privy council; (from whence also arose the jurisdiction of the court of Requests, which was virtually abolished by Stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10;) and they were wont to refer the matter either to the Chancellor and a select committee, or by degrees to the Chancellor only, who mitigated the severity, or supplied the defects of the judgments pronounced in the courts of law, upon weighing the circumstances of the case. This was the custom not only among our Saxon ancestors, before the institution of the Aula regia, but also after its dissolution, in the reign of King Edward I. and perhaps during its continuance, in that of Henry II. Ll. Ed. c. 2: Lamb. Arch. 59.

When, about the end of the reign of King Edward III. uses of land were introduced, and though totally discountenanced by the courts of Common law, were considered as fiduciary deposits and binding in conscience by the clergy, the separate jurisdiction of the Chancery as a court of equity began to be established. Specim. Gloss. 106: 1 Lev. 242; John Walsbam, who was bishop of Salisbury and Chancellor to King Richard I. (by a strained interpretation of the statute of Westm. 2. [13 E. 1. c. 24], enabling the clerks in chancery to form new writs according to the special circumstances of each case,) devised the writ of subpœna, returnable in the court of Chancery only, to make the feeſee to ſes accountable to his ceteris que ſeſe: which proceſs was afterwards extended to other matters wholly determinable at the Common law, upon fictitious ſuggeſtions; for which therefore the Chancellor himſelf is by Stat. 17 Rich. 2. c. 6, directed to give damages to the party unjuſtly aggrieved. But as the Clergy, had long attempted to turn their eccleſiaſtical courts into courts of equity, by entertaining ſuits pro laſſione fidei, as a ſpiritual offence againſt conſcience, in caſe of non-payment of debts or any breach of civil contracts; till checked by the Conſtitutions of Clarendon (10 Hen. 2. c. 15); therefore probably the eccleſiaſtical chancellorſ, who then held the ſeal, were remiſs in abridging their own new acquired juřiſdiction; eſpecially as the ſpiritual courts continued to graſp at the ſame authority as before, till finally prohibited by the unanimous concurrence of all the judges; however, it appears from the Parliament rolls, that in the reigns of Henry IV. and V. the Commons were repeatedly urgent to have the writ of ſubpœna entirely ſuppreſſed, as being a novelty deviſed againſt the form of the Common law. But though the ſtatute 4 Hen. 4. c. 23, was paſſed, whereby judgments at law are declared irrevocable, unleſs by attainr or writ of error, yet in Edward IV.'s time, the proceſs by bill and ſubpœna was become the daily praſtice of the Court, though it's juřiſdiction was not then nearly ſo extenſive as at preſent. Rot. Parl. 14 Ed. 4. no. 33.

In the time of Lord Chancellor Elleſmere, (A. D. 1616) aroſe that notable diſpute between the Courts of law and equity, ſet on foot by Sir Edward Coke, then Chief Juſtice of the court of King's Bench; whether a Court of equity could give relief after or againſt a judgment at the Common law. This conteſt was ſo warmly carried on, that indiſtinctments were preferred againſt the ſuitors, the ſolicitors, the counſel and even a Maſter in chancery, for having incurred a præmunire by queſtioning in a Court of equity a judgment in the court of King's Bench, obtained by groſs fraud and impoſition. This matter being brought before the King, was by him referred to his learned counſel for their advice and opinion; who reported ſo ſtrongly in favour of the courts of equity, that his majesty gave judgment on their behalf. Whitlock of Parl. 2, 390: 1 Ch. Rep. Append. 11.

Lord Bacon who ſucceeded Lord Elleſmere, reduced the praſtice of the court into a more regular ſyſtem; his ſucceſſors in the reign of Charles I. did little to improve upon his plan; till the appointment of Sir Hentage Finch in 1673, who became afterwards earl of Nottingham. He was a perſon of the greateſt abilities and moſt uncorrupted integrity; a thorough maſter and zealous defender of the laws and conſtitution of his country; and endowed with a pervading genius that enabled him to diſcover and to purſue the true ſpirit of juſtice, notwithſtanding the embarraſſments raiſed by the narrow and technical notions which then prevailed in the courts of law, and the imperfect ideas of redreſs which had poſſeſſed the courts of Equity. The reaſon and neceſſities of mankind, ariſing from the great change in property by the extension of trade and the abolition of military tenures, co-operated in eſtabliſhing his plan, and enabling him in the courſe of nine years to build a ſyſtem of juřiſprudence and juřiſdiction, upon wide and national foundations which have alſo been extended, and improved by many great men, who have ſince preſided in chancery. See 3 Comm 50—56.

The ſame juřiſdiction is exerciſed, and the ſame ſyſtem of redreſs purſued, in the Equity-Court of the Exchequer; with a diſtinction however as to ſome few matters, peculiar to each tribunal, and in which the other cannot interfere.

Upon the abolition of the court of Wards, the care, which the Crown was bound to take as guardian of its Infant Tenants, was totally extinguished in every feudal view; but devolved to the King in his court of Chancery, together with the general protection of all other infants in the kingdom. F. N. B. 47.—When therefore a fatherless child has no other guardian, the Court of Chancery has a right to appoint one, and from all proceedings relative thereto, an appeal lies to the House of Lords. The Court of Exchequer can only appoint a guardian ad litem, to manage the defence of the infant if a suit be commenced against him; a power which is incident to the jurisdiction of every court of justice. Cro. Jac. 641: 2 Lev. 163: T. Jun. 90. But when the interest of a minor comes before the court judicially, in the progress of a cause, or upon a bill for that purpose filed, either tribunal indifferently will take care of the property of the infant.

As to Idiot and Lunatic, the king himself used formerly to commit the custody of them to proper Committees, in every particular case; but now, to avoid solicitation and the very shadow of undue partiality, a warrant is issued by the King under his royal sign manual to the Chancellor, to perform this office for him. and if he acts improperly in granting such custodies, the complaint must be made to the King himself in council. 3 P. Wms. 108. See Rog. B. 267. But the previous proceedings on the commission, to enquire whether or no the party be an idiot or a lunatic, are on the law-side of the Court of Chancery, and can only be redressed (if erroneous) by writ of error in the regular course of law.

The king, as parens patriæ, has the general superintendence of all Charities, which he exercises by the Chancellor. And, therefore, when necessary, the Attorney General, at the relation of some informant, (who is usually called the relator) files ex officio an information in the court of Chancery to have the charity properly established.

By Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4, authority is given to the lord Chancellor, and to the Chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, respectively, to grant commissions under their several seals, to enquire into any abuses of charitable donations, and rectify the same by decree, which may be reviewed in the respective courts of the several chancellors, upon exceptions taken thereto. But, though this is done in the petty bag office in the court of Chancery because the commission is there returned, it is not a proceeding at Common-law, but treated as an original cause in the court of equity. The evidence below is not taken down in writing, and the respondent in his answer to the exceptions may allege what new matter he pleads, upon which they go to proof, and examine witnesses in writing upon all the matters in issue: and the court may decree the respondent to pay all the costs, though no such authority is given by the statute. And as it is thus considered as an original cause throughout, an appeal lies of course from the Chancellor's decree to the House of Peers, notwithstanding any loose opinions to the contrary. Duke's Char. Uses 62, 128. 2 Vern. 248.

By the several statutes relating to Bankrupts, a summary jurisdiction is given to the chancellor, in many matters consequential or previous to the commissions thereby directed to be issued, from which the bankrupts give no appeal.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery does not however extend to some cases of common law, and he had in the Exchequer. His jurisdiction can be brought in Chancery, for such matters, which are given to the King by the Statute, respecting distributions of the King, as direct any act to be done by him, or under any decree disposing of or affecting his property, and even in cases where he is a royal witness, which titles must be determined in the Court of Exchequer, as a court of revenue; which alone has power over the King's treasure, and the officers employed in its management, unless where it properly belongs to the duchy court of Lancaster.

In all other matters, what is said of the court of Equity in the Court of Chancery will be equally applicable to the other courts of Equity. Whatever difference there may be in the forms of practice, it arises from the different constitution of their officers.—See 3 Comm. 426—429.

The learned Commentator then enters into a brief but comprehensive view of the general nature of Equity, to shew that in our courts it is not contrary to, but consistent with, law; a position which perhaps will be best understood by further explanation of the jurisdiction exercised by courts of equity, either as affixant to, concurrent with, or exclusive of the jurisdiction of the courts of Common-law, which is here done in an abridgment from Loublanque's Treatise of Equity pp. 10. &c. in n.

EQUITY is assistant to the jurisdiction of the Courts of law, 1st. By removing legal impediments to the fair decision of a question depending in courts of law. 2dly. By compelling a discovery which may enable them to decide. 3dly. By perpetuating testimony, when in danger of being lost, before the matter to which it relates can be made the subject of judicial investigation. It may also be said to be assistant, by rendering the judgments of courts of law effective, as by providing for the safety of property in dispute pending a litigation; and by counteracting fraudulent judgments, &c.; and by putting a bound to vexatious and oppressive litigation.—It exercises a concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law, in most cases of fraud, accident, mistake, account, partition, and power. It claims an exclusive jurisdiction, in all matters of trust, and confidence; and wherever, upon the principles of universal justice, the interference of a court of judicature is necessary to prevent a wrong, and the positive law is silent. See Mifson's Treatise on the Pleadings in Chancery.

To pursue this division of the jurisdiction of Courts of Equity with that minuteness which is necessary to a particular acquaintance with its powers, would lead to an investigation too extensive. Some short notice shall be taken of the general objection that is urged against the claims of Courts of Equity to a concurrence of jurisdiction in those cases with Courts of law. This concurrence of jurisdiction may, in the greater number of cases in which it is exercised, be justified by the propriety of preventing a multiplicity of suits; for as the mode of proceeding in courts of law requires the plaintiff to establish his case, without enabling him to draw the necessary evidence from the examination of the defendant, justice could never be attained at law in these cases where the principal facts to be proved by one party are confined to the knowledge of the other party. In such cases, therefore, it becomes necessary for the party, in want of such evidence, to resort to the extraordinary powers of a Court of Equity, which will compel the necessary discovery; and the court, having acquired cognizance of the suit, for the purpose of discovery, will entertain it, for the purpose of relief, in most cases of fraud, account, accident, and mistake; and for other reasons will entertain suits for partition and dower, though discovery be not necessary to the plaintiff's case.

The case (and, it seems, the only case) in which fraud cannot be relieved against in equity, concurrently with courts of law, though discovery be sought, is the case of fraud, in obtaining a will; which, since the case of Kerrick v. Dransby, 3 Brown's Parl. Cas. 358, is constantly referred to a court of law in the shape of an issue, deussavit vel non. That courts of equity have a concurrence of jurisdiction with courts of law, in all other matters of fraud; See White v. Hillyer, Pr. Ch. 14; Hungerford v. Enle, 2 Vern. 251; Cole v. Woodliff, 2 Pr. Wms. 156; Stout v. Baillie, 4 P. Wms. 220; 2 Comyn's Digest, titles Chancery; Prud.

The jurisdiction exercised by Courts of Equity in matters of account, is, in many cases, bounded by the discovery: as where a suit is instituted for an account of waste of timber, without praying an injunction, the plaintiff cannot have a decree for relief. Jesus College v. Bloom, 3 Atk. 262; Piers v. Piers, 1 Vez. 521. But where the bill seeks an account of ore dug, the court will decree it, (Bishop of Winchester v. Knight, 1 P. Wms. 406;) because the working of a mine is a kind of trade. Story v. Lord Windsor, 2 Atk. 630. Yet, even in that case, the plaintiff must shew a possession. Sayer v. Pierce, 1 Vez. 232. Neither will Equity, in all cases, decree an account of mesne profits; for where a man has title to the possession of lands, and makes an entry, whereby he becomes entitled to damages at law for the time that possession was detained from him, he shall not after his entry, turn that action at law into a suit in equity, and bring a bill for an account of the profits, except in the case of an infant, or some other very particular circumstances. Tily v. Bridges, Pr. Ch. 252; Owen v. Arice, 1 Ch. Rep. 17. The particular circumstances excepted by the Lord Keeper, in laying down this rule, extend to all those cases, which involve an equity, which the plaintiff cannot make available at law. Cowdrey v. Hall, 2 Ch. Rep. 134; Duke of Bolton v. Deane, Pr. Ch. 5, 6; Dorres v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 129, 30; Townsend v. Alder, 3 Atk. 336; Norton v. Precker, 1 Atk. 524; See also Curtis v. Curtis, Rolls, 2 Bro. C. R. 622.

The jurisdiction exercised by our courts of equity, in most cases of accident, presents a very striking instance of their anxiety to prevent innovation on the jurisdiction of courts of law: their interference being generally founded on some circumstance, which prevents the party being relievable at law; as where a bond or other instrument or security, is lost; equity will interfere, by compelling a discovery from the defendant; and will relieve upon such discovery; but the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief, upon a mere suggestion that the bond, instrument, or security, is lost; but is required, for the purpose of relief, to annex to his bill, an affidavit to such effect: 3 Atk. 17; Misford's Treatise 112. And, as a further security against innovation, it must appear that the loss of the deed or instrument obstructs the plaintiff in seeking relief at law: for the loss of a deed is not always a ground to come into a Court of Equity for relief; if there was no more in the case, although he is entitled to have a discovery of that, whether lost or not, courts of law, admit evidence of the loss of a deed; proving the existence of it and its contents, just as a Court of Equity does. There are two grounds to come into equity for relief, annexing an affidavit to the bill. First, where the deed is destroyed or concealed by the defendant, and whenever that is the case, the plaintiff is intitled to have relief in this court, upon the reason in Lord Hunston's case. Hab. 209. Another is, where the plaintiff cannot recover at law, without making profert of the deed in pleading at law. Whitfield v. Fauget, 1 Vez. 392; 2 Atk. 61.

The judgment of the Court of King's Bench in Reed v. Brookman, (3 Tim. R.p. 151,) seems to have relieved the obligee from the necessity of coming into equity, upon the mere circumstance of the bond or instrument being lost; by allowing him to state such circumstances in his declaration, as a reason for not making profert of it; but, upon this case being cited in Chancery as furnishing an objection to the plaintiff's suit in equity, he being relievable at law, Lord Thurlow observed, that the Court of King's Bench having determined to give relief in a case formerly relievable only in equity was not a reason for excluding the ancient, peculiar, and at least concurrent jurisdiction of courts of equity. Atkinson v. Leonard, 3 Bro. C. R. 218. This concurrence of jurisdiction as to this kind of accident, may therefore be considered to extend to all cases, in which the deed, or instrument has been destroyed, or is concealed by the defendant, or has been lost by the plaintiff; though of the contents of such instrument the plaintiff has other evidence, of which he might avail himself at law. But where the relief sought in equity is upon the loss of a bill of exchange, or promissory note, the plaintiff must, by his bill, offer to give security, as an indemnity to the defendant, against any demand being made upon him in respect of such lost bill or note. Wainley v. Child, 1 Vez. 341.

To establish the origin of any branch of legal or equitable jurisdiction is always difficult, and seldom necessary, provided the exercise of such jurisdiction is sanctioned by the dictates of reason, and found to be conducive to the ends of substantial justice; and such will appear to be the nature and tendency of the jurisdiction exercised by our courts of equity, in cases of Partition, upon a reference to the difficulties which obstructed the mode of proceeding at Common-law: and though many of those difficulties are removed by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 31; yet still, if the parties are in any degree complicated, it is extremely difficult to proceed at law, or where the tenants in possession are seized of particular estates only; for the persons entitled in remainder cannot be bound by the judgment, in a writ of partition. Misford's Treatise p. 110. Neither can a feme covert be bound by partition by writ. Co. Litt. 166 a. which, it should seem, she may be by decree and commission in equity. Martyn v. Parnman, 1 Ch. Rep. 125: On these considerations, and the almost constant occasion that the parties have for a discovery, is founded this branch of equitable equitable jurisdiction; in the exercise of which our courts of equity are constantly governed by an anxious attention to the legal title of the plaintiff: for though, at law, it be sufficient to allege seisin, yet, in equity the plaintiff must shew his title. Cartwright v. Pulney, 2 Ark. 380. And if the defendant contest the legal title, the court will dismiss the bill. Bishop of Ely v. Kenrick, Burgh. 322. but see Satter v. Gerrard, Ambler 236. And as a further mean to prevent innovation and vexatious suits, courts of equity will never allow costs on bills of partition; courts of law allowing none on the proceeding by writ. Mercalf v. Beckwith, 2 P. Wms. 376.—Misford's Treatise 111. And this rule prevails, notwithstanding the unequal interests of the parties. Parker v. Gerard, Ambler 236.—see on this subject of Partition in Equity also 1 Infl. 169 l. and the notes there; which are very ingeniously combated, we may say refuted, by Mr. Foubert; who sums up the result in the foregoing paragraph.

The jurisdiction of our courts of equity, in matters of Dower, for the purpose of assisting the widow with a discovery of the lands or title deeds, or of removing impediments to her rendering her legal title available at law, has never been doubted. But it has been questioned, whether equity could give relief in those cases, in which there appeared to be no obstacle to her legal remedy. Wallis v. Everard, 3 Ch. R. 87. It seems now, however to be settled, that the widow labours under so many disadvantages at law, from the embarrassments of such terms, &c. that she is fully entitled to every assistance that a Court of Equity can give her, not only in paving the way for her, to establish her right at law, but also by giving complete relief when the right is ascertained. Guns v. Carter, 2 Brown C. R. 634; and Lucas v. Calcraft, there cited. And in the exercise of this jurisdiction, courts of equity will even enforce a discovery against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, Williams v. Lambie, 3 Bro. Ch. Rep. 264. And though the widow should die before she had established her right to dower, equity will, in favour of her personal representatives, decree an account of the rents and profits of the lands, of which she afterwards appeared dowable.

With respect to the exclusive jurisdiction exercised by our courts of equity, in matters of trust, and in those cases where the principles of substantial justice entitle the party to relief, but the positive law is silent, it seems impossible to define with exactness its boundaries, or to enumerate with precision its various principles. In the course of this work, however, a variety of instances appear, from which the wisdom of this branch of equitable jurisdiction will be fully and satisfactorily established, and to which at present it may be sufficient to refer. See particularly titles Chancery; Fraud; Trust, &c. &c.

The essential difference (says Blackstone) between Law and Equity principally consists in the different modes of administering justice in each, in the mode of proof, the mode of trial, and the mode of relief. Upon these, and upon two other accidental grounds of jurisdiction, viz. the true construction of promises for money lent and the form and effect of a trust or secret use, hath been principally erected that structure of jurisprudence, which prevails in our courts of equity, and is inwardly bottomed upon the same substantial foundations as the system of the courts of Common-law.

As to the mode of proof. When facts, or their leading circumstances, rest only in the knowledge of the party, a court of equity applies itself to his conscience, and purges him upon oath with regard to the truth of the transaction; and, that being once discovered, the judgment is the same, in equity as it would have been at law. But, for want of this discovery at law, the courts of equity have acquired a concurrent jurisdiction with every other court in all matters of account. 1 Chan. C. 57. As incident to accounts, they take a concurrent cognizance of the administration of personal assets. 2 P. Wms. 145; Consequently of debts, legacies, the distribution of the residue, and the conduct of executors and administrators. 2 Chan. C. 152. As incident to accounts, they also take the concurrent jurisdiction of tithes, and all questions relating thereto. 1 Eq. C. Ab. 367; of all dealings in partnership, 2 Vern. 277; and many other mercantile transactions; and so of bailiffs, receivers, factors and agents. Ibid. 638.

From the same fruitful source, the compulsive discovery upon oath, the courts of equity have acquired a jurisdiction over almost all matters of fraud. 2 Chan. C. 46; all matters in the private knowledge of the party, which though concealed, are binding in conscience; and all judgments at law, obtained through such fraud or concealment. And this not by impeaching or reversing the judgment itself, but by prohibiting the plaintiff from taking an advantage of a judgment, obtained by suppressing the truth. 3 P. Wms. 148; Year book, 22 Ed. IV. 37. p. 21. See title Discovery.

The mode of trial, is by interrogatories administered to the witnesses, upon which their depositions are taken in writing, wherever they happen to reside. If therefore the cause arises in a foreign country, and the witnesses reside upon the spot; if, in causes arising in England, the witnesses are abroad, or shortly to leave the kingdom; or if the witnesses residing at home are aged or infirm; any of these cases lays a ground for a court of equity to grant a commission to examine them, and (in consequence) to exercise the same jurisdiction, which might have been exercised at law, if the witnesses could probably attend. See title Depositions.

With respect to the mode of relief. The want of a more specific remedy, than can be obtained in the courts of law, gives a concurrent jurisdiction to a Court of Equity in a great variety of cases. To instance in executory agreements. A Court of Equity will compel them to be carried into strict execution, unless where it is improper or impossible; instead of giving damages for their non-performance. Eq. Ca. Ab. 16. And hence a fiction is established, that what ought to be done shall be considered as being actually done, and shall relate back to the time when it ought to have been done originally; and this fiction is so closely pursued through all its consequences, that it necessarily branches out into many rules of jurisprudence, which form a certain regular system. 3 P. Wms. 215. So, of waste, and other similar injuries, a Court of Equity takes a concurrent cognizance, in order to prevent them by injunction. 1 Ch. Rep. 14; 2 Ch. C. 32. Over questions that may be tried at law, in a great multiplicity of actions, a Court of Equity assumes a jurisdiction, to prevent the expence and vexation of endless litigation and suits. 1 Vern. 308: Pic. Ch. 261; 1 P. Wms. 672; Str. 404. In various kinds kinds of fraud it assumes a concurrent jurisdiction, not only for the sake of a discovery but of a more extensive and specific relief. 2 P. Wms. 156; as by setting aside fraudulent deeds, decreeing re-conveyances, or directing an absolute conveyance merely to stand as a security. 1 Vern. 32; 1 P. Wms. 239; 1 Vern. 237; 2 Vern. 84. and thus, lastly, for the sake of a more beneficial and complete relief by decreeing a sale of lands, a Court of Equity holds plea of all debts, incumbrances, and charges, that may affect it or issue thereout. 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 337.

As to the construction of securities for money lent; when courts of Equity held the penalty of a bond to be the form, and that in substance it was only as a pledge to secure the repayment of the sum boni fide advanced with a proper compensation for the use, they laid the foundation of a regular series of determinations, which have settled the doctrine of personal pledges or securities, and are equally applicable to mortgages of real property. The mortgagor continues owner of the land, the mortgagee of the money lent upon it: but this ownership is mutually transferred, and the mortgagor is barred from redemption, if, when called upon by the mortgagee, he does not redeem within a time limited by the Court; or he may, when out of possession, be barred, by length of time, by analogy to the statute of limitations. See also titles Bond; Mortgage; Penalty.

The form of a Trust, or second use, gives the courts of Equity an exclusive jurisdiction, as to the subject matter of all settlements and devises in that form, and of all the long terms created in the present complicated mode of conveyancing. This is a very ample source of jurisdiction: but the trust is governed by very nearly the same rules, as would govern the estate in a court of law, if no trustee was interposed; 2 P. Wms. 645, 668, 9. And, by a regular positive system established in the courts of Equity, the doctrine of trusts is now reduced to as great a certainty as that of legal estates in the courts of Common-law. See 3 Comm. 436—440.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION, en mortgages. If where money is due on a mortgage, the mortgagee is desirous to bar the equity of redemption, he may oblige the mortgagor either to pay the money or to be foreclosed of his equity; which is done by proceedings in the court of Chancery. But the Chancery cannot shorten the time of payment of the mortgage money, where it is limited by express covenant; though it may lengthen it: and then upon non payment, the practice is to foreclose the equity of redemption of the mortgagor. 2 Vent. 364.

To foreclose the Equity, a bill in Chancery is exhibited; to which an answer is put in, and a decree being obtained, a Master in Chancery is to certify what is due for principal, interest and costs, which is to be paid at a time prescribed by the decree, whereupon the premises are to be reconveyed to the mortgagor; or, in default of payment, the mortgagor is ordered to be foreclosed from all equity of redemption, and to convey the premises absolutely to the mortgagee.

A fine or non-claim will bar equity of redemption: but in a common mortgage, a covenant to restrain it shall not be regarded in Chancery. 2 Vent. 365. If the condition of a mortgage is, that the mortgagor only should redeem during life, or that he and the heirs of his body shall do it; yet the general heir shall have the equity of redemption, for if the principal and interest be offered, the land is free. 1 Vern. 30, 190. And it is held, though a bond be conditioned, that if the money be not paid at such a time, then for a further sum the mortgagee shall have the land absolutely, as a purchaser, &c. in such case a man may also redeem. Ibid. 488.—See at large this Dict. title Mortgage.

EQUIVALENT, Commissioners are appointed by statute to examine and state the debts due to Scotland on the Union by way of equivalent; and provision is made for payment of the same by a yearly annuity, &c. Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 25. See title Scotland.

EQUUS COOPERTUS, A horse equipped with saddle and furniture. Ing. 16 E. 1.

ERIACH. By the Irish Brehon law, in case of murder, the brehon or judge compounded between the murderer and the friends of the deceased who prosecuted, by causing the malefactor to give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that was slain, a recompence, which was called an eria b. 4 Comm. 313.

ERMINE OR ERMINAGE STREET, See Walling Street.

ERMINS, From the Fr. ermine.] A fur of great value, much used in robes of state. See title Custom.

ERN, The names of places ending in Ern, are said to imply a melancholy situation; from the Sax. Ern, i. e. Locus Sæcetus.

ERNES, The loose scattered ears of corn, that are left on the ground, after the binding or cocking of it. It is derived from the old Teutonic Ernde, Harvest; Ernen, to cut or mow corn: hence to ern is in some places to glean. Kant's Gloss.

ERRANT, Itin. errant.] Is applied to justices of the circuit, and bailiffs at large, &c. See Eyre.

ERRATICUM. A wail, or stray; an erring or wandering beast. Cust. l. Norm. d. D. 1080.

ERROR. Fr. Erreur.]

Signifies something wrong in pleading or process, &c. whereupon a writ is brought for remedy thereof, called a Writ of Error; in Latin, de errore corrigends.

A Writ of error is a commission to judges of a superior court, by which they are authorized to examine the record, upon which a judgment was given in an inferior court, and on such examination to affirm or reverse the same, according to law. Jenk. Rep. 25; 2 Ld. 40; Yelv. 202; Haidw. 340. But yet if by the writ of error the plaintiff therein may recover, or be restored to any thing, it may be released by the name of an action. Co. Lit. 288 b. See Post. Div. II. V. There is also a writ of error to reverse a fine, and which must be prosecuted within twenty years by Stat. 10 & 11 H. 3. c. 14. See titles Fine and Recovery.

A Writ of error to some superior Court of Appeal is the principal method of redress for erroneous judgments in the King's Courts of record, having power to hold plea of debt or trespass above 40s.—It lies for some supposed mistake in the proceedings of such Court; for, to amend errors in a case court, not of record, a writ of false judgment lies. Fines L. 484. The writ of error only lies upon matter of law, arising on the face of the proceedings; so that no evidence is required to substantiate or support it, there being no method of reversing an error in the determination of facts, but by an attain or a new trial, to correct the mistakes of the former verdict. See 3 Lit. P. C. 8vo. ed. 515.

ERROR.

Formerly suitors were much perplexed by writs of error brought upon very slight and trivial grounds; as mis-spellings and other mistakes of the clerks, all which are now effectually helped by the statutes of amendment and jeofails; and particularly by Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 13, it is enacted, that all writs of error wherein there shall be any variance from the original record, or other defect, may be amended by the Court, and made agreeable to the record, and where any verdict hath been given in any action, suit, &c. in any of the Courts at Westminster or other court of record, the judgment thereon shall not be stayed or reversed for any defect or fault in form or substance in any bill, writ, &c. or for variance in any such writs from the declaration and other proceedings; but this statute not to extend, to any appeal of felony or process, on indictment information and appeal. Such writ of error to be brought and prosecuted with effect within twenty years; by Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 14.—Stat. 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 8, enacts that in all actions, real, personal or mixed, the death of either party between verdict and judgment shall not be alledged for error.—By Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 80, imposing a stamp-duty on warrants of attorney, it is provided that no action shall be staid, nor any judgment, sentence, &c. reversed by reason of omission or defect in the entering, or filing of record, the memorandum or minute directed. By these and other statutes all trifling exceptions are so thoroughly guarded against, that writs of error cannot now be maintained but for some material mistake assigned. See titles Amendment; Judgment.

If a writ of error be brought to reverse any judgment of an inferior Court of record where the damages are less than 10*l*.; or if it is brought to reverse the judgment of any superior court after verdict, he that brings the writ, or that is plaintiff in error must (except in some peculiar cases) find substantial bail, to prevent delays by frivolous pretences of appeal; and for securing payment of costs and damages. See title Costs. And as to bail in such cases, see Stat. 3 & 4 C. 1. c. 8; 13 C. 2. ft. 2. c. 2; 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 8; 19 Geo. 3. c. 70.

A writ of error lies from the inferior courts of record in England into the King's Bench, and not into the Common Pleas. Finch L. 480; D. 250. And before Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 28, it lay from the King's Bench in T. Land to the King's Bench in England. It likewise may be brought from the Common Pleas at Westm. etc. to the King's Bench, and then from the King's Bench the cause is removable to the House of Lords. From proceedings on the law side of the Exchequer, a writ of error lies into the Court of Exchequer Chamber, before the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, and the Judges of K. B. and C. P. and from thence it lies to the House of Peers. From proceedings in K. B. in debt, detinue, covenant, account, case, distressment or treasuries originally begun there by bill (except where the King is a party) it lies to the Exchequer Chamber, before the Justices of C. P. and Barons of the Exchequer; and from thence also to the House of Lords, Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8.—But where the proceedings in K. B. do not first commence therein by bill, but by original writ sued out of Chancery, this takes the case out of the general rule laid down by the statute; so that the writ of error then lies without any intermediate stage of appeal directly to the House of Lords, the dernier resort for the ultimate decision of every civil action. 1 Ro. Rep. 264; 1 Sid. 424; 1 Saund. 346; Carth. 180;

Comb. 295.—Each Court of Appeal in their respective stages may, upon hearing the matter of law in which the error is assigned, reverse or affirm the judgment of the inferior courts; but none of them are final save only the House of Peers, to whose judicial decisions all other tribunals must therefore submit and conform their own. See 3 Comm. 406—411.

In criminal cases also, judgments may be reversed by writ of error; which lies from all inferior criminal jurisdictions to the Court of K. B. and from K. B. to the House of Peers: It may be brought for notorious mistakes in the judgment or other parts of the record; as where a man is found guilty of perjury and receives the judgment of felony, or for other less palpable errors such as any irregularity, omission, or want of form in the process of outlawry or proclamations; the want of a proper addition to the defendant's name, according to the statute (see title Abatement); for not properly naming the sheriff, or other officer of the court, or not duly describing where his county court was held: for laying an offence committed in the time of the late King, to be done against the peace of the present; and for many other similar causes, which (though allowed out of tenderness to life and liberty) are not much to the credit or advantage of national justice. See titles Outlawry; Indictment, &c.

These writs of error to reverse judgments in cases of misdemeanors, are not to be allowed of course, but on sufficient probable cause shewn to the Attorney General, and then they are understood to be grantable of common right, et ex debito j. fustice. But writs of error to reverse attainders in capital cases are allowed only ex gratia; and not without express warrant under the King's sign manual, or at least by the consent of the Attorney General. 1 Vern. 170, 5. Those therefore can rarely be brought by the party himself, especially where he is attainted for an offence against the State; but they may be brought by his heir or executor after his death. But the easier and more effectual way, is to reverse such attainder by Act of Parliament. See titles Attainder; Judgment.

Having said thus much generally, we may now proceed particularly to enquire,

- I. 1. By whom, against whom; and 2. at what time, the Writ may be brought.
- II. 1. In what Cases it will lie; and 2. how it is to be brought.
- III. In what Court it is to be brought.
- IV. How the error is to be assigned; and what may be assigned for Error. See a title II. 1.
- V. What Defence may be made by a Defendant in Error.
- VI. Of the Judgment to be given on a Writ of Error.

I. 1. Any person damaged by error in record, or that may be supposed to be injured by it, may bring a writ of error to reverse it, whether he be party or no; but principal and bail cannot join in a writ of error. And where there are several defendants, if one of them reverse the errors, he may be summoned and reversed, and the others may reverse the judgment. 6 Rep. 26; Hob. 72.

Judgment against two, one brought a writ of error, and held it should be quashed with costs; that it could not be amended, and that if the other party would not join, the defendant defendant who chose to bring a writ of error, must proceed by summons and severance. Hardw. 135, 136.

No person can reverse a thing for error, unless the error be to his prejudice. 5 Rep. 38. One in remainder may have writ of error upon judgment given against tenant in tail: But he in reversion or remainder shall not have writ of error, in the life-time of tenant for life, on judgment given against such tenant, because they cannot be parties grieved in his time. 2 Nelf. Abr. 712.

No person can bring a writ of error to reverse a judgment who was not party or privy to the record, or who was not injured by the judgment, and therefore to receive advantage by the reversal thereof. 1 Roll. Abr. 747: Dyer 90.

So a writ of error does not lie against any but him, who is party or privy to the first judgment, his heirs, executors, or administrators. 1 Roll. Abr. 747: Dyer 90.

And therefore, on a judgment for recovery of land, the writ must be brought against him who was party to the judgment, although he hath nothing in the land, and not against the tenant; and on such writ the judgment may be reversed; but there must go a fiere facias against all the tenants. 1 Roll. Abr. 749: 1 Roll. K. b. 302.

Upon this rule, that none shall have a writ of error to reverse a judgment, but he who is privy to, or hath some prejudice thereby, it hath been resolved, that if one hath lands on the part of his mother, and loseth them by erroneous judgment, and dies, the heir of the part or the mother shall have the writ of error. 1 Leon. 261: 2 Sid. 50. See Owen, 68: Glab. 377.

So the younger son, when intitled to the land by the custom of Borough English, shall bring the writ of error, and not the heir at Common law: for this remedy descends with the land. Owen, 68: 1 Leon. 261: 4 Leon. 5.

So if there be an erroneous judgment, in the case of tenant in tail female, the issue female, and not the son, shall bring a writ of error. Dyer 90: 1 Leon. 261: 1 Roll. Abr. 747.

So if a man settles land to the use of himself and the heirs of his body, the remainder to his own right heirs, and dies, leaving issue only a daughter, who levies a fine, and dies without issue, and J. S. brings a writ of error as a cousin and collateral heir of the daughter, yet he shall never reverse the fine; for there could no right descend to him from the daughter, because she had but an estate tail, which determined by her death without issue; and it doeth not appear, that the remainder in fee was in the daughter as right heir, wherefore J. S. shall not reverse the fine, quia de non apparentibus & non existentibus eadem est ratio, especially in a court of judicature, where the judges can take notice of nothing that does not come judicially before them, and appear in the pleading. Dyer 89: Cro. Eliz. 469: 3 Lat. 36.

If there be several parties to an erroneous fine, they shall all join with the party that is to enjoy the land, though they themselves can have nothing; and this is said to be necessary only by way of conformity. 1 Roll. Abr. 747: Dyer 89.

But a tenant for life, and he in remainder in fee, (being an infant,) join in a fine, the infant alone may bring error for the error in respect of the person of the infant, which is the cause of the action for him, and for no other. 1 Leon. 31, 2 Cro. Eliz. 115.

A writ of error may be brought by him that is made party by the law, though he was not originally party to the suit, as he who comes in as a vouchee. 1 Roll. Abr. 748, 755.

If a man is indicted for felony, and thereupon a capias and exigent are awarded, but he dies before attainder, his administrators may have error upon this award of the exigent, because by the award of the exigent, his goods were forfeited; and this is ad grave damnum, &c. though the principal judgment can never be given. 11 Co. 41. b.

Writ of error lies in B. R. to reverse a fine levied in the Common Pleas, and to cancel the same if it be erroneous: And if there be not an original, or not proper writs of covenant, or if there be any fraud, &c. writ of error may be brought to make the fine void. Co. Lit. 9. See titles Final and Recovery.

2. It was formerly holden, that a writ of error could not be brought before the judgment given; and if it bore teste before, it was no spoliadic, for the words of the writ are, Si j. d. cum ad illu. sit, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 749. But it seems now agreed, that a writ of error that bears teste before the judgment is good; and this is the usual course for preventing and superseding execution; but the judgment must be given before the return of the writ. March 140: 1 Vent. 255: Mor. 461: 3 K. b. 308: 1 Vent. 96: Latib. 133, and see 1 Term Rep. 279.

But a writ of error, that bears teste before any plaint entered, is not good. March 140.

So where the defendant, upon an indictment of barrettry, brought a writ of error, bearing teste before the assize: it was disallowed, because if such practice should obtain, it would disappoint all proceedings there. 1 Vent. 255: 3 K. b. 308.

A writ of error cannot be brought after twenty years. Harl. 345. The statute of limitations must be pleaded to a writ of error, as well as to an original action. Id. 346.

II. 1. Writ of error will not lie in the Exchequer chamber on judgment in replevin in B. R. nor on judgment in action of scandalum magnatum. 2 Nelf. 708, 709. But on judgment in replevin in C. B. there may be writ of error brought in B. R. The Stat. 7 Liz. c. 8, (see post Dio III.) is only to relieve on the merits of the cause, as it stood on the first judgment.

Error de recordo quod contra iustitiam lies in the court of B. R. for errors in fact in the judgment of the same court; as nonage of the parties, want of an original, &c. which doth not proceed from the error of the judges; and this writ is allowed without bail. Cro. Jac. 254. And errors in fact may be corrected in C. B. the same term, without this writ, which lies not in the Exchequer chamber. Id. 620.

If judgment is given in B. R. in civil actions, a writ of error will not lie in the same court, only for errors in fact triable by a jury; but upon a judgment in criminal cases, error will lie in B. R. whether the error be in fact or in law; though it lies also in Parliament. 3 Salk. 147.

Where a judgment in C. B. is affirmed upon a writ of error in B. R. and afterwards a fine facias is brought on that judgment, and the plaintiff hath judgment thereon; no writ of error lieth in the Exchequer Chamber, because the

the record was not in B. R. by bill, but by writ of error. 1 R. H. Rep. 264: 3 Salk. 148—See 1 Salk. 263.

Writ of error cannot be brought on any record which is not a judgment. 1 Salk. 115.

The Court of B. R. having allowed the sufficiency of a return to a writ of mandamus, and therefore refused to grant a peremptory writ, the party applying brought his writ of error in Parliament. Held that no writ of error lay in this case, it being merely an award of the court, and not a strict formal judgment. 3 Rev. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 505.

The Court of C. P. have held, that, though writ of error may lie on a judgment of nonsuit, yet the Court will on motion to take out execution grant it, as such writ of error must be evidently merely for the purpose of delay and evasion. 1 H. Black. Rep. 432.

No writ of error will lie of any judgment that is not given in a court of record; nor of a judgment given in an inferior court, as the county court, &c. Co. Lit. 238*b*. Nor of a decree or sentence in Chancery proceeding according to equity. 37 H. 6. Bro. Error 95: 1 Roll. Ab. 744. But of a judgment given in the limited Court of Chancery, called the Petty-bag, which proceeds according to the Common-law, and holds plea of scire facias for repeal of the King's letters patent, &c. a writ of error lies in B. R. 1 Roll. Ab. 744: Dyer 315: 4 Inst. 80: 1 Co. 303.

Error lies for variance between the original writ and declaration; or want of an original: and where proceedings are so erroneous, as not to be amended; for faults in verdicts, executions, &c. or when any thing material is omitted in a judgment, writ of error lies, and the judgment shall be reversed: to where the titles of inferior courts are wrong or insufficiently named, &c. their judgments may be reversed. But where faults are small, they sometimes pass as verum clerici. 2 Nelf. Abr. 714, 715, 721, &c. 728.

By the practice of the Court of Common Pleas, a defendant coming in by capas utlagatum the same term in which an exigent is returnable, may avoid the outlawry without a writ of error, by shewing that he purchased a superfedeas out of the same court, and delivered it to the sheriff before the quinto exactus, &c.; or by shewing any other matter apparent on record, which makes the outlawry erroneous, as the want of an original, or the omission of process, or want of form in a writ of proclamation, &c. or a return by a person appearing not to be sheriff, or a variance between the original and exigent, or other process, or the want of such addition as is required by Stat. 1 H. 5. c. 5: 2 Hawk. P. C. 659—661: 1 Roll. Ab. 742, 3.—And see Nat. 5 Eliz. c. 23 §§ 13, 14.

If one be attainted upon an erroneous indictment, he cannot be relieved but by writ of error, for the judgment being judicial, &c. which is the judgment of law due for the offence, it must be presumed to have been given, for that he was guilty of the offence; but if judgment of acquittal is given upon such indictment, the King need bring no writ of error; but the offender may be newly indicted, for the judgment being quod lat pñe &c., &c. may be given as well for the insufficiency of the indictment, as for the party's innocence. 3 Inst. 214.

Also any judgment whatsoever, given by persons who had no good commission to proceed against the person condemned, may be falsified, by shewing the special matter, without writ of error, because it is void, as where a commission authorizes to proceed on an indictment taken before A. R. C. and twelve others, and by colour thereof the commissioners proceed on an indictment taken before eight persons only. 3 Inst. 231: 2 Hawk. P. C. 459.

If one is attainted of felony, and after, by relation of a general pardon, the felony is pardoned, he shall be discharged, for he hath no remedy by writ of error, to reverse the attainder. 6 Co. 5*a*.

Wherever a new jurisdiction is erected by act of parliament, and the court or judge, that exercises this jurisdiction, acts as a court or judge of record, according to the course of the Common-law, a writ of error lies on their judgments; but where they act in a summary method, or in a new course different from the Common-law, there a writ of error lies not, but a certiorari. 1 Salk. 253. See title Certiorari.

2. Error in the King's Bench is thus prosecuted: the clerk of the county makes out the writ of error, from a procure or copy of the declaration left with him; which is to be allowed with the clerk of the errors, and a certificate of the allowance of the writ must be served on the defendant's attorney in error; also the plaintiff's attorney in the action, is to procure an original to warrant his judgment; and warrants of attorney must be filed, and bail put in, where required, &c. And then the proceedings are by scire facias ad audiendum errores against the plaintiff in the action, wherein judgment was obtained; and the writ of error being received by the sheriff to whom directed, he is to give notice to the plaintiff in error to shew cause why execution should not be on the judgment, and make a return to that purpose; then a rule is to be given with the clerk of the rules for the plaintiff in error to assign his errors by such a day, which if he shall not do before the rule is out, the plaintiff in the original action may take out execution against him.

If the plaintiff in error assign errors in the record, then the defendant must plead In nullo est erratum, and thereupon enter the cause with the clerk of the papers, for the errors to be argued; and paper books for the counsel and judges, are to be made out, &c. If some part of the record be not returned, a certiorari must be prayed to bring it into court; and if matters of fact are alleged in error, as nonage, death of the plaintiff, &c. a proper plea must be made thereto, and issue thereupon taken and tried as in any other issue: but if only matters of law are assigned, the errors are argued by counsel on both sides, and the judgment is either reversed or affirmed: and when judgment is affirmed, the defendant in error may proceed against the defendant in the action, by taking out execution on the affirmetur, or bringing action of debt on the judgment; or he may prosecute the bail by scire facias upon their recognisance. But it is said by some, that an assignment of errors in fact and in law, is bad on demurrer; by others, that the assignment of error in law may stand, and the fact be considered as nothing. See Quere. Where there is an error in fact, if the writ of error ought not to be coram vobis residens, i. e. in the court where the judgment was given. In this case, however, we must except the want of warrants of attorney, &c. which are facts; and it is every day's practice to assign such, with errors in law; and the usual course is, if defendant in error does not pray a certiorari, for the plaintiff to pray it.

When

E R R O R.

When a judgment is reversed or affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, the transcript of the record thereof will be remitted back to the Court of K. B. to be entered up at the end of the judgment there: and if such judgment shall be affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, yet a writ of error may be brought thereupon returnable in parliament.

If you would bring a writ of error in parliament to reverse a judgment in B. R. there must be a petition to the King for his warrant, which petition has the allowance of the Attorney-General, and then the King writes on the top of it Fiat Justitia; whereupon a writ of error is made out by the clerk of the errors. And then the Lord Chief Justice of B. R. carries the record, and a transcript thereof, up to the House of Lords in full Parliament, and after they are examined there, leaves the transcript with the Lords, but brings back the record: and this being done, the attorney for the defendant in error, gets some Lord to move that the plaintiff in error may assign his errors; but if for the plaintiff, motion is to be made, that upon his assigning errors, the defendant may appear and make his defence, and counsel be heard on both sides: then, after the judgment is either affirmed or reversed, the clerk of the parliament remands the transcript of the record into B. R. with the affirmation or reversal thereof, to be entered upon the record of the said court, which court, if affirmed, awards execution, See Dyer 385.—See Cowp. 843.

A writ of error in parliament is made returnable immediately; or on a prorogation to the next session, and it doth not determine by a prorogation. But if a parliament is dissolved before the errors are heard, it is otherwise. And on motion, execution hath been granted in B. R. on a judgment in such a case, the record being never out of the court. Raym. 5. 2 Nels. Ab. 731.

Where a writ of error was brought in B. R. in the life time of Geo. I. but was not argued till after the accession of Geo. II. when the judgment was affirmed, on a writ of error in parliament, this judgment was reversed; it being held that the first writ of error, The King being sole plaintiff in the cause, was absolutely abated. This was the case of the Deanery of Armagh in Ireland. 3 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 507.

When appeals lay to England to reverse a judgment given in the King's Bench in Ireland, a writ was procured from the curstior, directed to the Chief Justice of the Court of B. R. in Ireland, requiring him to summon the plaintiff in the action there, to appear in K. B. to answer the errors; whereupon a transcript of the record was sent over, (not the record itself of the judgment, which remained in Ireland;) and when the errors were argued, if the judgment was reversed, there went a writ to the Chief Justice of Ireland to reverse it; so that the judgment was not actually reversed here, but there. And where the judgment in Ireland was affirmed here, there could be no writ of execution granted here; but on affirmance of the judgment a writ went, reciting all the proceedings, directed to the judges of B. R. in Ireland, commanding them to issue process of execution. Cio. Car. 368: 1 Salk. 321.

The party bringing the writ of error is to cause the roll where the judgment is entered, to be marked with the word error in the margin, that neither party may have notice on the record that the writ of error is brought, and this marking of the roll, on giving notice thereof, is as it were a superseas in itself to hinder execution: Though a superseas is to be made out, allowed and left with the sheriff of the county: and the plaintiff's attorney is not obliged to search the record, whether writ of error is brought or not; but may make out execution upon the judgment, if no superseas be taken forth, or he hath no notice of the writ of error. Tinn. 24 Car. B. R.

On a writ of error of a judgment in the Common Pleas, or other inferior court, in every adversary suit, the record itself shall be removed, that it may remain as a precedent and evidence of the law in the like cases. 1 Rel. Abr. 753: 5 Co. 39.

But in the case of a fine the transcript only is removed, for fines are only a more solemn acknowledgement or contract of the parties, and therefore are no memorials of the law, and need only be affirmed or vacated; if the former, the contract stands as it was; if the latter, the justices of B. R. may send for the fine itself, and reverse it, or they may send a writ to the treasurer and chamberlain to take it off the file; besides, should the record itself be removed and affirmed, it could not be ingrossed for want of a chirographer in B. R. 1 Rel. Abr. 752: 1 Bendl. 51: Dyer 89: Godb. 248: 2 R. l. Rep. 233: F. N. B. 20.—See title Fine and Recovery.

If the Judges of the Common Pleas, or other judges upon a writ of error, will not certify all the record, the party that sues the writ of error may alledge diminution of the record, and pray a writ to the justices that certified the record before, to certify the whole record. F. N. B. 25 a. But diminution cannot be alledged upon a writ of error brought upon a judgment in any inferior court. 1 Sid. 40.—Yet see infra.

By Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 8, he that brings writ of error, to reverse a judgment in a superior court, in all cases after a tender, or in any action of debt, upon bond for payment of money only, or on a contract, must put in good securities to prosecute his writ of error with effect, and pay the debt and damages if judgment be affirmed. and by Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 5, this is extended to writs of error to reverse judgments in inferior courts where the damages are under 10*l.* If bail be not put in, on the writ of error brought upon a judgment in the courts at Windsor, in those cases where bail is required, the writ of error is no superseas as to the execution, though such writ is in being, until a rule nisi is entered, or judgment affirmed, &c. And it is the same where insufficient bail is given, on rule to put in better bail, or justify those put in, which if the plaintiff doth not do, execution is ordered upon the judgment, with a writ of error to the writ of error, See M. b. 9 W. 3. B. R.

A plaintiff in error is, in the time appointed by the rule for that purpose, to certify the record into B. R. or the court will grant a rule nisi upon the writ of error. Mch. 22 Car. B. R.—See post Dic. V.

The court will not let the plaintiff in error quash his own writ of error; though they may grant leave to discontinue it. 5 Mod. 67. If a verdict is for a defendant in error, and judgment is affirmed, costs are allowed by Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10, on occasion of the delay of execution. And by Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16, upon quashing writs of error, for defect or variance from the record, &c. the defendant is to have costs as if judgment were affirmed. When a writ of error is not in delay of execution, as where it is brought after the execution is executed, the plaintiff shall not have damages and costs. Co. Jac 636.

When a writ of error is brought to reverse a judgment in an inferior court, though the record is not certified as it ought, yet execution cannot be sued; but on certificate of the neglect, &c. a writ of execution of the judgment may be issued. 1 Lil Ab. 526. Upon a writ of error, if the clerk below will certify the record wrong, action on the case lies against him; and if he make no return, the plaintiff may have the writ of execution out of Chancery. M. C. 12 245.

If an erroneous judgment be for the defendant in an inferior court, and it is reversed in B. R. and the merits appear for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment; but if the merits be against the plaintiff, the defendant shall have new judgment in like manner as in the Exchequer Chamber; for the judges are to reform, as well as to affirm or reverse. 7 M. C. 2. 2. If a writ of error to reverse a judgment be discontinued for want of prosecution; execution cannot be had upon the judgment, until the discontinuance is erased from the court where discontinued. 1 L. J. 518. If a writ of error is brought to remove a record of a judgment given in C. B. and the plaintiff in error leaves the record there, without removing it before the return of the writ; or in case there be a longer return day than is convenient in the writ of error, if it is purchased the beginning of Michaelmas term, and made returnable in Flower term; the court may award execution, although the writ of error be delivered. Fest. Cont. 10: D. C. 245.

III. Erroneous judgments given in the court of B. R. were only reformed by the parliament till Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 8. By that statute, a writ of error lies out of the Chancery upon all judgments given in the King's Bench, when the suit is by bill, (except the King is a party to the suit) returnable in the Exchequer Chamber, before the Judges of the Common Pleas, and Barons of the Exchequer, &c. who may examine the errors, and reverse or affirm the judgment; other than for error, concerning the jurisdiction of the court, or want of form in writs, pleadings, &c. and after the errors are examined, and judgment affirmed or reversed, the record is sent back to the King's Bench, to proceed and award execution; but if the suit is by original writ, or on quod tunc, &c. where the King is party, writ of error lies only in parliament.

A quod tunc action of debt is a civil suit. C. 13 382. And a writ of error on it, lies from the King's Bench to the Exchequer Chamber. D. C. 353.—See title Exchequer.

Not only on reversing or affirming a judgment, the Exchequer Chamber is to send back the record into B. R. but also if the plaintiff in the writ of error is nonsuit, or if the suit is discontinued in the Court of Exchequer Chamber, the record shall be sent back: and the Court of Exchequer shall give costs and damages to the plaintiff in the original action for his delay, &c. though if the plaintiff in error was plaintiff in the original action, there no costs can be given. 2 M. C. 122: 2 Nel. M. C. 707.

Where a writ of error de mines in the Exchequer Chamber, by abatement or discontinuance, the judgment is not again in B. R. till a venue is entered. 1 Salk 261. The Exchequer Chamber doth not award a fec. fac. ad aud. et d. errors; but notice is given to the parties concerned. 1 Pent. 34.

The court of parliament is the supreme court, where anciently causes of great consequence, as between the Magnate Regni, were heard and determined; hence the demer resort is to the House of Lords, to which a writ of error lies; and therefore, if a writ of error be brought of a judgment in the King's Bench into the Exchequer Chamber, and there the judgment is reversed; yet a writ of error lies of such judgment into parliament, and the lords may reverse such second judgment. Sho. v. Parl. Cas. 24, 110: 1 Term. 334: Raym. 330: 2 Jon. 99: 2 L. v. 232.

So a writ of error lies into parliament upon a judgment in B. R. either in a cause brought there by writ of error, or originally commenced there. 1 Rol. Ab. 745.

And though upon a judgment in the King's Bench, since the Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 8, the party may elect either to bring a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber, or in parliament; yet if the cause commenced in the King's Bench by original writ, there lies no writ of error but into parliament; also if he elects to bring error in the Exchequer Chamber regularly, he cannot after bring error in parliament upon the first judgment. 1 Saund. 345. Carth. 10. S. P.—see 2 Rol. Ab. 492: 2 L. v. 232.

To reverse a judgment given in the Court of Common Pleas, the writ of error is made returnable in the King's Bench, and error is not to be brought in parliament: though where a writ of error is brought in B. R. upon a judgment given in C. B. and the judgment is reversed or affirmed in B. R. the party grieved may have writ of error returnable in parliament. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 1: 1 L. l. Ab. 519, 521. Erroneous judgment in the Court of Exchequer, is to be examined by the Lord Chancellor, &c. with some of the justices, and such other sage persons as they think fit; and if any error be found, they shall correct the rolls, and send them into the Exchequer, in order to make execution, &c. Stat. 31 L. l. 3. cap. 12.

No writ of error lies in Banco or Banco Regis, upon a judgment given within the five ports; but by custom such judgment is examinable by bill in nature of a writ of error coram domino eusdem fidei sui galeano quinq. portum aqua curru jura de Shipway. 4 Inst. 224.—See title Cinqu. Ports.

If a judgment be given in the court of Stannaries of the Duchy of Cornwall, no writ of error lies upon this in Banco or Banco Regis, because it hath not been used; but of this there may be an appeal to the guardian of the Stannaries, and from him to the Prince; and when there is no Prince, to the King's Privy Council. 1 Rol. Abr. 745.—See 4 Inst. 230: 2 Danco. Abr. 304.

Upon a judgment given in the Hustings in London, a writ of error lies at St. Martin's before certain justices. 1 Rol. Ab. 745: 1 L. v. 309: 2 Saund. 253. S. P. and upon a judgment of the said justices, a writ of error lies in parliament. See 2 L. on. 107.—See title Differences.

In Wales, at the Great Sessions, there a writ of error lay on personal actions to the council of the Marches of Wales, and if they gave an erroneous judgment, it was final; for Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 16, ordained this writ to the council there; and no writ of error was granted of such erroneous judgment: upon errors in real or mixed actions however in Wales, writ of error lay into the King's Bench. Fest. Cont. 71. And so now it does in personal actions by Stat. 1 W. & M. c. 27.—See title Courts of Wales.

E R R O R. IV.

In some cases, a writ of error lies in the same court wherein the record is.

If upon a judgment in B. R. there be error in the process, or through the default of the clerks, it shall be reversed in the same court by writ of error sued there before the same justices. F. N. B. 21; Popb. 181; 1 Rel. Abr. 746.

So if one is indicted of treason or felony in B. R. or being indicted elsewhere, the indictment is removed in B. R. and by process of that court he is erroneously outlawed, and so returned; a writ of error may be brought in B. R. for the reversal thereof. 3 Inst. 214.

Also if an erroneous judgment in point of law be given in B. R. upon an indictment in London, a writ of error may be brought in the same court; for though in civil cases error does not lie in the same court, unless for a matter of fact; yet in criminal cases it lies as well for an error in law as fact. 1 Sid. 208.

But if an erroneous judgment be given, and the error lies in the judgment itself, and not in the process, a writ of error does not lie in B. R. of such judgment. 1 Rel. Abr. 746.

If a record is removed by writ of error out of the Common Pleas into the King's Bench, and the writ of error for insufficiency is quashed in the King's Bench, the plaintiff in error may have a writ coram vobis resilen. But such new writ is not a superfideas in itself as the first writ was, and therefore he must move the court for a superfideas, and put in bail thereon. Carth. 368, 9.

So if such second writ be quashed for insufficiency, yet the court will grant a new or second writ of error coram vobis resilen. As also a superfideas on putting in bail; for such second writ being void, is as if there had been none before. Carth. 369, 370.

IV. The parties, upon the removal of the record by the writ of error, have no day in court given to either of them; so that if the plaintiff in error delay to sue forth his sci. fac. ad audiend. errores, the defendant hath no way to compel him, but by suing out a scire facias quare executionem non, &c. And if thereupon the plaintiff in error doth not plead that his errors are assigned, but suffer judgment to pass upon two nibils, no errors afterwards assigned shall prevent execution. Carth. 41. The sci. fac. ad audiendum errores is only used in B. R. In the Exchequer Chamber notice is given. It is said the usual practice is, that the defendant in the writ of error, by consent doth voluntarily take notice of the assignment of errors, and this consent is testified by his pleading In nullo est erratum and then there is no occasion for a scire facias ad audiend. error. Ibid.

Errors are to be assigned in the term, or the writ of error will be quashed. 1 Lit. Abr. 524. When the record is in court by writ of error, the plaintiff in error is to assign his errors; and may have a scire facias before the record is entered: and the manner of assigning errors, according to the ancient practice, is to put a bill into court, and lay in the bill, in hoc erratum est, &c. shewing in certain in what things. F. N. B. 20. The assignment of errors, in omnibus erratum is not good; for the judgment is founded upon the original writ, count, pleading, issue, process, trial, and so is manifold. Jenk. Cont. 84. Errors in law not assigned in the record may be assigned after a scire facias ad audiend. errores, as the record is in Ver. L.

court; but it is not so of a warrant of attorney, which is an error in fact, and not upon record. 14. 140. 5 Rep. 37.

If one in execution brings error, he ought to assign the errors in his proper person: and in cases of outlawry for felony, errors sufficient must be certainly alledged in writing, before the writ of error is allowed. Jenk. Cont. 165, 179. Where a recovery is had, and error brought, if the original writ doth not abate by death; but is abatable only, as by entry into the land pending the writ, or coverture, acquisition of a dignity, a partial array returned, aid denied, &c. that should have been pleaded, and were not: these shall not be assigned for error; for they are waived. 9 Rep. 47; 21 H. 6. 29.

The assigning general errors is to say that the declaration, &c. is not sufficient in law: and that judgment was given for the plaintiff, where it ought to have been for the defendant. and the errors of a judgment are now to be assigned on the record, to appear with it to the court.

If the plaintiff in error assigns errors in fact, and errors in law, which are not assignable together, and the defendant in error pleads in nullo est erratum; this is a confession of the error in fact, and the judgment must be reversed, for he should have demurred for the duplicity. Style 67; 1 Lev. 76. Salk. 258; 6 Mod. 113, 206.

Also if an error in fact be well assigned, in nullo est erratum is a confession of it, for the defendant ought to have joined issue upon it, so as to have it tried by the country. 1 Sid. 93; Raym. 59. Because, in nullo est erratum is in the nature of a demurrer, which confesses the fact, if well pleaded, or well assigned.

But if an error in fact be ill assigned, in nullo est erratum is no confession of it; as if it be assigned, that such a one at the time of the return of the venire was not sheriff, and the record be removed into B. R. by certiorari, there in nullo est erratum is no confession of that error, because the record is not in court, that being no part of the record, for the plea is in nullo est erratum in recordo. Cro. Jac. 12, 29, 521; Raym. 231. Cro. Car. 421. 1 Rel. Ab. 758.

So if the plaintiff in error assigns an error in fact, viz. that the defendant, who was an infant, did not appear by guardian, but by attorney, and concludes with hoc paratus est verificare, instead of concluding to the country, as he ought to do, though the defendant in error pleads in nullo est erratum, yet it shall not amount to a confession, but shall be taken only for a demurrer. Yl. 58.

Also if an error in fact, that is not assignable, be assigned, and in nullo est erratum be pleaded, it is no confession; as if it be assigned, that such a day there was no court of Common Pleas sitting, because that is against the record, and in such case in nullo est erratum is only a demurrer, so if a man says he did not appear, and the record says he did, in nullo est erratum is no confession, but a demurrer, because it is against the record. Cro. Car. 12, 29, 52; Yl. 58. Raym. 231; 1 Leit. 252. 3 Keble. 259; 1 Le. 76.

It has been held, that an error in fact cannot be assigned in the Exchequer Chamber: though by some authorities, errors in fact may be assigned as errors in law. 2 Mod. 194. 2 Nell. Abr. 708.

By Stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 6. In actions real, personal, and mixed, the death of either party between verdict and judgment, shall not be alledged for error.

It seems a general rule, that nothing can be assigned for error that contradicts the record; for the records of the courts of justice being things of the greatest credit, cannot be questioned but by matters of equal notoriety with themselves; wherefore, though the matter assigned for error should be proved by witnesses of the best credit, yet the judges would not admit of it. 1 Roll. Abr. 757.

An original writ of the same term, in which final judgment is given, will not warrant that judgment, if it appear upon the same record, that there have been proceedings of a preceding term. 1 Wils. 181.

Hence it is, that in a writ of error to reverse a fine, the plaintiff cannot assign, that the conusor died before the teste of the dedimus, because that contradicts the record of the conusance taken by the commissioners, which evidently shews that the conusor was then alive, because they took his conusance after they were armed with the Commission, and the dedimus issued. Dyer 89: 1 Roll. Abr. 757—See title Fine and Recovery.

V. The defendant in error may plead a release of all errors, or a release of all suits, and these pleas, if found for him, will for ever bar the plaintiff in error. 1 Roll. Abr. 788.

So where by a writ of error the plaintiff shall recover, or be restored to any personal thing, as debt, damage, or the like, a release of all actions personal is a good plea; and when land is to be recovered or restored in a writ of error, a release of actions real is a good bar; but where by a writ of error the plaintiff shall not be restored to any personal or real thing, a release of all actions real or personal is no bar. Co. Lit. 288 b: 8 Co. 152: 1 Roll. Abr. 788: 2 Roll. Abr. 405.

Also if a man loses in a real action, and he releases all his right to the land, and so where there is a fine levied, this shall bar him of his writ of error; for no person can bring a writ of error to reverse a judgment that is not intitled to the land, &c. for the courts of law will not turn out the present tenant, unless the demandant can make out a clear title; possession always carrying with it the presumption of a good title, till the right owner appears. 1 Roll. Abr. 747, 748: Dyer 90 a: 3 Leo. 26: Cro. Eliz. 469: 1 Roll. Abr. 789. If the tenant, pending a præcipe against him, aliens in fee, and after judgment is given against him, and he brings a writ of error; this scottment is not any bar to the writ, because he was privy to the judgment after. 1 Roll. Abr. 788: Bridge 77: 1 Roll. Rep. 306. In a writ of error to reverse a common recovery, it is no good plea, that the plaintiff pending the writ of error hath entered into part, for before the possession was taken from him, he might have error to reverse the judgment, though not to have restitution. 1 Lev. 72.—See title Fine and Recovery.

In a sci. fac. against a tertenant, he may plead a release of error, though he be not privy to the judgment. 9 II. 6. 45: Bro. 9 S. C.

But the tertenants cannot plead in abatement of the writ of error, but only in bar as a release, &c. in maintenance of their title. 1 Lev. 72.

After in nullo est erratum pleaded, the party affirms the record to be perfect, and he is foreclosed to say there is error in it: though the court is not restrained from examining into it. 1 Salk. 270. The judges are not bound to search for errors in the record, which were not assigned; but may if they will; and if they find error they ought to reverse the judgment. Jenk. Cent. 159.

VI. A judgment, as being an intire thing, cannot be reversed in part, and stand good as to other part; or be reversed as to only party; and remain good against the rest: though if there be error in awarding execution, the execution only shall be reversed, and not the judgment. Hob. 90: Carth. 235. If judgment is entered against joint defendants, when one of them is dead, the judgment shall be reversed for error as to all of them; for in such case the plaintiff ought to make a special entry of the death of the party, with Nihil ulterius versus eum fiat, and then take judgment only against the others. Ibid. 149.

The Court of Exchequer Chamber have not any authority, but to reverse or affirm the judgment, &c. for they cannot make execution. Cro. Eliz. 108. But where judgment is given for the defendant, and the plaintiff brings a writ of error; if the judgment is reversed, the court which reverses the judgment shall give judgment for the plaintiff, as the other court ought to have done. Id. 117, 118. In the Exchequer Chamber, after reversal of a judgment, &c. in B. R. the court gave judgment, that the plaintiff recover, &c. but because they wanted power to award a writ of inquiry which was necessary, being on a demurrer, therefore it was sent back into B. R. for the execution of that writ, and thereupon to give final judgment: but if the judgment is against the plaintiff in B. R. upon a special verdict, and that judgment is reversed in the Exchequer Chamber, there being no writ of inquiry requisite, the Court of Exchequer Chamber doth not only give judgment of reversal, but a compleat judgment for the plaintiff in the action. Carth. 181. If erroneous judgment be had by consent of parties, it may be reversed in the Exchequer Chamber; for consent of parties may not change the law; but if the consent is entered upon and made part of the record, it may be good. Hob. 5: Cro. Eliz. 664. The reversal in the Exchequer Chamber, is res judicata: no writ of error lies upon such judgment, except in parliament; and it is by six judges at least, by Stats. 27 Eliz. c. 8: 31 Eliz. c. 1.

When judgment is given in B. R. for the plaintiff in error, there shall be only a judicium revocetur, &c. entered with costs: if for the defendant in error, that the plaintiff nil capiat per breve suum de errore. The Chief Justice of B. R. &c. or the eldest judge ought to allow a writ of error, which is in judgment of law a superfideas until the errors are examined, and the judgment affirmed or reversed. Cro. Jac. 534. As a plaintiff having erroneous judgment may reverse it; and new judgment may be given for him, so if a judgment is reversed, the plaintiff may bring a new action for the same cause. 1 Lev. 310. Where a judgment is pleaded in bar of another action, &c. and judgment given on that plea; writ of error may be had to reverse the second judgment. Cro. Eliz. 503: Jenk. Cent. 259. And debt lies upon a judgment in B. R. after a writ of error brought; which is only a superfideas to the execution. 1 Lev. 153. But the court will stay proceedings in such action on giving judgment.

In a writ of error upon a judgment in trespass against several, if the judgment be erroneous, because one of the defendants was within age, and appeared by attorney, the judgment shall be reversed in toto against all. 1 Roll. Abr. 776: Cro. Jac. 289, 303: Allen 74, 75. Style 121, 125, 406.

ESCAPE.

ESCAPUM, from the Fr. eschapper, i. e. effugere, to fly from. A violent or privy evasion out of some lawful restraint; as where a person is arrested or imprisoned, and gets away before he is delivered by due course of law. Standf. P. C. cap. 26, 27.—Terms de Ley.

Escapes are either (A) in civil, or (B) in criminal, cases.

(A) As to ESCAPES in CIVIL CASES.

I. 1. Where the party shall be said to be legally committed, so that the suffering him to go at large will be adjudged an Escape; 2. What degree of Liberty, or going at large, shall be deemed an Escape; 3. What Persons are answerable for an Escape.

II. 1. Of the Difference between voluntary and negligent Escapes; and 2. Between Escapes on Mesne Process and Execution.

III. 1. Of the Nature of the Action to be brought for an Escape, and 2. Of the Manner, laying it.

IV. Of the Party's Defence sued for the Escape; and therein of pleading fresh Suit.

I. 1. It seems agreed as a general rule, that wherever a sheriff or other officer hath a person in custody, by virtue of an authority from a court which hath jurisdiction over the matter, that the suffering such a person to go at large is an escape, for he cannot judge of the validity of the process or other proceedings of such court, and therefore cannot take advantage of any errors in them; hence the law allows him, in an action of false imprisonment, to plead such authority, which will excuse him, though it be erroneous; but if the court has no jurisdiction of the matter, then all is void, and consequently the officer not punishable for suffering a person taken upon such void authority to escape. Moor 274: Dyer 66, 175, 306: Popb. 203: 1 Leon 30: 5 Co. 64: 8 Co. 141 b: Crid. Jac. 280, 289 2 Bull. 64, 237, 256. If a ca. fa. issue after a year and a day, without suing out a scire facias, this error will not excuse the sheriff in an escape. (Cro. Car. 288: Salk. 273. But though a sheriff may not take advantage of an erroneous process; yet he shall of a void process, on which it is no escape to let a prisoner go.

If at the petition of A. and the rest of the creditors of B. a commission under the Statutes against bankrupts is issued out against B. and thereupon the commissioners sit and offer interrogatories to C. and he refuses to be examined, and by them is thereupon committed to prison, and the gaoler suffers him to escape, as the commissioners had sufficient authority to commit, and A. was prejudiced by the escape, he may maintain an action against the gaoler: 1 Rol. Rep. 47: Moor 834. pl. 1123, 8. C.

The sheriff cannot be charged with an escape before he had the party in actual custody by a legal authority, and therefore if an officer, having a warrant to arrest a man, sets him shut up in a house, and challenge him as his prisoner, but never actually have him in his custody, and the party get free, the officer cannot be charged with an escape. Bro. Escape 22.

But if A. is arrested, and in the actual custody of the sheriff, and afterwards another writ is delivered to him at the suit of F. S. upon the delivery of the writ, A. by construction of law is immediately in the sheriff's custody, without an actual arrest, and if he escapes, the plaintiff may declare, that he was arrested by virtue of the second writ, which is the operation it has by law, and not according to the fact. 5 Co. 89. But where the sheriff, not having actually arrested a defendant, but accepted the undertaking of an attorney to put in bail, who put in bail, and the sheriff had returned a cepi corpus, held per Lord Mansfield at Surry assizes, summer 1775, in Hulson and Alaman, Esq. that the sheriff was not liable, upon a writ of non est inventus, on another process, to an action, either for an escape or a false return, or for negligence in not taking the defendant, no actual negligence being proved; and the plaintiff was non-suited.

Note, the writ returned cepi corpus was a latitat, returnable three or four days after the other process, which was an original, but that difference was not, in this case, considered as material.

If a person out upon bail renders himself in discharge of his bail, and a redditis is entered in the judge's book, and a commitment filed in the office, and the prisoner afterwards escapes; yet if no notice was given to the marshal of such render, nor no entry made of the commitment in his book, the prisoner shall not be deemed in custody to as to charge the marshal with an escape; but it seems this matter cannot be insisted upon after trial. 1 Salk. 272, 3. Fide post.

It hath been held, that entering a commitment upon the roll was not sufficient to charge the marshal with any escape, without proving an actual imprisonment, but that proving the party to be actually in prison, though there be no entry made in the marshal's book is sufficient. 1 Sid. 210: 1 Keb. 775.

And now, for the greater security of creditors, and the better to enable them to prove the actual custody of the prisoner, it is enacted, by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. §. 9. "That if any one, desiring to charge any person with any action or execution, shall desire to be informed by the marshal or warden, or their respective deputies, or by any other keeper of any other prison, whether such person be a prisoner in his custody, or not, the said marshal or warden, or such other keeper, shall give a true note in writing thereof, to the person so requesting the same, or to his lawful attorney, upon demand, at his office for that purpose, or, in default thereof, shall forfeit the sum of 50*l.* and if such marshal or warden, or their respective deputy, &c. exercising the said office, or other keeper, &c. of any other prison, shall give a note in writing that such person is an actual prisoner in his or their custody, every such note shall be taken as a sufficient evidence, that such person was at that time a prisoner in actual custody."

A commitment upon the roll is good evidence in escape, without an entry in the marshal's book. Ld. Raym. 705.

2. Every person in prison by process of law is to be kept in salutis et animae custodiā, in order to compel them the more speedily to pay their debts, and make satisfaction to their creditors. Plowd. 36: 3 Co. 44: 2 Inst. 381: 1 Rol. Ab. 806.

If therefore a defendant being taken in execution, be afterwards seen at large, for any the shortest time, even before the return of the writ, this is an escape. 2 Bl. Rep. 1048.

Persons in the King's Bench and Fleet prisons, are to be actually detained within the said prisons; and if they escape, action of debt lies against the warden, &c. 1 R. 2. c. 12. But now the marshal or warden grant the liberty of the rules to such as they think proper, (not criminally charged,) on proper security. Keepers of those prisons suffering prisoners either upon contempt or mesne process, or in execution, to be out of the rules (except on rule of court, &c.) are guilty of an escape; and persons conniving at an escape shall forfeit 500*l.* &c. by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. And by this statute, where any prisoner in execution escapes, the creditor may have any other new execution against him.

If the bailiff of a liberty, who has the return and execution of writs, remove a prisoner taken in execution to the county gaol, situated out of the liberty, and there deliver him into the custody of the sheriff, this is an escape for which an action of debt lies. 2 Term Rep. 5.

By Stat. 5 An. c. 9, If any person in custody, for not performing any decree in Chancery, &c. escape, the party for whom the money is decreed may have the same remedy against the sheriff, as if the prisoner had been in custody on certiorari. A prisoner in execution should not be allowed to go out of the gaol; for if he goes out, though he returns again, it is an escape. 3 Rep. 43, 44: 2 Inst. 380, 381. And yet in London, by special custom there, in some cases the prisoner may go abroad with his keeper, and it will be no escape. Ibid.—See Hob. 202. Where the justice of the court, and plaintiff in the suit, agree that the prisoner shall be at liberty, and he go out and return at his time; it is no escape: but this may not be without the sheriff's consent. Doe 275.

If a plaintiff by word licente the sheriff to deliver the prisoner, no action will lie for this as an escape. 27 H. 8. 24.

If there be an escape by the plaintiff's consent, when he did not intend it, the law is hard that the debt should be thereby discharged; as where one was in execution in R. and some proposals being made to the plaintiff in behalf of the prisoner, seeing there was some likelihood of an accommodation, the plaintiff consented to a meeting in a certain place in London, and desired the prisoner might be there, who came accordingly: this was held to be an escape, with the plaintiff's consent, and he could never after be in execution at his suit for the same matter. 2 Mod. 136.

It hath been adjudged no escape to let a prisoner go where the sheriff hath the prisoner in custody, if it be before the return of the writ: it is sufficient if the officer have the party at the return of the writ. &c. Moog 299: 1 Salk. 401: 2 Nels. 739, 740. Yet it hath been held, that where a habere corpus is granted to bring a person into court, if the sheriff on the way let him go at large in the county, or carry him round about a great way, &c. it will be an escape. 1 Mod. 116. And an escape in one place is an escape in all places; for a prisoner being once escaped, and at large, it shall be intended he is confined to no place. 1 Lil. Abr. 537. Committing the marshal of the Marshalsea to prison, was held an escape in law of all the prisoners there. See Style 375.

If a woman, warden of the Fleet prison, marries her prisoner, or if a sheriff, &c. marries a woman in execution with him, in either case it will be deemed an escape in law. Plowd. 17.

If a man hath judgment against two persons, and both are taken in execution, if the sheriff suffer one of them to escape, he shall be answerable for the whole debt, though he hath one of them still in custody. 1 Rol. Abr. 810. But in an action on the case, tried before Lord Mansfield, in Swiry, for an escape of one of two defendants, under very favourable circumstances for the officer, his Lordship left it to the jury, whether they would find the whole of plaintiff's debt, in damages, or only half, and the jury found only half.

By Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. sect. 8, It is enacted, "That if the marshal or warden for the time being, or their respective deputy or deputies, or other keeper or keepers of any other prison or prisons, shall, after one day's notice in writing given for that purpose, refuse to shew any prisoner committed in execution, to the creditor, at whose suit such prisoner was committed or charged, or to his attorney, every such refusal shall be adjudged to be an escape in law."

3. In civil actions the sheriff is to answer for the escape of his bailiff; as the bailiff is for that of his servant: and action on the case lies against the sheriff for an escape upon mesne process, because the plaintiff is prejudiced in his suit by it. Co. Plaz. 623, 625: 1 Danv. Abr. 183.—See also Co. Jus. 419: Dyer 241.—See Bull. Ni. Pri. 59, 60. Where a person is in custody on mesne process, and being outlawed after judgment at the suit of another, the judgment creditor brings a warrant on a capias utlagatum, and delivers it to the sheriff's officer, who hath him in custody; if the officer afterwards permits the person to escape, though he refuse to execute the warrant, the sheriff is chargeable in action on the case. 5 Rep. 89.

Where one has the custody of a gaol of freehold or inheritance, and commits it to another person, who is insufficient, the superior is answerable for all escapes suffered by his inferior; but if the inferior be sufficient, the action should be brought against him, and not against the superior. See 9 Co. 98: 2 Jun. 60: 2 Lev. 158: 1 Vent. 314: 2 Mod. 119 & 4 Rep. 98.

Also by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. sect. 11, it is enacted, "That the offices of marshal of the King's Bench prison and warden of the Fleet, shall be executed by the several persons to whom the inheritance of the prisons, prison-houses, &c. of the said prisons, or either of them, shall then belong respectively, in his or their respective proper person, &c. or by their sufficient deputies; for which deputies, and for all forfeitures, escapes, and other misdemeanors in their offices by such deputies permitted,

E S C A P E, (A). II.—III. r.

Or, the said person, in whom the aforesaid inheritances respectively are, shall be answerable; and the profits and inheritances of the said offices shall be sequestrated, &c. to make satisfaction for such forfeitures, escapes, &c. respectively, as if permitted, &c. by the persons themselves, in whom the respective inheritance of the said prisons shall then be."

A prisoner escapes out of the King's Bench, or Marshall's, or the Fleet; the keeper of the prison out of which he escaped is to be charged with it; but if the escape be from either of the Counters, the action must be brought against the sheriffs of London. Dyer 278: 3 Rep. 52.

Action of escape against the warden of the Fleet for an escape upon mesne process; the prisoner returns to the Fleet the same day, and the plaintiff afterwards proceeds to final judgment against him, yet the action lies against the warden. 1 Wils. 294. In an escape upon mesne process out of the borough court, brought in B. R. against the bailiff thereof, the defendant shall not take advantage in B. R. of any error in the process below. 1 Wils. 255.

Action of escape will not lie against the executor or administrator of a sheriff, &c. for an escape, because it was personal, and moritur cum persona: but it may be otherwise if there be a judgment recovered against the sheriff before he died. Dyer 322. See post III. 2.

If there are two sheriffs of the same place, and an action of escape is brought against them both, if one of them dies, yet the writ shall not abate; for it being in nature of a trespass, and merely personal, the party can only have remedy against the survivor. Cro. Eliz. 625. But the death should be suggested. By Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. sect. 7, the death of one plaintiff or defendant, where the action will survive to, or against the survivor, shall not abate the suit. But the death must be suggested on the roll. See title Abatement.

An old sheriff omits turning over a prisoner in execution to the new sheriff; it is said to be an escape; so where there are two executions against a man, and in the indenture of turning over mention is made but of one, &c. 3 Rep. 71.

II. There are two kinds of escapes; voluntary and negligent: Voluntary, is when one arrests another for felony, or other crime, and lets him go by consent; in which case the party that permits the escape is esteemed guilty of the crime committed, and must answer for it: Negligent escape, is when one is arrested, and afterwards escapes against the will of him that arrested him, or had him in custody; and is not pursued by fresh suit, and taken again before the party pursuing hath lost sight of him. Crompt. Just. 36. And for these negligent escapes, the gaoler, &c. is to be fined. One negligent escape will not amount to a forfeiture of a gaoler's office, as one voluntary one will; but many negligent escapes will do it: and the fine for suffering a negligent escape of a person attainted, was by the Common law of course 100*l.* and in other cases at the discretion of the court. 3 Lev. 288; 2 Lev. 81.—See post as to Escapes in Criminal Cases.

If any prisoner escapes who was in execution, his creditors may retake him by cap. ad satisfac. or bring action of debt on the judgment, or a scire facias against him, &c. 1 Vent. 269; 3 Salk. 160. If a man escapes, with the consent of the gaoler in a civil case, he cannot retake him. 3 Rep. 32, 52: 1 Sid. 330. But the plaintiff may retake him at any time. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27.

If the plaintiff permit the prisoner to escape, he cannot afterwards retake him; and if the body and goods, &c. of a consor are taken in execution upon a statute-merchant, if the consor agrees that he shall go at large, it is a discharge of the whole execution, and the consor shall have his lands again: it is otherwise if the sheriff had permitted him to escape, the execution on the lands would not be discharged. 2 Nels. Abr. 737.

A difference is to be observed between permissive and negligent escapes, with respect to the sheriff; for if a sheriff suffer a prisoner voluntarily to go at large, the sheriff cannot retake him even upon fresh suit; and if he does, the prisoner may have an action of trespass against him. Carter 212.

An escape from the rules of the King's Bench prison, without the Marshal's knowledge, is not a voluntary escape. 2 Term Rep. 126.

If the marshal of the King's Bench, or warden of the Fleet, or any other who hath the keeping of prisons in fee, suffer a voluntary escape, it is a forfeiture of the office. 3 Mol. 146: Carter 212. And there is likewise a farther penalty of 500*l.* added by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27, above-mentioned.

There is this difference between an escape on mesne process and execution; if the sheriff arrest a person on mesne process, and he is rescued by J. S. he may return the rescue, and such return is good, and no action of escape lies against him after such return; but the court will issue process against such rescuer, or fine him; for in this case, though the sheriff may, yet he is not obliged to raise the posse comitatus. 1 Rel. Abr. 807: 1 Jon. 207: 1 Rel. Rep. 388: 3 Lev. 46. But after judgment on a capias ad satisfaciendum, the sheriff cannot return a rescue, for in such case the sheriff is obliged to raise the posse comitatus, if needful, and, therefore, if he return a rescue, an action of escape lies, or a new capias; for the return of an ineffectual execution is as none. 1 Rel. Abr. 807: Cro. Car. 240, 255: 2 Co. 42.—See Ni. Pri. 59, 60, and 6 Rep. 51: Cro. Eliz. 868. and this Dictionary title Rescue.

III. 1. At Common law the plaintiff had no remedy against the sheriff for an escape, whether upon mesne process, or in execution, but by special action upon the case. 2 Inst. 382: 1 Shro. 176: 2 Saund. 34: Haid. 30.

But now, by an equitable construction of Westm. 2, 13 E. 1. cap. 11, action of debt is given against the sheriff; and by Stat. 1 Rich. 2. cap. 12, against the warden of the Fleet; (which extends to all gaolers and keepers of prisons though infants or feme covert. 2 Ind. 382;) for escapes in execution.

The plaintiff, at his election, may maintain either an action upon the case, or debt, for an escape in execution. Cro. Jac. 361, 533, 619: Cro. Eliz. 877: Dyer 278*b*. See 1 Jon. 144; 1 Syd. 304. S. C.

If a prisoner in custody upon a capias utlagatum is suffered to escape, the plaintiff may either maintain an action qui tam against the sheriff, or bring an action of debt against him in his own right. Cro. Jac. 361, 533, 619: Cro. Eliz. 877.

An action of escape is not a local action, and therefore if one escape out of the Marshall's, which is in Surrey, the action may be laid in M. d. l. s. c. Dyer 278 b. See 1 Jon. 144: 1 Sid. 354. S. C.

E S C A P E, (A). III. 2.—IV.

It is usual now, on an escape on in fine process, to declare against the sheriff, &c. in case: on execution, in debt.

The distinction seems now to be thus settled.—If a sheriff or gaoler suffers a prisoner, who is taken upon mesne process to escape, he is liable to an action on the case. Cro. Eliz. 625: Com. 69.—But if, after judgment, a gaoler or sheriff permits a debtor to escape who is charged in execution for a certain sum; the debt immediately becomes his own, and he is compellable by action of debt, being for a sum liquidated, and ascertained, to satisfy the creditor his whole demand. 2 Inst. 382.

In debt against the sheriff or gaoler for an escape, the jury cannot give a less sum than a creditor would have recovered against the prisoner, viz. the sum indorsed on the writ, and the legal fees of execution. 2 Term Rep. 126.

2 In this action it is not necessary to set forth all the formalities required by law in other cases. Cro. Eliz. 877: See 2 Strou. 424.

Therefore, if upon a judgment obtained by the testator, the executor brings a fiere facias, and has judgment, whereupon a capias ad satisfaciendum, and B. is arrested, and suffered to escape, the plaintiff, in an action against the sheriff for this escape, may declare briefly upon the judgment in the scire facias, without shewing the gradual proceedings at length, as is usually done in an action of debt upon a judgment. Carth. 148, 149: 3 Mod. 324, S. C. Cro. Eliz. 877.

So if a defendant is arrested on a special capias, founded on an original returnable in B. R. in action for his escape, it is not necessary to set forth the original.

If the plaintiff declares that he sued out a writ of execution against J. S. without setting forth any judgment, and that the defendant suffered him to escape; this is an incurable fault; for by this means he lost the benefit of pleading nil trel record, which he might do if the plaintiff had set forth the judgment. 1 Saund. 37, 38: 1 Lev. 191. and 1 Sid. 306. S. C. See title Debt.

If A. recovers against B. as executor, and has him in execution and the sheriff suffers him to escape, the action must be brought as executor in the debt only, and not in the debet and detinet. 1 Lutw. 893: Comb. 114: S. C.

If the plaintiff declares, that the prisoner was committed, and escaped, but does not say, prout patet per recordum; yet upon a general demurrer this shall be good; for the gist of the action was the escape, and the commitment only inducement. 2 Salk. 565: 5 Mod. 8. S. C. See 3 Lev. 393.

If in escape the plaintiff declares, that he had J. S. and his wife in execution, and that the defendant suffered them to escape, and the jury find specially, that the husband only was taken in execution (it being for a debt due from the wife before coverture) and that he escaped; this is sufficient, and the plaintiff shall have judgment; for the substance of the issue is found, though not pursuant to the declaration. 1 Sid. 5.

So in an action on the case for the escape of A. where the jury found that A. was taken by J. S. the former sheriff, and not by the defendant, the present sheriff; but finding that he was legally in his custody, and that he suffered him to escape, the plaintiff had judgment. Cro. Jac. 380.

An administratrix may maintain an action in her own name against the marshall for the escape of a prisoner in execution on a judgment obtained by her as administratrix. 2 Term Rep. 126.

Under a count for a voluntary escape, the plaintiff may give evidence of a negligent escape; and the defendant may plead a re-taking on a fresh pursuit to such count without traversing the voluntary escape. Id. Ibid.

In debt for an escape against the sheriff, the indorsement of non est inventus on the ca. sa. is sufficient evidence of its having been delivered to him. But a legal arrest must be proved in such action. Cowp. 63.

By the Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. sect. 12, it is enacted "That it shall be lawful for any person, having cause of action against the warden of the Fleet prison, upon bill filed in the courts of Common Pleas or Exchequer against the warden, and a rule being given to plead there-to to be out eight days at most after filing such bill, to sign judgment against the warden, unless he plead to the bill within three days after such rule is out."

IV. If the prison takes fire, by means whereof the prisoners escape, this shall excuse the sheriff, and he may well plead it. 1 Rol. Abr. 808.

So if the prison is broke by the King's enemies, this shall excuse the sheriff, for he can have no remedy over against them. 4 Co. 84: 1 Rol. Abr. 808.

But if the prison was broke by rebels and traitors, the King's subjects, this shall not excuse him, for he may have his remedy over against these. Ibid.

When a prisoner tortiously escapes from the custody of the gaoler, he may be retaken; and the sheriff, &c. may pursue a person escaping into that or any other county; and if he retakes the prisoner on fresh pursuit before action brought, it shall excuse the sheriff, for there the prisoner shall be said to be in execution still. 3 Rep. 44: Cro. Jac. 657: 1 Jon. 144: 1 Rol. Abr. 808. And where the sheriff is to answer the debt and damages for such escape, he shall have his counter remedy against the party escaping; and may take him at any time and place, and imprison him till he hath satisfied the sheriff as much as he hath paid to the plaintiff; or he may bring an action upon the case against the prisoner, and so relieve himself. 5 Rep. 52: Cro. Eliz. 393.

It was formerly held that the sheriff, &c. might give fresh pursuit in evidence, and need not have pleaded it. See 1 Mod. 116: 1 Sid. 13.

But now, by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. sect. 6. it is enacted, "That no retaking on fresh pursuit shall be given in evidence, unless the same be specially pleaded; nor shall any special plea be allowed, unless oath be first made in writing by the defendant, and filed in the proper office of the respective courts, that the prisoner for whose escape such action is brought, did, without his consent, privacy or knowledge, make such escape; and if such affidavit shall at any time afterwards appear to be false, and the defendant shall be convicted thereof by due course of law, he shall forfeit the sum of 500*l.*" See title Sheriff.

A voluntary return of a prisoner, after an escape, before action brought is equivalent to a re-taking on a fresh pursuit: but it must be pleaded. 2 Term Rep. 126.

ESCAPE, (B). I. II.

(B). Next as to ESCAPES IN CRIMINAL CASES.

- I. 1. When shall be deemed an Escape; 2. where it shall be adjudged Voluntary, and where Negligent.
- II. Where the Prisoner may be re-taken after an Escape, and where the Escape is excused by such a Re-taking; or by Killing the Prisoner, if he cannot be re-taken.
- III. 1. How the Officer suffering an Escape is to be indicted, and 2. how the Escape is to be tried and adjudged.
- IV. Of the Punishment of 1. voluntary, and 2. negligent Escapes; and 3. Of Persons aiding and assisting Prisoners to attempt their Escape.

I. 1. A man must be committed to prison by lawful mittimus; or breach of prison and escaping is not felony. If a party is committed for treason, to break prison and escape is but felony; but if a prisoner let out traitors, it will be treason. H. P. C. 109: 2 Inst. 590. Where one is imprisoned for petit larceny, or killing a man se defendendo, &c. to break prison and escape is not felony; and if a prison be set on fire, not by the privy of the prisoner he may break prison for the safety of his life. 2 Inst. 590. A gaoler refusing to receive a person arrested by the constable for felony, whereby he is let go, is guilty of an escape; but there must be an actual arrest, which arrest must be justifiable, to make an escape; for if it be for a supposed crime, where no crime was committed, and the party is neither indicted nor appealed, &c. it is no escape to suffer a person to go at large. 1 & 2 Coron. 224: Bro. Esca 27, 28. If a private person arrest another for suspicion of felony, he is to deliver him to a public officer, who ought to have the custody of him; for if he let him go, it will be an escape. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. And if no officer will receive him, he is to deliver him to the township where arrested; or get him bailed.

1. A mere private man, knows B to have committed felony, and thereupon arrests him; he is lawfully in custody of A. until he be discharged, by delivering him to a constable or common gaol; and therefore if he voluntarily suffers such person to escape, though he were no officer, nor B. indicted, it is felony in A. But it is otherwise if he never takes him nor attempts it, and lets him go. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 594. Justices of peace in their sessions are empowered to inquire of escapes of persons arrested, and imprisoned for felony. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 3.

2. There can be no doubt, but that where-ever an officer, who hath the custody of a prisoner, charged with and guilty of a capital offence, doth knowingly give him his liberty, with an intent to save him, either from his trial or execution, he is guilty of a voluntary escape, and thereby involved in the guilt of the same crime of which the prisoner was guilty and stood charged with. And it seems to be the opinion of Sir Matthew Hale, that in some cases an officer may be adjudged guilty of such escape, who hath not such intent, but only means to give his prisoner that liberty which by the law he hath no colour of right to give him.

Thus, to bail a person not bailable by law is a negligent escape. Plowd. 476. And it is said that the crime is equal in a justice of peace, for taking a felon out of prison, without bail; or suffering him to go at large without commitment, &c. where the offender confesseth the felony, as it is in the case of a gaoler's permitting an escape. Dalt. 382.

If the gaoler so closely pursue the prisoner, who flies from him, that he retake him without losing sight of him, the law looks on the prisoner so far in his power all the time, as not to adjudge such a flight to amount at all to an escape; but if the gaoler once lose sight of the prisoner, and afterwards retake him, he seems in strictness to be guilty of an escape; and a forinvi therefore, if he kill him in the pursuit, he is in like manner guilty, tho' he never lost sight of him, and could not otherwise take him, not only because the King loses the benefit he might have had from the attainder of the prisoner, by the forfeiture of his goods, &c. but also because the public justice is not so well satisfied by the killing him in such an extrajudicial manner. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. See post. Div. II.

II. It seems to be clearly agreed by all the books, that an officer making a fresh pursuit after a prisoner, who hath escaped through his negligence, may retake him at any time after, whether he find him in the same or in a different county. And it is said generally in some books, that an officer who hath negligently suffered a prisoner to escape, may retake him where-ever he finds him, without mentioning any fresh pursuit; and indeed, since the liberty gained by the prisoner is wholly owing to his own wrong, there seems to be no reason he should take any manner of advantage from it. But where a gaoler hath voluntarily suffered a prisoner to escape, it is said by some that he can no more justify the retaking him, than if he had never had him in custody before, because by his own free consent he hath admitted, that he hath nothing to do with him.

Wherever a prisoner, by the negligence of his keeper, gets so far out of his power that the keeper loses sight of him, the keeper is shabby at the discretion of the court, notwithstanding he retook him immediately after; for it seems agreed, that this is to be adjudged a negligent escape, which implies an offence, and consequently that it must be punishable. It is true indeed, that in an action against a gaoler for suffering one arrested in a civil action to escape, it is a good excuse for the gaoler, that before the action brought, he took the prisoner upon fresh suit, which is well maintained by shewing that he pursued him in mediocritate, after notice of the escape, though it were some hours after it, and retook him; but it does not from hence follow, that the like excuse will serve for the negligent escape of a criminal, because this is an offence against the publick, but the other is only a private damage to the party: neither will it be an hardship to the officer, to be exposed to such punishment as the court, in discretion, shall think fit to impose upon him for the negligent escape of a criminal, as it would be to be liable to an action of escape, for suffering a person in his custody, in a civil action, to escape; for that in the former case the court would moderate his fine according to the circumstances of the whole matter, and would certainly mitigate, if not wholly excuse it, if he should appear to have taken all reasonable care; but in the other case, if he should be liable to an action, his judgment would not lie in the discretion of the court, but he would be bound to pay the whole debt, for which the party was in custody.

ESCAPE, (B). III. IV.

If the escape should be adjudged against him. However it is certain, that it will be no advantage to a gaoler to re-take his prisoner, after he has been fined for the escape, as is shown in the precedent section of Hawk. P. C. also it is clear that he cannot excuse himself by killing a prisoner in the pursuit, though he could not possibly retake him; but must, in such case, be contented to submit to such fine as his negligence shall appear to deserve. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

III. 1. The indictment must expressly shew, that the party was actually in the defendant's custody for a crime, action, or commitment for it; and that it is not sufficient to say, that he was in the defendant's custody, and charged with such a crime; for that a person in custody may be so charged, and yet not be in custody by reason of such charge: and it seems also, that every such indictment must expressly shew that the prisoner went at large. Also it seems necessary, to shew the time when the offence was committed, for which the party was in custody, not only that it may appear, that it was prior to the escape, but also that it was subsequent to the last general pardon. Also it seems clear, that every indictment for a voluntary escape must, alledge that the defendant feloniè & voluntarie A. B. aut laudem re permisit; and must also shew the species of the crime for which the party was imprisoned; for it is not sufficient to say in general, that he was in custody for felony, &c.

The crime of the prisoner escaping, for which the gaoler is answerable, must be such as it was at the time of the escape; as where a person is committed for dangerously wounding another, it is trespass only, and not felony, till the party wounded is dead: and he who suffers another to escape who was in custody for felony, cannot be arraigned for such escape as for felony, until the principal is attainted, but he may be indicted and tried for misprision before the attainder of the principal. And in high treason it is said the escape is immediately punishable, whether the party escaping be ever convicted or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. See post IV. 1.

2. Where persons, being present in a court of record, are committed to prison by such court, the keeper of the gaol is bound to have them always ready, whenever the court shall demand them of him; and if he shall fail to produce them at such demand, the court will adjudge him guilty of an escape, without any further inquiry, unless he have some reasonable matter to alledge in his excuse; as that the prison was set on fire, or broke open by enemies, &c. for he shall be concluded, by the record of the commitment, to deny that the prisoners were in his custody. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

As to other prisoners who are not so committed, but are in the custody of a gaoler, sheriff, constable, or other person, by any other means whatsoever, it seems agreed, that the person who has them in custody is in no case punishable for their escape, except in some special cases, until it be presented; for by Stat. West. 1. c. 3. it is enacted that "Nothing be demanded nor taken, nor levied by the sheriff, nor by any other, for the escape of a thief, or felon, until it be judged for an escape by the justices in eyre; and that he who does otherwise, shall restore to him or them that have paid it, as much as he or they have taken or received, and as much also unto the King."

It hath been adjudged, that this statute restrains on the court of King's Bench from receiving such presentments; for that its jurisdiction includes in it that of justices in eyre, and this court is itself the highest court of eyre. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

It is farther enacted by Stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 14. "That the escape of thieves and felons, and the chattels of felons, and of fugitives, and also escapes of clerks convicted, out of their ordinary's prison, from thenceforth to be judged before any of the King's justices, shall be levied from time to time, as they shall fall, as well of the time past as time to come." By which it seems to be implied, that other justices, as well as those in eyre, may take cognizance of escapes; and it is certain, that justices of gaol-delivery may punish justices of peace for a negligent escape, in admitting persons to bail, who are not bailable. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

And it is farther enacted, by Stat. 1 Ric. 3. cap. 3. "That justices of peace shall have authority to inquire, in their sessions, of all manner of escapes of every person arrested and imprisoned for felony."

Wherever an escape is finable, the presentment of it is traversable; but where the offence is amerciable only, there the presentment is of itself conclusive; such amercements being reckoned among those minima de quibus non curat lex; and this distinction seems to be well warranted by the old books. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

IV. 1. A voluntary escape amounts to the same kind of crime, and is punishable in the same degree, as the offence of which the party was guilty, and for which he was in custody, whether it be treason, felony, or trespass; and whether the person escaping were actually committed to some gaol, or under an arrest only, and not committed; and whether he were attainted, or only accused of such crime, and neither indicted nor appealed: and it is said to be no excuse of such escape, that the prisoner had been acquitted on an indictment of death, and only committed till the year and day be passed, to give the widow or heir of the deceased, an opportunity of bringing their appeal, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

But the officer cannot be thus punished till the original delinquent hath actually received judgment, or been attainted upon verdict, confession, or outlawry of the crime for which he was so committed or arrested: otherwise it might happen that the officer might be punished for treason or felony, and the person arrested and escaping might be acquitted of the charge against him. But, before the conviction of the principal party, the officer thus neglecting his duty may, be fined and imprisoned for a misdemeanor. 1 Hal. P. C. 588, 9. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

Also such an escape, suffered by one who wrongfully takes upon him the keeping of a gaol, seems to be punishable in the same manner as if he were never to rightfully intitled to such custody; for that the crime is in both cases of the very same ill consequence to the public; and there seems to be no reason that a wrongful officer should have greater favour than a rightful, and that for no other reason, but because he is a wrongful one. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

Also if the warrant of a commitment do plainly and expressly charge the party with treason or felony, but in some other respect be not strictly formal, yet it seems, that that it may be probably argued, that the gaoler suffering an escape, is as much punishable, as if the prisoner were actually taken. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

None shall suffer capital punishment for the crime of another, so that a principal gaoler is only liable for a voluntary escape suffered by his deputy. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

2. Whoever de facto occupies the office of gaoler is liable to answer for a negligent escape; and it is no way material whether his title to the office be legal or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. A sheriff is as much liable to answer for an escape suffered by his bailiff, as if he had actually suffered it himself, and the court may charge either the sheriff or bailiff for such an escape; and if a deputy gaoler be not sufficient to answer a negligent escape, his principal must answer for him; but if the gaoler who suffers an escape, have an estate for life, or years in the office, it is not agreed how far he in reversion is liable to be punished. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

Wherever a person is found guilty, upon an indictment, or presentment, of a negligent escape of a criminal actually in his custody, he ought to be condemned in a certain sum to be paid to the King, which seems most properly to be called a Fine.

It hath been holden, that a negligent escape may be pardoned by the King before it happens, but that a voluntary one cannot so be pardoned. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

And it seems by the Common law, the penalty for suffering the negligent escape of a person attainted, was of course 100*l.* and for suffering such escape of a person indicted, and not attainted, was 5*l.* but if the person escaping were neither attainted nor indicted, it seems that it was left to the discretion of the court to assess such a reasonable forfeiture as should seem proper; and if the party had twice escaped, it seems, that the penalties above mentioned were of course to be doubled; yet it seems, that the forfeiture was to be no greater for suffering a prisoner, committed on two several accusations, to escape, than if he had been committed but on one. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

As to the manner offences of this kind are punishable by statute, it is recited by Stat. 5 Ed. 3. c. 8, "That persons indicted of felonies in times past, had removed the indictments before the King and there yielded themselves, and by the marshals of the King's Bench had been incontinently let to bail, and after had done many evil deeds, &c." And thereupon it is enacted, "That if any such prisoner be found wandering out of prison, by bail, or without bail, and that he be found at the King's suit, or at the suit of the party, the marshal which shall be found thereof guilty, shall have half a year's imprisonment, and be ransomed at the King's will; and the justices shall thereof make inquiry when they see time; and as to the marshals, it shall be done within the verge that which reason will. And in case that the marshals suffer by their assent such prisoners to escape, they shall be at law, as before the time of the statute they had been. And the King intendeth not by this statute to lose the escape, where he ought to have the same."

Also it is enacted by Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 10, "That every sheriff have the custody of the King's common gaols, during the time of his office, except all gaols whereof any person or persons have the keeping of estate of inheritance."

And that all letters patent made for term of years, or years, of the keeping of the said gaols, &c. shall be annulled and void. The penalties for escapes, inflicted by the subsequent part of this statute, have been expired about 300 years. See Ruffhead's Statutes: 1 Burn's Jurr. and Keble's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 20. § 35. p. 207.

3. By Stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 31, It is enacted, That persons who in any ways assist a prisoner, committed for treason, or felony, to attempt his escape from any gaol, shall be adjudged guilty of felony and be transported; and if the prisoner be committed for any other crime; or upon process for 100*l.* debt, &c. the offenders are liable to fine and imprisonment. And where any person renders any arms, instrument or disguise, to a prisoner in gaol for felony, &c. or for his use, in order to an escape, it is likewise felony and transportation. Also if one assist any prisoner to escape from any constable, or other officer or person in whose custody he is, by virtue of a warrant of commitment for felony, it is declared to be the like offence.

See also Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. § 5: 24 Geo. 3. c. 56; where to assist felons convict to make their escape from the persons to whom they are delivered to be transported is felony without clergy. See 3 P. Wm. 439.

The indictment on the above Stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 31, must state that the instruments were conveyed to the prisoner, with a design to effectuate his escape. But no indictment can be maintained on this statute for contributing to the escape of a prisoner committed on suspicion only. See Litch's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 21. § 11.

RESCAPE-WARRANT. If any person committed or charged in custody in the King's Bench or Fleet prison, in execution, or on mesne process, &c. go at large; on oath thereof before a judge of the court where the action was brought, an escape-warrant shall be granted, directed to all sheriffs, &c. throughout England, to retake the prisoner, and commit him to gaol where taken, there to remain till the debt is satisfied: and a person may be taken on a Sunday upon an escape-warrant. Stat. 1 Ann. c. 6. And the judges of the respective courts may grant warrants, upon oath to be made before persons commissioned by them to take affidavits in the country, (such oath being first filed) as they might do upon oath made before themselves. 5 Ann. c. 9.

A sheriff ought not to receive a person taken on an escape-warrant, &c. from any but an officer; not from the rabble, &c. which is illegal. 3 Salk 149. A person being arrested and carried to Newgate by virtue of an escape-warrant, moved to be discharged, because he said he was abroad by a day-rule when taken; but it appearing by affidavit, that he was taken upon the escape-warrant before the court of B. R. sat that morning, they refused to set him at liberty. 2 Ld. Raym. 927.

ESCEPPA, A Stopp, or measure of corn. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 283, See Sceppa.

ESCHEAT. Escheata: from the old French eschair to fall, or happen.] The casual descent, in the nature of forfeiture, of lands and tenements within his manor to a lord; either on failure of issue of the tenant dying seized, or on account of the felony of such tenant. See this Dict. title Tenure, II 7: and 2 Comm. 251—256.

By attainder, for treason or other felony, the blood of the person attainted is so corrupted, as to be rendered no longer inheritable. Great care must be taken to distinguish between forfeiture of lands to the King, and this species of escheat to the lord; which, by reason of their similitude in some circumstances, and because the crown is very frequently the immediate lord of the fee, and therefore entitled to both, have been often confounded together. But in fact escheat operates in subordination to this more ancient and superior law of forfeiture. 2 Inst. 64: Salk. 85: See title Forfeiture; Tenure.

The doctrine of escheat upon attainder, taken singly, is this, that the blood of the tenant, by the commission of any felony; (under which denomination all treasons were formerly comprised. 3 Inst. 15: 1st. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. § 17) is corrupted and stained, and the original donation of the feud is thereby determined. Upon the thorough demonstration of which guilt, by legal attainder, the feudal covenant and mutual bond of fealty are held to be broken, the estate instantly falls back from the offender to the lord of the fee, and the inheritable quality of his blood is extinguished and blotted out for ever. In consequence of which corruption and extinction of hereditary blood, the land of all felons would immediately revert in the lord, but that the superior law of forfeiture intervenes, and intercepts it in its passage; in case of treason for ever, in case of other felony, for only a year and a day. 2 Inst. 36: See title Tenure II. 7.

It has been holden, that a saving against the corruption of blood in a statute concerning felony, doth by consequence save the land to the heir, so as not to escheat; because the escheat to the lord for felony is only pro defectu hereditatis, occasioned by the corruption of blood: but it hath been adjudged, that a saving against the corruption of blood, in a statute concerning treason, doth not save the land to the heir: for in treason the land goes to the King by way of immediate forfeiture. 3 Inst. 47. 1 Salk. 85.

Inheritances of things not lying in tenure, as of rents, commons, &c. cannot escheat to the lord, because there is no term: nor descent, by reason the blood is corrupted: though they are forfeited to the King by an attainder of treason, and the profits of them shall be also forfeited to the King on attainder of felony, during the life of the offender; and after his death it is said the inheritance shall be extinguished. 2 Hack. P. C. c. 49. which see.

In case of escheat, the blood of the tenant being utterly corrupted and extinguished, it follows, not only that all that he has at the time of his offence committed shall escheat from him, but also that he shall be incapable of inheriting any thing for the future. This further illustrates the distinction between forfeiture and escheat. If therefore a father be seized in fee, and the son commits treason and is attainted, and then the father dies:

the land shall escheat to the lord, because the son by the corruption of his blood, is incapable to be heir, and there can be no other heir during his life, but nothing shall be forfeited to the King, for the son never had any interest in the lands to forfeit. Co. Litt. 13. In this case the escheat operates, and not the forfeiture; but in the following instance the forfeiture works, and not the escheat. As where a new felony is created by act of parliament, and it is provided (as is frequently the case) that it shall not extend to corruption of blood. Here the lands of the felon shall not escheat to the lord, but yet the profits of them shall be forfeited to the King for a year and a day, and so long after as the offender lives. 3 Inst. 47. See titles Attainder; Forfeiture.

Husband and wife, tenants in special tail; the husband is attainted of treason and executed, leaving issue; on the death of the wife the lands shall escheat, because the issue in tail ought to make his conveyance by father and mother, and from the father he cannot by reason of the attainder. Dyer 322. If tenant in fee simple is attainted of treason, and executed, upon his death the fee is vested in the King, without office found, yet he must bring a scire facias against the tenants; lands shall never escheat to a lord of whom they are holden, until office found. 3 Rep. 10.

Escheat seldom happens to the lord for want of an heir to an estate; but when it doth, before the lord enters, the homage jury of the lord's court ought to present it. 2 Inst. 35. Land shall escheat to the lord, where heirs are born after attainder of felony, 3 Rep. 40. Though if the King pardons a felon before conviction, the lord shall not have his lands by escheat; for the lord hath no title before attainder. Owen 67: 2 Nell. Abr. 744. If on appeal of death or other felony, process is awarded against the party, and pending the process he conveyeth away the land, and after is outlawed, the conveyance is good to defeat the lord of his escheat; but if where a person is indicted of felony, pending the process against him, he conveys away his land, and afterwards is outlawed, the conveyance shall not prevent the lord of his escheat. Co. Litt. 13. See further this Dict. titles Attainder, Corruption of Blood; Forfeiture.

As a consequence of this doctrine of escheat, all lands of inheritance immediately reverting in the lord, the wife of the felon was liable to lose her dower, till the Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12: and still by Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11, the wife of one attaint of high treason shall not be endowed. See title Dower.

There is one singular instance in which lands held in fee-simple are not liable to escheat to the lord, even when their owner is no more, and hath left no heirs to inherit them. And this is the case of a Corporation; for if that comes by any accident to be dissolved, the donor or his heirs shall have the land again in reversion, and not the lord by the escheat; which is perhaps the only instance where a reversion can be expectant on a grant in fee-simple absolute. See title Corporation.

ESCHEATOR, eschætor] Was an officer appointed by the Lord Treasurer, &c. in every county, to make inquests of titles by escheat; which inquests were to be taken by good and lawful men of the county, impanelled by the sheriff. Stats. 14 Ed. 3. c. 8. 34 Ed. 3. c. 13. 8 H. 6. c. 16. tenants, who held by knight-service, or otherwise of the King; and certified their inquisitions into the Exchequer; and Fitzherbert called them officers of record. P. N. B. 100. No eschetor could continue in his office above one year; and whereas before the statute of Westm. i. c. 24. Escheators, sheriffs, &c. would seize into the King's hands the freehold of the subjects, and thereby disseise them; by this act it is provided that no seizure can be made of lands or tenements into the King's hands, before office found. 3 Inst. 206. And no lands can be granted before the King's title is found by inquisition. Stat. 18 H. 6. c. 6. The office of eschetor is an ancient office; and was formerly of great use to the crown; but having its chief dependance on the court of wards, which is taken away by act of parliament, it is now in a manner out of date. 4 Inst. 225. ESCHECCUM. A jury or inquisition. Matt. Paris. Anno. 1240.

ESCHIPARE. To build or equip.—Du Cange. See Eschippamentum.

ESCROW. A deed delivered to a third person, to be the deed of the party making it, upon a future condition, when a certain thing is performed; and then it is to be delivered to the party to whom made. It is to be delivered to a stranger, mentioning the condition; and has relation to the first delivery. 2 Rol. Abr. 25, 26: Co. Lit. 31. A delivery as an escrow signifies, in fact, as a scrowl or writing, which is not to take effect as a deed, till the condition be performed. Co. Lit. 36. See title Deed III. 7.

ESCUAGE. See title Tenure II. 8.

ESCURARE. To scour or cleanse. Charta Antiqua.

ESGLISE. Fr.] A church; in the old books a division containing the law relative to advowsons, churchwardens, &c. L. Fr. Dist.

ESSINGÆ. The Kings of Kent, so called from the first King Oetha, who was surnamed Ese: he was grandfather of King Ethelbert.

ESKETORES. from the Fr. eschetor.] Robbers or destroyers of other men's lands and fortunes.—Plac. Parl. 20 Ed. 1.

ESKIPPAMENTUM. Skippage, tackle or ship furniture: Sir Rob. Cott.

ESKIPPER. Fr.] To ship, and skipped is used for shipped. Crompt. Jur. Cur.

ESKIPPESON. Shipping or passage by sea. Humphrey Earl of Bucks, in a deed dated 13 Feb. 22 H. 6, covenants with Sir Philip Cherbwind, his lieutenant of the castle of Calais, to give him allowance for his soldiers, skippeson and re skippeson, viz. passage and re-passage by ship.

ESLISORS. See Elsons.

ESNECY. æsnecia, dignitas primogeniti.] A private prerogative allowed to the eldest coparcener, where an estate is descended to daughters for want of heir male, to choose first after the inheritance is divided. Fleta, lib. 5. c. 10. Jus æsnecia is jus primogenituræ; in which sense it may be extended to the eldest son, and his issue, holding first: In the statute of Marlebridge, cap. 9, it is called, initia par: hereditaria. Co. Litt. 166. See title Election.

ESPERONS. Spurs, esperons de or, gilt spurs. 7 Co. Rep. 13.

ESPERVARIUS. Fr. espervier.] A sparrow-hawk. Chart. Forest. cap. 4.

ESQUIRE.

ESPLEES. expletia, from explet.] The products which ground or land yield; as the hay of the meadows, the herbage of the pasture, corn of the arable, rent and services, &c. And of an advowson, the taking of tithes in gross by the parson; of wood, the selling of wood; of an orchard, the fruits growing there; of a mill, the taking of toll, &c. These and such like issues are termed esplees. And it is observed, that in a writ of right of land, advowson, &c. the demandant ought to alledge in his count, that he or his ancestors took the esplees of the thing in demand; otherwise the pleading will not be good. Trin. de Ley. Sometimes this word hath been applied to the farm, or lands, &c. themselves.—Plac. Parl. 30 Ed. 1.

ESPOUSALS. ponsalia.] Are a contract or mutual promise between a man and a woman to marry each other; and where marriages may be consummated, esponsals go before them. Marriage or matrimony is said to be an esposal de presenti, and a conjunction of man and woman in a constant society. Wood's Inst. 57. See title Marriage.

ESQUIRE. from the Fr. Escu, and the Lat. Scutum, in Greek αντρος, which signifies an hide of which shields were anciently made and afterwards covered.] An Esquire was originally he who attending a knight in the time of war, did carry his shield, whence he was called Escuier in French, and Scutifer or Armiger, (i. e. armour-bearer) in Latin.

Hotoman saith, that those whom the French call Esquires were a military kind of vassals, having jus scuti, viz. liberty to bear a shield, and in it the ensigns of their family, in token of their gentility or dignity: but this addition hath not now for a long time had any relation to the office or employment of the person to whom it hath been attributed, as to carrying of arms, &c. but has been merely a title of dignity, and next in degree to a knight.

A sheriff of a county being a superior officer, retains the title of Esquire during his life; in respect of the great trust he has in the common-wealth. The chief of some ancient families are esquires by prescription. Blount.

Esquires and Gentlemen are confounded together by Sir Edward Coke, 2 Inst. 668. He there observes that every Esquire is a Gentleman, and a gentleman is defined to be one qui arma gerit, who bears coat armour; the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family. It is indeed a matter somewhat unsettled what constitutes the distinction, or who is a real Esquire; for it is not an estate, however large, that confers this rank upon its owner. Camden who was himself a herald, distinguishes them the most accurately. And he reckons up four sorts of them. 1. The eldest sons of knights, and their eldest sons in perpetual succession. 2. The eldest sons of younger sons of peers, and their eldest sons in like perpetual succession; both which species of esquires Spelman calls armigeri natalitii; as he denominates the sons themselves of peers armigeri honorarii.—3. Esquires created by the King's letters patent or other investiture, and their eldest sons; see post Esquires of the King. 4. Esquires by virtue of their offices; as justices of the peace and others who bear any office of trust under the crown: [if styled Esquires by the King in their commissions and appointments.] To these may be added esquires of Knights of the Bath, each of whom constitutes three at his installation; and all foreign, foreign, nay Irish peers; for not only these but even the eldest sons of peers of Great Britain, though frequently titular lords, are only esquires in law, and must so be named in all legal proceedings.—Barristers at law seem also now in full possession of the title of Esquire, though originally, as it should seem, attained by usurpation; and being perhaps nearly the same kind of unnecessary addition to their superior degree, as if it were to be annexed or prefixed to that of M. A. or L. L. D.

The Court of C. P. however refused to hear an affidavit read, because a Barrister named in it was not called Esquire. 1 Wils. 224.—See 1 Comm. 406; and the notes there. Spelm. Gloss. 43. and this Dict. title Precedency.

ESQUIRES OF THE KING. Are such who have the title by creation: these, when they are created, have put about their necks a collar of S. S. and a pair of silver spurs is bestowed on them: and they were wont to bear before the Prince in war, a shield or lance. There are four esquires of the King's body, to attend on his Majesty's person. Camd. 111.—These are now disused.

ESSENDI QUIETUM DE TOLONIO. A writ to be quit of toll; it lies for citizens and burgesses of any city or town that by charter or prescription ought to be exempted from toll, where the toll is exacted of them. Reg. Orig. 258. See titles Toll; Corporation; London.

ESSOIGN or ESSOIN. Essonium, Fr. Essoine.] An excuse for him that is summoned to appear and answer to an action, or to perform suit to a court baron, &c. by reason of sickness and infirmity, or other just cause of absence. It is a kind of imparlance, or craving of a longer time, that lies in real, personal and mixed actions: and the plaintiff as well as the defendant shall be essoigned to save his default. Co. Litt. 131. For the mode of entering an Essoin, See Rast. 520.

The causes that serve to essoins, and the essoins are, divers under these heads. 1. Essoin de ultra mare whereby the defendant shall have forty days. 2. De terra sancta, where defendant shall have a year and a day. 3. De malo veniendi, which is likewise called the common essoins. 4. De malo lecti, wherein the defendant may by writ be viewed by four knights. 5. De servitio Regis: Bract. lib. 5: Britton, cap. 122: Fleta. lib. 6. And besides the common essoins de malo veniendi, i. e. by falling sick in coming to the court, and other essoins abovementioned, there were several other excuses, to save a default in real actions; as constraint of enemies, the falling among thieves, floods of water, and breaking down of bridges, &c. 2 Co. Inst. 125.

After issue joined in dower, quare impedit, &c. one essoins only shall be allowed. Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 13. And in writs of assise, attaints, &c. after the tenant hath appeared, he shall not be essoined; but the inquest shall be taken by default. St. 3 Ed. 1. c. 42. Essoin ultra mare will not be allowed, if the tenant be within the four seas; but it shall be turned to a default, c. 44. There is no essoins permitted for an appellant. St. 13 Ed. 1. c. 28. Nor doth essoins lie where any judgment is given; or the party is distrained by his lands; the sheriff is commanded to make him appear; after the party is seen in court, &c. 12 Ed. 2. St. 2.

No essoins de servitio Regis lies when the party is a woman; in a writ of dower; where the party hath an attorney in his suit, &c. Ibid. The essoins day in court is regularly the first day of the term; but the fourth day after is allowed of favour. 1 Lill. 540, 569: 1 Inst. 135.

A corporation is not entitled to an essoins. And the court discourages essoins, and will be glad to use any means to prevent such delay of the defendant, 1 Term. Rep. 16: 2 Wils. 164.—An essoins lies not on a capias to arrest; and the plaintiff may declare and sign judgment, if no plea. 2 Str. 1194.

ESSOIN DAY OF THE TERM. The first return in every term, is, properly speaking, the first day in that term: And thereon the court sits to take essoins, or excuses for such as do not appear according to the summons of the writ: wherefore this is usually called the essoins day of the term. But the person summoned hath three days' grace, beyond the return of the writ in which to make his appearance, and if he appears on the fourth day inclusive, the quarto die post, it is sufficient. 3 Comm. 277: See title Term.

ESSOIN DE MALO VILLE. Is when the defendant is in court the first day; but gone without pleading, and being afterwards surprised by sickness, &c. cannot attend, but sends two essoiners, who openly protest in court that he is detained by sickness in such a village that he cannot come, pro lucrari & pro perdersi; and this will be admitted, for it lies on the plaintiff to prove whether the essoins is true or not.

ESSOINS AND PROFFERS. Words used in the statute 38 H. 8. c. 21. See Profer.

ESTABLISHMENT OF DOWER. Is the assurance or settlement of dower, made to the wife by the husband, on marriage: And assignment of dower, signifies the setting it out by the heir afterwards, according to the establishment. Brit. cap. 102, 103. See title Dower.

ESTACHE. From the Fr. Estacher, to fasten.] A bridge, or stank of stone and timber. Cowel.

ESTANDARD, or Standard. An ensign for horsemen in war. See Standard.

ESTATE.

Fr. Estat. Lat. Status.] That title or interest which a man hath in lands or tenements, &c.

An Estate in lands, tenements and hereditaments, (says Blackstone) signifies such interest as the tenant hath therein; so that if a man grants all his estate in Dale to A. and his heirs, every thing that he can possibly grant shall pass thereby. Co. Litt. 345. It signifies the [stat.] condition, or circumstance, in which the owner stands, with regard to his property. And, to ascertain this with precision and accuracy, estates may be considered in a threefold view: first, with regard to the quantity of interest which the tenant has in the tenement; secondly, with regard to the time at which that quantity of interest is to be enjoyed; and, thirdly, with regard to the number and connections of the tenants.

First with regard to the quantity of interest which the tenant has in the tenement, this is measured by its duration and extent. Thus, either his right of possession is to subsist for an uncertain period, during his own life, or the life of another man; to determine at his own decease, or to remain to his descendants after him; or it is circumscribed within a certain number of years, months, or days; or, lastly, it is infinite and unlimited, being vested in him and his representatives for ever. And this occasions the primary division of estates, into such as are freehold, and such as are less than freehold.

ESTATE.

An estate of freehold, hereditamentum, or frank-tenement, is defined by Britton v. 19, so to "the possession of the soil by a freeman." And St. Germain, (Doct. Stud. 3. 2. d. 22) tells us "that the possession of the land is called in the law of England the frank-tenement, or freehold." Such estate therefore, and no other, as requires actual possession of the land, is legally speaking freehold: which actual possession can, by the course of the Common-law, be only given by the ceremony called livery of seisin, which is the same as the feudal investiture. And from these principles we may extract this description of a freehold; that it is such an estate in lands as is conveyed by livery of seisin; or, in tenements of an incorporeal nature, by what is equivalent thereto. And accordingly it is laid down by Littleton § 59, that where a freehold shall pass, it behoveth to have livery of seisin. As therefore estates of inheritance and estates for life could not by Common-law be conveyed without livery of seisin, these are properly estates of freehold; and, as no other estates were conveyed with the same solemnity, therefore no others are properly freehold estates. 2 Comm. 103; 4.

Mr. Christian, in his note on the above passage says; a freehold estate, seems to be any estate of inheritance, or for life, in either a corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, existing in or arising from real property of free tenure; that is, now, of all which is not copyhold. The learned Commentator himself has elsewhere informed us, that "tithes and spiritual dues are freehold estates, whether the land out of which they issue are bond or free; being a separate and distinct inheritance from the lands themselves." And, in this view, they must be distinguished and excepted from other incorporeal hereditaments, issuing out of lands, as rents, &c. which in general will follow the nature of their principal, and cannot be freehold, unless the stock from which they spring be freehold also. 1 Blackst. Tracts, 116.

Estates of freehold, may then be considered, either as estates of inheritance, or estates not of inheritance.—The former are again divided into inheritances absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and inheritances limited; one species of which is usually called fee-tail.

As to estates and tenants in fee-simple, See this Dict. titles Fee, and Fee simple.

Limited fees, or such estates of inheritance as are clogged and confined with conditions or qualifications of any sort may be divided into two kinds. 1. Qualified or base fees. 2. Fees conditional, so called at the Common-law; and afterwards fee-tail in consequence of the statute de donis. As to these latter see this Dict. titles Tail and Fee Tail.—A base or qualified Fee is such a one as has a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. As in the case of a grant to A. and his heirs tenants of the manor of Dale; in this instance whenever the heirs of A. cease to be tenants of that manor, the grant is entirely defeated.—This estate is a fee, because by possibility it may endure forever in a man and his heirs; yet as that donation depends upon the concurrence of collateral circumstances which qualify and debate the purity of the donation, it is therefore a qualified or base fee. 2 Comm. 109. See 1 List. 27.

Of estates of freehold, not of inheritance but, for life only, some may be called conventional, as being expressly created by the act of the parties; others are merely legal, or created by construction and operation of law. As to estates for life expressly created by deed or grant, see this Dict. title Life Estate.—As to the estate of tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, see title, Tail and Fee Tail.—As to tenant by the Curtesy and tenant in Dower, see those titles.

Of estates less than freehold there are three sorts; 1. Estates for years; 2. Estates at will; as to both which see this Dict. title Lease; 3. Estates by sufferance: as to which see this Dict. title Sufferance.

Besides these several divisions of estates, in point of interest, another species may be mentioned, viz. Estates upon condition; as to which see at large title Condition; and titles Mortgage; Statute-Merchant; Statute-Staple; Elegit.

According to the above division Estates are considered solely with regard to their duration or the quantity of interest which the owners have therein. With regard to the time of their enjoyment, when the actual receipt of the rents and profits begins, Estates may be considered as either in possession or expectancy;—Of expectancies, there are two sorts; one created by the act of the parties, called a Remainder; the other by act of law, called a Reversion.—Of estates in possession, (which are sometimes called estates executed, whereby a present interest passes to and abides in the tenant, not depending on any subsequent circumstance or contingency, as in the cases of estates executory) little or nothing is to be peculiarly observed; all the estates already spoken of, and treated of under the titles referred to, are of this kind. But the doctrine of estates in expectancy, contains some of the nicest and most abstruse learning in the English law.—And as to so much of it as relates to Remainders and Reversions, see this Dict. under those titles, and titles Executory Devise; Limitation.

Estates, with regard to the certainty and the time of the enjoyment of them, are distinguished by Fearne in the introduction to his Essay on Contingent Remainders and Executory Devise, into. 1. Estates vested in possession. 2. Estates vested in interest; as reversions; vested remainders; such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations and other future interests as are not referred to, or made to depend on, a period or event that is uncertain. 3. Estates contingent; as Contingent Remainders; and such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations and other future interests as are referred to, or made to depend on an event that is uncertain.—An estate is vested, when there is an immediate fixed right of present or future enjoyment.—An estate is vested in possession, when there exists a right of present enjoyment.—An estate is vested in interest when there is a present fixed right of future enjoyment.—An estate is contingent when a right of enjoyment is to accrue, on an event which is dubious and uncertain.

With respect to the number and connections of their owners, the tenants who occupy and hold them, Estates of any quantity or length of duration, whether in actual possession or expectancy may be held in four different ways; in severalty; in joint-tenancy; in coparcenary; in common.—He that holds lands in severalty, or is sole tenant thereof, is he that holds them in his own right only, without any other being joined or connected with him in point of interest during his estate therein. This is the most common and usual way of holding an estate; and all estates are supposed to be of this sort, unless unless where they are expressly declared to be otherwise; and in laying down general rules and doctrines, they are usually applied to such estates as are held in severalty. As to estates in joint-tenancy, in coparcenary and in common, see titles Joint-tenants; Parceners.

As to the title to estates, see this Dict. title; and the references there; and as to the different nature of estates according to their several tenures, see this Dict. tit. Tenure.

Estates are acquired divers ways, viz. by descent from a father to the son, &c. Conveyance, or grant from one man to another; by gift or purchase; died or will: And a fee simple is the largest estate that can be in law. 1 Lit. 541.

Estates are real, of lands, &c. or personal, of goods or chattels; otherwise distinguished into freeholds, that descend to the heir, and chattels which go to the executors: Some estates are made by the words of deeds, and others made by law; as an estate in frank-marriage given to a cousin, makes a gift in tail.

Also there is an estate that is implied, where tenant in tail bargains and sells his land to a man and his heirs; by this he hath an estate descendible, and determinable upon the death of the tenant in tail. Co. Lit. 10 Rep. 97. If I give lands in Dale to a certain person for life, and after to his heirs or next heirs, he hath the fee simple; and if it be to his first males, he will have an estate tail. 1 Rep. 66. A man grants to one and his heirs and assigns for his life, and a year over; this is an estate for life only. 39 E. 3. 25; Lit. 46. If a lease be made, and not expressed for what number of years, it is an estate at will. 2 Shep. Ab. 81.

The word estate generally in deeds, grants, and conveyances, comprehends the whole in which the party hath an interest or property, and will pass the same. 3 Mod. 46. A person in possession of an estate mortgaged in fee, by will gave it to his two daughters, and their heirs; one of them married, and then died: And it being a question, whether her share should be held real or personal estate, and go to the heir, or her husband administrator? It was adjudged for the heir; for here the mortgaged lands shall descend as other lands of inheritance, and be subject to the same rules. Preced. Canc. 266. In such case, if the mortgage in fee be paid off, the money shall be considered as land, and belong to his heirs, as the estate in the land would have done. Ibid. See title Mortgage.

Personal estate was devised by a man to his wife for life, and what she left at her death to be divided between his kindred: He died, and the widow married again; this devise over was held good in equity, on a bill brought to have an inventory taken of the estate, and security given not to imbezzle it. But if the same were of small value, that the widow could not live thereupon, without spending the stock, it would be otherwise. See titles Will; Executive Devise.

How far the Acceptance of one Estate shall destroy another.

If a lessee for term of twenty years, accepts of a lease of the same land for ten years, by the lessee's acceptance of the new lease, the term of twenty years is determined in law. 2 Roll. Abr. 469.

Lease for years to R. B. rendering rent; the next year a lease was made of the same lands to the lady P for ninety nine years; the next year the same lands were demised to the said R. B. for forty-one years, who accepted the lease, but that did not extinguish his first lease; because the lessor by making the intermediate lease to the lady P, had only a reversion, and could not afterwards give any interest to R. B. But if it had not been for this intermediate lease, then the acceptance of the second lease for forty-one years had been a surrender of the first. Hutt. 104.

If a man hath a lease for years, which is good in law, and afterwards accepts a new lease of the same lands, which is void in law, this is no surrender in law of the good lease. Hutt. 105. Baker v. Willoughby; Mills v. Whitewood, ibid. S. P.

A man, in consideration of a marriage to be had with M. R. made an estate to her for life of certain lands in full satisfaction of her dower; afterwards they married, and the husband died, and the widow brought a writ of dower against the heir, who pleaded in bar the acceptance of the estate for life: adjudged no good plea; for such acceptance did not bar her of her dower at the Common-law, because she had no title of dower when the acceptance was made; and besides no collateral acceptance can bar any right of inheritance or freehold. See 4 Rep. 1. Vermon's case, and this Dict. title Dower.

A man made a lease of a manor for thirty years, accepting the wood, &c. and afterwards made a lease of the woods to the same lessee for sixty years, and a third lease to him of the manor for thirty years, without any exception; resolved, that by the acceptance of this future lease, the lease for sixty years was surrendered, because by such acceptance the lessee had affirmed, that the lessor had authority to make a new lease. 5 Rep. 11: Lee's case.

In a special verdict in trespass, the case was, a lease was made to husband and wife for their lives, and afterwards they accepted a new lease for themselves and their son: habendum to all three of them, a die datús indenturæ, for the term of their lives with a letter of attorney to make livery: adjudged, that the acceptance of a second lease, to commence a die datús, was a surrender of the first, and this by the express agreement in writing of the lessees themselves; for otherwise the lessor had no power to make a new lease. Moor 636.

ESTOPPEL, From the Fr. Esloper, i. e. Oppsare, obstruere.] An impediment or bar to a right of action arising from a man's own act: or where he is forbidden by law, to speak against his own deed; for by his act or acceptance he may be estopped to alledge or speak the truth. P. N. B. 142: Co. Lit. 352. If a person is bound in an obligation by the name of A. B. and is afterwards sued by that name on the obligation; now he shall not be received to say in abatement, that he is misnamed, but shall answer according to the obligation, though it be wrong; and so far as he is the same person that was bound, he is estopped and forbidden in law to say contrary to his own deed; otherwise he might take advantage of his own wrong, which the law will not suffer. Terms de Ley. If a man enters into a bond, with condition to give to another all the goods which are devised to him by the father; in this case the obligor is estopped to plead that the father made no will, but he may plead that he had not any goods devised to him by his father. 1 Nelf. Abr. 751.

In a deed, all the parties are estopped to say any thing against what is contained in it: it estops a lessee to say that that the lessor had nothing in the land, &c. And parties and privies are bound by estoppel. Lit. 58: Co. Lit. 352: 4 Rep. 53. None but privies and parties shall regularly have advantage by estoppel: But if a man makes a lease of part of a term whereby he is estopped; and after assign away the term, the assignee will be estopped also. 30 H. 6. 2: 4 Rep. 56. In estoppel, both parties must be estopped; and therefore, where an infant or feme covert makes a lease, they are not estopped to say that it is not their deed, because they are not bound by it; and as to them it is void. Cra. Eliz. 36. See title Deed. And though estoppels conclude parties to deeds to say the truth; yet jurors are not concluded, who are sworn ad veritatem de et super premissis dicendam: For they may find any thing that is out of the record; and are not estopped to find truth in a special verdict. 4 Rep. 53: Lut. 570.

An estoppel shall bind only the heir, who claims the right of him to whom the estoppel was. 8 Rep. 53. Acceptance of rent from a disseisor by the disseisee, may be an estoppel: And a widow accepting less than her thirds for dower, is an estoppel, &c. 2 Darr. Abr. 130, 671.

Our books mention three kinds of estoppel, viz. By matter of record, by matter in writing, and by matter in pais. Co. Lit. 352. If a feoffment be made to two, and their heirs, and the feoffor afterwards levies a fine to them, and the heirs of one of them; this will be an estoppel to the other to demand fee-simple according to the deed; for the fine shall enure as a release. 6 Rep. 7, 44. Tenant in tail suffers a recovery, that his issue may avoid; he himself shall be estopped and concluded by it, and may not demand the land against his own recovery. 3 Rep. 3.

The taking of a lease by indenture of a man's own land, whereof he is seised in fee, is an estoppel to claim the fee during the term. Moor, Cas. 323: And. 121. A lease is made to one man for eighty years, and then to another by deed indented for the same term, this second lease may be good by way of estoppel. And if the first determine by surrender, forfeiture, &c, the second lessee shall have the land. Co. Rep. 155. If a lessor at the time of making the lease hath nothing in the land, but after he gets it by purchase or descent, it is a good lease by estoppel. Dyer 256: Plowd. 344: Co. Lit. 47. A recital in a deed shall not estop a person, unless it be of a particular fact, or where it is material; when it may be an estoppel. Cio. Eliz. 362.

The lord, by deed indented, reciting that his tenant holds of him by such services, whereas he doth not, confirms to the tenant, saving the services; it is no estoppel to the tenant. 35 H. 6. 33: Plowd. 130. If one make a deed by duress of imprisonment, and when he is at large makes a defeasance to it; he is estopped to say it was per duress. Bro. Defeas. 17. Where the condition of a bond is in the particularity, as to infeasor J. S. of the manner of D. or to pay such a sum of money as he stands bound to pay to W. S. or to stand to the sentence of J. S. in a matter of tithes in question between them; here the party is estopped to deny any of these things, which in the condition he did grant: But if a condition be in the generality, to infeasor one of all his lands in D. or to be non-suit in all actions, &c. it is no estoppel. Dyer 196: 18 Ed. 4. 54.

If a man in pleading confess the thing he is charged with, he cannot afterwards deny it: Though a plaintiff shall not be estopped to alledge any thing against that which before he hath said in his writ, or declaration; and one may not be estopped by the record upon which he was convicted. 22 H. 7. 24: 2 Leon. 3. 17.

An estoppel ought to be certain and affirmative, and a matter alledged that is not traversable, shall not estop; one may not be estopped by acceptance, before his title accrued; an estoppel must be insisted and relied on; and where there is estoppel against estoppel, it puts the matter at large. Co. Lit. 352: Hob. 207. Estoppels are to be pleaded relying on the estoppel; without demanding judgment fi actio, &c. 4 Rep. 53. See title Pleading.

ESTOVERS. See title Common of Estovers. This word hath been taken for any kind of sustenance; as Bracton uses it, for that sustenance or allowance, which a man committed for felony is to have out of his lands or goods for himself and his family during his imprisonment. Bract. lib. 3. tract 2. cap. 18. And the Stat. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 3. applies it to an allowance in meat, clothes, &c. In which sense it has been used for a wife's alimony.

ESTOVERS HABENDIS, Writ de. A writ at Common law, for a woman divorced from her husband, à mens et thoro, to recover her alimony, sometimes called her estovers. 1 Lev. 6. See title Baron and Feme.

ESTRAY, Extrahura, from the old Fr. Estrayeur.] Is any beast that is not wild, found within a lordship, and whose owner is not known. In which case if it be tried and proclaimed according to law in the church and two nearest market-towns on two market days, and is not claimed by the owner within a year and a day, it belongs to the king; and now most commonly, by grant of the crown to the lord of the liberty. Brit. cap. 17. Any beasts may be estrays, that are by nature tame or reclaimable, and in which there is a valuable property as sheep, oxen, swine and horses.—But animals upon which the law sets no value, as a dog or cat; and animals feræ naturæ, as a bear or wolf cannot be considered as estrays. 1 Comm. 289. Swans may be estrays, but no other fowl, and are to be proclaimed, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 878. If the beast stray to another lordship within the year, after it hath been an estrays, the first lord cannot re-take it, for, until the year and day be past, and proclamation made as aforesaid, he hath no property; and therefore the possession of the second lord is good against him. Cio. Eliz. 716: Finch L. 177. If the cattle were never proclaimed, the owner may take them at any time; And where a beast is proclaimed as the law directs, if the owner claims it in a year and a day, he shall have it again, but must pay the lord for keeping. 1 Rol. Abr. 879: Finch 177.

An owner may seize an estrays, without telling the marks, or proving the property, (which may be done at the trial, if contested,) and tendering amends generally is good in this case, without shewing the particular sum; because the owner of the estrays is no wrong-doer, and knows not how long it has been in the possession of the lord, &c. which makes it different from trespass, where a certain sum must be tendered. 2 Salk 686. In case of an estrays the lord ought to make a demand of what the amends should be for the keeping; and then if the party thinks the demand unreasonable, he must tender sufficient amends; but if what he tenders is not enough, the lord shall take issue, and it is to be settled by the jury. Nov 144. A beast estrays is not to be used in any manner, except in case of necessity; as to milk a cow, or the like, but not to ride an horse. Cio Jac. 148. 1 Rol. 673. Estrays of the the Forest are mentioned in the statute of 27 H. 8. cap. 7. The King's cattle cannot be strays or forfeited, &c.

ESTREAT. Extratum. The true copy or note of some original writing or record, and especially of fines, amerciaments, &c. imposed on the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff or other officer. F. N. B. 37, 76. Stat. Westminster 2. c. 8.—Justices, commissioners, &c. are to deliver their estreats into the Exchequer yearly after Michaelmas: And fines to have writs, which shall be entered in the estreat, in order as they are entered in the Chancery Rolls, &c. Stats. 51 H. 3. Stat. 5: 16 Ed. 2. These estreats relate to fines for crimes and offences, defaults and negligences of parties in suits and officers, non-appearance of defendants, and jurors, &c. And all forfeited recognizances are to be first estreated in the Exchequer, by sheriffs of counties: on which process issues to levy the same to the use of the King. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 22.

Estreats are to be levied on the right persons: And sheriff's estreats must be in two parts, indented and sealed by the sheriff, and two justices of the peace; who are to view them, and one of them is to remain with the sheriff, and the other with the justices. Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 15. The estreats of fines, at the quarter sessions, are to be made by the justices, and to be double, one whereof is to be delivered to the sheriff by indenture. Stat. 14 R. 2. cap. 11. Fines, post fines, forfeitures, &c. must be estreated into the Exchequer twice a year, on pain of 50 l. And officers are to deliver in their returns of estreats upon oath. Stats. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22: 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. It is the course of the court of B. R. to send the estreats twice a year into the Exchequer, viz. on the 1st day of the two quarable terms; but in extraordinary cases there may be a rule to estreat them sooner. 1 Salk. 45. Amerciaments are not usually discharged on motion, and there ought to be a confessio of the estreat; though the court may give leave to the sheriff to compound them. Ibid. 54: 1 Nels. 207: See Stats. 3 Ed. 1. c. 45: 27 Ed. 1. R. 1. c. 2: 3 H. 1. c. 1: 3 Geo 1. c. 15. s. 12: and further titles Sheriff; Justices of Peace.

ESTRECIATUS, Strengthened, applied to roads. R. Hoveden, p. 783.

ESTREPE, Fr. Estropier. To make spoil in lands to the damage of another, as of the reversioner, &c.

ESTREPEMENT, Estrepamentum from the Fr. Estropier, mutilate, or from the Lat. Extricare. Any spoil made by tenant for life, upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in reversion; It also signifies the making land barren by continual ploughing. Stat. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 13. It seems by the derivation, that estrepement is the unreasonable drawing away the heart of the ground, by ploughing and sowing it continually, without manuring or other good husbandry, whereby it is impaired: And yet est opier signifying mutilate, may no less be applied to the cutting down trees, or lopping them further than the law allows. In ancient records, we often find vastum & estrepamentum facere; to make strip and waste.

This word is used for a writ, which lies in two cases; the one, by the Stat. of Glouc 6 E. 1. c. 13, when a person having an action depending, as a formedon, writ of right, &c. sues to prohibit the tenant from making waste, during the suit; the other is for the demandant, who is adjudged to recover seisin of the land in question, after judgment and before execution sued by the writ of habere facias possessionem, to prevent waste being made till he gets into possession. Stat. Glouc 76: Rep. 115: 31: P. N. B. 60, 61: 3 Rep. 115.

In suing out these two writs, this difference was formerly observed; that in an action merely proffessory where no damages are recovered, a writ of estrepement might be had at any time pendente lite; nay, even at the time of suing out the original writ or writ of prohibere. But in an action where damages were recovered, the demandant could only have a writ of estrepement, if he was apprehensive of waste, after verdict had; for with regard to damages before the verdict was given, it was presumed the jury would consider that in assessing the damages. R. N. B. 60, 1. But now it seems to be held by an equitable construction of the Stat. of Glouc. and in advancement of the remedy, that a writ of estrepement to prevent waste, may be had in every stage, as well of such actions wherein damages are recovered, as of those wherein only possession is had of the lands: for perhaps the tenant may not be able to satisfy the demandant his full damages. Id. 61. And therefore now in an action of waste itself to recover the place wasted, and also damages, a writ of estrepement will lie as well before as after judgment. For the plaintiff cannot recover damages for more waste than is contained in his original complaint: neither is he at liberty to assign or give in evidence any waste made after suing out the writ: it is therefore reasonable that he should have this writ of preventive justice, since he is in his present suit debarred of any further remedy. 5 Rep. 115.

If a writ of estrepement forbidding waste be directed and delivered to the tenant himself, as it may be, and he afterwards proceeds to commit waste, an action may be carried on upon the foundation of this writ, wherein the only plea of the tenant can be, non fecit vastum contra prohibitionem; and if upon verdict it be found that he did, the plaintiff may recover costs and damages; or the party may proceed to punish the defendant for the contempt. Moor 100.

As a writ of estrepement may be directed either to the tenant and his servants, or to the sheriff; if it be directed to the tenant and his servant, and they are duly served with it, if they afterwards commit waste, they may be committed to prison for this contempt of the writ. But it is said not to be so, when directed to the sheriff, because he may raise the posse comitatus to resist them who make waste. Hob. 85. Though it hath been adjudged, that the sheriff may likewise imprison offenders, if he be put to it; and that he may make a warrant to others to do it. 5 Rep. 115: 2 Inst. 329.

The writ of estrepement lies properly where the plaintiff in a real action shall not recover damages by his action; and as it were supplies damages; for damages and costs may be recovered for waste, after the writ of estrepement is brought. See Moor 100: 2 Inst. 328. If tenants commit waste in houses assigned a feme for dower, on her bringing action of dower, writ of estrepement lies. 5 Rep. 115: See Cro. Eliz. 114: Moor 622. But pending a writ of partition between coparceners, if the tenant commit waste, this writ will not be granted; because there is equal interest between the parties, and the writ will not lie, but where the interest of the tenant is to be disproved. Goldsb. 50: 2 Nels. Abr. 754.

In the Chancery, on filing of a bill, and before answer, the court will grant an injunction to stay waste, &c. 1 Lil. 547. See titles Chancery; Waste.

ETHELING or ÆTHELING, Sax.] Signifies noble, and among the English Saxons, it was the title of the Prince, or the King's eldest son. Camden. See Adeling.

EVASION, Evasio.] A subtle endeavouring to set aside truth, or to escape the punishment of the law; which will not be induced. If a person says to another that he will not strike him, but will give him a pot of ale to strike self, and accordingly he strikes, the returning of it is punishable; and if the person striking be killed, it is murder; for no man shall evade the justice of the law, by such a pretence to cover his malice. 1 R. P. C. 81. No one may plead ignorance of the law to evade it, &c.

EVENINGS, The delivery at even or night of a certain portion of grass or corn, &c. to a customary tenant, who performs the service of cutting, mowing, or reaping, for his lord, given him as a gratuity or encouragement. Kennet's Gloss.

EVESDROPPERS, See Eaves-droppers.

EVICTION, From evincere to overcome.] A recovery of land, &c. by form of law. If land is evicted, before the time of payment of rent on a lease, no rent shall be paid by the lessee. 10 Rep. 128. Where lands taken on extent are evicted or recovered by better title, the plaintiff shall have a new execution. 4 Rep. 66. If a widow is evicted of her dower or thirds, she shall be endowed in the other lands of the heir. 2 Danv. Abr. 670. And if on an exchange of lands, either party is evicted of the lands given in exchange, he may enter on his own lands. 4 Rep. 121.

EVIDENCE,

EVIDENTIA.] Proof by testimony of witnesses, on oath; or by writings or records.

It is called Evidence, because thereby the point in issue in a cause to be tried, is to be made evident to the jury; for probationes debent esse evidentes et perspicue. Co. Lit. 283. The evidence to a jury ought to be upon the oath of witnesses; or upon matters of record, or by deeds proved, or other like authentic matter, 1 Lil. Abr. 547. And evidence containeth testimony of witnesses, and all other proofs to be given and produced to a jury for the finding of any issue joined between parties. Co. Lit. 283.

The system of evidence, as now established in our courts of Common-law, is very full, comprehensive and refined; a summary of the law on the subject is here presented.

The nature of the present work will not allow room for the numberless niceties and distinctions of what is, or is not, legal evidence to a jury. A few of the general heads and leading maxims, relative to this point, as well in civil, as criminal cases, together with some observations on the manner of giving Evidence, are first selected.

Evidence, as has been already remarked, signifies that which demonstrates, makes evident or clear, or ascertains the truth of the very fact or point in issue, either on the one side or on the other; and no evidence ought to be admitted to any other point. Therefore upon an action of debt, when the defendant denies his bond by the plea of non est factum, and the issue is, whether it be the defendant's deed or no, he cannot give a release of this bond in Evidence, for that does not destroy the bond, and therefore does not prove the issue which he has chosen to rely upon, viz. that the bond has no existence.

Again; Evidence in the trial by jury is of two kinds, either that which is given in proof, or that which the jury may receive by their own private knowledge.—As to the latter see title Jury.—The former, or Proof, (to which in common speech the name of Evidence is usually confined) are either written; or parol, that is by word of mouth. Written proofs, or Evidence, are, 1, Records; and 2, Ancient deeds of 30 years standing, which prove themselves; but 3, Modern deeds; and, 4, Other writings, must be attested and verified by parol evidence of witnesses. And the one general rule that runs through all the doctrine of trials is this, that the best evidence the nature of the case will admit of shall always be required, if possible to be had; but if not possible, then the best evidence that can be had shall be allowed. For if it be found there is any better evidence existing than is produced, the very not producing it is a presumption, that it would have detected some falsehood that at present is concealed. Thus, in order to prove a lease for years, nothing else shall be admitted, but the very deed of lease itself, if in being; but if that positively be proved to be burnt or destroyed, (not relying on any loose negative, as that it cannot be found, or the like,) then an attested copy may be produced; or parol evidence given of it's contents. So, no evidence of a discourse with another will be admitted, but the man himself must be produced; yet in some cases, (as in proof of any general customs, or matters of common tradition or repute,) the courts admit of hearsay evidence, or an account of what persons deceased have declared in their life-time: but such evidence will not be received of any particular facts. So too, books of accounts, or shop-books, are not allowed of themselves to be given in evidence for the owner, but a servant who made the entry may have recourse to them to refresh his memory: and, if such servant (who was accustomed to make those entries) be dead, and his hand be proved, the book may be read in evidence. Bull. N. P. 282, 3; Salk. 285. But as this kind of evidence, even thus regulated, would be much too hard upon the buyer at any long distance of time, the Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 12, (the pen-ners of which seem to have imagined that the books of themselves were evidence at Common-law) confines this species of proof to such transactions as have happened within one year before the action brought; unless between merchant and merchant in the usual intercourse of trade. For accounts of so recent a date, if erroneous, may more easily be unravelled and adjusted.

With regard to parol Evidence, or Witnesses; there is a process to bring them in by writ of subpoena ad testificandum; which commands them, laying aside all pretences and excuses, to appear at the trial on pain of one hundred pounds, to be forfeited to the king; to which the Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9, has added a penalty of 10*l.* to the party aggrieved, and damages equivalent to the loss sustained by want of his evidence. But no witness, unless his reasonable expences be tendered him, is bound to appear at all; nor if he appears, is he bound to give evidence till such charges are actually paid him: except he resides within the bills of mortality, and is summoned to give evidence within the same. This compulsory process, to bring in unwilling witnesses, and the additional terrors of an attachment in case of disobedience, are of excellent use in the thorough investigation of truth.

EVIDENCE.

All witnesses of whatever religion or country, that have the use of their reason, are to be received and examined, except such as are infamous, or such as are interested in the event of the cause. All others are competent witnesses; though the jury from other circumstances will judge of their credibility. Infamous persons are such as may be challenged as jurors, propter delictum; and therefore shall never be admitted to give evidence to inform that jury, with whom they were too scandalous to associate. Interested witnesses may be examined upon a voir dire, if suspected to be secretly concerned in the event; or their interest may be proved in court. Which last is the only method of supporting an objection to the former class; for no man is to be examined to prove his own infamy. And no counsel, attorney, or other person, intrusted with the secrets of the cause by the party himself, shall be compelled, or perhaps allowed, to give evidence of such conversation or matters of privacy, as came to his knowledge by virtue of such trust and confidence: but he may be examined as to mere matters of fact, as the execution of a deed or the like, which might have come to his knowledge without being intrusted in the cause. Bull. N. P. 284: 1 Pent. 97.

One witness (if credible) is sufficient evidence to a jury of any single fact; though undoubtedly the concurrence of two or more corroborates the proof. Yet our law considers that there are many transactions to which only one person is privy; and therefore does not always demand the testimony of two, as the civil law universally requires.

Positive proof is always required, where from the nature of the case it appears it might possibly have been had. But, next to positive proof, circumstantial evidence or the doctrine of presumptions must take place: for when the fact itself cannot be demonstratively evinced, that which comes nearest to the proof of the fact, is the proof of such circumstances which either necessarily, or usually attend such facts; and these are called presumptions, which are only to be relied upon till the contrary be actually proved. Stabitum præsumptioni donec probetur in contrarium. Co. Litt. 373. Violent presumption is many times equal to full proof; for there those circumstances appear, which necessarily attend the fact. Ibid. 6. As if a landlord sues for rent due at Michaelmas 1754, and the tenant cannot prove the payment, but produces an acquittance for rent due at a subsequent time, in full of all demands, this is a violent presumption of his having paid the former rent, and is equivalent to full proof; for though the actual payment is not proved, yet the acquittance in full of all demands is proved, which could not be without such payment; and it therefore induces so forcible a presumption, that no proof shall be admitted to the contrary. Gill. Evid. 161. Probable presumption arising from such circumstances as usually attend the fact, hath also its due weight: as if, in a suit for rent due in 1754, the tenant proves the payment of the rent due in 1755; this will prevail to exonerate the tenant; (Co. Litt. 373;) unless it be clearly shewn that the rent of 1754, was retained for some special reason, or that there was some fraud or mistake: for otherwise it will be presumed to have been paid before that in 1755, as it is most usual to receive first the rents of longest standing: Light, or rash presumptions have no weight or validity at all.

The oath administered to the witness, is not only that what he deposes shall be true, but that he shall also depose the whole truth: so that he is not to conceal any part of what he knows; whether interrogated particularly to that point or not. And all this evidence is to be given in open court, in the presence of the parties, their attorney, the counsel, and all by exhibitors; and before the judge and jury: each party having liberty to except to its competency, which exceptions are publicly stated, and by the judge are openly and publicly allowed or disallowed, in the face of the country. And if either in his directions or decisions he misstates the law by ignorance, inadvertence, or design, the counsel on either side may require him publicly to seal a bill of exceptions; stating the point wherein he is supposed to err: See title Bill of Exceptions.—Or if the legal effect of a record or other evidence is doubted, this may be tried on a Demurrer to Evidence; See that title.—3 Comm. 367—372.

The true theory of Evidence is admirably explained in Bull. Ni. Pri. part VI. from Gilbert's Law of Evidence; and it concludes with taking a view of all the general Rules of Evidence together, from whence the following abstract is given.

1. The first general rule is that the best evidence must be given that the nature of the thing is capable of. The true meaning of this rule is that no such evidence shall be brought as ex natura rei supposes still a greater evidence behind; in the party's possession or power, for such evidence is altogether insufficient and proves nothing. But if it is proved that an original deed, will, &c. is in the hands of the adverse party, or is destroyed without default of the party who ought to produce it, a copy will be admitted; because then such copy is the best evidence.

2. No person interested in the question can be a witness. There is no rule in more general use and none that is so little understood. See 1 Term Rep. 302. And there are some exceptions to it. e. g. 1. A party interested will be admitted in a criminal prosecution in most instances; 2. he may be admitted for the sake of trade and the common usage of business; as porters, apprentices, &c. to prove delivery of goods, &c. though it tend to clear themselves of neglect. See 3 Term Rep. 29: Sir. 647, 1083. 3. Where no other evidence is reasonably to be expected. 4. Where he acquires the interest by his own act, after the party who calls him as a witness has a right to his evidence. 5. Where the possibility of interest is very remote. See 1 Term Rep. 163, 4, and more at length, this title, Div. II. 1.

3. The third general rule is, that hearsay is no evidence.—For no evidence is to be admitted but what is upon oath and if the first speech were without oath, another oath that there was such a speech makes it no more. Besides, if the speaker be living, it is not the best evidence. But hearsay has been admitted in corroboration of a witness's testimony.

4. In all cases where a general character or behaviour is put in issue, evidence of particular facts may be admitted; but not where it comes in collaterally.

5. Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione supplitur, nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum, verificatione facti tollitur.

6. In every issue the affirmative is to be proved. A negative cannot regularly be proved, and therefore it is sufficient to deny what is affirmed until it be proved:

but

but when the affirmative is proved, contest it with opposite proofs, of some matter or position totally inconsistent with what is affirmed.

7. No evidence need be given of what is agreed by the pleadings. For the jury are only sworn to try the matter in issue between the parties, so that nothing else is properly before them.

8. Whenever a man cannot have the advantage of the special matter by pleading, he may give it in evidence on the general issue. See title Pleading.

9. If the substance of the issue be proved, it is sufficient. As to this, see also titles Pleading; Modes of Form.

The doctrine of evidence in CRIMINAL CASES is, in most respects, the same as that upon civil actions. There are however a few leading points, wherein by several statutes and resolutions a difference is made between civil and criminal evidence.

1. In all cases of high treason, petit treason, and misprision of treason, by Stats. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12, and 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11, two lawful witnesses are required to convict a prisoner; unless he shall willingly and without violence confess the same. By Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10, a further exception is made as to treasons in counterfeiting the King's seals or signatures, and treasons concerning coin current within this realm; and more particularly by c. 11, the offences of importing counterfeit foreign money current in this kingdom, and impairing, counterfeiting, or forging any current coin. The Stats. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 25; 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28, in their subsequent extensions of this species of treason do also provide, that the offenders may be indicted, arraigned, tried, convicted and attainted, by the like evidence, and in such manner and form, as may be had and used against offenders for counterfeiting the King's money. But by Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3, in prosecutions for these treasons to which that act extends, the same rule (of requiring two witnesses) is again enforced; with this addition, that the confession of the prisoner, which shall countervail the necessity of such proof, must be in open court. In the construction of which act it hath been holden, that a confession of the prisoner, taken out of court, before a magistrate or person having competent authority to take it, and proved by two witnesses, is sufficient to convict him of treason. Foster 240, 4. But hasty unguarded confessions, made to persons having no such authority, ought not to be admitted as evidence under this statute. And indeed, even in cases of felony at the Common-law, they are the weakest and most suspicious of all testimony; ever liable to be obtained by artifice, false hopes, promises of favour, or menaces; seldom remembered accurately, or reported with due precision; and incapable in their nature of being disproved by other negative evidence. By the same Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3, it is declared that both witnesses must be to the same overt act of treason; or one to one overt act, and the other to another overt act of the same species of treason, and not of distinct heads or kinds: and no evidence shall be admitted to prove any overt act not expressly laid in the indictment. See 2 State Trials 144; Foster 235. And therefore in Sir John Fenwick's case, in King William's time, where there was but one witness, an act of parliament, (Stat. 8 W. 3. c. 4) was made on purpose to attain him of treason, and he was executed. 5 State Trials 40. But in almost every other accusation, one positive witness is sufficient; except in cases of indictments for perjury, where one witness is not sufficient, because then there is only one oath against another. 10 Mod. 194.

2. From the reversal of colonel Sydney's attainder by act of parliament in 1689, (8 State Trials 472,) it may writing in concurrent

the same person. 2 Hawk. P. C. 431; yet undoubtedly the testimony of witnesses, well acquainted with the party's hand, that they believe the paper in question to have been written by him, is evidence to be left to a jury. Lord Preston's case, A. D. 1690, 4 State Trials 463; Francis's case, A. D. 1716, 6 State Trials 69; Laver's case, A. D. 1722, Ibid. 279; Hemmy's case, A. D. 1758: 4 Burr. 644.

3. By the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 27, a mother of a bastard child, concealing its death, must prove by one witness that the child was born dead; otherwise such concealment shall be evidence of her having murdered it. See title Bastard.

4. All presumptive evidence of felony should be admitted cautiously: for the law holds, that it is better that ten guilty persons escape, than that one innocent suffer. And Sir Matthew Hale in particular lays down two rules most prudent and necessary to be observed. 1. Never to convict a man for stealing the goods of a person unknown, merely because he will give no account how he came by them, unless an actual felony be proved of such goods: and, 2. Never to convict any person of murder or manslaughter, till at least the body be found dead: on account of two instances he mentions, where persons were executed for the murder of others, who were then alive, but missing. 2 Hal. P. C. 200.

Lastly it was an ancient and commonly received practice, (1 State Trials passim), that as counsel was not allowed to any prisoner accused of a capital crime, so neither should he be suffered to exculpate himself by the testimony of any witnesses. And therefore it deserves to be remembered to the honour of Mary I., that she first desired such evidence to be received in a court of justice. Afterwards in one particular instance (when embezzling the queen's military stores was made felony by Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 4.) it was provided that any person, impeached for such felony, "should be received and admitted to make any lawful proof that he could, by lawful witness or otherwise, for his discharge and defence;" and in general the courts grew so heartily ashamed of a doctrine so unreasonable and oppressive, that a practice was gradually introduced of examining witnesses for the prisoner, but not upon oath. 2 Bull. 147; Cro. Car. 291. The consequence of this still was, that the jury gave less credit to the prisoner's evidence, than to that produced by the Crown. Sir Edward Coke protests very strongly against this tyrannical practice; declaring that he never read in any act of parliament, book, case, or record, that in criminal cases the party accused shall not have witnesses sworn for him; and therefore there is not so much as scintilla juris against it. 3 Inst. 79. See also 2 Hal. P. C. 283, and his Summary 264. And the House of Commons were so sensible of this absurdity, that, in the bill for abolishing hostilities between England and Scotland, (Stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 1.) when felonies committed by Englishmen in Scotland were ordered to be tried in one of the three Northern counties, they insisted on a clause and carried it against the efforts of both the Crown and the House of Lords, against the practice in the courts of England, and the express law of Scotland, "that in all such trials for the better discovery of the truth, and the better information of the consciences of the jury and justices, there shall be allowed to the party arraigned the benefit of such credible witnesses, to be examined upon oath as can be produced for his clearing and justification." At length by Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3, the same measure of justice was established throughout all the realm, in cases of treason within the act: and it was afterwards declared by Stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 9, that in all cases of treason and felony, all witnesses for the prisoner should be examined upon oath, in like manner as the witnesses against him. 4 Comm. 356—360.

Having given the foregoing general view, more minute information on this subject may be thus classed,

I. Of written Evidence: Wherein of Matters of Record as also of Writings under Seal, and other Writings and Depositions in Chancery or other Courts.

II. Unwritten Evidence: Wherein

1. Who may be Witnesses.

2. Of the Number of Witnesses, and of compelling them to appear; as also of the Manner of their giving Evidence.

3. Of proof, presumpt. &c. and hear-say Evidence.

1. Evidence by records and writings. Is where acts of parliaments, statutes, judgments, fines and recoveries, proceedings of courts, and deeds, &c. are admitted as evidence. A general act of parliament may be given in evidence; and need not be pleaded; and of these the printed statute book is good evidence: But in the case of a private act, a copy of it is to be examined by the records of parliament, and it is to be pleaded. Trials per pais 177, 232. Journals and other proceedings in the House of Commons have been held to be no evidence. State Trials, vol. 3. 470; Though it is otherwise, vol. 3. 800. A history of England, or printed trial, may not be read as evidence. 1 Lill. 557. Camden's Britannia was not allowed as evidence: But it has been held, that an history may be evidence of the general history of the realm, though not of a particular custom, &c. Stinner's Rep. 623.

An exemplification of the inrolment of letters patent under the great seal, may be pleaded in evidence. 3 Inst. 173. This exemplification is a copy or transcript of letters patent made from the inrolment thereof, and sealed with the great seal. But neither an exemplification nor constat was pleadable at Common law, because there was only the tenor of an enrollment; and the tenor of a record is not pleadable; but they are now pleadable by Stat. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 4: 13 Eliz. c. 6.

A patent may be exemplified under the great seal in Chancery; and also any record or judgment in any of the courts at Westminster, under the proper seal of each court: all which exemplifications may be given in evidence to a jury. 1 Lill. 583: Shp. 134. A rule made, or writ filed, in any court at Westminster, may be exemplified in the court where made or filed. But nothing but matter of record ought to be exemplified. 3 Inst. 173.

Records and inrolments prove themselves; and a copy of a record or inrolments sworn to, may be given in evidence. Co. Lit. 117, 262. A transcript of a record in another court, may be given in evidence to a jury. 1 Lill. Abr. 551. There is a difference between pleading a record, and giving the record in evidence; if it be pleaded, it must be sub pede sigilli, or the judges cannot judge thereof: Though where it is given in evidence, if it be not under the seal, the jury may find the same, if they have other good matter of inducement to prove it. Style's Rep. 22.

A fine or recovery may be given in evidence, without vouching the roll of the recovery; for the part indented is the usual evidence that there is such a fine: But it is said the fine ought to be shown with the proclamations under seal. 10 Rep. 92: 2 Rol. Abr. 574.

By Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 20, where any person has purchased or shall purchase for a valuable consideration, any estate, whereof a recovery was necessary to complete the title, such person, and all claiming under him, having been in possession from the time of such purchase, shall and may after the end of 20 years from the time of such purchase, produce in evidence the deed, making a tenant to the precipe, and declaring the uses; and the deed so produced (the execution thereof being duly proved) shall be deemed sufficient evidence, that such recovery was duly suffered, in case no record can be found of such recovery, or the same should appear not regularly entered. Provided the person making such deed had a sufficient estate, and power to make a tenant to the precipe, and to suffer such common recovery.

A record of an inferior court, hath been rejected in evidence, and the party put to prove what was done: And proceedings of county courts, courts baron, &c. may be tried by a jury; for it hath been adjudged, that they cannot be proved by the rolls, but by witnesses. Lit. 75. But court-rolls of a court baron, when shewn, are good evidence; and in many cases, copies of the court-rolls are allowed as evidence. Trials per pais 178, 228.

Inrolment of a deed is proved on certifying it by an examined attested copy; though inrolment of a deed which needs no inrolment, or by which the estate does not pass, is only evidence to some purposes. 3 Lev. 387.

By Stat. 10 An. c. 18, where any bargain and sale inrolled is pleaded with a proferet, the party to answer such proferet may produce a copy of the inrolment.

With respect to the production of Deeds in evidence, the general rule is, that the deed itself must be given in evidence, and must be proved by one witness at the least. But if the opposite party produce the deed on notice, it shall be read without any proof of the execution. Bull. N. P. 254: 2 Term Rep. 41.

An ancient deed proves itself, where possession has gone accordingly: But later deeds must be proved by witnesses. Co. Lit. 6. If all the witnesses to a deed are dead, continual and quiet possession is presumptive evidence of the truth of it; yet it may receive farther credit by comparison of hands and seals. Wood's Infr. 599. When witnesses to deeds are dead, their hand-writing must be proved, 2 Inst. 118. And where there are several witnesses to a deed, and they are all dead but one, a subpoena must be taken out against the living witness, and strict inquiry made after him, and affidavit is to be made that he cannot be found, before the hand-writing of the deceased witnesses are to be proved. 1 Lill. 556.

An old deed proved to have been found among deeds and evidences of lands, may be given in evidence to a jury; though the executing of it cannot be proved and made out.

EVIDENCE I.

out. 3 Salk. 153. A deed may be good evidence, though the seal is broken off: And where a deed is burnt, &c. the judges may allow it to be proved by witnesses, that there was such a deed, and this be given in evidence. 1 Lev. 25. But the court will not allow the jury, on a trial at bar, to carry deeds, writings or books with them out of court, as evidence to consider of, but such as have been proved: Though by the assent of parties, or by assent of the court without the parties, they may be delivered to the jurors. Cro. Eliz. 421. All deeds or writings under seal, and given in evidence, they may have; and nothing which was not given in evidence, for the court gives their direction to the jury upon the evidence given in court. 1 Lil. 313.

It is dangerous to suffer any, who by law ought to shew forth any deed, to prove in evidence, that there was such a deed, which they had seen or read, &c. For there might be imperfections in the deed, or it may be on condition, with limitation, &c. 10 Rep. 92. A deed, though sealed and delivered, if not stamped according to act of parliament, cannot be pleaded or given in evidence in any court. See Stat. 5 & 6 H. & M. cap. 21, and several subsequent statutes; the latter of which extend to bills, notes, receipts, agreements, &c. And these stamps have been frequently the means of detecting forgeries; for the Stamp-office put secret marks on the stamps, which from time to time are varied: so that where a deed is forged of a date antecedent, it may easily be discovered by stamps being upon it, not in use at the time it bears date. A deed cannot be proved by a counterpart of it or copy, if the original is in being, and may be had; though it may be when the original cannot be procured. Co. Lit. 225: 10 Rep. 92. The counterpart of an ancient deed hath been allowed to be given in evidence. Mod. Cus. 225. But it hath been held that the counterpart of a deed, without other circumstances, is not sufficient evidence; unless in case of a fine, when a counterpart is good evidence of itself. 1 Salk. 287.

Where a deed was cancelled by fraud, that being proved, it was allowed to be evidence in an action under the deed. Hutl. 138. The recital of a deed is no evidence without shewing the deed; or proving that there was such a deed, and it is lost. Co. Lit. 352: Faugh. 74. Recital of a lease, in a deed of release, is good evidence, that there was such a lease against the releasor, and those claiming under him; but not against others, except there be proof that there was such a lease. 1 Salk. 286. A settlement set forth in a bill in Chancery, and admitted in the answer; and where it was proved that the deed was in the possession of such a one, &c. hath been adjudged a good evidence of the deed of settlement where not to be found. 5 Mod. 384.

The probate of a will, when it concerns personal estate only, may be given in evidence: But where title of lands is claimed under a will, the original will must be shewn, not the probate: Though if the will be proved in the Chancery, copies of the proceedings there will be evidence. 2 Rot. Abr. 687: Trials per pais 234: 1 Salk. 286; and Raym. 335. In certain cases the Ledger-book of the Ecclesiastical Court in which the will is entered, is sufficient evidence, being a roll or record of the court. Bull. N. P. 215, 6.

A bill in Chancery has been admitted as slight evidence against the complainant: An answer in Chancery is evidence against the defendant himself, though not against others. 1 Vent. 66: Trials per pais 167. But when a party gives an answer in Chancery in evidence at a trial, though he insist to read only such a part of it; yet the other side may require to have the whole read. 5 Mod. 10. As in case of a writing permitted to be read to prove one part of an evidence, which may be read to prove any other part of the evidence given to the jury.

Depositions of witnesses in Chancery between the same parties, may be given in evidence at law, if the witnesses are dead, and the bill and answer proved. Trials per pais 167, 297, 234. Regularly depositions in Chancery, of a witness, may not be given in evidence, if he be alive; unless he be in another kingdom, not subject to the dominion of our King. Ibid. 359. But depositions in Chancery, after answer, between the same parties, may be read as evidence, though the witnesses are not dead, if they cannot be found on search. Shower 3: 1 Salk. 278. Depositions in Chancery in perpetuum rei memoriam, are not to be given in evidence, so long as the parties are living. 1 Salk. 286. And it hath been adjudged, that these depositions to perpetuate testimony, on a bill exhibited, shall not be admitted as evidence at a trial at law, except an answer be put in. Raym. 335. If depositions are taken out of the realm, he who makes them is supposed there still, and they shall be read as evidence; but if it appears he is in England, they cannot be read, but he must come in person. 1 Lil. 555. Things done beyond sea may be given in evidence to a jury; and the testimony of a public notary of things done in a foreign country, will be good evidence. 6 Rep. 47.

Depositions cannot be given in evidence against any person who was not party to the suit; and the reason is, because he had not liberty to cross-examine the witnesses; and it is against natural justice that a man should be concluded in a cause to which he never was a party. Hardr. 22, 472: Bunb. 50. pl. 84—91: pl. 148—321. pl. 403: 9 Mod. 229: Carth. 181: Fern 113: Gillb. Evid. 62: Ch. Prc. 212. See this Dict. title Depositions.

Depositions in the Ecclesiastical courts may not be given in evidence to a jury at a trial; but a sentence may in a cause of tithes, &c. And the sentence of the Spiritual court is conclusive evidence in causes within their jurisdiction. 1 Salk. 290: 2 Nelf. Abr. 761.

Depositions before a coroner are admitted as evidence, the witnesses being dead. 1 Lev. 180: Likewise they have been admitted where a witness hath gone beyond sea. 2 Nelf. Abr. 760. The confession of a prisoner before a magistrate, &c. may be given in evidence against him. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. and the notes there. The examination of an offender need not to be on oath, but must be subscribed by him, if he confesses the fact; and then be given in evidence upon oath by the justice of the peace who took the same. The examination of others must be on oath, and proved by the justice, or his clerk, &c. as to their evidence, if they are dead, unable to travel, or kept away by the prisoner. H. P. C. 19, 162: Kil. 18, 55: Wood's Inst. 647.

The examination of an informer before a justice, taken on oath, and subscribed, may be given in evidence on a trial if he be dead, or not able to travel, &c. which is to be made out on oath. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46.

By Stats. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10, Justices of peace shall examine persons brought before them them for felony, and those who brought them, and certify such examination to the next gaol delivery: but the examination of the prisoner shall be without oath, and the others upon oath; and these examinations shall be read against an offender upon an indictment, if the witnesses be dead. Bull. N. P. 242.

A verdict against one, under whom either the plaintiff or defendant claims, may be given in evidence against the party so claiming; but not if neither claim under it. Mich. 1656. B. R. In ejectment where the plaintiff hath title to several lands, and brings action of ejectment against several defendants, if he recovers against one, he shall not give that verdict in evidence against the rest. 3 Mod. 141.

In a court of common law, a decree in Chancery is no evidence. Letters may be produced as evidence against a man, in treason, &c. Although a witness swear to the hand and contents of a letter, if he never saw the party write, he shall not be allowed as evidence. Skin. 673. In general cases the witness should have gained his knowledge from seeing the party write; but under some circumstances, that is not necessary; as where the handwriting to be proved is of a person residing abroad, one who has frequently received letters from him in a course of correspondence, would be admitted to prove it though he had never seen him write.—So where the antiquity of the writing makes it impossible for any living witness to swear he ever saw the party write. On an indictment for writing a treasonable libel, proof of the hand-writing is sufficient, without proof of the actual writing. Bull. N. P. 236.

Since no witnesses are present when goldsmiths' notes or promissory notes are given, such notes are allowed as evidence of the receipt of money, or other thing. 1 Salk. 283. A church-book some writers say is not to be admitted as evidence; though others say it may. Cro. Eliz. 411. It is said copies of public books of corporations, &c. shall be evidence. 1 Lev. 25: 1 Lil. 551. But as to books of corporations, where things are entered not of record, the originals are to be produced as evidence.

A pedigree drawn by a herald at arms, will not be admitted for evidence, without shewing the records or ancient books from whence taken; for the entries in the herald's office are no records, but only circumstantial evidence: But a copy of an inscription on a grave-stone, has been given in evidence in such a case. 2 Rol. Abr. 686, 687. An almanack wherein the father had written the day of the nativity of his son was allowed in evidence to prove the nonage of the son. Raym. 84.

Matter in law ought not to be given in evidence at a trial, but only matters of fact, unless it be in case of a special verdict; matter in law is disputable, and reserved to be spoken to in arrest of judgment. Vaugh. 143. 147. In debt the defendant may give in evidence, that he paid money on an obligation before the day, &c. 2 Nels. Abr. 755. And a release may be given in evidence, on nil debet. 5 Mod. 19. Though in indebitatus assumpsit the plaintiff shall not give any specialty in evidence to prove his debt, as a bond, indenture, &c. because he may bring action of debt upon that specialty. Magn. 340.

Entry and expulsion may be given in evidence in debt for rent: Coveiture may be given in evidence to avoid a deed, &c. Mal. Cas. 230. Usurious contracts, &c. may be given in evidence. 2 Nels. 756. Fraud may be given in evidence, on the general issue: And tampering with witnesses may be given in evidence against a party &c. 5 Rep. 60. But many things are to be pleaded; as justifications without title, in trespass, &c. and cannot be given in evidence upon Not guilty. Trials per pais 404. If in trespass Nisi quia be pleaded; a licence may not be given in evidence to excuse the trespass; for it must be pleaded. Kel. 59. And if the issue in detinue is non detinet, it shall not be given in evidence that the goods were pledged for money, and the money not paid; this is not good without pleading it: But a gift of the goods by the plaintiff may be given in evidence. Co. Lit. 283. But in an action of traverse, for evidence that they were pledged, for money lent or owing, and the money not being paid, or tendered, is a good bar to the action.

So in an issue in waste, no waste done, the defendant may give in evidence, that it came by lightning, tempest, or enemies; but that he repaired before action brought, must be specially pleaded, &c. 1 Inf. 282. If an issue be taken on the cutting of twenty oaks, evidence may be for ten; because either is a breach of covenant not to do waste. 2 Shep. Abr. 142. In ejectione firmæ, the plaintiff declares for 100 acres of land, and gives evidence only for forty, it will be good for so much. Cro. Eliz. 13. But if the point in issue be the sealing and delivery of a lease, and the witnesses prove it sealed and delivered, but did not know the lessor that sealed it: Or where proof is not made of livery and seisin, on issue of a lease for life: Or if on an issue upon a taking by capias ad satisfaciendum, and evidence be of taking by capias ut legatum, &c.; in all these cases the evidence will not be good to maintain the issue. Plowd. 14: Kelw. 55, 59: Hob. 55. See further titles Pleading: General Issue.

II. 1. The King cannot be a witness under his sign manual, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 686. Though it has been allowed he may, in relation to a promise made in behalf of another. Hob. 213. A peer produced as an evidence, ought to be sworn. 3 Keb. 631. It is no exception to an evidence, that he is a judge, or a juror, to try the person; for a judge may give evidence going off from the Bench. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. And a juror may be an evidence as to his particular knowledge; but then it must be on examination in open court, not before his brother jurors. 1 Lil. 552. Members of corporations shall be admitted or refused to give evidence in actions brought by corporations, as their interest is small or great; whereby it may be judged whether they will be partial or not. 2 Lev. 231, 241. But they will not generally be admitted; though inhabitants not free of the corporation may be good witnesses for the corporation, as their interest is not concerned; and members may be disfranchised on these occasions. Ibid. 236.

In actions against church-wardens and overseers of the poor for recovery of money mispent on the parish account, the evidence of the parishioners, not receiving alms, shall be allowed. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 11. In informations or indictments for not repairing highways and bridges, the evidence of the inhabitants of the town, corporation, &c. where such highways lie, shall be admitted. Stat. 1 Ann. cap. 18.

though the penalty be given to the poor, or otherwise for the benefit of the said parish or place, provided the penalty does not exceed 20*l*.

Kinsmen, though other to near, tenants, servants, masters, attorneys for their clients, and all others that are not infamous, and which were not understanding or are not parties in interest, may give evidence in a cause, though the credit of servants is left to the jury. 1 Ast. Abr. 68; 1 Port. 249. A counsellor, attorney, or solicitor, is not to be examined as an evidence against their clients, because they are obliged to keep their secrets; but they may be examined, as to any thing of their own knowledge before retained, not as counsel or attorney, &c. 1 Port. 97.

The bail cannot be an evidence for his principal. If the plaintiff makes one a defendant in the suit, on purpose to impeach his testimony, under a pretence of his being a party in interest, he may nevertheless be examined de bene esse; and if the plaintiff prove no cause of action against him, his evidence shall be allowed in the cause. 2 Lill. Abr. 701. But in civil suits, and indictments for trespasses, &c. the plaintiff or prosecutor usually goes through his evidence, and those defendants who are not affected, are sometimes by direction of the judge, acquitted, and then give evidence for the other defendant or defendants, and sometimes they have been examined, without the form of an acquittal. If a man makes himself a party in interest, after a plaintiff or defendant has an interest in his evidence, he may not by this deprive them of the benefit of his testimony. Skin. Rep. 586.

One that hath a legacy given him by will, is not a good witness to prove the will; but if he release his legacy, he may be a good evidence. Skin. 704. It is the same of a deed; he that claims any benefit by it, may not be an evidence to prove that deed, in regard of his interest: And a person any ways concerned in the same title of land in question, will not be admitted as evidence. Ibid. 705. But it has been held, that an heir apparent may be a witness concerning a title of land; and yet a remainder-man, who hath a present interest, cannot. 1 Salt. 385. If a legatee is permitted to be sworn and examined, the counsel cannot afterwards except against his evidence. 1 Ld. Raym. 730.

To obviate all difficulties and inconveniences, it is enacted by Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 6, That any devise to a person being witness to any will or codicil, shall be void: And such person shall be admitted as a witness—And that any creditor attesting a will or codicil, by which his debt is charged upon land, shall be admitted as a witness to the execution, notwithstanding such charge—The credit of every such witness being left to the consideration of the court and jury.

Witnesses competent at law, are competent to prove a nuncupative will by Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 14: The son of a legatee is no witness to a will in the spiritual court; nevertheless it is held, he may be a good evidence to prove a nuncupative will, within the intent of the statute of frauds. 1 L. Ray. 85. See title Will.

A grantee who is a bare trustee, it is said, is a good witness to prove the execution of the deed made to himself. 1 P. Wil. 290: If an action is brought against many persons for taking of goods, one of them concerned may be admitted as an evidence against the rest. Comberb. 367, See 1 Mod. 282: In criminal cases, as of robbery on the highway, in action against the hundred; in rapes of women, or where a woman is married by force, &c. a man or a woman may be an evidence in their own cause. 1 Port. 243. And in private enormous cheats, a person may give evidence in his own cause, where no body else can be a witness of the circumstances of the fact, but he that suffers. 1 Salt. 286. Upon an information on the statute against usury, he that borrows the money, after he hath paid it, may be an evidence; but not before. Raym. 191.

An alien infidel, may not be an evidence; but a Jew may, and he sworn on the Old Testament. 1 Inst. 6. A Quaker shall not be permitted to give evidence in any criminal cause; (unless he will take an oath): Though on other occasions, his solemn affirmation shall be accepted instead of an oath. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 3. cap. 34. See title Quakers.—The oath of a Gentile sworn according to the circumstances of his religion, has been admitted in a civil matter. 1 Ast. 21. And by Wilkes, C. J. an infidel in general, is an admissible witness, for the term does not imply that he is an atheist; but wherever it appears that a witness has no idea of a God or religion, he shall not be permitted to give his testimony. 1 Ast. 40, 45.

Persons non sane memoriam; those that are attainted of conspiracy, or in a præmunire upon the statute 5 Eliz. c. 1; Papists recusants convicted, on the Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5, are disabled to give evidence; but see contra 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. s. 6. So persons convicted of felony, perjury, &c. And if one by judgment hath stood on the pillory, or been whipped; for his infamy he shall not be admitted to give evidence, whilst the judgment is in force: But the record of conviction must be produced, on objecting against his testimony; and the witness shall not be asked any question to accuse himself, though his credit may be impeached by other evidences, as to his character in general, so as not to make proof of particular crimes, whereof he hath not been convicted. 3 Inst. 108, 219; 3 Lev. 426. If after a man hath stood in the pillory, &c. he be pardoned, he may be an evidence: And notwithstanding judgment of the pillory infers infamy at common law; by the civil and canon law it imports no infamy, unless the cause for which the person was convicted was infamous; and therefore such may be a good witness to a will, if not convicted of any infamous act. 3 Lev. 426, 427. It has been held, that it is not standing in the pillory, disables a person to give evidence; but standing there upon a judgment for an infamous crime, as forgery, &c. If for a hbel, a man may be a witness. 5 Mod. 74; 3 Nelf. Abr. 557.

Persons excommunicated cannot be witnesses, because being excluded out of the church, they are supposed not to be under the influence of any religion. But persons outlawed may be witnesses, because they are punished in their properties and not in the loss of their reputation, and the outlawry has no manner of influence on their credibility. Bull. N. P. 292, 3.

A man is convicted of felony, and afterwards pardoned, he may be a good evidence. Raym. 369. So where burnt in the hand, which is quasi a statute pardon; and it is said this burning in the hand restores the offender to his credit. Ibid. 330. A person who was condemned to be hanged for burglary, but having a pardon for transportation, hath been allowed to be a good evidence. 5 Mod. 28. One outlawed for treason and pardoned may be an evidence.

EVIDENCE II 21

State Trials, vol. 3. 515. Persons acquitted, or guilty of the same crime, (while they remain unconvicted) may be evidence against their fellows. Kel. 17. Though no evidence ought to be given of what an accomplice hath said, who is not in the same indictment. State Trials, vol. 2. 414. An informer may be a witness, though he is to have part of the forfeiture, where no other witnesses can be had. Wood's Inst. 598. Members of either House of Parliament may be witnesses on impeachments. State Trials, vol. 2. 632.

Idiots, madmen, and children, are excluded from giving evidence for want of skill and discernment.

2. In addition to what has been already said as to the number of witnesses, we may mention that it is required by Stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3, "That all devises of lands shall be attested and subscribed in the presence of the testator, by three or four credible witnesses, or else shall be void." See title Will.

If a witness, served with a process in a civil cause, refuse to appear, being tendered reasonable charges, and having no lawful excuse, action on the case lies against him, whereon damages shall be recovered: And a feme covert not appearing, action may be brought against the husband and her. Stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 9. s. 1 Leon. 112.

If there is a doubt that a witness will not attend, the best way is to serve him with the original subpoena, keeping a copy, and if he is at any distance from the place of trial, tender reasonable charges: if he does not appear at the trial, call him three times on his subpoena, and then, if occasion requires, the party may bring his action, or move for an attachment.

In a criminal cause, if a witness refuse to appear and give evidence, being served with process, the court will put off the trial, and grant attachment against him; and, as refusing to give evidence is a great contempt, the party may be committed and fined. 1 Salk. 278.

Preventing evidence to be given against a criminal, is punishable by fine and imprisonment; and a person was fined one thousand marks in such a case. Hill. 1663. B. R. Persons dissuading a witness from giving evidence, &c. and jurors or others disclosing evidence given, are likewise offences punished by fine and imprisonment. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22.

By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 71. § 16, (made to prevent boresailing, and which see under that head,) The justice before whom complaint shall be made for any offence against the act, may summon any person, other than the party complained against, to appear before him to give evidence; and in case such person shall wilfully refuse or neglect to attend or give evidence, he shall forfeit 10*l.* and in default of payment, or in case of inability shall stand committed to gaol, for not more than two months, nor less than one. And similar punishments are inflicted by other Statutes.

Where necessity requires, witnesses may be examined apart in court, till they have given all they have to say in evidence; so that what one has deposed, may not induce another to give his evidence to the same effect. Forster. 54.

A witness shall not be examined where his evidence tends to clear or accuse himself of a crime. State Trials, vol. 1. 557. Nor is he bound to give any answer by which he confesses or accuses himself of any crime. And a witness shall not be cross-examined till he hath gone through the evidence on the side whereon produced. Ibid.

vol. 2. 772. The court in criminal cases, is to examine the witnesses, and not the prisoner or prosecutors. Ibid. vol. 1. 143. Though in case of the court, counsel are frequently admitted to examine the evidence. An evidence shall not be permitted to read his evidence, but he may look on his notes to refresh his memory. Ibid. vol. 4. 45. An evidence may not recite his evidence to the jury, after gone from the bar, and he hath given his evidence in court; if he doth, the verdict may be set aside. Cra. Elem. 199. One that is to be an evidence at a trial, ought not to be examined before the trial, but by the consent of both parties, and a rule of court for that purpose.

No evidence ought to be produced against a man in a trial for his life, but what is given in his presence. State Trials, vol. 4. 227. And evidence shall not be given against the prisoner for any other crime than that for which prosecuted. Ibid. vol. 3. 947. A prisoner may bring evidence to prove that the witnesses gave a different testimony before a justice of peace, or at another trial: though he may not call witnesses to disprove what his own witnesses have sworn. Ibid. vol. 2. 623, 792. And no objection can be made to the evidence after verdict given. vol. 4. 35. It is justifiable to maintain or subvert an evidence, but not to give him any reward; for this, if proved, will avoid his testimony. Ibid. vol. 2. 470.

A witness shall not be examined to any thing that does not relate to the matter in issue. Ibid. vol. 2. 343. And where an issue is not perfect, no evidence can be applied, nor can the justices proceed to trial. Brownl. 42, 47, 435. If evidence doth not warrant and maintain the same thing that is in issue, the evidence is defective, and may be demurred upon; but proving the substance is sufficient. Trials per Pais 425. Evidence may be given of facts before and after the time they are laid in the indictment. And where a place is laid only for a venue in an indictment, or an appeal, (and not made part of the description of the fact) proof of the same crime may be made at any other place in the same county; and after a crime hath been proved in the county where laid, evidence may be given of other instances of the same crime, in another county, to satisfy the jury. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46.

But where a certain place is made part of the description of the fact against the defendant, the least variation as to such place between the evidence and indictment is fatal. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. It hath been also adjudged, that where an indictment sets forth all the special matter, in respect whereof the law implies malice, variance between the indictment and evidence as to the circumstances of the fact, doth not hurt; so that the substance of the matter be found by the evidence. Ibid.

The burthen of proving lies on the plaintiff; and the presumption shall stand, until the contrary appear: though that which plainly appeareth, need not be given in evidence. 7 Rep. 40: Co. Lit. 233. The defendant's counsel is to conclude by way of answer to the evidence given to the jury by the plaintiff's: but he who doth begin to maintain the issue to be tried, ought to conclude and sum up the evidence given, which is no more than to put the jury in mind how he hath proved his cause. 1 Lil. 551. When a witness hath been fully examined by the party producing him, and cross examined by counsel for the adverse party, the court will sometimes ask a question or two of the witness, when the jury may put any questions they think proper to the judge, for him to put to the witness, after which counsel on either side cannot ask a single question of the witness, without leave of the court; and in fact the usual method is to pray the court, "Is not it proper, to ask such a question, or to examine to such a fact, &c. which may have dropped from the witness, after both counsel had finished their examination of him. If it is proper and necessary, the court will do it, otherwise not."

3. It seems to have been agreed, as a general rule, (even before the statute of frauds and perjury,) that no parol evidence could be admitted to controul what appeared on the face of a deed or will, not only from the danger of perjury, but from a presumption, that whatever the parties at that time had in contemplation, was reduced into writing. 5 Co. 68 u. b.; 3 Co. 155 u. Kelw. 49.

But this rule has received a relaxation, especially in the courts of equity, where a distinction has been taken between evidence, that may be offered to a jury, and such as may be used only to inform the conscience of the court; viz. that in the first case no such evidence should be admitted; because the jury might be inveigled thereby; but that in the second it could do no hurt, because the court were judges of the whole matter, and could distinguish what weight and stress ought to be laid on such evidence. 2 Vern. 98, 337, 625.

Also to ascertain a fact, parol evidence hath been admitted to explain the intent of the testator: as where the testator had two sons both named John, and he devised lands to his son John; here parol evidence was admitted to shew which of his sons he meant; and it being proved, that one of his sons of that name had been absent several years beyond sea, and that the testator apprehended that he was dead, the devise was held good, and that the other should take; for without such evidence, the will must be void. 2 Vern. 98, 337, 625. So parol evidence may be admitted to explain the intent of a testator in cancelling a will. Cowp. 53.

Parol evidence to prove that a bond was given, in lieu of dower, refused. 1 Will. 34. Parol proof admitted that the testator intended his wife executrix should have the residue undisposed of. Id. 313. Debt upon bond with condition for payment of money to Lydia Dovey, who is a third person, she declares the defendant owes her nothing, and upon proof thereof, a verdict was for the defendant; such declaration was properly given in evidence, for Lydia Dovey is to be considered as the real plaintiff. Id. 257.

Parol evidence shall not be admitted to annul or substantially vary a written agreement. 3 Will. 275: Str. 794: 3 Term Rep. 590. So parol evidence shall not be received, to prove an additional rent payable by a tenant, beyond that expressed in the written agreement for a lease. 2 Bl. Rep. 1249.

Parol evidence may be admitted to prove other considerations than those mentioned in a deed, as where the conditions mentioned in the deed were 10,000*l.* and natural love and affection, and the premises were worth 30,000*l.* an issue was directed to try whether natural love and affection made any part of the consideration; and it being found that they did not, the deed was set aside. 7 Bro. P. C. 70: cited 3 Term Rep. 473.

By the statute of frauds, several things must be evidenced by writing, of which, before that statute, parol evidence had been sufficient. See this Dict. title Fraud.

Sometimes violent presumption will be admitted for evidence without witnesses; as where a person is run through the body in a house, and one is seen to come out of the house with a bloody sword, &c. But on this the court ought not to judge hastily. 1 Inst. 6, 673. And though presumptive and circumstantial evidence may be sufficient in felony, it is not so in treason. State Trials, vol. 4. p. 397.

Persons once in being shall be intended still living, if the contrary is not proved. 2 Ed. Rep. 451. But now by Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 6, it is enacted, "That if any person or persons, for whose life or lives estates have been, or shall be granted, shall remain beyond the seas, or else, where absent themselves in this realm, by the space of seven years together, and no sufficient and evident proof made of the life or lives of such person or persons respectively, in any action commenced for the recovery of such tenements by the lessors or reversioners, in every such case the person or persons, upon whose life or lives such estate depended, shall be accounted as naturally dead; and in every action brought for the recovery of the said tenements, by the lessors or reversioners, their heirs or assigns, the judges, before whom such action shall be brought, shall direct the jury to give their verdict, as if the person so remaining beyond the seas, or otherwise absenting himself, were dead." See title Life-Estate.

As to hearsay evidence, it seems agreed, that what another has been heard to say, is no evidence, because the party was not on oath; also, because the party, who is affected thereby, had not an opportunity of cross-examining; but such speeches or discourses may be made use of by way of inducement or illustration of what is properly evidence. 1 Mod. 383; Skin. 403.

Also what a witness hath been heard to say at another time, may be given in evidence, in order either to invalidate or confirm the testimony he gives in court. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. So what a person accused of a crime hath been heard to say at another time, may be given in evidence at his trial, for or against him. Id. ib.

A witness by hearsay of a stranger shall not be allowed, except perhaps to confirm the evidence of a witness that spoke of his knowledge. Wood's Inst. 644.

If a person who gave evidence in a former trial, be dead; upon proof of his death, any person who heard him give evidence, may be admitted to give the same evidence between the same parties; but a copy of the record of the trial when the evidence was given ought to be produced. 3 Inst. 2: Lill. Abr. 705.

And evidence given at one trial in criminal cases, has been held not to be evidence at another's trial. 2 State Trials, 863.

As to evidence in passing a bill of attainder, see 5 State Trials, 114, 124, 132, 676. But the same evidence is requisite on an impeachment in parliament, as in private courts.

EWAGE, from the Fr. eau, water.] Toll paid for water-passage; see Aquage.

EWBRICE, Sax. ew, i. e. conjugium, and bryce, fructus.] Adultery or marriage-breaking: from this Saxon word ew, marriage; we derive our present English woo, to court.

EWE, ew,] A German word signifying law; it is mentioned in Leg. W. 1.

EXACTION, is defined to be a wrong done by an officer, or one in pretended authority, by taking a reward or fee for that which the law allows not. The difference between exaction and extortion is this: extortion is where an officer extorts more than his due, when something is due to him; and exaction is, when he wrests a fee or reward, where none is due; for which the offender is to be fined and imprisoned, and tender to the party twice as much as the money he so takes, Co. Lit. 368: 10 Rep. 100; see title Extortion.

EXAMINATION, examinate.] A searching by, or cognizance of a magistrate. See this Dict. titles Commitment; Evidence; Justice.

With respect to examinations touching church benefices, see title Benefice.

EXAMINERS IN THE CHANCERY, examinateurs] Two officers of that court, who examine upon oath, witnesses produced by either side, in London, or near it, on such interrogatories as the parties to any suit exhibit for that purpose; and sometimes the parties themselves are, by particular order, likewise examined by them. In the country, witnesses are examined by commissioners, (usually attorneys not concerned in the cause,) on the parties joining in commission, &c. See title Depositions.

EXCAMBIATORES, A word used anciently for exchangers of land: but Cowel supposes them to be such as we now call brokers, that deal upon the Exchange between merchants.

EXCEPTION, exceptio.] Is a stop or stay to an action; and divided into dilatory and peremptory. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 5. In law proceedings, it is a denial of a matter alledged in bar to the action; and in Chancery it is what is alledged against the sufficiency of an answer, &c. The counsel in a cause are to take all their exceptions to the record at one time; and before the court hath delivered any opinion thereon. 1 Lill. Abr. 559. And on an indictment for treason, &c. exception is to be taken for misnaming, false Lain, &c. before any evidence is given in court; or the indictment shall be good. Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 1. See titles Indictment; Treason.

Where, by a general pardon, any particular crime is excepted; if a person be attainted, &c. of that offence, he shall have no benefit of the pardon. 6 Rep. 13: 2 Nelf. Abr. 765. And when a pardon is with an exception as to persons, the party who pleads it ought to shew, that he is not any of the parties excepted. 1 Lev. 26. A negative expression may be taken to enure to the same intent as an exception; for an exception in its nature is but a denial of what is taken to be good by the other party, either in point of law or pleading. And exceptions in law excepta ferunt regulam. 1 Lill. Abr. 559.

EXCEPTION TO EVIDENCE, &c. See this Dict. title Bill of Exceptions.

EXCEPTION IN DEED AND WRITINGS, Keeps the things from passing thereby; being a saving out of the deed, as if the same had not been granted; but it is to be a particular thing out of a general one, as a room out of an house, ground out of a manor, timber out of land, &c. And it must not be of a thing expressly granted in a deed: also it must be of what is severable from, and not inseparably incident to, the grant. Co. Lit. 47: 1 Lev. 287: Co. El. 244.

Where an exception goeth to the whole thing granted or demised, the exception is void. Co. El. 6. A man makes a lease of a manor, excepting all courts, &c. the exception is void as to the courts; for having leased the manor, it cannot be such without courts. Hob. 108: Moor 870. A lease was made of all a man's lands in L. excepting his manor of H and he had no lands in L. but the said manor; it was adjudged that the manor passed, and that the exception was void, Hob. 170: 2 Nelf. Abr. 764. A lease of an house and shops, except the shops; though this may extend to other shops, it is void as to the shops belonging to the house demised, because it is repugnant to the lease. Dyer 265.

If an exception crosses the grant, or is repugnant to it, the same is void: and if there be a saving or exception out of an exception, it may make a particular thing as if never excepted; as if a lease be made of a rectory, excepting the parsonage-house, saving to the lessee a chamber; this chamber not being excepted out of the lease, shall pass by the lease of the rectory. Hob. 72. 170: Co. El. 372: Owen 20.

By exception of trees, the soil is not excepted, but only sufficient nutriment for the trees: for the lessee shall have the pasture growing under them, though the lessor shall have all the benefit of the trees, mast, fruit, &c. and the trees are parcel of the inheritance. 5 Rep. 11: 11 Rep. 48, 50. But it has been adjudged, that, by an exception of woods, underwood and coppices, the soil of the coppices is excepted. Poph. 146: Cro. Jac. 487. If a lessee for years assign over his term, excepting the trees, &c. the exception is not good; because no one can have a special property in the trees, but the owner of the land. 2 Nelf. 764. Though where lessee for life makes a lease for years excepting the wood, &c. this may be a good exception, although he hath not any interest in it but as a lessee, in regard he is chargeable in waste, &c. and hath not granted his whole term. Cro. Jac. 296: 1 Lill. Abr. 560. These exceptions are commonly in leases for life and years; and must be always of a thing in esse. Co. Lit. 47. See titles Grant; Dead; Lease; Condition.

EXCHANGE, Excambium or cambrum; with the Civilian, permutatio. The King's Exchange, is the place appointed by the King for exchange of plate or bullion for the King's coin, &c. These places have been divers heretofore; but now there is only one, viz. the Mint in the Tower. See Stat. 25 Ed. 3. St. 5. c. 12: 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 19. and this Dict. titles Coin; Money.—There is also a Royal Exchange of Merchants in London.

Exchange among merchants is a commerce of money, or a bartering or exchanging of the money of one city or country country for that of another; money in this sense, is either real or imaginary; real, any real species current in any country at a certain price, at which it passes by the authority of the State, and of its own intrinsic value; and by imaginary money is understood all the denominations made use of to express any kind of money, which is not the full value of any real species. See Monetary.

The method of exchange for money used in England ought to be par pro par, according to value for value, and our exchange is grounded on the weight and fineness of our own money, and the weight and fineness of that of other countries, according to their several standards, proportionable in their valuation; which being truly and justly made, reduces the price of the exchange necessary of any nation or country to a certainty. But this course of exchange is of late abused, and money is become a merchandise, that rises and falls in its price in regard to the plenty and scarcity of it. At London, all exchanges are made upon the pound sterling of 20*s*. In the Low Countries, France and Germany, upon the French crown; Spain and Italy, &c. upon the ducato; and at Florence, Venice, and other places in the Streights, by the dollar and Florin. See title Bill of Exchange.

EXCHANGES OF GOODS AND MERCHANDISES. Were the original and natural way of commerce, precedent to buying; for there was no buying till money was invented; though in exchanging, both parties are as buyers and sellers, and both equally warrant. 3*Salk.* 157.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS. A mutual grant of equal interest in lands or tenements, the one in consideration of the other: and is used peculiarly in our Common-law for that compensation which the warrantor must make to the warrantee, value for value, if the land warranted be recovered from the warrantor. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 16. de comp. Conv. 1. vol. 170. Also there is a tacit condition of re-entry in this deed, on the lands given in exchange, in case of eviction; and on the warranty so, to claim and recover over in value, &c. For if either of the parties is evicted, even of a part, the exchange is defeated. 4*Rep.* 121: Cro. Eliz. 903.

The word Exchange is so individually requisite and appropriated by law to this case, that it cannot be supplied by any other word, or expressed by any circumlocution. 1*Inst.* 50, 51. The estates exchanged must be equal in quantity of interest, value is immaterial: as fee-simple for fee-simple, a lease for 20 years for a lease for 20 years, and the like. Litt. § 64, 5. And the exchange may be of things that lie either grant or in livery. But no livery of seisin, even in exchanges of freehold, is necessary to perfect the conveyance; for each party stands in the place of the other, and occupies his right, and each of them hath already had corporal possession of his own land. Litt. § 62.—Entry however must be made on both sides; for if either party die before entry, the exchange is void for want of sufficient notoriety. 1*Inst.* 50.

An exchange may be made of lands in fee-simple, free-tail, for life, &c. The estates granted are to be equal, as fee-simple for fee-simple, &c. though the lands need not be of equal value, or of the like nature: for a rent in fee issuing out of land, may be exchanged for land in fee; Litt. 63, 64: Co. Litt. 50, 51. If an exchange be made between tenant for life, and tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, the exchange is good; because their estates are equal. 11*Rep.* 80: Moor 665.

An exchange made between tenant in tail and another of unequal interest, may be good during his life: but his issue, when of full age, shall avoid it. And exchanges made by infants, by persons non sui juris married; a husband of the wife's land, &c. are not void, but voidable only; by the infant at his full age, the wife of the person non sui juris, and the heirs after the death of the husband, who may waive the nullity and disavow to them. Perk. § 277, 281.

Two jointenants and two tenants in common may exchange their lands; and by this deed, freeholds pass without livery and seisin; but the word exchange is to be used; and there must be execution of the exchange, by entry on the lands in the life of the parties, or the exchange will be void. 1*Inst.* 51: 1*And.* 9.

Littell expresses himself concerning an exchange as of a transaction between two; and in the case of Essex College, 2*Will.* 2. p. 484, the court held, that an exchange in the strict legal sense of the word, cannot be between three; the principles of it not being applicable to more than two distinct contracting parties, for want of the mutuality and reciprocity on which its operation is entirely dependent; and the case, above mentioned, of tenants in common exchanging with jointenants is not irreconcilable to this rule; because though four persons may be named, yet they constitute only two distinct parties; and consequently there is the same reciprocity as if the transaction were between two persons only.—And this applies to any number of persons, if so combined, as to make only two distinct relative parties. 1*Inst.* 50, 51: 1*And.* in note.

Sometimes lands intended to pass by exchange, not having the qualities and incidents of exchanged lands, may pass by way of gift or grant; as if two persons are seised of two acres of land, and one of them by deed gives his acre to the other, and the other his acre to him, and each of them gives livery of seisin upon his acre given in exchange; here the acres will pass from one to the other, but not in a way of exchange, because there was no word of exchange in the deed. Litt. 118. 61: Perk. 253.

A man grants to another lands in fee-simple, for lands in tail by way of exchange; or land in tail, for lands for life, &c. these deeds will not take effect as exchanges. File. Exchange 15, 61: Co. Litt. 62. If tenant in tail gives his land in exchange, for other land of the same estate-tail, the issue in tail may make it good if he will, or avoid the exchange. 1*Rep.* 96. A feoffment is made to A. and B. and the heirs of A. and they exchange the land for other lands; this will be good, and they shall hold the lands in the same nature that the land given in exchange was held. Perk. § 277.

If a lord release to the tenant his services in tail in exchange of land given to the lord in exchange in tail also, it is ill: but if lessee for life of one acre, give another acre to his lessor in tail, in exchange for a release from him of that acre, Blackstr. in tail in like manner, it is a good exchange. Perk. § 219, 276, 283. In case two persons make an exchange of land, and limit no estate, each shall have an estate for life, by implication: but if an express estate be limited to one for life, and none to the other, it will be void. 19*H.* 6. 27. And to make a good exchange, both the things must be in esse at the time of the exchange. Co. Litt. 50: 3*Ed.* 4. 10.

EXCHANGE.

But an exchange may be made to take effect in future, as well as presently; for if it be, that after the feast of Easter A. B. shall have such lands in D. in exchange for his lands in S. this is good. Park. 4 265.

By a special kind of agreement, an exchange may be of unequal estates. Meor. c. 209. The condition and warranty in exchanges run to the parties in privy; not to an assignee, &c. And if after two have exchanged lands, one of them releases to the other the warranty in law, it will not destroy the exchange. 4 Rep. 122: 1 Rel. Abr. 815. The parties themselves, and all privies and strangers for the most part may take advantage of exchanges void by any defect or accident: contra, if they are voidable, &c. 1 Rep. 105: Dyer 285.

EXCHANGE OF CHURCH LIVINGS. These exchanges are now seldom used, except that parsons sometimes exchange their churches, and resign them into the bishop's hands: and this is not a perfect exchange till the parties are inducted; for if either dies before they both are inducted, the exchange is void. Wood's Inst. 284: 2 Comm. 323.

By Stat. 31 El. c. 6. § 8, If any incumbent of any benefice with cure of souls, shall corruptly resign or exchange the same; or corruptly take for or in any respect of the resigning or exchanging the same, directly or indirectly, any pension, sum of money, or other benefit whatsoever; as well the giver as the taker, shall lose double the value of the sum; half to the Crown, and half to him that shall sue for the same. See this Dist. titles Simony: Advowson.

If two parsons by one instrument agree to exchange their benefices, and in order thereto resign them into the hands of the Ordinary, such exchange being executed on both parts, is good; and each may enjoy the other's living; but the patrons must present them again to each living; and if they refuse to do it, or the Ordinary will not admit them respectively, then the exchange is not executed; and in such case either clerk may return to his former living, even though one of them should be admitted, instituted and inducted to the benefice of the other; which is expressed in the exchange itself, and the protestation usually added to it. 2 Rep. 74: Rel. Abr. 814.

EXCHANGEORS. Those that return money by bills of exchange. See Excambigores. 5 R. 2. c. 2.

EXCHEQUER.

SCACCARIUM, from the Fr. eschiquier, i. e. ubacus, tabula lusoria, or from the Germ. schatz, viz. thesaurus.] An ancient Court of record, wherein all causes touching the revenue and rights of the crown are heard and determined; and where the revenues of the crown are received. Camden in his Britan. p. 113, saith, This court took its name à tabulâ ad quam assidebant, the cloth which covered it being partly coloured, or chequered: we had it from the Normans, as appears by the Grand Customary, cap. 56; where it is described to be an assembly of high justiciars, to whom it appertained to amend that which the inferior justiciars had misdone, and unadvisedly judged, and to do right to all as from the Prince's mouth; and this seems the origin of the Court of Exchequer-Chamber.

The Court of Exchequer is inferior in rank, not only to the court of King's Bench, but to the Common Pleas also; it is a very ancient court of record, set up by Will- iam the Conqueror, as a part of the aula regia, though regulated and reduced to its present order by king Edward I; and intended principally to order the revenues of the crown, and to recover the king's debts and duties: 4 Inst. 103—116. It is called the Exchequer, scaccarium, from the chequed cloth, resembling a chess-board, which covers the table there; and on which when certain of the king's accounts are made up, the sums are marked and scored with counters. It consists of two divisions: the receipt of the Exchequer, which manages the royal revenue; and the court or judicial part of it; which latter is again sub-divided into a court of Equity, and a court of Common-law.

The Court of Equity is held in the Exchequer Chamber before the Lord Treasurer, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the chief baron, and three puisne Barons. These Mr. Selden conjectures (title Hon. 2. § 16.) to have been anciently made out of such as were Barons of the kingdom or parliamentary barons; and thence to have derived their name; which conjecture receives great strength from Bracton's explanation of Magna Carta, c. 14, which directs that the earls and barons be amerced by their peers; that is, says he, by the barons of the Exchequer l. 3. tr. 2. c. 1. § 3.

The primary and original business of this court is to call the King's debtors to account, by bill filed by the attorney general; and to recover any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, any goods, chattels, or other profits or benefits, belonging to the crown. So that by their original constitution the jurisdiction of the courts of Common Pleas, King's Bench, and Exchequer, was entirely separate and distinct: the Common Pleas being intended to decide all controversies between Subject and Subject; the King's Bench to correct all crimes and misdemeanors that amount to a breach of the King's peace; and the Exchequer to adjust and recover the King's revenue. See this Dist. titles Courts: King's Bench: Common Pleas. But as, by a fiction, almost all sorts of civil actions are now allowed to be brought in the King's Bench, in like manner, by another fiction, all kinds of personal suits may be prosecuted in the court of Exchequer. For as all the officers and ministers of this court have, like those of other superior courts, the privilege of suing and being sued only in their own court; so also the King's debtors and farmers, and all accountants of the exchequer, are privileged to sue and implead all manner of persons in the same court of equity, that they themselves are called into. They have likewise privilege to sue and implead one another, or any stranger, in the same kind of Common-law actions (where the personalty only is concerned) as are prosecuted in the court of Common Pleas.

This gives origin to the Common-law part of their jurisdiction; which was established merely for the benefit of the King's accountants; and is exercised by the barons only of the Exchequer, and not the treasurer or chancellor. The writ upon which all proceedings here are grounded is called a quo minus: in which the plaintiff suggests that he is the King's farmer or debtor, and that the defendant hath done him the injury or damage complained of; quo minus justiciarius tenet, (by which he is the less able,) to pay the King his debt or rent. And these suits are expressly directed, by what is called the statute of Rutland, 10 E. 1. c. 11, to be confined to such matters only, only, as specially concern the King or his ministers of the Exchequer. And by the articuli super cartas, 28 Ed. 1. c. 4, it is enacted, that no Common Pleas be thenceforth holden in the Exchequer, contrary to the form of the great charter. But now, by the suggestion of privilege, any person may be admitted to sue in the Exchequer; as well as the King's accomptant. The surmise of being debtor to the King; is therefore become matter of form and mere words of course, and the court is open to all the nation equally. The same holds with regard to the equity side of the court: for there any person may file a bill against another upon a bare suggestion that he is the King's accomptant; but whether he is so, or not, is never controverted.

In this court on the equity side, the clergy have long used to exhibit their bills for the non-payment of tithes, in which case the surmise of being the King's debtor is no fiction, they being bound to pay him their first fruits, and annual tenths. But the Chancery has of late years obtained a large share in this business. See this Dict. titles Chancery: Equity.

An appeal from the equity side of this court lies immediately to the House of Peers; but from the Common-law side, in pursuance of the Stat. 31 E. 3. c. 12, a writ of error must be first brought into the court of Exchequer Chamber. And from the determination there had, there lies in the dernier resort, a writ of error to the House of Lords. 3 Comm. 44. See this Dict. titles Deceit: Equity: Error.

Some persons think there was an Exchequer under the Anglo-Saxon Kings; but our best historians are of opinion, that it was erected by King William the First, its model being taken from the transmarine Exchequer, established in Normandy long before that time. Madox's Hist. Excheq.

In the reign of Hen. the First, there was an Exchequer, which has continued ever since; and the judges of the court were at that time stiled Barons Scaccarii, and administered justice to the subjects. In ancient times the Barons of the Exchequer dealt in affairs relating to the state, or public service of the crown and realm: and were greatly concerned in the preservation of the prerogative, as well as the revenue of the crown; for at the Exchequer it was the care of the Treasurer and Barons to see that the rights of the crown were no ways invaded. Lex Constitutionis 198.

On account of the authority and dignity of the court of Exchequer, anciently it was held in the King's palace; and the acts thereof were not be examined or controlled in any other of the King's ordinary courts of justice: the Exchequer was the great repository of records, wherein the records of the other courts at Westminster, &c. were brought to be laid up in the Treasury there. And writs of the Chancery were sometimes made forth at the Exchequer; writs of summons to assemble parliaments, &c. Ibid.

The Exchequer has been commonly held at Westminster, the usual place of the King's residence; but it hath been sometimes holden at other places, as the King pleased; as at Winchester, &c. And in the Exchequer there are reckoned seven courts, viz. the court of Pleas; the court of Accounts; the court of Receipts; the court of the Exchequer-Chamber (being the assembly of all the judges of England for difficult matters in law); the court of Exchequer-Chamber for Errors in the court of Exchequer; for Errors in the King's Bench; and the court of Equity in the Exchequer-Chamber. 4 Inst. 219.

But, according to the usual division for the dispatch of all common business, the Exchequer is divided (as has been already noticed) into two parts; one whereof is conversant especially in the judicial hearing and deciding of causes pertaining to the Prince's coffers, anciently called Scaccarium Computorum; the other is the Receipts of the Exchequer, which is properly employed in the receiving and payment of money. And it has been observed, that about the time of the Conquest there was very little money in specie in the realm; for then the tenants of knights' fees answered their lords by military services; and till the reign of King Hen. I. the rents or farms due to the King were generally rendered in provisions and necessaries for his household; but in that reign the same were changed into money; and afterwards, in succeeding times, the crown revenue was changed or paid into the Exchequer chiefly in gold and silver. Lex Constitutionis, p. 203.

By statute, all sheriffs, bailiffs, &c. are to account in the Exchequer before the Treasurer and Barons: and annual rolls are to be made of the profits of counties, &c. Also inquisitors shall be appointed in every county, of debts due to the King. 51 H. 3. c. 5: 10 Ed. 1. Stat. Rul. And all fines of counties for the whole year are to be sent into the Exchequer. Stat. de Vicecom. 14 Ed. 2. c. 1. Persons impeached in the Exchequer, may plead in their own discharge; and there shall be writs for discharging persons, &c. 5 R. 2. c. 10, &c. The officers of the receipt may receive and take for their fees 1 d. in the pound for sums issued out, &c. 5 6 W. & M. cap. 20.

Officers of the Exchequer are without delay to receive money brought thither: and the money on the receipt is to be kept in chests under three different locks and keys, kept by three several officers, &c. 8 9 W. 3. c. 28.

In the Court of Equity the proceedings are by English bill and answer, agreeable to the practice of the High Court of Chancery.

In this court the Attorney General brings bills for any matters concerning the King; and any person grieved in any cause prosecuted against him on behalf of the King, may bring his bill against the Attorney General to be relieved in equity, in which case the plaintiff must attend the King's Attorney with a copy of the bill, and procure him to answer the same; and Mr. Attorney may call any that are interested in the cause, or any officer or others, to instruct him in the making of his answer, so as the King be not prejudiced thereby; and his answer is to be put in without oath. 4 Inst. 209, 212, 218.

The Exchequer is now said to be the last of the four courts at Westminster; governed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Lord Chief Baron, and three other Barons, who are the sovereign auditors of England, and the judges of the court. There also sits in this court a Curfitor Baron, who administers the oath of all high-sheriffs, under-sheriffs, bailiffs, auditors, receivers, collectors, controllers, surveyors, and searchers of all the customs in England.

The Chancellor or Under Treasurer hath the custody of the seal of this court. The King's Attorney General is made privy to all manner of pleas that are not ordinary and of course, course, which rise upon the process of the court; and he puts into court in his own name, informations of concealments of customs, seizures, &c. And also for intrusions, wastes and encroachments upon any of the King's lands; or upon penal statutes, forfeitures, &c.

The Remembrancers keep the records of the court betwixt the King and his subjects, and enter the rules and orders there made: one is called the King's Remembrancer, and the other the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer: The Remembrancer for the King hath all manner of informations upon penal statutes used in his office only; and he calls to account, in open court, all the great Accountants of the Crown, Collectors of Customs, &c. he makes out writs of privilege, enters judgments of pleas; and all matters upon English bill are remaining in his office.

The Remembrancer for the Lord Treasurer makes out all the estreats; he sets down in his book the debts of all sheriffs, and takes their foreign accounts; and issues out writs and process in many cases, &c. And these Remembrancers have several attornies to do business under them; who by statute are not to issue out of the Remembrancer's office, any writs upon supposition, but upon just grounds, &c. 1 Jac. 1. c. 26.

There are two Chamberlains that keep the keys of the Treasury, where the records lie, with the book of Domesday, &c. They may sit in court if they please, but not intermeddle with any thing; unless it be relating to the sheriffs, in the pricking whereof they have a vote. See post Stat. 23 Geo. 3. at the end of this article. And besides the Chamberlains, there is a Clerk of the Pipe, in whose custody are conveyed out of the King's and Treasurer's Remembrancer, &c. as water through a pipe, all accounts and debts due to the King.

The Controller of the Pipe; who is said to be the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Clerk of the Estreats, who receives the estreats from the Remembrancer's office, and writeth them out to be served for the King, &c. The Foreign Opposer, who opposes or makes a charge on all sheriffs, &c. of their green wax, i. e. fines, issues, amerciaments, recognisance, &c. certified in estreats annexed to the writ, under the seal in green wax, and delivereth the same to the Clerk of the Estreats to be put in process. The Auditors, that take the accounts of the King's Receivers, Collectors, &c. and perfect them. The four Tellers, whose business to receive and pay all money is well known. The Clerk of the Pells, from his parchment rolls, called Pellis Receptorum. The Clerk of the Nihil, who makes a roll of such sums as the sheriff upon process returns Nihil, &c. The Clerk of the Pleas, in whose office all officers and privileged persons are to sue and be sued; and here are divers Under Clerks employed in suits commenced or depending in this court. There is a Clerk of the Summons; Secundaries in the offices of the Remembrancers; Secondaries of the Pipe: Marshal, &c.

By Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 82, The offices of the two Chamberlains, the Tally-cutter, Usher of the Exchequer, and the second Clerks to each Teller, shall, after the death, surrender, forfeiture or removal of the persons interested in them, be abolished. § 1, 4.

Upon the death, &c. of the two Chamberlains, instead of the tally now used to denote the receipt of money, there shall be substituted an indented cheque receipt. § 2.—And upon the death, &c. of the Usher, the chief officer in each office shall supply his place. § 3.

EXCISE.

After the death, &c. of the present Auditor, Clerk of the Pells, either of the four Tellers, or two Chamberlains, the payment of all salaries, fees and emoluments to the said officers, shall cease, and in lieu thereof, certain annual salaries are made payable, viz. To the Auditor 4200*l.* his chief Clerk 1000*l.* Clerk of the Pells 3000*l.* his first Clerk 1000*l.* The four Tellers each 2700*l.* Each of their first Clerks 1000*l.* These are to appoint such other clerks and officers as they think fit, to be approved of by the Treasury. § 5.

All fees as heretofore (See Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 39.) to be received by the first Clerk to the Clerk of the Pells; [200*l.* of whose salary is on that account:] two thirds thereof to be applied to the sinking fund, and one-third to pay the above salaries. § 9.

The houses of the Auditor, four Tellers and Usher, shall after the death, &c. of the present possessors be vested in his Majesty, and not annexed to the offices. § 10.—And no office in the receipt of the Exchequer may be granted either in possession or reversion, in any other manner than subject to this act. § 11.

THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER-CHAMBER was first erected by Statute 31 Ed. 3. c. 12; to determine causes upon writs of error from the Common law side of the Court of Exchequer. And to that end it consists of the Lord Chancellor, and Lord Treasurer, taking unto them the justices of the King's Bench, and Common Pleas. In imitation of which, a second Court of Exchequer Chamber was erected by Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8, consisting of the Justices of the Common Pleas, and the Barons of the Exchequer; before whom writs of error may be brought to reverse judgments in certain suits originally begun in the court of King's Bench. See this Dict. title Error: § Comm. 56.

Into the court also of Exchequer-Chamber, (which then consists of all the judges of the three superior courts, and sometimes the Lord Chancellor also,) are sometimes adjourned from the other courts such causes, as the judges upon argument find to be of great weight and difficulty, before any judgment is given upon them in the court below. 4 Inst. 119: 2 Bulstr. 146.

In the abovementioned court of Exchequer-Chamber, established under Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8, there are no more than two return-days in every term; one is called the general affirmance day, being appointed by the judges, to be held a few days after the beginning of every term, for the general affirmance or reversal of judgments: the other is the adjournment day, which is usually held a day or two before the end of every term. On the first of these days, judgments are affirmed, or reversed, or writs of error non-prossed; the intent of the latter is, to finish such matters as were left undone at the former; on which last day also (as well as on the first) judgments may be affirmed, or reversed, or writs of error non-prossed, on paying a fee extraordinary to the clerk of the Errors, and setting down the cause for affirmance two days before the adjournment day. EXCISE.

From the Belg. accise tributa. An inland imposition paid, sometimes on the consumption of the commodity, or frequently upon the retail sale, which is the last stage before the consumption.

This

EXCISE.

This is doubtless, (says Blackstone, 1 Comm. 318,) in- partially speaking, "the most economical way of taxing the subject; the charges of levying collecting and man- aging the excise duties being considerably less in proportion than in other branches of the revenue. It also renders the commodity cheaper to the consumer than charging it with customs to the same amount would do. But at the same time the rigour and arbitrary proceedings of excise laws, seem hardly compatible with the temper of a free nation. For the frauds that might be com- mitted in this branch of the revenue, unless a strict watch is kept, make it necessary wherever it is established, to give the officers a power of entering and searching the houses of such as deal in excisable commodities, at any hour of the day; and in many cases, of the night likewise. And (for the same reasons) the proceedings in case of transgressions are summary and sudden, to the exclusion of the trial by jury.

Its original establishment was in 1643, when it was introduced by the Parliament then in rebellion against King Charles I. Its progress was gradual, being at first laid upon those persons and commodities where it was supposed the hardship would be least perceivable wine. The makers and venders of beer, ale, cyder and perry; and was afterwards imposed on such a multitude of commodities that it might fairly be denominated general.

Upon the restoration of Charles II, it having then been long established, and its produce well known, some part of it was given to the crown by way of purchase for the feudal tenures and other oppressive parts of the hereditary revenue. And notwithstanding the objections eternally raised against it, by the interested or the patriotic, it has from time to time been imposed on a vast variety of articles.

Brandies and other spirits are now excised at the dis- tillery: Printed silks and linens at the printer's.—Starch and hair-powder at the maker's.—Gold and silver wire, at the wire drawer's.—Plate in the hands of the vendor, who pays yearly for a licence to sell it.—Lands and goods sold by auction, for which a pound rate is pay- able by the auctioneer who is also charged with an an- nual duty for his licence; coaches and other wheel car- riages, for which the occupier is excised; though not with the same circumstances of arbitrary strictness, as in most other instances.—To these we may add coffee and tea, chocolate and cocoa paste, for which the duty is paid by the retailer.—All artificial (home-made) wines commonly called Sweets.—Paper and pasteboards first when made, and again if stained or printed. Malt.—Vinagers.—And the manufacture of glass; for all which the duty is paid by the manufacturer.—Hops, for which the person that gathers them is answerable.—Candles and Soap, which are paid for at the maker's.—Malt liquors brewed for sale, which are excised at the brewery.—Cyder and Perry at the vendor's.—And leather and Skins at the tanner's.—A list which no friend to his country would wish to see further increased.—1 Comm. c. 8. p. 320.

To the above list however are now to be added.—Foreign Wines; in the hands of the importer, merchant or consignee.—Coaches, on being built, at the coach maker's, who must also have a licence.—Tobacco and Sauces at the manufacturer's.—And bricks and tiles; See title Bricks.

It has been very judiciously observed, that the grie- vances of the excise exist more, perhaps, in apprehension than in reality.—Actions and prosecutions against officers, commissioners and justices for misconduct in excise cases are very rarely heard of in courts of law. It is certainly an evil, that a fair dealer cannot have the benefit of any secret improvement in the management of his trade or manufactory; yet it seems more than equivalent to the Public at large, that by the survey of the excise, the commodity is preserved from many shameful adulterations; as experience has fully proved since wine was made sub- ject to the excise laws.

The excise, like the customs, is necessarily regulated by a multiplicity of statutes; the abridgement of which would form no small volume; See title Customs.—The following short extracts from Burn's Justice title Excise, where this subject is more fully stated, will convey the information most useful to the student.

One principal head office of Excise is to be kept in London; or within ten miles thereof, to which all other offices in the kingdom shall be subordinate and account- able; which said office shall be managed by such com- missioners as the King shall appoint. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. § 46; 5 W. c. 20. § 16.

And all the places within the bills of Mortality shall be under the immediate care and management of the said head-office; and such and so many subordinate commissioners and sub-commissioners, and other officers shall be appointed by the King in other places, as he shall think fit. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. § 48.

The excise office in all places where it shall be ap- pointed, shall be kept open from 8 in the morning, till 2 in the afternoon. Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. § 12.

The commissioners or sub-commissioners shall appoint under their hands and seals, such persons as they shall think needful in each market town, to be there upon every market day, in some known and public place; for receiving entries and duties, and performing all other things touching the revenue of excise; and if such office be not so kept in each market town, the commissioners or others neglecting or refusing, shall for every market day forfeit 10*l*. And such person as shall come to such market town to make his entry or payment, and tender the same accordingly, and be able to prove such tender by oath of one witness, shall not be liable to any penalty for such weekly or monthly entries or payments, as should have been made or paid on such market day. Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 11. § 10.

The kingdom of England and Wales (exclusive of the bills of Mortality) is divided into about 50 collections; some called by names of particular counties; others by the names of great towns; where one county is divided into several collections, or where a collection compre- hends the contiguous parts of several counties, every collection is subdivided into several districts, within which there is a Supervisor; and each district is parcelled into out rides and foot walks, within each of which there is a Gauger or surveying officer. Glb. Exrb. Append.

The commissioners or sub-commissioners, in their re- spective circuits and divisions, shall constitute under their hands and seals, such and so many gaugers as they shall find needful. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. § 33.

In order to which, he who would be made a gauger, must procure a certificate, that he is above 21, and under 30 years of age; that he understands the four first rules of arithmetick; that he is of the communion of the church church of England; how he has been employed, or what business he hath followed; that he is not incumbered with debts; whether single or married; and if married how many children he has, for if he has above two, he cannot (by the rules of the office) be admitted. Gibb. Exch. App.

He must also nominate two persons to be his sureties, and it must be certified that they are of sufficient ability; and that the said certificate is of his own hand-writing: such certificate, written by him, must be signed by the supervisor of excise where the party applying lives. id.

At the bottom of his certificate must be his affidavit, that neither he nor any else to his knowledge, hath, directly, or indirectly, given or promised to give any treat, fee, gratuity, or reward, for his obtaining or endeavouring to obtain an order for his being instructed. id.

When an order for instruction is granted, it is directed to an experienced officer, who receives such person as his pupil: and the like books, as officers have, being delivered to such pupil, he goes with and attends the officer, who instructs him, and he takes surveys, and in his own book makes the like entries as if he was an officer, until the instructor certifies that he is fully instructed. id.

After he is thus certified for, and until he is employed, he is called an expectant, being to wait till a vacancy happens. id.

No person shall be capable of intermeddling with any office relating to the Excise, until he shall, before two justices in the county where his employment shall be, or before a baron of the Exchequer, take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, together with an oath of office which is to be certified to and recorded by the next Quarter-Sessions. Stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24. § 47, 48. and see Stat. 15 C. 2. c. 11 § 57.

The business of the Supervisor is to be continually surveying the houses and places of the persons within his district liable to duties: and to observe and see whether the officers duly make their surveys, and make due entries thereof in their books and in their specimen-papers; and every supervisor is in his own book to enter what he himself does each day and part thereof; and also set down the behaviour, good and bad, the diligence or negligence, of the several officers of his district: and at the end of every six weeks to draw out a diary of every day's business, and of the remarks made each day of the several officers in his district, and to transmit such diary at the end of every six weeks to the chief office. Gibb. Exch. Append.

Each commissioner takes and peruses a proportion of these diaries; and when he meets with any remarkable complaint against any officer, he communicates it to the rest, who thereupon come to an agreement, either to admonish, reprimand, reduce, or discharge. For small faults, officers are admonished; for great ones reprimanded; for greater, reduced; but for the greatest discharged. The commissioner who peruses the diary writes in the margin, admonish, reprimand, or as the case is. id.

These diaries, after having been thus written upon are delivered to the clerk of the diaries, who in a book, called the reprimand book, places the admonitions, reprimands and the like, to each officer's account, and writes every offender word thereof. Which reprimand book is referred to upon discovering new faults; and if it is there found that the officer has before been admonished and reprimanded so often, that there are no hopes of his amending, he is then discharged. The said book is likewise referred to, when application is made for advancing, or preferring an officer into a better post. Frequent admonitions or reprimands, are a bar to preferment, unless they are of old standing; but if for three years last he stands pretty clear of admonitions and reprimands, those of elder date are not much regarded. id.

The Collector's business is, every six weeks to go his rounds, and in the intervals of rounds, he is to be assisting in prosecuting offenders before the justices; he is also to peruse the supervisor's diaries, and where he finds an officer complained of, is to examine him and the supervisor, and having heard both, is in the margin to write his opinion of each fact; he is also to have an eye how the supervisors and officers of his collection perform their duties, and from the vouchers he transcribes into his book, the charge on each particular person in his collection. id.

For faults, gaugers are reduced, either to be only assistants, or from foot walks to out rides; supervisors are reduced to be again only gaugers: and collectors are reduced to be supervisors. id.

In some instances, discharged officers, after having for a competent time been thereby kept out of pay, are again restored; but if twice discharged are never again restored, unless one of the discharges appears to have been occasioned by a misrepresentation of the case. Id.

EXCLUSA, EXCLUSAGIUM, A sluice for the carrying off water; and the payment to the lord for the benefit of such a sluice. Et duo molendina in eodem manerio cum aquis exclusagiis, &c. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 398, 587.

EXCOMMENGEMENT, Law French.] Excommunication. Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 3.

EXCOMMUNICATION, Excommunicatio.] An ecclesiastical censure, divided into the greater and the lesser; by the latter a person is excluded from the communion of the church only; by the former from that communion, and also from the company of the faithful; and incapacitated from performing any legal act.

The sentence of excommunication was instituted originally for preserving the purity of the church; but ecclesiastics did not scruple to convert it into an engine for promoting their own power, and inflicted it on the most frivolous occasions. Robert's. Hist. Emp. Charles V. 2 vol. 109, &c.

If the judge of any spiritual court excommunicates a man for a cause, of which he hath not the legal cognizance, the party may have an action against him at common law; and he is also liable to be indicted at the suit of the King. 1 Inst. 134: 2 Inst. 527, 623.

An excommunicated person is disabled to do any act that is required to be done by one that is probus and legalis homo. He cannot serve upon juries, cannot be a witness in any court, and which is the worst of all, cannot bring an action either real or personal to recover lands or money due to him. Litt. §. 201. And on forty days' contumacy, the defendant is liable to be taken on a writ of Excommunicato capiendo and imprisoned till he is reconciled to the church, when he may be freed by a writ of Excommunicato delibendo. 2 Inst. 189: 8 Rep. 68. See more fully those titles Post. In case of subtraction of tithes a more summary and expeditious assistance is given by

by the statutes 27 H. 8. c. 20; 3 H. 8. c. 7, which enact that on complaint by the ecclesiastical judge of any contempt or misbehaviour of a defendant, in any suit for tithes, any privy councillor or any two justices of the peace, (or in case of disobedience to a definitive sentence any two justices of the peace,) may commit the party to prison without bail or mainprize, till he enters into a recognizance with sufficient sureties to give a due obedience to the process and sentence of the court.

As to pleading excommunication in a plaintiff, see title Abatement, I. 2. 6.

We may next proceed to consider more particularly,

I. In what Cases, and by whom, Persons may be Excommunicated.

II Of the Proceedings in Excommunications; and how the Excommunicated are absolved.

Excommunication is generally for contempt in not appearing, or not obeying a decree, &c. And in other respects the causes of it are many; as for matters of heresy, refusing to receive the sacrament, or to come to church; incontinency, adultery, simony, &c. A man may not be excommunicated for matter of defamation, &c.

In some cases persons incur excommunication ipso facto by act of parliament; but they are to be first convicted of the offence by law, and the conviction is transmitted to the Ordinary. Dyer 275: 1 Ventr. 146.

By Stat. 5 and 6 Ed. 6. c. 4, "If any person shall smite, or lay violent hands upon any other, either in any church or church-yard, then ipso facto every person so offending shall be deemed excommunicate, and be excluded from the fellowship and company of Christ's congregation."

And it is further enacted by the said statute, "That if any person shall maliciously strike any person with any weapon, in any church or church-yard, or shall draw any weapon in any church or church-yard, to the intent to strike another with the same weapon, then every person so offending shall stand ipso facto excommunicated as aforesaid." See title Church.

By the Stat. 3 Jac. 1 cap. 5. §§ 11 & 12, it is enacted, "That every popish recusant convict shall stand to all intents and purposes disabled, as a person lawfully excommunicated." See this Dict. title Papist.

None but the bishop is to certify excommunication, unless the bishop be beyond sea, or in remotis; or except the certificate be by one that hath ordinary jurisdiction, &c.

Anno 38 H. 3, Boniface archbishop of Canterbury, and the other bishops, with burning tapers in their hands, in Westminster-Hall before the King, and the other Estates of the realm, denounced a curse and excommunication against the breakers of the liberty of the church: and by Stat. 9 E. 3, Bishops may excommunicate, not only all perturbors of the peace of the church, but also felons, and other offenders, &c. And by the ecclesiastical laws, excommunicated persons are not permitted to have Christian burial.

The bishop's certificate, if he die before the return of the writ, shall not be received, for his successor shall certify; the significavit must mention that the party lived within the diocese where he was excommunicated, and by what bishop; if it be pleaded, the time when it is to be shewn; and excommunication must be declared in the ecclesiastical court before they proceed, &c. 8 Rep. 68.

VOL. I.

Cro. Jac. 83: Moor, Ca. 667: Lutb. 174: Hesley 86. See this Dict. title Abatement, I. 2. 6.

It hath been adjudged, that the spiritual court hath not power to meddle with the body of any persons whatsoever, or to send process to take them; for if a person is excommunicated for contempt, &c. they ought to certify it into the Chancery, whence it is sent into B. R. and thence issues process. Cro. Elm. 741. See post title Excommunicato Capiendo.

If a person be unjustly excommunicated for a matter of which the spiritual court hath not cognizance, and he is taken on a writ of excommunicato capiendo, the party grieved shall have a writ out of Chancery to the sheriff, to deliver him out of prison. 2 Inst. 623: 12 Co. 76: F. N. B. 141.

So if the spiritual court proceeds inversis ordine; as if they refuse a copy of the libel, &c. a prohibition shall go, with a clause to absolve and deliver the party injured. 1 Sid. 232.

Also if a man be excommunicated, and offers to obey and perform the sentence, and the bishop refuseth to accept it, and to assail him, he shall have a writ to the bishop, requiring him, upon performance of the sentence, to assail him; and the reason thereof is, for that by the excommunication the party is disabled to sue any action, or to have any remedy for any wrong done unto him, so long as he shall remain excommunicate; and also the party grieved may have his action upon his case against the bishop, in like manner as he may when the bishop doth excommunicate him for a matter which belongeth not to the ecclesiastical cognizance; also the bishop, in those cases, may be indicted at the suit of the King. 2 Inst. 623.

But if the excommunication be for a just cause, the party must make present satisfaction before he can be absolved, or he must put in caution, that he will hereafter perform that which the bishop shall reasonably and according to law enjoin him; which caution, in the Civil law, is of three sorts. 1. Fidejussoria, as when a man bindeth himself with sureties to perform somewhat. 2. Pignoratitia, or realis cautio, as when a man engageth goods or mortgageth lands for the performance. 3. Juratoria, when the party who is to perform any thing, taketh a corporal oath to do it; which last is now the most frequent method.

This method of taking caution was held to be against law. 1 Bull. 122.——But was afterwards on great debate held to be good; and that the bishop having a discretionary power herein, it was as much in his option to take caution by obligation as by either of the two other methods. 2 Law 36: Raym. 225.

If after a person is excommunicated, there comes a general act of pardon, which pardons all contempts, &c. it seems that this offence is taken away without any formal absolution. See Cro. Car. 199: Cro. Jac. 212: 8 Co. 68: 1 Jon. 227: 2 Lew. 30: Gr. J. Cal. 1170.

EXCOMMUNICATIO CAPIENDO. A writ directed to the sheriff for apprehending him who stands obstinately excommunicated. If within forty days after sentence of excommunication has been published in the Church, the offender does not submit and abide by the sentence of the Spiritual Court, the bishop may signify, i. e. certify, such contempt to the King in Chancery. Upon which there issues out this writ to the sheriff of the county, called, from the bishop's certificate, a significavit; or, from in effect, a writ de excommunicato capiendo. And the sheriff shall thereupon take the offender and imprison him in the county gaol till he is reconciled to the church, and such reconciliation certified by the bishop. F. N. B. 62. By the Stat. 5 Edw. c. 23, Writs de excommunicato capiendo shall issue out of the court of Chancery in term-time, and be returnable in B. R. &c. They shall be brought sealed into the King's Bench, and there opened and delivered of record to the sheriff, and there must be twenty days between the teste and the return: and if the sheriff return a non est inventus on the writ, a capias with proclamation is to be granted for the party to yield his body to gaol under the penalty of 10*l.* And if he do not appear on the first capias and proclamation, a second is to go forth, and he is to forfeit 20*l.* &c.

But, by this statute, if in the excommunicato capiendo, the party excommunicated hath not a sufficient addition, as to his place of dwelling, &c. according to 1 H. 5. c. 5; or if in the significavit it is contained, that the excommunication proceeds upon a cause of contempt, or some original matter of heresy; for refusing to have a child baptized, to receive the sacrament, to come to divine service, or for error in matters of religion and doctrine, for incontinency, usury, simony, perjury in the ecclesiastical courts, or idolatry; he shall not incur the penalties in this act, for his contempt in not rendering himself prisoner upon the capias, &c. So that the statute doth not require the capias with proclamations, and the penalties in other cases, besides the ten cases mentioned. 2 Inst. 661.

And it has been adjudged, where a person has been excommunicated, and none of those causes were contained in the significavit, that the person excommunicated should be discharged of the penalties; but not of the excommunication. 3 Mod. 89. It has also been held, that for any of the causes expressed in the statute there ought to go a capias with a penalty, and be an addition to the writ: in other cases it is not necessary; and if then the capias be with a penalty, the court will not discharge the party, but the penalty only: but for want of addition, in cases where that is required, the party shall be discharged upon motion. 1 Salk. 294, 295.

EXCOMMUNICATO DELIBERANDO, A writ to the sheriff for delivery of an excommunicate person out of prison, upon certificate from the ordinary of his conformity to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. F. N. B. 63: Reg. Orig. 67. And where a man is unduly excommunicated, he may be delivered in some cases by an habeas corpus; and sometimes by pleading, as well as by an excommunicato deliberando: also sometimes by prohibition, &c. And on a general pardon, the party may have a writ to the bishop to absolve him. 12 Rep. 76: Latch. 205: Godb. 272. If a plaintiff in an action be excommunicate, and after he gets letters of absolution; on shewing them in court, he may have a re-summons, &c. upon his original. 1 Inst. 133.

EXCOMMUNICATO RECIPIENDO, or rather Re-capiendo.] A writ whereby persons excommunicated being for their obstinacy committed to prison, and unlawfully delivered, before they have given caution to obey the authority of the church, are commanded to be sought after, retaken, and imprisoned again. Reg. Orig. 67.—If a person after his commitment escapes, and the sheriff has not returned his writ, a capias excommunicatum de nouo shall go, otherwise if the writ be returned. Mod. Ca. 78.

EXECUTION. Executio.] Signifies the last performance of an act, as of a judgment, &c. It is the obtaining possession of any thing recovered by judgment of law. 1 Inst. 289.

Sir Edw. Coke, in his Reports, makes two sorts of executions; one final, another with a quousque, tending to an end: an execution final is that which makes money of the defendant's goods, or extends his lands, and delivers them to the plaintiff, which he accepts in satisfaction, and is the end of the suit, and all that the king's writ requires to be done; the other writ with a quousque, though it tendeth to an end, is not final: as in case of a capias ad satisfaciendum, which is not a final execution, but the body of the party is to be taken, to the intent the plaintiff be satisfied his debt, &c. and the imprisonment of the defendant not being absolute, but until he do satisfy the same. 6 Rep. 87.

EXECUTION, in the usual legal sense of the word, is a judicial writ grounded on the judgment of the court from whence it issues: and is supposed to be granted by the court at the request of the party at whose suit it is issued, to give him satisfaction on the judgment which he hath obtained: and therefore an execution cannot be sued out in one court, upon a judgment obtained in another. Impey. K. B.

This Execution, or putting the law in force, is performed in different manners according to the nature of the action upon which it is founded, and of the judgment which is had or recovered.

If the plaintiff recovers in an action real or mixed, whereby the seisin or possession of land is awarded to him, the writ of execution shall be an Habere facias seisinam, or writ of seisin of a freehold; or an Habere facias possessionem, or writ of possession of a chattel interest. Finch L. 470. See this Dist. those titles. These are writs directed to the sheriff of the county, commanding him to give actual possession to the plaintiff of the land so recovered: in the execution of which the sheriff may take with him the posse comitatus, or power of the county; and may justify breaking open doors, if the possession be not quietly delivered. See post. III. 3. But if it be peaceably yielded up, the delivery of a twig, a turf, or the ring of a door in the name of seisin, is sufficient execution of the writ. 3 Comm. 412.

Upon a presentation to a benefice recovered in a quare impedit, or assize of darrein presentment the execution is by a writ de clerico admittendo; directed not to the sheriff, but to the bishop or archbishop, and requiring him to admit and institute the clerk of the plaintiff. See titles Admittendo clerico: Advowson.

In other actions, where the judgment is that something special be done or rendered by the defendant, then in order to compel him so to do, and to see the judgment executed, a special writ of execution issues to the sheriff according to the nature of the case. As upon an assize of nuisance or quod permittat proferre, where one part of the judgment is that the nuisance be removed, a writ goes to the sheriff to abate it at the charge of the party; which likewise issues in case of an indictment. Comb. 10. See title Nuisance.

Upon a replevin the writ of execution is the writ de replevo habendo; to have a return of the cattle distrained; and if the distress be cloigned, the defendant shall have a Capias a Capias in Witbernem; but on the plaintiff's tendering the damages and submitting to a fine, the process in Witbernem shall be stayed: 2 Leon. 174. See title Replevin: Distress: Witbernem. In default, after judgment the plaintiff shall have a distingas to compel the defendant to deliver the goods by repeated distress of his chattels: (1 Ro. Ab. 737: Rast. Eas. 215!) or else a fiere facias against any third person in whose hands they may happen to be, to shew cause why they should not be delivered: and if the defendant still continues obstinate, then (if the judgment be by default or on demurrer) the sheriff shall summon an inquest to ascertain the value of the goods and the plaintiff's damages: which (being either so assessed, or by the verdict in case of an issue; Bro. Ab. tit. Damages, 29,) shall be levied on the person or goods of the defendant. See title Distress. So that after all, in Replevin and Distress, the only actions for recovering the specific possession of personal chattels, if the wrong-doer be very perverse, he cannot be compelled to the restitution of the identical thing taken or detained; but he has still his election to deliver the goods or their value. Keilw. 64.

Executions, in actions where money only is recovered, as a debt or damages, are of five sorts. 1. Against the body of the defendant. 2. Against his goods and chattels.— 3. Against his goods and the profits of his lands. 4. Against his goods and the possession of his lands. 5. Against all three, his body, lands, and goods.

1. The first of these species of execution is by writ of capias ad satisfaciendum; (shortly called a Ca. Sa.) to take and imprison the body of the debtor till satisfaction be made for the debt, costs and damages. See this Dict. title Capias. Sir Edward Coke gives a singular instance where a defendant in 14 E. 3, was discharged from a capias because he was of so advanced an age that he could not undergo the pain of imprisonment. Inst. 289. This writ is an execution of the highest nature, inasmuch as it deprives a man of his liberty till he makes the satisfaction awarded; and therefore when a man is once taken in execution upon this writ, no other process can be sued out against his lands or goods. Only by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 24, if the defendant dies while charged in execution upon this writ, the plaintiff may after his death sue out a new execution against his lands, goods, or chattels.

If a Ca. Sa. is sued out, and a non est inventus is returned thereon, the plaintiff may sue out a process against the bail, if any were given; who stipulate in this triple alternative, that the defendant shall, if condemned in the suit, satisfy the plaintiff his debt and costs; or surrender himself a prisoner; or that they will pay it for him: as therefore the two former branches of the alternative are neither of them complied with, the latter must immediately take place. Lutw. 1269, 1273. In order to which a writ of seize facias may be sued out against the bail, commanding them to shew cause why the plaintiff should not have execution against them for his debt and damages: and on such writ if they shew no sufficient cause, or the defendant does not surrender himself on the day of the return, or of shewing cause, the plaintiff may have judgment against the bail; and take out a writ of Ca. Sa. or other process of execution against them. See titles Bail; Seize Facias.—post. II.

2. The next species of execution is against the goods and chattels of the defendant; and is called a writ of

1 Facijs; from the words in it where the sheriff is commanded that he cause to be made of the goods and chattels of the defendant, the sum or debt recovered. This lies as well against privileged persons, peers, &c. as other common persons; and against executors or administrators with regard to the goods of the deceased. The sheriff may not break open any outer doors to execute either this writ or the writ of Ca. Sa.; but must enter peaceably; and may then break open any inner door belonging to the defendant in order to take the goods. 5 Rep. 92: Palm. 54. See post. III. 3. And the sheriff may sell the goods and chattels of the defendant, even an estate for years which is a chattel real, (8 Rep. 171,) till he has raised enough to satisfy the judgment and costs: first paying the landlord of the premises, upon which the goods are found, the arrears of rent then due, not exceeding one year's rent in the whole. Stat. 8 Ann. c. 14. See titles Distress: Rent. If part only of the debt be levied on a Fieri Facias, the plaintiff may have a Ca. Sa. for the residue. 1 Ro. Ab. 904: Cro. Eliz. 344. See further this Dict. title Fieri Facias.

3. A third species of execution is by writ of Levari facias; which affects a man's goods and the profits of his lands by commanding the sheriff to levy the plaintiff's debt on the lands and goods of the defendant; whereby the sheriff may seize all his goods, and receive the rents and profits of his lands, till satisfaction be made to the plaintiff. Finch L. 471. Little use is now made of this writ; the remedy by elegit which takes possession of the lands themselves, being much more effectual. But, as a species of this levari facias, may be considered a writ of execution proper only to ecclesiastics: which is given when the sheriff upon a common writ of execution sued, returns that the defendant is a beneficed clerk, having no lay fee. In this case a writ goes to the bishop of the diocese, in the nature of a levari or fieri facias to levy the debt and damages de bonis ecclesiasticis which are not to be touched by lay hands; and thereupon the bishop sends out a sequestration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the churchwardens to collect the same, and pay them to the plaintiff till the full sum be raised. Reg. Orig. 300: Burn. E. L. 329: 2 Inst. 473: Jenk. 207. See further title Levari Facias.

4. The fourth species of execution is by the writ of Elegit, which is a judicial writ given by Stat. W. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 18, either upon judgment for a debt or damages; or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the King's court. By the common law, a man could only have satisfaction of goods, chattels, and the present profits of lands by the two writs of execution last mentioned, (2 and 3.); but not the possession of the lands themselves; which was a natural consequence of the feudal principles prohibiting alienation of lands. See this Dict. title Tenure.

By this writ of Elegit, the defendant's goods and chattels are not sold, but only appraised; and all of them, except oxen and beasts of the plough, are delivered to the plaintiff, at such reasonable appraisement and price, in part of satisfaction of his debt. If the goods are not sufficient, then the moiety or one half of his freehold lands, which he had at the time of the judgment given, whether held in his own name, or any other in trust for him are also to be delivered to the plaintiff: to hold till out of the rents and profits thereof the debt be levied, or till the defendant's interest be expired; as till the death of the defendant, if he be tenant for life, or in tail. 2 Inst. 395: Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3.

It is upon feodal principles also, that copyhold lands are not liable to be taken in execution upon a judgment. 1 Ro. Ab. 888. But in case of a debt to the King, it appears by Magna Charta, c. 8, that it was allowed by the common law for him to take possession of the lands till the debt was paid.

This execution or seizing of lands by elegit is of so high a nature, that after it the body of the defendant cannot be taken: but if execution can only be had of the goods because there are no lands, and such goods are not sufficient to pay the debt, a Ca. Sa. may then be had after the elegit; for such elegit is in this case no more in effect than a fi. fa. Hob. 58.

Thus it appears that body and goods may be taken in execution; or land and goods; but not body and land too upon any judgment between subject and subject, in the course of the common law; But 5 Upon some prosecutions given by statute; as in the case of recognizances or debts acknowledged on Statute Merchant, or Statute Staple; (p. ruant to Stat. 13 E. 1. de Mercatoribus: 27 E. 3. c. 9; see this Dict. those titles;) upon forfeiture of these the body lands and goods may all be taken at once in execution to compel the payment of the debt. The process hereon is usually called an Extent or extenra facias; because the sheriff is to cause the lands, &c. to be appraised to their full extended value, before he delivers them to the plaintiff, that it may be certainly known how soon the debt will be satisfied. F. N. B. 131. See this Dict. title Extent.

By Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39, all obligations made to the King shall have the same force, and of consequence the same remedy to recover them, as a statute staple: though indeed before this statute, the King was entitled to sue out execution against the body lands and goods of his accountant or debtor. 3 Pep. 12. And his debt shall in suing out execution be preferred to that of every other creditor who hath not obtained judgment before the King commenced his suit. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. § 74.

The King's judgment also affects lands which the King's debtor hath at, or after the time of contracting his debt, or which any of his officers mentioned in Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 4, hath at or after the time of his entering on the office: so that if such officer of the Crown aliens for a valuable consideration, the land shall be liable to the King's debt, even in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser: though the debt due to the King was contracted by the vendor many years after the alienation. 10 Rep. 57, 6: 8 Rep. 171. And see Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 35; which enables the court of Exchequer on application by the Attorney General, by writ, to order the estate of any debtor to the King, and of the heirs and assigns of such debtor, in any lands extended, to be sold as the court shall direct; the conveyance to be made by the remembrancer of the court, by Bargain and Sale, to be inrolled in that court.

Judgments between subject and subject related, even at common law, no farther back than the first day of the Term in which they were recovered, in respect of the lands of the debtor; and did not bind his goods and chattels but from the date of the writ of execution: and now by the statute of frauds 29 Car. 2. c. 3, the judgment shall not bind the land in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser, but only from the day of actually signing the same, which is directed by the statute to be punctually entered on the record: nor shall the writ of execution bind the goods in the hands of a stranger or a purchaser, (Stat. 257,) but only from the actual delivery of the writ to the sheriff or other officer, who is therefore ordered to indorse on the back of it the day of his receiving the same. See further this Dict. title Judgment: and as to the prerogative of the crown, Post. IV. 2; and on the subject in general, 3 Comm. c. 26.

The reader may now pursue his enquiries under the following divisions:

- I. Of the Nature and several Kinds of Executions, and what Things were liable thereto at Common-law, &c.
- II. Of the Judgments on which the several Executions may be taken out, and where the Party shall be concluded by the Election of one of them, &c.
- III. 1. By whom, against whom. 2. At what Time, Executions may be sued. 3. By whom, and how they shall be Executed. 4. How they are to be released and discharged.
- IV. 1. To what Time Executions shall relate, so as to avoid Alienation; 2. Of the King's Prerogative in respect of Executions.
- V. 1. Of the Party's Remedy against irregular Executions; 2. Of the Offence of obstructing Execution.

I. The writs of execution at Common-law were only a fi. fa. on the goods and chattels, and a levari facias to levy the debt or damages upon the land and chattels: The ca. fa. was given by construction of the Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 17; And the elegit by Stat. Westm. 2. c. 18. which makes the body liable, and the future profits of lands &c. 1 Inst. 154: 2 Inst. 394.

The reason why by the Common-law, where a subject had execution for debt or damages, he could not have the body of the defendant, or his lands in execution, (unless it were in special cases) was, that the defendant's body might be at liberty, not only to follow his own affairs and business, but also to serve his King and country; and taking away the possession of his lands would hinder the following of his husbandry and tillage. 2 Inst. 394.

Though neither the body nor lands of the debtor on a judgment could be taken in execution at Common law, but only his goods; yet in action of debt against an heir, upon the bond of his ancestor, his land which he had by descent was subject to be taken in execution. 3 Rep. 11. In action of debt against the heir upon his ancestor's bond, there was judgment by nihil dicit: and it was held that the plaintiff should have execution against the heir, of any of his own lands or goods. Dyer 89, 149. Judgment was had against the heir by nil dicit, and a fi. fa. being brought against him to have execution, he pleaded nil per descensum; it was adjudged that this plea was too late after the judgment by nil dicit, and the execution shall be on his own lands. Dyer 344.

But there is a difference between a fi. fa. and an action of debt brought against an heir upon a bond of his ancestor, in which the heir is named. Poph. 193. On a judgment for the debt of an ancestor, where the heir hath made over lands descended to him, execution may be taken against such heir to the value of the land, &c. for the debt of his ancestor, as if it were his own debt. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14. § 5. See title Fraud.

EXECUTION. II.

If a person have judgment given against him for debt or damages, or be bound in a recognizance and dieth, and his heir be within age, no execution shall be sued of the lands during the minority; and against an heir within age, no execution shall be sued upon a statute merchant or staple, &c. 1 Inst. 290.

No execution for damages recovered in a real action, shall be had by capias ad satisfaciendum: but where a man hath judgment to recover lands and damages, he may have execution of both together. 8 Rep. 141.

Whatever may be assigned or granted may be taken on an execution. Nothing can be taken in execution that cannot be sold, as deeds, writings, &c. Bank-notes, &c. cannot be taken in execution; as they remain, in some measure, choses in action. Hardw. 53.

If there are chattels sufficient, the sheriff ought not to take the lands; nor may things fixed to the freehold, goods bought bonâ fide, goods pawned, &c. be taken in execution. 8 Rep. 141. And if a defendant hides his goods in secret places, so that the plaintiff cannot take them in execution, it is said no action will lie against him. 5 Rep. 92, 93.

The sheriff cannot take the goods of a stranger, for he is to take the goods of the party only at his peril. And if a bailiff on a fi fa. against the goods of A. take those of B. an action of trespass lies against the sheriff. Doug. 40. If on execution against one of two partners, the partnership effects be taken and sold, the court will order the sheriff to pay over to the other, a share of the produce, proportioned to his share in the partnership effects, to be ascertained by the master. Doug. 650. Eddie v. Davidson.

If the plaintiff cannot find sufficient effects to satisfy his judgment, the court will order the sheriff to retain for his use money which he has levied in an action at the suit of the defendant. Doug. 231—See further Com. Dig. title Executions, (C.) 4.

II. When a judgment is signed, execution may be taken out immediately upon it, and need not be delayed till it is entered: it being a perfect judgment of the court before entered. Co. Lit. 505. And if the judges of the court of B. R. see it against whom there is a judgment of that court walk in Westminster hall, they may send an officer to take him up, if the plaintiff desire it, without a writ of execution. Mo. 52. If execution be not sued within a year and a day after judgment, where there is no fault in the defendant, as if writ of error be not brought, &c. there must be a scire facias to revive the judgment, which in that time may be had without moving the court, but if it be a longer standing, the court is to be moved for it. 1 Inst. 290. 2 Inst. 771. But if the defendant be outlawed after judgment (as he may where he cannot be taken in execution, or hath no lands or goods to pay the debt, &c. when the suit is commenced by original,) the plaintiff need not renew the judgment by scire facias to obtain execution after a year. 1 Inst. 290.

It hath been adjudged, that by the Common-law, if a man was outlawed after judgment in debt, the plaintiff was at the end of his suit, and he could have no other process after that personally, but was put to his new original. 2 Nels. Abi. 772. If one be arrested upon a writ in B. R. and puts in bail, and afterwards the plaintiff recovers, and the defendant renders not himself according to law, in safe-guard of his bail, the plaintiff may at his election take execution against the principal, or his bail after judgment against them; but if he takes the bail, he shall never afterwards meddle with the principal. Cro. Jac. 320.

If one recovers jointly against two in debt, the execution must be joint against them: the court cannot divide an execution, which is intire, and grounded on the judgment. Mich. 24 Car. B. R.

A man and his wife recovered in an action of debt against the defendant 100*l.* and damages; then the wife died, and the husband prayed to have execution upon this judgment: the court at first inclined, that it should not survive to the husband, but that administration ought to be committed of it, as a thing in action; but at last they agreed that the husband might take out execution, for that by the judgment it became his debt due to him in his own right. Cro. Car. 608: 1 Mod. Rep. 179, 180. See titles Baron and Feme.

If judgment be against two, on the death of one, the plaintiff shall have execution by fi. re. facias against the survivor; and though he pleads, that the other defendant has an heir alive, &c. it will not prevent it. Raym. 26. And where two persons recover in debt, and before execution one of them dies, it has been held that execution may be sued in both their names by the survivor, and it will be no error; which may be done without a scire facias. Nov. 150. An execution may be executed after the death of the defendant; for his executor being privy, is bound as well as the testator: and where execution is once begun, it cannot be delayed, unless there appears irregularity, and audita querela is no superseatas to it, nor shall any thing stop the sheriff from selling, &c. Cro. Eliz. 73. Comberb 33, 389.

Though a man can have but one execution; yet it must be intended an execution with satisfaction, and the body of the defendant is no satisfaction, only a pledge for the debt. 5 Rep. 486. When therefore a person dies in execution, it is without satisfaction, so that the plaintiff may have a scire facias against the goods, or elegit against the lands. This was not so at Common-law. Hob. 57; but it is given by Stat. 21 Jac. 1 c. 24. Where a person however was taken on a capias utlagatum, and died in prison, the plaintiff having chosen this execution, which is the highest in law, it has been held that the defendant dying the law will adjudge it a satisfaction. Cro. Eliz. 850.

If an execution be executed and filed, the party can have no other execution upon that judgment; because there can be but one execution with satisfaction upon one judgment. But if the execution be not returned and filed, another execution may be had: and if only part of the debt be levied on a scire facias, another writ of execution may be sued out for the residue thereof. 1 Lill. Abi. 565. If one take out any writ of execution, and they have no effect, he may have other writs on then future. Hob. 57.

In case any prisoner committed in execution shall escape, any creditor, whose suit he stands charged on, may retake him by new capias ad satisfaciendum, or sue forth any other kind of execution, as if the body of such prisoner had never been taken in execution. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. See title Escape. Where two are bound jointly and severally, and judgment is had against both of them, if one in execution escapes, the creditor may take out execution against the other; but if he go by licence of the creditor, then the other will be discharged. Co. Car. 53. If one in execution be delivered by privilege of parliament, when the privilege ceases, the plaintiff may sue out a new execution against him. Str. 1 Jac. 1. c. 13.

III. 1. No person is intitled to, or can sue out execution, who is not privy to the judgment, or intitled to the thing recovered, as heir, executor, or administrator to him who has judgment. 1 Rol. Abr. 889.

If one have judgment to recover lands, and die before execution, his heir shall have it; and where tenant in tail recovers and dies before the execution without issue, he in remainder may sue out execution: an heir is to have execution for lands, and the executor or administrator for damages. Co. Litt. 251: Dyer 26. The executors of executors may sue out execution of a judgment; but an administrator getting judgment in behalf of the intestate, and then dying, neither his executor, or administrator shall take out the execution, but the administrator de bonis non administratis of the first intestate. 5 Rep. 9. And see Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8.

But if an administrator, durante minori etate of an executor, recovers in debt, and before execution the executor comes of age, he shall have a scire facias on this judgment; for carrying on the suit in right of the executor, made the executor privy thereto. 1 Rol. Abr. 888-9.

If a man has judgment for the arrears of rent, and dies, his executor shall sue out execution, and not the heir; for by the recovery it becomes a chattel vested, to which the executor is intitled. 1 Rol. Abr. 880.

If a statute be entered into, to husband and wife, and the husband dies, the wife shall take out execution. 1 Rol. Abr. 889. So if husband and wife recover lands and damages, and the husband dies, the wife shall have execution of the damages, and not the executors of the husband. 1 Rol. Abr. 342, 889, 890. See tit. Baron and Feme.

If there be judgment in debt against two, and one dies, a scire facias lies against the other alone, reciting the death; and he cannot plead, that the heir of him that is dead has assents by descent, and demand judgment, if he ought to be charged alone; for at Common-law, the charge upon a judgment, being personal, survived, and the statute of Westm. 2. that gives the elegit, does not take away the remedy of the plaintiff at Common-law; and therefore the party may take out his execution which way he pleases; for the words of the statute are, fit in electione; but if he should, alter the allowance of this writ and revival of the judgment, take out an elegit to charge the land, the party may have remedy by suggestion, or else by audita querela. Raym. 26: 1 Lev. 30: 1 Keb. 92, 123. S. C.

By the Common-law, if judgment be given against a man for debt, or damages, and the defendant dies before execution sued, his heir within age is not liable to execution during his minority; but the parol must demur (i.e. the plea must stand still) in such case till he comes of age. Co. Litt. 290a: 1 Rol. Abr. 140.

And this privilege of infancy does not only protect the infant, but all others who are affected by the judgment; as if there be father and two daughters, and judgment be given for debt against the father, who dies, one of the daughters being within age, partition being made, the eldest shall not be charged alone, but shall have the benefit of her sister's minority, which puts a stop to the execution. Co. Litt. 290a.

There can be no execution taken out against a member of parliament during privilege of parliament: also no capias can issue against a peer; for even in the case of a private person at Common-law, the body was not liable to creditors; and the statute of Ed. 3. which subjects the body, does not extend to peers, because their persons are sacred: the law also supposes, that persons thus distinguished by the King, have wherewithal otherwise to satisfy their creditors. 6 Co. 52: Hob. 61: Cro. Car. 205.

A capias ad satisfaciendum may be executed upon a prisoner in prison for felony; and if he be acquitted of the felony, the sheriff is to keep him. 1 Lil. Nbr. 567. But where a person is in prison for criminal matters, he ought not to be charged with a civil action without leave of the court; yet if he be charged, he shall not be discharged. Raym. 58. See 7 Mod. 153; and this Dict. title Prisoner.

A ca. sa. will lie against a man who is outlawed for felony, and he may be taken in execution at the suit of a common person. Owen 69. And if he was taken upon a capias utlagat. which was at the King's suit, he shall be in execution at the suit of the party, if he will. Moor 566. But this is not without prayer of the party; and if after a judgment given, the judges of their own heads, or at the request of any person, without prayer of the plaintiff, commit the defendant to prison; by this he shall not be said to be in execution for the plaintiff. Dyer 297. If one arrested be in prison for debt, and judgment is had against him; though it be in arrest on a latitat or capias, he shall not be in execution upon the judgment, unless the plaintiff prays it of record; or sues a capias ad satisfaciendum, and delivers it to the sheriff. Dyer 197, 306: Jenk. Cent. 165.

2. At Common-law, in real actions, where land was recovered, the demandant, after the year, might take out a scire facias to revive his judgment; because the judgment being particular in the real action, quoad the lands with a certain description, the law required, that the execution of that judgment should be entered upon the roll, that it might be seen, whether execution was delivered of the same thing of which judgment was given: a scire facias issued to shew cause, why execution should not be. 2 Inst. 471: 5 Co. 88: Cro. Eliz. 416: 6 Mod. 288.

But if the plaintiff, after he had obtained judgment in any personal action, had lain quiet, and had taken no process of execution within the year, he was put to a new original upon his judgment, and no scire facias was issuable at law on the judgment, because there was not a judgment for any particular thing in the personal action, with which the execution could be compared; therefore after a reasonable time, which was a year and a day, it was presumed to be executed, and the law allowed him no scire facias to shew cause why there should not be execution; but if the party had slipped his time, he was put to his action on the judgment, and the defendant was obliged to shew how that debt, of which the judgment was an evidence, was discharged. 2 Inst. 469: Cartb. 30, 31: 1 Sid. 351.

EXECUTION. III. 3.

To remedy this, and to make the forms of proceeding more uniform in both actions, the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 45, gave the scire facias to the plaintiff to revive the judgment, where he had omitted to sue execution within the year after judgment obtained.

A scire facias lies on a judgment in ejectment; for the words of the act are, Sive servitia, sive consuetudines, sive alia quaecunque irrotulata, which comprehend all judgments, and give the like remedy on them by scire facias, as the demandant had on a judgment in a real action at Common law. 1 Sid 351: 2 Salk. 600.

But though the general rule be, that the plaintiff cannot take out execution after the year and day without a scire facias, yet the rule must be understood with some restrictions.

If a Fi. fa; Ca. fa; or Elegit, be taken out within the year and returned and awarded on the roll, the same may be continued from term to term to the time of the execution thereof, although after the year: and be as effectual as if the judgment had been revived by scire facias. N. on R. E. 5 Geo. 2. But a Fi. fa. must be left with the proper officer before he will make the entry on the roll returned by the sheriff. Imp. K. B.

If the defendant brings a writ of error, and thereby hinders the plaintiff from taking his execution within the year, and the plaintiff in error is nonsuit, or the judgment affirmed, the defendant in error may proceed to execution after the year without a scire facias, because the writ of error was a superseas to the execution, and the plaintiff must acquiesce till he hears the judgment above; besides while the cause is still sub-judice, it is not known whether the plaintiff shall recover, or not, and the year for the execution ought to be accounted from the final judgment given. Cro. Jac. 364: Yelv. 7: 1 Rel. Abr. 899: 4 Leon. 197: 5 Co. 88: Carth. 236-7: 6 Mod. 288.

So if the plaintiff hath a judgment, with stay of execution for a year, he may, after the year, take out his execution without the scire facias, because the delay is by consent of parties, and in favour of the defendant; and the indulgence of the plaintiff shall not turn to his prejudice, nor ought the defendant to be allowed any advantage of it, when it appears to be done for his advantage, and at his instance. 6 Mod. 288: 1 Rel. Rep. 104.

But if the defendant had been tied up by an injunction out of Chancery for a year, yet he cannot take out execution without a scire facias, because the courts of law do not take notice of Chancery injunctions, as they do of writs of error; besides, in that case it had been no breach of the injunction to have taken out the execution within the year, and continued it down by vic' non misit breve, which cannot be done in the case of a writ of error, because that removes the record out of the court where the judgment was; and therefore there can be no proceedings below till it be affirmed, and returned to the inferior courts. 1 Salk. 322: 6 Mod. 288 S. C.

In debt, if defendant acknowledge the action for part, and as to the remainder pleads to issue, and the plaintiff hath judgment for that he confesseth; here he may not have execution till the issue is tried for that which he is to recover damages: though if he releases the damages, he may have execution presently for the rest. Rel. 897.

3. All judgments of inferior courts in debt are to be executed in the peculiar jurisdictions where given, and cannot be removed to be executed by the superior courts. Cro. Car. 34.

Now by Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 4, where final judgment shall be obtained in any suit in any inferior court of record, any of the courts at Westminster on affidavit thereof, and that execution has issued against the defendant's person or effects, and that they are not to be found within the jurisdiction of such inferior court, may cause the record of the judgment to be removed into such superior court, to issue execution thereon, in the same manner as in judgment obtained in the said superior courts.

If a judgment given in another court be affirmed, or reversed for error in B. R. because the proceedings in the court below are entered upon record in the King's Bench, the party shall have execution in that court: And so if a judgment of debt, &c. in the Common Pleas be affirmed in B. R. on a writ of error. 5 Rep. 88. Though where the record of a judgment given in C. B. is removed into B. R. the party cannot take out execution upon it, without a scire facias quare executionem habere non debeat. 1 Lill. Ab. 562. And where a writ of error is brought in the Exchequer Chamber, to reverse a judgment in B. R. if the judgment is affirmed there, yet that court cannot make out execution upon the judgment affirmed; but the record must be transmitted back to the court of King's Bench, where execution must be done. 1 Lill. 565. See title Error.

As an execution is an entire thing, he who begins must end it; a new sheriff may distrain an old one to sell the goods on a disfringas nuper vicecom' and to bring the money into court, or sell and deliver the money to the new sheriff; and the authority of the old sheriff continues by virtue of the first writ, so that when he hath seized, he is compellable to return the writ, and liable to answer the value according to the return; likewise by the seizure the property of the goods, &c. is divested out of the defendant, and he is discharged, whereby no further remedy can be had against him. 1 Salk. 322: 3 Salk. 159.

A sheriff shall have his fees for executions, upon a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum for the whole debt; upon a scire fac. according to the sum levied; and on an elegit it is held by some, that he shall have fees according to what is levied, and by others for the whole debt recovered, because the plaintiff may keep the land till he is satisfied the intire debt. 1 Salk. 333. Where the sheriff hath a scire facias or ca. fa. against a man, and before execution, he pays him the money, execution may not be done afterwards; if it be, trespass or false imprisonment lies. 5 Rep. 93: 12 Car. B. R. See title Sheriff.

It is laid down as a general rule in our books, that the sheriff in executing any judicial writ, cannot break open the door of a dwelling-house; this privilege, which the law allows to a man's habitation, arises from the great regard the law has to every man's safety and quiet, and therefore protects them from the inconveniences which must necessarily attend an unlimited power in the sheriff and his officers in this respect; hence, every man's house is called his castle. 5 Co. 91, Br. 3 Inst. 162: Mou. 608: Yelv. 28: Cro. Eliz. 908: Dart. Sher. 350.

Yet in favour of executions, which are the life of the law, and especially in cases of great necessity, or where:

EXECUTION. III. 4.

where the safety of the King and Commonwealth are concerned, this general case hath the following exceptions.

1st. That whenever the process is at the suit of the King, the sheriff or his officer may, after request to have the door opened, and refusal, break and enter the house to do execution, either on the party's goods, or take his body, as the case shall be. 5 Co. 91 b.

2^{ly}. So in a writ of seisin or habere facias possessionem in ejectment, the sheriff may justify breaking open the door, if denied entrance by the tenant: for the end of the writ being to give the party full and actual possession, consequently the sheriff must have all power necessary for this end; besides, in this case the law does not, after the judgment, look upon the house as belonging to the tenant, but to him who has recovered. 5 Co. 91.

3^{dly}. Also this privilege of a man's house relates only to such execution as affects himself; and therefore if a fi. fa. is directed to the sheriff to levy the goods of A. and it happens that A's goods are in the house of B. if after request made by the sheriff to B. to deliver these goods, he refuses, the sheriff may well justify the breaking and entering his house. 1 Sid. 186.

4^{thly}. It hath been adjudged that the sheriff, on a fi. fa. may break open the door of a barn, standing at a distance from the dwelling house, without requesting the owner to open the door; in the same manner as he may enter a close, &c. 1 Sid. 186: 1 Keb. 638. S. C.

5^{thly}. So on a fi. fa., when the sheriff or his officers are once in the house, they may break open any chamber-door or trunks for the completing execution. 2 Skew. 87.

6^{thly}. So if the sheriff's bailiffs enter the house, the door being open, and the owner locks them in, the sheriff may justify breaking open the door, for the setting at liberty the bailiffs; for if, in this case, he were obliged to stay till he could procure a homine replegiando, it might be highly inconvenient; also it seems, that in this case, the locking in the bailiffs is such a disturbance to the execution, that the court will grant an attachment for it. Palm. 52. Cro. Jac. p. 555. S. C.: 2 Roll. Rep. 132: S. C.

7^{thly}. That if the sheriff in executing a writ, breaks open a door, where he has no authority for so doing by law, yet the execution is good, and the party has no other remedy but an action of trespass against the sheriff. 5 Co. 93 a.

If the sheriff refuses to execute any judicial writ; this is a contempt of the court, for which an attachment will be granted. 1 Salk. 323.

So if he executes the writ, and makes a false return, the party injured may have an action on the case against him. 1 Salk. 323.

4 By a release of all suits, execution is gone; for no one can have execution without prayer and suit, but the King only, in whose case the judges ought to award execution ex officio, without any suit: And a release of all executions bars the King. By release of all debts or duties, the defendant is discharged of the execution, because the debt or duty on which it is founded is discharged: But if the body of a man be taken in execution, and the plaintiff release all actions, yet he shall remain in execution. Co. Lit. 291. If a judgment is given in action of debt, and the defendant taken in execution, the plaintiff releaseth the judgment, the body shall be discharged of the execution. And if the plaintiff after judgment releaseth all demands, the execution is discharged. Ibid. where one is in execution at my suit, and I bid the sheriff let him go; this is a good discharge and release both to the party and sheriff. Poph. 207.

But if the plaintiff make a release to the defendant being in execution, or other act amounting to a discharge; it will not be a discharge ipso facto, but by this means he may have the same. 5 Rep. 86: Dyer 152.

By Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28, if a defendant charged in execution for any debt not exceeding 100*l.* (extended by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 44, for five years to 200*l.* will, surrender all his effects to his creditors (except his apparel, bedding and tools of his trade not amounting in the whole to the value of 10*l.*) and will make oath of his punctual compliance with the statute, such prisoner may be discharged unless the creditor insists on detaining him; in which case he shall allow him 2*s.* 4*d.* per week to be paid on the first day of every week, and on failure of regular payment the prisoner shall be discharged. Yet the creditor may at any future time have execution against the lands and goods of such defendant though never more against his person. And on the other hand the creditors may as in case of bankruptcy, compel under pain of transportation for seven years, such debtor to make a discovery and surrender of all his effects for their benefit; whereupon he is also entitled to the like discharge of his person. See further tit. Prisoner: Insolvent.

Persons thus charged in execution in order to take the benefit of these acts are to exhibit a petition to the court whence the process issued, with an account of their whole estate upon oath, praying to be discharged, &c. And thereupon the court shall order the prisoner to be brought up, and his creditors summoned at a certain day, when the court in a summary way is to examine into the same, &c. and order the estate and effects of the prisoner to be assigned to the creditors by indorsement on the back of the petition. § 13.

The prisoners (except in London and Westminster) before they petition any of the courts, from whence the process issued, for a rule to be brought up, are to give notice to their creditors in writing, that they design to petition, and also a true copy of the account or schedule of their whole estates which they intend to deliver into the court, &c. And then, upon such petition, the prisoners shall have a rule of court to be brought to the next assizes for the county, at an expence not exceeding 12*d.* a mile, to be paid to the officer out of the effects of the prisoners, &c. And the creditors must be summoned to appear at the said assizes by order served on them, or left at their houses thirty days before; and at the assizes, the judges on examination shall determine the matter, and give judgment and relief; a record of which judgment is to be returned and certified to the court whence the process issued, on which the prisoners were taken in execution. No person charged in execution, shall be allowed to exhibit a petition to any court at law to be discharged, pursuant to the above acts, unless it be done before the end of the next term after he is charged; and those statutes shall not relate to any one taken on a capias for running customable goods, &c. § 14, 15.

EXECUTION, IV. V.

IV. 1. Writs of execution bind the property of goods only from the time of the delivery of the writs to the sheriff; who upon receipt thereof indorses the day of the month when received: But land is bound from the day of the judgment. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3: Cro. Car. 149. But the judgment must be docketed according to the directions of Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20; by which for the greater security of purchasers, it is enacted, that the clerk of the effoins of the court of C. B. the clerk of the doggets of the court of King's Bench, and the master of the office of pleas in the court of Exchequer, shall make and put into an alphabetical dogget, by the defendant's names, a particular of all judgments by confession, non sum informatus, nihil dicit, &c. entered in their several courts, &c. and that no judgment not doggetted, and entered in the books as aforesaid, shall affect any lands or tenements as to purchasers or mortgagees, or have any preference against heirs, executors or administrators, in their administration of their ancestors, testators, or intestate's estates. See title Judgment.

Notwithstanding this statute, if after the writ delivered to the sheriff, and before execution is executed, the defendant becomes bankrupt, that will hinder execution. 3 Salk. 159. See title Bankrupt.

The plaintiff takes out execution by heri facias against the defendant; all the goods and chattels that he had at the time of the execution, will be liable to it: And where debt or damages are recovered, the plaintiff shall have execution of any land the defendant had at the time of the judgment; not of the lands he had the day when the first writ was purchased. Roll. Abr. 892. By Stat. 29 C. 2. c. 3, Sheriffs may deliver in execution all lands whereof others shall be seised in trust for him against whom execution is had, on a judgment, &c.

The sale of goods for a valuable consideration, after judgment, and before execution awarded, is good: And if judgment be given against a lessee for years, and afterwards he selleth the term before execution, the term assigned bonâ fide is not liable; also if he assign it by fraud, and the assignee sells it to another for a valuable consideration, it is not liable to execution in the hands of the second assignee. Godb. 161: 2 Nels. Abr. 783. If a person has a bill of sale of any goods, in nature of a security for money, he shall be preferred for his debt to one who hath obtained a judgment against the debtor before those goods are sold; for till execution lodged in the sheriff's hands, a man is owner of his goods, and may dispose of them as he thinks fit, and they are not bound by the judgment. Pet. Lib. 286. But where a man generally keeps possession of goods after sale, it will make the same void against others, by the statute of fraudulent conveyances. And where on an execution, the owner of the goods by agreement was to have the possession of them upon certain terms; afterwards another got judgment against the same person, and took those goods in execution: It was adjudged they were liable, and that the first execution was by fraud, and void against any subsequent creditor; because there was no change of the possession, and so no alteration of property. Ibid. 287. See title Fraud.

A heri facias being executed fraudulently, a heri facias at the suit of another person afterwards shall stand good, and be preferred; and on trial, it is a matter proper to be left to a jury. 1 Wylf. 44.

VOL. I.

Where two writs of heri facias against the same defendant are delivered to the sheriff on different days; and no sale is actually made of the defendant's goods, the first execution must have the priority, even though the seizure was first made under the subsequent execution. 1 Term Rep. 729—But where the sheriff has given a bill of sale to the person claiming under the second execution, this entitles the latter to secure his debt, and the sheriff is liable to the plaintiff who delivered the first writ. Id. 731.

Execution may be made of lands that the defendant hath by purchase after the judgment; although he sell the same before execution. Roll. 892.

The Stat. 8 An. c. 14, directs that where there is an execution against goods or chattels, of a tenant for life, or years, the plaintiff before removal of the goods by the execution is to pay the landlord the rent of the land, &c. so as there be not above a year due; and if more be due, paying a year's rent, the plaintiff may proceed in his execution, and the sheriff shall levy the rent paid, as well as the execution money.

But a ground-landlord cannot come in for a year's rent in the case of an execution against an under-lessee: for the statute only extends to the immediate landlord. Str. 787. And the landlord must give the sheriff notice, or he is not bound. 1 Str. 97. Vide 2 Wylf. 140.

2. The King by his prerogative, may have execution of the body, lands, or goods of his debtor, at his election. Hob. 60: 2 Inst. 19: 2 Roll. Abr. 472.

As to the King's execution of goods, the same relates to the time of the awarding thereof, which is the teste of the writ, as it was in the case of a common person at law; for though by the 29 Car. 2. cap. 3, no execution shall bind the property of goods, but from the time of the delivery of the writ to the sheriff; yet as this act does not extend to the King, an extent of a later date supercedes an execution of the goods by a former writ; because by the King's prerogative at Common law, if there had been an execution at the subject's suit, and afterwards an extent, the execution was superseded till the extent was executed, because the Public ought to be preferred to private property. 2 New. Abr. 364.

If the King's debt be pro et record, it binds the lands of the debtor, into whose hands soever they come, because it is in the nature of an original charge upon the land itself, and therefore must subject every body that claims under it; but if the lands were aliened in whole, or in part, as by granting a jointure before the debt contracted, such alienee claims prior to the charge, and in such case the land is not subject. See 2 Roll. Abr. 156 7: Moon 126: 3 Leon. 259, 240: 4 Leon 10.

Execution for the King's debt, or prerogative execution, is always preferred before any other executions. 7 R.p. 20. And if a defendant is taken by capias ad sat faciendum, and before the return thereof a prerogative writ issues from the Exchequer, for the debt of the King, dated a day before he was taken, here he shall be held in execution for the King's debt and that of the subject. Doct. 197. Lands mortgaged in the hands of the issue in tail, when subject to the King's extent, and where not, see 7 R.p. 21. See also this Dict. titles King; Extent.

V. 1. An execution may be set aside as irregular, by superfetas; and the party have restitution, &c. Car. 2. 460, 461, 468. It hath been resolved, that a writ of error is a superfluous from the time of the allowance: though if a writ of execution be executed before the writ of error is allowed, it may be returned afterwards. 1 Salk. 321. No writ of execution shall be stayed by any writ of error or superfluous, and verdict and judgment, in any action upon the case for payment of money, covenant, detinue, trespass, &c. until recognizance be entered into as directed by 3 Wm. 1. cap. 8. Judgment was had against a person at Bristol, and his goods attached there; and the court of B. R. being moved to stay the execution until a writ of error brought should be determined, they granted a habeas corpus, but nothing to stay the execution. 1 Bull. 268. See title Error.

A defendant cannot plead to any writ of execution, (tho' he may in bar of execution to a scire facias brought;) but if he hath any matter after judgment to discharge him of the execution, he is to have audita querela. Co. Lit. 270. O, move the court for relief, which is now the usual method.

If husband and wife are taken in execution for the debt of the wife, the wife shall be discharged; for the husband being in execution, the wife shall not be so also, and because the wife hath nothing liable to the execution. 1 Lev. 51.

The execution of a liberate is good without being returned; and where a man is taken upon a ca. sa. the execution is good, though the writ is not returned. And in all cases where no inquest is to be taken, but only lands delivered, or seisin had, &c. which are only matters of fact. 4 Rep. 67: 5 Rep. 89.

2. There were anciently castles, fortresses and liberties, where they resisted the sheriff in executing the King's writs, which creating great inconvenience, the statute of Welm. 2. cap. 39. (13 Ed. 1.) hindered the sheriff from returning rescuers to the King's writ of execution, and directed him to take the posse comitatus. See the Stat. and 2 New Abr. 368.

The judges construed the words of the statute to extend only to executions, and not to writs on mesne process; that the sheriff was not obliged to carry the posse comitatus where the man was bailable, for they did not presume, that in such cases the King's writ would be disobeyed. 2 New Abr. 368.

The original of commitment for contempts seems to be derived from this statute; for since the sheriff was to commit those who resisted the process, the judges who awarded such process must have the same authority to vindicate it; hence, if any one offers any contempt to his process, either by word or deed, he is subject to imprisonment during pleasure, viz. from whence they shall not be delivered without the King's special commandment; 2 New Abr. 308. See titles Debt; Error.

See further on Executions in civil cases, in general Com. Dg. that title, &c.

EXECUTION OF CRIMINALS, Must in all cases as well capital as otherwise, be performed by the sheriff or his deputy; whose warrant for so doing was anciently by precept under the hand and seal of the judge, as is still practised in the court of the Lord High Steward upon the execution of a peer. 2 Hale 409. Though in the court of the peers in parliament it is done by writ from the King; afterwards it was established, that in case of life the judges may command execution to be done without any writ. Finch 478. And now the usage is for the judge to sign the calendar, a list of all the prisoners' names with the separate judgments in the margin which is left with the sheriff: the sheriff on receipt of this warrant is to do execution within a convenient time which in the country is left at large: in London, the Recorder, after reporting to the King in person the case of the several prisoners, and receiving his royal pleasure that the law must take its course, issues his warrant to the sheriffs directing them to do execution at the day and place assigned. See 4 State Trials 332: Foll. 43: 4 Comm. 403.

It is held by Coke (3 Inst. 52,) and Hale (2 H. P. C. 272, 412,) that even the King cannot change the punishment of the law by altering hanging (or burning when used) into beheading; tho' when beheading is part of the sentence, the King may remit the rest. And notwithstanding some examples to the contrary, Coke maintains that judicandum est legibus, non exemplis. But others have thought, and more justly, that this prerogative being founded in mercy, and immemorially exercised by the crown, is part of the Common law. Foll. 270: F. N. B. 241 b: 19 Rym. Fœd. 284. For hitherto, in every instance all these exchanges have been for more merciful kinds of death; and how far this may also fall within the King's power of granting conditional pardons, (viz. by remitting a severer kind of death, on condition that the criminal submits to a miller,) is a matter that may bear consideration. 4 Comm. 404.—There are ancient precedents where men condemned to be hanged for felony have been beheaded by force of a special warrant from the King. B. Act. 104: Stamdf. 13.

Subsequent justices have no power by the Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 7. to award execution of persons condemned by former judges; but if judgment has not been passed on the offenders, the other justices may give judgment and award execution, &c. 2 Hawt. P. C. Execution ought to be in the same county where the criminal was tried and convicted; except the record of the attainder be removed into B. R. which may award execution in the county where it sits. 3 Inst. 31, 211, 217.

If, upon a record removed, an outlawed person confess himself to be the same person, execution shall be had; but if he deny it, and the King's Attorney confesses he is not, he shall be discharged; though if the Attorney-General take issue upon it, the same shall be tried. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 402, 463. If a person, when attainted, stands mute to a demand why execution shall not go against him, the ordinary execution shall be awarded. 2 Hawt. P. C. In case a man condemned to die, come to life after he is hanged, as the judgment is not executed till he is dead, he must be hung again. Foll. 389: 2 Hale's P. C. 412: 2 Hawt. P. C. 4 Comm. 406. And so was the law of old; for if a criminal thus escaped and fled to sanctuary he was not permitted to abjure the realm. Fitz. Ab. title Corone 335.

The body of a traitor or felon is forfeited to the King by the execution; and he may dispose of it as he pleases. The execution of persons under the age of discretion is usually respited, in order to obtain a pardon. 1 Hawt. P. C. c. 1. § 3.

By the Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. persons convicted of murder are to be executed the day next but one after sentence; [unless that happens to be Sunday; for which reason murderers are generally tried on a Friday to afford them a merciful respite of one day more to prepare for eternity;] and their bodies delivered to surgeons to be anatomised. The judge may stay the sentence, and appoint the body to be hung in chains or anatomised, but not buried.—And, by the said statute, to rescue the body of any such malefactor from the custody of the sheriff after execution, is made felony, punishable by transportation for seven years.—And to rescue such criminal going to, or during execution, is felony without benefit of clergy. See this Dict. title Rescue. Under this act the time and place of the execution are part of the judgment, but in no other case whatever. 4 Comm. 404. See further title Murder; and as to these executions in general, titles Treason, Felony and other proper titles.

Execution may be avoided by a reprieve or a pardon; whereof the former is only temporary, the latter (as to which, see this Dict. title Pardon) is permanent.

A REPRIEVE, from reprendre to take back, or more immediately from the participle repris;] Is the withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time; whereby the execution is suspended. This may be ex arbitrio judicis, either before or after judgment; as where the judge is not satisfied with the verdict, or the evidence is suspicious, or the indictment is insufficient, or he is doubtful whether the offence be within clergy; or sometimes if it be a small felony, or any favourable circumstances appear in the criminal's character in order to give room to apply to the crown for either an absolute or conditional pardon. These arbitrary reprieves may be granted or taken off by the justices of gaol delivery, although their session be finished and their commissions expired; but this rather by common usage than of strict right. 2 Hal. P. C. 412.

Reprieves may also be ex necessitate legis.

If a woman quick with child be condemned either for treason, or felony, she may alledge her being with child in order to get the execution respited; and thereupon the sheriff, or marshal shall be commanded to take her into a private room, and to impanel a jury of matrons to try and examine whether she be quick with child or not; and if they find her quick with child, the execution shall be respited till her delivery. But it is agreed, that a woman cannot demand such respite of execution by reason of her being quick with child more than once; and that she can neither save herself by this means from pleading upon her arraignment, nor from having judgment pronounced against her upon her conviction. Also it is said, both by Stamford and Coke, that a woman can have no advantage from being found with child, unless she be also found quick with child. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 51. § 9, 10.

Another cause of regular reprieve is if the offender become non compos between the judgment and the award of execution. 1 Hal. P. C. 370. For regularly though a man be compos when he commits a capital crime, yet if he becomes non compos after, he shall not be indicted; if after indictment, he shall not be convicted; if after conviction, he shall not receive judgment; if after judgment, he shall not be ordered for execution: for the law knows not but he might have offered some reason, if in his senses, to have stayed these respective proceedings. It is therefore an invariable rule when any time intervenes between the attainder and the award of execution, to demand of the prisoner what he hath to alledge why execution should not be awarded against him; and if he appears to be insane, the Judge, in his discretion, may and ought to reprieve him.

The party may also plead in bar of execution; which plea may be either pregnancy; (of which above;) the King's pardon, an act of grace; (See title Pardon;) or lastly diversity of person viz. that he is not the same that was attainted and the like. In this last case a jury shall be impanelled to try this collateral issue, namely the identity of his person; and not whether guilty or innocent; for that has been decided before; and in these collateral issues the trial shall be instantis, and no time allowed the prisoner to make his defence or produce his witnesses unless he will make oath that he is not the person attainted. 1 Std. 72: Fost. 42. Neither shall any peremptory challenges of the jury be allowed the prisoner; though formerly such challenges were held to be allowable whenever a man's life was in question. 1 Lev. 61: Fost. 42, 6.—Stamf. P. C. 163: Co. Litt. 157: Hal. Sum. 259.

Every Judge who hath power to order execution, hath power to grant a reprieve; and execution is often staid on condition of transportation. See Stat. 8 Geo. 3. c. 15, for a power given to judges of assize to reprieve for the purpose of obtaining a conditional pardon. See also this Dict. titles Transportation: Felony: Clergy. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 51.—But no prisoner convicted of any felony, for which he cannot have his clergy, at the Sessions at the Old Bailey for London and Middlesex, &c. ought to be reprieved but in open Sessions; and reprieves are not to be granted otherwise but by the King's express warrant. Kel. 4.

EXECUTION OF STATUTES. The court of Star-Chamber erected in the reign of King Hen. 7. was said to be for the execution of statutes, &c. Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1.

EXECUTIONE FACIENDA IN WIERHAMUM. A writ that lies for taking his cattle, who hath conveyed the cattle of another out of the county, so that the sheriff cannot replevy them. Reg. Orig. 82. See title Replevin.

EXECUTIONE JUDICII. Is a writ directed to the judge of an inferior court to do execution upon a judgment therein, or to return some reasonable cause wherefore he delays the execution. F. N. B. 20. If execution be not done on the first writ, an alias shall issue, and a pluries with this clause, vel causam nobis significes quare, &c. And if upon this writ execution is not done, or some reasonable cause returned why it is delayed, the party shall have an attachment against him who ought to have done the execution, returnable in B. R. or C. B. New Nat. Br. 43. If the judgment be in a court of record, this writ shall be directed to the justices of the court where the judgment was given, and not unto the officer of the court; for if the officer will not execute the writs directed unto him, nor return them as he ought, the judges of the court may amerce him. Ibid. See title Execution III. 3, and the Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. there mentioned.

One may have a writ de executione judicii out of the Chancery to execute a judgment, in an inferior court, although a writ of error be brought to remove the record, and reverse the judgment: if he that brings the writ of error do not take care to have the record transcribed, and the writ of error returned up in due time. 1 Lit. Ab. 562.

EXECUTIVE POWER. The supreme executive power of these kingdoms is vested by our laws in a single person, the King, or Queen, for the time being. 1 Comm. 190, &c. See title King.

EXECUTOR. Lat.] One appointed by a man's last will and testament, to perform or execute the contents thereof after the testator's decease; and to have the disposing of all the testator's substance according to the tenor of the will: he answers to the heres designatus or testamentarius in the Civil Law, as to debts, goods and chattels of his testator. Terms de Ley.

The rights powers and duties of EXECUTORS and ADMINISTRATORS, being in many respects similar, and the several determinations in the books, being generally applicable to both, it seems most methodical and useful to consider them together; for which purpose, reference is made from title Administrator to this place. The present summary is founded on the Commentaries; having various points and heads from other sources interwoven on that excellent ground work. See 2 Comm. c. 32. I. 1. In case a person makes no disposition of his effects by will, he is said to die intestate; and in such cases, it is said, that by the old law, the king was entitled to seize upon his goods, as the general trustee of the kingdom. 9 Rep. 38.—This prerogative the king continued to exercise for some time, by his own ministers of justice; and probably in the county court were matters of all kinds were determined; and it was granted as a franchise to many lords of manors and others, who have to this day a prescriptive right to grant administration to their intestate tenants and suitors, in their own Courts-baron, and other courts, or to have their wills there proved, in case they make any. 9 Rep. 37. Afterwards the crown, in favour of the church, vested the prelates with this branch of the prerogative; and then the Ordinary might seize the goods and keep them without waiting; and also might give, when or sell them at his will, and dispose of the money in pro us; being thus, probably, merely the king's almoner in his diocese. Finch Law 173, 4: Plowd. 277.

As the Ordinary had thus the disposition of intestates' effects, the probate of wills of course followed; for it was thought just and natural, that the will of the deceased should be proved to the satisfaction of the prelate, whose right of distributing his goods was superseded thereby.

By degrees, through an abuse of this power of the Ordinary, often complained of before it was redressed, the Popish clergy secured the intestate's estate to themselves, without paying even his lawful debts; for which reason it was enacted by Stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1. A. D. 1285.) c. 19, that the Ordinary shall be bound to pay the debts of the intestate, so far as his goods will extend, in the same manner as executors were bound in case of a will.—But still the residue remained in the hands of the Ordinary, and the continued abuse of this power at length produced the Stat. 31 E. 4. c. 11; (A. D. 1357;) which provides, that in case of intestacy, the Ordinary shall depute the nearest and most lawful friends of the deceased to administer his goods, which administrators are put upon the same footing, with regard to suits, and to accounting, as executors.—The next and most lawful friend is interpreted to be the next of blood, who is under no legal disabilities. 9 Rep. 39.—The Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5, enlarges the power of the ecclesiastical judge a little more; permitting him to grant administration either to the widow or the next of kin, or to both of them, at his discretion; and where two or more persons are in the same degree of kindred, gives the Ordinary his election to accept which he pleases. 1 Sid. 179: Raym. 93: 1 Shorr. 351: 1 Salk. 36.

On this footing now stands the general law relative to the appointment of administrators—Who are the next of blood, or as it is usually called next of kin, is stated post. III. & V. 8.

2. The Ordinary ought not to repeal letters of administration which he hath duly granted; but if they are granted to such persons who ought not by law to have them, he may revoke them. 1 Lill. 38. For just cause they may be revoked, as where a person is a lunatick, &c. And if granted where not grantable, they may be repealed by the delegates. 1 Lev. 157, 186. If administration is granted, and afterwards a will is produced and proved, the administration shall be revoked; and all acts done by the administrator are void. 2 Rel. Abr. 907. If a citation is granted against a stranger administrator, and his administration is revoked by sentence, yet all acts done by him bona fide as administrator are good till the revocation; the administration being only voidable. 6 Rep. 18: 8 Rep. 135. But if there is any fraud, a creditor may have relief upon the Stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 5. And when the first administration is merely void, as granted by a wrong person, &c. it is otherwise: so when there is an appeal from the grant of the administration, to suspend the former decree. 5 Rep. 30. Administration was granted to J. S. and he released all actions; and afterwards the administration was revoked, and declared void; this release was held good. 1 Brownl. 51. 2u. If it had been without consideration? If an administrator gives goods away, and then administration is revoked or repealed, 'tis said the gift is good; except it be by covin, when it shall be void only against a creditor by statute: and where the administrator after many goods administered, had his administration revoked, and it was committed committed to B. who sued the first administrator for goods unduly administered, it was held that there was no remedy but in Chancery. 6 Rep. 19: Clayt. 44: 4 Shep. Ab. 89: See Hob. 266.—But in such a case as this it seems that the second administrator might maintain an action at law against the first, for money had and received, &c. or trover for any goods remaining in his possession, or by him converted and not duly administered.

In 2 Leon 155, it is said, where the first administration is void, the administrator who under that administration takes the goods is a trespasser. Letters of administration obtained by fraud are void. 3 Rep. 78: 6 Rep. 18, 19: 8 Rep. 143.

See the several cases on this part of the subject collected in 1 Com. Dig. title Administrator (B. 8.); the result of which (as given in 4 Burn's Ecclesiastical Law 236,) is, that an administration may be repealed, although not arbitrarily, yet where there shall be a just cause for so doing; of which the temporal courts are to judge.

II. All persons are capable of being Executors, that are capable of making wills, and many others besides; as feme-coverts and infants: nay even infants unborn, or in ventre s'es meres may be made Executors. Wesl. Symb. p. 1. § 635.

A popish recusant convict cannot be an executor. 9 Rep. 37. A mayor and commonalty may be executors. 1 Rel. Abr. 915. And if the King is made executor, he appoints others to take the execution of the will upon them, and to take account. 5 Rep. 29.

It seems agreed, that by our law, an alien, or one born out of the allegiance of our King, may be an executor or administrator; also it hath been adjudged, that such a one shall have administration of leases as well as personal things, because he hath them in auter droit, and not to his own use. Off. of Ex. 17.

But it has been long doubted, whether an alien enemy should maintain an action as executor; for on the one hand it is said, that by the policy of the law, alien enemies shall not be admitted to actions to recover effects, which may be carried out of the kingdom to weaken ourselves and enrich the enemy, therefore public utility must be preferred to private convenience; but on the other hand it is said, that those effects of the testator are not forfeited to the King by way of reprisal, because they are not the alien enemy's, for he is to recover them for others; and if he allows such alien enemies to possess the effects as well as an alien friend, he must allow them power to recover, since in that there is no difference, and by consequence he must not be disabled to sue for them; if it were otherwise, it would be a prejudice to the King's subjects, who could not recover their debts from the alien executor, by his not being able to get in the assets of the testator. Co. Eliz. 683: M. v. 431: Car. 49, 191: Skil. 370.

But an excommunicated person cannot be an executor or administrator, for by the excommunication he is excluded from the body of the church, and is incapable to lay out the goods of the deceased to pious uses. Co. Lit. 331: Swinb. 349: Goldb. 85.

No infant can act as executor till the age of 17 years; till which time administration must be granted to some other durante minore etate. Went. Off. of Ex. c. 18: 6 Rep. 67: 4 Ibist. 335.

And if the right of administration devolves on an infant, administration durante minore etate is to be granted till he arrives at 21. Godolph. 102: 5 Co. 29: Hob. 250: Yelv. 128.

And as such an administrator is but in nature of a curator for the infant, and has no interest or benefit in the testator or intestate's estate, but in right of the infant, it has been always held discretionary in the Ordinary to whom to grant it, and therefore it hath been frequently adjudged, that he is not obliged within the Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5, to grant it to the next of kin either of the deceased, or the infant. Hob. 250: 1 Vent. 219: 1 Keb. 549: 3 Mod. 24: 1 New. Abr. 381.

If an infant, and one of full age, are made executors, he who is of full age may take out administration durante minori etate of the infant, and may declare as executor or administrator durante minori etate; and there is no absurdity in this case, that there should be an executor and administrator to the same party. 1 New. Abr. 381.

In like manner it may be granted durante absentia or pendente lite; when the executor is out of the realm; 1 Lutw. 342; or when a suit is commenced in the Ecclesiastical court, touching the validity of the will. 2 P. Wms. 589, 590.

The appointment of an executor is essential to the making of a will; (Went. c. 1: Plowd. 281;) and it may be performed either by express words, or such as strongly imply the same: but if the testator makes an incomplete will without naming any executors, or if he names incapable persons, or if the executors named refuse to act (See 9 Rep. 37: Went. Off. Ex. 38,) in any of these cases administration must be granted cum testamento annexo to some other persons; (1 Rel. Abr. 907: Comb. 20,) and then the duty of the administrator, as also when he is constituted only durante minore etate, &c. is very little different from that of an Executor, See Glanvil. l. 7. c. 6.

A man may appoint two or more persons to be joint Executors, and they are accounted in law but as one person. See post. V. 3, 5.—Such joint executors shall not be charged by the acts of their companions, any further than for effects actually come to their hands. Mom. 620: Co. Eliz. 318: 2 Leon. 209.—But if two or more executors join in a receipt [in writing] and one of them only actually receives the money, each is liable for the whole, as to creditors at law; but not as to legatees, or next of kin. 1 Salk. 318.—If joint executors by agreement among themselves, agree that each shall intermeddle with a certain part of the testator's estate, yet each shall be chargeable for the whole (to creditors) by agreeing to the others' receipts. Hurd. 314.

III. If the deceased died wholly intestate, without making either will or executors, then general letters of administration must be granted to such administrator as the Stat. 31 E. 3. c. 11, and 29 H. 8. c. 4, (See ante 1,) direct; in consequence of which it is to be observed; 1st. That the Ordinary is compellable to grant administration of the goods of the wife to the husband, or his representatives: (Co. Cur. 106, Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 3. 1 P. Wms. 381;) and of the husband's estate to the widow, or next of kin. Salk. 30: Str. 552.—2dly. That among the kindred, those are to be preferred that are the nearest in degree to the intestate.—3dly. That this nearness of degree shall be reckoned according to the computation of the civilians: (P. Wms. 381,) and not of the canonists.

canonists, which the law of England adopts in the descent of real estates; (See title Descent).—And therefore in the first place the children, or on failure of children, the parents of the deceased are entitled to administration; both which are indeed in the first degree, but the children are allowed the preference. Godolph. p. 2. c. 34. § 1: 2 Fern. 125.—Then follow brothers; grandfathers; (Pier. Ch. 527: 1 P. Wms 41;) uncles, or nephews; (Atk. 455;) and the females of each class respectively; and lastly, Cousins.—4th. The half blood is admitted to the administration as well as the whole; for they are of the kindred of the intestate, and only excluded from inheritances of land, upon feodal reasons. Therefore the brother of the half blood shall exclude the uncle of the whole blood; (1 Vent. 425;) And the Ordinary may grant administration to the sister of the half, or the brother of the whole blood, at his own discretion. Allyn, 36: Sty. 74. See post. V. 8.—5. If none of the kindred will take out administration, a creditor may by custom do it. Salk. 38.—6thly. If the Executor refuses, or dies intestate, the administration may be granted to the residuary legatee, in exclusion of the next of kin. 1 Sid. 281: 1 Vent. 219. And lastly the Ordinary may, in defect of all these, commit administration, (as he might have done before the Stat. 31 E. 3. c. 11: Plead. 278;) to such discrete person as he approves of: or (in these cases as well as in that of an Executor's refusal, Cro. El. 92.) may grant him letters ad colligendum bona defuncti, which neither makes him executor nor administrator; his only business being to keep the goods in his safe custody; (Went. ch. 14;) and to do other acts for the benefit of such as are entitled to the property of the deceased. 2 Inst. 398. If a bastard who has no kindred, being nullius filius, or any one else that has no kindred, dies intestate, and without wife or child, it hath formerly been held, (Salk. 37.) that the Ordinary might seize his goods, and dispose of them in pios usus. But the usual course now is, for some one to procure letters patent, or other authority from the King; and then the Ordinary of course grants administration to such appointee of the crown. 3 P. Wms 33.

IV. The interest, vested in the executor by the will of the deceased, may be continued and kept alive by the will of the same executor: so that the executor of A.'s executor, is to all intents and purposes the executor and representative of A. himself; See 25 Ed. 3. ff. 5. c. 5: 1 Lem. 275; but the executor of A.'s administrator, or the administrator of A.'s executor, is not the representative of A. Bro. Abn. title Administrator 7. For the power of an executor is founded upon the special confidence and actual appointment of the deceased; and such executor is therefore allowed to transmit that power to another, in whom he hath equal confidence: but the administrator of A. is merely the officer of the Ordinary, prescribed to him by act of parliament, in whom the deceased has reposed no trust at all; and therefore, on the death of that officer, it reverts back to the Ordinary to appoint another. And, with regard to the administrator of A.'s executor, he has clearly no privity or relation to A. being only commissioned to administer the effects of the intestate executor, and not of the original testator. Wherefore in both these cases, and whenever the course of representation from executor to executor is interrupted by any one administration, it is necessary for the Ordinary to commit administration afresh, of the goods of the deceased not administered by the former executor or administrator. And this administrator, de bonis non, is the only legal representative of the deceased in matters of personal property. Sty. 225. But he may, as well as an original administrator, have only a limited or special administration committed to his care, viz. of certain specific effects, such as a term of years and the like; the rest being committed to others. 1 Roll. Abr. 908: Godolph. p. 2. c. 30: Salk. 36: 1 New Abr. 385. See also the Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 8: 30 Car. 2. c. 7.

If an executor dies before probate, such an executor's executor cannot prove the will, because he is not named therein, and no one can prove a will but he who is named executor in it; but if the first executor had proved the will, then his executor might have been executor to the first testator, there requiring no new probate. 1 Salk. 299.

Though an executor of an executor may thus be executor to the first testator; yet he may take upon him the executorship of his own testator, and refuse to intermeddle with the estate of the other: and if the first executor refuses, (as if he dies before probate,) his executor shall not administer to the first testator. Dyer 372.

V. 1. The duty and office of Executors and Administrators in general are very much the same; excepting, first, that the executor is bound to perform a will, which an administrator is not, unless where a testament is annexed to his administration, and then he differs still less from an executor: and, secondly, that an executor may do many acts before he proves the will; Wentw. ch. 3; but an administrator may do nothing till letters of administration are issued; for the former derives his power from the will and not from the probate; the latter owes his entirely to the appointment of the Ordinary. Com. 51.

If a stranger takes upon him to act as executor, without any just authority; (as by intermeddling with the goods of the deceased, 5 Rep. 33, 34; and many other transactions, Wentw. ch. 14: Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 8; he is called in law an Executor of his own wrong, [de son tort,] and is liable to all the trouble of an executorship, without any of the profits or advantages: but merely doing acts of necessity or humanity, as locking up the goods, or burying the corps of the deceased, will not amount to such an intermeddling, as will charge a man as executor of his own wrong. Dyer 166. Such a one cannot bring any action himself in right of the deceased, (Bro. Abr. title Administrator 8,) but actions may be brought against him. And, in all actions by creditors against such an officious intruder, he shall be named an executor, generally; (5 Rep. 31;) for the most obvious conclusion, which strangers can form, from his conduct is that he hath a will of the deceased, wherein he is named executor, but hath not yet taken probate thereof, 12 Mod. 471. He is chargeable with the debts of the deceased, so far as assets comes to his hands. Dyer 166. And as against creditors in general, shall be allowed all payments made to any other creditor in the same or superior degree. 1 Urban. Cas. 33. himself only excepted; in which he differs from a rightful executor. 5 Rep. 30: Moor 527. And though, as against the rightful executor or administrator, he

he cannot plead such payment, yet it shall be allowed him in mitigation of damages; (12 Mod. 441. 471;) unless perhaps upon a deficiency of assets, whereby the rightful executor may be prevented from satisfying his own debt. Wentw. ch. 14.

When there is a rightful executor, and a stranger possesses himself of the testator's goods, without doing any further act as executor, he is not an executor de son tort, but a trespasser; Dyer 105: Rol. Abr. 918. See 5 Rep. 82. An executor of his own wrong may be sued as executor; and he shall be sued for legacies, as well as a rightful executor. Noy 13. Though an executor de son tort cannot maintain any suit or action, because he cannot produce any will to justify it, yet he will be severely punished for a false plea; for in such case the execution shall be awarded for the whole debt, though he meddled with a thing of very small value. Noy 69.

Debt was brought against an executor of his own wrong, who pleaded that he never was executor, nor administered as such; it was held, not to be material whether he had assets or no, but to prove that he had administered any thing was enough; for this would make him chargeable with the debt: but if he had not pleaded falsely, he would have been liable for no more than the value of the goods of the deceased. Style 120.

If an executor of his own wrong possesses himself of goods, and afterwards administration is granted him, he may by virtue thereof retain goods for his own debt. 5 Rep. 30. And where a man took possession of an intestate's goods wrongfully, and sold them to another, and then took out administration, it was adjudged that the sale was good by relation. Moor 126. An executor de son tort shall be allowed in equity, all such payments which a rightful executor ought to have paid. 2 Chanc. Rep. 33. See further post. VI. 2, and this Dict. title Der. asstavit.

2. The executor or administrator must buy the deceased in a manner suitable to the estate which he leaves behind him. Necessary funeral expences are allowed, previous to all other debts and charges; but if the executor, or administrator be extravagant, it is a species of devastation or waste of the substance of the deceased; and shall only be prejudicial to himself, and not to the creditors or legatees of the deceased. Salk. 196: Godolph. p. 2. c. 26. § 2. See post. VI. 2, and this Dict. title Devastavit.

3. The executor or administrator durante minore etate, or durante absentia, or cum testamento annexo, must prove the will of the deceased: which is done either in common form, which is only upon his own oath before the Ordinary, or his surrogate; or per testes, in more solemn form of law, in case the validity of the will be disputed. Godolph. p. 1. c. 20. § 4. When the will is so proved, the original must be deposited in the registry of the Ordinary; and a copy thereof in parchment is made out under the seal of the Ordinary; and delivered to the executor or administrator, together with a certificate of its having been proved before him: all which together is usually filed the probate.

If there are many executors of a will, and one of them only proves the will, and takes upon him the executorship, it is sufficient for all of them; but the rest after may join with him, and intermeddle with the testator's estate: but if they all of them refuse the executorship, none of them will ever afterwards be admitted to prove the will; the Ordinary in this case grants administration with the will annexed. 9 Rep. 37: 1 Rep. 113: Perk. 485.

As the testator has thought the executor appointed a proper person to be intrusted with his affairs, the Ordinary cannot adjudge him disabled or incapax: but a mandamus shall issue from B. R. for the Ordinary to grant probate of the will, and admit the executor, if he refuse him: neither can the Ordinary insist upon security from the executor, as the testator hath thought him able and qualified. 1 Salk. 293.

And although an executor becomes bankrupt, yet it is said the Ordinary cannot grant administration to another: but if an executor become non compos, the Spiritual Court may commit administration for this natural disability. 1 Salk. 307. If an executor takes goods of the testator's, and convert them to his own use; or if he either receive or pay debts of the testator, or give bond for payment; make acquittances for them, or demand the testator's debts as executor; or give away the goods of the testator, &c. these are an administration, so that he cannot afterwards refuse the executorship: and it has been held, that if the wife of the testator take more apparel than is necessary, it is an administration. Offic. Exec. 39.

It is usual when there is a contest about a will, or when the right of administration comes in question, to enter a caveat in the Spiritual Court, which by their law is said to stand in force for three months. Godolph. 253: Goldsb. 119: 2 Rol. Rep. 6: Cro. Jac. 463, 4.

But it is said, that our law takes no notice of a caveat, and that it is but a mere cautionary act done by a stranger, to prevent the Ordinary from doing wrong; and that therefore, if administration be granted pending a caveat, this is valid in our law, though by the law in the Spiritual Court, it may be such an irregularity as will be sufficient to repeal it. 1 Rol. Rep. 191: Cro. Jac. 463: 2 Rol. Rep. 6.

In defect of any will, the person entitled to be administrator, must also at this period take out letters of administration under the seal of the Ordinary; whereby an executorial power to collect and administer, that is, dispose of the goods of the deceased, is vested in him: and he must by Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. enter into a bond with sureties, faithfully to execute his trust. If all the goods of the deceased lie within the same jurisdiction, a probate before the Ordinary, or an administration granted by him, are the only proper ones: but if the deceased had bona notabilia, or chattels to the value of a hundred shillings, in two distinct dioceses or jurisdictions, then the will must be proved, or administration taken out, before the metropolitan of the province, by way of special prerogative: 4 Inst. 335. Hence the courts, where the validity of such wills is tried, and the offices where they are registered, are called the prerogative courts. and the prerogative offices, of the provinces of Canterbury and York. Lynedewoite, who flourished in the beginning of the 15th century, and was official to archbishop Chichele, interprets these hundred shillings to signify solidos legales; of which he tells us seventy-two amounted to a pound of gold, which in his time was valued at fifty nobles or 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* He therefore computes (Provin. l. 3. c. 13.) that the hundred shillings, which constituted bona notabilia, were then equal in current money to 23*l.* 3*s.* 0*d.* This will account for what is said in our ancient books, that bona notabilia in the diocese of London (4*l.* 3*s.* 5*d.* Godolph. p. 2. c. 22.) and indeed every where else (Plowd.

281,) were of the value of ten pounds by composition: for, if we pursue the calculations of Lynedevode to their full extent, and consider that a pound of gold is now almost equal to an hundred and fifty nobles, we shall extend the present amount of bona notabilia, to nearly 70*l*. But the makers of the canons of 1603, understood this ancient rule to be meant of the shillings current in the reign of James I. and have therefore directed (Can. 92.) that five pounds shall for the future be the standard of bona notabilia; so as to make the probate fall within the archiepiscopal prerogative. Which prerogative (properly understood) is grounded upon this reasonable foundation: that as the bishops themselves were originally the administrators to all intestates in their own diocese, and as the present administrators are in effect no other than their officers or substitutes, it was impossible for the bishops, or those who acted under them, to collect any goods of the deceased, other than such as lay within their own dioceses, beyond which their episcopal authority extends not. But it would be extremely troublesome, if as many administrations were to be granted, as there are dioceses within which the deceased had bona notabilia; besides the uncertainty which creditors and legatees would be at, in case different administrators were appointed, to ascertain the fund out of which their demands were to be paid. A prerogative is therefore very prudently vested in the metropolitan of each province, to make in such cases one administration serve for all.

4. The executor or administrator is to make an inventory of all the goods and chattels, whether in possession or action of the deceased; which he is to deliver in to the Ordinary upon oath, if thereunto lawfully required. Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5: By Stat. 1 Jac. 2 c. 17. § 6, No administrator shall be cited into court to render an account of the personal estate of his intestate, otherwise than by an inventory thereof, unless at the instance of some person in behalf of a minor, or having a demand out of such estate as a creditor, or next of kin; nor shall he be compellible to account before any Ordinary or judge empowered by the act of 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 10, otherwise than as aforesaid. See 9 Rep. 39: 2 Inst. 600: Reg. 407.

5. He is to collect all the goods and chattels so inventoried; and to that end he has very large powers and interests conferred on him by law; being the representative of the deceased; Co. Lit. 209; and having the same property in his goods as the principal had when living, and the same remedies to recover them. And if there be two or more executors, a sale or release by one of them shall be good against all the rest. Dyer, 23: Co. Lib. 347: Stat. 3: Bacon, 183; unless such release be obtained by stat. Mer. 620: Co. Lib. 318: 2 Leon. 209; but in case of administrators it is otherwise. 1 dek. 460. Whatever is so recovered, that is of a saleable nature and may be converted into ready money, is called assets in the hands of the executor or administrator, that is, sufficient or enough (from the French assez) to make him chargeable to a creditor or legatee, so far as such goods and chattels extend. Whatever assets so come to his hands, he may convert into ready money, to answer the demands that may be made upon him: See 6 Rep. 47: Co. Lit. 374. In actions against executors, the jury must find assets to what value, for the plaintiff shall recover only according to the value of assets found. 1 Ro. Rep. 58. As to real assets by descent, see this Dict. title Assets.

The chattels real and personal of the testator coming to the executor, are leases for years, rent due, corn growing and cut, grafs cut and severed, &c. cattle, money, plate, household goods, &c. Co. Lit. 118: Dyer 130, 537. An executor having a lease for years of land in right of the deceased, if he purchase the fee, whereby the lease is extinct, yet this lease shall continue to be assets, as to the creditors and legatees. 1 Rep. 87: Bro. Lease 63. Though a plantation be an estate of inheritance, yet being in a foreign country, it is a chattel in the hands of executors to pay debts. 1 Vent. 358. The executor is not only intitled to all personal goods and chattels of the testator, of what nature soever they are; but they are also accounted to be in his possession, though they are not actually so; for he may maintain an action against any one who detains them from him: he is likewise intitled to things in action; as right of execution on a judgment, bond, statute, &c. Also to money awarded on arbitration, where the party dies before the day, &c. Co. Lit. 209: 2 Vent. 249: 1 Dauv. Abr. 549.

If goods of the testator are kept from the executor, he may sue for them in the Spiritual Court, or at common law; and if one seized of a messuage in fee, &c. hath goods in the house, and makes a will and executors, and dies, the executors may enter into the house, and carry away the goods. Lit. 60. An executor may, in convenient time after the testator's death, enter into a house descended to the heir, for removing and carrying away the goods; so as the door be open, or the key be in the door. Offic. Exec. 8. He may take the goods and chattels to himself, or give power to another to seize them for him. 9 Rep. 38. If an executor with his own goods redeem the goods of the testator; or pays the testator's debts, &c. the goods of the testator shall, for so much, be changed into the proper goods of the executor. Jenk. Cent. 188.

Where a man by will devises that his lands shall be sold for payment of debts, his executors shall sell the land, to whom it belongs to pay the debts. 2 Leon. c. 276. And if lands are devised to executors to be sold for payment of the testator's debts, those executors that act in the executorship, or that will sell, may do it without the others. Co. Lit. 113. By Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 4; Bargains and sales of lands, &c. devised to be sold by executors, shall be as good, if made by such of the executors only as take upon them the execution of the will, as if all the executors had joined in the sale. If lands are thus devised to pay debts, a surviving executor may sell them; but if the devise be, that the executor shall sell the land, and not of the land to him to be sold, here being only an authority, not an interest; if one dies the other cannot sell. 1 Lau. 203.

6. The Executor or Administrator must pay the debts of the deceased. In payment of debts he must observe the rules of priority; otherwise, on deficiency of assets, if he pay those of a lower degree first, he must answer those of a higher out of his own estate. And first he may pay all funeral charges, and the expences of proving the will, and the like. Secondly, debts due to the King on record or specialty. 1 And. 129. Thirdly, such debts as are by particular statutes to be preferred to all others; others; as the forfeitures for not burying in woollen; (Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 3;) money due upon poor rates (Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38;) for letters to the post-office (Stat. 9 Ann. c. 10;) and some others. Fourthly, debts of record; as judgments (doquetted according to the Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20.) statutes and recognizances. (4 Rep. 60: Cro. Car. 363.) Fifthly, debts due on special contracts; as for rent; (for which the lessor has often a better remedy in his own hands, by distraining;) or upon bonds, covenants, and the like under seal. (Wentw. cb. 12.)

EXECUTOR V. 6.

Lastly, debts on simple contracts, viz. upon notes unsealed and verbal promises. Among these simple contracts, servants' wages are by some (1 Rol. Abr. 927.) with reason preferred to any other: and so stood the ancient law, according to Bracton. (lib. 2. c. 26.) and Fleta. (b. 2. c. 56. § 10.) Among debts of equal degree, the executor or administrator is allowed to pay himself first; by retaining in his hands so much as his debt amounts to. 10 Mod. 496. If a creditor constitutes his debtor his executor, this is a release or discharge of the debt whether the executor acts or not. (Plowd. 184: Salk. 299.) provided there be assets sufficient to pay the testator's debts: for, though this discharge of the debt shall take place of all legacies, yet it were unfair to defraud the testator's creditors of their just debts by a release which is absolutely voluntary. Salk. 303: 1 R. L. Abr. 921: 5 Rep. 30: 8 Rep. 136. But if a person dies intestate, and the Ordinary commits administration to a debtor, the debt is not thereby extinguished, for he comes in only by the act of law, not by the act of the party. 5 Rep. 136: 1 Salk. 306.—See also 1 Ch. Rep. 292: Mon 855: Hutt 123.

If no suit is commenced against him, the executor may pay any one creditor in equal degree his whole debt; though he has nothing left for the rest, for, without a suit commenced, the executor has no legal notice of the debt. D. 132: 2 Leon 60.

Pursuing a bill in equity against an executor, he may pay any other debt of a higher nature, or of as high a nature, where he has legal assets: but where there is a final decree against an executor, if he pays a bond, it is a mit payment; for a decree is in nature of a judgment. 2 W. 507.

If there be several debts due on several bonds from the testator, his executor may pay which bond debt he pleases, except an action of debt is actually commenced against him upon one of those bonds; and in such case, if, pending an action, another bond creditor brings another action against him, before judgment obtained by either of them, he may prefer which he will by assessing a sum to one and paying him, which judgment he may plead in bar to the other action. (Faulk. 8.) See Sid. 21. But this judgment confessed must be before plea. The usual way is, if there is time, and an executor or administrator is desirous of preferring another creditor of equal degree with him who sues, is, instantly, before plea to confess a judgment, and then plead it, with a pro confesso admission.

If judgment for 100*l.* is suffered, and the plaintiff compounds for 60*l.* the judgment for the whole sum shall not be allowed to keep off other creditors. 8 Rep. 113. Judgments are not to be kept on foot by fraud. Sid. 230: 1 W. 76.

VOL. I.

On a Sci. Fac. against an executor, he cannot plead fully administered, but must plead specially that no goods of the testator came to his hands, whereby he might discharge the debt; for he may have fully administered, and yet be liable to the debt, where goods of the testator's afterwards come to his hands. 1 Lill. 568: Cro. Eliz. 575. In Scire Facias against executors, upon a judgment against their testator, they pleaded Plene Administravit, by paying debts upon bonds ante notitiam: It was adjudged no plea, for at their peril they ought to take notice of debts upon record, and first pay them; and though the recovery be in another county than that where the testator lived: but where an action is brought against executors in another county than where they live, and they not knowing thereof, pay debts upon specialty, it is good. Cro. Eliz. 793.

Where day of payment is past, the penalty of a bond is the sum due at law, but where the day of payment is not come, the sum in the condition is the debt, and the executor cannot cover the assets any further. The Bank of England v. Morrice, Widdow. Annals 224.

A bill may be exhibited in the Chancery against an executor, to discover the testator's personal estate; and thereupon he shall be decreed to pay debts and legacies. Abr. Ca. Eq. 238. If a person being executor, and his testator greatly indebted, be desirous to pay the assets as far as they will go, and that his payments may not be afterwards questioned, he may bring a bill in equity against all the testator's creditors, in order that they may, if they will, contest each other's debts, and dispute who ought to be preferred in payment. 2 Penn. 37.

Where there are only equitable assets, they must be equally paid amongst all the creditors; for a debt by judgment, and simple contract is in conscience equal. 2 P. W. Williams 416. As to what are legal, and what equitable assets, see Fin. Abr. title Payment. And it is held, that bonds, and other debts, shall be paid equally, by executors, where a person has devised lands to them, to be sold for the payment of his debts. 1 P. Wms. 430.

A debt devised by the testator, is not to be paid by the debtor to the legatee but to the executor who can give a sufficient discharge for it, and is answerable to the legatee if there be sufficient assets. If an executor pay out the assets in legacies, and afterwards debts appear, of which he had no notice, which he is obliged to pay; the executor by bill in Chancery may force the legatees to refund. Chan. Rep. 136, 149. One legatee paid shall refund against another, and against a creditor of the testator, that can charge the executor only in equity: but if an executor pays a debt upon simple contract, there shall be no refunding to a creditor of a higher nature. 2 Vent. 360.

The following extracts from Mr. Cox's admirable notes to his edition of P. & Williams's Reports; (1 P. Wms. 293, 603;) will serve as a general summary or abridgement of the determinations, relative to the application of the different funds of a testator's estate, in payment of his different debts.

The personal estate of a testator shall in all cases be primarily applied in discharge of his personal debt (or general legacy) unless he by express words, or manifest intention exempt it. 2 Atk. 625: 3 Atk. 102: Holford v. Port, 3 P. Wms. 324: Fier v. Chubbett, 1 W. P. G. 192:

Every loan creates a debt from the borrower whether there be a bond or covenant for payment or not. Cope v. Cope, 2 Salk. 449: Howell v. Price, 1 P. Wms. 291: Balby v. Hearn, 2 P. Wms. 455: King v. King, 3 P. Wms. 458.

So the personal estate shall be liable although such personal debt be also secured by mortgage. Howell v. Price, 1 P. Wms. 291. Cope v. Cope, 3 Salk. 449: *Pockley v. So lands subject to or devised for payment of debts, shall be liable to discharge such mortgaged lands either descended or devised. Bartholomew v. May, 1 Atk. 487: Tweedale (MSS.) v. Cozentry, (E) 1 Bro. C. R. 240. Even though the mortgaged lands be devised expressly subject to the incumbrance, 2 P. Wms. 360: *Seale v. But in all these cases the debt being considered as the personal debt of the testator himself, the charge on the real estate is merely collateral. The rule therefore is otherwise where the charge is on the real estate principally, although there be a collateral personal security. Cozentry (Countess) v. Cozentry (E), 2 P. Wms. 222: *Freeman v. With respect to the priority of application of real assets, when the personal estate is either exempt or exhausted; it seems that, First, the real estate expressly devised for payment of debts shall be applied: Secondly, to the extent of specialty debts, the real estate descended: Thirdly the real estate specifically devised subject to a general charge of debts. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 424: Pearce v. Conber, 3 Atk. 560: Wilde v. Clarke, 2 Bro. C. R. 261 n: Darvies v. Topp, Id. 259 n: Donne v. Lewis, Id. 257.

It being the object of a Court of equity that every claimant upon the assets of a deceased person shall be satisfied, as far as such assets can, by any arrangement consistent with the nature of the respective claims, be applied in satisfaction thereof; it has been long settled that where one claimant has more than one fund to resort to, and another claimant only one, the first claimant shall resort to that fund on which the second has no lien. Lanoy v. Athol (D), 2 Atk. 446: Lucan v. Martins, 1 Fez. 312: Mogg v. Hodges, 2 Fez. 53.

If therefore a specialty creditor, whose debt is a lien on the real assets receive satisfaction out of the personal assets, a simple contract creditor shall stand in the place of the specialty creditor against the real assets, so far as the latter shall have exhausted the personal assets in payment of his debt. 2 C. C. 4: Sagitary v. Hyde, 1 Vern. 455: Neave v. Alderton, 1 Eq. Ab. 144: Wifson v. Fielding, 2 Vern. 763: Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 436.—And legatees shall have the same equity as against assets descended. Culpepper v. Aston, 2 C. C. 117: Bowman v. Reeve, Pre. Ch. 578: Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. Wms. 730: Lucy v. Gardner, Bumb. 137: Lutkins v. Leigh, Talb. 54.—So where lands are subjected to payment of all debts, a legatee shall stand in the place of a simple contract creditor, who has been, satisfied out of personal assets. Hastwood v. Pope, 3 P. Wms. 323. So where legacies by will are charged on the real estate, but not the legacies by codicil, the former shall resort to the real assets upon a deficiency of the personal assets to pay the whole. Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 422: Bligh v. Darnley (E), 2 P. Wms. 620: Hyde v. Hyde, 3 C. R. 83.

But from the principles of these rules, it is clear that they cannot be applied in aid of one claimant, so as to defeat the claim of another and therefore a pecuniary legatee shall not stand in the place of a specialty creditor as against land devised; though he shall as against land descended. Scott v. Scott, Amb. 383: Chyton v. Burt, 1 P. Wms. 678: and Hastwood v. Pope, 3 P. Wms. 324: But such legatee shall stand in the place of a mortgagee who has exhausted the personal assets to be satisfied out of the mortgaged premises though specifically devised. Lutkins v. Leigh, Talb. 53: Forster v. Ld. Leigh, Amb. 171. For the application of the personal assets in case of the real estate mortgaged, does not take place to the defeating of every legacy. Onal v. Mead, 1 P. Wms. 603: Tipping v. Tipping, Id. 730: Darvies v. Gardner, 2 P. Wms. 190: Ryder v. Wager, Id. 335.

It is now settled that the Court of Chancery will not marshall assets in favour of a charitable bequest so as to give it effect out of the personal chattels, it being void so far as it touches any interest in land. Mog v. Hodges, 2 Fez. 52: Attorney General v. Tyndal, Amb. 614: Poller v. Blayden, Amb. 704: Hill and v. Taylor, Id. 713. II. and it is to be observed that none of the rules abovementioned justify any fund to a claim to which it was not before subject; but only take care that the election of one claimant shall not prejudice the claims of the others. 2 Atk. 438: 1 Fez. 312.

7. When the debts are all discharged, the legacies claim the next regard; which are to be paid by the executor so far as his assets will extend: but he may not give himself the preference herein, as in the case of debts. 2 Vern. 434: 2 P. Wms. 25. See title Legacy.—The assent of an executor to legacies is held necessary to entitle the legatee; but as this assent may be compelled, see March 97, it does not seem necessary to state the effect of a dissent where there are assets sufficient to answer answer both debts and legacies. Where there are not assets the assent of the executor to a legacy would subject him to a devastavit.—See Co. Litt. 111: Keilw. 128: Perk. 390: Plowd. 525, 543: 4 Rep. 28: Cro. Eliz. 719. and this Dict. title Legacy.

8. When all the debts and particular legacies are discharged, the surplus or residuum must be paid to the Residuary Legatee, if any be appointed by the will; and if there be none, it was long a settled notion that it devolved to the executor's own use, by virtue of his executorship Perkins 525.—But whatever ground there might have been formerly for it, this opinion seems now to be understood, with the following restriction; that although where the executor has no legacy at all, the residuum shall in general be his own, yet wherever there is sufficient on the face of a will, (by means of a competent legacy or otherwise) to imply that the testator intended his executor should not have the residue, the undivided surplus of the estate shall go to the next of kin, the executor then standing upon exactly the same footing as an administrator. Proc. Chan. 323: 1 P. Wms. 7: 544: 2 P. Wms. 338: 3 P. Wms. 43, 194: Str. 559: Lawson v. Lawson, Dom. Proc. 28 April 1777.

The result of the many cases on this subject, (as ingeniously stated in a note of Mr. Cor's to his edition of P. Wms. vol. 1. p. 550,) appears to be this.

By law the appointment of an Executor vests in him beneficially, all the personal estate of the testator not otherwise disposed of; but wherever courts of Equity have seen, on the face of the will, sufficient to convince them that the testator did not intend the executor to take the surplus, they have turned the executors into trustees for those on whom the law would cast the surplus, in case of a complete intestacy, i. e. the next of kin; as where the executors are expressly called executors in trust, or where any other expressions occur, shewing the office only to be intended them, and not the beneficial interest Pitt v. Pitt, 2 Vern. 99: Rachfield v. Careless, 2 P. Wms. 158: Graddon v. Hick, 2 Atk. 18: Dean v. Dalton, 2 Bro. C. R. 63: Barnet v. Barnby, 3 Bro. C. R. 28. So where there is a residuary clause, but the name of the residuary legatee is not inserted. Wheeler v. Shears, Mess. 288: Coyne (Bishop) v. Young, 2 Vez. 91: North (Lord) v. Purdon, 2 Vez. 495. Or where the residuary legatee dies in the life-time of the testator, Nicholl v. Crisp, And. 769: Bennett v. Bachelor, 3 Bro. C. R. 28.

So a pecuniary legacy to a sole executor affords a sufficient argument to exclude him from the residue; as it is absurd to suppose a testator to give expressly a part of the fund to the person he intended to take the whole. Cook v. Walker, cited 2 Vern. 676: Johnson v. Prescott, Burb. 112: Darret v. Davies, 3 P. Wms. 40. And it is settled (notwithstanding the case of Bell v. Smith, 2 Vern. 675,) that the wife being the executrix shall make no difference, as appears as well by the cases mentioned in Farrington v. Ambly, (1 P. Wms. 544. and seq.) as by 2 Eq. Ab. 444. p. 58: Martin v. Rebow, 1 Bro. C. R. 154. So equal pecuniary legacies to two or more executors shall exclude them from the surplus. Pitt v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 7, and the several cases there mentioned, and 3 Bro. C. R. 111. Neither will legacies to the next of kin vary the rule. Andrew v. Clark, 2 Vez. 162.

But wherever the legacy is consistent with the intent that the executor should take the whole, a court of equity will not disturb his legal right: and therefore where the gift to the executor is only an exception out of another legacy, it shall not exclude him from the residue, because it is necessary to make such exception expressly. Griffith v. Rogers, Pre. Ch. 231: Hjkins v. Hjkins, 1 Pre. Ch. 263: Granville (Ld.) v. Beaufort, (Dls.) 1 P. Wms. 114: Jones v. Westcombe, Pre. Ch. 316: Newstead v. Johnson, 2 Atk. 45: 2 Eq. Ab. 444. p. 58. So the same principle seems to have prevailed in Lawson v. Lawson, 7 Bro. P. C. 511. So a legacy to one only of two or more executors shall exclude neither from the surplus; because the testator might intend to such a one, a preference pro tanto, Coleworth v. Brangan, Pre. Ch. 323: Mason v. Hawkins, 4 Bro. P. C. 1: Johnson v. Twist, cited 2 Vez. 167: Cloyne (Bp.) v. Young, 2 Vez. 91: Wilson v. Watt, 2 Vez. 166. The same rule and reason hold, where several executors have unequal pecuniary legacies. Biasbridge v. Wadroff, 2 Atk. 69: Bowler v. Hunter, 1 Bro. C. R. 328: although in the last case the following were objected as authorities against the determination, viz. 2 Vern. 677: Pre. Ch. 92: 2 Vern. 361: and Sachel v. Jefferies, Pre. Ch. 169: and 1 Bro. P. C. 167.

Then as to specific legacies, it is determined that a specific legacy will exclude a sole executor, Randal v. Bocky, 2 Vern. 425: Southat v. Watson, 3 Atk. 226: Martin v. Rebow, 1 Bro. C. R. 154. and also that distinct specific legacies of unequal value to several executors, shall not exclude them. Blinkborne v. Frost, 2 Vez. 27: and the language of Lord Hardwick in Southat v. Watson, treats specific and pecuniary legacies as standing precisely upon the same ground in questions of this nature. See title Legacy.

However no case occurs in the books in which distinct specific legacies of equal value to several executors have excluded them from the surplus. And the argument which supports this rule as to pecuniary, certainly does not apply with equal force to specific legatees; since it is very probable that a testator may wish to distribute specific quantities of stock, or particular debts, &c. &c. amongst his executors in some particular manner; although equally in point of value and consistently with an intention that they should take the surplus. The case of Shrimpton v. Stanhope, cited 3 Atk. 230. is not a case of distinct specific legacies; for it appears from Reg. Lib. B. 1736 fo. 104, that the testator there gave some specific legacies to a man and his wife jointly, whom he also made his executors. And so in Willis v. Brady, Barn. 14, and these cases therefore seem like legacies to a sole executor.

With regard to the admission of parol evidence, in cases of this kind, see Rachfield v. Careless, 2 P. Wms. 158; and Re Lord (D.) v. Rutland (Dls.) 2 P. Wms. 210: and Mr. Cor's notes on the former of those cases.

Concerning the adminstrato indeed there was formerly much debate, whether or no he could be compelled to make any distribution of the intestate's estate. Grubb, p. 2. c. 32. For though (after the administration was taken in effect from the Ordinary, and transferred to the relations of the deceased) the spiritual court endeavoured to compel a distribution, and took bonds of the administrator for that purpose, they were prohibited by the temporal Courts, and the bonds declared void at law. 1 Lev. 233: Cent. 125: 2 P. Wms. 447. And the right of the husband not only to administer, but also to enjoy exclusively, sively, the effects of his deceased wife, depends still on this doctrine of the common law: the statute of frauds declaring only, that the statute of distribution does not extend to this case. But now these controversies are quite at an end; for by the statute commonly called the Statute of Distribution, 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. (explained by 29 Car. 2. c. 30.) it is enacted, that the surplusage of intestates' estates, (except of femes covert, which are left as at common law. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 25.) shall, after the expiration of one full year from the death of the intestate, be distributed in the following manner. One third shall go to the widow of the intestate, and the residue in equal proportions, to his children, or if dead, to their representatives, that is, their lineal descendants: if there are no children or legal representatives, subsisting, then a moiety shall go to the widow, and a moiety to the next of kindred in equal degree and their representatives, if no widow, the whole shall go to the children; if neither widow nor children, the whole shall be distributed among the next of kin in equal degree and their representatives: but no representatives are admitted, among collaterals, further than the children of the intestate's brothers and sisters. Raym. 496: Lord Raym. 571.

The next of kindred, here referred to, are to be investigated by the rules of consanguinity, as those who are entitled to letters of administration, of whom sufficient has already been said, (ante. III.) And therefore by this statute, the mother, as well as the father, succeeded to all the personal effects of their children, who died intestate, and without wife or issue; in exclusion of the sons and daughters, the brothers and sisters of the deceased. And so the law still remains with respect to the father; (See 1 P. Wms. 48.) And the father need not administer. (Pr. Ch. 260.) But by Stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17, if the father be dead, and any of the children die intestate, without wife or issue, in the life-time of the mother, she and each of the remaining children, or their representatives, shall divide his effects in equal portions—And in case a man die leaving a wife and a mother and brothers and sisters, the wife shall have only a moiety, the remainder going to his mother, brothers and sisters equally. 2 P. Wms. 344.

This statute of distribution bears in its principle a near resemblance to our ancient English law, previous to the statute of wills, by which, (See Glanvil. l. 2. c. 5: Bracton, l. 2. c. 26: Fleta, 2. c. 57;) a man's goods were to be divided into three equal parts; of which one went to his heirs or lineal descendants, another to his wife, and the third was at his own disposal; or if he died without a wife, he might then dispose of one moiety, and the other went to his children. And so if he had no children, the wife was entitled to one moiety, and he might bequeath the other; but if he died without either wife or issue, the whole was at his own disposal. The shares of the wife and children were called their reasonable parts; and the will de rat. male p. te bonorum was given to recover them. F. N. B. 122.

By the same Statute of distributions it is directed that no child of the intestate (except his heir at law,) on whom he settled in his life-time any estate in lands, or pecuniary portion, equal to the distributive shares of the other children, shall have any part of the surplusage with their brothers and sisters; but if the estates so given them, by way of advancement, are not quite equivalent to the other shares, the children so advanced shall have so much only as will make them equal. And this with respect to goods and chattels is part of the ancient custom of London, of the Province of York, and of Scotland: and with regard to lands descending in coparcenary, that it hath always been, and still is, the common law of England, under the name of birthright.

It may be observed that the doctrines and limits of representation, laid down in the statute of Distribution, seem to have been in some measure also borrowed from the civil law: whereby it will sometimes happen, that personal estates are divided per capita, and sometimes per stirpes; whereas the Common-law, knows no other rule of succession but that per stirpes only. They are divided per capita, to every man an equal share, when all the claimants claim in their own rights, as in equal degree of kindred, and not jure representationis, in the right of another person. As if the next of kin be the intestate's three brothers, A. B. and C; here his effects are divided into three equal portions, and distributed per capita, one to each: but if one of these brothers, A. had been dead leaving three children, and another, B. leaving two; then the distribution must have been per stirpes; viz. one third to A's, three children, another third to B's two children; and a remaining to C. the surviving brother: Yet if C. had also been dead, without issue, then A's, and B's, five children, being all in equal degree to the intestate, would take in their own rights per capita; viz. each of them one fifth part. Prec. Chanc. 54.

A question hath been made, if a father die intestate, leaving only one son, which son also dies intestate, whether administration should be granted, to the next of kin, of the father or of the son? The latter determination hath been, that, by this statute of distribution of intestate's estates, a right is vested in one child, where there is one and no more (viz.) a right to sue for the estate; and by consequence, if he die, before the estate is recovered and actually in his possession, it must go to his administrator, and not to the administrator of the father. Palmer v. Allcock, 3 Mol. 58: Vide Shower 26. and 2 Vern. 274.

So where a person died intestate, leaving two, who were next a-kin, in equal degree to him; one of them died intestate within the year, and before distribution; adjudged, that an interest was vested in him, and his next of kin shall have the administration, like the case of a residuary legatee dying before probate of the will, (viz.) his next of kin shall have the administration, and the next of the testator. Show. 25.

9. The Statute of Distributions expressly excepts and reserves the customs of the city of London, of the province of York, and of all other places having peculiar customs of distributing intestates' effects. So that, though in those places, the restraint of devising is removed, their ancient customs remain in full force, with respect to the estates of intestates.

In the city of London, (Ld. Raym. 1329,) and province of York, (2 Burr. Eccl. Law 746.) as well as in the kingdom of Scotland, (Id. 782.) and probably also in Wales, (concerning which there is little to be gathered, but from the Stat. 7 & 8 W. III. c. 38.) the effects of the intestate, after payment of his debts are in general divided according to the ancient universal doctrine of the pars rationabilis. If the deceased leaves a widow and children, children, his substance (deducting for the widow's her apparel and the furniture of her bed-chamber, (which in London is called the widow's chamber) is divided into three parts, one of which belongs to the widow, another to the children, and the third to the administrator; if only a widow, or only children they shall respectively, in either case, take one moiety, and the administrator the other, 1 P. Wms. 341: Salk. 246.—If neither widow nor child, the administrator shall have the whole. 2 Shorr. 175.—And this portion or dead man's part, the administrator was wont to apply to his own use. (2 Freem. 85: 1 Vern. 133.) till the Stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. declared that the same should be subject to the statute of Distribution. So that if a man dies worth 1800*l.* personal estate, leaving a widow and two children, this estate shall be divided into eighteen parts; whereof the widow shall have eight, six by the custom and two by the statute; and each of the children five, three by the custom, and two by the statute; if he leaves a widow and one child, she shall have sixteen parts as before; and the child shall have ten, six by the custom and four by the statute, if he leaves a widow and no child, the widow shall have three fourths of the whole, 10 by the custom and one by the statute; and the remaining fourth shall go by the statute to the next of kin. It is also to be observed, that if the wife be provided for by a jointure before marriage in bar of her customary part, it puts her in a state of non-entity with regard to the custom only; (2 Vern. 665: 3 P. Wms. 16.) but she shall be entitled to her share of the dead man's part under the statute of Distribution, unless barred by special agreement. 1 Id. 15: 2 Chm. Rep. 252. and if any of the children are advanced by the father in his life-time with any sum of money, (not amounting to their full proportionable part) they shall bring that portion into hotchpot with the rest of the brothers and sisters, but not with the widow, before they are entitled to any benefit under the custom; (2 Freem. 279: 1 Equ. Caf. Abr. 155: 2 P. Wms. 526:) but if they are fully advanced, the custom entitles them to no farther dividend. 2 P. Wms. 527.

Thus far in the main the customs of London and of York agree: but besides certain other less material variations there are two principal points in which they considerably differ. One is, that in London the share of the children (or orphanage part) is not fully vested in them till the age of twenty-one, before which they cannot dispose of it by testament (2 Vern. 558.) and, if they die under that age, whether sole or married, their share shall survive to the other children; but after the age of twenty-one, it is free from any orphanage custom, and in case of intestacy, shall fall under the statute of Distributions, Proc. Chanc. 557. The other, that in the province of York, the heir at Common law, who inherits any land either in fee or in tail, is excluded from any filial portion or reasonable part. 2 Burn. 754.

VI. 1. Against an administrator and for him, action will lie, as for and against an executor, and he shall be charged to the value of the goods, and no further; unless it be by his own false plea, or by wasting the goods of the intestate. An executor or administrator shall never be charged de bonis propriis, but where he doth some wrong; as by selling the testator's goods, and converting the money to his own use, concealing or wasting them, or by pleading what is false. Dyer 210: 2 Rulf. Rep. 295. But this plea must be of a fact, within his own knowledge. If an administrator plead plene administravit, and 'tis found against him, the judgment shall be de bonis propriis, because 'tis a false plea, and that upon his own knowledge. 2 Cro. 191: Contra where he pleads such a plea, and that he hath no more than to satisfy such a judgment, &c. the recovery shall be de bonis testatoris, &c. 2 Roll. Rep. 400. This must mean, where such plea is true in fact. Upon plene administravit pleaded by an administrator, the plaintiff must prove his debt, or he shall recover but a penny damages, though there be assets; because the plea only admits the debt, but not the quantum. 1 Salk. 296.

Special bail is not required of administrators or executors in any action brought against them for the debt of the intestate; except where they have wasted the goods of the deceased: nor shall costs be had against them. Vide tit. Costs. See Co. Eliz. 503: Telv. 168: Hut. 69: 2 Roll. Rep. 87: 1 Salk. 207: 3 Salk. 106. Not even on a writ of error where judgment is affirmed. Where an administrator is plaintiff, he must shew by whom administration was granted; for that only intitles him to the action: but if an administrator is defendant, the plaintiff need not set forth by whom administration was granted, for it may not be within his knowledge. Sid. 220: 1 Lutw. 301. Generally an administrator shall be charged by others, for any debt or duty due from the deceased, as he himself might have been charged in his life time; to for as he hath any of the intestate's estate, to discharge the same. Co. Lit. 219: Dyer 14.

If a man have judgment for land in a real or mixed action, and for damages, and then dies; his executor or administrator, not the heir, shall have execution for the damages; but not for the land. Fitz. Adm. n. 53: March 9.

2. For the goods of the testator, taken from them, or for trespass upon the land, &c. Executors may, before the will proved, bring action of trespass, detinue, &c. And if they tell on the will, or other goods of the testator, before the will is proved, they may have actions for the money payable, before the same is proved. Offic. Exec. 35. It has been ruled, that an executor may commence an action before probate; but he cannot declare upon it, without producing in court the letters testamentary: he is not like an administrator, who hath no right till administration committed; for his right is the fact. Before, as after probate of the will, and the not proving it, is only an impediment to the action. 1 Salk. 303.

[Probate obtained before trial of the action seems sufficient, unless oyer of the letters testamentary is demanded; for it is of the will, not the probate, protest is made, and on the trial, for any matters relative to the personal estate, with which the executors have to do, the probate is the proper proof of the will. J. M.]

Executors may maintain action of trover for goods converted in the life of the testator. Cro. Eliz. 377. And by the Stat. W. 1 (13 E.) c. 23, executors shall have a writ of account, and the like action and process, as the testator might have had.—By Stat. 4 E. 3. c. 7. the executors may bring actions for trespass done to their testator, as for goods and chattels carried away in his life, and shall recover their damages in the same manner as he should have done.—By Stat. 25 E. 3. ff. 5. c. 5, executors of executors shall have actions of debt, account, and of goods goods taken away of the first testator's; and have execution of statutes, &c. and shall answer to others, so far as they recover goods of the first testator, as the first executor.—As to process against Executors, See Stat. 9 E. 3. c. 3.

Formerly, if an executor wasted goods and left an executor, and died leaving assets, his executor should not be chargeable, because it was a personal tort. 2 Lev. 120; but now it is otherwise by the Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24.

The law subjects the executors to every person's claim, and action, which he had against the testator, except as to a trespass vi et armis, &c. committed by the testator; for which reason the executor is said to be the testator's assignee, and to represent the person of the testator: but for personal wrongs done by the testator to the person, or goods, &c. of another, the executor doth not represent him: because personal actions die with the person. Co. L. 209; 9 Rep. 89. See title Action.

Nothing can be debt in the executor, which was not debt in the testator. Co. Eliz. 232. A promise to pay to an executor, when the testator is not named, is not good. Co. Jac. 570. But a testator may bind his executor, as to his goods, though he himself is not bound. Ibid. And an executor may recover a duty due to the testator, though he be not named. Dyer 14. Action lies against an executor upon a collateral promise made and broken by the testator. Co. Jac. 663. The testator's promise to do any collateral thing, as to build an house, &c. which is not a debt, binds executors. Jenk. Cent. 290, 336. Assumpsit lies upon a contract of the testator; and the realor is the same upon a promise, where the testator had a valuable consideration. Palm. 329. Though a debt upon a simple contract of the testator, cannot be recovered of the executor by action of debt; yet it may by assumpsit. 1 Lev. 200; 9 Rep. 87.

If two persons are jointly bound, and one of them dies, the survivor only shall be charged, and not the other's executor. Palsb. 16 Car. 2. When there are two executors, if one of them dies, action is to be brought against the surviving executor, and not the executor of the deceased; but in equity the testator's goods are liable in whosoever's hands they are. 1 Leon. 304; Clan Rep. 57.

If there be no assets, the obligee executor may sue the heir of the obligor testator in action of debt upon his bond. 1 Salk. 304; 1 Lil. Abr. 575.

If an executor releases all actions suits and demands, it extends only to demands in his own right, not such as he hath as executor. Sims. 153. An executor shall be charged with rent in the detinet, if he hath assets; and if he continues the possession, he shall be charged in the debet and detinet, in respect of the perception of the profits, whether he hath assets or not. 1 Lev. 127. But an executor is not liable in the debet and detinet for part, and in the detinet for the other part, because they require several judgments, viz. De bonis propriis for the debet and detinet and de bonis testatoris for the detinet. 3 Lev. 74. See title Debet and Detinet.

If an executor has a term, and the rent reserved is more than the value of the premises, in action brought against him for it in the debet and detinet, he may plead the special matter, viz. I have no assets, and that the assets less value than the rent, and demand judgment. He ought not to be charged in the detinet tantum:

and he cannot waive the lease; without renouncing the whole executorship. 1 Salk. 297.

One executor cannot regularly sue another at law; but he may have relief in equity: In the eye of the law all are but as one executor; and most acts done by, or to any of them, are esteemed acts done by, or to all of them. 1 Rol. Abr. 918. If where one executor is sued, he plead that there is another executor, he ought to shew that he hath administered. 1 Lev. 161. And he only that administers is to be sued in actions against executors; but actions brought by executors are to be in the name of all of them, though some do not take upon them the executorship. 1 Rol. 924; Jenk. Cent. 106, 107. If any executor refuses to join in an action, with his co-executors, he must be summoned and severed.

An executor is not disabled by outlawry to sue for the debts of the testator.

By the Stat. of Frauds 29 Car. 2. c. 3, No action shall charge an executor to answer damages out of his own estate, upon any promise to another, unless there be some writing thereof signed by the party to be charged therewith. See Rann v. Hughes, 4 Bro. P. C.

By Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8 § 1, On any judgment after verdict, had by or in the name of an executor, or administrator; an administrator de bonis non may sue forth a scire facias, and take execution upon such judgment. If an executor makes himself a stranger to the will of the testator, or pleads Ne unques executor or any falsa plea, and it is found against him, judgment shall be de bonis propriis: in other cases de bonis testatoris. Co. Jac. 447.

If on a scire facias against an executor, the sheriff return a destravit; the plaintiff shall have judgment and execution de bonis propriis of the defendant: and if nulla bona be returned, he may have a capias ad satisfaciendum. or an elegit. 2 Nels. 791; Dyer 185. But one executor shall not be charged with a destravit made by his companion; for the act of one shall charge the other no further than the goods of the testator in his hands amount to. Co. Eliz. 318.

If an executor does any waste, or mis-employs the estate of the deceased, or doth any thing by negligence or fraud, &c. it is a destravit and he shall be charged for so much out of his own goods. 8 Rep. 133. And a new executor may have an action against a former executor, who wasted the goods of the deceased; or the old one may remain chargeable to creditors, &c. Hib. 266.

If an executor takes an obligation in his own name, for a debt due by simple contract to the testator, this shall charge him as much as if he had received the money; for the new security hath extinguished the old right, and is quasi a payment to him. Off. of Ex. 158; Telv. 10; 1 Lev. 189.

So if the executor sue a person in trover and conversion, in which he has a right to recover; and afterwards he and the defendant come to an agreement, that he shall pay the executor such a sum at a future day, and the party fails, this is a destravit; and he shall answer ad valorem. 2 Lev. 189; 2 Jon. 88; 8 C. 1 Fern 474; 8 C.

It is a destravit to permit interest to run in arrears, and then suffer judgment for it; and want of assets to pay before the incurring of it by the administrator shall not be intended unless it be expressly pleaded. 2 Lev. 40; Hil. 23; 24 Car. 2. B. R. Seaman v. Dec.

An executor in case of a destravit is in nature of a trustee of an estate. Chan. Cases 304.

EXECUTORY DEVISE.

EXECUTORY ESTATE, Is where an estate in fee created by deed or fine is to be afterwards executed by entry, livery, writ, &c. Leases for years, rents, annuities, condition, &c. are called inheritances executory. Wood's Inst. 293. Estates executed are when they pass presently to the person to whom conveyed, without any after-act. 2 Inst. 513. See title Estate.

EXECUTORY DEVISE, The Devise of a future interest. A Devise that vests not at the death of the testator, but depends on some contingency which must happen before it can vest. 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 186.

An executory devise differs from a remainder in three very material points. 1. That it needs not any particular estate to support it. 2. That by it a fee-simple or other less estate, may be limited after a fee simple. 3. That by this means a remainder may be limited of a chattel interest, after a particular estate for life created in the same. See title Remainder and 2 Comm. 172—5.

1. The first case happens when a man devises a future estate to arise upon a contingency: and, until that contingency happens, does not dispose of the fee-simple, but leaves it to descend to his heir at law. As if one devises land to a feme-sole and her heirs, upon her day of marriage, here is in effect a contingent remainder without any particular estate to support it; a freehold commencing in futuro. This limitation though it would be void in a deed, yet is good in a will, by way of executory devise. 1 Sid. 153. For, since by a devise a freehold may pass without corporal tradition or livery of seisin, (as it must do if it passes at all) therefore it may commence in futuro; because the principal reason why it cannot commence in futuro in other cases, is the necessity of actual seisin, which always operates in presenti. And, since it may thus commence in futuro, there is no need of a particular estate to support it, the only use of which is to make the remainder, by its unity with the particular estate, a present interest. And hence also it follows, that such any executory devise not being a present interest, cannot be barred by a recovery, suffered before it commences. Cro. Jac. 593. See this Dict. title Fine and Recovery.

2. By executory devise a fee, or other less estate, may be limited after a fee. And this happens where a deviser devises his whole estate in fee, but limits a remainder thereon to commence on a future contingency. As if a man devises land to A. and his heirs; but, if he dies before the age of twenty-one, then to B. and his heirs: this remainder also, though void in a deed, is good by way of executory devise. 2 Mod. 289.

In both these species of executory devises, the contingencies ought to be such as may happen within a reasonable time, as within one or more life or lives in being, or within a moderate term of years; for Courts of Justice will not indulge even wills so as to create a perpetuity; which the law abhors, 12 Mod. 267, 1 Vern. 164. 1 Salk. 229. The utmost length that has been hitherto allowed for the continuance of an executory devise of either kind to happen in, is that of a life or lives in being, and one and twenty years afterwards. As when lands are devised to such unborn son of a feme covert as shall first attain the age of twenty one, and his heirs; the utmost length of time that can happen before the estate can vest, is the life of the mother and the subsequent infancy of her son, and this hath been decreed to be a good executory devise. Farr. 232. This limit was taken from the time in which an estate may be rendered unalienable by a strict settlement. An executory devise to an unborn son, of a man, may be suspended a few months beyond the life of the father and twenty one years afterwards; by a posthumous birth.

3. By executory devise a term of years may be given to one man for his life, and afterwards limited over in remainder to another which could not be done by deed; for by law the first grant of it, to a man for life, was a total disposition of the whole term; a life estate being esteemed of a higher and larger nature than any term for years. 8 Rep. 95.

And, at first, the courts were tender, even in the case of a will of restraining the devisee for life from aliening the term, but only held, that in case he died without exerting that act of ownership, the remainder over should then take place; for the restraint of the power of alienation, especially in very long terms was introducing a species of perpetuity. Bro. tit. Chattels 23: Dyer 74. But, soon afterwards it was held, that the devisee for life hath no power of aliening the term so as to bar the remainderman. Dyer 358: 8 Rep. 96; yet, in order to prevent the danger of perpetuities, it was settled, that though such remainders may be limited to as many persons successively as the deviser thinks proper, yet they must all be in esse during the life of the first devisee; for then, as it is expressed, all the candles are lighted and are consuming together, and the ultimate remainder is in reality only to that remainderman who happens to survive the rest. It was also settled that such remainder may not be limited to take effect, unless upon such contingency as must happen (if at all) during the life of the first devisee. 1 Sid. 451: Skin. 341: 3 P. Wms. 358.

Having said thus much on Executory Devises in general, subsequent information may be thus divided.

I. Of Executory Devises of Lands of Inheritance.

II. Of Executory Devises of Terms for Years.

I. If a particular estate is limited, and the inheritance passes out of the donor, this is a contingent remainder; but where the fee by a devise is vested in any person, and to be vested in another upon contingency, this is an executory devise; and in all cases of executory devises, the estates descend until the contingencies happen. Raym. 28: 1 Lutw. 798. Where a contingent estate limited, descends upon a freehold, which is capable of supporting a remainder, it shall never be construed an executory devise, but a remainder. And so it is, if the estate be limited by words in presenti, as when a person devises his lands to the heirs of A. B. who is living, &c. Though if the same were to the heir of A. after his death, it would be as good as an executory devise. 2 Saund. 380: 4 Mod. 255.

One by will devises land to his mother for life, and after her death, to his brother in fee; provided, that if his wife, being then ensent, be delivered of a son, then the land to remain to him in fee, and dies, and the son is born; in this case it was held, that the fee of the brother shall cease, and vest in the son, by way of executory devise, on the happening of the contingency; and here such fee estate enures as a new original devise to take effect when the first fails. Dyer 33, 127: Cro. Jac. 592. A remainder of a fee may not be limited by the rules rules of law after a fee simple; for when a man hath parted with his whole estate, there cannot remain any thing for him to dispose of: but of late times a distinction hath been made between an absolute fee-simple, and a fee-simple which depends upon a contingency, or is conditionally limited; especially where such a contingency may happen in the course of a few years, or of one or two lives; and where such a remainder is limited by will, it is called an executory devise. 2 Nelf. Abr. 797.

An estate devised to a son and his heirs, upon condition that if he did not pay the legacies given by the will within such a time, that then the land should remain to the legatees, &c. and their heirs: this limitation of a fee in remainder, after a fee limited to the son, being upon the contingency, of the son's failing in payment of the legacies, was adjudged good by way of executory devise. Cro. Eliz. 833. And where the father devised his lands to his youngest son and his heirs, and if he die without issue, the eldest son being alive, then to him and his heirs; this was held a good remainder in fee to the eldest brother, after the conditional contingent estate in fee to the youngest, as depending upon the possibility that he might be alive when his youngest brother died without issue; and his dying without issue, was a collateral determination of his estate, whilst the other was living. Godb. 282: 2 Nelf. Abr. 798.

There can be no executory devise after an estate-tail generally limited, because that would tend to a perpetuity; and a contingency is too remote where a man must expect a fee upon another's dying without issue, generally: But dying without issue, living another, may happen in a little time, because it depends upon one life; and therefore a devise of a fee simple to one, but to remain to another upon such a contingency, is now held good by executory devise. Cro. Jac. 695.

If a devise be "to A. for ever, that is, if he shall have a son or sons who shall attain 21, but if A. shall die without son or sons to inherit, that the son of B. shall inherit," this is a fee in A. with an executory devise to the son of B. who shall take it A. die without issue, or if the issue die before 21. 1 Bro. C. R. 147.

If a devise be to the second son, then unborn, of A. B. and after his decease, or accellion to his paternal estate, then to his second son and his heirs-male, with remainders over: such second son of A. B. when born, will take an estate in tail-male by way of executory devise, determinable on the accession of the family estate, and in the mean time the lands descend to the heir of the testator. 2 Blac. Rep. 1159.

II It has now been long fully settled, that a term for years, or any chattel interest, may be given by an executory devise to an unborn child of a person in existence, when it attains the age of 21; and that the limits of executory devises of real and personal property are precisely the same. Fearne.

It is very common to bequeath chattel interests to A. and his issue, and if he dies without issue to B. It seems now to be determined, that where the words are such as would have given A. an estate tail in real property; in cases of personal property the subsequent limitations are void, and A. has the absolute interest: But if it appear from any clause or circumstance in the will, that the testator intended to give it over, only in case A. had no issue living at the time of his death, upon that event the subsequent limitation will be good as an executory devise. See Fearne and the cases referred to in Cox's 2. 17. iii. 262.

Formerly where a term of years, (which is but a chattel) was devised to one; and that if he died, living another person, it should remain to the other person, during the residue of the term, such a remainder was adjudged void: For a devise of a chattel to one for an hour, was a devise of it for ever. Dyer 74. But it was afterwards held, that a remainder of a term to one, after it was limited to another for life, was good: In a case where a testator having a term, devised that his wife should have the lands for so many years of the term as she should live; and that after her death the residue thereof should go to his son and his assigns; and this was the first case wherein an executory remainder of a term for years was adjudged good. Dyn 253, 358.

A person possessed of a term, devised it to his wife for eighteen years, and after to his eldest son for life, after to the son's eldest issue male during life; though he have no such issue, at the time of the devise, and death of the devisor, if he has before his own death, he shall have it as an executory devise. 1 Rol. 612. But if one devise a term to his wife for life; the remainder to his first son for life, and if he dies without issue, to his second son, &c. the remainder to the second son is void, and no executory devise; yet where the dying without issue living at a person's death, may be confined to one life, it hinders not a remainder over. 1 Eq. Abr. 194.

Executory devises, as to terms for years, are not extended beyond a life or lives; they ought to arise within the compass of one life. 1 Salk. 229. Where there is an executory devise, there needs not any particular estate to support it; and because the person who is to take upon contingency, hath not a present but future interest, his estate cannot be barred by a common recovery. 2 Nelf. Abr. 797, 798. It is held executory devises, and limitations of the trust of a term, are governed alike. 1 Vern. 234.

Lessee for years devised all his term to his son, and his will was, that his wife should have the occupation and profits of the lands, during the minority of his son, &c. and he made her sole executrix, and died; she afterwards proved the will, then she sold the term, and died; adjudged that this sale was void against her son, because it shall be intended that the devise to the wife, shall precede the devise to the son, though it followed in words, and then she will not have the whole term, but only so much thereof for so long time as she should live, before her son came of age; and that the remainder was to vest in him, upon the contingency of his living till he came of full age. Plow. Com. 53. 519.

The husband being possessed of a term for years, devised the lease itself to his wife for her life, and after her death to her children unpreferred; it was insisted for the wife, that she had the whole term, the devise being of the lease itself, and the lands are not mentioned throughout the will; but adjudged that the wife had only an estate for so many years of the lease as she should live, and that so much as remained unexpired at her death, was to vest in the children upon the contingency of their living at that time. 1 And. 61; 2 Leon. 92; 3 Leon. 89; Gold. 26.

EXEMPTION, Exemptio.] A privilege to be free from service or appearance; as knights, clergymen, &c. are exempted from appearing at the county-court by statute, and Peers from being put upon inquests. 6 Rep. 23. Persons seventy years of age, apothecaries, &c. are also exempted by law from serving on juries; and justices of peace, attorneys, &c. from parish offices: 2 Inst. 247. There is an exemption from tolls, &c. by the King's Letters Patent: And a writ of exemption, or of ease, to be quit of serving on juries, and all public service. Shop. Epitom. 1049. See further the proper titles in this Dict.

EXENNIIUM or EXHENIUM, A gift or present; and more properly a new year's gift.

EXERCITUALB, A heriot; paid only in arms, horses, or military accoutrements. Leg. Edw. Conf. 1.

EXETER. By letters patent under the Great Seal, the seits of the castle of Exon (part of the dutchy of Cornwall) to be granted to some persons appointed by the justices in quarter-sessions for the county of Devon, for the term of 99 years, to the use of the said county and for other public uses; under the ancient yearly rent of 10 l. per annum, payable to the crown. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 19.

EXFREDIARE, From ex and the Sax. Frede, Frith, Peace.] To break the peace, or commit open violence. Leg. H. 1. c. 13.

EX GRAVI QUERELA, A writ that lies for him to whom any lands or tenements in fee are devised by will, (within any city, town or borough, wherein lands are devisable by custom,) and the heir of the devisor enters, and detains them from him. Reg. Orig. 244: Old Nat. Br. 87. And if a man devises such lands or tenements unto another in tail, with remainder over in fee, if the tenant in tail enter, and is seised by force of the entail, and afterwards dieth without issue; he in remainder shall have the writ ex gravi querela to execute that devise. New Nat. Br. 441. Also where tenant in tail dies without issue of his body, the heir of the donor, or he who hath the reversion of the land, shall have this writ in the nature of a formedon in the reverter. Ibid. If a devisor's heir be ousted by the devisee, by entry off the lands; he may not after have this writ, but is to have his remedy by the ordinary course of the common law. Co. Lit. 111.—If the claimant's title accrues within twenty years, the most eligible method of proceeding, is now by Ejectment.

EXHIBIT, Exhibitum.] When a deed, or other writing is in a suit in Chancery exhibited to be proved by witnesses, and the examiner or commissioners appointed certify on the back of it, that the deed or writing was shewed to the witness, to prove it at the time of his examination, and by him sworn to; this is then called an exhibit in law proceedings. The same under a commission of bankrupt.

EXHIBITIO. An allowance for meat and drink, such as was customary among the religious appropriators of churches, who usually made it to the depending vicar: the benefaction settled for the maintaining of scholars in the Universities, not depending on the foundation, are called exhibitions. Paroch. Antiq. 304.

EXIGENDARIES. See Exigent.

Vol. I.

EXIGENT, or Exigi facias.] A writ that lies when the defendant in an action personal cannot be found, nor any thing of his within the county, whereby to be attached or distrained; and is directed to the sheriff, to proclaim and call him five county-court days, one after another, charging him to appear upon pain of outlawry: It is called exigent, because it exigat the party, i. e. requires his appearance or forth-coming to answer the law; and if he come not at the last day's proclamation, he is said to be quingies exactus, (five times exacted), and is outlawed. Crompt. Jurif. 188.

The statutes requiring proclamations on exigents awarded in civil actions, are 6 Hen. 8. c. 4: 31 Eliz. cap. 3. Exigents are to be awarded against receivers of the King's money, who detain the same; and against conspirators, rioters, &c. Stat. 18 Ed. 3. c. 1. And a writ of proclamation shall be issued to the sheriff to make three proclamations in the county where the defendant dwells, for him to yield himself, &c. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3.

The writ of exigent also lies in an indictment of felony, where the party indicted cannot be found: And upon suing out an exigent for a criminal matter before conviction, there shall be a writ of proclamation, &c. 3 Inst. 31. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 22. If a person indicted of felony absent himself so long that the writ of exigent is awarded, his withdrawing will be deemed a flight in law whereby he will be liable to forfeit his goods; and though he renders himself upon the exigent, after such withdrawing, and is found Not guilty, it is said the forfeiture shall stand. 5 Rep. 110: 3 Inst. 232. After a capias directed to the sheriff to take and imprison a person, &c. if he cannot be taken, an exigent is awarded: And after a judgment in a civil action, the exigent is to go forth after the first capias; but before judgment there must be a capias, alias and pluries. 4 Inst. 177. If the defendant be in prison, or beyond sea, &c. he or his executors may reverse the award of the exigent. See further this Dict. title Outlawry.

EXIGENTER, Exigendarius.] An officer of the court of Common Pleas; of which officers there are four in number: They make all exigents and proclamations, in actions where process of outlawry doth lie; and also writs of superfedeas, as well as the prothonotaries, upon such exigents made out in their offices. But the issuing writs of superfedeas is taken from them by an officer in the same court, constituted by letters patent to King James the First.

EXIGI FACIAS, See Exigent.

EXILE. A banishment, or driving one away from his country. And this exile is either by restraint, when the government forbids a man, and makes it penal to return; or it is voluntary, where he leaves his country upon disgust, but may come back at pleasure. 2 Lev. 191.

One natural and regular consequence of personal liberty, under the laws of England is that every Englishman may claim a right to abide in his own country so long as he pleases, and not to be driven from it unless by sentence of the law. Exile and Transportation are both punishments unknown to the common law; and wherever the latter is inflicted, it is either by the choice of the criminal himself to escape a capital punishment, or by the express direction of some statute. See Magna Charta, c. 29; which expressly declares that no freeman shall be banished unless by the judgment of his peers, or by the laws of the land. And for the provisions of the Habeas Corpus Act, s. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. (termed by Blackstone a second Magna Charta and stable bulwark of our liberties,) with respect to sending Englishmen prisoners to Scotland, Ireland, or beyond the seas; see titles False Imprisonment; Habeas Corpus.

Soldiers and sailors form necessary exceptions to these rules; but it is said the King cannot even constitute a man Deputy, or Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, nor make one a foreign Ambassador, against his will: since these in reality might be no more than honourable exiles. 2 Inft. 46.

See further on this subject, this Dict. titles Abjuration, Clergy, Felony, Transportation.

EXILIUM, Signifies in law construction, a spoiling: And by the statute of Marlbridge it seems to extend to the injury done to tenants, by altering their tenure, ejecting them, &c. and this is the sense that Fleta determines, who distinguishes between vassum, destructio and exilium; for he tells us that vassum and destructio are almost the same, and are properly applied to houses, gardens or woods; but exilium is when servants are enfranchised, and wards unlawfully turned out of their tenements. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 11. See Stat. Marlbr. c. 25.

EXITUS, Issue or off-spring: and applied to the issues or yearly rents and profits of lands. Stat. West. 2. c. 45. See title Issues.

EXLEGALITUS, He who is prosecuted as an outlaw. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 38.

EX MERO MOTU, Words used in the King's charters and letters patent, to signify that he grants them of his own will and mere motion, without petition or suggestion of any other: And the intent and effect of these words, is to bar all exceptions that might be taken to the charters or letters patent, by alledging that the King in granting them was abused by false suggestions. Kitch. 352. When the words ex mero motu are made use of in any charter, they shall be taken most strongly against the King. 1 Co. Rep. 451.

EX OFFICIO. The power a person has by virtue of an office, to do certain acts, without being applied to: as a justice of peace may not only grant surety of the peace, at the complaint or request of any person, but he may demand and take it ex officio, at discretion. Sc. Dal. 270.

EX OFFICIO INFORMATIONS. Informations at the suit of the King, filed by the Attorney-General, as by virtue of his office; without applying to the court wherein filed, for leave, or giving the defendant any opportunity of shewing cause why it should not be filed. See title Information.

EXONERATIONE SECTÆ, A writ that lay for the King's ward, to be free from all suit to the county-court, hundred court, leet, &c. during wardship. F. N. B. 158.

EXONERATIONE SECTÆ AD CURIAM BARON'. A writ of the same nature, sued by the guardian of the King's ward, and directed to the sheriff or stewards of the court, that they do not distrain him, &c. for not doing suit of court. New Nat. Br. 352. And if the sheriff distrain tenants in ancient demesne to come to the sheriff's torn or leet, they may have a writ commanding the sheriff to forbear, &c. Ibid. 359. Likewise if a man have lands in divers places in the county, and he is constrained to come to the leet where he is not dwelling, when he resides within the precinct of any other leet, &c. then he shall have this writ to the sheriff to discharge him from coming to any other court-leet than in the hundred where he dwelleth. Ibid. 357.

By the common law, persons shall not be distrained to come to court leets, for the lands belonging to their churches; and if they be, they may have the writ exoneracione sectæ, &c. F. N. B. 394. So shall a woman holding land in dower, if she is distrained to do suit of court for such land; when the heir has lands sufficient in the same county. Ibid.

EX PARTE, Of the one part; as a commission in Chancery ex parte, is that which is taken out and executed by one side or party only, on the other party's neglecting or refusing to join: When both plaintiff and defendant proceed, it is a joint commission.

EX PARTE TALIS, Is a writ that lies for a bailiff or receiver, who having auditors assigned to take his account, cannot obtain of them reasonable allowance, but is cast into prison. And the course in this case is to sue this writ out of the Chancery, directed to the sheriff to take four mainpernors to bring his body before the barons of the Exchequer at a certain day, and to warn the lord to appear at the same time. F. N. B. 129.

EXPECTANT, Having relation to or depending upon; and this word is used in the law with fee, as fee-expectant.

EXPECTANCY, Estates in; are of two sorts; one created by act of the parties, called a remainder; the other by act of law, called a reversion. See titles, Estate; Remainder; Reversion; Executory Devise.

EXPEDITATE, Expeditare. In the laws of the forest, signifies to cut out the ball of the dog's fore-feet, for the preservation of the King's game: But the ball of the foot of a mastiff is not to be taken out, but the three claws of the fore-foot on the right side are to be cut off by the skin. Crompt. Jurisd. 152: Manwood, cap. 16. This relates to every man's dog who lives near the forest; and was formerly done once in every three years: and if any person keeps a great dog not expeditated, he forfeits to the King 3s. 4d. 4 Inft. 308. See title Forest.

EXPEDITATÆ ARBORES, Trees rooted up or cut down to the roots.—Fleta, lib. 2. c. 41.

EXPENDITORS, Persons appointed by commissioners of sewers to pay, disburse, or expend the money collected by the tax for the repairs of sewers, &c. when paid into their hands by the collectors, on the reparations, amendments and reformations ordered by the commissioners, for which they are to render accounts when thereunto required. Laws of Sewers 87, 88. See title Sewers. The steward who supervises the repair of the banks and water-courses in Rodney Marsh, is called the Expenditor.

EXPENSÆ LITIS, Costs of suit, allowed a plaintiff or defendant, recovering in his action. See title Costs.

EXPENSIS MILITUM NON LEVANDIS, &c. An ancient writ to prohibit the sheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the shire, upon those that hold lands in ancient demesne. Reg. Orig. 261. For there was also a writ de expensis militum levandis, for levying expences for knights of the parliament, &c. Reg. Orig. 191. See title Parliament.

EXPLEES, The rents or profits of an estate, &c. See Esplees.

EXPLORATOR, A scout; also a huntsman, or hafer.

EXPORTATION,

EXPORTATION, The shipping or carrying out the native commodities of England for other countries; mentioned in the statutes relating to the Customs. See this Dist. title Navigation Act.

EXPOSITION OF DEEDS, shall be favourable, according to the apparent intent; and be reasonable and equal. Sc. Ca. lib. 313. See title Deed.

EX POST FACTO, Is a term used in the law, signifying something done after another thing that was committed before. And an act done, or estate granted, may be made good by matter ex post facto, that was not so at first, by election, &c. As sometimes a thing well done at first, may afterwards become ill. 5 Rep. 22: 8 Rep. 146. See title Statute.

To EXTEND, Extenders.] To value the lands or tenements of one bound by a statute, who hath forfeited his bond, at such an indifferent rate, as by the yearly rent the creditor may in time be paid his debt. F. N. B. See the next article.

EXTENDI FACIAS, or EXTENT, Extenta.] A writ of execution, or commission to the sheriff for the valuing of lands or tenements; and sometimes the act of the sheriff or other commissioner upon this writ. Bro. 313. See this Dist. title Execution. This term is also used for the estimate or valuation of lands, which when made to the utmost value, is said to be the full extent; whence come our extended rents, or rack rents.

If one bound to the King by specialty, or to others by statute, recognizance, &c. hath forfeited it; so that by the yearly rent of the debtor's lands, the creditor is to be paid his debt; upon this the creditor may sue a writ to the sheriff out of the Chancery to deliver him the lands and goods to the value of the debt, which is termed a liberate. F. N. B. 131. This is after the extent directed to the sheriff to seize and value the lands, &c. of the debtor, to the utmost extent. 4 Rep. 67.

Lands and goods are to be appraised and extended by the inquest of twelve men, and then delivered to the creditor, in order to the satisfaction of his debt: every extent ought to be by inquisition and verdict, by the Stat. Westm. 2. And the sheriff cannot execute the writ without an inquisition. Cro. Jac. 569.

The body of the cognisor, and all lands and tenements that were his at the time of the statute, &c. entered into, or afterwards, into whose hands soever they come, are liable to the extent. 2 Inst. 396. But copyhold lands are chargeable only during the life of the cognisor; and may not be extended by elegit, so as to admit a stranger to have interest in the lands held by copy, without the admittance of the lord. Lands in ancient demesne, annuities, rents, &c. are extendible. 1 Rol. Abr. 88. Two parts of an entire rent may be delivered upon an extent by the sheriff. Cro. Eliz. 742. But if the cognisor of a statute have a rent-charge, and before the extent he purchase parcel of the land; the rent is gone, and shall not be in execution: 'Tis otherwise if he purchases after extent of the rent. Dyer 206. A reversion of lands, &c. may not be extended; but a plaintiff had judgment for his debt and damages de reversione cum acciderit, and a special elegit to extend the moiety, &c. 2 Sid. 86: Dyer 373.

An advowson in gross is not extendible on elegit, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 18. An office of fruit cannot be extended, because 'tis not assignable; and nothing shall be extended, but what may be assigned over. Dyer 7. Though an office is extendible in equity. Chanc. Rep. 49. Goods and chattels, as leases for years, cattle, &c. in the cognisor's own hands, and not sold for valuable consideration, are subject to the extent. As the lands are to be delivered to the party at a reasonable yearly value, so the goods shall be delivered in extent at a price that is reasonable: And on a seire facias ad computand' the cognissee is to account according to the extended value; not the real value of the land. Hard. 136. If the extenders appraise and value the lands too high, the cognissee at the return of the writ may pray that they may take and retain the lands at the rate appraised; and then 'tis said he may have execution against their lands for the debt; but this may not be on elegit. Cro. Jac. 12. It has been adjudged, that at the return of the writ the cognissee may refuse the lands, &c. extended, if over valued. Cro. Car. 148.

Where lands are extended at under-value, and delivered in execution, the cognissee hath an interest in the land, which cannot be diverted by finding of surplusage. Cro. Eliz. 266: Cro. Jac. 85. The cognisor cannot enter upon the cognissee, when satisfaction is received for the debt, but is put to his seire facias on an extent: Though on an elegit, the defendant may enter because the land is only awarded, till the debt, which is certain, is satisfied; whereas on extent, the land is to be held until the debt, damages and costs, &c. are satisfied: And the cognissee being in by matter of record, shall not be put out but by matter of record, viz. a seire facias brought against him. 4 Rep. 67: March's Rep. 207, 208. See qu. Where is the difference? Is not the tenant by elegit in by matter of record?

After an extent returned, a liberate shall go to the sheriff, reciting the extendi facias and return, and commanding that he deliver the goods and lands to the cognissee (under a statute-staple, &c.) si per extensum et pretium illa mere voluit. F. N. B. 131: Lutw. 432.

The cognissee hath no absolute property in lands by the extent, till the delivery upon the liberate; but notwithstanding, by the very extent they are in custodia legis for his benefit. Cro. Car. 106, 148. No actual seisin can be on an extent, and a cognissee of a statute staple, &c. cannot bring ejectment before the liberate; nor can the sheriff upon the liberate turn the tenant out of possession, as he may upon a hab. fac. possessionem. 1 Vent. 41. Where there is an extent upon a statute, and a liberate thereupon, but not returned, yet it is good; though regularly, when inquisitions are taken, the writ ought to be returned. 4 Rep. 67: 1 Lill. Abr. 592. The sheriff may be charged to make a return of his writ, if he put the cognissee in possession of part only; and so the cognissee may have possession of the whole. 2 Nelf. Abr. 774. But it is said if a person suing out an extent, die before the return of a writ, the sheriff may not proceed in his inquisition, &c. afterwards; for there must be a prosecution de novo.

After a full and perfect execution had by extent, returned, and of record, there shall never be any re-extent upon an eviction: But by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 5, if lands delivered in execution on a judgment, statute or recognizance shall be evicted, without fraud, or default of the tenant, who holds them in execution, before the debt and damages are wholly levied, the recoveror or corusee may have a scire facias against the person on whom the execution was first subd, his heirs, executors or assigns, of lands then liable, returnable in the same Court, 40 days after the teste; and if the defendant makes default, or shews not cause, the Chancellor or Justices of the court where the scire facias is returned shall make a new writ of the like nature of the former execution for levying the residue of the debt. Co. Lit. 290.

If lands be extended upon a mistake, &c. a re-extent may be had; see Dyer 299. If part of the lands is evicted, the cognisee is to hold over the residue of the land till the debt is satisfied. 4 Rep. 65. When lands are delivered in extent, it is as if the cognisee had taken a lease thereof for years, until the debt is satisfied; and he shall never afterwards take out a new execution: the cognisee having accepted the land upon the liberate, the law presumes the debt to be satisfied. 1 Lutw. 229. An extent was filed, and though it was discovered that lands were omitted, the court would not grant a re-extent. Sib. 356. By Stat. 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 5, (made perpetual by Stat. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 2;) when any judgment, statute or recognizance shall be extended (within twenty years after such judgment, &c. had,) the same shall not be avoided or delayed by occasion that any part of the lands extendible are omitted out of such extent: saving to the parties whose lands shall be extended, their remedy for contribution against those whose lands are omitted; except heirs within age.

Where a scire facias issues, and is delivered to the sheriff to be executed, the property of the goods is vested by the delivery, and an extent afterwards for the King comes too late. Comb. 123; See also 2 Black. Rep. 1294: Doug. 415, 597. See title this Dict. Execution.

EXTINGUISHMENT; from Lat. Extinguo.] The Extinction or annihilation of a right, estate, &c; by means of its being merged in, or consolidated with, another, generally a greater or more extensive, right or estate. Wherever a right, title, or interest is destroyed, or taken away by the act of God, operation of law, or act of the party, this in many books is called an Extinguishment. Co. Lit. 147, b: 1 Ro. Ab. 933.

This Extinguishment is of various natures, as applied to various rights; viz. Estates, Commons, Copyholds, Debts, Liberties, Services, and Ways: See more at large under those titles; what follows will give some general information on the subject.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF ESTATES. If a man hath a yearly rent out of lands, and afterwards purchases the lands whereout it ariseth, so that he hath as good an estate in the land as in the rent; now both the property and rent are consolidated or united in one possessor; and therefore the rent is said to be extinguished. Also where a person has a lease for years, and afterwards buys the property; this is a consolidation of the property and fruits, and is an extinguishment of the lease: But if a man have an estate in land but for life or years, and hath a higher estate, as a fee simple, in the rent; the rent is not extinguished, but in suspense for a time; for after the term, the rent shall revive. Terms de Ley.

Extinguishment of a rent is a destroying of the rent by purchase of the land; for no one can have a rent going out of his own land; though a person must have as high an estate in the land, as in the rent, or the rent will not be extinct. Co. Litt. 147. If a person hath a rent-charge to him and his heirs issuing out of lands, and he purchaseth any part of the land to him and his heirs, as the rent is intire and issuing out of every part of the land, the whole rent-charge is extinguished: though it is not so where one hath a rent-service, and purchaseth part of the land out of which it issues; being apportionable according to the value of the land, so that it shall only extinguish the rent for the part purchased. Lit. 221: Co. Litt. 148. And if the grantee of a rent-charge purchases parcel of the lands, and the grantor by his deed granteth that he may distrain for the rent in the residue of the land, this amounts to a new grant. Co. Lit. 147. See titles Grant; Estate.

If a man be seised of a rent-charge in fee, and grants it to another and his heirs, and the tenant attorns; the grantor is without remedy for the rent in arrear before his grant; and such arrears become as it were extinct. Vaugh. 40: 1 Lill. Abr. 594. A. B. made a lease for years of lands to another, and afterwards granted a rent-charge to C. D. who devised the said rent to the said A. B. till 100 l. should be levied; then to B. G. and died: Adjudged that by the devise to A. B. the rent was suspended, and that a personal thing once suspended by the act of the party is extinguished for ever. Dyer 140.

If tenant for life, makes a lease for years, rendering rent, and afterwards the reversion descends to the tenant for life; this is not an extinguishment of the term; but it is otherwise if he have the reversion by purchase. 1 Co. Rep. 96. A jointenant for life purchases the land in reversion, it will extinguish the estate for life for a moiety, and sever the joint-tenure. 2 Rep. 60. Lands are given to two men, and the heirs of their bodies; though they have an estate for life jointly, and several inheritances, yet the estate for life is not extinct: Contra, if it be by several conveyances; as where a lease is made to two for their lives, and after the lessor grants the reversion to them and their heirs, &c. here the life estate will be extinguished. Co. Litt. 182.

If one after his title begun to be tenant by the curtesy, make a feoffment in fee upon condition, and enter for the condition broken; the estate is extinct, so that if his wife die, he shall not be tenant by the curtesy. 1 Rep. 18. Where a man hath an estate for his own life, and for another's life at once; the estate pour autre vie will be extinguished in the estate for his own life, which is greater in law than the other. 11 Rep. 87: Dyer 11. See Bro. 409: Moor 94: 2 Nelf. Ab. 821.

When the freehold cometh to the term, the estate for years is extinct. 2 Nelf. Ab. 820. Where the remainder of a term is granted over to another, if the party in possession purchase the fee-simple, though by this means his interest is extinguished; yet that shall not defeat the reversionary interest. 10 Rep. 52: 2 Nelf. 820.

A fine, &c. of lands, will extinguish a term: and by purchase of an estate in fee-simple, an estate-tail in land is extinct. 9 Rep. 139. But if a fee-simple and fee-tail meet together by descent, the estate-tail will not be extinguished. 3 Rep. 61. Descent of lands to the same person who has a term, will extinguish the term. Moor 286.

When a lessor enters tortiously upon the lessee against his consent, the rent is extinguished. 2 Lev. 343. But it has been adjudged, that rent is not extinct by the entry of the lessor, but only suspended; and revives by the lessee's re-entry. Dyer 361. An infant has a rent, and purchases purchase the land out of which it is issuing; by this the rent will be suspended, but not extinct. Bro. Extinguish. A man lessee for years takes a wife, or woman lessee a husband, that hath the reversion after the lease; here the term is not extinguished. 12 Rep. 81. See title Baron and Feme.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COMMON. By purchasing lands wherein a person hath common appendant, the common is extinguished. Cro. Eliz. 594. A commoner releases his common in one acre, it is an extinguishment of the whole common. Show. Rep. 350. And where a person hath common of vicinage, if he incloses any part of the land, all the common is extinct. 1 Brownl. 174.

But if one hath common appendant in a great waste, belonging to his tenant, and the lord improve part of the waste leaving sufficient; if he after make a feoffment to the commoner of the land improved, this will be no extinguishment. Dyer 339; Hub. 172. A commoner aliens part of his land, to which the common doth belong; the common is not extinct, but shall be divided. 2 Shep. Abr. 152. See title Common.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COPYHOLD. It is laid down as a general rule, that any act of the copyholder's, which denotes his intention to hold no longer of his lord, and amounts to a determination of his will, is an extinguishment of his copyhold. Hutt. 81; Cro. Eliz. 21; 1 Jon. 41.

As if a copyholder in fee accepts a lease for years of the same land from the lord, this determines his copyhold estate; or if the lord leases the copyhold to another, and the copyholder accepts an assignment from the lessee, his copyhold is extinct. Moon 184; 2 Co. 168; Godb. 11, 101.

So if a copyholder bargains and sells his copyhold to the lessee for years of the manor, his copyhold is thereby extinguished; or if he joins with his lord in a feoffment of the manor, his copyhold is thereby extinct, for these are acts which denote his intention to hold no longer by copy. Hutt. 65; 1 Jon. 41. S. C.; Godb. 11.

So if a copyholder accepts to hold of his lord, by bill under the lord's hand, this determines his copyhold; so if he accepts an estate for life by parol, if with livery, this is an extinguishment; otherwise not; for without livery nothing but an estate at will passes, which cannot merge or extinguish an estate at will. 1 And. 199; Latch. 213.

If one seised of a manor in right of his wife lets lands by indenture for years, this doth not destroy the custom as to the wife; for after the death of her husband she may demise it again by copy. Cro. Eliz. 459.

So if a copyhold is in the hands of a subject, who after becomes King, the copyhold is extinct, for it is below the Majesty of a King to perform such servile services; yet after his decease the next that hath right shall be admitted, and the tenure revived. 2 Sid. 88; 4 Co. 24; Cro. Eliz. 252. See 2 Leon. 208; 4 Co. 26 b; Cro. Eliz. 103. And a copyhold estate is extinct whenever it becomes not demisable by copy. Coke's Copyholder. 62. See further title Copyhold.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF DEBT. If some sole debtor take the debtor to husband; or there be two joint obligors in a bond, and the obligee marries one of them; or in case a person is bound to a feme sole and another, and she takes the obligor to husband; in these cases, the debt will be extinguished. 8 Rep. 136. And if a debtor makes the debtor his executor, or him and another executor, and they take the executorship upon them; or if the debtor makes his debtor executor, &c. it is an extinguishment of the debt, and it shall never revive. Plowd. 184. 1 Sid. 304. But where a debtor or debtor executor legally refuseth; or he and others being made executors they all refuse, then the debt is revived again. P'trad. 185. See titles Baron and Feme: Executor.

It is agreed as a general rule, that a creditor's accepting a higher security than he had before, is an extinguishment of the first debt; as if a creditor by simple contract accepts an obligation, this extinguishes the simple contract debt. 1 Rel. Abr. 470; 471, 604; 6 Co. 44.

So if a man accepts a bond for a legacy, he cannot after sue for his legacy in the spiritual court; for by the deed the legacy is extinct, and it is become a mere debt at Common-law. Yelv. 38.

So if a bond-creditor obtains judgment on the bond, or has judgment acknowledged to him, he cannot afterwards bring an action on the bond; for the debt is drowned in the judgment, which is a security of a higher nature than the bond. 6 Co. 44 b.

But these cases must be understood where the debtor himself enters into these securities; and therefore if a stranger give bond for a simple contract due by another, this does not extinguish the simple contract debt; but if upon making the contract, a stranger gives bond for it, or, being present, promises to give bond for it, and after does so, the debt by simple contract is extinguished, the obligation being made upon, or pursuant to the contract. 2 Leon. 110.

But the accepting a security of an inferior nature is by no means an extinguishment of the first debt; as if a bond be given in satisfaction of a judgment. Cro. Jac. 579; 2 Brownl. 29; Cro. Jac. 649, 650.

Also the accepting a security of equal degree is no extinguishment of the first debt; as where an obligee has a second bond given to him; for one deed cannot determine the duty upon another. Cro. Eliz. 304, 716, 727; 1 Brownl. 74; Lit. Rep. 58; Cro. Car. 86.

Though a bond is taken for a simple contract debt, yet if it is after an act of bankruptcy, the simple contract is not extinguished. Stam. 1042.

By a release of part of a debt due on bond, the whole is gone, and the obligation extinguished. Bio. Contract. 80; 1 And. 235.—See further titles Acceptance: Bond.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF LIBERTIES. Liberties and franchises granted by the King, may sometimes be extinguished, and sometimes not. Moon 474. When the King grants any privileges, liberties or franchises, which were in his own hands, as parcel of the flowers of the crown, such as bona felonum, fugitivorum & utilitatorum, waifs, strays, deodand, wreck on the sea, &c. if they come to the crown again, they are drowned and extinct in the crown, and the King is seised of them jure coronæ: but if liberties of fairs, markets or other franchises, and jurisdictions, be erected and created by the King, they will not be extinguished, nor their appendances levered from the possessions. 9 Rep. 25. A man has liberties by prescription, if he takes letters patent of them, the prescription will be gone and extinct; for things of a higher determine those of a lower nature. 2 H. 7. 5. See title King.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF SERVICES. The lord purchases or accepts parcel of the tenancy, out of which an intire service is to be paid or done; by this the whole service will be extinct: but if the service be pro bono publico, then no part of it shall be extinguished; and homage and fealty are not subject to extinguishment, by the lord's purchasing part of the land. 6 Rep. 1, 105: Co. Lit. 149. If the lord and another person do purchase the lands, whereout he is to have services, they are extinct: also by severance of the services, a manor may be extinguished. Co. Lit. 147: 1 And. 257. See title Tenure.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF WAYS. If a man hath a highway as appendant, and after purchases the land wherein this way is, the way is extinct. Terms de Ley. Though a way of necessity to market, or church, or to arable land, &c. is not extinguished by purchase of ground, or unity of possession. 11 H. 7. 25: Co. Litt. 155. See title Way.

EXTIRPATIONE. A judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lies against a person who when a verdict is found against him for land, &c. doth maliciously overthrow any house, or extirpate any trees upon it. Reg. Jud. 13, 56.

EXTOCARE. To grub up lands, and reduce them to arable or meadow. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 71.

EXTORTION, extorsio, from extorqueo, to wrest away.] In a large sense, any oppression under colour of right; It is usually applied to that abuse of publick justice which consists in the unlawful taking by an officer, &c. by colour of his office, of any money, or valuable thing, from a person where none at all is due, or not so much is due, or before it is due. Co. Lit. 368: 10 Rep. 102. See title Bribery; Fees.

The distinction between bribery and extortion seems to be this. The former offence consists in the offering a present or receiving one if offered; the latter, in demanding a fee or present, by colour of office.

At the Common law, which was affirmed by the statute of Westm. 1. c. 26, it was extortion for any minister of the King, whose office did any way concern the administration and execution of justice, or the common good of the subject, to take any reward for doing his office, except what he received from the King: though reasonable fees for the labour and attendance of officers of the courts of justice are not restrained by statute, which are stated and settled by the respective courts; and it has been thought expedient to allow these officers to take certain immediate fees in many cases. 2 Inst. 209: 3 Inst. 149: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 68.

The taking of money by virtue of an office, implies the act to be lawful; but to take any money by colour of an office, implies an ill action: and the taking being for expedition of business, is judged by colour of the office, and unlawful. 2 Inst. 206: Co. Lit. 368.

Yet according to some it seems that an officer, who takes a reward which is voluntarily given to him, and which has been usual in certain cases, for the more diligent or expeditious performance of his duty, cannot be said to be guilty of extortion; for without such a premium it would be impossible in many cases to have the laws executed with vigour and success. 2 Inst. 210: 3 Inst. 149: Co. Lit. 368.

But it has been always held, that a promise to pay an officer money for the doing of a thing, which the law will not suffer him to take any thing for, is merely void, however freely and voluntarily it may appear to have been made. 1 Rel. Abr. 16: 1 Rel. Rep. 313: Noy 76: 1 Jon. 65: Cro. Eliz. 654: Moor 468: Cro. Jac. 109.

It is extortion to oblige an executor to prove a will in the bishop's court, and to take fees thereon, knowing the same to have been proved in the Prerogative Court. Str. 73.—Or in a sheriff's officer to admit a prisoner to bail, upon an agreement to receive a certain sum when the prisoner should pay to a third person another sum of money. 2 Burr. 924.—To arrest a man in order to obtain a release from him, 8 Mod. 189.—In a gaoler to obtain money from his prisoner by any colourable means. 8 Mod. 226: Stra. 575.—Or in a church-warden colore officii. 1 Sid. 307.—In a miller, if he takes more toll than is due by custom. Ld. Raym. 159. Or a commissary for absolution. 3 Leon. 268.—Or a ferry-man more for his ferry. 4 Mod. 101.—Or to seize upon the place where a fair is held, and by building stalls to force an exorbitant price for them. Ld. Raym. 150.—Or in an under-sheriff to refuse to execute process till his fees are paid. Salk. 330.—Or to take a bond for his fee before execution is sued out, Hut. 53. Or for a coroner to refuse his view until his fees be paid. 3 Inst. 149.

Extortion, by the Common law is severely punished, on indictment, by fine and imprisonment, and removal of officers from the offices wherein committed. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 68. By the Stat. 3 Ed. 1, Inferior officers of justice, &c. guilty of extortion, are to render, by c. 26, double, and by c. 30, treble value; and there are divers other statutes for punishing extortions of sheriffs, bailiffs, gaolers, clerks of the assize, and of the peace, attornies and solicitors, &c. See Stat. 23 H. 6. cc. 7; 9. See title Sheriff. 33 Hen. 8. c. 24: 29 Eliz. c. 4: 1 Jac. 1. c. 10: 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 41: 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23: 3 Geo. 1. c. 15: 17 Geo. 3. c. 26. § 6. As to the extortion of officers of the customs, distraining merchants for undue charges, &c. See Stat. 28 H. 6. c. 5; and this Dict. title Customs.

In cases of extortion, there must be a positive charge and that the person charged with it took so much extorsio or colore officii; which words are as essential as proditio or felonia for treason or felony. 2 Salk. 680.

Officers may be jointly indicted of extortion as they may be jointly guilty of the offence. 1 Salk. 382.

The place, where the extortion was committed, should be set down in the declaration. See Pl. C. c. 200. The sum certain extorted must be particularly set forth, and he cannot say, that the defendant did extort divers sums from divers men generally. Godb. 438. pl. 583. Mich. 4 Car.

The indictment, (which may be brought at the Sessions Str. 73.) or information, must state the fact particularly. 3 Leon. 268: 25 E. 3. §. 3. c. 9: 11 Mod. 80. It must also specify the time when the offence was committed. 4 Mod. 101, 3. But although it be omitted to be stated for what the thing extorted was taken, it is good after verdict. Sid. 91. And in general the Court of K. B. will oblige the party to demur to a defective indictment for extortion. 5 Mod. 13. And whatever may be the sum, if there is proof only of a shilling taken, the defendant is guilty: for the taking is the offence and not the contract. Ld. Raym. 149. And he also who assists is equally guilty, for there are no accessaries in extortion. Str. 73.

Against.

EXT

Against attorneys for extortion, action may be brought, and the party grieved shall have treble damages and costs; but information will not lie on the Stat. 3 Jac. 1 cap. 7, Sid. 434: 2 Nels 822.

If an officer by terrifying another in his office, take more than his ordinary fees or duties he is guilty of extortion which may be compared to unlawful usury, &c. And Crompton says, that wrong done by any man is a trespass, but excessive wrong is properly extortion. Crompt. Just. 8. And extortion has been deemed more odious than robbery, because it carries an appearance of truth; and is often accompanied with perjury in officers, &c. by breaking their oaths of office.

EXTRACTA CURIÆ. The issues or profits of holding a court arising from the customary fees, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 572.

EXTRACTS of writings or records, being notes thereof. See title Egrents.

EYR

EXTRAJUDICIAL. Is when judgment is had in a cause, not depending in that court where given; or wherein the judge has not jurisdiction.

EXTRAPAROCIAL. Out of any parish; any thing privileged and exempt from the duties of a parish.—See this Dict. title Poor.

EXTRAVAGANTS. Certain constitutions of the Popes, so called, because extra corpus canonicum Gratiani, five extra decretorum libros vagantur. Du Cange.

EXTUMÆ. Reliques in churches and tombs.—Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS.

EXUPERARE. To overcome; sometimes it signifies to apprehend or take, as, exuperare vivum vel mortuum Leg. Edm. c. 2.

EY, Insula, an island.] where the names of places end in ey, it denotes them an island. As Ramsay, is the island of Rams; Sheppy, the island of Sheep; Wetsey, the island of Harts, &c.

EYERY of hawks. See title Aerie.

EYRE. Vide Eire, and Justices in Eyre.

FAB

F Is a letter wherewith felons, &c. are branded and marked with an hot iron, on their being admitted to the benefit of clergy. See this Dict. title Clergy.

FABRICK LANDS, Are lands given towards the rebuilding or repairing of cathedral and other churches; for in ancient times, almost every person gave by his will more or less, to the fabrick of the cathedral or parish church where he lived; and lands thus given were called fabrick lands, being ad fabricam episcopalem: these lands are mentioned in the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 8.

FACTA ARMORUM, Feats of arms, jousts, tournaments, &c. Hist. Joh. Bromton, in R. 1. p. 1261.

FACIO, In fact; as where any thing is actually done, &c. See De facto.

FACTOR, The agent of a merchant abroad, residing in this country; or é contra.—A factor is authorized by a letter of Attorney, with a salary or allowance for his care. He must pursue his commission strictly; and the same person may be factor for many different merchants. Mak. 21.

If the principal give the factor a general commission to act for the best, he may do for him as he thinks fit; but otherwise he may not. Though in commissions at this time, it is common to give the factor power in express words, to dispose of the merchandize, and deal therein as if it were his own; by which the factor's actions will be executed, though they occasion loss to his principal. Lex Mercat. lib. 81: Stat. 1178.

Goods remitted to a factor ought to be carefully preserved; and he is accountable for all lawful goods which shall come to his hands, yet if the factor buy goods for his principal, and they receive damage after in his possession, through negligence of his, the principal shall bear the loss, and if a factor be robbed, he shall be discharged in account brought against him by his principal. 4 R. 1. 83. See title Bailment.

If the factor has orders from his principal not to sell any goods but in such a manner, and breaks those orders, he is liable to the loss or damage that shall be received thereby: and where any goods are brought or exchanged without orders, it is at the merchant's choice whether he will accept of them, or turn them over his factor's hands. When a factor has bought, or sold goods pursuant to orders, he is immediately to give a bill of it to his principal; but the bills and orders must be certified before the time of the buying or selling, whereby his reputation might possibly suffer; and when a factor has made a considerable profit for his principal, he must take due care in the disposition of the same; for without commission or particular orders, he is answerable. A factor shall suffer for not observing orders; and not for acting for another man's account in merchandise, especially receding from the orders of his principal, though there may be a probability of advantage by it: if he make any composition with creditors without orders, he shall answer it to his principal. Lex Mercatoria.

Factors ought to observe the contents of all letters from their principals, or written to them by their order. A merchant is answerable in action upon the case for the deceits of his factor, in selling goods abroad: and as somebody must be a loser by such deceit, it is more reasonable that he who employs, and puts confidence in the deceiver, should lose, than a stranger. 1 Salk. 289.

Factors are liable to the statutes concerning bankrupts. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30, § 39. See title Bankrupt. Factor not to buy cattle on his own account. Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 40. § 11. See title Cattle.

A bare commission to a factor to sell and dispose of merchandize, is not sufficient power for the factor to entrust any person, or to give a further day of payment than the day of the sale of the goods; for in this case, on the delivery of the one he ought to receive the other: and by the general power of doing as if it were his own, he may not trust an unreasonable time, viz. beyond one or three months, &c. the usual time allowed for the commodities disposed of; if he doth, he shall be answerable to his principal out of his own estate. 1 Bull. 102: But in 2 C. C. 57, it is said that by his general commission a factor has authority to sell upon credit.

If a factor buys goods on account of his principal, where he is used so to do, the contract of the factor shall oblige the principal to a performance of the bargain; and the principal is the proper person to be prosecuted, on non performance: but if the factor enters into a charter-party of freightment with a master of a ship, the contract obliges him only; unless he lades aboard generally his principal's goods, then both the principal and lading become liable for the freight and not the factor. Golish. 137.

It is a general rule that where a factor, who is authorized to sell goods in his own name, makes the buyer debtor to himself, though he is not answerable to his principal for the debt, if the money be not paid; yet he has a right to receive it, if it be paid, and his receipt is a discharge to the buyer. The factor may compel such payment by action, and the buyer cannot defend himself by saying that the principal was indebted to him more than the amount. Co. op. 255, 6. Where goods are sold by a factor at his own risk, for which he has an additional allowance, the vendee is not answerable to the owner. Strat. 1182. See De Credit.

Though a factor has power to sell, and thereby bind his principal, yet he cannot bind or affect the property of the goods by pledging them as a security for his own debt, though there is the formality of a bill of parcels and a receipt. Strat. 1178.

If a

FACTOR.

If a factor sells goods as his own, by indorsement of the bill of lading, though no delivery is made, the goods being at sea, the vendee shall keep possession unless fraud appears between him and the factor. 4 Burr. 2046: 1 Blac Rep. 629. See post, the last paragraph of this article.

It hath been held in Equity, that if one employs a factor, and entrusts him with the disposal of merchandize, and the factor receives the money, and dies indebted in debts of a higher nature, and it appears by evidence, that this money was vested in other goods, and remains unpaid, those goods shall be taken as part of the merchant's estate, and not the factor's; but if the factor have the money, it shall be looked upon as the factor's estate, and must first answer the debts of superior creditors, &c. for as money has no ear mark, Equity cannot follow that in behalf of him who employed the factor. 1 Salk. 160.

If a person doth employ a factor to sell goods, who sells them on credit, and before the money is paid dies indebted, more than his assets will pay; this money shall be paid to the principal merchant, and not to the factor's administrator, but thereout must be deducted what was due for commission: for a factor is in nature only of a trustee for his principal. 2 Vern. 638.

Bills remitted to a factor or banker, while unpaid, are in the nature of goods unsold, and if the factor become bankrupt, must be returned to the principal, subject to such lien as the factor may have thereon. 2 Blac Rep. 1154.

A factor has a Lien on goods consigned to him, not only for incident charges, but as an item of mutual account, for the general balance due to him, so long as he retains the possession, if he parts with the possession, he parts with his lien. See 1 Burr. 489: 1 Blac Rep. 104. If he be surety in a bond for his principal, he has a lien on the price of the goods sold by him for his principal to the amount of the sum he is bound for. Cowp. 251. A dyer, merely as a manufacturer has not a general lien; but a packer being in the nature of a factor has. 4 Burr. 2214.

A factor has no lien on goods for a general balance, unless they come into his actual possession: and if in consideration of goods being consigned to him he accept bills drawn by the consignor, and pay part of the freight, and become insolvent before the bills are due, and before the goods get into his actual possession; the consignor may stop them in transitu. 1 Term Rep. 119. If a factor accept bills drawn by his principal upon the faith of consignments agreed to be made by the principal to the factor, and both of them become bankrupts before a cargo consigned come into possession of the factor; the factor's assignees have no property in such cargo, and cannot recover the produce of it, against the assignees of the principal, if the latter have sold it, and received the purchase money. 1 Term Rep. 783. See 4 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 47.

The consignor may stop goods in transitu before they get into the hands of the consignee, in case of the insolvency of the consignor; but if the consignee assign the bills of lading to a third person for a valuable consideration, the right of the consignor as against such assignee is divested. There is no distinction between a bill of lading indorsed in blank, and an indorsement to a particular person. 4 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 57. See 2 Term Rep. 63: 1 H. Blac. R. p. 357: And further as to stopping goods in transitu 2 Term Rep. 674: 3 Term Rep. 465.—See further this Dist. title Merchant.

VOL. I.

FAI

FACTORAGE, Is the wages or allowance paid and made to a factor by the merchant. The gain of factorage is certain, however the success proves to the merchant; but the commissions and allowances vary according to the customs and distance of the country, in the several places where factors are resident: Lex Mercat. See title Factor.

FACTUM, a man's own act and deed; fact or feat; particularly used in the civil law for any thing stated and made certain. See Fait.

FACULTY, facultas.] As restrained from the original and active sense, to a particular understanding in law, is used for a privilege granted to a man by favour and indulgence, to do that which by law he ought not to do. And for the granting of these, there is an especial court under the Archbishop of Canterbury, called the Court of the Faculties; and the chief officer thereof the Master of the Faculties; who has power by the Stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 21, to grant dispensations; as to marry persons without the bans first asked, (and every diocesan may make the like grants) to ordain a deacon under age, for a son to succeed the father in his benefice, one to have two, or more benefices incompatible, &c. And in this court are registered the certificates of bishops and noblemen granted to their chaplains, to qualify them for pluralities and non-residence. 4 Inst. 337. See title Chaplain.

FASTING MEN, In Men. Angl. tom. 1. pag. 100, are rendered to signify vassals: but Cowell thinks they rather mean pledges or bondsmen; which, by the custom of the Saxons, were fast bound to answer for one another's peaceable behaviour. See Fasting-men.

FAG, A knot or excrescency in cloth; and in this sense it is used in the statute 4 Ed. 4. cap. 1. The fag-end, signifies that end of a piece of cloth or linen, where the weaver ends his piece, and works up the worst part of his materials.

FAGGOT, A badge wore in the times of papery, by persons who had recanted and abjured what was then adjudged to be heresy: those were condemned not only to the penance of carrying a faggot, as an emblem of what they had merited, to such an appointed place of solemnity; but, for a more durable mark of infamy, they were to have the sign of a faggot embroidered on the sleeve of their upper garment: and if this badge or faggot was at any time left off, it was often alledged as the sign of apostasy.

FAIDA, Malice or deadly feud. Leg. H. 1. c. 82.

FAILURE or RECORD, Is when an action is brought against a man, who alledges in his plea matter of record in bar of the action, and avers to prove it by the record; but the plaintiff saith, Nul tiel record, viz. denies there is any such record: upon which, the defendant hath day given him by the court to bring it in; and if he fails to do it, then he is said to fail of his record, and the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover. Terms de Ley. In debt upon an escape, the plaintiff declared, that he had obtained a judgment in an inferior court, upon which the defendant was taken, and the sheriff suffered him to escape; the defendant pleaded Nul tiel record, and being at issue, the record was certified at the day; by which it appeared that there were several variances in the continuances and process; but because the plaintiff's declaration, it was held that those variances made no failure of record. Hob. 179.

3 X

In

In Formedon for the manor of Isfield, the defendant pleaded in bar a common recovery of the said manor against the donee in tail, who replied Nul tiel record, and the defendant having brought in the record, it appeared that the recovery was of the manor of Isfield; and adjudged, that this being in a common recovery, shall be no failure of record for this small variance, but shall be amended, being the misprision of the clerk. 5 Rep. 46. And where a fine with proclamations was levied, and upon an issue of Nul tiel record, on which it was brought in at the day, tho' the year of the King was left out in the proclamations made in one term, as it was expressed in the proclamations of the other two terms, they were held to be right, and the omission no failure of record. Dyer 234. If a judgment, &c. be reversed for error, Nul tiel record may be pleaded. 8 Rep. 142. And where the tenor only of a record, &c. is brought in, it is a failure of record. Dyer 187.

FAINT-ACTION. Fr. faine.] A feigned action; such that although the words of the writ are true, yet for certain causes the plaintiff hath no title to recover thereby; but a false action is properly where the words of the writ are false. Co. Litt. 361.

FAINT-PLEADER. A fraudulent, false or collusive manner of pleading to the deceit of a third person; against which, among other things, was made the Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 19.

FAIR-PLEADER. See title Beau-pleaders.

FAIR. Fr. foire, Lat. feria, nundine.] A solemn or greater sort of market, granted to any town by privilege, for the more speedy and commodious providing of such things as the subject needeth; and the utterance of what commodities we abound in above our own uses and occasions: and both our English and the French word seems to come from feriae [festivals]; because it is incident to a fair that persons shall be privileged from being molested or arresed in it, for any other debt, or contract than what was contracted in the same, or at least was promised to be paid there. See Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2, made perpetual by 1 R. 3. c. 6: and this Dict. title Courts of Pie-powders. See also Stats. 2 E. 3. c. 15; 5 E. 3. c. 5; 27 H. 6. c. 5; 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 7; 18 Eliz. c. 21.

I. The Right to a Fair, and the Manner of holding it.

II. The Duty, Power, and Interest of the Owners of Fairs.—How far a Sale in a Fair changes the Property of a Thing therein sold, See this Dict. title Market.

I. The first institution of fairs and markets seems plainly to have been for the better regulation of trade and commerce, and that merchants and traders might be furnished with such commodities as they wanted, at a particular mart, without that trouble and loss of time, which must necessarily attend travelling about from place to place; and therefore as this is a matter of universal concern to the commonwealth: so it hath always been held, that no person can claim a fair or market, unless it be by grant from the King, or by prescription, which supposes such a grant. 2 Inst. 220: 3 Mol. 123.

And therefore, if any person sets up any such fair or market, without the King's authority, a quo warranto lies against him; and the persons who frequent such fair, &c. may be punished by fine to the King. 3 Mol. 127.

Also it seems, that if the King grants a patent for holding a fair or market, without a writ of ad quod damnum executed and returned, that the same may be repealed by fine facias; for though such fairs and markets are a benefit to the commonwealth; yet too great a number of them may become nuisances to the public, as well as a detriment to those who have more ancient grants. 3 Lev. 222.

Fairs are generally kept once or twice in the year; and it has been observed, that fairs were first occasioned by the resort of people to the feast of Dedication, and therefore in most places the fairs, by old custom, are on the same day with the wake or festival of that Saint to whom the church was dedicated; and for the same reason they were kept in the church-yard, till restrained by Stat. 13 E. 1. st. 2. c. 6: 2 Inst. 221. Blount. 'The Court of Pie-powder is incident to every fair, &c. By Stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 15, fairs are not to be kept longer than they ought by the lords thereof, on pain of their being seized into the King's hands, until such lords have paid a fine for the offence; and proclamation is to be made how long fairs are to continue.—By Stat. 5 E. 3. c. 5, no merchant shall sell any goods or merchandise at a fair after the time of the fair is ended, under the penalty of forfeiting double the value of the goods sold, one fourth part thereof to the prosecutor, and the rest to the King. Any citizen of London may carry his goods or merchandise to any fair or market in England at his pleasure. See Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 9; and this Dict. title London.

It seems clearly agreed, that if a person hath a right to a fair or market, and another erects a fair or market so near his, that it becomes a nuisance to his fair, &c. that for this detriment and injury done to him, an action on the case lies; for it is implied in the King's grant, that it should be no prejudice to another. 2 Rol. Abr. 140.

Also, although the new market be held on a different day, yet an action on the case lies; for this, by forestalling the ancient market, may be a greater injury to the owner, than if held on the same day with his. 2 Saund. 172: 1 Mol. 69. See title Market.

If a man hath a fair or market, and a stranger disturbs those who are coming to buy or sell there, by which he loses his toll, or receives some prejudice in the profits arising from his fair, &c. an action on the case lies. 1 Rol. Abr. 105: 2 Vent. 26, 28. So if upon a sale in a fair a stranger disturbs the lord in taking the toll, an action upon the case lies for this. 1 Rol. Abr. 105.

The King is the sole judge where fairs and markets ought to be kept; and therefore it is said, that if he grants a market to be kept in such a place, which happens not to be convenient for the country, yet the subjects can go to no other; and if they do, the owner of the soil where they meet is liable to an action at the suit of the grantee of the market, 3 Mol. 123. But if no place be limited for keeping a fair by the King's grant, the grantees may keep it where they please, or rather where they can most conveniently; and if it be so limited, they may keep it in what part of such place they will. 3 Mol. 108.

At what time fairs are to be held, see Stat. 27 H. 6. c. 5. & 1 Car. 1. c. 1: 29 Car. 2. c. 7; and this Dict. title Holidays.

II. Owners

II. Owners and governors of fairs are to take care that every thing be sold according to just weight and measure; for that and other purposes they may appoint a clerk of the fair or market, who is to mark and allow all such weights, and for his duty herein can only take his reasonable and just fees. See 4 Inst. 271: Moo 523: 1 Salk. 327.

Fairs and markets are such franchises as may be forfeited; as if the owners of them hold them contrary to their charter, as by continuing them a longer time than the charter admits, by disuser, and by extorting fees and duties where none are due, or more than are justly due. 2 Inst. 220. Finch 164: 3 Mod 108.

As to their interest, it arises chiefly from tolls. Toll payable at a fair or market is a reasonable sum of money due to the owner of the fair or market, upon sale of things tollable within the fair or market, or for stallage, pickage, or the like. 2 Inst. 222: 2 Jon 207.

But this is not incident to a fair or market without special grant; for where it is not granted, such a fair or market is accounted a free fair or market. 2 Inst. 220: Cro. Eliz. 559.

Toll is a matter of private benefit to the owner of the fair or market, and not incident to them; therefore if the King grants a fair or market, and grants no toll, the patentee can have none, and such fair or market is counted free. Cro. Eliz. 558: 2 Inst. 220. S. P.: 2 Lutw. 1336 S. P. resolved.

Also if the King, at the time he grants a fair or market, grants a toll, and the same is outrageous and excessive, the grant of the toll is void, and the same becomes free. 2 Inst. 220: 2 Lutw. 1336. But the King, after he grants a fair or market, may grant that the patentee may have a reasonable toll; but this must be in consideration of some benefit accruing from it to those who trade and merchandise in such fair or market. 2 Inst. 221.

No toll shall be paid for any thing brought to the fair or market, before the same is sold, unless it be by custom time out of mind, and upon such sale the toll is to be paid by the buyer; and therefore my Lord Coke says, that a fair or market by prescription is better than one by grant. 2 Inst. 221.

And by stat. Westm. 1. cap. 31. "Touching them that take outrageous toll, contrary to the common custom of the realm in market towns, it is provided, that if any do so in the King's town, which is let in fee-farm, the King shall seize into his own hand the franchise of the market; and if it be another's town, and the same be done by the lord of the town, the King shall do in like manner; and if it be done by a bailiff, or any mean officer, without the commandment of his lord, he shall restore to the plaintiff as much more, for the outrageous taking, as he had of him, if he carried away his toll, and shall have forty days' imprisonment."

But where by custom a toll is due upon the sale of any goods in a fair or market, and he who ought to pay it refuses, an action on the case lies against him. 1 Roll. Ab. 103, 104, 106.

Some persons however are exempt from payment of toll, and if the King or any of his progenitors have granted to any to be discharged of toll, either generally, or specially, this grant is good to discharge him of all tolls to the King's own fairs or markets, and of the tolls, which, together with any fair or market have been granted after such grant of discharge; but cannot discharge tolls formerly due to subjects either by grant or prescription. 2 Inst. 221.

Also the King himself shall not pay toll for any of his goods; and if any be taken, it is punishable within the statute Westm. 1. cap. 31: 2 Inst. 221. So tenants in ancient demesne are free and quit from all manner of tolls in fairs and markets, whether such tenants hold in fee, or for life, years, or at will. 2 Inst. 221: 4 Inst. 269: 1 Roll. Ab. 321.

But this privilege does not extend to him who is a merchant, and is living by buying and selling, but is annexed to the person in respect of the land, and to those things which grow and are the produce of the land. F. N. B. 228: 2 Leam. 191: Cro. Eliz. 227: 2 Inst. 221: 1 Roll. Ab. 321, 2.

Owners of fairs and markets are to appoint toll-takers or book-keepers, on pain of 40 s. and they shall enter and give account of horses sold, &c. Stat. 1 Ed 2 P. M. c. 7: 31 Eliz. c. 12. See farther titles Toll: Horses: Market.

FAIT, factum.] A deed or writing, lawfully executed to bind the parties thereto. See title Deed.

FAIT ENROLLE, Fi.] A deed of bargain and sale, &c. and forging the inrollment of it is a great misdemeanor, but not forgery within the Stat. 5 Eliz. 1 Keb. 568.

FAITOURS, Fi.] In the statute 7 R. 2. cap. 5, is used for evil doers; and may be interpreted idle livers, from faitourlyse, which signifies a kind of sleepy disease, proceeding from too much sluggishness: and in the same statute it seems to be synonymous with vagabonds. Terms de Ley. See titles Poor: Vagrants.

FALANG, A jacket or close coat, Blount.

FALCATURA, One day's mowing of grass; a customary service to the lord by his inferior tenants: falcata was the grass fresh mowed, and laid in swathes; and falcator the servile tenant performing the labour. Kennet's Gloss.

FALCO, A falcon. Falconarius, a falconer; falco gentilis, a jer-falcon; Falco Sparuius, a Sparrow-Hawk — Coel.

FALDA, A sheepfold. — Rot. Chart. 6 Hon. 3.

FALDAGE, faldagium.] A privilege which several lords antiently reserved to themselves, of setting up folds for sheep in any fields within their manors, for the better manurance of the same; and this was usually done not only with their own but their tenants' sheep, which they call scilicet faldæ. This faldage is termed in some places a fold course; and in old charters faldfoea, i. e. libertas faldæ, or faldagii.

FALDÆ CURSUS, A sheep walk or feed for sheep. 2 Cent. 139.

FALDFEY, FALD FEE, A fee or rent paid by some customary tenants for liberty to fold their sheep upon their own land.

FALDISTOR, Sax.] The highest seat of a bishop, inclosed round with a letice. Coel.

FALDWORTH, A person of age, that he may be reckoned of some decennary. Du Cange.

FALERÆ, Lat. phaleræ.] The tackle and furniture of a cart or wain. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. 256.

FALESIA, A great rock, bank or hill by the sea side. Dumgill.

FALSE—

An officer hath a warrant upon a capias ad satisfaciend' against an earl, or countess, &c. who are privileged in their persons, and he arreſts them: it is ſaid action of faſſe false imprisonment will not lie against the officer, because he is not to examine the judicial act of the court, but to obey. 6 Rep. 56: 10 Rep. 75.

—IMPRISONMENT

If an arrest is made by one who is no legal officer, it is false imprisonment, for which action lies. Co. Lit. 69. An action of false imprisonment lies against a bailiff for arresting a person without warrant, though he afterwards receives a warrant: and so it is if he arrests one after the return of the writ is past; for it is then without writ. 2 Inst. 53. If a sheriff, or any of his bailiffs, arrests a man out of his county, &c. or after the sheriff is discharged of his office; or a person arrests one on a justice's warrant after his commission is determined, &c. it will be false imprisonment. Dyer 41. And if the sheriff, after he hath arrested a man lawfully, when a legal discharge comes to him, as a superseas, or the like, do not then discharge the party, he may be sued in this action. 2 R. 1. 12: Fitzb. 253.

In case the plaintiff in a suit brings an unlawful warrant to a sheriff, and shews him the defendant, requiring him to make the arrest; or if he bring a good warrant and direct the sheriff to a wrong man, &c. for this the action of false imprisonment will lie against both. Bro. Tresp. 99, 307: Faux. Imp. 19: 1 Brownl. 211. If a warrant be granted to arrest, or apprehend a person, where there are several of the name, and the bailiff or other officer arrests a wrong person, he is liable to action of false imprisonment; and he is to take notice of the right party in his peril. Dyer 244: Moor 457.

A man arrested on a Sunday may bring his action of false imprisonment; but one has been refused to be released in such a case. 5 Mod. 95. See titles Arrest: Sunday. If a bailiff demand more than his just fees, when offered him, and keep a person in custody thereupon, it is false imprisonment and punishable: and if a sheriff, or gaoler keeps a prisoner in gaol, after his acquittal, for any thing except for fees, it is unlawful imprisonment. 2 Inst. 482: Wood. 16. If a man falsely imprisons A. B. and the gaoler detains him till he pays so much money, he shall have action of false imprisonment, and taking so much money from him against such person. Mod. Caf. 179.

Unlawful or false imprisonment is sometimes called duress or imprisonment, where one is wrongfully imprisoned till he seals a bond, &c. 2 Inst. 482. See title Duress.

An imprisonment will be unlawful, and give this action, although the cause be good, when he that makes it doth the same without any colour of authority; or if he has a colour, yet if he hath no good authority, from the court, &c. or where a court or officer hath power, but do not well make it out; or when the authority is well made forth, and not rightly pursued and executed. 4 Rep. 64: 8 Rep. 67: Dyer 242. And all persons male or female, that have a hand in a wrong imprisonment, shall be sued in action of false imprisonment; and the party grieved may sue any one of them for it. Co. Lit. 57: Bro. Tresp. 113, 256.

A man under arrest, or in the stocks, &c. is said to be in prison: And in a common arrest, where lawful, the officer may make any place his prison, because the writ commands that Habeas Corpus ejus coram, &c. apud Westm. which is a general authority. 1 Salk. 401.

It is not in every case where a man is wrongfully imprisoned, that an action vi et armis, for false imprisonment will lie, but in some cases, it must be an action on the case, as where a warrant issues against a man, without legal cause, and he is, under colour of that authority, wrongfully imprisoned, as there was colour of authority, the action must be case, and not trespass vi et armis, and so in similar cases. J. M.—See title Action.

In criminal cases, where a man is falsely imprisoned, he may bring a Habeas Corpus, and upon return of the writ, setting forth the cause of the commitment, if it appears to be against law, he shall be discharged; or he may be bailed, if it be doubtful, &c. 4 Inst. 182. See titles Habeas Corpus: Imprisonment.

FALSE JUDGMENT, Falsum Judicium.] A writ that lieth where false judgment is given in the county-court, court baron, or other courts not of record. F. N. B. 17. 18. See title Error.

A judgment may be falsified, reversed or avoided without a writ of error for matters foreign to, or dehors, the record; that is, not apparent upon the face of it, so that they cannot be assigned for error in the superior court, which can only judge from what appears in the record itself; and therefore if the whole record be not certified, or not timely certified by the inferior court, the party injured thereby, in both civil and criminal cases, may allege a Diminution of the record, and cause it to be rectified. See this Dict. title Diminution. Thus if any judgment whatever be given by persons who had no good commission to proceed against the person condemned, it is void; and may be falsified by shewing the special matter without writ of error. As where a commission issues to A. and B. and twelve others or any two of them, of which A. or B. shall be one, to take and try indictments, and any of the other twelve proceed without the interposition or presence of either A. or B. in this case all proceedings, trials, convictions and judgments are void for want of a proper authority in the commissioners, and may be falsified upon bare inspection without the trouble of a writ of error. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 50 § 2. It being a high misdemeanor in the judges so proceeding, and little, if any thing, short of murder in them all, in case the person so attainted be executed and suffer death. 4 Comm. 390.

So likewise if a man purchases land of another, and afterwards the vendor is, either by outlawry or his own confession, convicted and attainted of treason or felony previous to the sale or alienation; whereby such land becomes liable to forfeiture or escheat: now upon any trial the purchaser is at liberty, without bringing any writ of error, to falsify, not only the time of the felony or treason supposed, but the very point of the treason or felony itself; and is not concluded by the confession or outlawry of the vendor: though the vendor himself is concluded, and not suffered then to deny the fact which he had by confession or slight acknowledged. But if such attainder of the vendor was by verdict, on the oath of his peers, the alienee cannot be received to falsify or contradict the fact of the crime committed; though he is at liberty to prove a mistake in time: or that the offence was committed after the alienation and not before. 3 Inst. 231: 1 Hal. P. C. 361.

This writ may be brought on a judgment in a plea, real or personal: and for errors in the proceedings of inferior courts, or where they proceed without having jurisdiction, writ of false judgment lieth: though the plaintiff assign errors in a writ of false judgment, he shall not lay,

In hoc erratum est, &c. but unde queritur distinetur sibi falsum iudicium factum fuisse iudicium in hoc, &c. Moor 73: 2 Nelf. Abr. 819. If a writ of false judgment abate for any fault in the writ, the plaintiff shall not have Scienc factas ad audiend' et oris, upon the record certified, because it comes without an original: but if the plaintiff dies, and false judgment is given in the inferior court, his heir shall have a Sci. fac. ad audiend' error, against him who recovered upon that record which is removed into C. B.; and where the plaintiff in a writ of false judgment is nonsuit, it was formerly a question, whether the other party shall sue execution upon this record so removed against the plaintiff, without suing out a Scienc factas; but it has been adjudged, that he may do it, Hil. 23 Hen. 6: New Nat. Br. 39.

When a record is removed into C. P. by writ of false judgment, if the party alleges variance between the record removed, and that on which judgment was given, the trial shall be by those who were present in court when the record was made up. 2 Lutw. 957: Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 4. A man shall not have a writ of false judgment but in a court where there are suitors; for if there be no suitors, there the record cannot be certified by them. New Nat. Br. 40. Where false judgment is given on a writ of justitias, directed to the sheriff, the party grieved shall have a writ of false judgment; although the judgment be for debt, or trespass above the sum of 40s. Ibid.

Where a record of a judgment in the county-court was vicious, and the judgment reversed in C. B. the suitors were ordered to be amerced a mark, and the county clerk fined 5*l.* And if a plaintiff in an inferior court declare for more than 40s. Judgment shall be reversed by writ of false judgment; but where damages are laid under that sum, costs may make it amount to more. 1 Moul. 249: 2 Mod. 102, 206.

Upon false judgment before bailiffs, or others who hold plea by prescription, in every sum in debt by bill before them a party shall not have a writ of false judgment; but a writ of error thereupon. M. 4 E. 4. For defaults of tenants for life, in writs of right, &c. writ of false judgment lies by him in reversion: and this writ may be brought against a stranger to the judgment, if he be tenant of the land. A judgment shall be intended good till reversed by writ of false judgment, &c. See titles Accedas ad Curiam; Attaint.

FALSE LATIN. Before the statute directing law proceedings to be in English, if a Latin word was significant though not good Latin, yet an indictment, declaration, or fine, should not be made void by it: but if the word was not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole vicious. 5 Rep. 121: 2 Nelf. 830.

FALSE NEWS. Spreading false news, to make discord between the King and nobility, or concerning any great man of the realm, is punished by Common-law, with fine and imprisonment, which is confirmed by statutes Westm. 1, 3 Ed. 1. c. 34: 2 Rub. 2. Stat. 1. c. 5: 12 Ric. 2. c. 11. See 2 Inst. 226: 3 Inst. 198.

FALSE OATH. See title Perjury.

FALSE PLEA. In principe quod reddat against two, if the one comes and takes the entire tenancy upon him, and which they are at issue, and it is found against the tenant, by this he shall lose his moiety; for it is found against the tenant for his part, because it is tried per pais upon issue; contra, of plea to the writ by demurrer. Note the difference. Br. Preamptory, pl. 73. cites 8 Ed. 3. 17.

Plaintiff in a suit in Chancery against an executor, shall have the same advantage thereof, as if the same plea were found false by verdict at law; and shall have all the same consequences here, as follow on a false plea at law to all intents. 2 Chanc. Caf. 201 — See titles Plea, and Pleading.

FALSE PROPHECY. See title Prophecy.

FALSE RETURN. On a false return by a mayor, &c. to a mandamus, or by a sheriff, &c. to a writ, a special action on the case will lie. See title Action.

FALSE TOKENS. Where persons get money or goods into their hands, by forged letters, or other counterfeit means, they are punishable by imprisonment, &c. See title Chats.

FALSE VERDICT. A writ of attaint lieth, to inquire whether a jury of twelve men have given a false verdict; that so the judgment following thereupon may be reversed. It is allowed in almost every action except in a writ of right. See titles Attaint; Jury; Trial.

TO FALSIFY. To prove a thing to be false. Perk. 383.

FALSIFYING A RECORD. A person that purchases land of another, who is afterwards outlawed of felony, &c. may falsify the record, not only as to the time wherein the felony is supposed to have been committed, but also as to the point of the offence: but where a man is found guilty by verdict, a purchaser cannot falsify as to the offence; though he may for the time, where the party is found guilty generally in the indictment, &c. because the time is not material upon evidence. And any judgment given by persons who had no good commission to proceed against the person condemned, may be falsified by shewing the special matter, without writ of error. Also where a man is attainted of treason or felony, if he be afterwards pardoned by parliament, the attainder may be falsified by him or his heir, without plea. 2 Hawk. P. C.

FALSIFYING A RECOVERY. Issue in tail may falsify a recovery suffered by tenants for life, &c. And it has been held, that a person may falsify a recovery had by the issue in tail, where an estate-tail is before bound by a fine. 2 Nelf. Abr. 831. But where there is tenant for life, remainder in tail, and reversion in fee, tenant for life suffers a common recovery, in which he in remainder is vouched, and the uses declared to him, who had the remainder in tail; adjudged, that by the recovery all remainders and reversions are barred, and that they could not falsify this recovery. 10 Rep. 43.

He in reversion suffered a common recovery, and declared the uses; his heir shall not falsify it by pleading that his father had nothing at the time of the recovery, because he is stopped to say he is not tenant to the purchase. Godb. 189. An infant brought an assise in B. R. pending which action the tenant brought an assise against the infant in C. B. for the same land, and had judgment by default, which he pleaded in bar to the assise brought by the infant; who set forth all this matter in his replication, and that the demandant, at the time of the second writ brought, was tenant of the land, and prayed that he might falsify this recovery; and it was held that he might because he could not have writ of error, or attainder. Godb. 271: Cro. Eliz. 284. It has been determined, that a recovery covery is not so firm, but it may be falsified in point of recovery of the thing itself, between the same parties. Ibid.—See titles Fine and Recovery.

FALSIFYING A VERDICT. Where in any real action, there is a verdict against tenant in tail, the issue can never falsify such verdict in the point directly tried; but only in a special manner, as by saying that some evidence was omitted, &c. 2 Ld. Raym. 1050. See titles Trial: New Trial: Jury: Verdict.

FALSONARIUS. A forger.—Hoveden 424.

FALSO RETURNO BREVIUM. A writ that lieth against the sheriff who hath execution of process, for false returning of writs. Reg. Jud. 43.

FAMILIA. Signifies all the servants belonging to a particular master; but in another sense it is taken for a portion of land, sufficient to maintain one family: It is sometimes mentioned by our writers to be a Hide of land, which is also called a Mansie; and sometimes Carucata or a plough-land. Blount.

FANATICKS. Persons supposing themselves inspired. A general name for Quakers, Anabaptists, and other sectaries and dissenters from the church of England. See Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 6.

FANATIO, Minis Fanationis] The fawning season or fence-months in forests. Kennet's Gloss. See title Fence-Month.

FARANDMAN. Sax] A traveller or merchant stranger, to whom by the laws of Scotland justice ought to be done with all expedition, that his business or journey be not hindered. Sk ne c. 104.

FARDEL OF LAND. l'ardella Terra] Is generally accounted the fourth part of a Tard Land; but according to Nel, (in his Compliat Lawyer, p. 57,) It is an eighth part only, for there he says that two fardels of land make a mok, and four moks a yard land.

FARDING DEAL. Quadrantata terra.] is the fourth part of an acre, and besides quadrantata terra, we read of obolata, denariata, solidata, and librata terra, which probably arise in proportion of quantity from the farding-deal, as an half penny, penny, shilling or pound in money, rise in value; and then must obolata be half an acre, denariata an acre, solidata twelve acres, and librata terra twelve score acres of land: but some hold obolata to be but half a perch, and denariata a perch; and there is mentioned viginti libratas terra vel redditus, in Reg. Orig. 94, 248, whereby it seems that librata terra is so much as yields 20 s. per annum. F. N. B. 87. Spelm. Gloss.

FARE. Sax] A voyage or passage by water; but more commonly the money paid for such passage, in which sense it is now used. See Stat. 3 P. & M. cap. 16. So for what we pay an hackney or stage coachman for our carriage.

FARINAGIUM. Toll of meal or flour.—Ordin. Insul. d. Jersey 17 Edw. 2.

FARLEU. Is money paid by tenants in the West of England in lieu of a best; and in some manors in Devonshire, farleu is distinguished to be the best goods; as best is the best beast, payable at the death of a tenant. Cowel.

FARLINGARII Whoremongers and adulterers. Sax.

FARM, OR FERM. Lat. firma, from the Sax. fiorme, i. e. Food; and feorman to feed or yield victuals.] A large messuage and land, taken by lease under a certain yearly rent, payable by the tenant; and in former days, about the time of William the First, called the Conqueror, these rents were reserved to the lords in victuals and other necessities arising from the land; but afterwards in the reign of King Hen. 2. were altered and converted into money. Terms de Ley. A farm is most properly the chief messuage in a village; and it is a collective word, consisting of divers things gathered in one, as a messuage, land, meadow, pasture, wood, common, &c. Locare ad firmam is to let or set to farms; and the reason of it may be in respect of the firm or sure hold the tenants thereof have above tenants at will. A farm in Lancashire is called Ferm belt; in the North a Tack; and in Essex a Wike: And ferm is taken in various ways. Powd 195.

FARMER. He that holds a farm, or is tenant or lessee thereof. Terms de Ley. And it is said generally every lessee for life or years, although it be but of a small house and land, is called Farmer, as he is that occupieth the farm: as this word implies no mystery, except it be that of husbandry, husbandman is the proper addition of a farmer. 2 Havok. P. C. c. 23. § 115. By statute, no parson or spiritual person may take farms or leases of land, on pain of forfeiting 10 l. per month, &c. See title Clergyman—No person whatsoever shall take above two farms together, and they to be in the same parish, under the penalty of 3 s. 4 d. a week. Stats. 25 H. 8. c. 13: 32 H. 8. c. 28. §. 4.

FARTHING. Was the fourth part of a Saxon penny, as it is now of the English penny.

FARTHING OF GOLD. quasi fourth thing.] A coin used in ancient times, containing in value the fourth part of a Noble. It is mentioned in the Stat. 9 H. 5 cap. 7, where it is ordained, that there shall be good and just weight of the noble, half noble, and farthing of gold, &c.

FARTHING OF LAND. Seems to differ from Farthing-deal; for it is a large quantity of land: in a survey book of the manor of West Slapton in Com. Devon is entered thus: A. B. holds six farthings of land at 126 l. per annum.

FARUNDFL of land. See title Farding-deal.

FASIUS. Fr. Faisseau.] A faggot of wood. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 238.

FAST-DAYS. Are days of fasting and humiliation, appointed to be observed by publick authority. There are fixed days of fasting enjoined by our Church, at certain times in the year, mentioned in ancient statutes, particularly the 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19. and 5 El. c. 5. And by Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 14, the 30th of January is ordained to be a day of fasting and repentance, for the murder of King Charles I. Other days of fasting which are not fixed, are occasionally appointed by the King's Proclamations. Though abstinence from eating of fish is required on those days, by our laws; it is made penal to affirm that any forbearing of flesh, or eating of fish is necessary to salvation. 1 Havok. P. C. See Embing Days.

FASTERMANS, among the Saxons were pledges. Leg. Ed. Confess. cap. 38. Vide Fastingmen.

FAT, VAIT, OR WALE, Is a large wooden vessel used by maltsters and brewers, for measuring of malt with expedition, containing eight bushels or a quarter. Stats. 1 H. 5. c. 10: 11 H. 6. c. 8. It is also a vessel made use of by brewers to run their wort into, and by others for the making of salt at Droitwich in the county of Worcester.

FATUA MULIER, A whore Du Fresno.

FAUSEIUM, A faucet, musical pipe or flute

FAUTORS,

FAUTORS, Favourers or supporters of others; abettors of crimes, &c.

FEAL. The tenants by knight service did swear to their lords to be feal and leal, i. e. to be faithful and loyal. Spelm. de Parliament, 59. See Fealty.

FEALTY, Fidelitas, Fr. Feauté, i. e. Fides, fidei, obsequii et servitii ligamen, quo particulariter vassalus domino astringitur. Spelm.] The oath taken at the admittance of every tenant, to be true to the lord of whom he holds his land: and he that holds lands by the oath of fealty, has it in the freest manner; because all persons that have fee, hold per filium et fiduciam, that is, by fealty at least. Smith de Repub. Ang. lib. 3. c. 8. And fealty is incident to all manner of tenures except frankalmoigns and tenancy at will. See title Tenures; l. 6, et passim. This fealty, which is used in other nations, as well as England, at the first creation of it bound the tenant to fidelity; the breach whereof was the loss of his fee.

It is usually mentioned with homage, but differs from it; being an obligation permanent, which binds for ever: and these differ in the manner of the solemnity, for the oath of homage is taken by the tenant kneeling; but that of fealty is taken standing, and includes the six following things, viz.

1. Incolume, that he do no bodily injury to the lord.
2. Tutum, that he do no secret damage to him in his house, or any thing which is for his defence.
3. Honestum, that he do him no injury in his reputation.
4. Utile, that he do no damage to him in his possessions.
5. Facile, and 6. Possibile, that he render it easy for the lord to do any good, and not make that impossible to be done, which was before in his power to do: all which is comprised in Leg. Hen. 1. c. 5.

Fealty has likewise been divided into general and special; general, to be performed by every subject to his prince; and special, required only of such as in respect of their fee, are tied by oaths to their lords. Grand Custom. Normand.

By Stat. 17 Ed. 2. p. 2, the form of this oath is appointed, and as now observed, it runs as follows, viz. I A. B. will be to you my lord C. true and faithful, and bear to you fealty and faith for the lands and tenements which I hold of you: and I will truly do and perform the customs and services that I ought to do to you. So help me God. The oath is administered by the lord or his steward; the tenant holding his right hand upon the book, and repeating after the lord, &c. the words of the oath; and then kissing the book. Terms de Ley.

The law with respect to fealty continues the same as when Lord Coke wrote; (See 1 Inst 686. in note:) for it does not appear to be varied by Stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24, or any other statute made since: but it is no longer the practice to exact the performance of fealty. In the case of copyholders it is become a thing of course on admitting them to enter a respite of fealty; but with respect to such as hold by other tenures it is never thought of. In Wood's Inst. 133, it is said that lessees for life or years ought to do fealty to their lords for the lands they hold.—However it may not be amiss to remember that the title to fealty still remains; that it is due from all tenants except tenants in frankalmoigne, and such as hold at will or by sufferance, and if required must be iterated at every change of the lord; it differing in this respect from homage, which except in special cases is only due once; that the receiving of it is at least attended with the advantage of preserving the memory of tenures; which though perhaps sufficiently done in the case of copyholds by the admittances and by the payment of fines and quit-rents and continual render of other services, may be very necessary in cases where fealty is the only service due; and lastly, that the law for compelling the performance of fealty has provided the remedy by distress, which is an inseparable incident to all services due by tenure, and, in the case of fealty cannot as it is said, be excessive. See 1 Inst. 68 a: 103 b: 104 a b: 152 b: 2 Inst. 107: 4 Co. 8, b.

FEASTS, Anniversary times of feasting and thanksgiving, as Christinus, Easter, Whitsuntide, &c. The four feasts which our laws especially take notice of, are the feasts of the annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary, of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, of St. Michael the Archangel, and of St. Thomas the Apostle; (or in lieu of the last, the birth of our Lord Christ,) on which quarterly days, rent on leases is usually referred to be paid. See Stats. 5 Ed. 6. c. 3: 12 Car. 2. c. 30.

FEE; and FREE-SIMPLE.—Tenant in fee simple, is he which has lands or tenements to hold to him and his heirs for ever. List. c. 1. § 1.

The word fee is sometimes used for the compass or circuit of a lordship or manor, as we say the lord of the fee, &c. as well as the particular estate of the tenant: and also for a perpetual right incorporeal; as to have the keeping of prisons, &c. in fee. Bract Lib. 2. c. 5. Old Nat. Br. 41. And when a rent or annuity is granted to one and his heirs, it is a fee personal. Co. Lit. 1. 2.

As to the general nature and origin of estates in fee-simple, and the other estates arising therefrom, See this Dict. titles Estate; Tenure, III. 5. It is therefore in this place sufficient to inquire,

- I. In what Things one may have a Fee simple.
- II. By what Means such an Estate may be acquired.
- III. By what Words it may be created.

I. A man may have an estate, in fee-simple of all lands or tenements or other things real. Co. Lit. 1 b. Of lordships, advowsons, commons, cisterns, and all hereditaments. Co. Lit. 4 a. So he may have a fee simple in things mixed; as in franchises, liberties, &c. Co. L. 2 a.

So if a man grants to another and his heirs all woods, underwoods, timber-trees or others in such a part of a forest, saving the soil; the grantee has a fee to take in alieno solo. R. 8 Co. 137 b.

So, in things personal; as in annuity. Co. Lit. 2 a. In a dignity granted to him and his heirs. Co. Lit. 2 a. In a swan mark. 7 Co. 17. In a part or share of the New River water. Ca. Parl 207.

So, in the patronage of an hospital, or other thing created de novo, in which there was not a precedent estate, a man may have a fee to him and his heirs, qualified in a particular manner: as if a Queen consort institutes an hospital, and reserves the patronage sibi & reginis Angliæ succedentibus. Ca. Cb. 214.

But in estates in fee before such defaultory inheritance it cannot be; as the duchy of Cornwall limited to the prince & his heirs, regis Angliæ primogenitis, shall not be good, except when limited by act of parliament. 8 Co. 16.

II. A

FEE-SIMPLE.

II. A man may take a fee by descent or by purchase. In what manner a man may take by descent, see under title Descent.

With respect to purchasers, it is to be noted, that some are incapable of purchasing.

An alien cannot purchase any lands in England. Vaugh. 227, 291: 7 Co. 16, 17, 18: Dyer, 2. pl. 8. See Alien.

All persons attainted of treason or felony are incapable of purchasing. 2 New Abridg. 249: Co. Lit. 8. a. See Dig. Feud. lib. 2. tit. 23, 24: Vigellius 242, 350: Spel. Gloss. 214, 215.

If a man be attainted of felony, and after purchase land, and dies, the King shall have it by his prerogative, and not the lord of the fee; because his person being forfeited to the King, he cannot purchase but for the King. Co. Lit. 2 b.

A monster not having human shape cannot purchase or inherit, but an hermaphrodite shall inherit or purchase secundum prævalentiam sexus interfectentis; one born deaf and dumb may inherit; so may one born deaf, dumb and blind, because it is for their advantage; but they cannot contract, because they cannot understand the signs of contracting; an infant, an idiot, and a person of non sane memory may inherit, because the law, in compassion to their natural infirmities, presumes them capable of property; so also an infant or a person of non sane memory may purchase, because it is intended for his benefit, and the freehold is in him till he disagree thereto, because an agreement is presumed, it being for their benefit, and because the freehold cannot be in the grantor, contrary to his own act, nor can be in abeyance, for then a stranger would not know against whom to demand his right; if at full age, or after recovery of his memory they agree thereto, they cannot avoid it; but if they die during minority or lunacy, the heirs may avoid it; for they shall not be subject to the contracts of persons who wanted capacity to contract; so, if after his memory recovered, the lunatick or person non compos die without agreement to the purchase, their heirs may avoid it. Co. Lit. 2. 8: 2 Vent. 303. See title Estate.

A feme covert is capable of purchasing; for such an act does not make the property of the husband liable to any disadvantage, nor does it suppose a separate will or power of contracting in the wife; but here the will of the wife is supposed the mind of the husband, (he not objecting,) since no man is supposed not to assent to that which is for his benefit; but in this case the husband may disagree, and it shall avoid the purchase. Co. Lit. 3 a. See title Baron and Feme.

By the stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4, Papists are disabled from purchasing lands, &c. See title Papist.

Persons capable of purchasing may gain a fee-simple by feoffment; or by fine, or common recovery; which are of the nature of a feoffment upon record; or by grant, or by exchange, release, or confirmation, which are in the nature of grant; or by bargain and sale; or by covenant to stand seised; or by devise. See title Estate.

So a man may gain a fee by wrong; as by disseisin, abatement, or intrusion. See those titles.

III. It is the word heirs makes the inheritance; and a man cannot have a greater estate. Lit. 1. To have fee-simple implies, that it is without limitation to what heirs, but to heirs generally: though it may be limited by act of parliament. 4 Inst. 206. If one give or grant land to J. D. and his heirs; and if he die without heirs, that J. D. shall have it to him and his heirs: by this J. D. hath a fee-simple, and J. D. will have no estate. Dyer 4, 33. This means by parol, with livery and seisin, or by deed, &c. but not by will.

Where land is given or granted by fine, deed or will, in possession, reversion, or remainder, to another and his heirs; it will be a fee-simple. Prosser 134. And if land be granted to a man and his heirs, habendum to him for life only, and livery of seisin is made; it is a fee-simple estate, because a fee is expressed in the gift. 2 Rep. 23.

A lease is granted to one for a term of years, and after that the lessee shall have the land to him and his heirs by the rent of 10 l. a year; if the grantor make livery upon it, 'tis a fee-simple: otherwise but for years. Co. Lit. 217. Where lands are granted to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, the remainder to the right heirs of A. here A. hath a fee-simple. 20 Hen. 6. 35: B. & E. 34, 35. A gift or grant to a man's wife during life, after to him in tail, and after to his right heirs; he will have a fee-simple estate. 2 Rep. 91.

If lands are granted to a man and his successors, this creates no fee-simple: but if such a grant be made to a corporation, it is a fee-simple; and in case of a sole corporation, as a bishop, parson, &c. a fee-simple is to them and their successors. Co. Lit. 8. b: Wm. 119. An estate granted to a person, to hold to him for ever, or to him and his assigns for ever, is only an estate for life; the word heirs being wanted to make it fee-simple: but in wills, which are more favoured than grants, the fee-simple and inheritance may pass without the word heirs. Co. Lit. 19, 9.

And by deed of feoffment a fee-simple may be created, which would be an estate-tail by will; as where lands are given to another, and his heirs male, &c. without the word body. Hob. 32. A gift to a man and his children, and their heirs, is a fee-simple to all that are living. Co. Lit. 8: Lit. Rep. 6.

A feoffment to B. & his heirs, without saying su. gives him a fee-simple. Co. Lit. 8 b. So to a son and the heirs of his father. Scamb. Co. Lit. 220. b. So to B. & his heirs and their heirs; if he has issue, it gives them a joint estate in fee. Co. Lit. 9 a. So to B. hereditus & successors su. gives a fee. Co. Lit. 9 a.

So a grant to the King in perpetuum gives him a fee, without the words, his heirs or successors, for he never dies. Co. Lit. 9 b. So a feoffment to a corporation aggregate in perpetuum gives a fee; for it never dies. Co. Lit. 9 b. 1 Rel. 832. l. 55.

Or, to a corporation sole, to be held in frankalmoin, &c. Co. Lit. 9 b: 1 Rel. 833. l. 5. So if A. re-enters in alio plene as B. entailed him, he has a fee without the word heirs. Co. Lit. 9 b. — This must mean where A. had an estate in fee of the feoffment of B. 1 Rel. 833. l. 12. So a grant to the church of B. gives a fee, without the word, heirs or successors. 1 Rel. 833. l. 3.

And a limitation to the right heirs of B. gives a fee, without the words, and their heirs. 1 Rel. 133. l. 16. So a fee may be given without the words, his heirs, by fine sur concessione de droit come cro. &c. Co. Lit. 9 b. or by a common recovery. Co. Lit. 9 b.

So a fee passes without the words, his heirs, where a man gives land with his daughter, &c. in frankalmoin, &c.

FEE.

Co. Lit. 9 b. If a parcener, or joint-tenant releases to his companion Co. Lit. 9 b. If the lord, &c. releases to the tenant; which enures by way of extinguishment. Co. Lit. 9 b. If a man releases a mere right, as where a disseisor releases to the disseisor all his right. Co. Lit. 9 b.

So, if a rent be granted upon partition, for owelty (or equality) of partition Co. Lit. 9, 10. So if a peer be summoned to parliament by writ, he has a fee in his dignity, without the word habeat. Co. Lit. 9 b. So, by the forest law, if the King at a justice seat, grants to another an assart in forestry, without more, he has a fee. Co. Lit. 10 a. So, by custom, a grant of a copyhold, pro hereditate sua, or perpetua, may give the inheritance. 4 Co. 29 b.

A fee simple determinable upon a contingency, is a fee to all intents; though not so durable as absolute fee. 11 a. 6 273. But see title De fe.

In pleading estates in fee simple, they may be alledged generally, but the commencement of estates-tail, and other particularities, must regularly be shewn. Co. Lit. 10 3. The fee simple itself, being the chief and most excellent; he who hath it in lands or tenements may give, grant, or charge the same by deed or will at his pleasure; or he may let it to any person upon it: And if he bind himself and his heirs to warranty, or for money by obligation, or otherwise, and leave such land to the heir, it shall be charged with warranty and debts. Also the wife of a man that is seised of such an estate, shall be endowed; and the husband of a woman having this estate, shall be tenant by the curtesy. Co. Lit. 273; Do 310. Pol. 3 266.

Though fee simple is the most ample estate of inheritance, it is subject to many incumbrances, as judgments, statutes, mortgages, fines, judgments, dower, &c. And there is a fee-simple conditioned, where the estate is defeasible by not performing the condition; and a quantity fee simple, which may be defeated by a limitation. This is called a base fee, upon which no reversion or remainder can be expectant. Co. Lit. 18 10 Pol. 1.

See farther on this subject titles Dignity, Land; Feudal Law; Dower; Tenure; Will, &c.

FEE EXPLECANT [Feudum Explecandum] See Land.

FEE-FARM See title Tail.

FEE FARM, Feudum] Or fee farm rent; is when the lord, upon creation of the tenancy, reserves to himself and his heirs, either the rent for which it was before let to firm, or was reasonably worth, or at least a fourth part of the value; without homage, service, or other services, beyond what are especially comprised in the rentment. 2 Inst. 44. By Feudum, a third part of the yearly value of the land may be appointed for the rent, where lands are granted in fee farm, &c. F. N. B. 110. And Lord Coke lays fee-farm rents may be one half, a third, or fourth part of the value. Co. Lit. 143. See 2 Comm. 43; D. 17. 62, or note, and the notes to 1 Inst. 143.

These fee-farm rents seem to be more or less, according to the conditions or consideration of the purchase of the lands out of which they are issuing. It is the nature of fee-farm, that if the rent be behind and unpaid for the space of two years, then the lord or his heirs may bring an action to recover the lands, &c. 2 Inst. 46. 110. 1. See also Gifford.

FEEES.

Feodifirma appellatur, cum quis, ex dono vel concessione alterius, prædia tenuerit sibi et hæredibus suis, reddendo vel dimidiam, vel tertiam, vel ad minus quartam partem veri valoris. Tenens hujusmodi ad nulla servitia obligatus, nisi quæ in ipsâ Chartâ continentur: exceptâ facilitate, quæ omnibus tenuris incumbit. Spelm. Gloss. 221.

FEE-FARM RENTS OF THE CROWN. The fee farm rents remaining to the Kings of England from their ancient demesnes, were many of them alienated from the crown in the reign of King Charles II. By Stats. 22 Car. 2 c. 6: 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 24, (explained by Stat. 10 An. c. 18.) the King was enabled by letters-patent to grant fee-farm rents due in right of his crown, or in right of his duchies of Lancaster and Cornwall, except quit rents, &c. to trustees to make sale thereof, and the trustees were to convey the same by bargain and sale to purchasers, &c. who may recover the same as the King might. But it has been observed, that men were so very doubtful of the title to alienations of this nature, that while these rents were exposed to sale for ready money, scarce any would deal for them, and they remained unsold: but what made men earnest to buy them, was the stop upon some of his Majesty's other payments, which occasioned persons to resort to them as the most eligible in that conjuncture. Notwithstanding any of the said rents, is enabled to buy the remainder. See further title Crown Lands.

Also, Certain penalties allowed to officers in the administration of the law, is a recompence for their labour and trouble, ascertained either by acts of parliament or by an act of grace, which gives them an equal satisfaction with an act of parliament. 2 New Rep. 473.

I. Feudum Feudum.

II. What is the fee farm rent?

I. At common law no officer, whose office related to the administration of the law, could take any reward for doing his duty, but what he was to receive from the King. Co. Lit. 365 2 Inst. 209, 9.

And this fundamental maxim of the common law confirmed by H. 1. c. 23 which enacts, "That no sheriff, or other King's officer, shall take any reward to do justice, but he shall be paid of that which they take of the King, and that he who so doth shall yield twice as much, and shall be punished at the King's pleasure."

This statute comprehends escheators, coroners, bailiffs, gaoler, the King's clerk of the market, aulnager, and other inferior ministers and officers of the King, whose offices do any way concern the administration of justice. 2 Inst. 209.

And so much hath this law been thought to conduce to the honour of the King and welfare of the subject, that all prescriptions whatsoever, which have been contrary to it, have been holden void; as where by prescription the clerk of the market claimed certain fees for the view and examination of all weights and measures, and it was held merely void. 4 Inst. 271; Mon. 523; 2 Inst. 209; 2 Rol. Abr. 226.

But it hath been holden, that the fee of 20*d.* commonly called the bar fee, which hath been taken time out of mind, by the sheriff, of every prisoner who is acquitted; and also the fee of one penny, which was claimed by the coroner of every view, when he came before the justices in in eyre, are not within the meaning of the statute, because they are not demanded by the sheriff or coroner for doing any thing relating to their offices, but claimed as perquisites of right belonging to any of them. 2 Infl. 210: Stamm. P. C. 49.

Also it is holden by Lord Coke, that within the words of the statute 34 Ed. 1. which are, "No tallage or aid shall be taken or levied by us or our heirs in our realm, without the good will and assent of archbishops, bishops, earls, barons, knights, burgesses, and other freemen of the land;" no new offices can be erected with new fees, or old offices with new fees; for that is a tallage upon the subject, which cannot be done without common assent by act of parliament. 2 Infl. 533.

Yet it is holden, that an office erected for the public good, though no fee is annexed to it, is a good office; and that the party, for the labour and pains which he takes in executing it, may maintain a quantum meruit, if not as a fee, yet as a competent recompence for his trouble. Moor 808.

All fees allowed by acts of parliament become established fees; and the several officers intitled to them may maintain action of debt for them. 2 Infl. 210. All such fees as have been allowed by the courts of justice to their officers, as a recompence for their labour and attendance, are established fees: and the parties cannot be deprived of them without an act of parliament. Co. Lit. 368: Proc. Cur. 551.

Where a fee is due by custom, such custom, like all others, must be reasonable; and therefore where a person libelled in the spiritual court for a burying fee due to him for every one who died in his parish, though buried in another; the court held this unreasonable, an prohibition was granted. Hob. 17: 1 R. Abr. 557, 559. S. C. adjudged.

The plaintiff brought an action in the case for fees due to him as Usher of the Black Rod, and obtained a verdict. Stran. 747. No fee shall be taken for a report upon a reference from any court. St. 1 Jac. 1. c. 10.—Certain fees of sheriffs settled. St. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. See title Sheriff—Fees on non proceſſum out of the Exchequer to be the same as on other records. St. 23 Geo. 2. c. 20. § 10.—Fees of justices' clerks to be regulated. St. 26 Geo. 2. c. 14: 27 Geo. 2. c. 16. Debts due for the sheriff's fees for executing an elect. Lord Rym. 12.2

As to the quantum of the fees due, it must be observed in general, that it is extortion for any officer to take more for executing his office, than is allowed by act of parliament, or is the known and settled fee in such case. 10 Co. 102 a: Co. Lit. 368.

As to the fees of sheriffs for executions, by St. 29 Eliz. cap. 4. it is enacted, "That it shall not be lawful for any sheriff, &c. nor for any of their officers, &c. by colour of their office, to take of any person, directly or indirectly, for the serving and executing of any extent or execution upon the body, lands, goods or chattels of any person, more recompence than in this present act appointed, i. e. twelve-pence of and for every twenty shillings where it exceedeth not one hundred pounds; and six pence of and for every twenty shillings, over and above the said sum of 100*l.* that he or they shall so levy or extend, and deliver in execution, or take the body in execution for; upon pain, that the person offending, shall forfeit, to the party grieved, his treble damages; and shall forfeit the sum of 40*l.* for every time that he, they, or any of them shall do the contrary."

II. It is extortion for any officer to take his fee before it is due; and therefore where an under-sheriff refused to execute a capias ad satisfaciendum till he had his fees, the court held, that the plaintiff might bring an action against him for not doing his duty, or might pay him his fees, and then indict him for extortion. Co. Lit. 368: 10 Co. 102 a: 1 Salk. 330.

Officer must obey a writ, though fees unpaid. Stran. 814. Process must be obeyed though fees are not tendered. Stran. 1262. If an habenas corpus ad satisfaciendum be directed to a gaoler, he must bring up the prisoner although his fees were not paid him; and he cannot excuse himself of the contempt to the court, by alledging that the prisoner did not tender him his fees. 1 Kebl. 272. pl. 57. So as to an habenas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum. March 89: 2 A. b. 280: 2 Infl. 178: 1 Kebl. 565. cont.

But if the gaoler brings up the prisoner by virtue of such habenas corpus, the court will not turn him over till the gaoler be paid all his fees; nor, according to some opinions, till he be paid all that is due to him for the prisoner's diet: for that a gaoler is compellable to find his prisoner sustenance. See 1 Rol. Rep. 338: Co. Lit. 295: 9 Co. 87: Plowd. 68 a: 2 Rol. Abr. 32: 2 Jon. 178.

If a person pleads his pardon, the judges may insist on the usual fee of gloves to themselves and officers, before they allow it. Fitz. Cur. 294: Pulton de Pace 88: Keling 75. 2 Jon. 56: 1 Sid. 452.

If an erroneous writ be delivered to the sheriff, and he executes it, he shall have his fees, though the writ be erroneous. 1 Salk. 332. It seems to be laid down in the old books as a distinction, that upon an extent of land upon a statute, the sheriff is to have his fees, to much per pound according to the statute immediately; but that upon an elect he is not to have them till the liberate. Poph. 156: Wimb. 51. S. P.

FEES OF ATTORNEYS AND OFFICERS, Are considerations allowed them as a recompence for their labour: and in respect to officers, they are granted over and above their salaries, to excite them to diligence in executing their offices. They differ from wages which are paid to servants for certain work and labour done in a certain space; whereas fees are disbursed to officers, &c. for the transacting of business which occasionally occurs. If a client, when his business in court is dispatched, refuseth to pay the officer his court fees; the court on motion will grant an attachment against him, on which he shall be committed until the fees are paid. 1 Lill. Abr. 598. Ecclesiastical courts have not power to establish fees: But if a person bring a quantum meruit in B. R. &c. for fees, and the jury find for him, then they become established fees. 1 Salk. 333.

A solicitor in Chancery may exhibit his bill for his fees for business done in that court; and so he may where the business is done in another court, if it relates to another demand the plaintiff makes in chancery. 1 Pen. 203: 2 Chanc. Ca. 153. But it hath been held, that chancellors, registers and proctors who are officers of temporal profit, and whose fees do not relate to the jurisdiction of the spiritual court, cannot sue for them in the spiritual court. ACTION on the case lies for an attorney for his fees, against him that retained him in his cause: And attorneys are not to be dismised by their clients, till their fees are paid. 1 Lil. 142. But attorneys are not to demand more than their just fees; nor to be allowed fees to counsel without tickets, or the signature of counsel, &c. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 7. An attorney may have action of debt for his fees, and also of counsel, and costs of suit: as a counsellor is not bound to give counsel till he has his fee; it is said he can have no action for it: Though it has been held otherwise. *F. There were no fees due to sheriffs for executing their offices, till the Stat. 29 Eliz. c. 4; which allows them fees for executing writs of execution, &c. By the Stat. of Wym 2, 13 E. 1. cc. 42, 44, the ancient fees of officers of courts of justice were ordained. And by statutes, the fees of sheriffs, gaolers, bailiffs, &c. are limited.

FEIGNED ACTION, See title Joint Action.

FEIGNED ISSUE, If, in a fit in equity, any matter of fact is strongly contested, the court usually directs the matter to be tried by a jury, especially such important facts as the validity of a will, or whether A. is the heir at law to B. or the existence of a modus decimandi, or real and immemorial composition for tithes. But as a jury cannot be summoned to attend a court of equity, the fact is usually directed to be tried in the court of King's Bench, or at the assizes, upon a trial by issue. For this purpose, a feigned action is brought, wherein the pretended plaintiff declares that he laid a wager of 5*l.* with the defendant, that Y. was heir at law to B.; then he avers that he is so and brings his action for the 5*l.* the defendant denies the wager, but avers that A. is not the heir to B. and thereupon that issue is joined, which is directed out of Chancery to be tried, and thus the verdict of the jury at law determines the fact in the court of equity. 3 C. 1. 42. If it is a matter of great difficulty and consequence, the direction may be for a trial by bill, with leave of the court. See titles Chancery;

F. LO DE SI, One that commits felony by laying violent hands upon himself, or commits any unlawful malicious act, the consequence of which is, his own untimely death. FEL-O-DE-SE.

and compos mentis : And therefore if an infant under fourteen years of age, or a lunatick during his lunacy, or one distracted by a disease, or an idiot, kills himself, it is not felony. 3 Inst. 44 : Dalt. cb. 145. Also if a person during the time that he is non compos mentis giveth himself a mortal wound, though he dieth thereof when he recovers his memory, he is not felo de se ; because at the time of the stroke he was not compos mentis. Dalt. 342. 344. And he who desires and persuades another man to kill him, is not a felo de se ; his assent being void in law, and the person killing him a murderer. Kelw. 136. It is felo de se where a man maliciously attempts to kill another, and falls upon his sword, or shooting at another the gun bursts, whereby he kills himself ; but he must be the only agent. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27 : 1 Hal. P. C. 413.

A felo de se cannot make a will of goods and chattels ; [or rather such will, if made, is void ;] for they are forfeited by the act and manner of his death . but he may make a devise of his lands, for they are not subject to forfeiture. Plowd. 261.

A felo de fe shall forfeit all his goods and chattels real and personal; but not until it is lawfully found by the oath of twelve men, before the coroner on view of the body, that he is felo de fe. 3 Inft. 55. By the return of the inquisition the goods, &c. are vested in the King: Though it hath been said, that the goods of a felo de fe are forfeited before inquisition, viz. immediately upon committing the fact. 1 Lev. 8: but see 5 Rep. 110, where it is adjudged that they are not forfeited till it is found of record. The lands of inheritance of a felo de fe are not forfeited, by reason he was not attainted in his life-time: nor is such a person's wife barred of dower, or his blood corrupted. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. If a judgment is obtained by a plaintiff in any action, and the plaintiff hangs himself, so as to become felo de fe, the debt is forfeited to the King. 1 Saund. 36: 2 Nelj. Abr. 840. Goods are forfeited to the King by a felo de fe, for the loss of a subject, and breach of the peace. 1 Plowd. 261. This forfeiture has relation to the time of the act done, in the felon's life time which was the cause of his death. As if the husband and wife be possessed jointly of a term of years, in land, and the husband drown himself, the land shall be forfeited to the King; and the wife shall not have it by survivorship. For by the act of casting himself into the water he forfeits the term; which gives a title to the King, prior to the wife's title by survivorship; which could not accrue till the instant of her husband's death. Famb. L. 216. But these forfeitures are, perhaps too often, saved, by the coroner's jury finding their verdict Junacy; to which they are inclined on a favourable interpretation, that it is impossible for a man in his senses to do a thing so contrary to nature; but if this argument be good, self-murder can be no crime, because a madman cannot be guilty of any crime. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27.

If a person felo de se is secretly made away with that the coroner cannot view the body; presentment is to be made of it by justices of peace, &c. to entitle the King to the forfeiture of goods. 5 Rip. 110. Where a person is found felo de se, who, on account of lunacy, &c. ought not to be so; or where one is returned non compos when in truth the party is felo de se, &c. If there be no fault in the coroner, or uncertainty in the inquisition, a malus inquirendum will not be granted; but the inquisition is traversable in B. R. 3 Mod. 238: 2 Nelf. Abr. 840. A pardon of murder, doth not pardon felo de se; but a pardon of all felonies and forfeitures doth. By custom and practice, the body of a felo de se is buried in the highway, with a stake driven through the body.

FELONS' GOODS. The statute de prærogativa regis, 17 Ed. 2. c. 1, grants to the King, among other things, the goods of felons and fugitives. If the King grant to a man and his heirs felons' goods, the grantee cannot devise them, &c. on the statute 32 H. 8. c. 1, because they are not of a yearly value; but where a person is seised of a manor, to which they are appendant, it is otherwise, for they will pass as appurtenant. 3 Rep. 32. See titles Flight; Forfeiture.

FELONY.

FELONIA. A general term of law including generally, all capital crimes, below treason. 4 Comm. 98. This word is of feudal original; but as to the derivation of which authors differ. Some deduce it, fancifully enough as it seems, from φῆλο; Gri. an impostor; from fallo Lat. to deceive; and Coke (1 Inst. 391,) says it is crimen felleo animo perpetratum.—All, however, agree that it is such a crime as occasions a forfeiture of the offender's lands or goods; this therefore gives great probability to Spelman's derivation from the Teutonic or German fee, a feud or fief, and lon, price or value. Spelm. in verb. Felon.—Felon according to this derivation, is then the same as positum feudi; the consideration for which a man gives up his her or estate; as in common speech it is said, such an act is as much as one's life or estate is worth. In this sense, it will clearly signify the feudal forfeiture, or rather the act by which an estate is forfeited or cheats to the lord. See 4 Comm. 95.

FELONY, in the general acceptance of law, comprises every species of crime which occasioned, at Common-law, the forfeiture of lands or goods. This most frequently happens in those crimes for which a capital punishment, either was or is liable to be inflicted: for those felonies which are called clergyable, or to which the benefit of clergy extends, were antiently punished with death in lay or unlearned offenders, though now by the statute-law that punishment is for the first offence universally remitted. See this Dict. title Clergy, Benefit of. Treason itself (says Cole 3 Inst. 15,) was antiently comprised under the name of Felony. And not only all offences now capital are in some degree or other, felony; but this is likewise the case with some other offences, which are not punished with death; as suicide, where the party is already dead; homicide by chance medley, or in self-defence; and petty larceny or pilfering, all which are, strictly speaking Felonies, as they subject the committers of them to forfeitures. So that upon the whole the only adequate definition of Felony seems to be this:—“An offence which occasions a total forfeiture, of either lands or goods or both, at the Common law; and to which, capital or other punishment may be superadded, according to the degree of guilt.” 4 Comm. 94.

As felony may be without inflicting capital punishment, so it is possible that capital punishment may be inflicted for an offence which is no felony; as in case of Homicide by the Common-law, which though capital, never worked any forfeiture of lands or goods, an infeoffable incident to felony. 3 Inst. 43. Of the same nature was the punishment of standing mute, which at Common-law was capital, but without any forfeiture, and was therefore no felony. In short the true criterion of Felony is forfeiture, for in all felonies which are punishable by death, the offender loses all his lands in fee simple, and also his goods and chattels; in such as are not so punishable, his goods and chattels only. 1 Inst. 391.

The idea of felony is so generally connected with that of capital punishment, that it seems hard to separate them; and to this usage the interpretations of law now conform. For if a statute makes any new offence felony, the law implies that it shall be punished with death (viz. by hanging,) as well as by forfeiture, unless the offender prays the benefit of clergy. Hawk. P. C. i. c. 41 § 4; ii. c. 48. So where a statute decrees an offence to undergo judgment of life and member, the offence becomes a Felony, though that precise word be omitted; but the words of the statute must not in such case be the least doubtful or ambiguous. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 1, 2.

Under the word felony in commissions, &c. is included, petit treason, murder, homicide, burning of houses, burglary, robbery, rape, &c. chance medley, defendant to and petit larceny. All felonies punishable according to the course of the Common-law, are either by the Common-law, or by statute. Piracy, robbery, and murder on the sea are punishable by the civil and statute law 1 Inst. 391.

Felony, by the Common-law, is against the life of a man; as murder, manslaughter, felo de se, se defendendo, &c. Against a man's goods, such as larceny, and robbery: Against his habitation, as burglary, arson or house-burning; and against public justice, as breach of prison. 3 Inst. 31.

It is not very easy to recapitulate the vast variety of offences which are made Felony, by the almost innumerable statutes which have been from time to time found necessary, to restrain mankind within those bounds which the security of Society requires.—Unfortunately these are continually increasing; as the penalties of death or transportation have, after repeated trials, in many instances been found by experience, to be the only means of preventing the increase of crimes, from the commission of which milder punishments were insufficient to deter offenders.

A general list is here subjoined of Offences by statute, within clergy, and without. For the particulars relative to each offence, this Dictionary may be consulted under the proper titles; see particularly titles Larceny; Robbery; Swearings.

Before the reign of K. Hen. I. felonies were punished with pecuniary fines; for he was the first who ordered felons to be hanged, about the year 1108. The judgment against a man for felony hath been the same since the reign of that King, i. e. That he be hanged by the neck till dead; which is entered suspendatur per collum, &c. 4 Inst. 124. Felony was anciently every capital crime perpetrated with an evil intention: All capital offences by the Common-law, came generally under the title of felony; and could not be expressed by any word but felonice; which must of necessity be laid in an indictment of felony. Co. Lit. 391. It is always accompanied with an evil intention; and therefore felony cannot be imputed to any other motive. But the bare intention to commit a felony is so very criminal, that at the Common-law it was punishable as felony, where it missed of its effect through some accident; and now the party may be severely fined for such an intention. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 25.

Felony is punished with loss of life, and of lands not entailed, goods and chattels; And felony ordinarily works corruption corruption of blood; unless a statute making an offence felony, ordains it shall be otherwise, as some statutes do. See title Attainder.

The punishment of a person for felony, by our ancient books, is, 1st, To lose his life, 2dly, To lose his blood, as to his ancestry, and so as to have neither heir nor posterity. 3dly, To lose his goods. 4thly, To lose his lands; and the King shall have annum, diem & vallum, to the intent that his wife and children be cast out of the house, his house pulled down, and all that he had for his comfort or delight destroyed. 4 Rep. 124. A felony by statute incidentally implies, that the offender shall be subject to the like attainder and forfeiture, &c. as is incident to a felon at Common-law. 3 Inst. 47, 59, 90.

All felonies are several, and cannot be joint; so that a pardon of one felon cannot discharge another: but the felony of one man may be dependant upon that of another, and the pardon of the one by a necessary consequence enure to the benefit of the other, as in cases of principal and accessory, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C.

Private persons may arrest felons by their own authority, or by warrant from a justice of peace: And every private person is bound to assist an officer to take felons, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. see title Constable.

But one ought not to be arrested upon suspicion of felony, except there be probabilis causa shewed for the ground of the suspicion. 1 Lit. Abr. 603. If a felony is not done by a man, but some person else, if another hath probable cause to suspect he is the felon, and accordingly doth arrest him, this is lawful, and may be justified. But to make good such justification, there must be in fact a felony committed by some person, without which there can be no ground of suspicion. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 78. And as to the person, there ought to be a reasonable cause to suspect him, otherwise the arrest will be illegal. See titles Arrest; Constable.

A private man arresting one for felony, cannot justify breaking doors, to take the party suspected; but he doth it at his peril, and if in truth he be a felon, it is justifiable; but if innocent, then it is not: To prevent a murder or manslaughter, private persons may break doors open. 2 Hale 82. Officers may break open a house to take a felon, or any person justly suspected of felony; and if an officer hath a warrant to take a felon, who is killed in resisting, it is not felony in the officer; but if the officer is killed, it is otherwise. D. lit. 289.

Persons indicted of felony, &c. where there are strong presumptions and circumstances of guilt, are not repleviable; but for larceny, &c. when persons are committed who are of good reputation, they may be bailed. 2 Hawk. P. C. The former part of the position must be, with an exception to the power of the court of King's Bench. See title Bail.

If one be committed to prison for one felony, the justices of gaol delivery may try him for another felony, for which he was not committed, by virtue of their commission, 1 Lit. 602.

In the highest crime, and in the lowest species of felony, viz. in petit larceny, and in all misdemeanors, standing mute hath always been equivalent to conviction. But upon appeals or indictments for other felonies, or petit treason, the prisoner was not by the ancient law looked upon as convicted, so as to receive judgment for the felony, but should, for his obstinacy, have received the terrible sentence of penance, or peine forte & dure. If a felon stands mute by the act of God, the felony is to be inquired of by jury, and whether the prisoner be the same person, and all other matters in the same manner as if the criminal had pleaded. And it may be inquired of by inquest of office, whether he do so of malice or by the act of God. 2 Hawk. P. C. See 4 Comm. 325. and this Dist. titles Peine forte & dure; Trial.

Where a married woman commits felony, in company with her husband, it shall be presumed to be done by his command, and she shall be excused. 3 Inst. 310. See title Baron and Feme VII.

If a man's horse be going into the ground of another, and he takes it fellet animo, not as damage-feasant, it is no finding, but felony. But if A's sheep stray into the flock of B. and he drives the same along with his flock, or by mistake shears them, this is not a felony; though if he knew them to be another person's, and marks them with his mark, is an evidence of felony. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 506.

Where one steals another's goods, and a third person feloniously takes them from him; he is a felon as to both the others. And when there is a pretence of title to things unlawfully taken, it may be only a trick to colour felony; and the ordinary discovery of a felonious intent is, if the party doth it secretly, or being charged with the goods denies it. 1 H. P. C. 507, 509. If a person to whom goods are delivered on a pretended buying them, runs away with them, it is felony; and a guest stealing plate set before him at an inn, &c. is felony; also persons who have the charge of things, as a servant of a chamber, &c. may be guilty of felony; and the least removing of a thing in attempts of felony, is felony, though it be not carried off. 3 Inst. 308: Kam. 275.

But goods must not be of a base nature; such as dogs, &c. nor feræ naturæ, as deer, hares, &c. except they be made tame, when it will be felony to steal them. If any turkeys, geese, poultry, fish in a trunk, &c. are taken away, it is felony. 3 Inst. 309, 310. Stealing of tame peacocks, is felony; so of herons and young hawks in their nests: it is otherwise of pheasants, partridges, conies, &c. although they be so kept that they cannot escape; if they be not reclaimed, and known. Jenk. test. 204. As to cats, dogs, monkeys, and the like; though it be not felony to take them, trespass lies for them. Jenk. ibid.

FENS, paludes.] Low marshes, grounds, or lakes for water; for the draining whereof in this kingdom several statutes have been enacted, which are chiefly local; and of which the following abridgments are retained as a specimen.

The statutes 4 Jac. 1. c. 8, 13, make provision for draining and securing from inundation the drowned grounds and marshes of Lejasses and Fants in Kent; and the fens and low grounds in the Isle of Ely. The St. 15 Car. 2. cap. 17, appoints William Earl of Bedford, and other adventurers, a corporation, for the draining of Bulford Level in Bedfordshire, consisting of a governor, bailiffs, and conservators, &c. who have power to lay and levy taxes within the great level of the fens; and also to erect works within the same, for carrying the water to the sea, making satisfaction to the owners of lands for injury received; throwing down any of which works, incurs treble damages, &c.

By St. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 11, Draining fens, &c. in Lincolnshire, are to be drained from water; and Edward Earl of Manchester, and several others are declared undertakers thereof, on certain trusts, with power to erect banks, bridges, drains, locks, sluices, &c. for recovery of the said fens; and assessees of lands held by the adventurers under the trustees, may hold assemblies for making of bye laws, for the management of the works of draining; they may charge the owner of the lands by an acre tax, &c. and on default of payment, sell the defaulter's lands, &c.

The St. 11 Geo. 2. c. 34, ordains that commissioners shall be appointed, for effectually draining and preserving of the fens in the Isle of Ely in Cambridgeshire; who are authorized to make drains, dams, &c. and proper works thereof; and the said commissioners may charge proprietors with a proportionable acre-tax viz. for Waterden Fen, at the rate of 5 s. and Redmon, Cavendish Fen, and the Watts, at 2 s. an acre by the year, for four years; and afterwards at an yearly rate, not exceeding 1 s. 6 d. per acre; they may likewise borrow money for maintaining and effecting the works, by assigning over the duties: persons obstructing the draining to forfeit 100 l. and if any person shall burn any of the engines erected, he shall be imprisoned three years; and being convicted again of the like offence, to be guilty of felony. And for raising money, for draining and future preservation of Derping fens, a rate of 20 s. an acre is to be paid, by all the taxable land owners, according to agreement of the proprietors; levied by distress of goods, or sale of defaulter's lands; which may be also mortgaged to raise the money &c. by 11 Geo. 2. c. 35.

By the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 18, commissioners are appointed for draining and preserving certain fen lands in the several parishes of Mancey, Upwell, Walney, Downham, Witcham, and in a certain extra-parochial place in Byal Fen, within the isle of Ely, and county of Cambridge, who may make an assessment of 1 s. 6 d. per acre yearly, on which they may borrow money, with like powers, authorities and directions as in Stat. 11 Geo. 2. cap. 34.

By Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 19, Any person convicted of maliciously cutting or destroying any bank, mill, engine, flood-gate or sluice, for draining the lands in Bedford level shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. By Stats. 11 Geo. 2. c. 34: 14 Geo. 2. c. 24: 21 Geo. 2. c. 18, the second offence in setting fire to engines for draining the fens mentioned in those acts is also made felony without benefit of clergy.

By Stat. 22 H. 8. c. 11, cutting down and destroying the dikes in Norfolk and Ely is made felony.—And by Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32, removing the materials of sea walls or banks incurs a forfeiture of 20 l.

FEOD OR FEUD.] See title Tenure, I. 1.

FEODAL, feodalis, vel feudalis.] Of or belonging to the feud or fee. Stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 24.

FEODALITY, Fealty. See title Fealty; Tenures, I. 6.

FEODARY, OR FEUDARY, feudatarius.] An officer of the court of wards, appointed by the master of that court by virtue of the statute 32 Hen 8. c. 26; whose business it was to be present with the eschator in every county at the finding of offices of lands, and to give in evidence for the King as well concerning the value as the tenure; and his office was also to survey the lands of the ward, after the office found, and to rate it. He did likewise assign the King's widows their dowers; and receive all the rents of wards, lands within his circuit, which he answered to the receiver of the court. This office was wholly taken away by the operation of statute 12 Car. 2. cap. 24, abolishing tenures.

FEODATARY OR FEUDATARY, The tenant who held his estate by feodal service; and grantees, to whom lands in feud or fee were granted by a superior lord, were sometimes called homagers; and in some writings are termed vassals, feuds and feodataries. See title Tenures, I.

FEODUM, See FEUD.

FEODUM MILITIS, A knight's fee: feodum laicum, a lay fee, or land held in fee of a lay lord. Kennet's Gloss. See title Finds.

FEOFFMENT, Feoffamentum, from the verb feoffare; donatio feudi.] A gift or grant of any manors, messuages, lands or tenements, to another in fee, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin and possession of the thing given or granted.—In every feoffment, the giver or grantor is called the feoffor, and he that receives by virtue thereof, is the feoffee. Littleton says, the proper difference between a feoffor and a donor, is, that the one gives in fee-simple, the other in fee-tail. Litt. lib. 1. cap. 6.

Blackstone, (2 Comm. 399,) defines feoffment to be the gift of any corporeal hereditament to another. The deed of feoffment is our most ancient conveyance of lands; and in records we often find sees given to knights under the phrases of de veteri feoffamento, and de novo feoffamento; the first whereof were such lands as were given or granted by by King Henry I. And the others, such as were granted after the death of the said King, since the beginning of the reign of Henry II. At Common-law the usual conveyance was by feoffment, to which delivery (shortly called livery) and seisin were necessary, the possession being thereby given to the feoffee; but if livery and seisin could not be made, by reason there was a tenant in possession, the reversion was granted, and the particular tenant attorned. Co. Lit. 9. 49. A feoffment is said, in some respects, to excel the conveyance by fine and recovery, it clearing all disseisins, abatements, intrusions, and other wrongful estates, which no other conveyance doth: and for that it is so solemnly and publicly made, it has been of all other conveyances the most observed. W. & A. Symb. 235: Plowd. 554. See this Dict. titles Conveyance; Deed; and 2 Comm. c. 20: Shep. Touchst. c. 9. and the notes to the 8vo edition 1791.

This conveyance is now but very little used; except where no consideration passes, as in case of trustees of lands for a corporation, &c. It is still however a formal, valid, and effectual mode of conveyance: but has been of late years almost entirely superseded by the conveyance by Lease and Release. See this Dict. under that title; as also titles Bargain and Sale; Conveyance; Deed.

It will be found useful to consider the learning relating to feoffments according to the following division.

I Of what Things a Feoffment may be made.

II Who may make a Feoffment, and how it is to be made.

III. Of the different Kinds of Livery; with their Effects and Operations.

I. A Feoffment may be of a messuage, land, meadow, pasture, or other corporeal hereditaments, and of a moiety, third, or fourth part of it; that lie in livery.

So a feoffment may be made of lands, in which a man has no fixed estate; as, if he has twelve acres to be annually assigned in such a meadow; and livery in any acre, which he has at the time of the feoffment, is sufficient. Co. Lit. 4 a; 48 b; 2 Roll. 10 l 40—50.

So, if a feoffment be of fifty acres towards the North in such a moor, which contains 100 acres, livery in any of them is sufficient. 2 Roll. 11 l 5: Dy. 372 b.

So, if two manors be divided alternis vicibus between parceners, either may make a feoffment of her manor; and the deed ought to comprehend both; and she shall make livery in one secundum formam chartæ this year, and in the other the next year. Co. L. 48 b.

But a feoffment cannot be made of a thing of which livery cannot be given; as, of incorporeal inheritances, rent, advowson, common, &c. 2 Roll. 1 l. 20. Though it be an advowson, &c. in gross. Cont. 11 H. 6. 4: Acc. 2 Roll. 1 l. 21.

So a feoffment of lands, which are uncertain till a future act, is void; for livery does not operate in futuro: as, if A. agrees by indenture to convey 20 l. per annum in land to such an use, and 20 s. per annum to such an use, and makes a feoffment of all his lands to the uses in the indenture; it will be void for all but that where livery was made, it not being ascertained which shall be to one use, and which to the other. R. 1 Roll. 187.

In a deed of feoffment, there must be a good feoffor, that is, one able to grant the thing conveyed by the deed; a feoffee capable to take it; and a thing grantable, and granted in the manner the law requireth. Co. Lit. 42; 49; 190.

See further of what things a feoffment may be made Com. Dig. Feoffment (A. 2) Vin. Ab. Feoffment (C.)

II. If a person non compos makes a feoffment, and gives livery himself, this is allowed on all hands to be good to bind himself, so that he can by no process or plea avoid the feoffment, and restore himself to the possession; the same law of an idiot; and the reason is, because the investiture being made before the pauca curia, their solemn attestation could not be defeated by the person himself, because it is presumed they are competent judges of the ability of the feoffor to make such feoffment. 2 Roll. Abr. 22 Co. Lit. 247: 4 Co. 125 a: Show. Par. Cases 153. and see title Idiots and Lunatics; 3 and post. II.

But if an infant makes a feoffment, and makes livery himself, this shall not bind him, but he himself may avoid it by writ of dam fut infra aetatem; yet the feoffment of the infant is not void in itself, as well because he is allowed to contract for his benefit, as that there ought to be some act of notoriety to restore the possession to him equal to that which transferred it from him. 4 Co. 125: 2 Roll. Abr. 2: 8 Co. 42, 43: Whittingham's case.

Yet if an infant makes a feoffment, and a letter of attorney to make livery, that is void; so if a person non compos makes a surrender or release, this is void in law; so if he makes a letter of attorney to give livery; but the heir at law after the death of the person of non-sane memory, or idiot, may avoid his feoffment; and so may the King upon an office found of his lunacy during his life. 8 Co. 45: Co. Lit. 247 a: 4 Co. 125 a: 2 Roll. Abr. 2: Show. Par. Cases 153.

There must be livery of seisin in all feoffments, and gifts, &c. where a corporeal inheritance or freehold doth pass; and without livery, the deed is no feoffment, gift or demise. Lit. 59: 8 Rep. 82. But a freehold may pass without livery, by the statute 27 H. 8, c. 10. By force of which statute, a feoffment to the use of the feoffor, feoffee, &c. supplies the place of livery and seisin. Wood's Inst. 239.

But a feoffment may not be of such things whereof livery and seisin may not be made; for no deed of feoffment is good to pass an estate without livery of seisin; and if either of the parties die before livery, the feoffment is void. Plowd. 214, 219. Though where a feme feoffor made a feoffment of lands with livery in view, and then married the feoffee before the livery was executed by actual entry; it was adjudged the livery might be executed after marriage, the feoffee having not only an authority to enter, but an interest passed by the livery in view, and the woman did all on her part to be done, 1 Pent. 186.

A man may either give or receive livery in deed by letter of attorney; for since a contract is no more than the consent of a man's mind to a thing, where that consent or concurrence appears, it were unreasonable to oblige each person to be present at the execution of the contract, since it may as well be performed by any other person delegated for that purpose by the parties to the contract. Co. Lit. 52: 2 Roll. Abr. 8.

But such delegation, or authority to give or receive livery, must be by deed, that it may appear to the court, that the attorney had a commission, to represent the parties ties that are to give or take the livery, and whether the authority was pursued. Co. Lit. 48 b. 52 a.

If a man be disseised, and makes a deed of feoffment, and a letter of attorney to enter and take possession of the land, and afterwards to make livery, according to the form of the charter, it will be a good feoffment, though he was out of possession at the time of the deed made: for the feoffment takes effect by the livery, and not by the deed. Co. Lit. 48, 52.

A feoffment being a Common-law conveyance, and executed by livery, makes a transmutation of estate; but a conveyance on the statute of uses, as a covenant to stand seised, &c. makes only a transmutation of possession, and not of estate. 2 Lev. 77: 1 Cent. 378. A feoffment to the use of A. for life, the remainder to B. If A. refuses to take the estate, B. shall take presently, because the whole estate is out of the feoffor by livery; but if it had been by covenant to stand seised, he should not have taken till after the death of A. but it would rest in the covenantor, who shall have the use in the mean time. 2 Lev. 77: 1 Leon. Ca. 279 Before the Stat. Westm. 1, if a man had made feoffment in fee, without declaring any use, it should have been to the use of the feoffee; though now by that statute, where no consideration or declaration of use is expressed, it shall go to the feoffor himself. 2 Leon. 15, 16. If I convey lands by feoffment, which I have on the part of the mother, to S. and his heirs, without consideration; the use will be void, and the land shall return again to me and my heirs on the part of the mother; yet if I declare the use to me and my heirs, or upon such feoffment reserve a rent in like manner, it shall go to my heirs at the Common-law, it being a new thing divided from the land. Hob. 31: Co. Lit. 13, 231: 1 Rep. 100: Dyer 134. Where a man makes a feoffment, without any consideration; by that the estate and possession passes, but not the use, which shall descend to his heir. 1 Leon. 182.

A feoffment in fee is made to the use of such persons, and for such estates, as the feoffor shall appoint by his will, or to the use of his last will; by operation of law the use vests in the feoffor, and he is seised of a qualified fee until he makes his will, and declares the uses; and after the will is made, it is only directory, for nothing passes by it but all by the feoffment. 6 Rep. 18: Moor 567. A feoffment in fee, upon condition, &c. was inrolled, but no livery made; and it was adjudged no good feoffment, but the inrollment shall conclude the person to say that it was not his deed. Poph. 6: 2 Nelf. Abr. 844. If a bargain and sale of lands be not inrolled, and the bargainor deliver livery and seisin of the lands secundum formam chartæ, &c. it has been held a good feoffment. 2 And. 68.

A feoffment in fee made upon condition not to alien, the condition is void; because it is repugnant to the estate; but if livery is had, the feoffment will be good against the feoffor: and a bond with condition that the feoffee shall not alien, is said to be good. Co. Lit. 206: Cro. Jac. 596. If a man makes a feoffment of lands on condition that the feoffee shall give the lands to the feoffor, and his wife in special tail, remainder to the heirs of the feoffor; and he dies before such gift is made, the feoffee ought to make it as near the intent of the condition as may be, viz. to the wife without impeachment of waste, remainder to the heirs of the body of her husband, on her body begotten, and remainder to the husband's right heirs. In case the feoffor, and his wife both die, the feoffee then should make the estate to the issue, and heirs of the body of his father and mother begotten, remainder to the right heirs of the husband or father. Co. Lit. 219, 220.

Tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee; the inheritance of the tail is not given to the feoffee by the feoffment, nor is he thereby tenant in tail; for none shall be tenant in tail but he only who is comprehended in the gift made by the donor. But it gives away all the immediate estate the feoffor had. Plowd. 562: Hob. 335. If lessee for life, and the reversioner in fee, make a feoffment in fee by deed, each gives his estate; the lessee his by livery, and the fee from him in remainder. 6 Rep. 15: Lil. Abr. 609. A feoffment was made habendum to the feoffee and his heirs, after the death of the feoffor, and livery was made: yet it was held to be a void feoffment, for an estate of freehold in lands cannot begin at a day to come: but where a lessor made a lease for lives, and granted the reversion to another for life, whose estate for life was to begin after the death of the survivor of the other lessees for life, this was adjudged a good estate in reversion for life. Hob. 171: 1 Nelf. Abr. 846.

If the husband alone make a feoffment of his wife's land, or of both their lands, his wife being on the land and disagreeing to it; this will be good against all persons but the wife: also so it is, if one jointenant make a deed of feoffment of the whole land his companion being then upon it; or if a man disseise me of my lands, and then enfeoff another thereof, whilst I am upon the land, &c. Park. § 219, 220.

Every gift or feoffment of lands made by fraud or maintenance, shall be void; and the disseisee, notwithstanding such alienation, shall recover against the first disseisor his land and double damages; provided he commence his suit in a year after the disseisin, and that the feoffor be pignor of the profits. Stat. 1 R. 2. c. 9. See Stat. 11 H. 6. c. 3.

See more fully who may make a feoffment and to whom, 4 Co. 125: 8 Co. 42 b. Bac. Abr. Feoffment, (D): Fin. Abr. Feoffment (E).

III. Livery may be by deed; or in law; which latter is also called livery av thū viewu.

The livery in deed, is the actual tradition of the land, and is made either by the delivery of a branch of a tree or a turf of the land, or some other thing, in the name of all the lands and tenements contained in the deed; and it may be made by words only without the delivery of any thing; as if the feoffor being upon the land, or at the door of the house, says to the feoffee, I am content that you should enjoy this land according to the deed; or enter into this house or land, and enjoy it according to the deed; this is a good livery to pass the freehold, because in all these cases, the charter of feoffment makes the limitation of the estate, and then the words spoken by the feoffor on the land, are a sufficient inducium to the people present, to determine in whom the freehold resides during the extent of the limitation; besides, the words, being relative to the charter of feoffment, plainly denote an intention to enfeoff. Co. Lit. 48 a.: 9 Co. 137 b. Thorowgood's case. 6 Co. 26. Sharp's case. 2 Rob. Abr. 7. And see Cro. Jac. 80. which seems contra.

But if a man without any charter, being in his house, says, *I here demise you this house, as long as I live, paying 20*l.* per annum*, this passes no freehold but only an estate estate at will; because the word demise denotes only the extent of the limitation of the estate intended to be conveyed; but bare words of limitation, without some acts or words to discover the intention of the feoffor to deliver over the possession, are not sufficient to convey the freehold; for if a charter of feoffment be made to a man and his heirs, this, without some other act, or word to give the possession, only passes an estate at will, because the act of delivery is requisite to the perfection of the charter; but besides the charter of feoffment, there must be some act or words to deliver over the possession, before the feoffee can enjoy it pursuant to the charter. 6 Co. 26: 2 Rol. Abr. 7: Co. Lit. 48: Cro. Eliz. 482: 9 Co. 138: Moor, pl. 632.

Livery in deed is thus performed — The feoffor, lessor, or his attorney, (for this may be as effectually done by deputy or attorney as by the principals themselves in person,) come to the land, or to the house; and there in the presence of witnesses declare the contents of the feoffment or lease on which livery is to be made: and then the feoffor, if it be of land doth deliver to the feoffee, all other persons being out of the ground, a clod or turf or a twig or bough there growing with words to this effect, "I deliver these to you in the name of feisin of all the lands and tenements contained in this deed." But if it be of a house, the feoffor must take the ring or latch of the door, the house being quite empty, and deliver it to the feoffee in the same form; and then the feoffee must enter alone and shut the door, and then open it, and let in the others. 1 Inst. 48. Wils. Synb. 251.

If the conveyance or feoffment be of divers lands, lying scattered in one and the same county, then in the feoffor's possession, livery of feisin of any parcel, in the name of the rest sufficeth for all; but if they be in several counties there must be as many liversies as there are counties, Lit. § 414. Also if the lands be out on lease, though all be in the same county, there must be as many liversies as there are tenants; because no livery can be made in this case but by the consent of the particular tenant; and the consent of one will not bind the rest. Dy. 18.

In all these cases it is prudent and usual to indorse the livery of feisin on the back of the deed; specifying the manner, place, and time, of making it, together with the names of the witnesses. Co. Lit. 48.

The livery within view, or the livery in law, is, when the feoffor is not actually on the land, or in the house, but being in sight of it says to the feoffee, I give you yonder house, or land, go and enter into the same, and take possession of it accordingly; this sort of livery seems to have been made at first only at the court barons, which were antiently held sub dio, (in the open air) in some open part of the manor, from whence a general survey or view might have been taken of the whole manor, and the pares curie easily distinguished that part which was then to be transferred. Pollex. 47. This livery in law cannot be given or received by attorney, but only by the parties themselves, 1 Inst. 48.

This latter sort of livery also is not perfect to carry the freehold, till an actual entry made by the feoffee, because the possession is not actually delivered to him, but only a licence or power given him by the feoffor to take possession of it, and therefore, if either the feoffor or feoffee die before livery, and entry made by the feoffee, the livery within the view becomes ineffectual and void; for if the feoffor dies before entry, the feoffee cannot afterwards enter, because then the land immediately descends upon his heir, and consequently no person can take possession of his land without an authority delegated from him who is the proprietor; nor can the heir of the feoffee enter, because he is not the person to whom the feoffor intended to convey his land, nor had he an authority from the feoffor to take possession; besides, if the heir of the feoffee were admitted to take possession after his father's death, he would come in as a purchaser, whereas he was mentioned in the feoffment to take as the representative of his ancestor, which he cannot do, since the estate never vested in his ancestor. Co. Lit. 48 b: 2 Rol. Abr. 3, 7: 1 Vent. 186: Moor 85: Pollex. 48.

The livery within view may be made of lands in another county than where the lands lie, because the translation of the feud was often made at the court baron, in the presence of pares curie; and these courts being held, sub dio, the pares could have a distinct view of every part of the manor; and therefore were proper to attest this sort of investiture, though the lands were in a different county, for notwithstanding that, they might have been part of the same manor, for which the court was held. Co. Lit. 48 b.

This ceremony was first instituted, that the pares of the county might, upon any dispute relating to the freehold, determine in whom it was lodged, and from thence be the better enabled to determine in whom the right was. Hence therefore it is, that if a man makes a feoffment, or lease for life, to commence in futuro, and makes livery immediately, the livery is void, and only an estate at will passes to the feoffee; for the design of the institution would fail, if such livery were effectual to pass the freehold; for it would be no evidence, or notoriety of the change of the freehold, if after the livery made, the freehold still remained in the feoffor; the use of the investiture would rather create than prevent the uncertainty of the freehold, and in many cases would put men to fruitless trouble and expence in pursuit of their right; for by that means, after a man had brought his præcipe against a person, whom he supposed to be tenant to the freehold, and had proceeded in it a considerable time, the writ might abate by the freehold's vesting in another, by virtue of a livery made before the purchase of the writ. Another reason why such future interests cannot be allowed to pass by any act of livery was because no man would be safe in his purchase, if the operation of livery might create an estate, to commence many years after the livery was made; and though they have allowed a future interest, to commence by way of lease, yet that had no such ill effect in making purchases uncertain, because antiently they were under the power of the freeholder, who by recovery might destroy them; and now, unless such leases are made upon good consideration, they are fraudulent against a purchaser; and it is not to be presumed that leases at great distances should be purchased for value. Cro. Eliz. 451: 2 Vent. 204: Co. Lit. 217: 5 Co. 94 b.

Hence, by the way, we may account why a freehold in reversion or remainder cannot be granted in futuro, though there no livery is necessary to pass it; as where A. is tenant for life, remainder to B. in fee; A. makes a lease for years to C. and afterwards grants the land to

D. habend⁹ from Michaelmas next ensuing, for life; this grant to D. was adjudged void, though C. attorned to it after Michaelmas, because such future grants create an uncertainty of the freehold; and the tenant of the freehold being the person who is to answer the stranger's præcipe, and who was answerable to the lord for the services, it were unreasonable to permit him by any act of his own, to prevent or delay the prosecution of their right. Cro. Eliz. 451: 2 Vent. 204: Co. Lit. 217: 5 Co. 94 b: 2 Co. 55, Buckley's case: 2 And. 29: Moor 423: Cro. Eliz. 450, 585: Hob. 170, 171: 5 Co. 94: 1 Rel. Rep. 261.

FERIAL DAYS, dies feriales, feræ] According to the Latin dictionary are holy days; but in the Stat. 27 H. 6. c. 3, Ferial days are taken for working days; all the days of the week, except Sunday; the week days as distinguished from Sunday, the profane from the sacred, were called dies feriales, by a charter dat. 28 Mart. 1448.—Ex Cartular. Eccl. Elyensis MS.

FERLINGATA (FERLINGUS AND FERDLINGUS) TERRÆ A quarter or fourth part of a yardland.—See titles Fardel of Land, and Fardingdeal.

FERM, firma] A house and land let by lease, &c. See title Farm.

FERMARY, from the Sax. ferme, victus] Is an hospital; and we read of friars of the fimury.

FERMISONA, 'The winter season of killing deer; as tempus pinguedinis is the summer season.

FERNIGO, A piece of waste ground where fern grows. Cartular. Abbat. Glasstow. MS.

FERRAMENTUM, ferramenta.] The iron tools or instruments of a mill—Et reparare ferramenta ad tres carrucas, i. e. the iron work of three ploughs. Lib. Nig. Herts.

FERRANDUS, An iron colour particularly applied to horses, which we at this time call an non grey.

FERRY, A liberty by prescription, or the King's grant, to have a boat for passage upon a river, for carriage of horses and men for reasonable toll: it is usually to cross a large river. Terms de Ley. A ferry is no more than a common highway; and no action will lie for one's being disturbed in his passage, unless he alledge some particular damage, &c. 3 Mod. Rep. 294.

A Ferry is in respect of the landing-place, and not of the water, the water may be to one, and the ferry to another; as it is of ferries on the T Thames, where the ferry in some places belongs to the archbishop of Canterbury, while the mayor of London has the interest of the water; and in every ferry, the land on both sides of the water ought to belong to the owner of the ferry, or otherwise he cannot land on the other part. Sauil 11. And every ferry ought to have expert and able ferrymen, and to have present passage, and reasonable payment for the passage. And it is requisite to have one, who has property in the ferry, and not to allow every fisherman to carry, and re-carry at their pleasure, for divers inconveniences; and especially when a place is between the divisions of two counties, any felon may be conveyed from one county to another, secretly, without any notice. Sav. 14.

A ferryman if it be on salt water, ought to be privileged from being pressed as a soldier, or otherwise. Sauil 11, 14.

Owner of a ferry cannot suppress that, and put up a bridge in its place without licence, and writ of ad quod damnum; per Holt Ch. J. Show. 243, 257: Cart. 193: 1 Salk. 12.

If a ferry be granted at this day, he that accepts such grant is bound to keep a boat for the public good; per Holt Ch. J. Show. 257.

Custom for the inhabitants to be discharged of toll, may have a reasonable beginning by agreement, as that the inhabitants of the town might be at the charge of procuring the grant, and in consideration thereof, one man to find the boat, and take toll; and the inhabitants to pay none. Show 257.

A common ferry was for all passengers paying toll, but the inhabitants of A. were toll-free. An inhabitant of A. may bring an action for taking toll, but not for neglecting to keep up the ferry; because the former is a private right, but the latter, a public. But he cannot maintain an action for not passing; for so, any other subject might bring an action, which would be endless; but the taking toll was a special damage, and without special damage he can only indict, or bring information. 1 Salk. 12.

The not keeping up a ferry, has been held to be indictable. See title Bridge.

FERSPEKEN, To speak suddenly.—Leg. H. 1. c. 61.

FASTA IN CAPPI, Were some grand holy days, on which the whole choirs and cathedrals wore caps. Vita. Abbat. S. Alban. p. 80, 83.

FESTINGMEN. The Sax. Eftinman signifies a surety or pledge; and to be free of festingmen, was probably to be free of frank-pledge, and not bound for any man's forth-coming, who should transgress the law. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 123.

FESTING PENNY, Earnest given to servants when hired or retained in service, so called in some North parts of England, from the Sax. Fistnan, to fasten, or confirm.

FESTUM, A feast. Festum S. Michaelis, the feast of St. Michael, &c.

FESTUM STULTORUM, The feast of fools. See Caput anni.

FEUD, (Dowry) See Dowry Feud.

FEUDAL AND FEUDARY, See titles Feodal and Feudary.

FEUDOTE, A recompence for engaging in a feud, and the damages consequent; it having been the custom in ancient times, for all the kindred to engage in their kinsman's quarrel. Sax. Dict.

FEUDS, See title Tenures I.

FIAT, A short order or warrant of some Judge for making out and allowing certain processes, &c. If a certiorari be taken out in vacation, and tested of the precedent term, the fiat for it must be signed by a judge of the court, some time before the effoin-day of the subsequent term, otherwise it will be irregular: but it is said there is no need for a judge to sign the writ of certiorari itself; but only where it is required by statute. 1 Salk. 150. See title Certiorari.

FIAT JUSTITIA. On a petition to the King, for his warrant to bring a writ of error in parliament, he writes on the top of the petition fiat justitia, and then the writ of error is made out, &c. And when the King is petitioned to redress a wrong, he indorses upon the petition, "Let right be done the party." Dyer 385: Stamf. Prærog. Reg. 22.

FICTION OF LAW, Fictio juris.] Is allowed of in several cases: but it must be framed, according to the rules of law; not what is imaginable in the conceptions of man; and there ought to be equity and possibility in every legal fiction. There are many of these fictions in the civil law; and by some civilians, it is said to be an assumption of law upon an untruth, for a truth in something possible to be done, but not done. Godolphin & Barr. The seisin of the conusee in a fine is but a fiction in our law; it being an invented form of conveyance only. 1 Lil. Abr. 610. And a common recovery is fictio juris, a formal act or device by consent, where a man is desirous to cut off an estate-tail, remainders, &c. 10 Rep. 42.

By fiction of law, a bond made beyond sea, may be pleaded to be made in the place where made, to wit, in Uxington in the county of Middlesex, &c. in order to try the same here; without which it cannot be done. Co. Lit. 261. And so it is in some other cases; but the law ought not to be satisfied with fictions, where it may be otherwise really satisfied; and fictions in law shall not be carried farther than the reasons which introduce them necessarily require. 1 Lil. Abr. 610: 2 Harw. 320.

FIDEMENTIRI, Is when a tenant doth not keep that fealty which he hath sworn to the lord. Leg. H. 1. c. 53.

FIEF, which we call fee, is in other countries the contrary to chattels: in Germany, certain districts or territories are called fiefs; where there are fiefs of the empire. See this Dict. title Fee; Tenure.

FIERI FACIAS, A judicial writ of execution, that lies where judgment is had for debt or damages recovered in the King's courts; by which writ the sheriff is commanded to levy the debt and damages of the goods and chattels of the defendant, &c. Old Nat. Br. 152. See this Dict. title Execution.

This writ, though mentioned in the statute W. 2. 13 E. c. 18, is a writ of execution at Common-law, and is called a fieri facias, because the words of the writ, directed to the sheriff, are quod fieri facias de tenis & catallis, &c. and from these words the writ takes its denomination. Co. Litt. 290 b.

This writ is to be sued out within a year and a day after judgment; or the judgment must be revived by scire facias: but if a fieri facias sued in time, be not executed, a second fieri facias, or elegit may be sued out; and it is said some years after, without a scire facias, provided continuances are entered from the first fi. fa. which it is also held may be entered after the second fi. fa. taken out, unless a rule is made that proceedings shall stay, &c. Sid. 59: 2 Nels. Abr. 776. If a man recover debt against A. B. and levy part of it by fieri facias, and this writ is returned; yet he may take the body in execution by capias for the rest of the debt. Rel. Abr. 904. The sheriff on a fieri facias is to do his best endeavours to levy the money upon the goods and chattels of the defendant; and for that purpose to inquire after his goods, &c. And the plaintiff may inquire and search if he can find any, and give notice thereof to the sheriff, who ex officio is to take and sell them if he can, or if not, by a writ of venditioni exponas. 2 Shep. Abr. 111.

There may be a testatum fieri facias into another county, if the defendant hath not goods enough in the county where the action is laid to satisfy the execution; and the fieri facias for the ground of the testatum, may be returned of course by the attornies, as originals are. 2 Salk. 589. If all the money is not levied on a fieri facias, the writ must be returned before a second execution can be issued; because it is to be grounded on the first writ, by reciting that all the money was not levied. 1 Salk. 318.

Where the sheriff sells goods which he levied by fieri facias, and doth not pay the money, action of debt will lie against him; for the defendant is discharged as to the plaintiff, and the sheriff is now become his debtor in law; and if the sheriff die after he hath levied the debt, the like action will lie against his executors, as it is a duty when levied. March. Rep. 13: Cro. Car. 387.

If a sheriff that hath seized goods by fieri facias is going out of his office, he must deliver them to the new sheriff, and return his writ executed pro tanto; and he ought not to deliver them to the owner, by reason the writ of execution is warranted by record, and therefore the discharge thereof must appear by record. Telv. 44. Upon a fieri facias the sheriff returned, that he had levied goods ad valentiam of the debt; the return being filed, a motion was made that he might bring in the money, which not being done, an attachment was granted, and then the sheriff appeared and prayed to amend the return, for that the goods were damaged by lying, and he could not get buyers; but it was adjudged that the return shall not be altered, for he might have returned this at first by saying excuse; and having returned that he had levied goods ad valentiam, he shall pay the money. Sid. 407.

The sheriff cannot deliver the goods by him taken in execution to the plaintiff, in satisfaction of his debt; because his authority is to sell the goods. Lut. 589: 1 Lil. Abr. 611. And if a sheriff sells the goods taken by fieri facias at under-price, the sale is good, and the defendant can have no remedy; though where there appears to be covin between the sheriff and the buyer, the owner shall have his action upon the case. Kilw. 64: 1 Salk. 28. On a fieri facias the sheriff has power to take any thing but wearing cloaths; and if the defendant hath two gowns, &c. it is said he may sell one. If the sheriff executes a writ of fieri facias, he may afterwards return nihil bona, if there appear a prerogative writ; or, on better information, that the goods taken were not the defendant's. Comb. 356, 452.

By the seizure of the goods, the sheriff hath a property in them; but goods of a stranger, &c. in the possession of the defendant shall not be seized in execution; for the sheriff at his peril must take notice whose goods they are: though, if the sheriff inquires by a jury, where the property is lodged, and it is found that they are the defendant's goods, when they are not, this will indemnify the sheriff. Dalt. Sher. 60: West's Inst. 608.

The sheriff cannot break open the door of an house to execute a feri facias upon the goods of the owner or occupier; but a man's house shall be a protection for his own goods only, and not for the goods of another. 5 Rep. 91: 2 Nels. Abr. 775. If the defendant is a beneficed clergyman, and the sheriff returns quod est clericus beneficiatus, &c. a writ shall go to the bishop of the diocese to levy the debt de bonis ecclesiasticis, who thereupon sends forth a sequestration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the churchwarden, &c. But this writ of sequestration must be renewed every Term. 2 Inst. 4, 472, 627.

By virtue of a feri facias a term for years may be sold, as well as any other goods, and without an inquest or jury: afo corn growing may be sold. 8 Rep. 96: 1 Rel. Abr. 892. And if the sheriff on a feri facias, &c. selleth a term for years, and after that the judgment is reversed; the term shall not be restored, but the money for which it is sold. 4 Rep. 141.

But where a term is delivered to the plaintiff upon an elegit, and then the elegit is reversed, restitution shall be of the term. Co. Jac. 245. When upon a feri facias the sheriff sells a term; reciting it falsely, as to its commencement and ending, &c. the sale is void, because there is no such term, yet if he recites it generally, and being of divers years yet to come, sells all the interest which the defendant had in the land, the sale will be good. 4 Rep. 74.

If an execution is sued on a fi. fa. and the defendant dies before it is executed, it may be served on the defendant's goods in the hands of his executor or administrator. Co. Eliz. 181. Two feri facias's are delivered the same day to the sheriff against the same person; he is bound to execute that first, which was first delivered; and if he executes the last first, he must answer it to the party who brought the first, who may bring an action against him; but the execution shall stand good. 1 Salk. 330.

A man had a judgment for debt against another, and on a fi. fa. the sheriff took his goods in execution, but the plaintiff suffered the goods to remain in the hands of the debtor, and would not let the sheriff proceed any further: A. B. having also a judgment against this debtor, on a feri facias, seized upon the same goods, and it was held good, for the former was a fraudulent execution. 7 Mod. 37, 38.

On a writ of feri facias against one partner, the sheriff may take the goods of both; yet the vendee shall have only a moiety thereof in common with the other. Comb. 207. By the Common law, goods were bound from the day of the teste of the writ; but by Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. stat. 16, they are bound only from the time of delivery thereof, &c. Ibid. See Goldb. 147. and further this Dict. titles Sheriff; Extent; Execution.

FIFTEENTHS, A tribute or imposition of money, antiently laid generally upon cities, boroughs, &c. through the whole realm; so called, because it amounted to a fifteenth part of that which each city or town was valued at, or a fifteenth of every man's personal estate according to a reasonable valuation. And every town knew what was a fifteenth part, which was always the same; whereas a subsidy raised on every particular man's lands or goods, was adjudged uncertain; and in that regard the fifteenth seems to have been a rate formerly laid upon every town; according to the land, or circuit belonging to it. Camd. Brit. 171.

There are certain rates mentioned in Domesday, for levying this tribute yearly; but since, though the rate be certain, it is not to be levied but by parliament. By 31 Ed. 3. c. 13, a fifteenth was granted, for pardon, &c. The 7 Ed. 6. c. 4, granted a subsidy and two fifteenths by the temporality, &c. And in the 1, 5, &c. Eliz. and 1, 3, and 18 Jac. 1, fifteenths and tenths were granted for maintaining the wars, &c.—See Co. ell. 1 Com. 309; and this Dict. title Taxes.

FIGHTING AND QUARRELLING, Is prohibited by statute, in a church, or church-yard, &c. on pain of excommunication, and other corporal punishment. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 4. See title Church.

FIGHTWITE, See] A mulct for fighting, or making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace.

FIGURES, It was moved to quash an indictment, because the year of our Lord in the caption was in figures. But per Hale, Ch. J. the year of the King is enough. Mod. 78. pl. 40: Mich. 22 Car. 2. Thon: Sid. 40: Ac. 19. Str. 88: 2 Lov. 102.

The Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 14, Allows the expressing numbers by figures in all writs, &c. pleadings, rules, orders and judgments, &c. in courts of justice, as have been commonly used in the said courts, notwithstanding any thing in the Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. See titles Pleading; Error; Amendment.

FILACER, FILAZER or FILIZER, Filizarus, from Lat. Filum] An officer of the court of Common Pleas, so called, as he files those writs whereon he makes out process. There are fourteen of these filazers in their several divisions and counties, and they make forth all writs and processes upon original writs, issuing out of Chancery, as well real, as personal and mixed, returnable in that court: and in actions merely personal, where the defendants are returned summoned, they make out pones or attachments; which being returned and executed, if the defendant appears not, they make forth a disfringas, and so ad infinitum, or until he doth appear; if he be returned nihil, then process of capias infinite, &c. They enter all appearances and special bails, upon any process made by them: and make the first seire facias on special bails, writs of habeas corpus, disfringas nuper vicecomitem vel ballivum, and all superfedas's upon special bail: in real actions, writs of view, of grand and petit cape, of withernan, &c. also writs of adjournment of 2 term, in case of public disturbance, &c.

And until an order of court, 14 Jac. 1, they entered declarations, imparlances and pleas, and made out writs of execution, and divers other judicial writs, after appearance: but that order limited their proceedings to all matters before appearance, and the prothonotaries to all after. The filazers of the Common Pleas have been officers of that court before the Stat. 10 H. 6. c. 4, wherein they are mentioned: and in the King's Bench, of later times, there have been filazers, who make out process upon original writs returnable in that court, on actions in general.

FILE, Filicium. A thread, string or wire, upon which writs, and other exhibits in courts and offices are fastened or filed, for the more safe keeping and ready turning to the same. A file is a record of the court; and the filings of process of a court, makes it a record of it. 1 Lit. 112. An original writ may be filed after judgment given in the cause, if sued forth before; declarations, &c. are to be filed. and affidavits must be filed, some before read in court; and some presently when read in court. Ibid. 113. Before filings a record removed by certiorari, the justices of B. R. may refuse to receive it, if it appears to be for delay, &c. and remand it back for the expedition of justice: but if the certiorari be once filed, the proceedings below cannot be revived. An indictment, &c. cannot be amended after filed. See this Dict. titles Certiorari: Amendment.

FIELD-ALE or FILKDALE; A kind of drinking in the field, by bailiffs of hundreds; for which they gathered money of the inhabitants of the hundred to which they belonged: but it has been long since prohibited. Bract: 4 Inst. 307.

FILICULUM, A ferny ground.—Co. Lit. 4.

FILIOIUS, Is properly a little son; a godson.—Dugd. H. man. 179.

FILLUM AQUÆ, The thread or middle of the stream where a river parts two lordships: Et habent istas buttas utique ad fillum aquæ predictæ. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. f. 390. Fille du Mer the high tide of the sea. Rot. Parl. 11 H. 4. It is the middle of any river or stream which divides counties, townships, parishes, manors, liberties, &c.

FINDERS, Mentioned in several ancient statutes, seem to be the same with those which we now call Searchers who are employed for the discovery of goods imported, or exported, without paying custom. See title Customs.

FINE OF LANDS.

THE LAW on this subject, of itself very extensive, is also closely implicated with that of Recoveries.—A definition of both terms is therefore here given, with some idea of the distinct nature of those assurances.—It might perhaps have been eligible to have brought together the law on both those subjects, but that was, to the present editor, more desirable than practicable. See therefore this Dict. title Recovery, for what relates exclusively thereto.

A FINE. Finis or Finalis Concordia; from the words with which it begins; and also from its effect in putting a final end to all suits and contentions. A solemn amicable agreement or composition of a suit, (whether that suit be real or fictitious,) made between the demandant and tenant, with the consent of the judges; and enrolled among the records of the court, where the suit was commenced; by which agreement freehold property may be transferred, settled and limited. See Cruise on Fines, 1st edit. 4, 89, 92.

Shepherd says, sometimes it is taken for “a final agreement or conveyance upon record for the settling and securing of lands and tenements;” and so it is designated by some to be, “an acknowledgement, in the king’s court, of the land or other things to be his right that doth complain:” and by others “a covenant made between parties and recorded by the justices:” and by others “a friendly, real, and final agreement amongst parties, concerning any land, or rent, or other thing whereof any suit or writ is hanging between them in any court:” and by others more fully “an instrument of record of an agreement concerning lands, tenements, or hereditaments; duly made by the king’s licence, and acknowledged by the parties to the same, upon a writ of covenant, writ of right, or such like, before the justices of the Common Pleas or others thereunto authorised, and engrossed of record in the same court; to end all controversies thereof, both between themselves which be parties and privies to the same, and all strangers not suing or claiming in due time.” Shep. Touchst. c. 3; and the authorities there-cited.

The most distinguishable properties of a Fine are, 1. The extinguishing dormant titles by barring strangers; unless they claim within five years. 2. Barring the issue in tail immediately. [But not barring the remainders or reversions, which depend on the estate tail barred; except where the tenant in tail has the immediate reversion in fee in himself. See Cruise on Fines, 2d edit. 176; 1 Show. 370: 1 Salk. 338: 4 Mod. 1.] 3. Binding Femes Coverts, see post. IV.—These constitute the peculiar qualities on account of which a Fine is most usually, if not always, resorted to, as one of the most valuable of the Common Assurances of the realm: being now in fact a substituted proceeding to transfer or secure real property by a mode more efficacious than ordinary conveyances. 1 Inst. 121 a note 1, 2:—for which see, at full length, Mr. Hargrave’s excellent Abridgement of the History of Fines and their purposes.

Fines being agreements solemnly made in the king’s courts were deemed to be of equal notoriety with judgments in writs of right; and therefore the common law allowed them to have the same quality of barring all who should not claim within a year and a day. See Phoe. 157. Hence we may probably date the origin and frequent use of Fines as feigned proceedings. But this puissance of a Fine was taken away by Stat. 34 E. 3 c. 16: and this statute continued in force till Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 7. and 4 H. 7. c. 24; which revived the ancient law, though with some change; proclamations being required to make Fines more notorious, and the time for claiming being enlarged, from a year and a day to five years. See post. I. The force of Fines on the rights of strangers being thus regulated it has ever since been a common practice to levy them merely for better guarding a title against claims, which, under the common statutes of limitation, might subsist with a right of entry for 20 years; and with a right of action for a much longer time. 1 Inst. ubi supra and see post.

A RECOVERY—In its most extensive sense is a restitution to a former right by the solemn judgment of a court of justice. In its general acceptation a Common Recovery is a judgment in a fictitious suit, brought against the tenant of the freehold, obtained in consequence of a default made by the person who is last vouched to warranty in such fictitious suit. Course on Recoveries, 1, 120, 121, 137.

The Common Recovery that is used for assurance of land is nothing else but factio juris or a certain form or course set down by law to be observed for the better assuring of lands and tenements to men. And this is somewhat after the example of Recovery upon title, which is without consent and contrary to the will of him against whom the same.

FINE OF LANDS.

same is had: for there is in this a colourable suit, wherein there is a demandant who is called the recoveror, and a tenant who is called the recoveree; and one that is called (or vouched) to warrant upon a supposed warranty, who is called the vouchee. Shep. Touchst. c. 3. and the authorities there cited.

Considered as a legal assurance or conveyance, it is a Fidion of law, adopted for the purpose of destroying that species of perpetuity which was created by the statute de donis; (13 E. 1. st. 1 c. 1;) and whereby all tenants in tail are enabled, by pursuing the proper form, to bar their estates-tail. 10 Rep. 37. And not only this, but it is also a bar to ALL remainders and reversions depending on such estate-tail so barred; and to all charges and incumbrances created by the persons in remainder and reversion. 1 Rep. 62. But a common recovery does not bar an executory devise unless the executory devisee comes in as a vouchee. Fearne 305: Pigot 134: Cro. Jac. 590: Palm. 131—And by Stat. 21 H 8. c. 15, no estate held by statute-merchant, staple, or elegit shall be avoided by means of a feigned recovery.—And see also this Stat. and Stat. of Gloucester, 1 E. 1. c. 11, as to termors for years.

DISTINCTIONS. Though a Recovery, generally speaking, is a more extensive species of conveyance than a Fine; to guard an estate against all claims and incumbrances, yet the operation of each is not seldom necessary in aid of the other. A Fine is therefore often levied for the purpose of creating a good tenant to the præcipe, on which the Recovery is suffered: and a Recovery is frequently suffered in order to operate as a discontinuance of an estate-tail, for the purpose of barring remainders or reversions depending on such estates-tail; and thus a conveyance by Fine and Recovery, if unreversed, bars all the world.

A Fine is technically said to be levied—A Recovery to be suffered.—Good writers however have but too frequently confounded the terms.

The Student may now pursue his enquires under the following heads:

- I. Generally, of the Nature, several Kinds, and Effect, of a Fine.
- II. Further, of the various Sorts of Fines; and how a Fine operates.
- III. Of what Things a Fine may be levied.
- IV. By whom, and to whom it may be levied; and see post VI.
- V. Before whom, and in what Manner it may be levied.
- VI. Who may be barred by a Fine, and who not.
- VII. How a Fine may be reversed, for Error or Fraud; and of amending Fines.

I. Under this head it will be necessary to explain, 1, The nature of a Fine. 2, Its several kinds. 3, Its force and effect.

1. A Fine is sometimes said to be a feoffment of record; Co. Lit. 50: though it might with more accuracy be called an acknowledgement of a feoffment on record. By which is to be understood, that it has at least the same force and effect with a feoffment, in the conveying and assuring of lands: though it is one of those methods of transferring estates of freehold by the common law, in which livery of seisin is not necessary to be actually given; the supposition and acknowledgment thereof in a court of record, however fictitious, inducing an equal notoriety. But, more particularly, a Fine may be described to be an amicable composition or agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the king or his justices; whereby the lands in question become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties. Co. Litt. 120. In its original it was founded on an actual suit, commenced at law for recovery of possession of the land or other hereditaments; and the possession thus gained by such composition was found to be so sure and effectual, that fictitious actions were, and continue to be, every day commenced, for the sake of obtaining the same security.

Fines are of equal antiquity with the first rudiments of the law itself; are spoken of by Glanvil. l. 8. c. 1, and Bracton. l. 5, tr. 5. c. 28, in the reigns of Henry II, and Henry III; as things then well known and long established: and instances have been produced of them even prior to the Norman invasion. Plowd. 369. So that the Stat. 18 E. 1, called modus levandi fines, did not give them original, but only declared and regulated the manner in which they should be levied, and carried on. And that is as follows:

First; The party to whom the land is to be conveyed or assured, commences an action or suit at law against the other, generally an action of covenant, though a Fine may also be levied on a writ of mesne, of quarrantia charter, or de consuetudinibus et servitiis; (Finch L. 278;) by suing out a writ of præcipe called a writ of covenant: the foundation of which is a supposed agreement or covenant, that the one shall convey the lands to the other; on the breach of which agreement the action is brought. On this writ there is due to the king, by antient prerogative, a primer fine, or a noble for every five marks of land sued for; that is, one-tenth of the annual value. 2 Inft. 511.—The suit being thus commenced, then follows:

Secondly; The licentia concordandi, or leave to agree the suit: for, as soon as the action is brought, the defendant, knowing himself to be in the wrong, is supposed to make overtures of peace and accommodation to the plaintiff; who accepting them, but having upon suing out the writ, given pledges to prosecute his suit, which he endangers if he now deserts it without licence, he therefore applies to the court for leave to make the matter up. This leave is readily granted, but for it there is also another Fine due to the king by his prerogative, which is an ancient revenue of the crown, and is called the king's silva, or sometimes the post fine, with respect to the primer fine before-mentioned. And it is as much as the primer fine, and half as much more, or ten shillings for every five marks of land; that is, three twentieths of the supposed annual value. 3 Rep. 39: 2 Inft. 511: Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 14.

Thirdly comes the concord, or agreement itself, after leave obtained from the court; this is usually an acknowledgment from the deforciant (or those who keep the other out of possession) that the lands in question are the right of the complainant. And from this acknowledgment, or recognition of right, the party levying the Fine is called the cognizor, and he to whom it is levied the cognizee. This acknowledgement must be made either openly in the Court of Common Pleas, or before the Lord Chief Justice of that court, or else before one of the judges of that court; or two or more commissioners in the country, empowered by a special authority called a writ

writ of dedimus potestatem; which judges and commissioners are bound by St. 18 E. 1. §. 4., to take care that the cognizors be of full age, sound memory, and out of prison. If there be any feme covert among the cognizors, she is privately examined whether she does it willingly and freely, or by compulsion of her husband.

The concord being the complete Fine, it shall be adjudged a Fine of that term in which the concord was made, and the writ of covenant returnable, 1 Salk. 341. A concord cannot be of any thing but what is contained in the writ of covenant: and the note of the Fine remaining with the Chirographer, it hath been held, est principale recordum. 3 Leon. 234.

Though one concord will serve for lands that lie in divers counties; yet there must be several writs of covenant. 3 Inst. 21: Dyer 227. A concord of a Fine may have an exception of part of the things mentioned therein: and if more acres are named, than a man hath in the place, or are intended to be passed; no more shall pass by the Fine than is agreed upon. 1 Leon. 81: 3 Bulst. 317, 318.

By these acts all the essential parts of a Fine are completed: and if the cognizor dies the next moment after the Fine is acknowledged, provided it be subsequent to the day on which the writ is made returnable, still the Fine shall be carried on in all its remaining parts. Comb. 71. See post. VII.

Fourthly, comes the note of the Fine: which is only an abstract of the writ of covenant, and the concord; naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement; this must be enrolled of record in the proper office, by direction of St. 5 H. 4. c. 14.

The fifth part is the foot of the Fine, or conclusion of it: which includes the whole matter, reciting the parties, day, year and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. Of this there are indentures made or engrossed at the Chirographer's office, and delivered to the cognizor and the cognizee, usually beginning thus, "Hæc est finalis concordia;" This is the final agreement;" and then reciting the whole proceeding at length. And thus the Fine is completely levied at common law.

By several statutes, still more solemnities are superadded, in order to render the Fine more universally public, and less liable to be levied by fraud or covin. And first, by St. 27 E. 1. c. 1. the note of the Fine shall be openly read in the court of Common Pleas, at two several days in one week, and during such reading all pleas shall cease. By Stat. 5 H. 4. c. 14: 23 Eliz. c. 3., all the proceedings on Fines, either at the time of acknowledgement, or previous, or subsequent thereto, shall be enrolled of record in the Court of Common Pleas. By St. 1 Ric. 3. c. 7. confirmed and enforced by St. 4 Hen. 7. c. 24., the Fine, after engrossment, shall be openly read and proclaimed in court (during which all pleas shall cease) sixteen times; viz four times in the term in which it is made, and four times in each of the three succeeding terms; which is reduced to one in each term by St. 31 Eliz. c. 2; and these proclamations are indorsed on the back of the record. It is also enacted by St. 23 Eliz. c. 3., that the Chirographer of Fines shall, every term, write out a table of the Fines levied in each county in that term, and shall affix them in some open part of the Court of Common Pleas all the next term, and shall also deliver the contents of such table to the sheriff of every county, who shall at the next assizes fix the same in some open place in the court, for the more public notoriety of the Fine.

2. Fines, thus levied are of four kinds:

First, What, in law French, is called a Fine "sur cognizance de droit, come ceo que il ad de son done;" or, a Fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee, as that which he hath of the gift of the cognizor. This is the best and surest kind of Fine, for thereby the deforciant, in order to keep his covenant with the plaintiff, of conveying to him the lands in question, and at the same time to avoid the formality of an actual feoffment and livery, acknowledges in court a former feoffment or gift in possession, to have been made by him to the plaintiff. This Fine therefore is said to be a feoffment of record; the livery, thus acknowledged in court, being equivalent to an actual livery: so that this assurance is rather a confession of a former conveyance, than a conveyance now originally made; for the deforciant, or cognizor, acknowledges, cognoscat, the right to be in the plaintiff, or cognizee, as that which he hath, de son done, of the proper gift of himself, the cognizor.

Secondly, a Fine "sur cognizance de droit tantum," or, upon acknowledgment of the right merely; not with the circumstance of a preceding gift from the cognizor. This is commonly used to pass a reversionary interest, which is in the cognizor. For of such reversions there can be no feoffment, or donation with livery supposed; as the possession during the particular estate belongs to a third person. Moor. 629. It is worded in this manner, "that the cognizor acknowledges the right to be in the cognizee; and grants for himself and his heirs that the reversion, after the particular estate determines, shall go to the cognizee." West. Symb. p. 2. § 95.

Thirdly a Fine "sur concessit," is where the cognizor, in order to make an end of disputes, though he acknowledges no precedent right, yet grants to the cognizee an estate de novo, usually for life or years, by way of supposed composition. And this may be done reserving a rent, or the like; for it operates as a new grant. West. p. 2. § 66.

Fourthly, A Fine, "sur done, grant, et render," is a double fine, comprehending the Fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c. and the Fine sur concessit: and may be used to create particular limitations of estate; and this to persons who are strangers, or not named in the writ of covenant; whereas the Fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c. conveys nothing but an absolute estate, either of inheritance or at least of freehold. Salk. 340. In this last species of Fines, the cognizee, after the right is acknowledged to be in him, grants back again or renders to the cognizor, or perhaps to a stranger, some other estate in the premises. But, in general, the first species of Fine, sur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c. is the most used; as it conveys a clear and absolute freehold, and gives the cognizee a seisin in law, without any actual livery; and is therefore called a Fine executed; whereas the others are but executory. See post. II.

3 The force and effect of a Fine, principally depend, at this day, on the common law and the two statutes, 4 H. 7. c. 24: and 32 H. 8. c. 36. The ancient common-law, with respect to this point, is very forcibly declared by the St. 18 E. 1. §. 4. in these words, "And the reason, why such solemnity is required in passing a Fine, is this, because the Fine is to high a bar, and of so great force, and of a nature so powerful in itself, that it precludes not only those which are parties and privies to the Fine, and their heirs, but all other persons in the world, who are of full age, out of prison, of sound memory, and within the four seas, the day of the Fine levied; unless they put in their claim on the foot of the Fine within a year and a day." But this doctrine of barring the right by non-claim, was abolished for a time by 34 E. 3 c. 16. which admitted persons to claim, and falsify a Fine, at any indefinite distance. Litt. § 441; whereby as Sir Edward Coke observes, 2 In. 581, great contention arose, and few men were sure of their possessions, till the parliament held in 4 H. 7, reformed that mischief, and excellently moderated between the latitude given by the statute, and the rigour of the common law. For the statute then made (Stat. 4 H. 7 c. 241.) restored the doctrine of non claim, but extended the time of claim. So that now, by that statute, the right of all strangers whatsoever is barred, unless they make claim, by way of action or lawful entry, not within one year and a day, as by the common law, but within five years after proclamations made: except feme coverts, infants, prisoners, persons beyond the seas, and such as are not of whole mind: who have five years allowed to them and their heirs after the death of their husbands, their attaining full age, recovering their liberty, returning into England, or being restored to their right mind.

FINE OF LANDS I.

It seems to have been the intention, to have covertly, by this statute, extended Fines to have been a bar of estates-tail. But doubts having arisen whether they could, by mere implication, be adjudged a sufficient bar, which they were expressly declared not to be by the statute de donis; the St. 32 H. 8. c. 36, was thereupon made; which removes all difficulties, by declaring that a Fine levied by any person of full age, to whom, or to whose ancestors lands have been entailed, shall be a perpetual bar to them and their heirs claiming by force of such entail: unless the Fine be levied by a woman after the death of her husband, of lands which were, by the gift of him, or his ancestors, assigned to her in tail for her jointure; or unless it be of lands entailed by Act of Parliament or letters patent, and whereof the reversion belongs to the crown. See Stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 20.

From this view of the common law, regulated by these statutes, it appears, that a Fine is a solemn conveyance on record from the cognizor to the cognizee; and that the persons bound by a Fine are Parties, Privies, and Strangers.

The Parties are either the cognizors, or cognizees; and these are immediately concluded by the Fine, and barred of any latent right they might have, even though under the legal impediment of coverture. And indeed, as this is almost the only act that a feme covert, or married woman, is permitted by law to do, (and that because she is privately examined as to her voluntary consent, which removes the general suspicion of compulsion by her husband,) it is therefore the usual and almost the only safe method, whereby she can join in the sale, settlement, or incumbrance, of any estate. See post. IV.

Though a wife may thus join her husband in either a Fine or Recovery to convey her own estate and inheritance, or an estate settled upon her by her husband as her jointure, or to convey the husband's estates discharged of dower; (See Craik: Pigot;) yet if a jointress after her husband's death levies a Fine or suffers a Recovery without the consent of the heir, or the next person entitled to an estate of inheritance, the Fine or Recovery is void; and is also a forfeiture of her estate, by Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20. See post. IV.

Privies to a Fine are such as are any way related to the parties who levy the Fine, and claim under them by any right of blood, or other right of representation. Such are the heirs general of the cognizor; the issue in tail since the statute of H. 8; the vendee; the devisee; and all others who must make title by the persons who levied the Fine. For the act of the ancestor shall bind the heir, and the act of the principal, his substitute, or such as claim under any conveyance made by him subsequent to the Fine so levied. 3 Rep. 87.

Strangers to a Fine are all other persons in the world, except only parties and privies. And these are also bound by a Fine, unless within five years after proclamation made, they interpose their claim; provided they are under no legal impediments, and have then a present interest in the estate. The impediments, as hath before been said, are coverture, infancy, imprisonment, insanity, and absence beyond sea; and persons, who are thus incapacitated to prosecute their rights, have five years allowed them to put in their claims after such impediments are removed. Persons also that have not a present, but a future interest only, as in remainder or reversion, have five years allowed them to claim in, from the time that such right accrues. Co. Lit. 372. And if within that time they neglect to claim, or (by the Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16.) if they do not bring an action to try the right, within one year after making such claim, and prosecute the same with effect, all persons whatsoever are barred of whatever right they may have, by force of the statute of non-claim. See this Dict. title Claim.

But, in order to make a Fine of any avail at all, it is necessary that the parties should have some interest or estate in the lands to be affected by it. Else it were possible that two strangers by a mere confederacy, might defraud the owners by levying Fines of their lands; for if the attempt be discovered, they can be no sufferers, as to the estate in question, but must only remain in statu quo; whereas if a tenant for life levies a Fine, it is an absolute forfeiture of his estate to the remainder-man or reversioner, if claimed in proper time. Co. Lit. 251. It is not therefore to be supposed that such tenants will frequently run so great a hazard; but if they do, and the claim is not duly made within five years after their respective terms expire, the estate is for ever barred by it. 2 Lev. 52. Yet where a stranger, whose presumption cannot thus be punished, officiously interferes in an estate which in no wise belongs to him, his Fine is of no effect: and may at any time be set aside (unless by such as are parties or privies thereunto) by pleading that "partes finis nihil habuerunt." Hob. 334. And even if a tenant for years, who hath only a chattel interest and no freehold in the land, levies a Fine, it operates nothing, but is liable to be defeated by the same plea. 5 Rep. 123; Hard. 401. See post. VII.—Wherefore when a lessee for years is disposed to levy a Fine, it is usual for him to make a feoffment first, to displace the estate of the reversioner, and create a new freehold by disseisin. Hard. 402; 2 Lev. 52. See this Dict. title Recovery.

FINE OF LANDS II.

In order to punish criminally such as thus put the estate of another to the hazard, as far as in them lies, the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 26, makes it felony without benefit of clergy to acknowledge or procure to be acknowledged, any Fine, Recovery, Judgment, &c. in the name of any person not privy or consenting to the same.

II. FINES are generally divided into those with, and without, proclamations; that with proclamations, is termed a Fine according to the statutes 1 R. 3. c. 7: 4 H. 7. c. 24. And such a Fine, every Fine that is pleaded is intended [supposed] to be, if it be not shewn what Fine it is. 3 Rep. 86.

If tenant in tail levies a Fine, and dies before all the proclamations are made, though the right of the estate tail descends upon the issue, immediately on the death of the ancestor, yet if proclamations are made afterwards, such right shall be barred by the Fine, by the statutes 4 H. 7. c. 24; 32 H. 8. c. 36: 3 Rep. 84.

The Fine without proclamations is called a Fine at the Common Law, being levied in such manner as was used before the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24; and is still of the like force by the common law, to discontinue the estate of the cognisor, if the Fine be executed. A Fine also with or without proclamations is either executed or executory: A Fine executed is such a Fine as of its own force gives present possession to the cognisee, without any writ of seisin to enter on the lands, &c. as a Fine sur cognissance de droit come ceo; and in some respects a Fine sur Release, &c. is said to be executed. A Fine executory doth not execute the possession in the cognisee, without entry or action, but requires a writ of seisin; as the Fine sur conuissance de droit tantum, &c. unless the party be in possession of the lands; for, if he be in possession at the time of levying the Fine, there need not be any such writ, or any execution of the Fine; and then the Fine will enure by way of extinguishment of right, not altering the estate or possession of the cognisee, however it may better it. Wess. § 20.

Since the statute of uses, 27 H. 8, writs of possession are never sued out where Fines are levied to uses; for the statute executing the possession to the use, the cognisee is immediately in possession without attornment; and by Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16, attornment after a Fine is become unnecessary. Booth, 250: P.g. 49: Cruise 59.

Fines are likewise single or double; single, where an estate is granted by the cognisor to the cognisee, and nothing is thereby rendered back again from the cognisee to the cognisor. The double Fine is that which doth contain a grant or render back again from the cognisee, of the land itself; or of some rent, common, or other thing out of it, and by which remainders are limited, &c. Wess. §§ 21, 30. A Fine is also sometimes called a double Fine, when the lands lie in several counties.

Lands that are bought of divers persons may pass by one Fine, and then the writ of covenant must be brought by all the vendees against all the vendors, and they must every one of them warrant for himself and his heirs; and such a Fine is good. Shep. Touchst. c. 2. p. 19. And such joint Fines seem reasonable, when the several purchases are of small value, though they are ex gratia. See Wess. on Fines, 47; where an order of the Chancellor is inserted, authorizing the curfitor to stay the writ when there is more than one demandant and one disforçant, except coparceners, jointtenants and tenants in common. It is now the practice to permit two separate purchases to be comprized in one Fine on an affidavit that the value of them together does not exceed 200 l.

The first kind of Fine sur cognissance de droit come ceo, &c. is a single Fine levied with proclamations, according to the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. It is, as has been already said, the principal and surest kind of Fine: and this because it is said to be executed, as it gives present possession (at least in law) to the cognisee, so that he needs no writ of hab. fac. seisinam, or other means for execution thereof; for it admits the possession of the lands, of which the Fine is levied, to pass by the Fine, so that the cognisee may enter and the estate is thereby in him, to such uses as are declared in the deed to lead the uses thereof; but if it be not declared by deed to what use the Fine was levied, such Fine shall be to the use of the cognisor that levied the same. 2 Inst. 513. If the cognisee of a Fine levied of lands, pay money unto the cognisor at the time of the Fine levied, and there is no use declared of the Fine, the law will contrive the Fine to the use of the cognisee: and if there be no money paid by the cognisee, nor any use declared, the Fine shall enure to the cognisor that levied it. Pasch. 23 Car. B. R. Where a Fine is levied to the use of two persons in tail, &c. in consideration of marriage, though the deed to lead its uses doth not mention any marriage had between them, yet it hath been adjudged, that the estate-tail is executed before marriage; for the Fine doth carry the uses, and they are perfected by the Fine, notwithstanding the consideration is perfected afterwards; but without a Fine, the marriage must be had, before any use could arise. 1 Leon. 138.

If a feme covert alone declares the uses of a Fine intended to be levied by husband and wife of her land, and the husband alone declares other uses; it hath been held that both declarations of uses are void, and the use shall follow the ownership of the lands: But in another case it was determined that the uses declared by the wife were void; and the uses declared by the husband, good only against himself, during the coverture. If husband and wife levy a Fine of the lands of the wife, and he alone declares the uses, this shall bind the wife, if her dissent doth not appear; because otherwise it shall be intended that she did consent. 2 Rep. 56, 59. Though there be a variance between a deed declaring uses, and the Fine levied; yet, if nothing appears to the contrary, such Fine by construction of law shall be to the uses declared in the deed, and which is evidence thereof: and where a Fine varies from a former description, it has been held that a new deed made after, will declare the uses of the Fine. It is not absolutely necessary, to insert the word Uses, in the declaration of uses of Fines; for any words which shew the intent of the parties will be sufficient. 1 Ld. Raym. 289, 290.

A Fine sur conuissance de droit come ceo, &c. may not be levied to any person but one that is party to the writ of covenant; though a vouchee, after he hath entered into the warranty to the demandant, it is said, may confess the action, or levy a Fine to the demandant, for he is then supposed to be tenant of the land, though he is not a party to the writ; and yet a Fine levied by the vouchee to a stranger is void. No single Fine can be with a remainder over to another person not contained in it: But if A. levy a Fine to B. sur conuissance de droit come ceo, and

FINE OF LANDS III.

B. by the same concord grants back the land again to A. for life, remainder to E. the wife of A. for her life, remainder to A. and his heirs; this will be a good Fine. Plowd. 248, 249.

The second fort of Fine sur conuizance de droit tantum, is said to be a Fine executory, and much of the nature of a Fine sur concessit; Though it is most commonly made use of to pass a reversion, it is also sometimes used by tenant for life, to make a release (in nature of a surrender) to him in reversion, but not by the word surrender; for it is said a particular tenant, as for life, &c. cannot surrender his term to him in reversion by Fine; but he may grant and release to him by Fine. Plowd. 268: Dyer 216. A Fine upon a release, &c. shall not be intended to be to any other use, but to him to whom it is levied. 3 Leon. 61.

The Fine sur concessit, used to grant away estates for life or years, is also executory, so that the cognisees must enter, or have a writ of hab. fac. seisinam to obtain possession; if the parties to whom the estate is limited, at the time of levying such Fine, be not in possession of the thing granted.

The Fine sur done grant & render, is partly executed and partly executory; and as to the first part of it, is altogether of the same nature with a Fine sur conuizance de droit come ceo; but as to the second part containing a grant and render back, it is taken in law to be rather a private conveyance or charter between party and party, and not as a writ of judgment upon record: and this render is sometimes of the whole estate, and sometimes of a particular estate, with remainder or remainders over; or of the reversion; and sometimes with reservations of rent and clause of distress, and grant thereof over by the same Fine. 5 Rep. 38.

A. B. and C. D. levied a Fine of lands, and the cognisee by the same Fine rendered back the land to A. B. in tail, reserving a rent to himself, &c. the rent and reversion; shall pass, though in one Fine; and it shall enure as several Fines. Cro. Eliz. 727.

It is said, a grant and render of land, cannot be immediately in primo gradu to a person who is no party to the writ; but mediately, or in secundo gradu, it may. 3 Rep. 514: Bro. 108. The Fine with grant and render, differs from the Fine sur conuizance de droit come ceo, &c. as that must be levied of the land in the original; but the grant and render may be of another thing than is expressed in the original: though to make a good grant and render, the land rendered must pass to the cognisee by the Fine; for he cannot render what he hath not. 3 Rep. 98, 510.

A man may not by this Fine reserve to himself a less estate by way of remainder than the fee. and the render of a rent (if any be) must be to one of the parties to the Fine and not to a stranger. Dyer 33, 69: 2 Rep. 39. To make a lease for years, &c. by Fine with a render; the lessee must acknowledge the land to be the right of the lessor that is seised thereof; and then such lessor grants and renders the same back again to the lessee, for a certain number of years, reserving rent, &c. and this is a good Fine: but if the lessor be tenant in tail, then to bind him, he and the lessee are to acknowledge the tenements the right of A. B. who is to render the same Fine to lessee for years, the remainder to the lessor and his heirs, &c. 44 Ed. 3. 45: 2 Leon. 206.

A Fine and Render is a conveyance at common law, and makes the cognisor, on the render back, a new purchaser; by which, lands arising on the part of the mother, may go to the heirs on the part of the father, &c. 1 Balk. 337.

A Fine and Deed to lead the uses are to be considered as one conveyance; and therefore the Fine operates according to the declaration of uses. Doug. 45: 2 Wils. 220.

All sorts of Fines in general may enure as a confirmation of a former estate, which was defeasible before. 1 Sand. 261. So a Fine may enure by way of extinguishment; therefore, if tenant in tail makes a lease, or other estate to A. and afterwards levies a Fine to B. the lease, or other estate, shall be indefeasible; for his right during such former estate was extinct by the Fine. R. Jon. 60: Cro. Jac. 689. See this Dict. title Estates.

Where a Fine and Recovery is of so many acres in S. the party interested shall have his election where and in what parts of the estate the Fine and Recovery should operate. Blany (Ld.) v. Mabon; Bro. P. C.

A Fine does not ascend, but only comprises the lands whereof it is levied; so that it is in all cases extremely proper to have a declaration of uses; that the very lands comprehended in the Fine, and intended to pass by it, may be precisely ascertained. 1 Cruise, cap. 7.

Fine by E. to the use of himself for life, remainder to his wife that should be at the time of his death, for life; remainder to the son of E. in tail. E. took to wife A. A Fine levied by E. and A. his wife, who afterwards survived him, and other uses declared, is no bar to her, because it was uncertain who would be the person; but had the person been certain, there perhaps, notwithstanding it was but a possibility, it might have been a bar; per Walmsley, J. Cro. Eliz. 826. pl. 31.

III. A FINE may be levied of every species of real property, as of an house, or messuage, manor, castle, office, rent, &c. and in general it may be laid down as a certain rule, that a Fine may be levied of every thing, whereof a præcipe quod reddat lies; &c. or of any thing, whereof a præcipe quod faciat lies; as customs, services, &c.; or whereof a præcipe quod permittat, or præcipe quod teneat may be brought. 2 Infl. 513.

As Fines may be levied of things in possession, so they may be levied of a remainder, or reversion, or of a right in futuro. 3 Rep. 90.

So now, since the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 7, (see title Tithes,) it may be levied of rectories, vicarages, tithes, pensions, oblations, and all ecclesiastical inheritances made temporal. Of a chantry. So it may be of a seignory. Of all services; as homage, tealty, &c. West. Of common of pasture. Of a corody. Of an office; as of the custody of a forest. Of a boiary. Of two pools and a fishery in the water of D. Of an annuity. See West Symb. 6, 7: Shep. Touchst. c. 2.

A Fine may be, and usually is, levied of a share in the New River Water, by the description of so much land covered by water; and when a Fine and Recovery of such share is necessary, in regard the New River runs through the several counties of Hertford, Middlesex and London, there must be three several Fines and Recoveries. 2 P. Wms. 128.

Where money is agreed to be laid out in lands to be settled in tail, a Fine cannot be levied of the money, but a decree of a court of Equity can bind it, as much as a Fine a Fine alone could have bound the land if it had been bought and settled. 1 P. Wms. 130: 2 Atk. 453: 3 Atk. 447: 1 Vez. 146: and See 1 P. Wms. 471, 485: 1 Bro. C. P. 223.

Fines may be levied of all things in esse, tempore finis, which are inheritable; but not of things uncertain; or of lands held in tail by the king's letters patent; or of land restrained from sale by act of parliament, or of lands in right of a man's wife, without the wife. 5 Rep. 225. West. § 25. Nor of common without number. Cruise, 121.

A Fine may be levied of a rent charge, or of a chief rent; and if a person who has a rent-charge, levies a Fine of the land, out of which the rent-charge issues, it will bar the rent-charge though the Fine be levied of the land, and not of the rent-charge. Cruise, c. 7; and the authorities here cited.

A Fine may be levied of an undivided moiety, or fourth part of a manor, as well as of the whole. 3 Rep. 88. But where a Fine is levied of a manor, nothing but a real manor will pass, and not a manor by reputation only. Cruise, c. 7.

The word tenement is not a sufficient description of any thing whereof a Fine is to be levied: for a tenement may consist of an advowson, a house or land of any kind: and therefore a Fine levied of a tenement is void, or at least voidable by writ of error; but a Fine of a messuage or tenement would probably be now held good. Cruise, c. 7. See title Ejectment.

And altho' it any kind of contract may be made and expressed by a Fine, as by a deed, and therefore it may be so made that one of the parties shall have the land, and the other a rent out of it; and that one shall have it for a time, and another for another time; also a lease for years, or a jointure for a wife, may be made; and a gift in tail, and a remainder over, may be limited and created thereby. 1 Rep. 76.

IV THE KING, and all persons who may lawfully grant by deed, may levy a Fine; but not infants, idiots, lunatics, &c. 7 Rep. 32. A corporation-sole may levy a Fine of land which he has in his corporate capacity; but bishops, deans, and chapters, parsons, &c. are restrained from levying of Fines to bind their successors. But a Fine cannot be levied by a corporation aggregate; for it cannot act but by attorney, and it cannot make co-nuissance by attorney. All persons that may be grantees, or that may take by contract, may take by Fine; though in cases of infants, feme covert, persons attainted, aliens, &c. who, it is said, may take by Fine, before the ingrossing of the Fine, there goes a writ to the justices of C. B. quod permittant finem levare. Lit. 669. Tenant in fee-simple, fee tail general, or special, tenant in remainder or reversion, may levy a Fine of their estates; so may tenant for life, to hold to the cognisee for life of tenant for life; but a person who is tenant, or hath an interest only for years, cannot levy a Fine of his term to another. 3 Rep. 77: 5 Rep. 124.

It is not necessary to be in possession of the freehold, in order to levy a Fine; but if any one entitled to the inheritance, or to a remainder in tail levies a Fine, it will bar his issue, and all heirs who derive their title through him. Hob. 333.

A Fine by a man non compos, though it ought not to be levied, binds for ever when it is levied. So a Fine by a man attainted for treason, or felony, binds all but the king, or the lord of the fee. West. Symb. 3. a: See 2 Wilf. 220. So a Fine by an infant, or feme covert without her husband, binds till it be avoided. Vide Com. Dig. tit. Baron and Feme, (P. 1.) Enfant, (B. 2.).—See 2 Black. Rep. 1205, a Fine acknowledged de bene esse by a feme covert, whose husband was abroad, before the Lord Chief Justice then in Court.

If commissioners take a Fine of an infant, &c. the court will grant an attachment against them; and upon examination and inspection, the Fine shall be vacated. R. Skin. 24.

Lands assured for dower, or term of life, or in tail, to any woman by means of her husband, or his ancestors, cannot be conveyed away from her by Fine, &c. without her act; but if a woman and her husband levy a Fine of her jointure, she is barred of the same; though if the jointure be made after coverture, when the wife hath an election to have her jointure, or dower on the husband's death, it is said this will be no bar of her dower in the residue of the land of the husband. Dyer, 358: Leon. 185. See titles Dowry: Jointure.

No Fine of the husband alone, of the lands of the wife, shall hurt her, but that she or her heirs, or such as have right, may avoid it; but if she joins with him, it shall bind her and her heirs. Women covert ought to be cautious in levying Fines with their husbands of their own lands; and if a married woman under age levies a Fine of her lands she cannot reverse it during her husband's life, nor after his death, if she be of full age when he dies; but if the husband dies during her minority, she may. Dyer 359: Wood's Inst. 243. A married woman ought not to be admitted alone without her husband to levy a Fine; and if she be received, the husband may avoid the Fine by entry; but if she do not, it is good to bar her and her heirs, except she be an infant at the time of the Fine levied; the husband and wife together may dispose of her land, &c. 12 Rep. 122. If baron and feme levy a Fine, the feme within age, she may be brought into court by habeas corpus, and if it be found by inspection, that she is under age, it hath been adjudged, where the baron and feme brought a writ of error, that as to both, quod finis revocetur. 1 Leon. 116, 117: 3 Salk. 168.

Husband and wife, tenants in special tail, the husband only levies a Fine, this bars the issue in tail; but it remains in right to the wife as to herself, and to all the estates and remainders depending upon it, and all the consequences of benefit to herself and others, so long as she lives, as if the Fine had not been levied. Hob. 257, 259. If a husband make a feoffment of the wife's land, upon condition; which is broken, and the feoffee levies a Fine, and the husband and wife die having issue, and five years pass; the heir is barred to enter as heir to the father upon the condition, but he shall have five years after the death of his father, as heir to his mother. Plowd. 367. When the husband and wife join in a Fine of the wife's lands, all the estate passeth from her, and he is joined only for conformity; so that if the Fine levied by husband and wife in such a case be reversed, she shall have restitution. 2 Rep. 57, 77. A husband and his wife covenanted to levy a Fine of the lands of the wife, to the use of the heirs of the body of the husband on the wife, remainder to the husband in fee; both dying without issue, it was held that the heir of the wife had the title, because the the limitation, to the heirs of the body of the husband, was merely void, there being no precedent estate of freehold for life, &c. to support it as a remainder. 2 Salk. 675: 4 Mod. 253.

As to femes covert, the books which say, that a Fine shall not bind a woman under coverture unless she be examined, must not be understood as if it were in her power to reverse the Fine for want of her examination, but they are to be understood in this sense, that the Judge ought not to receive a Fine from a feme covert without examining her, lest it should not proceed from her own freedom and choice; but if such a Fine be once admitted, and recorded without any examination, though the judge has omitted a very necessary part of his duty, yet the Fine shall stand, and neither the feme nor her heirs shall be admitted to aver that she was not examined; for that were to lessen the credit of the judgment of the courts of justice, which is the highest evidence of the law. 2 New Abr. 527: See 1 Inst. 171 a. in the note already referred to; in which arguments are brought to prove (apparently with great force and justice) that the common notion, of a Fine binding femes covert merely by reason of the secret examination of the wife by the judges, is incorrect. If the secret examination by itself was so operative, the law would provide the means of effectually adding that form to ordinary conveyances, and so make them conclusive to fines covert equally with a Fine. But it is clearly otherwise; and except in the case of conveyances by custom there must be a suit pendens for the freehold, and inheritance; or the examination, being extrajudicial, is ineffectual. This mode of binding femes covert by the judgment of the court in a real action, appears to have arisen from admitting them and their husbands jointly to defend actions brought against the feme for her estate, the adverse judgment on which was final against the feme.—When the transition was made to the case of friendly suits, the form of secret examination was introduced to avoid any undue influence of the husband. That the examination of a feme in other cases does not bind her to the alienation of her property, See 2 Inst. 673: Keilw. 4—20.—The just explanation therefore of the subject seems to be, that the pendency of a real action for the freehold of the land, in consequence of previously taking out an original writ, (without which preliminary, even at this day a Fine is a nullity,) should be deemed the primary cause of a Fine's binding a feme covert; and that her secret examination on taking the acknowledgement of the Fine, is only a secondary cause of this operation of Fines; See this Dict. title Baron and Feme VIII.

If a widow having an estate in dower accept of a Fine, and by the same Fine render back the land for 100 years, &c. this is a forfeiture of her estate within the Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20. See ante l. 3.

A. seised in fee levied a Fine to himself for life, remainder to his wife in tail-male for her jointure: had issue male; husband and wife levied a Fine and suffered a recovery.—After the death of the husband and wife issue male entered by force of the Stat. 11 H. 7. and held lawful. This case is out of the letter, though within the remedy of the statute, for the neither levied the Fine, &c. being sole, or with any after-taken husband but by herself with the husband who made the jointure. Co. Litt. 365 b. See further Vin Abr. Jointress I. K. Bac Abr. Discontinuance (D); as to what shall be deemed a forfeiture within the stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20; and who shall take advantage of it.

If tenant for life grants a greater estate by Fine than for his own life, it is a forfeiture: and if there be tenant for life, and remainder for life, and the tenant for life levy a Fine to him in remainder and his heirs, both their estates are forfeited; the tenant for life by levying the Fine, and the remainder-man for life by accepting it. 2 Lev. 209. Where a Fine is levied by tenant for life, for a greater estate, the Fine may be good; but it is a forfeiture of the estate of tenant for life, whereof he in remainder, &c. may take present advantage and enter: and when a person enters for a forfeiture, all estates are avoided. Dyer 111. Tho' if such a tenant for life levy a Fine in grant et release to the cognisee for the life of tenant for life; or by a Fine grant a rent out of the land for a longer time, the Fine is good, and there will be no forfeiture of the estate of tenant for life: so likewise if a Fine be levied of lands by tenant for life to a stranger, who thereby acknowledges all his right to be in the tenant for life, and releases to him and his heirs. 27 Ed. 1. 1: 44 Ed. 3. 36.

If there be tenant in tail upon condition not to alien, or discontinue the lands, &c. if he doth, the donor to re enter; and his issue levy a Fine of the land, this is a forfeiture of the estate. 1 Leon. 292. An estate being settled on husband and wife for life, remainder to first and other sons in tail, with remainders over; after the birth of their eldest son, they by release and Fine, mortgaged the lands: on a bill exhibited against the son to redeem, &c. he pleaded the marriage settlement of his father and mother, whereby they were but tenants for life, and that his Fine was a forfeiture of their estate; and so it was adjudged. Preced. Canc. 591. But it is said where a wife by settlement has only a trust for life, if she joins with her husband in a mortgage in fee and Fine of the lands; this trust is not forfeited, as it would be in case of a legal estate. 1 P. Wms. 147.

As to Fines levied by an infant, though strictly speaking all contracts made by infants are in their own nature void, because a contract is an act of the understanding, which during their infancy, they are presumed to want; yet civil societies have so far supplied that defect, and taken care of them, as to allow them to contract for their benefit and advantage, with power to recede from and vacate it when it may prove prejudicial to them: now the method to set aside such a contract must be by matter of equal notoriety with the manner in which it was made; and therefore if an infant levies a Fine, which is no more than his own agreement recorded as the judgment of the court, he must reverse it by writ of error, and this must be brought during his minority, that the court of B. R. may by inspection determine the age of the infant; but the judges may in such cases inform themselves by witnesses, church-books, &c. 2 New Abr. 526: Co. Litt. 380 b: Moor 76: 2 Rol. Abr. 15: Bro. tit. Error: Bro. tit. Fines, 74, 79: 2 Inst. 482: 2 Bulst. 320: 12 Co. 122. See this Dict. title Infant and the stat. 7 Ann. c. 19, there cited.

With regard to idiots and lunatics, it is necessary to distinguish between their acts done in pais, and those solemnly acknowledged on record; though the law is clear, that in neither case are they admitted to disable themselves, for the insecurity that may arise in contracts from counterfeit madness and folly, but their heirs and executors may avoid such acts in pais by pleading the disability; because, because, if they can prove it, it must be presumed real, since nobody can be thought to counterfeit it, when he can expect no benefit from it himself. 4 Co. 124: 12 Co. 124; Co. Lit. 247; Bro. tit. Fait, 62; Cro. Eliz. 398, 622; F. N. B. 202.

But neither the lunatic himself, nor his heir, can vacate any act of his done in a court of record; and therefore if a person non compos acknowledges a Fine, it shall stand against him and his heirs; for though the judge ought not to admit of a Fine from a man under that disability, yet when it is once received, it shall never be reversed, because the record and judgment of the court being the highest evidence in the law, presumes the confessor, at that time, capable of contracting; and therefore the credit of it is not to be contested, nor the record avoided by any averment against the truth of it. 4 Co. 124: 12 Co. 124: 2 Inst. 483; Bro. tit. Fines, 75; Co. Lit. 247. See this Dict. title Idiots and Lunatics.

By the Common-law if an infant or idiot has by any neglect or contrivance been permitted to levy a Fine, his declaration of the uses thereof will be good, so long as the Fine remains in force; and if the Fine is never reversed his declaration of the uses will be binding and conclusive on him and his heirs for ever. because the law will not presume that a Fine, which is a solemn act on record has been levied by a person labouring under such disabilities; and therefore until the Fine which is the principal is annulled, the declaration of the uses thereof will remain good. Thus stands the Common-law on this point, but as the Court of Chancery has in many instances, compelled persons who had obtained estates under a Fine in a fraudulent manner to reconvey them to those who were really entitled thereto; so that Court will interpose its authority in cases of this kind, and not suffer the declaration of uses of a Fine levied by an idiot to bar his heirs; as no species of fraud can be more evident, than that of obtaining a conveyance from a person of this description. Cruse c. 15. and see post VII.

V. FINES are now levied in the court of Common Pleas at Westminster, on account of the solemnity thereof, ordained by the Stat. 18 Ed. 1. pt. 4; before which time they were sometimes levied in the Exchequer, in the County-Courts, Courts Baron, &c. They may be acknowledged before the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, as well in, as out of, court, and two of the justices of the same court, have power to take them in open court: also justices of assize may do it by the general words of their patent or commission; but they do not usually certify them without a special writ of dedimus potestatem. 2 Inst. 512. Dyer 224. The Chief Justice of C. P. may, by the prerogative of his place, take cognisance of Fines in any place out of the court; and certify the same without any writ of dedimus potestatem. But the Chief Justice of England cannot, nor any other of the justices, except the Chief Justice of C. P. who hath this special authority by custom and not by any statute. 9 Co. Read.

The King by patent or commission, with a non obstante, may give power to A. and B. justices of assize in a circuit, when A. is not a judge of either of the benches, only a serjeant at law, &c. to take the cognisance of all fines jointly and severally; and upon such a commission, the cognisance of a Fine taken by A. will be good, without any dedimus potestatem sued out before, or after it. Jenk. Gent. 277.

Fines may be, and are levied in the city of Chester, by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 15.

In the county palatinate of Chester, by stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 28.

In the county palatinate of Lancaster stat. 37 H. 8. c. 19.

In that of Durham by stat. 5 Eliz. c. 27: And in the courts of great sessions in Wales by stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 26. § 40.

The tenure of Ancient Demesne being a species of privileged villenage, the tenants thereof could not sue or be sued for their lands in the King's courts of Common-law, but had the privilege of having justice administered to them in the court of the manor by petit writ of droit le directed to the bailiffs of the King's manors or to the lord of the manor whereof the lands were held. In consequence of this principle no Fine could be levied by a tenant in ancient demesne in the court of Common Pleas; but as such tenants were allowed to commence actions in the court of the manor, they were also permitted to compound their suits; by which means Fines have at all times been levied of lands held in ancient demesne upon little writs of right close in the court of the manor. These Fines work a discontinuance; and the reason is because the freehold is recovered in the action; every recoveror being supposed to recover a fee simple; and the recovery of the fee simple must work a discontinuance. 1 Cruse 93 b: edition 1786.

Fines are also taken by commissioners in the country, empowered by dedimus potestatem; the writ of dedimus doth surmise, that the parties who are to acknowledge the Fine are not able to travel to Westminster for the doing thereof: these commissions, general and special, issue out of the Chancery. By the Common law all Fines were levied in court; but the Stat. of Carlisle, 15 Ed. 2, allows the dedimus potestatem to commissioners, who may be punished for abuses, and the Fines taken before them set aside: and it is said an information may be brought by him in reversion against commissioners, who take the caption of a Fine, where a married woman, &c. is an infant. 3 Lev. 36.

In the levying of Fines in court, a pleader shall say Sir justice congeit accordet, &c. i. e. he desires leave to accord or agree: and when the sum for the King's Fine is agreed, after proclamation and crying the peace the pleader shall repeat the substance of the Fine, &c. See Stat. de Finibus, 18 Ed. 1. pt. 4.

Touching the form of Fines, it is to be considered upon what writ or action the concord is to be made: and there must first pass a pair of indentures between the cognisor and cognitee, whereby the cognisor covenants to pass a Fine to the cognitee of such things, by a time limited; and these indentures preceding the Fine, are said to lead the uses of the Fine. But by the stat. 4 Ann. c. 16, the uses of a Fine, &c. may be declared after the Fine levied, and be good in law. Upon this the writ of covenant is brought by the cognitee against the cognisor, who then yields to pass the Fine before the judge, and so the acknowledgement being recorded, the cognisor and his heirs are presently concluded, and all persons (strangers not excepted) after five years past; and if the writ, whereon the Fine is grounded, be not a writ of covenant, which is usual, but of warrantia chartæ, or a writ of right, or of customs and services, &c. then the writ is to be served upon the party that is to acknowledge the Fine; and he appearing doth it accordingly. West. § 23; Dyer 179.

FINE OF LANDS VI.

It is the statute de finibus 18 E. 1. st. 4, which directs that a final concord cannot be levied in the King's court, without original writ. And when a Fine is passed, it is to be in the presence of the parties, who are to be of full age, and good memory; and if a feme covert be one, she is to be privately examined if she consent freely; for if she doth not, the Fine cannot be levied. By stat. 1 R. 3. c. 7, when a Fine is ingrossed and read and proclaimed in the court of C. B. a transcript is to be sent to the justices of assize, and another to the justices of the peace of the county where the land lieth, to be openly proclaimed at their several sessions, which being certified, concludes all persons; but quere whether this is not superfluous by the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24, which declares that the proclamations in court being made, the Fine shall be final? See ante I.

The day and year of acknowledging a Fine, and warrant of attorney for the suffering a recovery, are to be certified with the concord; and an office is erected for the issuance of writs for Fines, &c. the fees whereof are limited and appointed by stat. 23 Eliz. c. 3.

VI. See GENERALLY as to the effect of a Fine ante I. 3.—More particularly,

Interests in estates which may be barred by Fine, are either interests by common law, or by custom; as copyholds, &c. And if I have a fee simple, and am disseised, and the disseisor levies a Fine with proclamations, and I do not claim within five years after, I and my heirs (allowance being made for impediments) are barred for ever. Plowd. 353; 3 Rep. 79. If a man purchase lands of another in fee, and after, finding his title to be bad, and that a stranger hath right to the land, levies a Fine thereof with intent to bar him; and he suffers five years to pass without claim, &c. he is barred of his right for ever: and in these cases none shall be relieved in equity. 3 Rep. Doff. & Stud. 83. 155.

Feme covert have five years after the death of their husbands, to avoid the Fine of the husband of the wife's lands; and also to claim their dower; and if they do not make their claim in that time by action or entry, they are barred by statute. Dyer 72. 2 Rep. 93.

An infant shall have five years after he comes of age, although he was in his mother's womb at the time of the Fine levied. Plowd. 359. And an infant is allowed time, during his minority, to reverse his own fine and prevent the bar; and if not reversed during that time, their Fines will be good. Aff. pl. 53.

Strangers out of the realm at the time of the Fine levied, shall have five years after their return to prevent the bar; and so if they were in England when the Fine was levied, and within five years are sent in the King's service by his commandment. Plowd. 360. A person in Scotland or Ireland shall be said to be out of the realm. 4 H. 7. c. 24.

Lunatics, &c. shall have five years after the cure of their maladies, though the infirmity happen after the Fine levied, if before the last proclamation. Plowd. 367: Dyer 3.

And they who have dumers defects have five years after the last infirmity removed; but if the impediments are once wholly gone, and afterwards the party relapses into the like again, the five years shall begin immediately after the first removal; and if the party dies, his heir shall not have a new five years. Plowd. 375: Dyer 233.

If a feme covert dies during the coverture, being no party to the Fine, &c. or if an infant being party to the Fine, and having present right, dies in his infancy: if a person beyond sea when the Fine was levied, never return &c. a person in prison dies whilst therein; or if one non compos, &c. dies such in all these cases, their heirs are not limited to any time. 2 Inst. 519, 520. Five years are given after a remainder falls; and five years after the forfeiture of tenant for life. Plowd. 374.

A future interest of another person, cannot be barred by Fine and non claim, until five years after it happens; as in case of a remainder or reversion. 2 Rep. 93: Rayn. 151. And where there is no present nor future right in land, &c. only a possibility at the time of levying the Fine, a person may enter and claim when he pleases. 10 Rep. 49. Also when there is only right to a rent, &c. issuing out of lands, and not the land in the Fine, the persons that have it are not barred at all. 5 Rep. 124.

No Fine bars any estate in possession or reversion, which is not divested, or put to a right. 9 Rep. 106. He that at the time of a Fine levied had not any title to enter shall not be immediately barred by the Fine: but this is in case of an interest not turned to a right, where a man is not bound to claim; and not in the case of tenant in tail, barring his issue. See stat. 32 H. 8. c. 36.

When an estate is put to a right, and there comes a Fine and non-claim, it is a perpetual bar. Carter 82, 162. A Fine, sur grant et render was levied, and a fine facias brought and judgment given, and also writ of seisin awarded, but not executed: and afterwards a second Fine was levied and executed, and five years passed; it was the opinion of the court that the second Fine barred the first. Murch's Rep. 194: 2 Nelf. Abr. 864.

If a man attainted of treason or felony, levy a fine of his land, this, as to the King, and lord of whom the land is held, is void, and no bar to their title of forfeiture: but as to all others it is a good bar. 2 Shep. Abr. 241. One levied a fine, and then was outlawed for treason and died; the heir reversed the outlawry, and it was held the wife should have her dower, if she bring her action within five years. Moor c. 876. A Fine is levied by lessee for life, &c. who continues the possession, and pays the rent; it shall not bind the lessor, who shall have five years claim after the determination of the lessee's estate, &c. 3 Rep. 77, 78. If one doth levy a Fine of my land, while I am in possession, this will not hurt me; nor where a stranger levies a Fine of my lands let to a tenant, if the tenant pays me his rent duly: And if there is tenant in tail, or for life, remainder in tail, &c. and the first tenant in tail or for life, bargains and sells the land by deed enrolled, and levies a Fine to the bargainee, the remainderers are not bound; for the law adjudges them always in possession. 9 Rep. 106.

Lessees who pretend title to the inheritance of the lands, cannot by Fine bar the inheritance. 3 Rep. 77. But if a lease is made for years, and the lessor before entry of the lessee levies a Fine with proclamations, and the lessee doth not make his claim within five years, the lessee is barred, and no relief can be had for him; for though the lessee for years cannot levy a Fine, yet he shall be barred by a Fine levied by the tenant of the land, &c. 5 Rep. 124. If a person hath a remainder depending on an estate for years, and the termor is disseised, and a Fine is levied and five years pass, &c. the termor and reversioner are barred: because the termor might presently have entered, and he in remainder had an aliene. Wesl. § 183. In case a person enters upon, and puts out a copyholder, and the lord doth levy a Fine of the lands, if the copyholder suffer five years to pass after the disseisin and Fine, without making any claim, the interest of the copyholder and his lord are hereby barred for ever: And if a copyholder makes a feoffment in fee upon good consideration, and the feoffee levies a Fine with proclamations, and five years pass, the lord is barred; but if a copyholder himself levies a Fine, and five years do pass, the lord is not barred, for the copyholder not having a freehold, the Fine will be void. Wood's Inst. 247, 248.

A Fine of cestui que trust shall bar and transfer a trust, as it would an estate at law, if it were on a good consideration. Chan. Rep. 49. And it is said that such a Fine with proclamations and five years non-claim will bar the remainder of a trust estate. 1 Vern. 226. And Fines of cestui que use are as good as if levied of immediate possessions, &c. 2 Nelf. Abr. 860.

Where the ancestor is barred by the Fine, there for the most part the heir is barred also. 9 Rep. 105. Although the issue in tail be within age, out of the realm, &c. when a Fine is had and the proclamations passed, the estate tail shall be barred. 3 Rep. 84. The tenant in tail, to him and the heirs male of his body, hath three sons, the second levies a Fine in the life of the father, and the father dies; here the eldest is not barred. But if the elder die without issue, living the second, it is a bar to the third. Hob. 333: Jenk. Cent. 96. Tenant in tail discontinues: the discontinuer levies a Fine with proclamations, and five years pass without claim in the life of tenant in tail: In this case the issue may have a formedon, and shall not be barred; for his father could not claim. It is otherwise where he is disseised, and the disseisor levies such Fine; there the tenant in tail may claim, &c. Jenk. Cent. 192.

A tenant for life, and he that is next in remainder in tail join in a Fine; it is a good bar to the issue in tail for ever, so long as that estate-tail shall continue. 10 Rep. 96.

If one makes his title as heir by another, and not by him that levied the Fine, he is not barred. Also he that is privy in blood only, and not in estate, is not within the statutes to be barred by a Fine: as if lands are given to a man and the heirs female of his body, and he hath a son and a daughter, and the son levies a Fine, and dies without issue, this is no bar to the daughter; for notwithstanding she be heir to his blood, yet she is not heir to the estate, nor need make her conveyance to it by him; but if her father had levied the Fine, it would have been otherwise. Trin. 21 Jac. See Cro. Jac. 689.

A Fine, &c. cannot destroy an executory estate, which depends upon contingencies, as it is uncertain whether there will ever be an estate in being for the Fine to work upon; but a Fine and Recovery will bar an estate in remainder, as that is an estate vested. 1 Lill. Abr. 617. See title Recovery. Estates by statute merchant, statute-staple, and elegit, may be barred, if a Fine is levied, and those that have right suffer five years to pass without claim, &c.

VOL. I.

5 Rep. 124. If a Fine be levied of lands in ancient demesne it doth not bar by the statute of non-claim, Lut. 781.—See ante V.

In the case of Bourne v. Hunt, where tenant in tail of lands in ancient demesne levied a Fine, in the court of ancient demesne for three lives with warranty; then levied a second Fine with warranty to the use of himself and his heirs; and then bargained and sold to one and his heirs, the following points were determined: 1st. That a Fine may be levied in courts of ancient demesne.—2dly. That such Fines are no bar to the issue in tail, but that they work a discontinuance: 3dly. That the discontinuance determined with the three lives, and that the second Fine made no discontinuance. 4thly. That the issue in tail have twenty years to make their entry after the expiration of the lease for lives.—See 1 Com. Rep. 93: (Rose's ed.) Bro. P. C.

As Deans, Bishops, Parsons, &c. are prohibited by statute to levy Fines, and may not have a writ of right; they are not barred by five years non claim, and their non-claim will not prejudice their successors. Plowd. 238, 375.

By the ancient Common-law, he that had right was to make his claim, &c. within a year and a day of the Fine levied and the execution thereof, or he was barred for ever: But this bar is now gone; and if Fine without proclamations according to the Common law be now levied, he that hath right may make his claim or entry, at any time to prevent the bar. Co. Lit. 254, 262.

Where a Fine may be a bar as to some lands, and not as to other lands, See F. N. D. 98. A Fine was levied, and five years passed without bringing a writ of error; and it was held a good bar within the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 14: Cro. Jac. 333. But it has been adjudged that where five years pass, that shall not hinder, where the Fine is erroneous. 2 Nelf. Abr. 838.

Although a bill in equity is not such an action as will avoid a Fine, if the subject matter of the suit be of legal jurisdiction, yet still in some instances the filing a bill in a Court of equity, will prevent the bar arising from a Fine and non claim: and in cases of this kind the court will direct a trial at law, with an order that the defendant shall not set up a Fine in bar of the plaintiff's claim: upon the same principles that such court sometimes directs that the defendants in a suit at law shall not plead the statute of Limitations. 1 Cruise 329. See Pinke v. Thornycroft, 1 Bro. C. R. 289. Bro. P. C.

A. seised in fee levied a Fine to himself for life, remainder to his wife in tail-male for her jointure; had issue male; husband and wife levied a Fine and suffered a recovery.—After the death of the husband and wife issue-male entered by force of the Stat. 11 H. 7.; and held lawful. This case is out of the letter, though within the remedy of the statute, for she neither levied the Fine, &c. being sole, or with any after-taken husband, but by herself with the husband who made the jointure. Co. Litt. 375 b —See further Vin. Abr. Jointress 1. K. Bac. Abr. Discontinuance (D); as to what shall be deemed a forfeiture within the Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20; and who shall take advantage of it.

VII. FINES MAY BE REVERSED for error, so as the writ of error be brought in twenty years, &c. and not afterwards by Stat. 10 and 11 IV. 3. c. 14. Which 20 years are to be computed from the time of the Fine levied, and not from the time the title accrued. 2 Str. 1257.

No person can bring a writ of error to reverse a Fine, or any judgment, that is not intitled to the land, of which the Fine was levied; for the courts of law will not turn out the present tenant, unless the demandant can make out a clear title, possession always carrying with it the presumption of a good title till the right owner appears; besides, where the plaintiff in the writ of error cannot make out a title, he can receive no damage by the Fine, which the writ of error always supposes to be done, tho' it should be erroneous; and therefore it is no less than trifling with the courts of justice, to seek relief when he cannot make it appear that he has received any injury. 1 Roll. Abr. 747: Dyer 90: 3 Lev. 36.

But if there be several parties to an erroneous Fine, they shall all join with the party that is to enjoy the land, tho' they themselves cannot have any thing. 1 Roll. Abr. 747: Dyer 89.

There must be an actual entry to avoid a Fine. The delivery of a declaration in ejectment does not amount to an entry sufficient for this purpose; even though the defendant appears to it, and confesses lease entry and ouster; for there must be an actual entry made animo clamandi, whereas in ejectment there is only a fictitious or supposed entry for the purpose of making a demise. Berrington v. Parkhurst, Bro. P. C. 2 Sir. 1. 1086. See 1 Pent. 42: 3 Burr. 1897: Doug. 483, 5.—But no entry is necessary where the Fine is levied without proclamations; for the stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. does not extend to such a Fine, and it may be avoided at any time within 20 years. 2 Willf. 45.—The entry, when necessary, must be made by the person who has a right to the lands or by some one appointed by him. 1 Inst. 258 a.

Nothing can be assigned for error that contradicts the record; for the records of the courts of justice, being things of the greatest credit, cannot be questioned but by matters of equal notoriety with themselves; wherefore, though the matter assigned for error should be proved by witnesses of the best credit, yet the judges would not admit it. 1 Roll. Abr. 757.

If there be error in proclamations it shall be taken as a good Fine at common law. 3 Rep. 86. A Fine may stand though the proclamations according to the statute are irregular, for Fines are matters of record and remain in substance and form as they were before. Plowd. 265.

Then it is, that in a writ of error to reverse a Fine, the plaintiff cannot assign that the conusor died before the time of the dedimus per statum because that contradicts the record of the conveyance taken by the commissioners, which evidently shews, that the conusor was then alive, because they took his conveyance after they were armed with the commission and the dedimus issued. Dyer 89 b: 1 Roll. Abr. 757: Cro. Eliz. 469.

But the plaintiff in error may say, that after the conveyance taken, and before the certificate thereof returned, the conusor died; because this is consistent with the record. 1 Roll. Abr. 757.

By the chirograph of a Fine the caption appeared to be on the 23d of December, whereas in fact the Fine was not acknowledged till the 2d of March following, and this was offered to be proved. But the court refused to admit the evidence, being of opinion, that no proof of the time of acknowledging a Fine ought to be admitted contrary to, or against the chirograph thereof: and that the record which is the chirograph of a Fine, cannot be falsified till it is vacated or reversed. Say and Seal Ld. v. Lloyd. 1 Salk. 341: 10 Mod. 40: Bro. P. C.

If there is any difference between the record of the Fine, which remains in the possession of the chirographer, deemed the principale recordum, and the record which remains with the custos brevium, the latter shall be amended, and made according to the former. 3 Leon. 183.

If a lessee for years, or a disseissee, or one that hath right only to a reversion or remainder, levy a Fine to a stranger that hath nothing in the land, this Fine will be void or voidable as to the stranger; and he that hath cause to except against it, may shew that the freehold and seisin was in another at the time of the Fine levied, and that partes finis nihil habuerunt tempore levationis finis, and by this avoid the Fine: and yet a disseisor, who hath a fee-simple by wrong in him, may levy a Fine to a stranger that hath nothing in the land, like unto one that is rightfully seised of land in fee, &c. and it will be a good Fine. Plowd. 353: 3 Rep. 87. If the cognisor of a Fine hath nothing in the land passed, at the time of the Fine levied, the Fine may be avoided: But where the cognisor or cognisee is seised of an estate of freehold, whether by right or by wrong, the Fine will be a good Fine in point of estate. 41 E. 3. c. 14.: 22 H. 6. c. 43.

Fines are not reverfible for rafure, interlineation, misentry, &c. or any want of form; but it is otherwise if of substance. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 3. A Fine shall not be reversed for small variance, which will not hurt it; nor is there occasion for a precise form in a render upon a Fine, because it is only an amicable assurance upon record. 5 Rep. 38. If a Fine be levied of lands in a wrong parish, though the parish in which they lie be not named, it will be a good Fine, and not erroneous, being an amicable assurance: and a Fine of a close may be levied by a heir comus in a town, without mentioning the town, vill, &c. Godb. 440: Cro. Jac. 574: 2 Mod. 47. If there be want of the original, or no writs of covenant for lands in every county; or if there is any notorious error, in the suing out a Fine, or any fraud or deceit, &c. writ of error may be had to make void the Fine. Co. Lit. 9. Cro. Eliz. 469. So if either of the parties dies before finished, &c. And if the cognisor of a Fine die before the return of the writ of covenant, (though after the caption of the Fine) it is said it may be reversed. 3 Salk. 168.

If either of the parties cognisors die after the king's silver is entered, the Fine shall be finished, and be good. Cro. Eliz. 469.

If the king's silver is not entered before the conusor's death, the Fine may be reversed for error. 3 Mod. 140. But in 2 Ld. Raym. 850, it is said, if a Fine be acknowledged before commissioners in the country in the long vacation, and before the next term the conusor dies; though no writ of covenant was sued, nor king's silver entered; yet the Common Pleas will permit the conusor to enter the Fine as of Trinity Term preceding. See further Fin. Abr. Fine. F. b. 6. In the case of Watts v. Binkett, however, where the conusor died before the return of the writ of the covenant, the Fine was set aside after it had been completed, because the Poll Fine or king's silver, due at the return of the writ of covenant, and not before, became due and was paid after the death of the conusor. 1 Willf. part. 1. p. 115.

A writ

FINES—FOR OFFENCES.

A writ of error may be brought in B. R. to reverse a Fine levied in C. B. and the transcript only, not the very record of the Fine, is removed in these cases: But if the court of B. R. adjudge it erroneous; then a certiorari goes to the chirographer to certify the Fine itself, and when it comes up it is cancelled. 1 Salk. 341: And where on a writ of error in B. R. to reverse a Fine in C. B. the Fine was affirmed; a writ of error en am vobis restituere hath been allowed to lie. Ibid. 357. The court of B. R. will not reverse a Fine without a sci. fac. returned against the tertenant; because the cognisees are but nominal persons. Ibid. 339. Though a Fine may be set aside, by pleading that neither of the parties had any thing in the estate, at the time of levying the Fine; yet those that are privy to the person that levied the Fine, are enlopped to plead this plea. 3 Rep. 88. In pleading a Fine or recovery to uses, the deed need not be set forth; but the pleader is to say, that the Fine, &c. was levied to sub uses, and produce the deeds in evidence to prove the uses. 8 W. 3 B. R.

Fines may be avoided where they are obtained by fraud, covin, or deceit, though there be no error in the process; and that may be done either by writ of disceit or averment, setting forth the fraud or covin. Cro. Eliz. 471.

Thus if a Fine be levied of land in ancient demesne, the lord shall have a writ of disceit against the conusor and the tenant, and by that avoid the Fine. F. N. B. 98 a. Moor. 6. See ante, V. VI.

If a Fine be levied to secret uses to deceive a purchaser, and the conusor pleads the Fine in bar, the purchaser may aver the fraud in avoidance of the Fine, by 27 Eliz. cap. 4; and such averment is not contrary to the record. because it admits the Fine, but sets it aside for the covin and fraud in obtaining it. 3 Co. 8 a: Plowd. 49 a.

So if a Fine be levied upon an usurious contract, it may be avoided by accriment, because such Fine being levied for ends the law has prohibited, the law will not encourage any evasion out of the act, nor suffer such usurious contracts to be supported by the solemn acts of the courts of justice against the intention of the act. 3 Co. 80.

A fraudulent obtaining of a Fine, or irregularity therein, cannot be relieved against in Chancery; but the relief must be sought in the court where the Fine was levied, though the officers may be examined and punished, if they did it criminaliter. And where one was personated on levying a Fine, it was not set aside in equity, but a reconveyance ordered of the land. Prec. Ch. 150, 151. For though the court of Chancery does not set aside a Fine so fraudulently obtained, nor send the party aggrieved to the court of C. P. to get it reversed, yet it considers all those who have taken an estate by such a Fine, with notice of the fraud, as trustees for the persons who have been defrauded, and decrees a reconveyance of the lands; on the general ground of laying hold of the ill conscience of the parties to make them do that which is necessary for restoring matters to their situation. 1 Cruise 314: See Talb. 101: 1 Eq. Ab. 259: 1 Ves. 289: 2 Vern. 307.

In some cases the court will vacate a Fine upon motion to prevent the parties the trouble and expence of a writ of error. 3 Lev. 36: 2 Wilf. 115. In Hubert's case (Cro. Eliz. 521.) where one levied a Fine in the name of another, nor privy nor consenting thereto, the Fine was declared void by a writ on the roll; and the Lord Keeper in that case said he had always noted this difference—If one of my name levy a Fine of my land, I may well confess and avoid this Fine by shewing the especial matter, for that stands well with the Fine. But if a stranger who is not of my name levies a Fine of my land in my name, I shall not be received to aver, that I did not levy the Fine, but another in my name; for that is merely contrary, to the record: and so it is of all recognizances and other matters of record; but I conceive when the fraud appears to the court, as here, they may well enter a writ on the roll, and so make it no Fine; although the party cannot avoid it by averment during the time that it remains as a record.—The offence of levying a Fine in another's name is punished with death by the stat. 2 Jac. 1. c. 26, before mentioned. See ante 1, 3. ad fin. If a Fine be levied by a person who got possession under a forged deed, equity will decree against the Fine. 2 Ark. 380.

A record of a Fine may be amended, (if the king's silver is paid) for misprision of the clerk. 5 Rep. 43.

While the parties are alive the court will not grant leave for the amendment of a Fine, in the christian name of the plaintiff, for that amounts to making a new Fine. 2 Blac. Rep. 816.—Neither while the parties are alive will they permit the Fine to be amended in the term. 2 Blac. Rep. 788: 3 Wilf. 249, 250.

Where the deed to lead the uses is general, and it appears only by affidavit that the intent was to levy the Fine of a greater number of acres than it mentions, the court will not permit an amendment to increase the number of acres. 2 Blac. Rep. 102.3.

When Fines may be set aside in equity, see ante; and 1 Eq. Ab. 258: 2 Eq. Ab. 474.—When avoided for fraud or aided when defective; Com. Dig. Chancery, (3 N): 1. Ves. 289. More fully how Fines may be avoided or reversed, and by whom; Com. Dig. Fine (H); Pleader, (3 B.) 9: Vin. Abr. Fine. D. 11: Rac. Abi. Fines, 11.

FINE ADNULLANDO LEVATO DE TENEMENTO QUOD FUIT DE ANTIQVO DOMINICO. A writ directed to the justices of C. B. for disannulling a Fine levied of lands in ancient demesne, to the prejudice of the lord. Reg. Orig. 15. See title Fine.

FINES FOR ALIENATIONS; Were Fines paid to the king by his tenant in chief, for licence to alien their lands according to the Stat. 1 Ed. 3 c. 12; But these are taken away by the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, abolishing all teneues but free and common socage.

The premiums given on renewal of leases, are also termed Fines; and there are Fines for alienations of copyholds paid to the Lord. See titles Lease; Copyhold.

FINES, FOR OFFENCES. Fine, in this sense, is amends, pecuniary punishment, or recompence for an offence committed against the king and his laws, or against the lord of a manor: In which case a man is said finem facere de transgressionem cum rege, &c. Reg. Jud. f. 25. a: Cowell.

It seems that originally all punishments were corporal; but that after the use of money, when the profits of the courts arose from the money paid out of the civil causes, and the Fines and confiscations in criminal ones, the commutation of punishments was allowed of, and the corporal punishment which was only in terrorem, changed into pecuniary, whereby they found their own advantage.

FINES—FOR OFFENCES

This begat this distinction between the greater and the lesser offences; for in the crimina majora there was at least a Fine to the king, which was levied by a capitulum; but upon the lesser offences there was only an amercement, which was assessed, and for which a distingas, or action of debt lay. 2 New Ab. 502.

The discretionary Fines (and discretionary length of imprisonment) which the courts of justice are enabled to impose, may seem an exception to the general rule, that the punishment of every offence is ascertained by the law. But the general nature of the punishment, is in these, as in other cases fixed and determinate; though the duration and quantity of each must frequently vary, from the aggravations, or otherwise, of the offence, the quality and condition of the parties, and from innumerable other circumstances.

The quantum in particular of pecuniary Fines, neither can nor ought to be ascertained by an invariable law. Our statute law therefore has not often ascertained the quantity of Fines, nor the common law, ever; it directing certain offences to be punished by Fine in general, without specifying the certain sum; which is fully sufficient, when we consider that however unlimited the power of the Court may seem, it is far from being wholly arbitrary; but its discretion is regulated by law. For the Bill of Rights St. 1 W. & M. 2. c. 2, has particularly declared, that excessive Fines ought not to be imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted: and the same statute further declares, that all grants and promises of Fines and forfeitures of particular persons, before conviction, are illegal and void. Now the bill of Rights was only declaratory of the old constitutional law: and accordingly we find it expressly holden, long before, that all such previous grants are void; since thereby, many times, undue means, and more violent prosecution, would be used for private lucre, than the quiet and just proceeding of law would permit. 2 Inst. 48.

The reasonableness of Fines in criminal cases has also been usually regulated by the determination of Magna Charta c. 14, concerning amercements for misbehaviour by the suitors in matters of civil right. "Liber homo non amercietur pro parvo delicto nisi secundum modum ipsius delicti, et pro magno delicto, secundum magnitudinem delicti; salvo contentamento suo: et mercator eodem modo, salva mercandis sua; et villanus eodem modo amercietur, salvo wainagio suo." A rule, that obtained even in Henry II's time, (Glan. l. 9. cc. 8, 11.) and means only, that no man shall have a larger amercement imposed upon him than his circumstances or personal estate will bear: saving to the landholder his contentment or land; to the trader his merchandize; and to the countryman his wainage or team and instruments of husbandry. In order to ascertain which, the great charter also directs, that the amercement, which is always inflicted in general terms (sic in misericordia) shall be set, ponatur, or reduced to a certainty by the oath of good and lawful men of the neighbourhood. Which method, of liquidating the amercement to a precise sum, was usually performed in the superior courts by the assessment or assessment of the coroner, a sworn officer chosen by the neighbourhood, under the equity of the Stat. West. 1. c. 18, and then the judges estreated them into the Exchequer. F. N. B. 76. But in the court-leet and court-baron it is still performed by assessors or suitors sworn to assess, that is, tax and moderate the general amercement according to the particular circumstances of the offence and the offender: the assessor's oath is conceived in the very terms of Magna Charta. Fitzb. Surv. c. 11. Amercements imposed by the superior courts on their own officers and ministers were assessed by the judges themselves, but when a pecuniary mulct was inflicted by them on a stranger (not being party to any suit) it was then denominated a Fine. 8 Rep. 40. And the ancient practice was, when any such Fine was imposed, to inquire by a jury quantum inde regi dare valeat per annum, salva sustentatione sua et uxoris, et liberorum suorum Gilb. Exch. c. 5. And since the disuse of such inquest it is never usual to assess a larger Fine than a man is able to pay, without touching the implements of his livelihood; but to inflict corporal punishment, or a limited imprisonment, instead of such Fine as might amount to imprisonment for life. And this is the reason why Fines in the King's court are frequently denominated Ransoms, because the penalty must otherwise fall upon a man's person unless it be redeemed or ransomed by a pecuniary Fine. Mirr. c. 5. § 3: Lamb. Err. 575.—According to an ancient maxim, qui non habet in crumena suam in corpore. Yet where any statute speaks both of Fine and ransom, it is holden that the ransom shall be treble to the Fine at least. Dyer 232.—See 4 Comm. 378—380.

I. Who may fine and amerce, and for what.

II. How Fines, &c. may be mitigated and aggravated; as also how they may be recovered, and to whom they are payable.

I. Where a statute imposes a Fine at the will and pleasure of the king, that is intended of his judges, who are to impose the Fine. 4 Inst. 71. Courts of record only can fine and imprison a person, (except as after-mentioned). And such a court may fine for an offence committed in court in their view, or by confession of the party recorded in court. 1 Lill. Ab. 621. A man shall be fined and imprisoned for all contempts done to any court of record, against the commandment of the king's writ, &c. 9 Rep. 60.

If a person is arrested coming to the courts of justice to answer a writ, the offender doing it shall be fined for the contempt: But there has been a difference made where it is done by the plaintiff in the writ, and a stranger, who it is said shall not be fined. 9 H. 6. c. 55: 1 Danv. 469.

If an officer of the court neglects his duty, and gives not due attendance; a clerk of the peace doth not draw an indictment well in matter of form, or return thereof, upon a certiorari to remove the indictment in B. R.; if a sheriff, &c. make an insufficient return of a habeas corpus issuing out of B. R. &c. or if justices of the peace proceed on an indictment after a certiorari issued to remove the indictment; the court may fine them. 1 Lill. 620. When a juror at the bar will not be sworn, he may be fined. 7 H. 6. c. 12. And if one of the jury depart without giving his verdict; or any of the jury give their verdict to the court before they are all agreed, they may be fined. 8 Rep. 38: 40 Ass. 10.

Also the sheriff in his torn, and the steward of a court-leet, have a discretionary power, either to award a Fine, or amercement for contempt to the court; as for a suitor's refusing to be sworn, &c. and the steward of a court-leet may may either amerce or fine an offender, upon a presentment for an offence not capital, within his jurisdiction. 66: Kitchin 43, 51.

It is said, that some courts may imprison, but not fine, as the constables at the petit sessions. 11 Co. 44: 1 Roll. Rep. 74: 11 Co. 43 b. ~~After~~ Some courts cannot fine or imprison, but amerce, as the county, hundred, &c. 11 Co. 43 b. But some courts can neither fine, imprison, nor amerce; as ecclesiastical courts held before the Ordinary, archdeacon, &c. or their commissaries, and such who proceed according to the Canon, or Civil Law. 11 Co. 44 a.

Every court of record may enjoin the people to keep silence under a pain; and impose reasonable Fines, not only on such as shall be convicted before them of any crime, on a formal prosecution, but also on all such as shall be guilty of any contempt in the face of the court; as by giving opprobrious language to the judge, or obstinately refusing to do their duty as officers of the court. 11 H. 6. 12 b.: 1 Roll. Abr. 219: 8 Co. 38: 11 Co. 43: Cro. Eliz. 581: 1 Sid. 145.

If a dead body in prison, or other place whereon an inquest ought to be taken, be interred, or suffered to lie so long, that it putrify, before the coroner hath viewed it, the gaoler, or township shall be amerced. 1 Keb. 278: 2 Harc. P. C. If any homicide be committed, or dangerous wound given, whether with or without malice, or even by misadventure, or in self-defence, in any town, or in the lanes or fields thereof, in the day-time, and the offender escape, the town shall be amerced; and if out of a town, the hundred shall be amerced. 3 Inst. 53: 4 Inst. 183: Cro. Car. 252: 3 Leon. 207: 2 Inst. 315: Dyer 210.

Besides Fines imposed for offences, it seems, that regularly there was a Fine or amercement in all actions; for if the plaintiff or demandant did not prevail, it was thought reasonable that he should be punished for his unjust vexation; and therefore there was judgment against him, quod fit in misericordia pro falso clamore. 8 Co. 39: F. N. B. 75.

Hence when the plaintiff takes out a writ, the sheriff, before the return of it, was formerly obliged to take pledges of prosecution, which, when Fines and amercements were considerable, were real and responsible persons, and answerable for those amercements; but being now so very inconsiderable, that they are never levied, they are only formal pledges entered, viz. John Doe and Richard Roe. 1 Saund. 227. See this Dict. tit. Bail.

In all actions, where the judgment is against the defendant, it was to be entered with a misericordia, or a capiatur; and herein the difference is, that if it be an action of debt, or founded on a contract, the entry is ideo in misericordia, without assessing any sum in certain, which was afterwards assessed by the coroners in the proper county; but if it were in action of trespass, the court set the Fine, and levied it by a capiatur. 8 Co. 60: 1 Roll. Abr. 212, 219: Cro. Eliz. 844: Cro. Jac. 255: Therefore,

In actions quare vi et armis, as trespass, and the like; if judgment pass against the defendant in a court of record, he shall be fined. 8 Rep. 59. But in actions which have not something of force, or fraud, or deceit to the court; if the defendant come the first day he is called, and tender the thing demanded to the plaintiff, he is not to be fined. 4 Rep. 49: 8 Rep. 59, 60, 99: 3, Aff. 9: 22 Aff. 82: 1 Danv. Abr. 471: 1 Vent. 116.

All capiatur Fines are taken away by Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 12. See title Capias pro Fine.

II. A Fine may be mitigated the same term it was set, being under the power of the court during that time; but not afterwards. T. Raym. 376. And Fines assessed in court by judgment upon an information, cannot be afterwards mitigated. Cro. Car. 251. If a Fine certain is imposed by statute on any conviction, the court cannot mitigate it; but if the party comes in before conviction, and submits to the court, they may assess a less Fine; for he is not convicted, and perhaps never might. The court of Exchequer may mitigate a Fine certain, because it is a court of equity, and they have a privy seal for it. 3 Salk. 33.

If an excessive Fine is imposed at the sessions, it may be mitigated at the King's Bench. 1 Vent. 336. A defendant being indicted for an assault, contested it, and submitted to a small Fine; and it was adjudged that in such a case he may produce affidavits to prove on the propleitor, that it was son assault, and that in mitigation of the Fine; though this cannot be done after he is found Guilty. 1 Salk. 55. If a person is found Guilty of a misdemeanor upon indictment, and fined, he cannot move to mitigate the Fine, unless he appear in person; but one absent may submit to a Fine, if the clerk in court will undertake to pay it. 1 Vent. 203, 207: 1 Salk. 55: 2 Harc. 446.

It is a common practice in the court of B. R. to give a defendant leave to speak with the prosecutor, i. e. to make satisfaction for the costs of the prosecution, and also for damages sustained, that there may be an end of suits; the court at the same time shewing, on that account, an inclination to set a moderate Fine on behalf of the King. Wood's Inst. 653. And in cases where costs are not given by law, after a prosecutor has accepted costs from the defendant, he cannot aggravate the Fine; because having no right to demand costs, if he takes them, it shall be intended by way of satisfaction of the wrong. 2 H. P. C. 292. See this Dict. title Costs.

All Fines belong to the King, and the reason is, because the courts of justice are supported at his charge; and where-ever the law puts the King to any charge for the support and protection of his people, it provides money for that purpose. Bract. 129. When a person is fined to the King, notwithstanding the body remains in prison, it is said the King shall be satisfied the Fine out of the offender's estate. 4 Leon. c. 393.

By the Common-law, the King, or Lord may, at their election, distrain, or bring an action of debt for a Fine or amercement. Cro. Eliz. 581: Saund. 93: Raft. Ent. 151, 553, 606: 2 H. 4 24 b.: 10 H. 6. 7: Raym. 68. But with respect to fines, set in inferior courts, every jury, or declaration of this kind ought expressly to shew, that the offence was committed within the jurisdiction of the court, for if it were not, all the proceedings were coram non jure, and a court shall not be presumed to have jurisdiction where it doth not appear to have one. Hob. 129: Raft. Ent. 553: Co. Ent. 572. Also it is advisable to allege, that the offence was committed, as well as presented, and to shew the names of the presentors and the assessor in setting forth a presentment or or affectment, and also to shew that proper notice was given of holding the court. But for this, See Hæc. P. C.

Of common right, a distress is incident to every Fine and amercement, in a torn or leet, for offences within the jurisdiction thereof; but if the offence were only the neglect of a duty created by custom, and of a private nature, it is clear, that there must be a custom to warrant a distress, and perhaps such custom is also necessary, though the duty be of a public nature. 2 Hæc. P. C.

Also the Sheriff, or Lord may for such Fines or amercements distrain the goods of the offender even in the highway, or in land not holden of the lord, unless such land be in the possession of the crown. 1 Rel. Abr. 670: 2 Inf. 104. But such Fines and amercements being for a personal offence, no stranger's beasts can lawfully be distrained for them, though they have been levied and couchant upon the lands of the offender. Osborn 146: Nat. 20.

A joint award of one Fine against divers persons is erroneous; it ought to be several against each defendant, for otherwise one who hath paid his part might be continued in prison till the others have paid theirs, which would be in effect to punish for the offence of another. 2 Hæc P. C. Fines to the King are assessed into the Exchequer.

FINES TO THE KING; Exchequer Roy.] Under this head are included fines for original suits. On originals on trespass on this case, where the damages are laid above 40*l.* a Fine is paid, viz. from 40*l.* damages to 100 marks, (6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*) 6*s.* 8*d.* From 100 marks to 100*l.* the Fine is 10*s.* From 100*l.* to 200 marks, 13*s.* 4*d.* From 200 to 250 marks, 16*s.* 8*d.* From 250 to 300 marks or 200*l.* it is 1*l.* Fine; and so for every 100 marks more, you pay 6*s.* 8*d.* and every 100*l.* farther 10*s.* Every 100*l.* pays 10*s.* Fine. R. H. C. H. & M. Fines are also paid for original writs in debt; for every writ of 40*l.* debt, 6*s.* 8*d.* and if it be of 100 marks, but 6*s.* 8*d.* and for every 100 marks 6*s.* 8*d.* &c. also for every writ of plea of land, if it be not a writ of right patent, which is for the yearly value of 5 marks, 6*s.* 8*d.* and so according to that rate. 19 H. 6. 44: 7 H. 6. 33: *Nat. FIRE and FIRE COCKS. By Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 78, (the last building act,) Churchwardens in London and within the bills of mortality, are to fix fire cocks, &c. at proper distances in streets, and keep a large engine and hand engine for extinguishing fire, under the penalty of 10*l.* § 75. And to prevent fires, workmen in the city of London, &c. must erect party-walls between buildings of brick or stone, of a certain thickness, &c. under penalties, inflicted by various sections of the act. On the breaking out of any fire, all the constables and beadle shall repair to the place with their ladders, and be assisting in putting out the same, and causing people to work, § 85. No action shall be had against any person in whose house or chamber a fire shall accidentally begin. § 86. See this Dict. title Hæc, and also Stat. 6 Ann. c. 31, now said to be made perpetual. 1 Inst. 530 in n. 7.

By the said Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 78, Rewards for assistance are payable to the first turncock 10*s.*—To the first engine not exceeding 30*s.*—The second not exceeding 20*s.*—The third 10*s.*—To be paid by the churchwardens or overseers, but not without the approbation of an alderman or justice of the peace.—The churchwardens, &c. to be repaid by the inhabitant if the fire begins in a chimney. §§ 76, 77, 78—Insurance offices may lay out the insurance in rebuilding the premises, if the party suffering does not give security to do so: or in case of disagreement, not settled within 60 days. § 83.

Firemen exempt from being impressed § 82.—Penalty on servants firing houses by negligence, 100*l.* or 18 months imprisonment § 84. Restrictions on boiling turpentine, 2; Geo. 3. c. 77. See this Dict. tit. Disou; Burning; Aljon.

FIREBARE, Sax.] A beacon or high tower by the sea side, wherein are continual lights, either to direct sailors in the night, or to give warning of the approach of an enemy. See title Beacon.

FIREBOTE, Fuel for firing for necessary use, allowed by law, to tenants out of the lands, &c. granted them. See Eltoners.

FIRE ORDEAL, See title Ordeal.

FIRE-WORKS. No person whatsoever shall make, sell, &c. squibbs, rockets, serpents, &c. or cases, moulds, &c. for making such squibbs, and every such offence shall be adjudged a common nuisance, and persons making or selling squibbs shall forfeit 5*l.*

Persons throwing or firing squibbs, &c. or suffering them, &c. to be thrown or fired from their houses incur a penalty of 20*s.* Likewise persons throwing, casting or firing, or aiding or abetting in the throwing, casting or firing of any squibbs, rockets, serpents, or other fire-works, in or into any public street, house, shop, river, highway, road or passage, incur the like penalty of 20*s.* and on non-payment may be committed to the house of correction. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 7.

This

FIRE.

This statute does not take from any person injured, by throwing of squibbs, &c. the remedy at Common-law; but they may maintain a special action on the case, for recovery of full damages.

FIRST-FRUIT, Primitiæ.] The profits after avoidance, of every spiritual living for the first year, according to the valuation thereof in the King's books. These were given in ancient times to the Pope throughout all christendom; and were first claimed by him in England of such foreigners as he bestowed benefices on here by way of provision; afterwards they were demanded of the clerks of all spiritual patrons, and at length of all other clerks on their admission to benefices: but upon the throwing off the Pope's supremacy in the reign of Hen. VIII. they were translated to, and vested in, the King; as appears by the Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 3; and a new valor beneficiorum, was then made by which the clergy are at present rated. This valor beneficiorum is what is commonly called, The King's books: a transcript of which is given in Ellon's Thesaurus and Bacon's Liber Regis. And for the ordering thereof, there was a court erected, 32 H. 8, but dissolved soon after.

Though by Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 4, these profits are reduced again to the crown, yet the court was never restored; for all matters formerly handled therein, were transferred to the Exchequer, within the survey of which court they now remain.

By Stat. 26 H. 8, the Lord Chancellor, Bishops, &c. are empowered to examine into the value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment in their several dioceses; and clergymen entered on their livings before the First fruits are paid or compounded for, are to forfeit double value. But Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 4, ordains, that if an incumbent on a benefice do not live half a year, or is ousted before the year expire, his executors are to pay only a fourth part of the First fruits; and if he lives the year, and then dies, or be ousted in six months after, but half the First fruits shall be paid; if a year and a half, three quarters of them; and if two years then the whole; or not otherwise. The archbishops and bishops have four years allowed for the payment, and shall pay one quarter every year, if they live so long upon the bishoprick: other Dignitaries in the church pay theirs in the same manner as rectors and vicars. By the Stat. 27 H. 8 c. 8, no tenths are to be paid for the first year, as then the First fruits are due, and by several statutes of Anne, if a benefice be under 50*l.* per annum clear yearly value, it shall be discharged of the payment of First-fruits and tenths.

This Queen also restored to the church what had at first been thus indirectly taken from it, not by remitting the tenths and First-fruits entirely, but by applying these superfluities of the larger benefices to make up the deficiencies of the smaller; for this purpose she granted a charter, confirmed by Stat. 2 Ann. c. 11, whereby all the revenue of the First-fruits and tenths is vested in trustees for ever, to form a perpetual fund for the augmentation of poor livings, under 50*l.* a year. This is usually called Queen Anne's bounty, which has been still further regulated by subsequent statutes; though it is to be lamented that the number of such poor livings is so great, that this bounty, extensive as it is, will be slow, and almost imperceptible in its operation; the number of livings under 50*l.* certified by the bishops at the commencement of the undertaking being 5597; the revenues of which, on a general average, did not exceed 23*l.* per ann. See 1 Comm. 285, 6. cum notis ib.

FISH, FISHERIES AND FISHING.

MANY acts of parliament have been made to regulate domestic and foreign fisheries, and the sale of fish.—The following is a very general abridgment of them.

By Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 17, (made perpetual by St. 3 Car. 1. c. 4.) No fisherman shall use any net or engine, to destroy the fry of fish: and persons using nets for that purpose, or taking salmon or trout out of season, or any fish under certain lengths, are liable to forfeit 20*s.* and justices of peace, and the lords of leets have power to put the acts in force. By Stat. 2 H. 6. c. 15, No person may fasten nets, &c. across rivers to destroy fish, and disturb passage of vessels, on pain of 5*l.*—By Stat. 31 H. 8. c. 2, None shall fish in any pond or mote, &c. without the owner's licence, on pain of three months imprisonment. Under Stat. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 25, and 4 W. & M. c. 23, No person shall take any fish in any river, without the consent of the owner, under the penalty of 10*s.* for the use of the poor, and treble damage to the party grieved, leviable by districts of goods; and for want of distress, the offender is to be committed to the house of correction for a month: also nets, angles, &c. of poachers may be seized, by the owners of rivers, or by any persons by warrant from a justice of peace, &c. See tit. Game; and pois. Fishing, right of.

By St. 5 Geo. 3 c. 14, Persons stealing or destroying fish in fish ponds, or receiving stolen fish, are to be transported for seven years. See tit. Black Act.—And a forfeiture of 5*l.* to the owner of the fishery, is made payable by persons taking or destroying (or attempting to do) any fish in any river or other water within any inclosed ground being private property.

The Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 21, was made for the increase and preservation of salmon in rivers in the counties of Southampton and Wilt; requiring that no salmon be taken between the 1st of August and 12th of November, or under size, &c. And by Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 18, (altered as to the river Ribble, by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26.) Salmon taken in the rivers Severn, Dee, Wye, Hart, Ouse &c. are to be 18 inches long at least: or the persons catching them shall forfeit 5*l.*; and sea fish sold must be of the length length following, viz. Bret and turbot 16 inches, brill and pearl 14, codlin, bass and mallet 12, sole and place 8, flounders 7, whiting 6 inches long, &c. on pain of forfeiting 20s. to the poor, and the fish. By Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 33, Persons that import any fish, contrary to the 1 Geo. 1. c. 18, for better preventing fresh fish taken by foreigners being imported into this kingdom, &c. shall forfeit 100*l.* to be recovered in the courts at Westminster, one moiety to informers, and the other to the poor; and masters of smacks, hoys, boats, &c. in which the fish shall be imported, or brought on shore, forfeit 50*l.*

Besides the above, thus particularized, the following statutes relate to the same subject.—Westm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 47, and 13 R. 2. c. 19, as to Salmon and their fence months—31 E. 3. β. 2. c. 1. and 35 E. 3. (Ordin. of Herring) as to forestalling Herrings.—31 E. 3. β. 2. c. 2, selling of herrings at Tarmouth—Id. c. 3. as to Stuck fish and Salmon.—17 R. 2. c. 9, appoints justices to be conservators of rivers.—14 H. 6. c. 6, as to foreigners selling fish.—22 E. 4. c. 2: 11 H. 7. c. 23, as to pickled salmon and herrings.—2 & 3 E. 6. c. 6, forbids the granting licences to fish in foreign parts.—5 Eliz. c. 5, as to toll of fish—39 Eliz. c. 10, (continued by 3 Car. 1. c. 4, and 16 Car. 1. c. 4, though repealed by 43 Eliz. c. 9,) as to aliens fishing.—1 Jac. 1. c. 23, as to trespass by herring fishers.—3 Jac. c. 12, wears—13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 28, as to pilehard fishery.—15 Car. 2. c. 16,—Packing herrings.—Newfoundland fishery—30 Car. 2. c. 9, Severn fishery.—4 Ann. c. 15, Stover fishery.—2 Geo. 2. c. 19, Oyster fishery in Melway (and see tit. Oysters)—9 Geo. 2. c. 33, Lobster fishery on the coast of Scotland.—11 Geo. 3. c. 27: 15 Geo. 3. c. 43, Salmon fishery in the Tweed.—16 Geo. 3. c. 36, Cornwall pilehard fishery, and see also Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 45.

Various statutes have been made as to the particular supply and sale of fish in London and Westminster, viz.

Stat. 17 R. 2. c. 9, Appoints the Mayor of London conservator of the Thames—Stats. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 4: 9 An. c. 26: 3 Geo. 2. c. 27, and 2 Geo. 3. c. 15; for regulating Bilingsgate market; 'The Water bailiff's duty; and the Fishmongers' Company.—A long and particular Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 49, to establish an open fish-market in Westminster has not, it is believed, been ever put in force.—Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 21, regulates the fishery in the Thames and Midway, and Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, was passed to protect officers in their duty, under the several statutes against forestallers of fish, &c.—Finally the Stats. 29 Geo. 2. c. 39, and 33 Geo. 2. c. 27, were made to regulate the sale of fish at the first hand in the fish-markets in London and Westminster; and to prevent salesmen of fish buying fish to sell again on their own account; and to allow bret and turbot, brill, and pearl, although under the respective dimensions mentioned in 1 Geo. 1. c. 18, to be imported and sold: and to punish persons who shall take or sell any spawn, brood, or fry of fish, unfishable fish, or fish out of season, or meats under the size of five inches.

By this latter act every master of a vessel is to give a true account of the several sorts of fish brought alive to the Nore in his vessel, and if after such arrival, he shall wilfully destroy or throw away any of the said fish, not being unwholesome or unmarketable, &c. he is liable to be committed to the house of correction, and kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding two months nor less than one. And see farther Stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 15, for the better supplying the cities of London and Westminster with fish, by means of fish machines, and to reduce the exorbitant price thereof; and to protect and encourage fishermen.

FISHING, RIGHT OF, AND PROPERTY OF FISH. It has been held, that where the lord of the manor hath the soil on both sides the river, it is a good evidence that he hath the right of fishing, and it puts the proof upon him who claims a free fishery; but where a river ebbs and flows, and is an arm of the sea, there it is common to all, and he who claims a privilege to himself must prove it; for if trespass is brought for fishing there, the defendant may justify that the place where, is an arm of the sea, in which every Subject of our lord the king hath and ought to have free fishery.

In the Severn, the soil belongs to the owners of the land on each side; and the soil of the river Thames, is in the king, &c. but the fishing is common to all. 1 Mol. 105. He who is owner of the soil of a private river, hath a separate or several fishery; and he that hath free-fishery hath a property in the fish, and may bring a possessory action for them; but communis piscaria is like the case of all other commons. 2 Salk. 637.

There are three sorts of Fisheries or Piscaries. Free Fishery; Several (or separate) Fishery; and Common of Piscary.

Common of Piscary is a liberty of fishing in another man's water. 2 Comm. 34. See tit. Common. A Free Fishery, or exclusive right of fishing in a public river, is a royal franchise: this differs from a Several Fishery; because he that has a several fishery must also be (or at least derive his right from) the owner of the soil. It differs also from a common of piscary, in that the free fishery is an exclusive right, the common of piscary is not so; and therefore in a free fishery a man has property in the fish before they are caught: in a common of piscary, not till afterwards. 2 Comm. 39, 40; which see. As to a free fishery no new franchise can at present be granted of it, by the express provision of Magna Charta, c. 16; and the franchise must be at least as old as the reign of Hen. II. 2 Comm. 417. One that has a close pond in which there are fish, may call them pisces suos in an indictment, &c. But he cannot call them as bona & catalla, if they be not in trunks. There needs no privilege to make a fish pond; as there doth in case of a warren. Mod. Ca. 183. See further this Dict. title Game.

FISHERMEN. By Stat. 9 Ann. c. 26, There shall be a master, wardens and assistants of the Fishmongers' Company in London, chosen yearly at the next court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen after the tenth of June, who are are constituted a court of assistants: and they shall meet once a month at their common hall, to regulate abuses in fishery, register the names of fishermen, and mark their FLEET, Sax. Fleet, i. e. Flota, a place of running-water, where the tide or float comes up.] A prison in London, so called from a river or ditch that was formerly there, on the side whereof it stood. To this prison men are usually committed for contempt to the King and his laws, particularly against the courts of justice; or for debt, when persons are unable or unwilling to satisfy their creditors: there are large rules, and a Warden or Keeper belonging to the Fleet Prison, &c. By Stat. 1 Geo. 2. c. 32, the then Warden of the Fleet was disabled to hold any office, for his notorious oppressions of the prisoners; and the King was empowered to grant the said office to such person as he should think fit, &c. See titles Geol: Gaol: Prison.

FLEET-DITCH. The Corporation of London were enabled by Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 22, to fill up Fleet Ditch, and make the soil level with the streets: and the fee is vested in the Mayor and Commonalty. And at the time of building Blackfriars Bridge the ditch was arched over, and so filled up to the foot of the bridge, that the ground became level with Fleet-street.

FLOTAGES, Such things as by accident swim on the top of great rivers; the word is sometimes used in the commissions of Water Bailiffs.

FLOTSAM, Is where a ship is sunk or cast away, and the goods are floating upon the sea. 5 Rep. 106: Flotsam, Jetsam and Lagan are mentioned together; Jetsam being where any thing is cast out of the ship when in danger, and the ship notwithstanding perisheth; and Lagan is when heavy goods are thrown over board before the wreck of the ship, which sink to the bottom of the sea, but are tied to a cork or buoy in order to be found again. 5 Rep. 106. The King shall have FLOTSAM, JETSAM and LAGAN, when the ship is lost, and the owners of the goods are not known; but not otherwise. F. N. B. 122. Where the proprietors of the goods may be known, they have a year and a day to claim FLOTSAM. 1 Keb. 657. FLOTSAM, JETSAM, &c. any person may have by the King's grant, as well as the Lord Admiral, &c. See 1 Comm. 292. and this Dict. title Wreck.

FOCAGE, Focagium.] House-bote or Fire bote.

FODDER, Sax. Foda, i. e. Alimentum] Any kind of meat for horses, or other cattle: among the Feudists it was used for a prerogative of the Prince, to be provided with corn and other meat for his horses, by his subjects, in his wars or other expeditions. Hotom de verb. Feudal.

FODERTORIUM, Provision or fodder, to be paid by custom to the King's purveyor. Capitular. MS.

FOGAGE, Fogagium.] Fog or rank after-grass, not eaten in summer. LL. Forestar. Scot. c. 10.

FOTTERERS, Vagabonds. Blount. See Faitours.

FOLC-LANDS, Sax.] Copyhold lands; so called in the time of the Saxons, as charter lands were called Bocland, Kitch. 174. Folkland was terra vulgi or popularis, the land of the vulgar people, who had no certain estate therein, but held the same under the rents and services accustomed or agreed, at the will only of their Lord the Town; and it was therefore not put in writing, but accounted predium rusticum & ymbile. Specim. of Feuds, cap. 5. See this Dict. titles Copyhold; Tenure.

FOLC-MOTE, OR FOLK MOTE, Sax.] Fulgemor, Conventus populi.] Is compounded of Folk, populus, and mote or gemote, convenire; and signified originally, as Sommer in his Saxon Dictionary says, a general assembly of the people to consider of, and order matters of the commonwealth: See Leg. Edw. Confess. cap. 35. Spelman says the felmote was a sort of annual parliament, or convention of the Bishops, Thanes, Aldermen and Freemen, upon every May-day yearly; where the laymen were sworn to defend one another, and the King, and to preserve the laws of the kingdom, and then consulted of the common safety. But Dr. Brady infers from the laws of our Saxon Kings that it was an interior court, held before the King's Reeve or Steward, every month to do Folk right, or compose smaller differences, from whence there lay appeal to the superior courts. Brady's Gloss. p. 48. Squire seems to think the Folcmote, not distinct from the shire mote, or common general meeting of the county. Engl. Sax. Gov. 155 n.

Manwood mentions folkmote as a court holden in London, wherein all the folk and people of the city did complain of the Mayor and Aldermen, for misgovernment within the said city; and this word in Stowe's time continued in use among the Londoners; and denoted celor ex tota civitate c. c. c. Stowe's S. c. c.

According to Kent, the folkmote was a common council of all the inhabitants of a city, town or borough, convened often by sound of bell to the Mote Hill or Huse; or it was applied to a larger congress of all the freemen within a county, called the shire-mote, where formerly all knights and military tenants did fealty to the King, and elected the annual sheriff on the first of October; till this popular election, to avoid tumults and riot, devolved to the King's nomination. After which the City Folkmote was swallowed up in a select committee or Common Council, and the County Folkmote, in the Sheriff's Town and Messis. The word Folkmote was also used for any kind of popular or public meeting; as of all the tenants at the Court-Leet or Court Baron, in which signification it was of a less extent. Paroch. Antiq. 120—See further this Dict. title Parliament.

FOLDAGE AND FOLD COURSE, A liberty to fold sheep, &c. See Fallage; Fallfee.

FOLGARI, Menial servants; Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 10. House keepers by the Saxons were called Husfostene, and their servants or followers, Filgheres or Filgeres. LL. Hen. 1. c. 9.

FOOL, A Natural; one so from the time of his birth. See title Idiots and Lunatics.

FOOT or A FINE. See title Fine.

FOOT-GELD. From Sax. Fot, Pes; and Geldan, solvere. Ped. redemptio.] An amercement for not cutting out and expediting the balls of great dogs' feet in the forest: to be quit of foot-geld is a privilege to keep dogs within the forest unslayed, without punishment. Manwood, par. 1. p. 86. See title Fine.

FORAGE, Fr. Fourage.] Hay and straw for horses, particularly for the use of horse in an army.

FORAGIUM, Straw when the corn is thrashed out. Corvel.

FORBALK, Forbalka.] Lying forward or next the highway. Pr. Bl. nris Contin. Hist. Cleveland, p. 116.

FORBARR, To bar or deprive one of a thing for ever. Sc. Bur. 9 R. 2. c. 2: 6 H. 6. c. 4.

FORBATULUS, The aggressor slain in combat.

FORBATOR OF ARMOUR, Forbator.] Si quis forbator armatus fuerit, ad purgandum, &c. LL. Richard. MS. c. 22.

FORCE, Vis.] Is most commonly applied in injuria faciem, the evil suit, and signifies any unlawful violence. It is defined by W. & A. to be an offence, by which violence is used to things or persons; and he divides it into simple and compound, simple force, is that which is so committed that it hath no other crime accompanying it; as if one by force do only enter into another man's possession, with out doing any other unlawful act: mixed or compound force, is when some other violence is committed with such a fact, which of itself alone is criminal; as where any one by force enters into another man's house, and kills a man, or ravishes a woman, &c. And he makes several other divisions of this head. W. & A. Symbol. par. 2. sect. 65. Lord Coke says, there is also a force implied in law; as every trespass, replevin, or disseisin, implieth it; and an actual force, with weapons, number of persons, &c. where threatening is used to the terror of another. Co. Litt. 25. By law any person may enter a tavern; and a landlord may enter his tenant's house to view repair, &c. But if he that enters a tavern, commits any force or violence; or he that enters to view repairs, breaketh the house, &c. it shall be intended that they entered for that purpose. 8 Rep. 146. All force is against the law; and it is lawful to repel force by force: there is a maxim in our law, quod alius bonum et justum est, si per vim vel fraudem petatur, malum et iniustum est. 3 Rep. 78. Where a crime in itself capital, is endeavoured to be committed by force, it is lawful to repel that force by the death of the party attempting. 4 Comm. 181. See title Murder.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

An Offence against the public peace which is committed by violently taking or keeping possession of lands and tenements, with menaces, arms and force, and without the authority of the law; whereby he who hath right of entry is barred or hindered. See 4 Comm. 148. At Common law, any one who had a right of entry into lands, &c. might regain possession thereof by force; but this liberty being much abused, to the breach of the public peace, it was found necessary that it should be restrained. By Stat. 5 R. 2. st. 1. c. 8, all forcible entries are punished with imprisonment and ransom at the King's will. And by Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 2: 8 H. 6. c. 9: 31 Edw. 3. c. 11: 21 Jac. 1. c. 15, upon any forcible entry or forcible detainer after peaceable entry, into any lands (or benefices of the church) one or more Justices of the peace taking such power of the county, may go to the place, and there record the force upon his own view, as in case of riots; and upon such conviction may commit the offender to gaol till he makes fine and ransom to the King. And moreover the justice or justices have power to summon a jury to try the forcible entry or detainer complained of: and if the same be found by that jury, then besides the fine on the offender, the justices shall make restitution, by the sheriff, of the possession, without inquiring into the merits of the title; for the force is the only thing to be tried, punished and remedied by them; and the same may be done by indictment at the general Sessions. But this provision does not extend to such an endeavour to maintain possession by force, where they themselves or their ancestors have been in peaceable enjoyment of the lands, &c. for three years immediately preceding. 4 Comm. 148. And this may be alleged in way of restitution, and restitution is to be stayed till that be tried, if the other will traverse the same, &c. Dalt. 312. See F. Raym. 85: 1 Sid. 149: Salk. 260.

Indictment for forcible entry must be laid of liberum tenementum, &c. to have restitution by stat. 15 R. 2. c. 2: 8 H. 6. c. 9: &c. But by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 15, Justices of peace may give like restitution of possession to tenants for years, tenant by elegit, statute staple, &c. and copyholders, as to freeholders, since which statute the estate of the person ousted must be stated, for perhaps he is only tenant at will. Serb. 1 Salk. 260: R. 1 Sid. 107. FORCIBLE ENTRY.

farther as to what shall be a good indictment, Com. Dig. title Forcible Entry D 4.)

Having said thus much generally, we may proceed more fully to enquire,

I. What shall be deemed a Forcible Entry and Detainer under the foregoing Statutes.

II. What Remedy is provided in such Cases.

I. By Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 8, "None shall make any entry, into any lands or tenements, (or benefice of holy church Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 2; or other possessions, Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9. § 2,) but where entry is given by the law; and in such case not with strong hand or with multitude of people, but only in peaceable and easy manner; on pain of imprisonment and ransom at the King's will.

When one or more persons armed with unusual weapons violently enter into the house or land of another; or where they do not enter violently, if they forcibly put another out of his possession; or if one enters another's house, without his consent, although the door be open, &c. these are all forcible entries punishable by law. Co. Lit. 257. So when a tenant keeps possession of the land at the end of his term against the landlord, it is a forcible detainer. And if a lessee takes a new lease of another person, whom he conceives to have better title, and at the end of the term keeps possession against his own landlord, this is a forcible detainer. Co. Jac. 19. Also persons continuing in possession of a defeasible estate after the title is defeated, are punishable for forcible entry; for continuing in possession afterwards, amounts in law to a new entry. Co. Lit. 2, 6, 257. And an infant or feme-covert may be guilty of forcible entry within the statutes in respect of violence committed by them in person; but not for what is done by others at their command, their commands being void. Co. Lit. 257, 357.

If a man have two houses next adjoining, the one by a defeasible title, and the other by a good title; and he uses force in that he hath by the good title to keep persons out of the other house, this is a forcible detainer. 2 Shep. Abr. 203. A man enters into the house of another by the windows, and then threatneth the party, and he for fear doth leave the house, it is a forcible entry: so if one enter a house when no person is therein, with armed men, &c. Mor. Cas. 185. If a person after peaceable entry, shall make use of arms to defend his possession, &c. it will be forcible detainer: a man puts another out of his house by force, if he then puts in one of his servants in a peaceable manner, who keeps out the party, &c. it will be a forcible entry, but not a detainer; but if himself remaineth there with force, this makes a forcible detainer. If I hear that persons will come to my house to beat me, &c. and I take in force to defend myself, it is no forcible detainer; though where they are coming to take lawful possession only, it is otherwise. 2 Shep. 203.

This offence may be committed of a rent, as well as of a house or land: as where one comes to distrain, and the tenant threatens to kill him, or forcibly makes resistance, &c. 2 Shep. 201. But forcibly entry cannot be of a way or other easement; or of a common or office. 1 Hawk. P. C. So no man can be guilty of forcible entry, for entering with violence into lands or houses in his own sole possession at the time of entry; as by breaking open doors &c. of his house detained from him by one who has the bare custody of it; but jointenants, or tenants in common, may be guilty of forcible entry, and holding out their companions. A person is not guilty of a forcible detainer, by barely refusing to go out of a house, and continuing therein in despite of another. And no words alone can make a forcible entry, although violent and threatening, without force used by the party. 1 Lill. Abr. 514.

A forcible entry may be committed by a single person as well as by 20, and all who accompany a man when he makes a forcible entry shall be adjudged to enter with him, whether they actually come upon the lands or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64.

The same circumstances of violence or terror which will make an entry forcible will make a detainer forcible also. And a detainer may be forcible whether the entry were forcible or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64.

If a Justice of peace come to view a force in a house, and they refuse to let him in; this of itself will make a forcible detainer in all cases; but it must be upon complaint made. Dalt. 312.

II The Remedy may be, by action; or by Justices of peace upon view; or by indictment or inquisition.

By Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9. § 6, "If any person be put out or disseised of any lands or tenements in forcible manner, or put out forcibly and after holden out with strong hand, the party grieved shall have assize of novel disseisin, or writ of trespass against the disseisor; and if he recover, (or if any alienation be made to defraud the possessor of his right, which is also declared by the statute to be void,) he shall have treble damages, and the defendant shall also make fine and ransom to the King."

But in an action on this statute if the defendant make title which is found for him, he shall be dismissed without any enquiry concerning the force; however punishable he may be for that at the King's suit. 1 Hawk. P. C. Dalt. c. 129.

If in trespass or assize upon this statute the defendant is condemned by non sum informatus; he shall pay treble damages and treble costs: a judgment, and affirmed in error. For the words of the statute give them where the recovery is by verdict, or otherwise in due manner. Jenk. Cent. 197.

The party grieved if he will lose the benefit of his treble damages and costs may be aided and have the assistance of the Justices at the general Sessions by way of indictment on this same statute. Which being found there, he shall be restored to his possession by a writ of restitution granted out of the same court to the sheriff. Dalt. c. 129.

Indictment of forcible entry lies not only for lands, but for tithes; also for rents; but not against a lord entering a common with force, for which the commoner may not indict him, because it is his own land. Co. Car. 201, 486.

For a more speedy remedy the party grieved may complain to any one Justice or to a mayor, sheriff or bailiff, within their liberties; and it is provided by Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 2: & H. 6. c. 9, that after complaint made to such Justice, &c. he shall within a convenient time at the costs of the party grieved take sufficient power of the county, and go to the place where such force is made, and if he shall find such force, shall cause the offenders to be arrested, and make a record of such force by him viewed; and the offenders so arrested shall be put in the next gaol, there to abide convict by the record of the same justice until they have made fine and ransom to the King.

As to restitution to the party injured, it is enacted by the said stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9., though that the persons making such entry be present, or else departed before the coming of the Justice, he may notwithstanding in some town next to the tenements so entered, or in some other convenient place, have power to enquire by a jury of the county as to the persons making such forcible entry and detainer; and the Justice may make his precept to the sheriff, who is to summon the jury. And if such forcible entry or detainer be found before such Justice, then the said Justice shall cause to re-settle the lands and tenements so entered or holden, and shall restore the party put out to the full possession of the same. And by the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 11., if on an indictment of forcible entry, &c. it is found against the party indicted, he shall pay such costs and damages as the Judges or Justices shall assess.

Under the above Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 2. any Justice of the peace upon view of the force, may make a record of it, and commit the offender. And this, without a writ directed to him to execute the statutes: and upon any information without a complaint of the party. So every Justice may take the sheriff, an offse committatus, to restrain, or he may break open a house to remove the force. Dalt. c. 44. The record made by a Justice upon view, shall be a conviction, and is not traversable, and ought to be certified to B. R. or the next assizes, or quarter sessions. And if a defect appears, in the conviction, to B. R. it shall be quashed. 1 Sid. 156. See 8 Co. 121. The Justices have power to fine on view: but are not bound to do it on the spot, but may take a reasonable time to consider. See Str. 794: Ld. Paym. 1515.

The Justices, on forcible detainer, may punish the force upon view, and fine and imprison the offenders; Sid. 156. And it hath been held, that in forcible entry and detainer, the jury are to find all or none; and not the detainer, without the forcible entry. 1 Vent. 25.

An indictment will lie at Common law for a forcible entry, though generally brought on the above statutes. But it must shew on the face of it sufficient actual force. 3 Burr. 1702, 1732.

An indictment for a forcible detainer, ought to shew, that the entry was peaceable, Cro. Jac. 151.

Indictments for forcible entry must set forth, that the entry was in manu forti, to distinguish this offence from other trespasses vi et armis; and there are many niceties to be observed in drawing the indictment, otherwise it will be quashed. Cro. Jac. 451: Dalt. 298. There must be certainty in this indictment; and no repugnancy, which is an incurable fault. An indictment of forcible entry was quashed, for that it did not set forth the estate of the party: so where the defendant hath not been in possession peaceably three years before the indictment, without laying before the indictment found, &c. And force shall not be intended when the judgment is generally laid, for it must be always expressed. 2 Nels. Abr. 867, 869.

The Justice may make restitution, (after inquisition found) to the party ousted, by himself, or by his precept to the sheriff. T. Raym. 85: Carib. 496. So restitution shall be made upon an indictment at the quarter sessions. H. P. C. 140.

An indictment of forcible entry may be removed from before Justices of peace into the court of B. R. coram rege, which court may award restitution. 11 Rep. 65. And the justices before whom such indictment was found, may, after traverse tendered, certify or deliver the indictment into the King's Bench, and refer the proceeding thereupon to the justices of that court.

So justices of jail delivery, upon an indictment before them. So re-restitution shall be, after an ill restitution awarded. Sar. 68: Cro. Jac. 151. So restitution shall be to a disseisor ousted by the force of the disseisee. To a lessee, though the lessor, who was disseised, thereby opposes it. To a copyholder though his lord opposes it. vide Dalt. c. 132 — Contrà before Stat. 21 Jac. c. 15. See Dy. 142 a. in marg.

A copyholder cannot be disseised, because he hath no freehold in his estate; but he may be expelled. And a copyhold tenant may be restored, where he is wrongfully expelled; but if the indictment be only of disseisin, as he may not be disseised, there can be no restitution but at the prayer of him who hath the freehold. 22 Ju. 81: Cro. Jac. 41. Possession of the termor is the possession of him in reversion: and when a lessee for years is put out of possession by force, restitution must be to him in reversion, and not to the lessee; and then his lessee may re-enter. 1 Leon 327. A termor may say that he was expelled, and his landlord in reversion disseised: or rather that the tenant of the freehold is disseised, and he, the lessee for years, expelled. 4 Mol. 248: 2 Nels. Abr. 869. If a disseisee within three years makes a lawful claim, this is an interruption of the possession of the disseisor, H. P. C. 139. Though it has been adjudged, that it is not the title of the possessor, but the possession for three years, which is material. Sid. 149. Since the Stat. 5 R. 2. §. 1. c. 8., if one be seised of lands, and another having good right to enter, doth accordingly enter manu forti, he may be indicted notwithstanding his right, &c. 3 Salk. 170. For a forcible detainer only it is said there is no restitution; the plaintiff never having been in possession. 1 Vent. 23: Sid. 97, 99.

No restitution shall be awarded to an advowson, common, rent, &c. for it shall only be to land. Dalt. c. 44. Nor, where he, who used force has the possession by operation of law: as if a disseisee enters, and afterwards, by force, ousts his disseisor, the possession shall not be restored; for it was reverted in the disseisee by his entry. Dalt. c. 132. Nor, if a lessor enters by force, upon the lessee, for a forfeiture; nor to any other than him who was ousted by force, or to his heir. Salk. 587. Or any abator, after the death of the ancestor. Dalt. c. 132. Nor if the party tenders a traverse to the inquisition. 1 Sid. 287. Upon a certiorari delivered to remove an indictment, it shall be stayed. H. P. C. 141. Or, if the indictment appears insufficient. H. P. C. 140. And in such case restitution granted may be stayed before execution. H. P. C. 140. So restitution shall not be, after a conviction by a Justice upon his view. 1 Pent. 301. Nor by justices of assize, gaol delivery, or justices of peace; if the indictment was not found before them, H. P. C. 140 Dalt. c. 44, 131. So restitution shall not be, unless immediately; not four or five years afterwards. Carib. 496.

A record of justices of peace of forcible entry, is not traversable; but the entry and force, &c. may be traversed in writing, and the justices may summon a jury for trial of the traverse. 1 Salk. 353. The finding of the force being in nature of a presentment by the jury, is traversable; and if the justices of peace refuse the traverse, and and grant restitution, on removing the indictment into B. R. there the traverse may be tried; and on a verdict for the party, &c. a restitution shall be granted. Sid 287: 2 C. c. 8. If no force is found at a trial thereof before justices, restitution is not to be granted; nor shall it be had till the force is tried; nor ought the justices to make it in the absence of the defendant, without calling him to answer. 1 Hawk P. C. c. 64.

No other justices of peace but those before whom the indictment was found, may either at sessions, or out of it, award restitution; the same justices may do it in person, or make a precept to the sheriff to do it, who may raise the power of the county to assist him in executing the same. 1 Hawk P. C. c. 64. And the same justices of peace may also supersede the restitution, before it is executed; on insufficiency found in the indictment, &c. But no other justices, except of the court of B. R. A certiorari from B. R. is a superfetas to the restitution; and the justices of B. R. may sit aside the restitution after executed, if it be against law, or irregularly obtained, &c. 1 Salk. 154. If justices of peace exceed their authority, an information may be brought against them. A conviction for forcible entry before a fine is set, may be quashed on motion; but after a fine is set, it may not; the defendant must bring writ of error. 1 Salk. 450.

If a plaintiff proceeds not criminally by indictment for forcible entry, but commences a civil action on the case, on Stat 8 Hen 6 c 9, the defendant is to plead Not guilty; or may plead any special matter, and traverse the force; and the plaintiff in his replication must answer the special matter, and not the traverse; and if it be found against the defendant, he is convicted of the force of course; whereupon the plaintiff shall recover treble damages and costs. 3 Salk 169.

A reverentor cannot bring action of forcible entry, because he cannot be expelled, though he may be dispossessed. D. c. 141. The words in the writ to maintain the action are, that the defendant expulit & dissipavit, &c. yet it is said that every dissipation implies an expulsion in forcible entry. Cro. Jac. 31.

Though forcible entry is punishable either by indictment or action; the action is seldom brought, but the indictment often. But in many cases it may be much more for the benefit of the party to bring the action.

If a Forcible entry or detainer shall be made by three persons or more, it is also a riot, and may be proceeded against as such, if no inquiry hath before been made of the force. D. c. 44.

FOREIGN, 1 r. foreign, Lat. forinsecus, extraneus.] Strange or outlandish, of another country, or society; and in our law, is used adjectively being joined with divers substantives in several senses. K. t. b. 126

FOREIGN ATTACHMENT, See title Attachment, foreign.

FOREIGN COURT At Lemster (anciently called Leominster) there is the borough and the foreign court; which last is within the jurisdiction of the manor, but not within the liberty of the bailiff of the borough. so there is a foreign court of the honour of Gloucester. Claus. 8 Ed. 2. Foreign bought and sold was custom within the city of London, which, being found prejudicial to the sellers of cattle in Smithfield, was abolished.

FOREIGN KINGDOM; FOREIGN LAWS AND CUSTOMS. A Foreign Kingdom is one under the dominion of a foreign prince; so that Ireland, or any other place, subject to the crown of England, cannot with us be called foreign; though to some purposes they are distinct from the realm of England. If two of the king's subjects fight in a foreign kingdom, and one of them is killed, it cannot be tried here by the common law. but it may be tried and determined in the court of the Consul and Merchant, according to the lex loci; or the fact may be examined by the Privy Council, and tried by commissioners appointed by the king in any county of England, by statute 33 H. 8. c. 23. 3 Inst. 48. One Hutchinson killed Mr. Culson abroad in Portugal, for which he was tried there and acquitted, the exemplification of which acquittal he produced under the Great Seal of that kingdom; and the king being willing he should be tried here, referred it to the judges, who all agreed, that the party being already acquitted by the laws of Portugal, could not be tried again for the same fact here. 3 K. b. 785

If a Stranger of Holland, or any foreign kingdom, buys goods at London, and gives a note under his hand for payment, and then goes away privately into Holland, the seller may have a certificate from the Lord Mayor, on proof of sale and delivery of the goods: upon which the people of Holland will execute a legal process on the party. 4 Inst. 38. Also at the instance of an ambassador or consul, such a person of England, or any criminal against the laws here, may be sent from a foreign kingdom hither. Where a bond is given, or contract made in a foreign kingdom, it may be tried in the King's Bench, and laid to be done in any place in England. Hol 11 2 Inst. 322.

An agreement made in France, on two French persons marrying, touching the wife's fortune, has been decreed here to be executed, according to the laws of England; and that the husband surviving should have the whole; but relief was not given for a certain sum, and the rest to be governed by the custom of Paris. Preced. Chanc. 20, 208.

A and B. being inhabitants of the United States of America, while those States were colonies of Great Britain, and before the rebellion of them as colonies, B executes a bond to A—During the rebellion, after the declaration of independence by the American Congress, but before the independence of America was acknowledged by Great Britain, both parties are attained, their property confiscated, and vested in the respective States of which they were were inhabitants, by the legislative acts of those States then in rebellion, and a fund provided for the payment of the debts of B. Afterwards the independence of America is acknowledged by Great Britain. Under all these circumstances A. may maintain an action on the bond against B. in England.

Though all these judgments appear unanimous, the two former, and perhaps all three of them, were given in one measure upon different grounds. But it appears upon the two first decisions to be a principle not judicially controverted, that "the positive laws of one country cannot be taken notice of, to affect the laws and rights of citizens (or subjects of such country, becoming citizens,) of another; the penal laws of foreign countries being strictly local, and affecting nothing more than they can reach, and can be seized by virtue of their authority." See 3 Term Rep. 733. 5: 1 H. Black. Rep. 175.

In the case of Dudley v. Pitt, the court having no doubt about the law, and thinking that it would lead to the discussion of improper topics, would not permit the question to be argued. That was the case of a covenant in a conveyance of lands in America, made during the time of the rebellion, (April, 1780) "that the grantor had a legal title, and that the grantee might peaceably enjoy, &c. without the least interruption, &c. of the grantor and his heirs, or of any other person whomsoever." The court were of opinion that this covenant was not broken by the States of America seizing the lands, as forfeited, for an act done previous to the conveyance, notwithstanding the subsequent acknowledgment of independence. 3 Term Rep. 584.

FOREIGN OPPOSER, or Apposer. See Exchequer.

FOREIGN PLANTATIONS; AND DOMINIONS OF THE CROWN. As to the former of these, see this Dict. tit. Plantations. As to any foreign dominions which may belong to the person of the king by hereditary descent, by purchase or other acquisition, as the territory of Hanover and his majesty's other property in Germany; as these do not in any wise appertain to the crown of these kingdoms they are entirely unconnected with the laws of England, and do not communicate with this nation in any respect whatsoever. The Engl. Leg. Legislature, warned by past experience, wisely interdicted in the act of Settlement, which vested the crown in the present family, the following clause, "That in case the crown and imperial dignity of this realm shall hereafter come to any person not being a native of this kingdom of England, this nation shall not be obliged to engage in any war for the defence of any dominions or territories which do not belong to the crown of England, without consent of Parliament." Stat. 12 Ch. 13. W. 3. c. 3.

FOREIGN PLEA. A plea in objection to a judge, where he is refused as incompetent to try the matter in question, because it arises out of his jurisdiction. Kitch. 75: Stat. 4 Hen. 8. c. 2. If a plea of issuable matter is alleged in a different county from that wherein the party is indicted or appealed, by the common law, such pleas can only be tried by juries returned from the counties wherein they are alleged. But by the Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 14. § 5, all foreign pleas triable by the country, upon an indictment for petit treason, murder or felony, shall be forthwith tried without delay, before the same justices before whom the party shall be arraigned, and by the jurors of the same county where he is arraigned, notwithstanding the matter of the pleas is alleged to be in any other county or counties: though as this statute extends not to treason, nor appeals, ~~it is said a foreign issue therein must still be tried by the jury of the county wherein alleged~~ 3 Inst. 17: H. P. C. 255: 2 Mart. P. C. c. 40. § 6, 7. In a foreign plea in a civil action the defendant ought to plead to that place where the plaintiff alleges the matter to be done in his declaration; and the defendant may plead a foreign plea whether the matter is transitory, or not transitory; but in the last case he must swear to it. Sid. 2, 4: 2 Nel. 871. When a foreign plea is pleaded, the court generally makes the defendant put it upon oath, that it is true; or will enter up judgment for want of a plea. See 5 Mod. 335. Foreign answer is such an answer as is not triable in the county where made; and foreign matter is that matter which is done in another county. See further titles Pleading; Indictment.

FOREIGN SERVICE, is that whereby a mesne lord holds of another, without the compass of his own fee: or that which the tenant performs either to his own lord, or to the lord paramount out of the fee. Kitch. 2, 9. See Bract. lib. 2. c. 16. Feudal tenures seems also to be used for knight's service, or service uncertain, Parkin. 650.—Saunders's Feudal Service. Mon. A. tom 2. p. 637.

Felonies in foreign, Foreign States, are restrained and punished by stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 4; which makes it felony for any person whatever to go out of the realm, to serve any foreign Prince or State, without having first taken the oath of allegiance before his departure. And it is felony also for any Gentleman, or person of higher degree, or who hath borne office in the army, to go out of the realm to serve such foreign Prince or State, without previously entering into a bond with two sureties, not to be reconciled to the See of Rome, or enter into any conspiracy against his natural Sovereign. See the stat. § 18. 19.—By stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 30, enforced by stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 17, if any subject of Great Britain shall enlist himself, or if any person shall procure him to be enlisted in any foreign service, or detain or embark him for that purpose without licence under the king's sign manual, he shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy; but if the person so seduced, shall within 15 days discover his seducer, he shall on conviction of the seducer be indemnified.—By stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 17, it is enacted that to serve under the French King, as a military officer shall be felony without benefit of clergy: and to enter into the Scotch brigade in the Dutch service without previously taking the oaths of allegiance and abjuration shall incur a forfeiture of 500*l.* See further this Dict. titles Alliance; Contempt; Treason.

FOREIGNERS. See the Alien.

FOREJUDGER, forfeudgatus.] A judgment whereby a person is deprived of or put by, the thing in question. Bract. lib. 4. To be forejudged the court, is when an officer or attorney of any court is expelled the same for some offence, or for not appearing to an action, on a bill filed against him. See title Attorneys at Law.

Form of a Forejudger of an Attorney.

BE it remembered, that on the day of, &c. this same term, A. B. came here into this court, by, &c. his attorney, and exhibited to the justices of our Sovereign Lord the King, his bill against C. D. Gent. one of the attorneys of the Common

FORE

FOREST.

Common Bench of our said Sovereign Lord the King, personally present here in court; the tenor of which bill follows in these words, that is to say, To the justices of our sovereign Lord the King, J. A. B. by, &c. his attorney, complains of C. D. one of the justices, &c. for that whereas, &c. (setting forth the whole bill) The pledges for the prosecution are John Doe and Richard Roe. Whereupon the said C. D. being solemnly called, came not, therefore he is forejudged from exercising his office of attorney of this court, for his contumacy, &c.

FORESCHOKE, Drelshum.] Forester; in one of our statutes, it is specially used for lands or tenements leased by a lord, for want of services performed by the tenant, and quietly held by such lord beyond a year and a day; now the tenant, who seeth his land taken into the hands of the lord, and possessed so long, and doth not pursue the course appointed by law to recover it, doth in presumption of law disavow or forsake all the right he hath to the same: and then such lands shall be called foreschoke. See Stat 10 Ed. 2 c. 1.

FOREST.

FORESTA, SALTUS.] A great or vast wood, lo us silvestris & saltus. Our law writers define it thus; Foresta est locus ubi fera inhabitant vel includuntur; others say it is called Foresta, quasi ferarum statio, vel tuta mansio ferarum. Manw. l. in his Forst Laws, gives this particular definition of it: A Forest is a certain territory or circuit of woody grounds and pastures, known in its bounds and privilege, for the peaceable being and abiding of wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase and warren, to be under the king's protection for his princely delight: replenished with beasts of venary or chase, and great coverts of vert for succour of the said beasts; for preservation whereof there are particular laws, privileges and officers belonging therunto. Manw. part 2. c. 1.

Forests are of that antiquity in England, that (except the New Forest in Hampshire, erected by William called The Conqueror, and Hampton Court, erected by King Hen. VIII. (see stat 31 H. 8. c. 5.) it is said there is no record or history doth make any certain mention of their erections and beginnings; though they are mentioned by several writers; and in divers of our laws and statutes. 4 Inst. 319. Our ancient historians tell us, that New Forest was raised by the destruction of twenty-two parish churches, and many villages, chapels and manors, for the space of thirty miles together; which was attended with divers judgments, as they are termed, on the posterity of King Will. I. who erected it; for William Rufus was there shot with an arrow, and before him Richard the brother of Hen. I. was there killed; and Henry, nephew to Robert, the eldest son of the Conqueror, did hang by the head of the head in the boughs of the forest like unto Abraham Blount.

Besides the New Forest, there are sixty eight other Forests in England; thirteen chases, and more than seven hundred parks: the four principal Forests are New Forest on the Sea, Shinewood Forest on the Trent, Dian Forest on the Severn, and Windso Forest on the Thames. The way of making a Forest is thus. Certain commissioners are appointed under the Great Seal of England, who view the ground intended for a Forest, and fence it round with metes and bounds; which being returned into the Chancery, the King causes it to be proclaimed throughout the county where the land lieth, that it is a Forest, and to be governed by the laws of the Forest, and prohibits all persons from hunting there without his leave; and then he appointeth officers fit for the preservation of the vert and venison, and so it becomes a Forest on record. Manw. c. 2. Though the King may erect a Forest on his own ground and wastes, he may not do it in the ground of other persons, without their consent; and agreements with them for that purpose ought to be confirmed by parliament. 4 Inst 300.

Proof of a Forest appears by matter of record; as by the eyes of the justices of the Forest, and other courts, and officers of Forest, &c. and not by the name in grants. 12 Rep. 22. As parks are inclosed with wall, pale, &c. so Forest and chates are inclosed by metes and bounds; such as rivers, highways, hills; which are an inclosure in law; and without which there cannot be a Forest. And in the eye of the law, the boundaries of a forest go round about it as if it were a brick wall, directly in a right line the one from the other, and they are known either by matter of record, or prescription. 4 Inst. 317. Bounds of a Forest may be ascertained by commission from the Lord Chancellor; and commissioners, sheriffs, officers of Forests, &c. are empowered to make inquests thereof. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 16. Also the boundaries of forests are reckoned a part of the forest; for if any person kill or hunt any of the King's deer in any highway, river, or other inclusive boundary of a Forest, he is as great an offender as if he had killed or hunted deer within the Forest itself. 4 Inst 318.

By the grant of a Forest, the game of the Forest do pass; and beasts of the Forest are the hart, hind, buck, doe, boar, wolf, fox, hare, &c. The seasons for hunting whereof are as follow, viz. that of the hart and buck begins at the Feast of St. John Baptist, and ends at Holy-wood day; of the hind and doe, begins at Holy-wood, and continues till Candlemas; of the boar, from Christmas to Candlemas; of the fox, begins at Christmas, and continues till Lady-day; of the hare, at Michaelmas, and lasts till Candlemas. Dyer 169: 4 Inst. 316.

Not only game, &c. are incident to a Forest, but also a Forest hath divers special properties. 1. A Forest truly and strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the King; for none but the King hath power to grant commission to any one to be a justice in eye of the forest, but if the King grants a Forest to subject, and granteth further that upon request made in Chancery, he and his heirs shall have justices of the Forest, than the subject hath a Forest in law. 4 Inst. 314: Cro. fac. 155.

The second property of a forest is the Courts; as the Justice-seat, the Swanmote, and court of attachment. The third property is the officers belonging to it; as first, the justices of the Forest, the warren or warden, the verderers, foresters, avouers, regarlers, keepers, bailiffs, beadles, &c. See title Attachment of the Forest.

As to the Courts. The most especial court of a Forest is the Swanmote, which is no less incident to it than a court of purpours is to a fair: and, if this fail, there is nothing remaining of the Forest, but it is turned into the nature of a Chase. Manw. c. 21: Crompt. sur. 146.

The court of Attachment or woodmote in Forests, is kept every forty days; at which the Foresters bring in the attachment de viridi et venatione, and the presentments thereof, and the verderers do receive the same, and inroll them; but this court can only inquire, not convict.

FOREST.

vict. The court of Swainmote is holden before the verderors as judges, by the steward of the swainmote, thrice in the year: the swains or freeholders within the Forest are to appear at this court, to make inquests and juries; and this court may inquire de promotione Forestiariorum et aliorum ministrorum Forestie, et de eorum oppressionibus populo nostro illatis, and also may receive and try presentments certified from the court of Attachments, against offences in venison. And this court may inquire of offences, and convict also, but not give judgment, which must be at the justice-seat. 4 Inst. 289.

The Court of Pegs, or Survey of Dogs is holden likewise every third year, for expeditation, or lawing of deers, by cutting off the skin three claws of the fore feet, to prevent their running at or killing of deer. No other dogs but mastiffs are to be thus lawed or expeditated, for no other were permitted to be kept within the precincts of the Forest, it being supposed that the keeping of these, and these only, was necessary for the defence of a man's house. 4 Inst. 303.

The principal court of the Forest is the Court of the Chief Justice in Eyre, or Justice at, which is a court of record, and hath authority to hear and determine all trespasses, pleas, and causes of the Forest, &c. within the Eyre, as well concerning vert and venison, as other causes whatsoever; and this court cannot be kept oftener than twice in a year. As before other Justices in Eyre, it must be summoned forty days at least before the sitting thereof; and on writ of summons is to be directed to the sheriff of the county, and another writ Quia si forester, Dux Regis et ejus locum tenenti, &c. Which writ of summons consists of two parts: First, to summon all the officers of the Forest, and that they bring with them all records, &c. Secondly, All persons who claim any liberties or franchises within the Forest, and to shew how they claim the same. It may also proceed to try presentments in the inferior courts of the Forest, and to give judgment upon conviction of the Swainmote. And the Chief Justice may therefore after presentment made, or indictment found, but not before, issue his warrant to the officers of the Forest to apprehend the offenders. Stats. 1 E. 3. c. 8. 7 R. 2. c. 4.—This court being a court of record, may fine and imprison for offences within the Forest, and therefore if there be erroneous judgment at the justice seat, the record may be removed by writ of error into B. R. or the Chief Justice in Eyre may adjourn any matter to that court. 4 Inst. 291, 5, 313.

These Justices in Eyre were instituted by Henry II. A. D. 1184: and their courts were formerly held very regularly; but the last court of Justice-seat of any note, was that holden in the reign of Charles I. before the Earl of Holland; the rigorous proceedings at which are reported by Sir W. Jones. After the Restoration, another was held, pro forma only, before the Earl of Oxford. but since the era of the Revolution in 1688, the Forest laws have fallen into total disuse, to the great advantage of the Subject. See 3 Comm 73—Much therefore of what follows is matter rather of curiosity than use.

There is but one Chief Justice of the Forests on this side Trent, and he is named Judiciarius Itinerans Forestarum, &c. citra Trentam; and there is another, Capitalis Justiciarius; and he is Justiciarius Itinerans omnium Forestarum ultra Trentam, &c. who is a person of greater dignity, than knowledge in the laws of the Forest; and therefore when Justice seats are held, there are associated to him such as the King shall appoint, who, together with him determine omnia placita forestie, &c. 4 Inst. 315.—By Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 35, Justices of the King's Forests may make deputies.

A Justice in Eyre cannot grant licence to sell any timber, unless it be pendente curia, or after a writ of ad quod damnum: and it hath been resolved by all the judges, that though Justices in Eyre, and the King's officers within his Forest, have charge of venison, and of vert or green-lue, for the maintenance of the King's game, and all manner of trees for covert, browse and pannage; yet when timber of the Forest is sold, it must be cut and taken by power under the Great Seal, or the Exchequer Seal, by view of the Foresters, that it may not be had in places inconvenient for the game: and the Justice in Eyre, or any of the King's officers in the Forest, cannot sell or dispose of any wood within the Forest without commission; so that the Exchequer and the officers of the Forest have divisum imperium, the one for the profit of the King, the other for his pleasure. All no officer of the Forest can claim windfalls, or dotard trees, for their perquisites, because they were once parcel of the King's inheritance; but they ought to be sold by commission, for the King's benefit. See on Stat. 3 vol. p. 304, 5.

If any officers cut down wood, not necessary for browse, &c. they forfeit their offices. 9 Rep. 30. The lord of a Forest may by his officers enter into any man's wood within the regard of the Forest, and cut down browsewood for the deer in winter. A prescription for a person to take and cut down timber-trees in a Forest, without view of the Foresters, it is said may be good: but of this questio, without allowance of a former case, &c. If a man hath wood in a Forest, and hath no such prescription, the law will allow him to fell it, so as he does not prejudice the game, but leave sufficient vert; but it ought to be by writ of ad quod damnum, &c. 4 Inst. C. 15. Jac. 155. And every person in his own wood in a forest may take hays bote and hay bote, by view of the Foresters; and so may freeholders by prescription, copyholders by custom, &c. 1 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 2. The wood taken by view of the Foresters, ought to be presented at the next Court of Attachment, that it was by view, and may appear of record.

Fences, &c. in Forests and chases, must be with low hedges, and they may be destroyed, though of forty years continuance, if they were not before. Cro. Jac. 156. He whose wood is in danger of being spoiled, for want of repairing fences by another, ought to request the party to make good the hedges; and if he refuse, then he must do it himself, and have action on the case against the other that should have done it. 1 Jones 777.

A person may have action at Common-law for a trespass in a Forest, as to wood, &c. to recover his right. Sid. 296.

The Chief Warden of the Forest is a great officer, next to the Justices of the Forest, to bail and discharge offenders; but he is no judicial officer; and the constable of the castle where a Forest is, by the Forest law is Chief Warden of the Forest, as of Windsor Castle, &c.

A Verderor is a judicial officer of the Forest, and chosen in full county, by the King's writ: his office is to observe and keep the assises or laws of the Forests, and view, receive, and inroll, the attachments and presentments of all trespasses of the Forest of vert and venison, and to do equal right and justice to the people: the Verderors are the chief judges of the Sanct court; although the Chief Warden, or his deputy, usually sits there. 4 Inft. 29.

The Regarder is to make regard of the Forest, and to view and inquire of offences, concealments, defaults of Foresters, &c. Before any justice seat is holden, the Regarders of the Forest must make their regard, and go thro' and view the whole Forest, &c. They are ministerial officers, constituted by letters patent of the King, or chosen by writ to the sheriff. 4 Inft. 291.

A Forester is, in legal understanding, a sworn officer ministerial of the Forest, and is to watch over the vert and venison, and to make attachments and true presentments of all manner of trespasses done within the Forest: a Forester is also taken for a Woodward: this officer is made by letters patent, and it is said the office may be granted in fee, or for life. 4 Inft. 293. Every Forester, when he is called at a court of justice seat, ought upon his knees to deliver his horn to the Chief Justice in Eyre; so every Woodward ought to present his huchet to my Lord.

A Riding Forester is to lead the King in his hunting. 1 Jon. 2-7. The office of Forester, &c. though it be a fee simple, cannot be granted or assigned over without the King's licence. 4 Inft. 316. If a Forester by patent for life, is made justice of the same forest pro hac vice, the forestership is become void; for these offices are incompatible, as the forester is under the correction of the justice, and he cannot judge himself. 1 Inft. 313.

An Agister's office is to attend upon the King's woods and lands in a Forest, receive and take in cattle, &c. by agiltment, that is to depasture within the forest, or to feed upon the pannage, &c. And this officer is constituted by letters patent. 4 Inft. 293. Persons inhabiting in the forest may have common of herbage for beasts commonable within the Forest; but by the Forest law, sheep are not commonable there, because they bite so close that they destroy the vert; and yet it has been held, that sheep may be commonable in Forests by prescription. 3 B. & J. 213.

There may be a prescription for common in a Forest at all times of the year; though it was formerly the opinion of our judges, that the fence month should be excepted. 3 Le. O. 127. A Forest may be disafforested and laid open; but right of common shall remain. Poph. 93. He that hath a grant of the herbage or pannage of a park, or Forest, cannot take any herbage or pannage, but of the surplusage over and above a competent and sufficient pasture and feeding for the game; and if there be no surplusage, he that hath the herbage and pannage cannot put in any beasts; if he doth, they may be driven out. Read. on Stat. vol. 3. 305. None may gather nuts in the Forest without warrant.

A Ranger of a Forest is one whose business is to chase the wild beasts from the purlicus into the Forest, and to present offences within the purlicue, and the Forest, &c. And though he is not properly an officer in the Forest, yet he is a considerable officer of, and belonging to it.

The Beadle is a forest officer, that warns all the courts of the Forest, and executes process, makes all proclamations, &c. 4 Inft. 313.

There are also Keepers or Bailiffs of walks in Forests and chases, who are subordinate to the Verderors, &c. And these officers cannot be sworn on any inquests, or juries out of the Forest. If any man hunts beads within a Forest, although they are not beads of the Forest, they are punishable by the Forest law, because all hunting there, without warrant is unlawful. 4 Inft. 314.

If a deer be hunted in a Forest, and after he is by hunting it is driven out of the Forest, and the Forest takes the chase, and the owner of the ground where driven kills the deer there; yet the Forester may enter into the lands and retake the deer: for property in the deer is in this case by pursuit. 2 Leon. 201. He that hath any manner of licence to hunt in a Forest, chase, park, &c. must take heed that he do not abuse his licence, or exceed his authority; for if he do, he shall be accounted a trespasser ab initio, and be punished for that fact as if he had no licence at all. Mansw. 280, 288.

Every lord of parliament, sent for by the King, may, in coming and returning, kill a deer or two in the King's Forest or chase through which he pass's; but it must not be done privily, without the view of the Forester, if present; or, if absent, by causing one to blow a horn, because otherwise he may be a trespasser, and seem to steal the deer. Chart. Forest. c. 11: 4 Inft. 308.

Law Forest is a private law, and must be pleaded. 2 Leon. 209. But it hath been observed, that the laws of the Forest are established by act of parliament, and for the most part contained in Charta de Foresta, 9 H. 3 fit. 2. c. 2: 34 Ed. 1. ff. 5.

By the law of the Forest, receivers or trespassers in hunting or killing of deer, knowing them to be such, or any of the King's venison, are principal trespassers; though the trespass was not done to their use or benefit, as the Common-law requires; by which the subsequent agreement amounts to a commandment: but if the receipt be out of the bounds of the Forest, they cannot be punished by the laws of the Forest, being not within the Forest jurisdiction, which is local. 4 Inft. 317.

If a trespass be done in a Forest, and the trespasser dies, it shall be punished after his death in the life-time of the heir, contrary to the Common-law. Hue and cry may be made by the Forest law for trespass, as to venison; though it cannot be pursued but only within the bounds of the Forest. 4 Inft. 294. And for not pursuing hue and cry in the Forest, a township may be fined and amerced. In every trespass and offence of the Forest in vert or venison, the punishment is, to be imprisoned, ransomed, and bound to the good behaviour of the Forest, which must be executed by a judicial sentence by the Lord Chief Justice in Eyre of the Forest.

If any Forester find any person hunting without warrant, he is to arrest his body, and carry him to prison, from whence he shall not be delivered without special warrant from the King, or his justices of the Forest, &c. But by Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 8, Persons are bailable if not taken in the manner, as with a bow ready to shoot, carrying away deer killed, or smeared with blood, &c. Though if one be not thus taken, he may be attached by his goods. 4 Inft. 289.

The Warden of the Forest shall let such to mainprise until the eyre of the Forest; or a writ may be had out of the Chancery to oblige him to do it; and if he refuse to deliver the party, a writ shall go to the sheriff to attach the Warden, &c. who shall pay treble damages to the party grieved and be committed to prison, &c. Stat.

FOREST.

1 Ed. 3. c. 8. No Officer of the Forest may take or imprison any person without due indictment, or per main curere, with his hand at the work; nor shall constrain any to make obligation against the assise of the Forest, on pain to pay double damages, and to be ransomed at the King's will. Stat. 7 R. 2. c. 4.

A Forester shall not be questioned for killing a trespasser, who (after the peace cried unto him) will not yield himself; so as it be not done out of some former malice. Stat. 21 Et. 1. §. 1. But if trespassers in a Forest, &c. kill a man who opposes them, although they bore no malice to the person killed, it is murder; because they were upon an unlawful act, and therefore malice is implied. Kel. Ab. 548. And if murder be committed by such trespassers, all are principals. Kel. 87.

If a man comes into a Forest in the night-time, the Forester cannot justify beating him before he makes resistance; but if he resists, he may justify the battery. Persons may be fined for concealing the killing of deer by others; and so for carrying a gun, with an intent to kill the deer; and he that steals venison in the Forest, and carries it off on horseback, the horse shall be forfeited, unless it be that of a stranger ignorant of the fact. Where heath is burnt in a Forest, the offenders may be fined: and if any man cuts down bushes and thorns, and carries them away in a cart, he is fineable, and the cart and horses shall be seized by the Forest laws. But a man may prescribe to cut wood, &c. And every freeman within the Forest may on his own ground make a mill-dyke, or arable land, without inclosing such arable; but if it be a nuisance to others, it is punishable. Clart. Forest. c. 11: 12 Rep. 22. And if any having woods in his own ground, within any Forest, or chase, shall cut the same by the King's licence, &c. he may keep them several and inclosed, for seven years after selling. Stat. 22 4 c. 7.

By Charta de Foresta, 9 H. 3. stat. 2. c. 2, No man shall loose ale or member for killing the King's deer in a Forest, &c. but shall be fined; and if he have nothing to pay the fine, he shall be imprisoned a year and a day; and then be delivered, if he can give good security not to offend for the future; and if not, he shall abjure the realm: Before this statute, it was felony to hunt the King's deer. 21 Ed. 1. c. 10. To hunt in a Forest, park, &c. in the night, disguised, if denied or concealed, upon examination before a justice of peace, it is felony: but if confessed, it is only fineable. Stat. 1 H. 7. c. 7. Keper, &c. may seize instruments used in unlawful cutting of trees. Stat. 4 Geo. 3. c. 31.

The cruel and insupportable hardships which the Forest laws created to the Subject, occasioned our ancestors to be as zealous for their reformation, as for the relaxation of the feudal rigours and the other exactions introduced by the Norman family. And accordingly we find, in history the immunities of Charta de Foresta as warmly contended for, and extorted from the King with as much difficulty, as those of Magna Charta itself. By this charter confirmed in parliament many Forests were disafforested or stripped of their oppressive privileges; and regulations made in the regimen of such as remained. And by a variety of subsequent statutes together with the long acquiescence of the Crown without exerting the Forest laws, this prerogative is become no longer a grievance to the subject. Comm.

FORESTALLING, Forestillamentum, from the Sax. fore, before, & stal a stall.] To intercept on the highway. Spelman says, it is viæ obstructio, vel itineris interceptio; with whom agrees Coke on Lit. fol. 161. And, according to Fleta, forestalling significat obstructionem viæ vel impedimentum transiûs et fugæ avertiorum, &c. lib. 1. c. 24. In our law, forestalling is the buying or bargaining for any corn, cattle or other merchandise, by the way, as they come to fairs or markets to be sold, before they are brought thither; to the intent to sell the same again, at a higher and dearer price.

All endeavours to enhance the common price of any victuals or merchandise, and practices which have an apparent tendency thereto, whether by spreading false rumours, or buying things in a market before the accustomed hour, or by buying and selling again the same thing in the same market, &c. are highly criminal by the Common-law; and all such offences anciently came under the general appellation of forestalling. 3 Inst. 195, 196. And so jealous is the Common law of practices of this nature, which are a general inconvenience and prejudice to the people, and very oppressive to the poorer sort, that it will not suffer corn to be sold in the sheaf before thrashed; for by such sale the market is in effect forestalled. 3 Inst. 197: H. P. C. 152.

Forestalling, Ingrossing, and Regrating, are offences generally classed together as of the same nature and equally hurtful to the Public. Ingrossing seems derived from the words in and gross great or whole; and regrating from re, again, and grater Fr. to scrape, from the dressing or scraping of cloth or other goods in order to sell the same again.

Several statutes were from time to time made against these offences in general, and also specially with respect to particular species of goods according to their several circumstances; all of which from the 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 14, downwards, and all acts for enforcing the same are repealed by stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 71; by the preamble of which it should seem that the remedy was found worse than the disease. But these offences still continue punishable upon indictment at the Common law by fine and imprisonment.

The offence of forestalling the market is an offence against public trade. This was described by the said Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 14, to be the buying or contracting for any cattle, merchandize or victual coming in the way to the market or dissuading persons from bringing their goods or provisions there; or persuading them to enhance the price when there; any of which practices makes the market dearer to the fair trader.

Regrating was described by the same statute to be the buying of corn, or other dead victual, in any market; and selling it again in the same market, or within 4 miles of the place. For this also enhances the price of the provisions, as every successive seller must have a successive profit.

Ingrossing was also described to be the getting into one's possession or buying up large quantities of corn or other dead victuals with intent to sell them again. This must be of course injurious to the Public, by putting it in the power of one or two rich men to raise the price of provisions at their own discretion.

The above descriptions given by the statute serve as a guide for the indictment of these offences at Common-law, and are therefore here preserved.

The total ingrossing of any commodity, with intent to sell it at an unreasonable price is an offence indictable and fineable at Common law. Cro. Car. 232.

Salt has been held to be within the provisions against forestalling, as a necessary victual; but not hops, nor apples or other fruits. See stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 19, which seems yet in force; prohibiting butchers, brewers, bakers, poulterers, cooks and fruiterers, from conspiring not to sell victuals, but at certain prices, on penalty of 10*l.* for the first offence, 20*l.* for the second, 40*l.* for the third, &c. and if such conspiracy be made by any company, or body corporate, the corporation shall be dissolved.

FORFEITURE.

FORISTACTURA, from the Fr. Forfait] The effect, or penalty, of transgressing some law. For an ingenious discussion to prove the propriety and policy of such punishment, see Mr. Charles Yorke's "Considerations on the Law of Forfeitures" corrected and enlarged 8vo. 1775. —See also this Dict. title Tenus III. 10.

Forfeiture is defined by Blackstone to be a punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner of lands, tenements or hereditaments: whereby he loses all his interest therein, and they go to the party injured, as a recompence for the wrong, which either he alone or the publick together with him hath sustained. 2 Comm. 267.

Lands, tenements and hereditaments may be forfeited in various degrees and by various means. Forfeitures may therefore be divided into civil and criminal. The latter will be presently considered more at large under this title.

Civil Forfeitures arise either by alienation contrary to law; as in mortmain; for which see this Dict. under that title; to Aliens see title Alien; or by particular tenants when they are greater than the law entitles them to make. This latter alienation divests the remainder or reversion and is also a forfeiture to him whose right is attacked thereby. 1 Inst. 251.

Forfeiture in civil cases may also accrue by non-presentation to a benefice, when it is called a Lapse; See this Dict. tit. Advowson. By Simony; See that title. By non-performance of Conditions; See title Condition.—By Waste; See that title.—By breach of copyhold customs; See title Copyhold; or lastly by Bankruptcy; See that title.

FORFEITURE.

- I. Of Forfeitures in Civil Cases.
- II. Of Forfeitures in Criminal Cases; and herein,
 - 1. Generally for what Crimes such Forfeitures are inflicted; and to what Time they bear relation
 - 2. More particularly; what Estates are subject to Forfeiture.
 - 3. When Forfeitures may be seized.

I. As to alienations by particular tenants; if tenant for his own life aliens, by feoffment or fine, for the life of another, or in tail, or in fee; these being estates, which either must or may last longer than his own, the creating them is not only beyond his power, and inconsistent with the nature of his interest, but is also a Forfeiture of his own particular estate to him in remainder or reversion. 1 Inst. § 415. For this there seem to be two reasons; First, because such alienation amounts to a renunciation of the feudal connection and dependence; it implies a refusal to perform the due renders and services to the lord, in respect of which fealty is constantly due, and it tends to the consequence to defeat and devest the remainder or reversion expectant: as therefore that is put in jeopardy, by such act of the particular tenant, it is lost upon discovery, the particular estate should be taken and taken from him, who has shewn to manifest an inclination to make an improper use of it: The other reason is, because the particular tenant, by granting a larger estate than his own, has by his own act determined and put an entire end to his own original interest; and on such determination the next taker is entitled to enter regularly, as in his remainder or reversion. 2 Comm. 274.

Another reason assigned for these Forfeitures is, that the act done is incompatible with the estate which the tenant holds, and against the implied condition on which he holds it. As in the case of a tenant for life or years enfeoffing a stranger in fee simple, this is a breach of the condition which the law annexes to his estate, viz. that he shall not attempt to create a greater estate than he himself is entitled to. 1 Inst. 215. So if tenant for life, or years, or in fee, commit felony, this is a breach of the implied condition annexed to every feudal donation that they should not commit felony. 2 Comm. 153.

The same law, which is thus laid down with regard to tenants for life, holds also with respect to all tenants of the mere freehold, or of chattel interests: But if tenant in tail aliens in fee, this is no immediate forfeiture to the remainder-man, but a mere discontinuance of the estate-tail, which the issue may afterwards avoid by due course of law: for he in remainder or reversion hath only a very remote, and barely possible interest therein, until the issue in tail is extinct. See this Dict. tit. Discontinuance.

But in case of such Forfeitures, by particular tenants, all legal estates by them before created, (as if tenant for 20 years grants a lease for 15,) and all charges by them lawfully made on the lands shall be good and available in the law. For the law will not hurt an innocent lessee for the fault of his lessor; nor permit the lessor, after he has granted a good and lawful estate, by his own act to avoid it, and defeat the interest which he himself hath created. 1 Inst. 233: 2 Comm. 275.

Equivalent, both in its nature and its consequences, to an illegal alienation by the particular tenant, is the civil crime of Disclaimer; as to which See this Dict. title Disclaimer.

FORFEITURE II.

If Tenant, for life, in dower, by the curtesy, or after possibility of issue extinct, or lessee for years, tenant by statute-merchant, staple, or ch. p. of lands or tenements that lie in feoffory, shall make any absolute or conditional assent in fee, gift in tail, lease for any other life than his own, &c. or levy a fine per concessum de dno cono eio, &c. or suffer a common recovery thereof; or being impleaded in a writ of right brought against him, join the verdict upon the mortgage, or admit the reversion to be in another; or in a perpetuo clamat, claim the fee simple; or if lessee for years being outlet, bring an assize de le libero tenemento, &c. — by either of these things, there will be a Forfeiture of estate. Plow. 15; 1 Kep. 15; 8 Rep. 144; Co. Lit. 251; Dier. 152; 324; 1 Bull. 219.

But where the land granted by tenant for life, or years, is not well conveyed, or the thing does not lie in feoffory, as a rent, common, or the like, he will not forfeit his estate: and therefore if a feoffment, gift in tail, or lease for another's life, made by the tenant for life, is not good, for want of words in making it, or due execution in the livery and seisin, this shall not produce a Forfeiture. 2 Rep. 35.

When tenant in tail makes leases, not warranted by the statute; a copyholder commits waste, refuses to pay his rent, or do suit of court; one to whom an estate is granted upon conditions, does not perform the same; in all these cases Forfeitures are incurred. 1 Rep. 15.

Entail for a Forfeiture ought to be by him, who is next in reversion, or remainder after the estate forfeited. As, if tenant for life or years commits a Forfeiture, he who has the reversion, or remainder, ought to enter; though he has the fee, or only an estate-tail. 1 Col. 857; 145; 50; 858; 15.

It shall be a dispensation of the Forfeiture, if he in reversion, or remainder be a party to the estate made, and accept it; as, if a husband, seized in right of his wife for life, leases to him in reversion for his own life. 1 Rol. 850; 110.

Also Offices may be forfeited by neglect of duty, &c. See title Office.

II. 1. The true reason, and only substantial ground, of any FORFEITURE FOR CRIMES, consist in this: that all property is derived from Society, being one of those civil rights conferred on individuals in exchange for that degree of natural freedom, which every man must sacrifice when he enters into social communities. It therefore a member of any national community, violates the fundamental contract of his association, by transgressing the municipal law, he forfeits his right to such privileges as he claims by that contract; and the State may very justly repossess that portion of property, or any part of it which the law has been assigned him. Hence in every offence of a citizen against the laws of England have existed a total confiscation of the revenues of personal estate; and in many cases of property in others only a temporary loss of the civil rights, as of a citizen or of landed property; and have vested them both in the King, as the person supposed to be offended, being the one visible magistrate in whom the sovereignty of the State resides. 1 Comm. 299.

The offences which incur a Forfeiture of lands and tenements are principally the following. 1 Treas. 2 Feoff. 3 Writ. de Feoff. 4 Procur. 5 Drawing a treason de facto, or placitum de facto in the presence of the King's courts of justice; 6 Placit. de Roussey; or non-observance of certain laws enacted in restraint of papists.

Forfeiture in criminal Cases is two-fold; of real and personal estates. First as to Real Estates.

By Common-law on attainder of high treason a man forfeits to the King all his lands and tenements of inheritance whether fee-simple or fee tail, and all his right of entry on lands and tenements, which he had at the time of the offence committed or at any time afterwards: to be for ever vested in the Crown. And also the profits of all lands and tenements, which he had in his own right for life or years, so long as such interest shall subsist. Co. Lit. 392; 3 Inst. 19; 1 Hal. P. C. 240; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49.

This forfeiture relates backwards to the time of the treason committed so as to avoid all intermediate sales and incumbrances, but not those before the fact. 3 Inst. 211. A wife's jointure is not forfeitable for the treason of her husband: because settled upon her previous to the treason committed. But her dower is forfeited by the express provision of Stat. 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 11, repealing in that particular Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 12. The husband notwithstanding shall be tenant by the curtesy of the wife's lands if the wife be attainted of treason, for that is not prohibited by the statute. 1 Hal. P. C. 359. But though, after attainder, the forfeiture relates back to the time of the treason committed, yet it does not take effect unless an attainder be had, of which it is one of the fruits: and therefore if a traitor dies before judgment pronounced, or is killed in open rebellion, or is hanged by martial law, it works no Forfeiture of his lands, for he never was attainted of treason; and by the express provision of Stat. 34 E. 3. c. 12, there shall be no Forfeiture of lands for treason, of dead persons, not attainted in their lives — Yet if the Chief Justice of the King's Bench (the supreme coroner of all England) in person upon the view of the body of one killed in open rebellion, records it, and returns the record into his own court, both lands and goods shall be forfeited. 4 Rep. 57.

Forfeiture of lands and tenements to the Crown for treason is by no means derived from the feudal policy, but was antecedent to the establishment of that system in this island. See this Dict. title Tenures III. 10 — But in certain treasons relating to the coin it is provided by some of the more modern statutes which constitute the offence, that it shall work no Forfeiture of lands, save only for the life of the offender: and, by all, that it shall not deprive the wife of her dower. See Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 11; 15 Eliz. c. 1 — 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26; 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28. — And in order to abolish this hereditary punishment entirely, it was provided by Stat. 7 Ann. c. 21, that after the decease of the late Pretender no attainder for treason should extend to the disinheriting of any heir, nor to the prejudice of any person other than the traitor himself. By which the law of Forfeitures for high treason would by this time have been at an end, had not a subsequent statute intervened to give them a longer duration, namely the Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 39, by which the operation of the indemnifying clauses in Stat. 7 Ann. c. 21, is still farther suspended till the death of the sons of the late Pretender. See 1 Comm. 384; and this Dict. title Attainder.

In petty treason, misprision of treason and felony, the offender also forfeits all his chattel interests absolutely; and the profits of all estates of freehold during life; and after his death all his lands and tenements in fee simple, (but not those in tail) to the Crown for a short period of time: so, the King shall have them for a year and a day, and may commit therein what waste he pleases; which is called the King's Year, Day, and Waste. 2 Inst. 37: 3 Inst. 392. Formerly the King had a liberty of committing waste on the lands of felons, by pulling down their houses, extirpating their gardens, ploughing their meadows, and cutting down their woods. But this tending greatly to the prejudice of the Publick, it was agreed in the reign of Hen. 1, that the King should have the profits of the land for a year and a day, in lieu of the destruction he was otherwise at liberty to commit; and therefore Magna Carta, c. 22, provides that the King shall only hold such lands for a year and day, and then restore them to the lord of the fee; without any mention of waste. See Mirr. c. 4. § 16: Flet. l. 1. c. 28. But the statute 17 E. 2, de prerogativa regis seems to suppose that the King shall have his year, day, and waste, and not the year and day in stead of waste, which Lord Coke and the Mirror very justly consider as an encroachment, tho' a very ancient one, of the royal prerogative. Mirr. c. 5. § 2: 2 Inst. 37.

This year, day and waste are now usually compounded for; but otherwise they regularly belong to the crown, and after their expiration the land would have descended to the heir, (as in gavel kind tenure it still does,) did not its feudal quality intercept such descent and give it by way of escheat to the Lord. See titles Tenure; Escheat.

These Forfeitures of lands for felony also arise only upon attainder; and therefore a felon de se forfeits no lands of inheritance or freehold, for he never is attained as a felon. 3 Inst. 55. They likewise relate back to the time of the offence committed, as well as Forfeitures for treason; so as to avoid all intermediate charges and conveyances. 4 Comm. 286.

These are all the Forfeitures of real estates created by the Common law as consequential upon attainders by judgment of death or outlawry. The particular Forfeitures created by the statutes of Piſcunerie and others are here omitted, being rather a part of the judgment and penalty inflicted by the respective statutes, than consequences of such judgment, as in treason and felony they are. See Post. II.

As a part of the Forfeiture of real estates, may be mentioned, the Forfeiture of the profits of lands during life: which extends to two other instances besides those already spoken of; the striking in Westminster Hall, or drawing a weapon upon a judge there sitting in the King's courts of justice. 3 Inst. 141. And it seems that the same Forfeiture is incurred by releasing a prisoner in or before any of the courts there, committed by the judges. Cra Jac. 307.

The Forfeiture of Goods and Chattels accrues in every one of the higher kinds of offence in high treason or misprison thereof; petit treason; felonies of all sorts, whether dangerous or not. self murder, or felon de se; petit larceny; handling stolen goods; challenging above 35 Jurors; and the above mentioned offences of striking, &c. in Westminster Hall. For High treason, on an accusation of treason, felony, or even petit larceny, whether the party be found guilty or acquitted, if he jury find the flight, the party shall forfeit his goods and chattels: for the very flight is an offence, carrying with it a strong presumption of guilt; and is at least an endeavour to elude and hide the course of justice prescribed by the law. But the jury very seldom find the flight; a forfeiture, being not only, on, since the vast increase of personal property, as too large a penalty for an offence to which a man is prompted by the natural love of liberty. 4 Comm. 307.

There are some remarkable differences between the Forfeiture of lands, and of goods and chattels. 1. Lands are forfeited upon attainder, and not before: goods and chattels are forfeited by conviction. Because in many of the cases where goods are forfeited there never is any attainder; which happens only where judgment of death or outlawry is given; therefore in those cases the Forfeiture must be upon conviction, or not at all; and being necessarily upon conviction in those, it is so ordered in all other cases: for the law loves uniformity. 2. In outlawries for treason or felony lands are forfeited only by the judgment, but the goods and chattels are forfeited by a man's being first put in the exigent, without staying till he is quinto exactus, or finally outlawed, for the secreting himself so long from justice is construed a flight in law. 3 Inst. 232. (See this Dict. tit. Outlawry.) 3. The forfeiture of lands has relation to the time of the fact committed so as to avoid all subsequent sales and incumbrances; but the Forfeiture of goods and chattels has no relation backwards, so that those only which a man has at the time of conviction shall be forfeited. Therefore a traitor or felon may bonâ fide sell any of his chattels real or personal for the sustenance of himself or family between the fact and conviction; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49. For personal property is of so fluctuating a nature that it passes through many hands in a short time; and no buyer could be safe if he were liable to return the goods which he had fairly bought, provided any of the prior vendors had committed a treason or felony. Yet if they be collusively and not bonâ fide parted with, merely to defraud the crown, the law, and particularly Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5 will reach them; for they are all the while truly and substantially the goods of the offender; and as he, if acquitted, might recover them himself, as not parted with for a good consideration, so in case he happens to be convicted, the law will recover them for the King. 4 Comm. 388.

2. Where land comes to the crown, as forfeited by attainder of treason, all mesne tenures of common persons are extinct; but if the King grant it out, the former tenure shall be revived, for which a petition of right lies. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 254. In treason, all lands of inheritance, whereof the offender was seised in his own right, were forfeited by the Common-law; and rights of entry, &c. And the inheritance of things not lying in tenure, as of rent-charges, commons, &c. shall be forfeited in high treason but no right of action whatsoever to lands of inheritance is forfeited, either by the common or statute law. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49.

By Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 13, All lands, tenements, &c. are forfeited in treason. And the King shall be adjudged in possession of lands and goods forfeited for treason on the attainder of the offender, without any office found, saving the right of others. See Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 20. Lands and hereditaments in fee simple and fee tail, are forfeited in high treason; but land in tail could not be forfeited only for the life of tenant in tail, till the statute 26 H. 8. c. 13, by which statute, they may be forfeited.

Upon outlawry in treason or felony, the offender shall forfeit so much as if he had appeared, and judgment had been given against him; so long as the outlawry is in force. 3 Inst. 52. 21...

Cra asked land in Kent is not forfeited by committing an offence, and by a person only, inter alia are not forfeited. S. P. C. 3. 20.

FORFEITURE II. 3.

Land that one hath in trust; or goods and chattels in right of another, or to another's use, &c. will not be liable to Forfeiture. Though he dies for years, in a man's own, or his wife's right, estates in jointenancy, &c. and all statutes, bonds, and debts due thereby, and upon contracts, &c. shall be forfeited. Co. Lit. 42, 151: Staud. 188.

A married man guilty of felony, forfeits his wife's to him; and if a wife kill her husband, the husband's goods are forfeited. Jenk. Cent. 65. In manslaughter, the offender forfeits goods and chattels, and in chance-medley and sedition, &c. goods and chattels; but the offenders may have their pardon of court. Co. Lit. 319.

Those that are hanged by Martial Law in the time of war, forfeit no lands. Co. Lit. 13. And for robbery or piracy, &c. on the sea, if tried in the Court of Admiralty, by the Civil Law, and not by jury, there is no forfeiture: but if a person be attainted before commissioners by virtue of the Stat. 28 Hen. 8 c. 15, there it works a Forfeiture. 111 a.

In cases of felony the profits of lands whereof a person, attainted of felony, is seized of an estate of inheritance in right of his wife; or of an estate for life only in his own right; are forfeited to the King, and nothing is forfeited to the Lord. 3 Inst. 19. Fitz. Aff. 166.

Goods of persons that fly for a felony, are forfeited to the Lord of the franchise, when the flight is found of record. 2 Inst. 281.

In a person's lands in fee-simple are forfeited, with goods and chattels. Co. Lit. 129.

Before the statute of 1 E. 6. cap. 12, the wife not only lost her dower at Common law, but also her dower ad osium ecclesie, or ex assensu patris, or by special custom (except that of gavelkind,) by the husband's attainder of treason, or capital felony, whether committed before or after marriage. Co. Lit. 31 b: 37 a: 41 a: F. N. B. 150: Perk. § 308: Bro. tit. Dower 82: Plo. ad. 261.

But the wife forfeited lands given jointly to her husband and her, whether by way of frank marriage or otherwise, only for the year, day, and waile. Co. Lit. 37: 3 Inst. 216.

By Stat. 1 E. 6. cap. 12. par. 17, It was enacted that albeit any person shall be attainted of any treason or felony whatsoever; yet notwithstanding every woman, that shall fortune to be the wife of the person so attainted, shall be endowable and enabled to demand, have, and enjoy her dower, in like manner and form as tho' her husband had not been attainted, &c. This however was repealed as to treason by 5 & 6 E. 6. cap. 11. par. 9. See ante I.

Though Lord Coke expressly makes dower ex assensu patris, as well as the dowers at Common law and ad osium ecclesie, liable to be defeated at Common-law, by the husband's treason or felony; 1 Inst. 37 a; yet some have inclined to think that this Stat. 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 11, doth not extend to dower ex assensu patris, so that that shall not be forfeitable on the treason of the husband — And in 1 Inst. 35 b, Lord Coke mentions that according to some opinions the wife loses dower ex assensu patris, if after the assent the father was attainted of treason. — See 1 Inst. 41 a. in note.

If the husband seized of lands in fee, makes a feoffment and then commits treason, and is attainted of it, the wife shall not recover dower against the feoffee. Bondl. 56: Dyer 140; Co. Lit. 111 a. So if the husband is attainted of treason, and afterwards pardoned, yet the wife shall not recover dower; but of lands purchased by the husband after the pardon, the wife shall be endowed. 3 Leon 3: Perk. fecit. 391.

If a husband having levied a fine with proclamation, is erroneously attainted of treason, and the five years pass after his death, and then the outlawry is reversed, the fine and non-claim are no bar till five years are passed after the reversal, because the wife could not sue for her dower while the attainer stood in force, neither could she any way reverse it. 3 Inst. 216: Moor 639. pl. 879.

After the making of the above mentioned statute 1 E. 6. cap. 12, it seems to have been doubted, whether the wife should not lose her dower in case of any new felony made by act of parliament; therefore where several offences have been made felony since, care has been taken to provide for the wife's dower. 2 New Abr. 584. See 12 Fin. abt. tit. Forfeiture 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49.

If a woman after a rape, consent to the ravisher, she shall lose her dower after the death of her husband, &c. Stat. 6 R. 2. c. 6. And if any maiden or woman child above twelve, and under sixteen years of age, shall agree to be taken away and deflowered, or contract with any man for marriage against the will and without the consent of her father; or, if he be dead, her mother or guardian appointed by her father's will, she shall forfeit her land of inheritance for her life. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8.

Artificers going out of the kingdom and teaching their trades to foreigners, are liable to forfeit their lands, &c. by Stat. 5 G. 1. c. 27. Similar Forfeitures likewise are inflicted by several other penal statutes. See title Manu-factuaries.

In all cases where a penalty or Forfeiture is given by statute, without saying to whom it shall be, or a limitation for a recompence for the wrong to the party, it belongs to the King, Str. 50, 828: 2 Vent. 267. And such Forfeitures shall be construed favourably. Corop 585, 8.

3 Goods or lands of one arrested for felony, shall not be seized before he is convicted or attaint of the felony; on pain of prostituting double value. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 3. Goods of a felon, &c. cannot be seized before Forfeited; though they may be inventoried, and a charge made thereof before indictment. Wood's Inst. 659. Where goods of a felon are pawned before he is attainted, the King shall not have the Forfeiture of the goods till the money is paid to him to whom they were pawned. 3 Inst. 17: 2 Nelf. Abr. 874, 875.

After conviction by judgment, or outlawry, for high-treason, &c. a commission goes to persons named by the King or by the Attorney General, to inquire, what lands and tenements the offender had at the time of the treason committed, and the value; and that they seize them into the King's hands. And the inquisition taken thereon shall be returned to the Court of Exchequer, and filed in the office of the King's Remembrancer. Lut. 997. So after conviction for felony, a fine facias shall go against the vill, or any other, who has the goods in his custody. S. P. C. 194. But if any one has title to the goods or lands found by inquisition to be the goods or lands of the offender, he may make his claim by pleading his title. Lut. 998. To which the Attorney General shall demur, or reply. Vid. Com. Dig. title Prærogative, (D. 83, 84.)

A copyholder surrenders to the use of his will; the devisee is convicted of felony and hanged before admittance, tance, the lands are not forfeited to the lord but descend to the heir of the surrenderor. 2 Wils. 13.

Forfeiture differs from confiscation, in that Forfeiture is more general; whereas confiscation is particularly applied to such as are forfeit to the King's Exchequer, and confiscate goods are said to be such as nobody doth claim. Staundf. P. C. 186.

There is a full Forfeiture, plena forisfactura, otherwise, called plena wita, which is a Forfeiture of life and member, and all that a man hath. Leg. H. 1. c. 88. And there is mention in some statutes, of Forfeiture, at the King's will, of body, lands, and goods, &c. 4 Inst. 66. See further on this subject this Dict. titles Attainder; Corruption of Blood; Felony; Treason, &c. and Com. Dig. tit. Forfeiture.

FORFEITURE OF MARRIAGE, Forisfactura maritagii.] A writ which anciently lay against him, who, holding by knights-service, and being under age, and unmarried, refused her whom the lord offered him without his disparagement, and married another. F. N. B. fol. 141.: Reg. Orig. fol. 163. See title Tenure.

FORFEITED ESTATE. Several statutes have been from time to time passed, appointing Commissioners of Forfeited Estates, on rebellions in this kingdom and Ireland. Thus by Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 3, all lands and tenements, &c. of persons attainted or convicted of treason or rebellion in Ireland, were vested in several commissioners and trustees for sale thereof. And by several Stats. temp. Geo. 1., commissioners were appointed to inquire of Forfeited Estates in England and Scotland, on the rebellion at Presburg, &c. And the estates of persons attainted of treason were vested in His Majesty for public uses; but afterwards in trustees to be sold for the use of the Public; and it was provided that the purchasers should be Protestants.

FORGAVEL, Forgabulum.] A small reserved rent in money, or quit-rent. Cartular. Abbat. de Hadley MS. f. 58.

FORGE, Forgia.] A smith's Forge, to melt and work iron. Chart. Hen. 2.

FORGERY, From Fr. Forger, i. e. accudere, fabricare, to beat on an anvil, to forge or form.] The fraudulent making or alteration of any Deed, Writing, Instrument, Register, Stamp, &c. to the prejudice of another man's right. An offence punishable, according to its circumstances, by fine, imprisonment, pillory, transportation and death.

By Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 14, to forge or make, or knowingly to publish or give in evidence, any forged deed, court-roll, or will, with intent to affect the right of real property, either freehold or copyhold, is punished by a Forfeiture to the party grieved, of double costs and damages; by the offender's standing in the pillory and having both his ears cut off and his nostrils slit and seared; by Forfeiture to the crown of the profits of his lands, and by perpetual imprisonment. For any Forgery relating to a term of years, or annuity, bond, obligation, acquittance, release or discharge of any debt or demand of any personal chattels, the same Forfeiture is given to the party grieved, and on the offender is inflicted the pillory, loss of one ear, and a year's imprisonment.—The second offence, in both cases, being felony without benefit of clergy.

Besides his general act, a multitude of others, since the Revolution, when paper credit was first established, have inflicted capital punishment on the following species of Forgery, viz.—The forging, altering or uttering as true when forged, of any Bank notes, bills or other securities; See Stats. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 20. § 36: 11 Geo. 1. c. 9: 12 Geo. 1. c. 32: 15 Geo. 2. c. 13: 13 Geo. 3. c. 79; and this Dict. title Bank of England—Exchequer-bills; by the several acts for issuing them.—South sea Bonds; See Stats. 9 An. c. 21: 6 Geo. 1. cc. 4, 11: 12 Geo. 1. c. 31.—Lottery Tickets or orders: by the several Lottery-acts.—Army or Navy Debentures; Stats. 5 Geo. 1. c. 14: 9 Geo. 1. c. 5.—East India Bonds; Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32.—Writings under the Seal of the London or Royal Exchange Assurance: Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18; and of other Corporations by the Stats. establishing them.—Of the hand-writing of the Receiver of the præ-fines; Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 14; or of the Accountant-General and other officers of the court of Chancery.—Of a Letter of Attorney or other Power to receive or transfer Stock or annuities; of transfers and dividend-warrants; and on the personating a proprietor thereof to receive or transfer such funds or dividends. Stats. 8 Geo. 1. c. 22: 9 Geo. 1. c. 12: 31 Geo. 2. c. 22. § 77: 33 Geo. 3. c. 30.—Also on the personating or procuring to be personated any seaman or person entitled to wages, prize-money, &c. for perjury in obtaining probate or administration to receive such wages, &c. and the forging, procuring to be forged, or publishing a forged seaman's will and power. Stats. 31 Geo. 2. c. 10: 9 Geo. 3. c. 30. and See Stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 34—to which may be added counterfeiting Mediterranean passes from the Admiralty, Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 18.—the forging or imitating stamps, to defraud the publick revenue; by the several stamp-acts; [the refusing them is made single Felony by Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 48, punishable with 7 years transportation]—Forging of any marriage register or licence, Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33.—Counterfeiting or removing stamp or mark on plate, 24 Geo. 3. ft. 2. c. 53. [a similar offence is punishable with 14 years transportation by Stat. 13 Geo. 3. cc. 52, 59]—Forging the frank on a general post letter. Stat. 24 Geo. 3. ft. 2. c. 37.

Besides these there are certain general laws with regard to Forgery. By Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, the first offence in forging or procuring to be forged, acting or assisting therein, or uttering or publishing as true any forged deed, will, bond, bill of exchange, promissory note, and indorsement or assignment of such bill or note, or any acquittance or receipt for money or goods, with an intention to defraud any person; (or corporation, Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 22. § 78;) is made Felony without benefit of clergy.—And by Stats. 7 Geo. 2. c. 22: 18 Geo. 3. c. 18, it is equally penal to forge or cause to be forged, or uttered as true, a counterfeit acceptance of a bill of exchange, or the number or principal sum of any accountable receipt, for any note, bill, or other security for money, or any warrant or order for payment of money, or delivery of goods.

By the above, and a number of other general and special provisions, there is now hardly a case possible to be conceived wherein Forgery that tends to defraud, whether in the name of a real or fictitious person, is not made a capital crime. See Foss. 116, and this Dict. title Bills of Exchange, V. 3.

A deed forged in the name of a person who never had existence is within the Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25: for the statute doth not use the words the deed of any person, or the deed of another, or any words of like import, but any deed. And Coke's description of Forgery (3 Inst. 169,) "When the act is done in the name of another person;"

is apparently too narrow, and only takes in that species of Forgery which is most commonly practised; but there are many other species of Forgery which will not come within the letter of that description. For. 116.

There can be no Forgery where none can be prejudiced by it but the person doing it. 1 Salk. 375.

Forgery by the common law extends to false and fraudulent making or altering of a deed or writing, whether it be a matter of record, in which seems to be included a parish register; which is punishable by fine, imprisonment, and corporal punishment at the discretion of the court, or any other writing, deed, or will, 3 Inst. 163; 1 Rol. Ab. 65; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 70. Not only where one makes a false deed; but where a fraudulent alteration is made of a true deed, in a material part of it, as by making a lease of the manor of Dale, and it appears to be a lease of the manor of Sale, by changing the letter D into an S. or by altering a bond, for 500*l.* expressed in figures, to 5000*l.* by adding a new cypher, these are Forgery: so it is, if one finding another's name at the bottom of a letter, at a considerable distance from the other writing, causes the letter to be cut off, and a general release to be written above the name, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 70.

Also a writing may be said to be forged, where one being directed to draw up a will for a sick person, doth insert some legacies therein falsely of his own head; though there be no Forgery of the hand or seal; for the crime of Forgery consists as well in endeavouring to give an appearance of truth to a meer falsity, as in counterfeiting a man's hand, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 70; 3 Inst. 170. But a person cannot regularly be guilty of Forgery by an act of omission; as by omitting a legacy out of a will, which he is directed to draw for another: though it has been held, that, if the wilful omission of a bequest to one cause a material alteration in the limitation of an estate to another, as if the deviser directs a gift for life to one man, and the remainder to another in fee, and the writer omit the estate for life, so that he in remainder hath a present estate upon the death of the deviser, not intended to pass, this is Forgery. Nov. 118; Mon. 760.

If a feoffment be made of land, and livery and seisin is not indorsed when the deed is delivered, and afterwards on selling the land for a valuable consideration to another, livery is indorsed upon the first deed; this hath been adjudged Forgery both in the feoffor and feoffee; because it was done to deceive an honest purchaser. Mon. 665. And when a person knowingly falsifies the date of a second conveyance, which he had no power to make, in order to deceive a purchaser, &c. he is said to be guilty of Forgery. 3 Inst. 169; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 70.

It seems to be no way material, whether a forged instrument be made in such manner, that if it were in truth such as it is counterfeited for, it would be of validity or not. 1 Sd. 142. The counterfeiting writings of an inferior nature, as letters and such like, it hath been said, is not properly Forgery; but the deceit is punishable. But in the case of John Ward, of Huchney, it was determined that to forge a release or acquittance for the delivery of goods, although not under seal was Forgery at common law. See Barr. K. B. 10; Ld. Raym. 737, 1461; 5 Mod. 137; Raym. 81; Sid. 747.

Where there is a penalty in an obligation, &c. the party grieved by a forged release thereof, shall recover double the penalty as damages, and not double the debt appearing in the condition. 3 Inst. 172. If a person is informed by another that a deed is forged, if he afterwards publishes it as true, he is within the danger of the statute. 3 Inst. 171. The King may pardon the corporal punishment of Forgery which tends to common example; but the plaintiff cannot release it: if the plaintiff release or discharge the judgment or execution, &c. it shall only discharge the costs and damages; and the judges shall proceed to judgment upon the residue of the pains, and award execution upon the same. 5 Rep. 50.

A person convicted of Forgery, and adjudged to the pillory, &c. whereby he becomes infamous, is not allowed to be a witness; but such conviction is a good exception to his evidence. And one convicted of this crime, may be challenged on a jury, so as to be incapable to serve as a juror; and it hath been holden, that exceptions to persons found guilty of perjury or Forgery, as well as felony, &c. are not saved by a pardon. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 43. § 25. The court of B. R. will not ordinarily, at the prayer of the defendant, grant a certiorari for a removal of an indictment of Forgery, &c. 1 Sid. 54. See titles Certiorari; Indictment. See further on this subject of Forgery. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 70, at length.

FORINSECUS, Outward, or on the outside. Kerret's Gloss.

FORINSECUM MANERIUM, The Manor as to that part of it which lies without the town, and not included within the liberties of it. Paroch. Antiq. 351.

FORINSECUM SERVITIUM, The payment of extraordinary aid, opposed to intinsecum servitium, which was the common and ordinary duties, within the Lord's court. Kerret's Gloss. See title Foreign Service.

FORISBANNITUS. Banished: Mat. Paris. Ann. 1245.

FORISFAMILIARI. When a son accepts of his father's part of lands, in the life-time of the father, and is contented with it; he is said forisfamiliari to be discharged from the family, and cannot claim any more. Blount.

FORLAND, or Foreland, Forlandum.] Lands extending farther or lying before the rest: A Promontory. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2 fol. 332.

FORLER-LAND. Land in the bishoprick of Hereford granted or leased dum episcopus in episcopatu fuerit, so as the successor might have the same for his present revenue: this custom has been long since disused, and the land thus formerly granted is now let by lease as other lands, though it still retains the name by which it was anciently known. Butterfield's Surv. 56.

FORM, Is required in law proceedings, otherwise the law would be no art; but it ought not to be used to ensnare or intrap. Hob. 232. Matters of Form in pleas that go to the action, may be held on a general demurrer; as when a plea is only in abatement. 2 Ld. Raym. 1015. The formal part of the law or method of proceeding, cannot be altered but by parliament: for, if once those were demolished, there would be an inlet to all manner of innovation in the body of the law itself. 1 Comm. 142.

FORMA PAUPERIS, See title Costs, II.

FORMEDON, Breve de formâ donacionis] A writ that lieth for him who hath right to lands or tenements by virtue of any intail.

Upon alienation by a tenant in tail, whereby the estate-tail is discontinued, and the remainder or reversion is is, by failure of the particular estate, displaced and turned to a mere right, the remedy is by this action of formedon (secundum formam doni) which is in the nature of a writ of right, and is the highest action that Tenant in tail can have. Finch. L. 267; Co. Lit. 316. For Tenant in tail cannot have an absolute writ of right, which is confined to such only as claim in fee simple: and for that reason this writ of formedon was granted him by the statute de donis; (W. 1 R. 2. c. 13) which is therefore emphatically called his writ of right. F. N. B. 255.

This writ is distinguished into three species; a Formedon in the defender, in the remainder, and in the reverter.

A writ of Formedon in the defender lieth where a gift in tail is made, and the tenant in tail alienates the lands intailed, or is disseised of them and dies; in this case the heir in tail shall have this writ of formedon in the defender, to recover these lands so given in tail, against him who is then the actual tenant of the freehold. In which case the demandant is bound to state the manner and form of the gift in tail, and to prove himself heir secundum formam doni. F. N. B. 211, 212.

A Formedon in the remainder lieth where a man giveth lands to another for life or in tail, with remainder to a third person in tail or in fee; and he who hath the particular estate dieth without issue inheritable, and a stranger intrudes upon him in remainder, and keeps him out of possession. In this case the remainder-man shall have this writ of formedon in the remainder, wherein the whole term of the gift is stated, and the happening of the event upon which the remainder depended. This writ is not given in express words by the statute de donis but is founded upon the equity of the statute, and upon this maxim in law, that if any one hath a right to land, he ought also to have an action to recover it. See F. N. B. 217.

A Formedon in the reverter lieth where there is a gift in tail, and afterwards by the death of the donee or his heirs without issue of his body, the reversion falls in upon the donor his heirs or assigns; in such case the reversioner shall have this writ to recover the lands, wherein he shall suggest the gift, his own title to the reversion minutely derived from the donor, and the failure of issue upon which his reversion takes place. F. N. B. 219: 8 R. p. 88. This lay at common law, before the statute de donis, if the donee aliened before he had performed the condition of the gift by having issue, and afterwards died without any. Finch. L. 268.

The time of limitation in a Formedon, by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, is twenty years, within which space of time after his title accrues, the demandant must bring his action, or else is for ever barred. See 3 Comm. 191—3.

There is a writ of Formedon in defender, where partition of lands, held in tail, is made among parceners, &c. and one alieneth her part; in this case her heir shall have this writ; and by the death of one sister without issue, the partition is made void, and the other shall have the whole land as heir in tail. Also there is a writ of formedon in fine tenuit, that lies for a coparcener against a stranger upon the possession of the ancestor; which may be brought without naming the other coparcener who hath her part in possession. This writ may be likewise had by one heir in Gavelkind, &c. of lands intailed; and where the lands are held without partition. New Nat. Brev. 476, 7, 481.

Where a fee-simple is demanded in a Formedon in reverter, the taking of the profits ought to be alledged in the donor, and donee: if an estate tail is demanded, it must be alledged in the donee only. 1 Lutr. 96.

There are several pleas both in bar and in abatement, which the tenant may plead to this action; such as non-tenure, which is a plea in abatement, and by which the tenant shews, that he is not tenant of the freehold, or of some part thereof, at the time of the writ brought, or at any time since; which is called the pleading non-tenure generally. Fe 162.

Special non-tenure is where the tenant shews what interest and estate he hath in the land demanded, as that he is tenant for years, in ward, by statute merchant, eligit, or the like; and therefore the plea of special non-tenure must always shew who is tenant. Booth 29. See 1 Brownl. 153.

At common law, non-tenure of parcel of an intire thing, as a manor, &c. abated the whole writ; but now by the Stat. 25 E. 3. cap. 16, it is enacted, "That by the exception of non-tenure of parcel, no writ shall be abated, but only for that parcel whereof the non-tenure was alledged." Booth 29: 1 Mod. 181.

If the tenant pleads non-tenure of the whole, he need not shew who is tenant: but in a plea of non-tenure of parcel, he must shew who is tenant, and this even before the statute; for the common law would not suffer a writ, good in part, to be wholly destroyed, except the tenant shewed the demandant how he might have a better. 1 Mod. 181. The tenant cannot, after a general imparlance, plead non-tenure of part, though he may plead non-tenure of the whole. 3 Lev. 55.

The writ of Formedon is now rarely brought; the trying titles by Ex. Sent. supplying its place, in an easier manner. See Booth of Real Actions.

FORMELLA, A certain weight of about 70lbs. mentioned in the Statute of weights and measures, Stat. 51 H. 3.

FORNAGIUM, or Fornagium, fr. Fornage, Furnage.] The fee taken by a lord of his tenant, bound to bake in the lord's common oven, (in furno domini) or for a permission to use their own; this was usual in the Northern parts of England. Plac. Parl. 18 Ed. 1. And see Affisa panis et cervisie, 51 H. 3.

FORNICATION, Fornication; from the Fornices in Rome, where lewd women prostituted themselves for money.] Whoredom, or the act of incontinency in single persons; for if either party is married, it is Adultery. The Stat. 1 H. 7. c. 4, mentions this crime; which by an act made anno 1650, during the times of the Usurpation, was punished with three months' imprisonment for the first offence; and the second offence, it is said, was made felony. Schep's Collect. The Spiritual Court hath cognisance of this offence; but by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 44, the suit must be instituted within eight months, and not at all after the intermarriage of the parties offending: and formerly courts-leet had power to inquire of and punish Fornication and adultery; in which courts the king had a fine assised on the offenders, as appears by the book of Domesday. 2 Inst. 488.

FORPRISE, Forprisum.] An exception or reservation: This word is frequently inserted in leases and conveyances, wherein excepted and forprised is an usual expression. In another signification it is taken for any exaction; according to Ibom. anno 1285.

FORSSES, Catadulæ.] Water-falls, so called in Westmorland. Camd. Britan.

FORSPEAKER, An attorney or advocate in a cause. Blount.

FORTIA, Power, dominion, or jurisdiction: whence infortune Placitum, to enforce a plea by judges assembled. L. g. H. 1. c. 20.

FORTIORI, à fortiori or multo fortiori, is an argument often used by Littleton, to this purpose: If it be so in a feoffment passing a new right, much more is it for the restitution of an ancient right, &c. Co. Lit. 253, 260.

FORTILIE AND FORTILITY, Fortellium] A fortified place, bulwark or castle; as it is said within the towns and fortilles of Berwick and Carlisle. Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 18.

FORTLEF, Fr.] A place or fort of some strength; or rather a little fort. Old Nat. Brew 45.

FORTS AND CASTLES, The Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 6, extends to forts and other places of strength within the realm; the sole prerogative as well of erecting, as manning, and governing of which belongs to the king, in his capacity of General of the kingdom. 2 Inst. 30.

No Subject can build a castle or house of strength imbarred, or other fortrefs defensible without the license of the king; for the danger which might ensue, if every man at his pleasure might do it. 1 Inst. 5: 1 Comm. 263.

FORTUNA, Treasure trove.

FORTUNE TELLERS, See title Conjuration.

FORTUNIUM, A tournament or fighting with spears; or an appeal to fortune therein. Mat. Paris Anno 1241.

FORTY DAYS-COURT. The court of attachment of the fortieth or quadragesima. See title Tryst.

FOSSA, A ditch full of water; wherein women committing felony were drowned: It has been likewise used for a grave in ancient writings. See Furca.

FOSSATUM, FOSSATURA, Lat] A ditch, or place fenced round with a ditch or trench; also it is taken for the obligations of citizens to repair the city ditches. The work or service done by tenants, &c. for repairing and maintenance of ditches is called fossatum operatio; and the contribution for it fossagium. Kennet's Gloss.

FOSEWAY, or the Fosse, from Fossus, dugged.] One of the four ancient Roman ways through England. See title Watling Street.

POSTERIAN, Sax.] A nuptial gift; the jointure or stipend for the maintenance of the wife.

FOTHER OR FODDER, From Teuton. Fuder.] A weight of lead containing eight pigs, and every pig one and twenty stone and a half, so that it is about a ton or common cart load: Among the plumbers in London it is nineteen hundred and a half; and at the mines it is two and twenty hundred weight and a half. Skene.

FOVEA, A place for burial of the dead. Stat. Eccl. Paulin. Lond. n. MS. 29.

FOUNDATION, The founding and building of a college or hospital is called fundatio, quasi fundatio, or fundamenti locatio. Co. lib. 10. The king only can found a college; but there may be a college in reputation, founded by others. Lyn 267. If it cannot appear by inquiry, who it was that founded a church or college, it shall be intended it was the king; who has power to found a new church, &c. Moor 282. The king may found and erect an hospital, and give a name to the house, upon the inheritance of another, or licence another person to do it upon his own lands; and the words fundo, creo, &c. are not necessary in every foundation, either of a college or hospital made by the king; but it is sufficient if there be words equivalent: The incorporation of a college or hospital is the very foundation; but he who endows it with land is the founder; and to the erection of an hospital nothing more is requisite but the incorporation and foundation. 10 Rep. Case of Sutton's Hosp.

Persons seized of estates in fee simple, may erect and found hospitals for the poor, by deed inrolled in Chancery, &c. which shall be incorporated, and subject to such visitors as the founder shall appoint, &c. Stat. 19 Ed. 1. c. 5. Where a corporation is named, it is said the name of the founder is parcel of the corporation. 2 Nelf. 886. Though the foundation of a thing may alter the law, as to that particular thing; yet it shall not work a general prejudice. 1 Lil. Abr. 634. By Stat. 7 & 8 H. 3. c. 37, The Crown may grant licence to alien in mortmain. By Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, Gifts in mortmain by will, &c. are restrained; but there are exceptions with respect to Universities and Royal Colleges. See this Dict. titles Corporation; University; Mortmain.

FOUNDER OF METAL, From Fr. Fondeur, to melt or pour.] He that melts metal, and makes any thing of it by pouring or casting it into a mould. See Stat. 17 R. 2. c. 1, this Dict. title Money: Hence, Bell-founder, a found of letter, &c.

FOURCHER, Fr. Fourche; Lat. Furca, because it is two-fold.] A putting off, or delaying of an action; and has been compared to stammering, by which the speech is drawn out to a more than ordinary length of time; so a suit is prolonged by fourching, which might be brought to a determination in a shorter space: The device is commonly used when an action of suit is brought against two persons, who being jointly concerned, are not to answer till both parties appear; and is where the appearance or essoin of one will excuse the other's default, and they agree between themselves that one shall appear or be essoined one day, and for want of the other's appearing, have day over to make his appearance with the other party; and at that day allowed the other party doth appear, but he that appeared before doth not, in hopes to have another day by adjournment of the party who then made his appearance. Terms de Ley.

This is called fourcher; and in the statute of H. 7. c. 42, it is termed fourcher by essoin; where are words to this effect, viz. coparceners, jointenants, &c. may not fourch by essoin, to essoin severally; but shall have only one essoin, as one sole tenant. And in Stat. Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. c. 10, it is used in like manner: The defendants shall be put to answer without fourching, &c. 2 Inst. 250.

FRACTION. The law makes no fraction of a day; if any offence be committed, in case of murder, &c. the year and day shall be computed from the beginning of the day on which the wound was given, &c. and not from the precise minute or hour. See Co. Litt. 255. and this Dict. titles Murder; Appeal.

An act of record will not admit any division of a day, but is said to be done the first instant of the day. M. 137.

In presumption of law, when a thing is to be done upon one day, all that day is allowed to do it in, for the avoiding of fractions in time, which the law admits not of, but in case of necessity. Sti. 119.

Insurance for H.'s life; H. died on the last day; per Holt Ch. J. the law makes no fraction in a day; yet, in this case, he dying after the commencement, and before the end of the last day, the insurer is liable, because the insurance is for a year, and the year is not complete till the day be over; yet, if A. be born on the 3d day of September, and on the second day of September, twenty-one years afterwards, he makes his will, this is a good will, for the law will make no fraction of a day, and by consequence he was of age. 2 Salk. 625. See titles Bond; Condition; Infant, &c.

FRACITTIUM, Arable land. Mon. Angl. Tm. 2. 873.

FRACURA NAVIUM, Wick of shipping at sea.

FRAMPOLE FENCES, Such fines as the tenants in the manor of Writtle in Essex, set up against the lord's demesnes; and they are intitled to the wood growing on those fences, and as many poles as they can reach from the top of the ditch with the helve of an axe, towards the reparation of their sewers. It is thought the word frampole comes from the Sax. fram, ul profitable; or that it is a corruption of franch pole, because the poles are free for the tenants to take: but Chief Justice Brampton, whilst he was steward of the court of the manor of Writtle, acknowledged that he could not find out the reason why those fences were called frampole; so that we are at a loss to know the truth of this name etymologically. Bleant.

FRAME-WORK KNITTERS, regulated by Stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 29. See this Dict. title Manufactory.

FRANCHILANUS, A freeman. Chart. H. 4. Francus homo is used for a freeman, in Domesday book.

FRANCHISE, Fr.] A privilege or exemption from ordinary jurisdiction; as for a corporation to hold pleas to such a value, &c. And sometimes it is an immunity from tribute, when it is either personal or real, that is belonging to a person immediately; or by means of this or that place whereof he is a chief or member. Comp. Jurisd. 141.

There is also a Franchise royal; which seems to be that where the King's writ runs not. 21 H. 6. c. 4. But Franchise royal is said by some authors to be where the King grants to one and his heirs, that they shall be quit of toll, &c. Bract. lib. 2. c. 5.

Franchises, are a species of incorporeal hereditaments. Franchise and Liberty are used as synonymous terms; and their definition is "A royal privilege or branch of the King's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a Subject." Finch L. 164.—Being therefore derived from the crown, they must arise from the King's grant; or in some cases may be held by prescription, which pre-supposes a grant. Finch L. 164. The kinds of them are various and almost infinite: They may be vested either in natural persons or in bodies politic; in one man or many: But the same identical franchise that has before been granted to one, cannot be bestowed on another, for that would prejudice the former grant. 2 Roll. Ab. 191; Kirkw. 196.

The Principality of Wales is a Franchise—To be a County-Palatine is also a Franchise, vested in a number of persons. It is likewise a Franchise for a number of persons to be incorporated, and subsist as a Body politic; with a power to maintain perpetual succession, and do corporate acts: and each individual member of such corporation is also said to have a Franchise or freedom. Other Franchises are, to hold a Court-Leet: to have a Manor or Lordship; or at least to have a lordship paramount: to have Waifs, Wrecks, Estovers, Treasure trove, Royal fish, Forfeitures and Deadlands: to have a Count of one's own, or liberty of holding pleas, and trying causes: to have the Consuance of Pleas, which is a still greater liberty, being an exclusive right, so that no other court shall try causes arising within that jurisdiction: (See this Dict. title Cognizance;) to have a Bartwick, or liberty exempt from the sheriff of the county, wherein the grantee only and his officers are to execute all process: to have a Fair or Market, with the right of taking Toll, either there or at any other public places, as at bridges, wharfs or the like; which tolls must have a reasonable cause of commencement (as in consideration of repair, or the like,) else the franchise is illegal and void: 2 Inft. 220: See this Dict. titles Toll; Toll;) or lastly to have a Forest, Chace, Park, Warren or Liberty, endowed with privileges of royalty. F. N. B. 230. See this Dict. title Forest, &c.

Usage may uphold Franchises, which may be claimed by prescription, without record either of creation, allowance or confirmation; and wreck of the sea, waifs, strays, fairs and markets, and the like, are gained by usage, and may become due without any matter of record. But goods of felons and outlaws, and so on like, grow due by charter, and cannot be claimed by usage, &c. 2 Inft. 281: 9 Rep. 27.

It hath been adjudged, that grants of Franchises, made before the time of memory, ought to have allowance, within the time of memory, in the King's Bench, or before the barons of the Exchequer, or by some confirmation on record; and it is said they are not records pleadable, if they have not the aid of some matter of record within time of memory; and such ancient grants, after such allowance, shall be construed as the law was when they were made, and not as it hath been since altered: But Franchises granted within time of memory are pleadable without any allowance or confirmation; and if they have been allowed or confirmed as aforesaid, the Franchises may be claimed by force thereof, without shewing the charter. 9 Rep. 27, 28: 2 Inft. 281. 494.

There have been formerly several ancient prerogatives derived from the crown; besides the Franchises aforesmentioned; as power to pardon felony, make justices of assize, and of the peace, &c. But by the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24, they were resumed and re-united to the crown. The King cannot grant power to another to make strangers born, denizens here, because such power is by law inseparably annexed to his person. 7 Rep. 25.

By Magna Charta c. 1, and several ancient statutes, the Church shall have all her liberties and Franchises inviolable: And the Lords Spiritual and temporal shall enjoy their liberties, &c. and the King may not deprive them of any of them. 14 Ed. 3. ff. 2. c. 1: 2 H. 4. c. 1.

By Magna Charta, c. 37, The Franchises and liberties of the city of London, and all other cities, towns, &c. are confirmed. By Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24, all writs, processes, &c. in Franchises, are to be made in the King's name; and stewards, bailiffs, and other ministers of liberties, shall attend the justices of assize, and make due execution of process, &c.

Some Franchises, as York, Bristol, &c. have return of writs, to whom mandates are directed from the courts above, to execute writs and process: And a mayor or bailiff of a town, may have liberty to keep courts, and hold pleas in a certain place, according to the course of the Common law; and power to draw causes out of the King's courts, by an e. dukor juyant en: But the causes here may be removed to the superior courts. Co. Lit. 114: 4 Id. 87, 224.

Sheriffs of counties, within which is any Franchife, the lord whereof is intitled to a return of writs, shall, on his request, appoint one or more deputies, to reside at some place near, there to receive all writs in the sheriff's name, and under his seal to issue warrants for their due execution, and the Lord Chancellor is to settle the charges to be paid on such deputy. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 18.

A Franchife hath no relation to the county wherein it lies, as has been generally held; for it is not necessary to set forth the county when any thing is shewn to be done within a liberty or Franchife. 11 n. 23 Car. B. R.

If a Franchife fails to admit a justice within the same, the Franchife shall not be allowed, but on any such failure, the court of B. R. may compel the owners of the Franchife to do justice; for that court ought to see justice equally distributed to all persons. 1 Litt. Abi. 635.

Whether the King is party to a suit, as in all informations and indictments, the process ought to be executed by the sheriff, and not by the bailiff of any Franchife, whether it have the clause non omittas, &c. or not; for the King's prerogative shall be preferred to any Franchife. 2 Litt. P. C. A sheriff upon a non omittas, or on a capia in arrest, or quo minus, may enter and make arrests in a Franchife. 1 Litt. 635. An arrest by the sheriff within a Franchife on a common writ, is said to be good, though the officer be subject to an action at the suit of the lord of the Franchife. &c. See title Arrest.

Franchises may be forfeited and seized where they are abused, for misuser, or non-user; and when there are many points, a misuser of any one will make a forfeiture of the whole on a quo warranto brought. Kitch. 65. For contempt of the King's writ, in a county palatine, &c. the liberties may be seized, and the offenders fined; and the temporalties of a bishop have been adjudged to be seized until he satisfied the King for such contempt, on information exhibited. 1 Cro. Car. 253. The bishop of D. Dun pretending he had such a Franchife, that the King's writ was not to come there, and because one brought it thither he imprisoned him; this being proved upon an information brought against him, it was adjudged he should pay a fine to the King, and lose his liberties. 2 Rep. 210.

If a person claim a Franchife which he ought not to have, and an injury done upon the King, and not shewing his title, the King shall take from him his Franchife. 1 Rep. 180: 1 Engl. 34. The King's Bench will not give an information on private usurpation of Franchises, till the proper remedy be pursued by quo warranto. Hud. 211.

If Franchises and liberties are granted to the King, which were before in re, as fiefs of his crown, and afterwards by escheat, surrender, or otherwise, come back to the crown, they are re-united to the crown, and the King has them in re as before. 9 Co. 256. So if liberties, franchises, &c. which were appendant to a manor, come with the manor to the King, the appendancy is extinct, and the King is re-leased of them in re. 9 Co. 256: Cro. Eliz. 591. 1 And. 67.—See John.

FRANK

286. But if Franchises, liberties, &c. created de novo, by the King come back to the crown, they are not merged or extinguished in the crown. 9 Co. 256: 1 And. 87.—See Cro. El. 592: Dy. 327 a: Com. Dig. title Franchife (G).

Disturbance of Franchises happens, when a man has the Franchife of holding a court-leet, of keeping a fair or market, of free warren, of taking toll, of seizing waifs or estrays, or, in short, any other species of Franchife whatsoever, and he is disturbed or incommoded in the lawful exercise thereof. As if another by distress, menaces, or persuasions, prevail upon the suitors not to appear at my court; or obstruct the passage to my fair or market; or hunts in my free warren; or refuses to pay me the accustomed toll; or hinders me from seizing the waif or estray, whereby it escapes, or is carried out of my liberty: In all cases of this kind, and which are of a variety too extensive to be here enumerated, an injury is done to the legal owner of the Franchife; his property is diminished: and the profits arising from such his Franchife are diminished. To remedy which, as the law has given no other writ, he is therefore entitled to sue for damages by a special action on the case: or in case of toll, may take a distress, if he pleases. 3 Comm. 236.

FRANCIGENÆ, Was anciently the general appellation of all foreigners. Vide Engle. ey.

FRANCIANÆ, Used in ancient authors to denote a freeman or a gentleman. Fortescue.

FRANK, A French gold coin, worth twenty den., which is a livre, about ten pence $\frac{1}{2}$ d. English money.

FRANKALMOIGN, Libera Eleemosyna] A tenure by spiritual service, where an ecclesiastical corporation, sole or aggregate, holdeth land to them and their successors, of some lord and his heirs in free and perpetual alms: And perpetual supposes it to be a fee simple; tho' it may pass without the word jur. cellos. Lit. § 133. Co. Lit. 94. A lay person cannot hold in free alms. And when a grant is in Frankalmoin, no mention is to be made of any manner of service. Lit. 137. None can hold in Frankalmoin but by prescription, or by force of some grant made before the statute of Mortmain, 7 Ed. 1. st. 2: 18 Et 1. st. 1. c. 3. So that the tenure cannot at this day be created, to hold of a founder and his heirs in free alms: But the King is not restrained by the statutes; nor a Subject licensed or dispensed with by the King, to make such a grant. &c. Co. Lit. 98, 99. And if an ecclesiastical person holds lands by fealty and certain rent, the lord may at this time confirm his estate, to himself and his successors in Frankalmoin, for the former services are extinct, and nothing is reserved but that he should hold of him, which he did before; whereby this change and alteration is not within the Stat. 18 Ed. 1. of quia emptoris terrarum. Lit. § 140, 540: Co. Lit. 99 306.

Tenure in Frankalmoin is incident to the inheritable blood of the donor or founder; except in case of the King, who may grant this tenure to hold of him and his successors. Lit. 135. And the reason why a grant in Frankalmoin, since the Stat. 18 Ed. 1. (quia emptoris) is void, except cept in the case of the King, &c. is because none can hold land by this tenure, but of the donor; whereas the statute enjoins, that it be held of the Chief Lord, by the same service by which the feoffor, held it; though the King may grant away any estate, and reserve the tenure to himself. Co. Lit. 99, 223.

The service which ecclesiastical corporations were bound to render for lands held in Frankalmoin was not certainly defined, but only in general, to pray for the souls of the donor and his heirs, dead or alive; and therefore they did no fealty (which is incident to all other services but this) because this divine service was of a higher and more exalted nature. Lit. § 134, 5.

This is the tenure by which almost all the ancient Monasteries and Religious houses held their lands; and by which the parochial clergy and very many ecclesiastical and eleemosynary foundations hold them to this day. The nature of the service being, upon the Reformation, altered and made conformable to the doctrines of the Church of England. It was an old Saxon tenure, and continued under the Norman Revolution; from the respect then shewn to religion and religious men: which is also the reason that tenants in Frankalmoin were discharged of all other services, except the trioda necessitas of repairing the highways, building castles and repelling invasions. See Bract. l. 4. tr. 1. c. 28. § 1: Seld. Jan. 1. 42.

Even at present, this is a tenure of a nature very distinct from all others, being not in the least feudal, but merely spiritual. For this reason, if any person that holds lands or tenements in Frankalmoin, make any failure in doing such divine service as they ought, the lord may make complaint of it to the Ordinary or visitor; who if he be the King, if he be founder; or a Subject where he was appointed visitor upon the foundation; and the Ordinary, &c. may punish the negligence, according to the ecclesiastical laws. Lit. 136: Co. l. 1. 96.

In this particular, tenure in Frankalmoin materially differs from what was called tenure by Divine Service: in which tenants were obliged to do some special divine services to certain: as to sing to many masses, to distribute such a sum in alms, and the like; which being expressly defined and prescribed, could with no kind of propriety be called free tenement; especially as for this, if unperturbed, the lord might distrain without any complaint to the visitor. Lit. § 137: Britt. c. 66.

Antient donations in Frankalmoin are now out of use, as none but the King can make them; but they are expressly excepted, by name, in the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, (§ 7) abolishing tenures, and therefore subsist in many instances at the present day. 2 Comm. 101. c. 6.

FRANK CHASE, A liberty of free chase; by which all persons that have lands within the compass thereof, are prohibited to cut down any wood, &c. without the view of the forester, though it be in their own demesnes. Comp. Juris. 187.

FRANKED LETTERS, See title Post: Parliament.

FRANK-FEE Freehold lands which are held exempted from all services, but not from homage. In the register of writs we find that is frank fee, which a man holds at the Common law, to him and his heirs; and not by such service, as is required in ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor: And that the lands in the hand of King Edward the Confessor, at the making of the book of Domesday, were ancient demesne, and all the rest frank-fee; wherewith Fitz-Herbert agrees. Reg. Orig. 12: F. N. B. 161. These lands were exempted from all services, but not from homage.—Bro. tit. Demesne 32, says, that land which is in the hands of the King or lord of any manor, or being ancient demesne of the crown (viz. the demesnes) is called frank fee; and that which is in the hands of the tenant, is ancient demesne only. The author of the Terms of the Law defines a Free-fee to be a tenure pleadable at the Common-law; and not in ancient demesne. Cowel: Blount. See title Ancient Demesne.

FRANK-FERM. Lands or tenements, changed in the nature of the fee by teofment, &c. out of knight service, for certain yearly services. Britton, c. 66. See title Fee-farm.

FRANK-FOLD, See Follage.

FRANK-LAW, Libera Lex.] The benefit of the free and Common-law of the land. You may find what it is by the contrary, from Crompton in his Justice of Peace; where he says, he that for any offence loseth his frank-law, falls into these mischiefs, viz. He may never be impanelled upon any jury or assize; or be permitted to give any testimony: If he hath any thing to do in the King's courts, he must not attend them in person, but appoint his attorney therein for him: And his lands shall be estreated, and his body committed to prison, &c. Crompt. Juris. 156: Lib. Assis. 59.

FRANK-MARRIAGE, Libera Matrimonium.] A tenure in tail special where a man feoffed of land in fee-simple, gives it to another with his daughter, sister, &c. in marriage; to hold to them and their heirs: This tenure groweth from these words in the gift, v. c. Sciant, &c. me A. B. dedisse & concessisse, &c. T. B. suo reo & Annæ uxori eius, filie, &c. in liberum matrimonium, unum messuagium, &c. Lit. § 17: West. Symb. p. 1. l. 2. § 303. The effect of which words is, That they shall have the land to them and the heirs of their bodies; and shall do no services to the donor, except fealty, until the fourth degree. Glanvil, lib. 7. c. 18. And Fleta gives this reason why the heirs do no service until the fourth degree: Ne donatores vel eorum heredes pro bona receptione à reversione repellantur. And why in the fourth descent and downward, they shall do services to the donor; quia in quarto gradu vehementer presumitur, quod terra est per feodum hæreditatibus donatorum reversione. Fleta, lib. 3. c. 11; and see Bracton, lib. 2. c. 7.

Bracton also divides marriage into liberum matrimonium and maritagium per totam vitam; which last was where lands were given in marriage, with a reservation of the services to the donor, which the donee and his heirs were bound to perform for ever; but none of his, or the next two heirs, were obliged to do homage, which was to be done when it came to the fourth degree; and then, and not before, they were required to be performed by services and homage. Bract. l. 2. A gift of lands by one man to another with a wife in frank marriage, amounts to an application of law to a gift in tail; which in this case may be created without the words heirs or lo. s. Lit. 17: West. l. 120. A gift in frank-marriage may be made as well after as before marriage: and though a gift was a fee-simple before the Statute of Wigorn. 2; but since, it is actually usually a fee-tail: Though this tenure is now grown out of use, it is still capable of feoffment in law: It is liable to no service but fealty. 8 Co. 2. 6. 115. c. 7.

FRANK-PLEDGE, [Frankpledge, from Fr. Franc, Liber, and pledge, Edj. pledge.] A pledge or surety for the behaviour of Fr. Frank; it being the ancient custom of this kingdom, borrowed from the Lombards, that for the preservation of the public peace, every free-born man at the age of fourteen, (religious persons, clerks, &c. excepted) should give surety for his truth towards the King and his subjects, or be committed to prison; whereupon a certain number of neighbours, usually become bound one for another, to see each man of their pledge forth-coming at all times, or to answer the transgression done by any gone away: And whenever any one offended, it was forthwith inquired in what pledge he was, and then those of that pledge either produced the offender within one and thirty days, or satisfied for his offence. This was called Frankpledge; and this custom was so kept, that the sheriffs at every county court, did from time to time take the oaths of young persons as they grew to fourteen years of age, and see that they were settled in one hundred or other; whereby this branch of the sheriff's authority was called regis franci plegii, or regis of Frankpledge. At this day no man ordinarily giveth other security for the keeping of the peace, than his own oath; so that none answereth for the transgression of another, but every person for himself. 4 Inst. 72. Living under Frankpledge has been termed living under law, &c. See this Dist. titles County Court; Deceit; Deceit.

FRANK TENEMENT, A possession of freehold lands and tenements. See Freehold.

FRASSETUM, A corruption of fraxinetum.] A wood or woody ground, where ash-trees grow. Co. Lit. 4.

FRATER CONSANGUINEUS. A brother by the father's side.

FRATER NUTRICIUS. Used in ancient deeds for a bastard brother. Malm. 3.

FRATER UTERINUS. A brother by the mother's side.

FRATERIA, A fraternity, brotherhood or society of religious persons, who were bound to pray for the good health and life, &c. of their living brethren, and the souls of those that were dead: in the statutes of the cathedral church of St. Paul in London, collected by Ralph Baldock, Dean, A. D. 1295, there is one chapter de Frateria beneficiorum ecclesie St. Pauli, &c.

FRATERNITATES, See title Corporation.

FRATRES CONJURATI, Sworn brothers or companions; sometimes those were so called who were sworn to defend the King against his enemies. Hoveden, p. 445: Let. W. 1: Leg. Ed. 1. c. 35.

FRATRES PYES, [Fred. friars.] Certain friars, wearing black and white garments; of whom mention is made by Walsingham, p. 124.

FRATRIAGIUM, A younger brother's inheritance; Whatever the sons or brothers possess of the estate of the father, they enjoy it ratione fratriagii, and are to do homage to the elder brother for it, who is bound to do homage for the whole to the superior lord. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35.

FRAUD, [Fraus, Lat.] Deceit in grants and conveyances of lands, and bargains and sales of goods, &c. to the damage of another person; which may be either by suppression of the truth, or suggestion of a falsehood.

On this subject of FRAUD, we may enquire,

I. What Acts are fraudulent at Common law, and in Equity.

II. What Acts are fraudulent by Statute.

I. It may be laid down as a general rule, that, without the express provision of any act of parliament, all deceitful practices in defrauding, or endeavouring to defraud, another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty, are condemned by the Common law, and punishable according to the heinousness of the offence. Co. Lit. 3 b: Dyer 295. Such as causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading of it over to him in words different from those in which it was written, &c. 1 Sid. 312. 431.

Also it is a rule, that a wrongful manner of executing a thing shall avoid a matter that might have been executed lawfully. Co. Lit. 35: 41 Aff. 25: 47 Aff. 29: 1 Rel. Abr. 420, 54: Co. Lit. 357: Popb. 61. 100.

A deed not fraudulent at first may become so afterwards. And if one add a seal to a note which is good without it, he shall lose his security. 2 Vern. 123, 162.

As to frauds in contracts and dealings, the Common-law subjects the wrong-doer, in several instances, to an action on the case; as if a person, having the possession of goods, sell them to another, affirming them to be his own, when in truth they are not, an action on the case lies. 1 Rel. Abr. 90: Cro. Jac. 474. But if A. possessed of term for years, offers to sell it to B. and says, that a stranger would have given him twenty pounds for this term, by which means B. buys it, tho' in truth A. was never offered twenty pounds, no action on the case lies, tho' B. is hereby deceived in the value. 1 Rel. Abr. 91, 101: 1 Sid. 146: Titb. 20. S. P.

If on a treaty for the purchase of a house, the defendant affirms the rent to be more than it is, whereby the plaintiff is induced to give more than the house is worth, this is a fraud. 1 Salk. 211: 1 Lev. 102: 1 Sid. 146: 1 Keb. 510, 518, 522. S. P. And see Kil. 24, 81: 1 Show. 50, 51.

Where a person is party to a Fraud, all that follows by reason of that Fraud shall be said to be done by him. Cro. Jac. 469. But when Fraud is not expressly averred, it shall not be presumed; nor shall the court adjudge it to be so, till the matter is found by a jury. 10 Rep. 50.

All Frauds and deceits, for which there is no remedy by the ordinary course of law, are properly cognisable in equity; and it is admitted, that matters of Fraud were one of the chief branches to which the jurisdiction of Chancery was originally confined. 4 Inst. 84. It would be endless to enumerate the several cases, wherein relief has been given against Frauds: but the following instances are too material to be omitted.

Wherever Fraud or surprise can be imputed to, or collected from the circumstances of the transaction, Equity will interpose and relieve against it. Torb. 101, 2: 2 Co. Ca. 103: Fin. b. 161: 2 P. Wms. 203, 270: 3 P. Wms. 130: 2 Vern. 189: 2 Atk. 324: 2 Vex. 407. It is said however that it must not be understood, from cases of this kind being generally brought into equity, that the courts of law are incompetent to relieve; so, where the Fraud can be clearly established, courts of law exercise a concurrent jurisdiction with courts of equity; and will relieve by making making void the instrument obtained by such corrupt agreement or Fraud. 1 Burr. 396: Wood's Inst. 296. Therefore where the obligor was an unlettered man, and the bond was not read over to him, he was allowed to plead this circumstance in an action on the bond. 9 H. 5. 15. cited 11 Co. 27 b. So if the bond be in part read to an unlettered man, and some of its material contents be omitted or mis-represented. 2 Roll. Ab. 28. p. 8. It is observable that Lord Coke in the same passage where he confines the jurisdiction of courts of equity to such "frauds covin and deceit, for which there is no remedy by the ordinary course of law," seems to admit that all frauds were not relievable at law. See 3 Inst. 84.

The Chancery may decree a conveyance to be fraudulent, merely for being voluntary, and without any trial at law; yet it has been insisted, that Fraud or not, was triable only by a jury. Pie. Ch. 14, 15.

A poor man was drawn in to sell an estate, at a great under-value: but no Fraud appearing, though the purchase was not a fair bargain, the seller could not be relieved in equity, to set it aside. Preced. Canc. 206.

There does not appear to be a single case in the books in which it has been held that mere inadequacy of price alone is a ground for a court of equity to annul an agreement, though executory, if the same appear to have been fairly entered into, and understood by the parties, and capable of being specifically performed; still less does it appear to have been considered as a ground for rescinding an agreement actually executed. See Gilb. Rep. 155: Bro. P. C. Keen v. Stutley.—2 Atk. 251: Anbl. 18. To set aside a conveyance there must be an inequality of price so strong, gross and manifest, that it must be impossible to state it to a man of common sense, without producing an exclamation at the inequality of it. 1 Bro. C. R. 9: and see 2 Bro. C. R. 179 in n. A strong argument in support of this rule may be drawn from those cases in which losing bargains have been actually established and decreed. See 2 Vern. 423: 1 Eq. Ab. 170: 2 Vern. 422: 1 Bro. C. R. 158.—But tho' courts of equity will not relieve against agreements merely on the ground of the consideration being inadequate, yet if there be such inadequacy as to shew that the person did not understand the bargain he made, or was so oppressed that he was glad to make it, knowing its inadequacy, it will shew a command over him which may amount to a Fraud. 2 Bro. C. R. 175. See also 1 Bro. C. R. 558: Hene v. Meers: 2 Vern. 155: 2 P. Wms. 203.

A. being tenant in tail, remainder to his brother B. in tail, A. not knowing of the entail, makes a settlement on his wife for life for her jointure, without levying a fine, or suffering a recovery, which B. who knew of the entail ingrosses, but does not mention any thing of the entail, because, as he confessed in his answer, if he had spoke any thing of it, his brother, by a recovery, might have cut off the remainder, and barred him; and altho' after A.'s death, B. recovered in ejectment against the widow by force of the entail; yet she was relieved in Chancery, and a perpetual injunction granted for this Fraud in B. in concealing the entail; which if it had been disclosed, the settlement might have been made good by a recovery. Preced. Chanc. 35: 2 Vern. 239.

So where a mother being absolute owner of a term, the same being limited to her in tail, is present at a treaty for her son's marriage, and hears her son declare, that the term was to come to him at his mother's death, and is a witness to the deed, whereby the reversion of the term is settled on the issue of the marriage after the mother's death; she was compelled in equity to make good the settlement. 2 Vern. 150.

Where the defendant, on a treaty of marriage for his daughter with the plaintiff, signed a writing comprising the terms of the agreement, and afterward desiring to elude the force thereof, and get loose from his agreement, ordered his daughter to put on a good humour, and get the plaintiff to deliver up that writing, and then marry him, which she accordingly did, and the defendant stood by at the corner of a street to see them go by to be married; The plaintiff was relieved on the point of Fraud. 1 Eq. Ab. 20: 2 Vern. 373.

It seems agreed that if a woman on the point of marriage, charge, or convey her property to a mere stranger, for whom she was not under even a moral obligation to provide, that such conveyance will be decreed a Fraud on the marital rights. 2 C. R. 41: 2 Vern. 264.

If A. has a prior incumbrance on an estate, and is a witness to a subsequent mortgage, but does not disclose his own incumbrance; this is such a Fraud in him for which his incumbrance shall be postponed. 2 Vern. 151. And see 2 Vern. 554. So if A. having a mortgage on a leasehold estate lends the mortgage deed to the mortgagor, with an intent to borrow more money; that is such a Fraud in the mortgagee, for which his mortgage shall be postponed to the subsequent incumbrance. 2 Vern. 726: 1 Eq. Ab. 321.—See this Dict. title Mortgage.

If a copyholder, by his will intending to give the greatest part of his estate to his godson, and the other part to his wife, is persuaded by the wife to nominate her to the whole, on a promise that she would give the godson the part designed for him; it will be decreed against the wife on the point of Fraud, though there was no memorandum thereof in writing pursuant to the statute of Frauds and Perjuries. Preced. Canc. 3.

Since the cases of Kerick v. Bransby, (Bro. P. C.) and Webb v. Cleveland, (2 Atk. 424.) it appears to have been settled that a will cannot be set aside in equity for Fraud and imposition; because a will of personal estate may be set aside for Fraud in the ecclesiastical court, and a will of real estate may be set aside at law: for in such cases, as the animus testandi is wanting, it cannot be considered as a will. 2 Atk. 324: 3 Atk. 17.—Though equity will not set aside a will for Fraud, nor restrain the probate of it in the proper court, yet if the Fraud be proved, it will not assist the party practising it, but will leave him to make what advantage he can of it. 2 Vern. 76. But if the validity of the will has been already determined and acted upon, equity will restrain proceedings in the prerogative court, to controvert its validity. 1 Atk. 623. That the party prejudiced by the Fraud may file a bill in equity for a discovery of all its circumstances is unquestionable: the invariable practice in such cases is to seek relief, and the issue directed is to furnish the ground upon which the court is to proceed in giving relief. Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. c. 2. § 3, An.

If a security be obtained from a person by Fraud and practice, upon a pretence of a demand that is fictitious, it will be relieved against in equity. 2 Vern. 173, 632.

There are likewise several instances, where a parol agreement intended to be reduced into writing, but prevented by Fraud, has been decreed in equity, notwithstanding the statute of Frauds and Perjuries; as where upon

upon a marriage treaty, instructions were given by the husband to draw a settlement, which he privately countermanded, and afterwards drew in the woman by persuasions and assurances of such settlement to marry him; It was decreed, that he should make good the settlement. 1 Ff. Ab. 19. So where a parol agreement was concerning the lending of money on a mortgage, and the covenants proposed were an absolute deed from the mortgager and a deed of satisfaction from the mortgagee, and after the mortgage had not the deed of conveyance, he refused to execute the satisfaction; It was decreed against him on the point of fraud. 1 Ff. Ab. 90. See title Agreement.

II By Stat. 1 R. 2. c. 9., no gift or feoffment of lands or goods shall be made by fraud for maintenance. And the disseisees shall have their recovery against the first disseisors as well of their lands as of double damages, without regard to such alienations. See also Stats. 4 H. 4. c. 7: 11 H. 6. c. 3; and this Dictionary titles Dissipation: Forfeiture.

By Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 4., (and see Stat. 50 E. 3. c. 6.) All deeds of gift of goods made in trust for the use of persons making the said gifts, with intent to defraud creditors, shall be null and void.

By Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. (made perpetual by Stat. 29 Eliz. c. 5.) Every feoffment, gift, alienation and conveyance of lands or goods, leases, rents, &c. and every bond, judgment and execution with intent to defraud creditors or others, shall (only against creditors and others whose actions shall be thereby defrauded or delayed) be of none effect; all parties and privies to such conveyances, bonds, &c. shall forfeit one year's value of the lands and the whole of the goods, or money contained in the bond, &c. half to the crown and half to the party grieved; and suffer half a year's imprisonment.—This statute not to extend to any estate made on good considerations bonâ fide to persons not having notice of such fraud.

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4. (made perpetual by Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 18.) Every conveyance, charge, lease or incumbrance of any lands made with intent to defraud purchasers shall be deemed utterly void as against such purchasers and all claiming under them.—The parties and privies to such conveyances shall forfeit one year's value of the land and suffer half a year's imprisonment.—The statute expressly excepts any conveyance made for good consideration and bonâ fide.—If any person shall make any conveyance or limitation of lands with a clause of revocation, and after such conveyance shall convey or charge the same lands for money or other good consideration, the said first conveyance against the said vendees shall be void.—Lawful mortgages made bonâ fide on good consideration are excepted.—By the same act statutes-merchant and statutes-staple are to be entered in the office of the clerk of the recognizances. See this Dict. those titles.

By Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3., (known more commonly by the name of The Statute of Frauds, and by which various provisions are made as to Contracts, Wills, &c. which see in this Dict. under titles Agreement; Assumpsit; Wills, &c.) All leases, estates of freehold, or terms for years, or any uncertain interest in lands, made by livery and seisin only, or by parol, and not put in writing and signed by the parties or their agents shall have the force of leases at will only.—Except leases not exceeding the term of three years at two thirds of the improved value.—And no leases, estates or interests of lands, either of freehold or terms of years, or any uncertain interest, not being copyhold, shall be assigned, granted or surrendered, unless by deed or note in writing signed by the parties or their agents: or by the operation of law.

By Stat. 3 (or 3 & 4) W. & M. c. 14., made perpetual by Stat. 6 W. 3. c. 14., all wills or appointments of lands, or of any rent, &c. out of the same shall be deemed, only as against Creditors by bond or specialty binding the heir, to be fraudulent and void.—And every such creditor shall have his action of debt upon his bonds and specialties against the heir at law of such obligors, and such devisees jointly.—This statute however excepts dispositions for the payment of debts and raising portions for children in pursuance of marriage contracts made before marriage: It further provides that where any heir at law shall be liable to pay his ancestor's debt, in respect of lands descended to such heir, and shall alien the same before action brought, such heir shall be answerable to the creditor in an action of debt to the value of the land aliened; but the lands bonâ fide aliened before action brought shall not be liable.—Every devise however, made liable by the statute, shall be chargeable, in the same manner as the heir, tho' the lands devised shall be aliened before action brought.

The Stat. 50 E. 3. c. 6: 3 H. 7. c. 4. expressly declare all gifts, &c. of goods and chattels intended to defraud creditors, to be null and void; creditors might however still in some cases be defrauded, by their debtors' executing powers of appointment (vested in them by settlement, &c.) in favour of mere volunteers, unless courts of equity interposed, and made such voluntary appointment in the first place subject to payment of debts. 2 Vern. 319, 465: 2 Vez. 1. But tho' courts of equity will subject a voluntary appointment to payment of debts, yet they will not interfere where the debtor has not executed his power of appointment. 2 Vern. 465: 2 Vez. 1. See also Hob. 9. as to the rule of law.

As the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. not only declares all deeds made in fraud of creditors to be null and void, but subjects the parties to such fraud, to the penalties and forfeitures above mentioned, it should seem that the provisions of this act ought to be construed strictly; but Lord Mansfield has said, that the Stats. 13 El. c. 5: 27 El. c. 4. cannot receive too liberal a construction, or be too much extended in suppression of fraud. Cowp. 434.

The object of the Legislature was evidently to protect creditors from those frauds which are frequently practised by debtors under the pretence of discharging a moral obligation: for as to those gifts or conveyances which want even a good or meritorious consideration for their support, their being voluntary seems to have been always a sufficient ground to conclude that they were fraudulent: but tho' the statute protects the legal right of creditors against the fraud of their debtors, it anxiously excepts from such imputation the bonâ fide discharge of a moral duty. It therefore does not declare all voluntary conveyances, but all fraudulent conveyances to be void: and whether the conveyance be fraudulent or not is declared to depend on the consideration being good, and also bonâ fide. 1 Ch. Ca. 99, 291: 1 Vent. 194: 1 Mod. 119: 1 Atk. 15: Cowp. 703.

A good

FRAUD II.

A good consideration is that of blood, or of natural love and affection. See this Dict. title Consideration. A gift made for such consideration ought certainly to prevail, unless it be found to break in upon the legal rights of others; in that case it is equally clear it ought to be set aside. If therefore a man being indebted convey to the use of his wife or children, such conveyance would be within the statute; for tho' the consideration be good, yet it is not bonâ fide; that is, the circumstances of the grantor render it inconsistent with that good faith which is due to his creditors. Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. t. 4. § 12. in notes.

If there be a voluntary conveyance of real estate, or chattel interest by one not indebted at the time, tho' he afterwards becomes indebted, if that voluntary conveyance was for a child, and there is no particular evidence or badge of Fraud to deceive subsequent creditors, that will be good; but if any mark of fraud, collusion or intent to deceive subsequent creditors appear, that will make it void. 2 Ven. 11: See also 2 Atk. 481: 1 Atk. 13: Cowp. 711.

But the grantor's being indebted is not the only badge of Fraud; several other circumstances are enumerated in Twyne's Case, (3 Rep.) as furnishing a strong presumption that the transaction is malâ fide. Gifts made in secret are liable to suspicion of Fraud: a general gift of all a man's goods may be reasonably suspected to be fraudulent, even tho' there be a true debt owing to the party to whom made. The several marks or badges of Fraud, in a gift or grant of goods are, if it be general, without exception of some things of necessity; if the donor still possesses and uses the goods; if the deed be secretly made; if there be a trust between the parties; or if it be made pending the action. 3 Rep. 80—82.—If also the conveyance contain a power of revocation, or a power to mortgage, it will be considered as fraudulent against creditors. 2 Vern. 510.—So if the grantor be allowed to continue in possession of lands, the conveyance being absolute. 2 Bullst. 218.—So if the conveyance or gift be in general of the whole or the greater part of the grantor's property, such conveyance or gift would be presumed to be fraudulent; for no man can voluntarily divest himself of all, or the most of what he has, without being aware that future creditors will probably suffer for it. In short if the transaction be chargeable with any circumstance sufficiently strong to raise a presumption of its being a Fraud, it cannot be supported, unless some other consideration be interposed to obviate the objection arising from the general nature of the transaction: as where the husband after marriage being indebted conveyed an estate to trustees, to the separate use of his wife: it was held that the trustees having undertaken to indemnify him against his wife's debts, was sufficient to support the settlement as a valuable consideration. 2 Bry. C. R. 90. But if this transaction had been with a view to defraud creditors, it would probably have been set aside; for if the transaction be not bonâ fide, the circumstance of its being even for a valuable consideration will not alone take it out of the statute. Cowp. 434: 2 Atk. 477.

But tho' creditors may under the above and other circumstances avoid a voluntary conveyance, yet it is binding on the party making it and all claiming under him. Cro. Jac. 270: 1 Eq. Ab. 168: 22 Vin. Ab. 16—18: 1 Vern. 100, 132, 464: 2 Vern. 475: 22 Vin. Ab. 24. pl. 3. And if there be two or more voluntary conveyances, the first shall prevail, unless the latter be for payment of debts. 1 Ch. Rep. 92: 2 Ch. Rep. 199.

A conveyance, if made of lands by Fraud, is not void by the Stat. 13 El. c. 5, against all persons; but only against those who afterwards come to the land upon valuable consideration. Cro. Eliz. 445: Cro. Jac. 271.

A distinction has been taken between the claims of real creditors, and a debt founded in maleficio: for A. having brought an action against B. for criminal conversation with A.'s wife B. assigned his estates to trustees in trust to pay the several debts mentioned in a schedule, and such other debts as he should name. A. recovered 5000*l.* damages and brought his bill to set aside this deed as fraudulent, but the Court held that it was not fraudulent either in law or equity: for the plaintiff was no creditor at the time of making the deed: and though it were made with an intent to prefer his real creditors before this debt when it should come to be such, yet it was conscientious so to do. But the plaintiff was held to have an interest in the surplus after payment of the other debts. Pr. Ch. 105.

On the construction of the Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4, it has been held that every voluntary conveyance shall be presumed to be fraudulent against a subsequent purchaser. 1 Pent. 194: 1 Ch. Ca. 100, 217: Cro. Jac. 158. But if the conveyance, tho' voluntary, appear to have been made for a meritorious consideration; and without Fraud or covin, it shall not be void against a subsequent purchaser; for there is no part of the act which affects voluntary settlements eo nomine unless they are fraudulent. Doe v. Routledge, Cowp. 708. See also, 2 Wils. 356: Forrest 64: 2 Vern. 44. As to what shall be deemed a meritorious consideration, see the above cases, and also, 1 Vern. 408, 467: 1 Atk. 265. And though a conveyance be covinous in its creation it may acquire validity by subsequent matter; as where the land conveyed is afterwards aliened or settled for valuable consideration. 1 Sid. 133, 4: Stin. 423: 3 Lev. 387. It has also been held that a purchaser, to avail himself of this act, must be a purchaser for money or other valuable consideration. 3 Co. 83*a*: Cro. Eliz. 444. See also Com. Dig. Fraud. 4 I. 2: 1 Eq. Ab. 353.

Good's Case, (5 Co. 60*b*,) determines that a purchaser shall avoid a fraudulent conveyance, notwithstanding his notice of the Fraud, but this can by no means bear out the inference that all voluntary conveyances are fraudulent, and therefore absolutely void, though the purchaser have notice of them. The terms of Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4. § 2, seem to be sufficiently distinct to confine its operation to such conveyances as are made with an intent to defraud and deceive subsequent purchasers; but it were difficult to maintain that a conveyance was made with intent to defraud a person who before he became a purchaser had full notice of such conveyance. See 2 Lev. 105.—The policy of the act was to prevent Fraud; the construction most favourable to such purpose is that which excludes all temptation to the practice of it. A voluntary deed, as has already been noticed, is binding on the party and all claiming under him as subsequent volunteers; and to allow him to defeat his bounty in favour of a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice is merely to prefer a higher consideration: but to allow a purchaser with notice to supercede the claims of a volunteer seems to encourage a breach of the respect morally due to the fair claims and interests of others: and may render the provisions of a statute, intended by the legislature to be preventive of fraud, the most effectual instrument of accomplishing it.—This point seems deserving of consideration; for if the construction of this act which has certainly prevailed in favour of purchasers with notice were traced, it would probably appear to have originated in the opinion, that the statute avoids all voluntary conveyances whatever; though, as very strongly observed by Lord Mansfield in Doe v. Routledge, (Cov. 708,) it merely affects fraudulent conveyances. Fonblanque, Treat. Eq. c. 4. § 13. in n.

Before the above Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 14, against fraudulent devises bond and other specialty creditors whose debts did not immediately affect the lands of their debtors, were liable to be defrauded, either by their debtor devising his lands, or by the alienation of the heir before any action could be brought against him. To obviate these the statute was made, by the provisions of which the bond creditor is in some degree protected against the fraud of the debtor or his heir. But the statute having expressly excepted devises for payment of debts or children's portions, bond and other specialty creditors whose demands do in their nature affect the land are still liable to be prejudiced by the right of their debtor to devise his real estate; for if he devise subject to the payment of debts, his simple contract creditors will be entitled to be paid pari passu with such bond or other specialty creditors; for in conscience their debts are to be equally favoured, being equally due. 1 Ch. Ca. 32, 248; 2 Ch. Ca. 54; 3 Ch. Rep. 7; 1 Vern. 63, 101; 2 Vern. 61, 763.—And even creditors who are barred, by the statute of Limitations shall be let in. 2 Vern. 141. And tho' it has been held in some cases, that if the estate be devised to the executor for payment of debts, such circumstance will render the estate legal assets, yet it seems now to be settled that this shall not occasion the produce of it, when sold, to be applied as it would in the ecclesiastical court, but the estate must nevertheless be considered as equitable assets. Newton v. Bennet, 1 Bro. C. R. 135. and Silk v. Prince, in the note there. But if the estate descends to the heir charged with the payment of debts, it will still be legal assets. 1 P. Wms 430; 2 Atk. 290.—See this Dict. titles Executor V. 6: Assets.

The following cases may serve further to elucidate the foregoing principles.

If a man seised of land in fee, make a feoffment of it to divers uses, with remainders over, &c. with power of revocation by writing under hand and seal; here if he for good consideration doth enter into a recognisance, the land shall be charged with the same: so if A. reserves to himself power to revoke by the assent of B. and then bargains to another. Brigg. 22: Lane 22. And where one hath made an estate with the power of revocation; and after with intent to deceive a purchaser he makes a feoffment, &c. to a stranger, to extinguish the power, and then sells the land for a valuable consideration; in this case both the conveyances shall be fraudulent as to the purchaser. 2 Rep. 83.

A man made a lease for twenty-one years, in trust for his daughter till marriage; and if she married with his consent, then to her during the term; this, till marriage, has been held fraudulent as to a purchaser; but after marriage it is good, because marriage is an advancement to the daughter, and taking effect made it upon valuable consideration, which a marriage is always taken to be, and the husband was drawn in by this conveyance to marry her. 1 Sid. 133.

If a father makes a feoffment to another, for the advancement of daughters, or his younger sons, or for payment of his debts; and afterwards infeoffs his eldest son or heir, that is not Fraud or collusion within the statute, for he is bound in law to make provision for his children: but where there is a grandfather, father, and two sons, and the grandfather (living the father) conveys his land to either of the sons, this is out of the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 1; because it is not a common thing for to do, and the father ought to have the immediate care of his children; though if he is dead, then it belongeth to the grandfather. 6 Rep. 76. If a man levy a fine to the use of himself for life, remainder to his son in tail, and after sells the fee-simple to another, he as a purchaser shall avoid this conveyance upon the Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4; because it was voluntary, and therefore fraudulent; so it had been if he had settled the remainder on his wife, unless there had been a consideration on a precedent marriage. Sid. 133: 3 Salk. 174.

A deed, as has been already said, may be voluntary, and not fraudulent; thus where a father having an extravagant son, settles his land so that he may not spend all; this is good, though there is no consideration of money. 1 Mod 119.

An infant promised, on his marriage, to settle his estate when he came of age, upon himself and his issue; and this was held a sufficient consideration, though an infant by law is not compellable to fulfil such promise. 2 Lev. 147. A person, in consideration that his son is to marry the daughter of A. B. covenants to stand seised of lands to the use of his son for life; and after to other sons in reversion or remainder: the uses thus limited in remainder, shall be fraudulent as to any purchaser of the land, tho' the first be upon good consideration. And although the consideration of marriage is good; if there be a power to revoke annexed to the deed, it will be void as to purchasers. Lane 22.

If a man after marriage, make a voluntary conveyance of land for a jointure, or maintenance for his wife, and afterwards sell the land for money, to one that hath no notice of it; in this case the conveyance, made to the use of the wife, shall be said to be fraudulent: and yet if a person upon a marriage, before the marriage, and in consideration thereof, or after marriage, in consideration of a portion given or money paid, convey his land to the use of his wife, &c. it will not be a fraudulent deed. Cro. Jac. 158. A feme covert joins with her husband in the alienation of her jointure, and hath a new deed of settlement of other lands dated the same day in lieu thereof, without articles or agreement precedent to this second settlement; this is not fraudulent against a purchaser, though the lands in the new settlement are more in value than those in the first; for the old settlement being destroyed, and a new one made on the same day, it shall be presumed that there was an agreement for it. 2 Lev. 70, 71.

The husband who married a wife an inheritrix, promised, that if she would join with him in a sale of her land, and let him have the money to pay his debts, that he would leave her 400 l. at his death; about six months after after the lands were sold, he gave bond to a stranger to leave his wife the 40*l*. And it was adjudged, that this was not fraudulent as to creditors, but good against them. 2 Lev. 148. A person makes a voluntary conveyance, and then mortgages the same land, and the first deed is upon a trial found fraudulent; then he to whom the deed was made, exhibited his bill in equity to redeem the mortgage; and it was held, that though the first deed was fraudulent, quoad the mortgage money, yet it was good to pass the equity of redemption. Chan. Rep. 59.

Where a lease is made with a provis, that if the lessor pays 10*l*. the lease shall be void; because 10*l* is not the value of the lease and land, but only limited as a power of revocation, it is fraudulent as to a purchaser. Cro. Jac. 455. And if a man makes an assignment of his lease, and yet keeps possession of the lands, the deed of assignment will be adjudged fraudulent. In Chancery it has been decreed, that if a man conveys his land to friends in trust, to the use of his children, &c. to defraud a purchaser, the trust shall go in equity to the purchaser; also it shall be liable for debts, to satisfy the same. Lutw. 43, 44. A husband assigned a term of his wife's, in trust for his wife; and it was held fraudulent against purchasers. Chan. Rep. 225.

By the Common-law, an estate made by fraud, shall be avoided only by him who hath a former right, title, interest, debt or demand. 3 Rep. 83. If one indebted do really sell lands, though to avoid payment of debts, if the vendee be not privy to the intent, the sale to him is good for as to the vendee, there is no fraud in the case. Mich. 24 Car. B. R. A man gives his goods to his son, they are nevertheless liable as to his creditors; but if he gives them to one of his creditors, without any trust or covin, it shall not be fraudulent to make him liable to other creditors. 3 Salk. 174.

If tenant for life commit a forfeiture, and he in the reversion enters, this shall be as a fraudulent conveyance with respect to creditors. Vent. 257. Fraudulent gifts, or grants of goods to defraud the lord of his heriot, shall be void; and the value of the goods forfeited, under Stat. 13 Edw. c. 5.

Fraudulent conveyances to multiply votes at election of Knights of the shire, shall be taken against the persons making them as free and absolute; and all securities for redeeming and restoring, &c. to be void. Stat. 10 Ann. c. 23. See title Parliament. A presentation to a benefice; or administration of goods, obtained by Fraud, are void; and so is sale of goods by Fraud, although in open market, &c. Where a fraudulent deed or conveyance is assigned upon a valuable consideration, the Fraud is purged thereby. 1 Ld. Raym. 88.

Gross criminal Frauds are punishable by way of indictment or information; such as playing with false dice, causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, &c. for these and such like offences the party may be punished not only with fine and imprisonment, but also with such farther infamous punishment, as the Judges in their discretion shall think proper. *Cro. FRAUS LEGIS. If a person having no manner of title to a house, procure an affidavit of the service of a declaration in ejectment, and thereupon gets judgment; and, by virtue of a writ of hab. fac. possessionem, turns the owner out of possession of the house, and seizes and converts the goods therein to his own use, he may be punished as a felon; because he used the process of the law with a felonious purpose, in fraudem legis. Raym. 276: Sid. 254.

FRAXINETUM, A wood of ash trees. Domesday.

FREDUM, A composition anciently made by a criminal, to be freed from prosecution, of which the third part was paid into the Exchequer. Formerly compositions were paid for crimes in general, particularly for murder. The magistrate was to determine the composition, and protect the offender against the violence of resentment. See Montesquieu's Spirit of Laws, l. 30. c. 20: Robertson's Charles V. l. 300.*

FREE-BENCH, Francus bancus; fide. libera] That estate in copyhold lands which the wife hath on the death of her husband for her dower, according to the custom of the manor. but it is said the wife ought to be espoused a virgin; and is to hold the land only so long as she lives sole and continent. Kitch. 102. Of this Free-Bench several manors have several customs; and Fitzherbert calls it a custom, whereby in certain cities the wife shall have the whole lands of the husband for her dower, &c. F. N. B. 150. In the manors of East and West Embourne in the county of Berks, and the manor of Lotte in Devonshire, and other parts of the West of England, there is a custom, that when a copyhold tenant dies, his widow shall have her Free bench in all his customary lands, dum sola & casta fuerit; but if she commits incontinency, she forfeits her estate: yet nevertheless, on her coming into the court of the manor, riding backwards on a black ram, with his tail in her hand, and saying the words following, the steward is bound by the custom to re-admit her to her Free-bench; the words are these,

Here I am,
Riding on a black ram,
Like a whore as I am:
And for my crincum crancum,
I have lost my bincum bancum;
And for my tail's game,
Have done this awfully shame;
Therefore pray Mr. Steward, let me have my land again.

FREE BOROUGH-MEN, Such great men as did not engage like the frank-pledge men for their decennier. See Frisburgh.

FREE

FREE-CHAPEL, Libera capella] A chapel so called, because it is exempt from the jurisdiction of the diocesan. Those chapels are properly Free-chapels which are of the King's foundation, and by him exempted from the Ordinary's visitation; also chapels founded within a parish for the service of God, by the devotion and liberality of pious men, over and above the mother-church, and endowed with maintenance by the founders, which were free for the inhabitants of the parish to come to, were therefore called Free chapels. Reg. Orig. 40, 41. The Free-chapel of St. Martin le Grand is mentioned in the Stat. 3 Ed. 4. c. 4, as are others likewise by ancient statutes: but these chapels were given to the King, with the chantries, &c. By Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. See title Monasteries.

FREEHOLD, Liberum tenementum.] That land or tenement which a man holds in fee-simple, fee tail, or for term of life. Bract. lib. 2 c. 9. It is described to be of two sorts: freehold in deed, and freehold in law; the first being the real possession of lands, &c. in fee, or for life; the other, the right a person hath to such lands or tenements, before his entry or seizure. Freehold is also extended to offices, which a man holds either in fee, or during life: and, in the register of writs it is said, that he who holds land upon an execution of a statute-merchant until he is satisfied the debt holds as freehold to him and his assigns, and the same of a tenant by elegit; but such tenants are not in fact Freeholders, only as Freeholders for their time, till they have received the profits of the land to the value of their debt, Reg. Judic. 68, 73. A lease for ninety-nine years, &c. determinable upon a life or lives, is not a lease for life to make a Freehold, but a lease for years, or chattel determinable upon life or lives; and an estate for one thousand years is not a Freehold, or of so high a nature as an estate for life. Co. Lit. 6. He that hath an estate for the term of his own life, or the life of another, hath a Freehold, and no other of a less estate; though they of a greater estate have a Freehold, as tenant in fee, &c. Lit. 57.

When a man pleads liberum tenementum generally, it shall be intended that he hath an estate in fee; and not a bare estate for life, Cro. Eliz. 87. An estate of Freehold cannot by the Common-law commence in futuro; but it must take place presently in possession, reversion, or remainder. 5 Rep. 94.

A man made a deed of gift to his son and his heirs, of lands after his death, and no livery was made; now if there had been livery, it had been void, because a Freehold cannot commence in futuro: and it has been held, that it shall not enure as a covenant to stand seized, by reason of the word give; by which was intended a transmutation of the estate, and not to pass it by way of use. March. Rep. 50, 51. Whatsoever is part of, or fixed to the Freehold goes to the heir; and glass windows, wainscot, &c. affixed to the house are parcel of the house, and cannot be removed by tenants. 4 Rep. 63, 64. But it hath been adjudged, that if things necessary for trade, &c. are affixed to the Freehold by the lessee, he may take them down and remove them, so as he do it before the end of the term, and he do not thereby injure the Freehold. 1 Salk. 368. See title Heir.

Any thing fixed to the Freehold may not be taken in distress for rent or in execution, &c. It is not felony at Common-law, only trespass, to steal or take any thing annexed to the Freehold; such as lead on a church, or house, corn or grass growing on the ground, apples on a tree, &c. Though if they are severed from the Freehold, whether by the owner or a thief, if he severed them at one time, and took them away at another, it was larceny to take them. 12 Aff. 32: 1 Hawk. P. C. And now by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 32, To steal lead on houses, &c. is made felony.

The statute of Magna Charta, c. 29, ordains, "that no person shall be disseised of his Freehold, &c. but by judgment of his peers, or according to the law of the land;" which does not only relate to common disseisins, but the King may not otherwise seize into his hands the Freehold of the subject. Wood's Inst. 614. None shall distrain any freeholders to answer for their Freeholds, or any thing touching the same, without the King's writ. Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 22. Nor shall any person be compelled to answer for his Freehold, before any lord of a manor, &c. Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 12; See this Dict. title Liberty.—As to the Freehold qualifications necessary in certain cases, See this Dictionary titles Parliament; Jury, &c. and further for the definition and description of Freehold estates, title Estate.

FREEHOLDERS, Such as hold any freehold estate. By the ancient laws of Scotland, Freeholders were called milites; and freehold, in this kingdom, hath been sometimes taken in opposition to villanage, it being lands in the hands of the gentry and better sort of tenants, by certain tenure, who were always Freeholders, contrary to what was in the possession of the inferior people, held at the will of the lord. Lambard.

FREEMAN, Liber homo.] One distinguished from a slave; that is born or made free; and these have divers privileges beyond others. In the distinction of a Freeman from a vassal under the feudal policy, liber homo was commonly opposed to vassus or vassallus; the former, denoting an allodial proprietor; the latter, one who held of a superior. See title Tenures.

The title of a Freeman is also given to any one, admitted to the freedom of a corporate town, or of any other corporate body, consisting, among other members, of those called Freemen. See titles Corporation; London.

FREIGHT, Fr. fret.] The money paid for carriage of goods by sea; or in a larger sense, it is taken for the cargo, or burthen of the ship. Ships are freighted either by the ton, or by the great; and in respect of time, the freight is agreed for, at so much per month, or at a certain sum for the whole voyage. If a ship freighted by the great, happens to be cast away, the freight is lost; but if a merchant agrees by the ton, or at so much for every piece of commodities, and by any accident the ship is cast away, if part of the goods is saved, it is said she ought to be answered her freight pro rata: and when a ship is insured and such a misfortune happens, the insured commonly transfers those goods over to the assurers, towards a satisfaction of what they make good. Lex Mercat.

If freight is agreed for the lading and unlading of cattle at such a port, and some die before the ship arrives there, the whole freight shall be paid for the living and the dead; but if the agreement be for transporting them, Freight shall be only paid for the living: it is the same of slaves. Ibid. 85. The lading of a ship in construction of law, is bound for the Freight; the Freight being in point of payment preferred before any other debts to which the goods so laden are liable, though such debts as to time were precedent to the Freight. Hil. 17 Car. 2. B. R.

FREIGHT.

B. R. If part of the lading be. on ship-board, and through some misfortune happening to the merchant, he has not his full lading aboard at the time agreed, the master shall have Freight by way of damage, for the time those goods were on board; and is at his liberty to contract with another, lest he lose his season and voyage: and where a ship is not ready to take in, or the merchant not ready to lade his goods aboard, the parties are not only so at liberty, but the person damnified may bring an action against the other and recover his damages sustained. Leg. Rhod.

If the freighter of a ship shall lade on board prohibited goods, or unlawful merchandize, whereby the ship is detained, or the voyage impeded; he shall answer the Freight agreed for. Styl. 220. And when goods are laden aboard, and the ship hath broke ground, the merchant may not afterwards unlade them; for if he then changes his mind, and resolves not to venture, but will unlade again, by the marine law the Freight becomes due. If a master Freights out his ship, and afterward secretly takes in goods unknown to the first laders, by the law marine he forfeits his Freight: and if a master of a ship shall put into any other port than what the ship was freighted to, he shall answer damages to the merchant; unless he is forced in by storm, enemies, or pirates; and in that case he is obliged to sail to the port agreed, at his own expence. Leg. Ocean. A ship is freighted so much out and so much in, there shall be no Freight due till the voyage is performed; so that if the ship be cast away, coming home, the Freight outwards, as well as inwards, are both gone. 1 Brownl. 21. Mal. 98, and see Ch. Ca. 75: 2 Vau. 212: and also Dougl. 541, 2, that where a ship perishes, the whole Freight from the last place or time of payment will be lost. And if no freight be payable till the return, if the ship is lost returning, the freight outwards shall be lost as well as that inwards. Mal. 98.

The goods carried, generally, are a security for the Freight, and the master is not bound to deliver them without payment. Dougl. 104.

If a freighted ship becomes disabled without the master's fault, he has his option to re fit, (if possible, in convenient time) or to hire another ship to carry the goods. If the merchant will not agree to this, the master is entitled to the full freight for the whole voyage. 2 Burr. 882: 1 Bl. Rep. 190.

The master shall have his Freight tho' the goods are spoiled, if the merchant takes them.—The merchant may abandon all, tho' all are not lost: but he cannot abandon some and take some: if he abandon all, he is excused Freight.—If the ship is disabled or taken when part of the voyage is performed, without fault of the Master, he shall be paid a rateable proportion of the Freight. 2 Burr. 882.—See further this Dict. titles Charter-party: Insurance: Merchants.

FRESH DISSEISIN, Frisca disseisina, from Fr. fraîs recens; & disseisin, possessionem ejicere.] That disseisin, which a man might formerly seek to defeat of himself, and by his own power, without resorting to the King, or the law; as where it was not above fifteen days old, or of some other short continuance. Britton, c. 5. Of this, Bracton writes at large, concluding it to be arbitrary. Lib. 4. c. 5. See title Disseisin.

FRESH FINE, A fine levied within a year past: it is mentioned in the statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. st. 2. c. 45.

FRESH FORCE, frisca fortia.] Is a force newly done in any city, borough, &c. And if a person be disseised of any lands or tenements within such a city, or borough, he who hath a right to the land, by the usage and custom of the said city, &c. may bring his assise, or bill of fresh force, within forty days after the force committed; and recover the lands. F. N. B. 7: Old Nat. Br. 4. This remedy may be also had where any man is dispossessed of any lands, after the death of his ancestor, to whom he is heir; or after the death of tenant for life, or in tail, in dower, &c. within forty days after the title accrued; and in a bill of fresh force, the plaintiff or demandant shall make protestation to sue in the nature of what writ he will, as assise of mortdancester, of novel disseisin, intrevisin, &c. New Nat. Br. 15. The assise or bill of fresh force is sued out without any writ from the Chancery; but after the forty days, there is to be a writ out of Chancery, directed to the mavor, &c. But this writ is obsolete since Ejectments have come in use for recovering the possession of lands, &c.

FRESH SUIT, or Pursuit, Recens insecutio.] Such a present and earnest following of an offender, where a robbery is committed, as never ceases from the time of the offence done or discovered, until he be apprehended. Vide post. And the benefit of such pursuit of a felon is, that the party pursuing shall have his goods restored to him; which otherwise are forfeited to the King. Statut. Pl. Cor. lib. 3. cap. 10. & 12. When an offender is thus apprehended, and indicted, upon which he is convicted, the party robbed shall have restitution of his goods; and though the party robbed do not apprehend the thief presently, but that it be some time after the robbery, if the party did what in him lay to take the offender; and notwithstanding in such case he happen to be apprehended by some other person, it shall be adjudged fresh pursuit. Terrus de Ley. It has been anciently holden, that to make a fresh suit, the party ought to make hue and cry with all convenient speed, and to have taken the offender himself, &c. But at this day, if the party hath been guilty of no gross negligence, but hath used all reasonable care in inquiring after, pursuing, and apprehending the felon, he shall be allowed to have made sufficient fresh suit. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. Also, it is said, that the judging of fresh suit is in the discretion of the court, though it ought to be found by the jury; and the justices may, if they think fit, award restitution without making any inquisition concerning the same. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. See title Hue and Cry.

Where a gaoler immediately pursues a felon, or other prisoner, escaping from prison, it is fresh suit, to excuse the gaoler: and if a lord follow his disseisin into another's ground, on its being driven off the premises, this is called fresh suit; so where a tenant pursues his cattle, that escape or stray into another man's lands, &c. Fresh suit may FRIENDLY SOCIETIES. Associations, chiefly among the most indolent of the lower and middling class of tradesmen for the purpose of affording each other relief in sickness, and their widows and children some assistance at their death. These have been thought worthy the protection of the Legislature, to prevent frauds which had arisen from the irregular principles on which many of them were conducted.

of persons may form themselves into a society, and raise among themselves a fund for their mutual benefit, and make rules and impose fines.—The rules, declaring the purpose for which such societies are established, are to be exhibited to the Quarter Sessions, who may annul or confirm them; in which latter case they are to be signed by the clerk of the peace. No rule thus confirmed to be altered but at a general meeting of the Society, and subject to the controul of the Sessions.—Societies may appoint officers, who are to give securities for their trust, the treasurer or trustees by bond, to the Clerk of the peace and other persons to the treasurer or trustees; which bonds are exempted from the stamp duty. Committee of not less than 11 members may be appointed their powers to be declared by the Society and subject to their controul.—Treasurers and trustees are enabled to lay out subscriptions in fur-

Thus have the Legislature, with that humanity which peculiarly distinguishes the British constitution, taken under their care all those men who, tho' generally useful and industrious, are but too apt not to be sufficiently conscious of the benefits conferred upon them, by a form of Government in which Charity is enforced and regarded as a ruling principle.

PRIER OUSEVANT, fratres observants.] A branch of the Franciscan friars, who were monks as well as the Conventuals and Capuchins. They were called Observants because they are not combined together in any cloister, convent, or corporation, as the Conventuals are; but tied themselves to observe the rules of their order more

FUEL. If any person shall sell billet-wood or faggots for fuel under the assise, &c. on presentment thereof upon oath by six persons sworn by a justice of peace, the party may be set on the pillory in the next market town, with a faggot, &c. bound to some part of his body. None are to buy fuel but such as will burn it, or retail it to those who do; on pain to forfeit the treble value; also no person may alter any mark or assise of fuel, on the like forfeiture. Stats. 7 E. 6. c. 7: 43 Eliz. c. 14, and see title Billet Wood.

FUER, Fr. Fuir, Lat. Fugere.] Flight is used substantively though it be a verb; and is two-fold, fuer in fact, or in facto, when a man doth apparently and corporally fly; and fuer in ley, in lege, when being called in the county court he appeareth not, which is flight in the interpretation of the law. *Staundf. FUGACIA. A chase; So fugatio, is hunting, or the privilege to hunt. Blount.

FUGAM FECIT, Is where it is found by inquisition, that a person fled for felony, &c. And if flight and felony be found on an indictment for felony, or before the coroner, where a murder is committed, the offender shall forfeit all his goods, and the issues of his lands, till he is acquitted or pardoned: and it is held, that when one indicted of any capital crime, before justices of Oyer, &c. is acquitted at his trial, but found to have fled, he shall, notwithstanding his acquittal, forfeit his goods: but not the issues of his lands, because by acquittal the land is discharged, and consequently the issues. 3 Inst. 218. The party may in all cases, except that of the coroner's inquest, traverse the finding of a fugam fecit; and the particulars of the goods found to be forfeited, may be always traversed; also whenever the indictment against a man is insufficient, the finding of a fugam fecit will not hurt him. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 47. Making default in appearance on indictment, &c. whereby outlawry is awarded, is a flight in law. See this Dict. titles Exigent: Outlawry: Forfeiture.

FUGITIVES GOODS, Bona Fugitivorum.] The goods of him that flies upon felony, which after the flight lawfully found on record, do belong to the King or Lord of the manor. 5 Rep 103.

FUGITIVES OVER SEA. By two ancient and obsolete, if not expired, statutes 9 E. 3. c. 10: 5 R. 2. st. 2. c. 2, To depart this realm over the sea, without the King's licence, except it were great men and merchants, and the King's soldiers, incurred forfeiture of goods: and masters of ships, &c. carrying such persons beyond sea, forfeited their vessels; also if any searcher of any port, negligently suffered any persons to pass, he should be imprisoned, &c. See titles Aliens: Allegiance; Foreign Service; Treason.

FUGITIO, Pro Fuga — Knighton, Anno 1537.

FULL-AGE. See titles Age; Infant.

FULLUM AQUÆ, A steam or stream of water, such as comes from a mill.

FUMAGE, Fumagium.] Dung for soil, or manuring of land with dung — Chart. R. 2. p. 11. 5 E. 4. And this word has been sometimes used for smoke money, a customary payment for every house that had a chimney. Domesday. See 1 Comm 324; and this Dict. title Taxes.

FUMADOES Pukhards garbaged and salted, then hung in the smoke, and pressed; so called in Spain and Italy, whither they are exported in great abundance. See titles Fish: Navigation Acts.

FUNDITORES, Is used for pioneers, in Pat. 10 Ed 2. m. 1.

FUNDS, See titles National Debt: Stocks: Stock brokers.

FUNERAL CHARGES, As to the payment of these by an executor, See title Executor V. 2.

A person died in debt, and 600*l.* was laid out in his funeral; decreed the same should be a debt, payable out of a trust estate, charged with payment of debts, he being a man of great estate and reputation in his country, and buried there; but had he been buried elsewhere, it seemed his funeral might have been more private, and the court would not have allowed so much. Precc. Ch. 27.

Where a citizen of London devised 700*l.* for mourning, the question was, if it should come out of the whole estate, or out of the legatory part only; it was insisted that as there had been no direction by the will, or if the will had directed, that the expences of the funeral should not exceed such a sum, there the deduction must have been out out of the whole estate. Per cur. Mourning devised by the will, must come out of the legatory part, and not to lessen the orphanage and customary part. 2 Vinn. 240.

Executor is not liable to pay for funeral expences, unless he contracts for it. 12 Mod. 256.

Settlements for separate maintenance of the wife shall never extend to funeral charges; and though she made a will, (according to a power given her) and an executor, and gave several legacies, but there was no residuum for the executor, the husband's estate in the hands of a devisee subject to the payment of debts was made liable to the funeral charges of the wife. 9 Mod. 31.

In strictness no funeral expences are allowable against a creditor, except for the coffin, ringing the bell, parson, clerk, and bearer's fees; but not for pall or ornaments; per Holt. 1 Salk. 296. Ten pounds is enough to be allowed for the funeral of one in debt; per Holt. Baron Powell in his circuit would allow but 11 s. 6 d. as all the necessary charge. Comb. 342. Quere, If 40 s. is not now the usual sum in case of an insolvent? See Salk. 196: Godolph. p. 2. c. 26. § 2.

FURCA ET FOSSA; the gallows and the pit.] In ancient privileges granted by our Kings, it signified a jurisdiction of punishing felons; that is, men by hanging and women with downing. And Sir Edw. Coke, says fissa is taken away, but that furca remains. 3 Inst. 58. and see Skene.

FURCARE AD TASSUM, To pitch corn with a fork in loading a waggon, or in making a rick or mow. Cowel.

FURCAM ET FLAGELLUM, The meanest of all servile tenures, when the bondman was at the disposal of his Lord for life and limb. Placit. Term Mich. 2 Job. Rot. 7.

FURIGELDUM, A mulct paid for theft: by the laws of King Ethelred, it is allowed, that they shall be witnesses qui nunquam furigeldum reddiderunt, i. e. who never were accused of theft.

FURLONG, A quantity of ground containing generally forty poles or perches in length, every pole being sixteen feet and a half; eight of which Furlongs make a mile: it is otherwise the eighth part of an acre of land in quantity. Stat. 34 Ed. 1. st. 5 c. 6. In the former acceptance, the Romans call it Stadium; and in the latter Jugerum. Also the word Furlong has been sometimes used for a piece of land of more or less acres.

FURNAGIUM, See Fornagium.

FURNARIUS, A baker, who keeps an oven; hence furniare signifies to bake or put any thing in the oven. Mat. Paris. anno 1258.

FURR, Furru, from the Fr. Fourer, i. e. Pelliculare] The coat or covering of a beast. The Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13, mentions divers kinds of it, viz. Sables; which are a rich Furr, of colour between black and brown, the skin of a beast called a Sable, of bigness between a pole-cat and an ordinary cat, bred in Russia and Tartary. Lucerns, the skin of a beast of that name, near the size of a wolf, in colour neither red nor brown, but between both, and mingled with black spots; which are bred in Muscovy; and is a very rich Furr. Genets, a beast's skin so called, in bigness between a cat and a weezle, uailed like a cat, and of that nature; and of two kinds, black and grey, the black most precious which hath black spots upon it hardly to be seen; this beast is the product of Spain. Foins, are of fashion like the sable, the top of the Furr is black, and the ground whiteish; bred for the most part in France. Marten is a beast very like the Sable, the skin something coarser, produced in England and Ireland, and all countries not too cold; but the best are in Ireland. Besides these, there are the Fitch or Pole cat; the Calabar, a little beast, in bigness near a Squirrel: Miniver being the bellies of Squirrels; and Shanks, or what is called Budge, &c. all of them Furrs of foreign countries, some whereof make a large branch of their inland traffick.

FURST & FONDONG, Sax.] Time to advise, or to take counsel.—Leg. H. 1. c. 46.

FURIUM, Theft, or robbery of any kind,

FUSTIANS. No persons shall dress fustians with any other instrument than the broad sheers, under the penalty of 20 s. And the master and wardens of the company of Clothworkers in London, &c. have power to search the workmanship of sheermen, as well for fustian, as cloth. Stats. 11 H. 7. c. 27: 39 Elix. c. 13. See this Dict. title Manufactory.

FUSTICK, Wood brought from Barbadoes, Jamaica, &c. used by dyers, mentioned in Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18: See title Navigation-acts.

FYRDERINGA; FYRTHING; FYRDUNG, From Sax. Firaerung, i. e. Expeditionis apparatus.] A going out to war or a military expedition at the King's command; not going upon which, when summoned, was punished by fine at the King's pleasure. Leg. H. 1. c. 10. Blount calls it an expedition; or a fault or trespass for not going upon the same.

GABEL, Gabella, Gablum, Gablagium, in French Gabelle, i. e. Veſigal.] This word hath the ſame ſignification among our ancient writers, as gabelle had formerly in France: it is a tax; but hath been variously uſed; as for a rent, cuſtom, ſervice, &c. And where it was a payment of rent, thoſe who paid it were termed gabellans. Domeſday: Co. Lit. 213. It is by ſome authors diſtinguiſhed from tribute; Gabel being a tax on moveables, Tribute on immoveables. When the word Gabel was formerly mentioned in France without any addition to it, it ſignified the tax on ſalt; though afterwards it was applied to all other taxes.

GABLE END, Gabulum.] The head or extreme part of a houſe or building. Paroch. Antiq. 286.

GABULUS DENARIORUM, Rent paid in money. Selden on Tribes, p. 321.

GAFOLD-GILD, Sax.] The payment of tribute or cuſtom; it ſometimes denotes uſury.

GAFOLD LAND, or GAFUL-LAND, Terra cenſualis] Land liable to taxes; and rented or let for rent. Sax. Diſt.

GAGE, Fr. Lat. Vadium.] A pawn or pledge. Glanv. lib. 10 c. 6. Gage deliverance is where he that hath taken a diſtreſs being ſued, hath not delivered the cattle, &c. that were diſtrained; then he ſhall not only avow the diſtreſs, but gage deliverance, i. e. put in ſurety, or pledges, that he will deliver them. F. N. B. 67, 94. This gage deliverance is had on ſuing out replevins, upon the plaintiff's praying the ſame: and it is ſaid the parties are to be at iſſue, or there is to be a demurrer in law, before gage deliverance is allowed; and if a man claim any property in the goods, or the beaſts are dead in the pound, the party ſhall not gage, &c. Kitch. 145. trained by his beaſts, that gain the land."—In the ſtatute of Magna Charta, c. 14, by Galmage is meant no more than the plough-tackle, or implements of huſbandry, without any reſpect to gain or profit: where it is ſaid of the knight and freeholder, he ſhall be amerced ſalvo emendamento ſuo; the merchant or trader, ſalvo mercandisia ſua; and the villein or countryman, ſalvo gaignagio ſuo. &c. In which caſes it was, that the merchant and huſbandman ſhould not be hindered, to the detriment of the public, or be undone by arbitrary fines; and the villein had his wainage, to the end that the plough might not ſtand ſtill; for which reaſon the huſbandmen at this day are allowed a like privilege by law, that their beaſts of the plough are not, in many caſes, liable to diſtreſs. See title Diſtreſs.

GAMERY, Fr. Gaignerie] Tillage, or the profit ariſing from it, or of the beaſts employed therein. Stat. Weſt. 1. c. 16, 17.

GALEA, A galley, or ſwift ſailing ſhip. Hoved. p. 682, 692.

GAMBEYSON, Gambesonum.] A horſeman's coat uſed in war, which covered the legs: or rather a quilted coat, cento, reſtitutum ex coactilis lana confeſtum, to put under the armour, to make it fit eaſy. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 24.

GAME. Aucupia, from Aucupis, i. e. Acium Captio.] Birds, or prey, got by ſowling and hunting.

GAME-LAWS.

THE GAME-LAWS are A System of positive regulations introduced and confirmed by several statutes: the provisions of which ascertain and establish certain Qualifications of property enabling or allowing persons to kill Game: and imposing Penalties, as well on such qualified persons for irregularities in killing Game, as on unqualified persons for hunting or killing Game at all.

These Laws have been the subject of much discussion; they have been stiled even from the Bench, (See 1 Term Rep. 49,) an oppressive remnant of the ancient arbitrary Forest laws, under which, in darker ages, the killing one of the king's deer was equally penal with murdering one of his Subjects. See this Dict. title Forest, and 4 Comm. c. 33. II. 2. On the other hand the object of them has been well defined to be, the preservation of the several species of these animals which would soon be extirpated by a general liberty: and the prevention of idleness and dissipation in husbandmen, artificers and others of lower rank. 2 Comm. 411. b. 2. c. 27. Though when the learned Commentator states the other purposes of these laws to be the encouragement of agriculture by giving every man an exclusive dominion over his own soil; and the preventing insurrections by disarming the bulk of the people; he seems rather incorrect: as, in the first of these instances, a Freeholder of 99 l. per annum, or a leaseholder of 149 l. whatever may be otherwise his exclusive dominion, has no right to kill Game on his own estate: and the latter motive seems more invidiously stated than is usual with that great and liberal writer; since any person, though unqualified, may keep and use a gun, provided it is not for the purpose of destroying the Game. Andr. 255: Str. 496, 1098: 2 Term Rep. 18.

Our esteemed Commentator also advances a position, "That no man but he who has a Chase or Free-warren by grant from the Crown, or prescription, which supposes one, can justify hunting or sporting upon another man's soil; nor indeed, in thorough strictness of common law, either hunting or sporting at all," even on his own ground. 2 Comm. 416. b. 2. c. 27. In conformity to which notion he considers the qualifications to kill Game as more properly exemptions from the penalties inflicted by statute-law. 4 Comm. 175.

These conclusions he deduces from the two following principles; that the King as ultimate proprietor of all the lands in England has a right to take these beasts ferre nature on the lands of any of his Subjects, and that, being bona vacantia, they are the King's by right of his prerogative: It follows then that he has power to grant these franchises to another, to enable him to do the same; and that no person is therefore, by the Game-law, abridged of any right possessed previously to the making them. The above is the substance of the reasoning of this celebrated writer on this subject; but his premises as well as his conclusion are very strenuously, and apparently successfully, combated by his annotator Mr. Christian, in his notes on the passages above alluded to: in conformity to which we have already stiled the Game laws, "A System of positive regulations by the statute-law of the kingdom."

Having said thus much on this topic, any further considerations on the policy or propriety of these laws, would here be unbecoming; strict they certainly are, and by many deemed severe; a very general statement of them is here inserted, under the following head:

I. The Qualifications to kill Game.

II. Penalties on qualified and unqualified Persons.

III. Of Trespasses in Hunting, &c.

For further matter connected with this title, see this Dict. under the heads, Forest; Chase; Park; Warren; Deer; Fish; Swans; Pigeons; Black Act, and, other apposite titles: and the stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 54, for preservation of the Game in Scotland.

I. 1. THE QUALIFICATIONS for killing Game, to state them as concisely as possible, are, 1; The having a Freehold Estate of 100 l. per ann. 2; A Life-estate or Leasehold for 99 years of 150 l. per annum: 3; Being the son and heir-apparent of an Esquire, or of any person of superior degree: 4; Being the owner or keeper of a forest, park, chase, or warren. 4 Comm. 175. All other persons are termed Unqualified.

The qualification by estate for killing Game in the reign of Richard II. was 40 s. a year; in the reign of James I. it was advanced to 10 l. a year; and after that, in some instances to 40 l. a year; and at last in the reign of Charles II. it was raised to 100 l. a year. Not that the laws became gradually more severe; but as the value of money decreased, the qualification was raised in proportion, the estate continuing nearly the same; for an estate of 40 s. a year in the reign of Richard II. was not much inferior to an estate of 100 l. a year in the reign of Charles II. And the penalty for destroying the Game was even more severe then, than it is now. Those ancient laws relating to the Game are still in force, and are generally enacted so to be by the subsequent statutes; it is therefore necessary, in order to have a thorough knowledge of this matter, to be acquainted with the provisions contained in them.

The first qualification relating to the Game was by stat. 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 13; by which it is enacted that no layman which hath not lands or tenements of 40 s. a year, nor clergyman if he be not advanced to 10 l. a year, shall have or keep any greyhound, hound, nor other dog, to hunt; nor shall use ferrets, hays, nets, hare-pipes, nor cords, nor other engines, for to take, or destroy bares nor conies, nor other Gentlemen's Game, on pain of a year's imprisonment. And see stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30.

The next qualification by estate or degree to kill Game, was by stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. § 3; whereby it is enacted, that every person who shall keep any greyhound for coursing of deer or bare, or setting dog, or net to take pheasants or partridges, (except he be seized, in his own right or the right of his wife, of 10 l. a year estate of inheritance, or 30 l. a year of a lives estate, or goods to the value of 200 l. or be the son of a knight or a lord, or the son and heir-apparent of an esquire,) and be thereof convicted, he shall be committed to gaol for three months; or pay 20 s. to the use of the poor, and become bound with two sureties not to offend again in like manner.

The next qualification relates to deer and conies only, in stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 13; by which it is enacted, that if any person not having hereditaments of 40 l. a year, or not worth in goods 200 l. shall use any gun or bow to kill any deer or conies; or shall keep any buckstall, nets, or coney-dogs (except he have grounds inclosed, and used for the keeping of deer or conies, the increasing of which said conies shall amount to the value of 40 s. a year; or keepers, or warreners in their parks, warrens, or grounds); in such case any person having lands or hereditaments of 100 l. a year in fee, or for life, may take from such person to his own use for ever, such guns, bows, buckballs, nets, and coney dogs.

The next qualification relates to pheasants and partridges only, and is as follows: Every free warrener, lord of a manor, or freeholder seised in his own or his wife's right of 40 l. a year of inheritance, or lives estate of 80 l. or worth in goods 400 l. may take pheasants and partridges (in the day time only) in his own free warren, manor, or freehold, betwixt Michaelmas and Christmas yearly. Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 11. § 7.

The last general qualification by estate or degree to kill Game, and which is now most to be regarded, is in stat. 22 and 23 Car. 2. c. 25, by which, every person not having lands and tenements, or some other estate of interest, in his own or his wife's right, of the clear yearly value of 100 l. per annum;—Or for term of life, or having lease or leases of 99 years, or for any longer term, of the clear yearly value of 150 l. (other than the son and heir apparent of an esquire, or [of] other person of higher degree, and the owners and keepers of forests, parks, chases, or warrens, being stocked with deer or conies for their necessary use, in respect of the said parks, chases, forests, or warrens,) is declared to be a person by the laws of this realm, not allowed to have or keep for himself or any other person, any guns, bows, greyhounds, setting dogs, ferrets, coney dogs, lurchers, hays, nets, lowbels, hare-pipes, gins, snares, or other engines for the taking and killing of Game. § 3.

Every person using any dog, gun, or engine for taking Game (except Game-keepers; see that title;) shall deliver his name and place of abode to the clerk of the peace, and take out an annual certificate or licence on a stamp of three guineas. But these certificates not to authorise unqualified persons to kill Game. Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 50: 31 Geo. 3. c. 21.

One having an estate of 103 l. a year, mortgaged a part of it of the value of 14 l. a year, which being copyhold was surrendered to the mortgagee, who was thereupon admitted tenant, but never entered on the premises, the mortgagor continuing in possession and paying interest. It was held that the mortgagor under these circumstances was not a qualified person. Cald. 230. Burn J. title Game IV.

The stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25, is loosely worded, and the stops are no part of the original statute. It has been determined that the clause relative to qualification by freehold estate, terminates with the words per annum; and that a life estate being of an inferior quality, ought to be coupled with leasehold, whereof 150 l. a year is necessary to constitute a qualification. A clergyman's benefice is a life estate. Lowndes v. Lewis, Cl. Cald. 188.

In the case of Jones v. Smart, after much argument it was decided, that a diploma conferring the degree of Doctor of Physic granted by either of the Universities in Scotland, does not give a qualification to kill Game under stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25; and that an Esquire or other person of higher degree as such is not qualified under that act, though the son of an esquire, or the son of other person of higher degree is qualified. 1 Term Rep. 44. A Doctor of Physic of the English Universities, is not qualified as such. Id. 53.

H. THE PENALTIES, and regulations for recovering them, are so numerous under the various statutes, and sometimes, if not inconsistent, at least not easily reconcilable, that it is scarcely possible to methodize them in the limits prescribed by this work; or to avoid confusion and uncertainty in the recapitulation of them. Several are here enumerated. The exact Student must consult the Statute book and Burn's Justice, title Game: but must be careful not to trust too implicitly to the latter, or to his own interpretation of the former.

It may be observed, as a preliminary provision, that, by stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 19, where any person for any offence against any law in being, at the making of the said act for the better preservation of the Game, shall be liable to pay any pecuniary penalty or sum of money, on conviction before a Justice of the peace, the prosecutor may either proceed to recover the same in such manner, or he may sue for the same [before the end of the second term after the offence committed 26 Geo. 2. c. 2.] by action of debt, or on the case, bill, plaint, or information, in any court of record at Westminster, wherein if he recovers he shall have double costs: provided that the offender shall not be prosecuted both ways; and in case of a second prosecution, he may plead in his defence the former prosecution pending, or the conviction or judgment thereupon had. And by stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 19, whereas a moiety of the penalty by several acts is directed to be applied to the use of the poor of the parish where the offence was committed, by reason whereof inhabitants of the said parish have been disallowed to give evidence; it is enacted, that in order to enable the inhabitants to give evidence, it shall be lawful for any person to sue for the whole of such penalty to his own use, and if he recovers he shall have double costs; such action to be brought within six months after the offence committed.

By stat. 33 H. 8. c. 6, which is now considered as obsolete, if not superseded by subsequent statutes, shooting with a cross-bow, hand-gun or demihake, by a person not having 100 l. a year, incurs a penalty of 10 l. Hand-guns are to be of a yard in length in the stock and gun; and in this old statute a power is given to qualified persons to seize and destroy unlawful guns.

No person shall take pheasants or partridges with engines in another man's ground, without licence, on pain of 10 l. stat. 11 H. 7. c. 17.—If any person shall take or kill any pheasants or partridges, with any net in the night-time, they shall forfeit 20 s. for every pheasant, and 10 s. for every partridge taken; and hunting with spaniels in standing corn, incurs a forfeiture of 40 s. stat. 23 Eliz. c. 10. Those who kill any pheasant, partridge, duck, heron, hare, or other game, are liable to a forfeiture of 20 s. for every fowl and hare; and selling, or buying to sell again, any hare, pheasant, &c. the forfeiture is 10 s. for each hare, or partridge—20 s. for a pheasant—40 s. for a deer. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27.

Killing in the night a hare, partridge, or pheasant, by a person qualified or unqualified. 5 l. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 25.

To kill, take, or destroy; or to use any gun, dog, snare, net, or engine, with intent to kill, &c. any hare, partridge, or other game, in the night; viz. between 7 at night, and 6 in the morning, from October 12 to February 12; and between 9 and 4 from February 12 to October 12; or in the day on Sunday or Christmas day; first offence, from 20*l.* to 10*l.*—second offence, from 30*l.* to 20*l.*—third and other offences, 50*l.*—In case of a third offence, the party shall be bound in a recognizance to be tried at the Sessions, and if the penalty is not paid, may be punished with from twelve to six months' imprisonment: Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 80. The information to be laid within one month. Penalty, half to the informer, and half to the poor.

GAME-LAWS II.

Setling Game: qualified or unqualified, 5*l.* Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 12.—Unqualified person selling or exposing to sale hare, partridge, pheasant, or other Game; 5*l.* or three months' imprisonment. If Game is found in the shop, house or possession of any poulterer, saler, fishmonger, cook, or pastry-cook, not qualified to kill, this shall be deemed as exposing to sale. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 14: 9 Ann. c. 25. § 2: 28 Geo. 2. c. 12.

Higlers, chapmen, carriers, inn keepers, victuallers, &c. having in their custody hare, pheasant, partridge, heath-game, &c. (except sent by some person qualified to kill game) shall forfeit for every hare and fowl 5*l.* to be levied by distress and sale of their goods, being proved by one witness, before a Justice; and for want of distress shall be committed to the house of correction for three months: one moiety of the forfeiture to the informer, and the other to the poor. And if any persons shall drive wild fowls with nets, between the first day of July and the first of September, they shall forfeit 5*s.* for every fowl. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 14: 9 Ann. c. 25. Penalties for killing and destroying game, are recoverable not only before justices of peace by the several statutes; but also by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster; and the plaintiff, if he recovers, shall likewise have double costs. Stat. 8 G. 1. c. 19.

No certiorari shall be allowed to remove any conviction or other proceeding on the stat. 5 Ann. c. 14. into any court at Westminster, unless the party convicted become bound to the party prosecuting with sufficient sureties, in the sum of 50*l.* to pay the prosecutor his costs and charges, &c. after the conviction confirmed, or a procedendo granted. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 14.

Persons convicted of entering warrens, in the night-time, and taking or killing conies there, or aiding or assisting therein, may be punished by transportation, or by whipping, fine or imprisonment. Persons convicted on this act, not liable to be convicted under any former act. This act does not extend to the destroying conies in the day time, on the sea and river banks in the county of Lincoln, &c. No satisfaction to be made for damages occasioned by such last mentioned entry, unless they exceed 1*s.* Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 14.

Killing, carrying, selling, buying, or having in possession, a partridge between February 12, and September 1, or pheasant between February 1, and October 1; by any person qualified or not qualified, 5*l.* Stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 19. Hawking, to catch such game between July 1, and August 31; 40*s.* for hawking, and 20*s.* for each partridge, &c. Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 11 § 2.

Keeping or using grey-hounds, setting dogs, lurchers, hays, or engines to kill or destroy game, by one unqualified, 5*l.* Stat. 5 Ann. c. 14.—Keeping or using the above named, or any other dogs or engines for such purpose 20*s.* or not less than 5*s.* Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. § 2.

Trailing a hare in the snow; by a person qualified or unqualified; 6*s.* Stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 10.—

Three months' imprisonment or 20*s.* fine. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 37.

Using Snares for hares; by one qualified, or unqualified; one month's imprisonment or 10*s.* fine. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. § 6. Destroying Game with engines; 20*s.* for each pheasant, &c. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 37.

A Justice of peace, or Lord of a manor within his manor, may take away Game out of the possession of an unqualified person. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 14. § 4.—Unqualified persons having Game in their possession and not giving an account how they came by it, shall forfeit from 20*s.* to 5*s.* or suffer confinement to hard labour for from one month to ten days. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. § 3.

Persons destroying, buying, or selling Game, informing against others buying, or selling Game, or offering so to do, to be indemnified. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 14. § 3.

Using dogs, guns, or engines for taking or killing Game, without a certificate 20*l.*—Refusing to produce certificate, or to tell his true name and place of abode to a certificated person, 50*l.* Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 50.

By the yearly mutiny-acts, if any Officer or Soldier shall, without leave of the lord of the manor under his hand and seal, destroy any hare, coney, pheasant, partridge, pigeon, or other fowl, poultry, or fish, or his Majesty's Game, and be convicted thereof, on oath of one witness, before one Justice; every officer so offending shall forfeit 5*l.* to the poor, and the commanding officer upon the place, for every offence committed by any soldier under his command, shall forfeit 20*s.* in like manner. And if upon conviction by the justices, and demand made thereof by the constable or overseers of the poor, he shall not in two days pay the said penalties, he shall forfeit his commission. Burn. 7.

By Stat. 4 & 5 W. 3. c. 23. § 10. It is provided, that whereas great mischiefs do ensue by inferior tradesmen, apprentices and other dissolute persons, neglecting their trades and employments, who follow hunting, fishing, and other Game, to the ruin of themselves and damage of their neighbours, therefore if any such person shall presume to hunt, hawk, fish, or fowl (unless in company with the master of such apprentice duly qualified) he shall not only be subject to other penalties (according to the various statutes,) but if he be prosecuted for trespass in coming on any person's lands, and be found guilty, the plaintiff shall not only recover damages against him, but also full costs.

An unqualified person may go out to beat the hedges, bushes, &c. with a qualified person; and to see the Game pursued or destroyed; provided the unqualified person has no gun or other engine with him for the destruction of the Game; without being subject to any penalty. R. v. Newnham. Offt. 178: Burn. 7. tit. Game, IV.

Two persons, using a greyhound together to destroy Game cannot be convicted in separate penalties under stat. 5 Ann. c. 14. § 4; for it is only one offence, and the Magistrate should only convict them in one penalty. 4 Term Rep. 809. So if a man not qualified goes a hunting and kills never so many hares on the same day, it is but one offence, and the statute imposes the penalty for the keeping and using the dogs and engines, and not for the killing the hares. 10 Mod. 26: Com. Rep. 274. and Rose's notes p. 278: Cowp. 646.

In an Action, qui tam, on the Game laws, it is sufficient to say that a person is not qualified generally, without out shewing that he had not 100*l.* a year, or any other estate which makes a qualification. 2 Comm. Rep. 522. But on Convictions it is necessary that all the qualifications should be negatively set out in the information; and it must be averred that the defendant had not the particular qualifications mentioned in the statute 22 & 23 C. 2 c. 25; because it must be made out before the Justice that he had no such qualification as the law requires; and therefore the Justice ought to return that he had no manner of qualification, before he can convict the defendant. See 1 Burr. 148; 2 Lord Raym. 1415; 1 Strat. 665 Dough. 345: But the evidence need not (and indeed how can it?) negative every specific qualification 1 Term Rep. 125.

A person was convicted before a Justice of peace upon the statute, for keeping a gun, not having 100*l.* per annu. and the conviction being removed into B. R. was quashed, for not saying when the defendant had not 100*l.* a year; for it might be he had such estate at the time when he kept the gun, though not at the conviction, and the offence and time ought to be certainly alleged. 3 Mod. 280

To convict an offender there must be an information on oath, and a summons to appear. 2 Barr. B. R. 34, 77, 101. The informer must be sworn, and examined in the presence of the defendant; and it is not sufficient if his deposition previously made is read over in the defendant's presence. 1 Term Rep. 125 Or he may be convicted on his own confession before a Justice Strat. 546. The informer cannot be a witness. Lord Raym. 1545: Andr. 240. These offences, where the justices have summary jurisdiction, are not indictable. Strat. 679.

In an action of debt on stat. 5 Ann. c. 11, for keeping and using a dog to kill the Game, it is necessary to shew what sort of dog it was. 2 Comm. Rep. 373. The word Hound is not sufficiently descriptive, not being mentioned in the statute. 2 Strat. 1126. See Rye's Com. Rep. 577, in n—Keeping a forbidden dog is penal, though he is not used; keeping and using are distinct offences. Strat. 496: Cald. 175.

It seems that an Apothecary is not an inferior tradesman within the stat. 4 & 5 W. 3 c. 23. § 10: though the word Inferior seems applicable rather to the man than to the trade; so that two persons of the same trade may be, one superior, and the other inferior. 2 Wils. 70: Burr. F. tit. Game, IV. A huntsman going out with hounds without his master, is not a dissolute person within the meaning of that act. He may however be a trespasser; but if the damages recovered against him are under 40*s.* he shall not be liable to full costs. 2 Black. Rep. 900.

III ONE GENERAL REMARK on this subject is the most forcible statement of the greatest hardship imposed by the Game laws, and which might probably be remedied without great inconvenience. Though a freeholder of less than 100*l.* a year, &c. is forbidden to kill a partridge, even upon his own estate, yet nobody else (not even the lord of the manor, unless he hath a grant of free warren) can do it without committing a trespass and subjecting himself to an action. 4 Comm. c. 33. II. 2.

If a man starts any Game within his own grounds, and follows it into another's, and kills it there, the property remains in himself. 11 Mod. 75. And this is grounded on reason and natural justice: for the property consists in the possession; which possession commences by the finding it in his own liberty, and is continued by the immediately pursued. And so if a stranger starts Game in one man's chase, or free warren, and hunts it into another's property, the property continues in the owner of the chase, or warren, this property arising from privilege, and not being changed by the act of a mere stranger. Or if a man starts Game on another's private grounds and kills it there, the property belongs to him in whose ground it was killed, because it was also started there, the property arising ratione soli: Lord Raym. 251. Whereas, if, after being started there, it is killed in the grounds of a third person, the property belongs not to the owner of the first ground, because the property is local, not yet to the owner of the second, because it was not started in his soil; but it vests in the person who started and killed it; though guilty of a trespass against both the owners. Lord Raym. ibid. 7 Mod. 18.—See 2 Comm. 419, and Mr. Christiani's note thereon, in which he observes that these distinctions never could have existed, if the doctrine were true, that all the Game was the property of the king, for in that case the maxim in æquall jure potior est conditio possidentis, must have prevailed. 2 Comm. c. 27. II. ad fin.

The Common Law allows the hunting of foxes, and other ravenous beasts of prey, in the ground of another person; though a man may not dig and break the ground to un-earth them, without licence; if he doth, the owner of the ground may maintain an action of trespass for it. 2 Roll. 538: Cro. Jac. 321. An action was brought against a person for entering another man's warren: the defendant pleaded that there was a pheasant on his land; and his hawk pursued it into the plaintiff's ground; it was resolved that this doth not amount to a sufficient justification, for in this case he can only follow his hawk, and not take the game. Poph. 162. Though it is said to be otherwise where the soil of the plaintiff is not a warren. 2 Roll. Abr. 567. If a man in hunting starts a hare upon his own ground, and follows and kills it on the ground of another, yet still the hare is his own, because of the fresh suit; but if a man starts a hare upon another person's ground, and hunts and kills it there, he is subject to an action. Cro. Car. 553.

If a person hunt upon the ground of another, such other person cannot justify killing of his dogs; as appears by 2 Roll. Abr. 567. But see Cro. Jac. 44. contra 3 Lev. 28.

A person may justify a trespass in following a fox with hounds over the grounds of another, if he do no more than is necessary to kill the fox; because foxes are noxious animals. 1 Term Rep. 334. See Nicholas v. Badger, 2 Ro. Ab. 558. B. p. 2. S. P.

GAME KEEPER] One who has the care of keeping and preserving the Game, being appointed thereto by a Lord of a Manor.

Game keepers were first introduced by the present qualification act, 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25; and various regulations have been made respecting them by subsequent statutes. As all these statutes seem to be in force in some degree at present, and as it is a subject interesting to Sportsmen, a short abstract of them according to their chronology, will be acceptable.

The stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25, authorises Lords of manors of the degree of an esquire to appoint under their hands and seals Game keepers, who shall have power within the manor to seize guns, dogs, nets, and engines, kept by unqualified persons, to destroy Game; and by a warrant from a Justice of peace, to search in the day time the houses of unqualified persons upon good ground of suspicion, and to ~~leave~~ for the use of the Lord, or to destroy guns, dogs, nets, &c. kept for the destruction of the Game. This statute does not limit the number of those to whom such power and authority may be given. The stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. § 4. gives to these Game-keepers the same protection in resisting offenders in the night-time, as the law affords to the keepers of antient parks. The stat. 5 Ann. c. 14. § 4. permits any lord or lady of a manor to empower Game-keepers to kill Game within the manor.

The stat. 9 Ann. c. 25. § 1. enacts, that no lord or lady of a manor shall appoint more than one Game-keeper within one manor, with the power of killing Game; and his name shall be entered with the clerk of the peace. And by stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 11. the Game-keeper who shall have the power to kill Game within the manor, shall either be a qualified person, a domestic servant, or a person employed to kill for the sole use of the Lord or Lady of the manor. The only use of appointing a qualified person a Game-keeper is, to give him the power, as before described, of seizing the dogs, guns, and other engines of unqualified persons within the manor.

By stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 11. no Lord of a manor is to make or appoint any person to be a Game-keeper, with power to take and kill hare, pheasant, partridge, or other game, unless such person be qualified by law so to do; or be truly and properly a servant to the said lord, or immediately employed to take and kill game for the sole use or benefit of the said lord: and any person not qualified, or not employed as aforesaid, who, under pretence of any qualification from any lord of a manor, shall take or kill any hare, &c. or keep or use any dogs to kill and destroy the game, shall for every such offence incur such forfeitures, pains, and penalties, as are inflicted by the stat. 5 Ann. c. 14: 9 Ann. c. 25. By this last statute, no game-keeper can qualify any person to kill game, or to keep guns, dogs, &c.

Where game-keepers ought to have a Justice of peace's warrant, to take away guns from unqualified persons, see Comb. 305.

By stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 50; 31 Geo. 3. c. 21. every depuration of a Game-keeper shall be entered with the Clerk of the peace of the county in which the manor lies; and for a certificate thereof shall be charged one guinea.

By stat. 5 Ann. c. 14. § 4. any Justice of peace may within his county take either game, or dogs, and instruments kept for the destruction of Game, from unqualified persons, and retain them for his own use. But it has been decided, that though Game-keepers are liable to the same penalties as unqualified persons for killing Game out of their respective manors, yet no one is justified in taking from them their dogs and guns when they are out of the limits of their lord's manor, even in pursuit of Game. 2 Wils. 387.

No Lord of a manor can grant to another person the power of appointing a Game-keeper, without a conveyance also of the manor. A right to a manor cannot be tried in a penal action under the Game laws. 5 Term Rep. 19. This power of appointing a Game-keeper has, no doubt, introduced the very erroneous notion, that a lord of a manor has a peculiar right to the Game, superior to that of any other land owner within the manor, although the estate of such land owner be a sufficient qualification to entitle him to follow the amusements of a sportsman.

GAMING.

Game-keepers we have seen, were first created by stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25; by the preceding qualification-act, 7 Jac. 1. c. 11. their power was given to the constable and headborough; and it seems that it was transferred to the persons appointed by Lords of manors for no other reason than because it was probable they were the most interested in the preservation of the Game, by having in general the most extensive range to pursue it in, viz. upon their own estates and wastes. And the stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. appears to be the first instance, either in our statutes, reports, or law treatises in which Lords of manors are distinguished from their land-owners with regard to the Game. 2 Comm. 418. n.

APPOINTMENT OF a GAME-KEEPER, by a LORD of a MANOR.

TO all People to whom these presents shall come, I. T. lord A. lord of the manor of B. in the county of, &c. have (by virtue of several acts of parliament lately made for the preservation of the Game) nominated, authorized and appointed, and by these presents do nominate, authorize and appoint E. D. of, &c. to be my Gamekeeper of and within my manor, &c. in the county of, &c. aforesaid, with full power and authority, according to the direction of the statutes in that case made, to kill Game for my use; and to take and seize all such guns, greyhounds, setting dogs, and other dogs, ferrets, trammels, bays, or other nets, snares or engines, for the taking, killing or destroying of hares, pheasants, partridges, or other Game, as within the said manor, of, &c. and the precincts thereof, shall be kept or used by any person or persons not legally qualified to do the same; and farther to act and do all and every thing and things which belong to the office of a Game-keeper, pursuant to the direction of the said acts of parliament, during my will and pleasure; for which this shall be his sufficient warrant. Given under my hand and seal, &c.

GAMING, or GAMES UNLAWFUL, Ludi rarii. The playing at tables, dice, cards, &c. King Ed. III. in the 39th year of his reign, enjoined the exercise of shooting and of artillery, and forbade the casting of the bar, the hand and foot-balls, cock-fighting, & alios ludos vana; but no effect followed from it, till they were some of them forbidden by act of parliament. 11 Rep. 87. In the 28th of Hen. VIII. proclamation was made against all unlawful games, and commissions awarded into all the counties of England, for the execution thereof; so that in all places, tables, dice, cards and bowls, were taken and burnt. Stow's Annals, 527. At length by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 9. the Legislature intertered; and Justices of peace, and head officers in corporations, are by that act empowered to enter houses suspected of unlawful Games; and to arrest and imprison the gamblers, till they give security not to play for the future: also the persons keeping unlawful gaming-houses, may be committed by a justice, until they find sureties not to keep such houses; who shall forfeit 40*s.* and the Gamblers 6*s.* 8*d.* a time: and if the King license the keeping of Gaming-houses, it is against law, and void.—The same statute also provides that, no artificer, apprentice, labourer, or servant, shall play at any tables, tennis, dice, cards, bowls, &c. out of Christmas time, on pain of 20*s.* for every offence; and at Christmas, they are to play in their master's house, or presence: but any nobleman, or gentleman, having 100*l.* per an-man estate, may license his servants or family to play within the precincts of his house, or garden, at cards, dice, tables, or other games, as well among themselves, as others repairing thither. This act is to be proclaimed once a quarter, in every market-town by the respective mayors, &c. and at every assizes and sessions.

A person was convicted of keeping a cock pit; and the Court resolved it to be an unlawful Game, within the stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 9. and fined him 40*s.* a day. Keb. 510. But if the guests in an inn or tavern, call for a pair of dice, or tables, and for their recreation play with them, or if any neighbours play at bowls, for their recreation, or the like, these are not within the statute; if the house be not kept for Gaming, nor the Gaming be for lucre or gain. Dalt. c. 46.

By the stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 7. if any person, of what degree soever, shall by fraud, deceit, or unlawful device, in playing at cards, dice, tables, bowls, cock-fighting, horse-races, foot-races, or other Games or pastimes, or bearing a share in the stakes, betting, &c. win any money, or valuable thing, he shall forfeit treble the value, one moiety to the crown, and the other to the party grieved, prosecution being in six months; in default whereof, the last mentioned moiety is to go to such other person as will prosecute within one year, &c. And by the said statute if any person shall play at cards, &c. other than for ready money; or bet, and shall lose above 100*l.* at one time or meeting, upon tick (i. e. tickets) he shall not be bound to make it good, but the contract or tick and security shall be void, and the winner shall forfeit treble the value.

By the stat. 9 Ann. cap. 14. all notes, bills, bonds, judgments, mortgages, or other securities, given for money won by playing at cards, dice, tables, tennis, bowls, or other Games; or by betting on the sides of such as play at any of those Games, or for repayment of any money knowingly lent for such gaming or betting, shall be void: And where lands are granted by such mortgages or securities, they shall go to the next person, who ought to have the same as if the grantor were actually dead, and the grants had been made to the person so intitled after the death of the person so incumbering the same. If any person playing at cards, dice, or other Game, or betting, shall lose the value of 10*l.* at one time, to one or more persons, and shall pay the money, he may recover the money lost by action of debt, within three months afterwards; and if the loser do not sue, any other person may do it, and recover the same, and treble the value with costs, one moiety to the prosecutor, and the other to the poor: And the person prosecuted shall answer upon oath, on preferring a bill to discover what sums he hath won.—Persons by fraud or ill practice, in playing at cards, dice, or by bearing a share in the stakes, &c. or by betting, winning any sum above 10*l.* shall forfeit five times the value of the thing won, and suffer such infamy and corporal punishment, as in cases of wilful perjury, being convicted thereof on indictment or information; and the penalty shall be recovered by action, by such person as will sue for the same. And if any one shall assault and beat, or challenge to fight any other person, on account of money won by gaming, upon conviction thereof, he shall forfeit all his goods and suffer imprisonment for two years. Also by this statute, any two or more Justices of peace, may cause such persons to be brought before them as they suspect to have no visible estate, &c. to maintain them; and if they do not make, it appear that the principal part of their expenses is paid by other means than gaming, the Justices shall require securities for their good behaviour for a twelvemonth; and in default of such security, commit them to prison until they find it: And playing or betting during the time, to the value of 20*s.* shall be deemed a breach of good behaviour, and a forfeiture of their recognisances.

Where it shall be proved before any Justice of peace, that any person hath used unlawful games contrary to Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 9. the Justice may commit such offender to prison, till he enter into a recognisance that he shall not from thenceforth, at any time to come, play at any unlawful Game. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 28.—For better preventing excessive and deceitful gaming; the ace of hearts, faron, basset, and hazard, are declared to be lotteries by cards or dice; and persons setting up these games are liable to the penalty of 200*l.* And every person who shall be an adventurer, or play or stake therein, forfeits 50*l.* Likewise the sale of any house, plate, &c. in the way of lottery by cards, &c. is adjudged void, and the things to be forfeited to any person that will sue for the same. 12 Geo. 2. cap. 28.—The game of passage, and all other games with one or more dice, or any thing in that nature, having figures or numbers thereon, (back-gammon and games now played with those tables only excepted) shall be deemed games or lotteries by dice, within the stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 28. And such as keep any office or table for the said game, &c. or play thereat, are subject to the penalties in that act. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 19.

Playing at, or keeping any house or place for playing at the game of roulette, otherwise roly-poly, or any other game with cards or dice already prohibited, incurs the penalties in Stat. 12 Geo. 2. cap. 28. Persons losing 10*l.* and paying the same, may sue the winner, and recover the same with costs: And on a bill in equity the court may decree the same to be paid. The persons who have jurisdiction to determine informations on the statutes against gaming, may summon witnesses, who, on refusing to appear and give evidence, shall forfeit 50*l.* No privilege of parliament shall be allowed on prosecutions for keeping a Gaming-house. Persons losing or winning 10*l.* at one time, or 20*l.* in 24 hours, may be indicted and fined five times the value to be paid to the poor. Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 34.

By stat. 30 Geo. 1. c. 74. If any person licensed to sell liquors shall knowingly suffer any gaming in their house or grounds, with cards, dice, draughts, shuffle boards, Mississippi, or Billiard tables, scittles, or ninepins, by any Journeyman, labourers, servants, or apprentices, he shall forfeit 40*s.* for the first, and 10*l.* for every subsequent offence; three-fourths to the poor, and one-fourth to the informer.—Any journeyman, &c. so gaming, shall forfeit from 20*s.* to 5*s.*—No certiorari to be granted; but appeal given to the next Sessions; and persons punished by this act, not to be punished by any other law.

See the stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. against unlicensed houses for musick, dancing, &c. the keeper of which, shall forfeit 100*l.* and further this Dict. title Barony h. 12: Play-houses; and 1 Salk. 341, 5: 5 Mod. 13: Mod. Ca. 125.

From the above statutes and the several determinations in the books, it may be observed, that at common law, the playing at cards, dice, &c. when practised innocently, and as a recreation, was not unlawful. 2 Vent. 175. But common gaming-houses were always considered as nuisances in the eye of the law. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 6: and as the practice was found to encourage idleness and debauchery, the stat. 33 H. 8. c. 9. was passed to restrain it among the inferior sort of people. And on this statute Noy had a writ to remove brothel-houses as common nuisances. 3 Kebl. 465. Gentlemen were however still left free to pursue their pleasure in this way, until the stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 7; the preamble of which states the inconveniences to be remedied as arising from the immoderate use of Gaming. The provisions of this statute however were soon found to be insufficient; and the stat. 9 Ann. c. 14. was made for the more effectually suppressing this pernicious vice. The subsequent statutes, already enumerated above, superadded further penalties to restrain this fashionable crime which may Shew, says Blackstone, that our laws against Gaming are not so deficient, as ourselves and our magistrates in putting those laws in execution. 4 Comm. 173.

Betting on horse-races is within the general words of the stat. 9 Ann. c. 14. (other Game whatsoever.) 2 Stra. 1159: 2 Wils. 303. See Black. Rep. 706 and this Dict. tit. Horse-races.—So is Cricket. 1 Wils. part 1, p. 220 So is a foot-race: and a foot-man running against time is a foot-race: but to bring it within the statute, it must appear that a person was engaged in such Game, and a wager was laid on his side. 2 Wils. 36.—But on a wager between two persons on the lives of their two fathers, the winner has been allowed to maintain an action. Burr. 2803.

Where two persons played at all fours for two guineas a game, from Monday evening to Tuesday evening, without any interruption, except for an hour or two at dinner, the plaintiff lost fourteen guineas, for which he brought his action on stat. 9 Ann. c. 14. and this was held to be one sitting—One time in the act means one stake or bet; and is distinguished from one sitting, which means a course of play where the company never parts though the party may not be actually gaming the whole time. 2 Black. Rep. 1226.

On a conviction for Gaming under stat. 9 Ann. c. 14. the judgment is only that the defendant is convicted: and the Court cannot set a fine of five times the value, but a new action must be brought upon that judgment for the forfeiture. 2 Stra. 1048.

The statutes against Gaming have rendered it now less frequently necessary to resort to Courts of Equity, which appear to have often interposed, prior to the stat. 16 Car. 2. for the purpose of restraining the winner from proceeding at law against the loser upon the security which he had obtained for the money won. See 14 Vin. Ab. 8 pl. 1, 5. 2 Eq. Ab. 184: Chan. Rep. 47.

It is observable that the stat. 16 Car. 2. declares that the contract for money lost at play, and all securities given for it shall be utterly void; but the stat. 9 Ann. confines itself to the securities for money won or lent at play.—Upon which it has been determined that though both the security and the contract are void as to money won at play, only the security is void as to money lent at play: and that the contract remains, and the lender may maintain his action for it. 2 Burr. 1077: 2 Stra. 1249.

The statutes having declared the security void, a bill of exchange given for money won at play, cannot be recovered upon, even by an indorsee for valuable consideration, and without notice, the original vice of the consideration affecting the security, even in the hands of an innocent and bona fide holder. 2 Stra. 1155: Dougl. 636, 736. And it seems that if money be paid on such security, it may be recovered back: for payment under a void security cannot be supported: nor does the limitation of three months, (within which time the loser of money actually paid at the time it is lost must bring his action to recover it back,) extend to payments on account of such void securities. Ambl. 269.

GAOL AND GAOLER.

GAOLA, Fr. Geole, i. e. Caveola, a cage for birds; used metaphorically for a prison.] A strong place or house for keeping of debtors, &c. and wherein a man is restrained of his liberty to answer an offence done against the laws: Every County hath two gaols, one for Debtors, which may be any house where the Sheriff pleases; the other for the peace and matters of the crown, which is the County Gaol.

I. Of Erecting and Repairing Gaols.

II. To what Place, and at whose Charge, Offenders are to be committed; and how they are to be healed and regulated.

III. Of the Offence of breaking Gaol.

I. GAOLS are of such universal concern to the Public, that none can be erected by any less authority than an act of parliament. 2 Inst. 705 All prisons and gaols belong to the King, although the Subject may have the custody or keeping of them. 2 Inst. 100, 589. It is said, that none can claim a prison as a franchise, unless they have also a gaol-delivery; and that therefore the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, though they have the custody of the Gatehouse prison, yet as they have no gaol-delivery, must send a kalendar of the prisoners to Newgate. 1 Salk. 343: 7 Mod. 31.

By stat. 14 Ed. 3. cap. 10, it is enacted, that the Sheriffs shall have the custody of the Gaols as before, and shall put in under-keepers for whom they will answer. This statute is confirmed by stat. 19 H. 7. cap. 10.

Although divers lords of liberties have the custody of prisons, and some in fee, yet the prison itself is the King's, pro bono publico; and therefore it is to be repaired at the common charge. 2 Inst. 589

The Justices, or the greater number of them within the limits of their commission, upon presentment of the Grand Jury at the assizes (or sessions; stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 13;) of the insufficiency or inconvenience of the County gaol may contract with any person for the building, finishing or repairing the same. Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 19. § 1, 2. The expence thereof to be paid by the Treasurer out of the general county rates, stat. 12 Geo. 2. § 29. But this, (by said Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3.) not to extend to gaols held by inheritance, nor to charge any persons in any town town or liberty, which have common gaols for felons, and commissioners of assize or gaol-delivery, with any assent to the making the common gaol of the shire.

By stat. 24 Geo. 3. s. 2. c. 54, the Justices, at their general quarter sessions, or the major part of them, not being less than seven, on presentment made by the Grand jury, of the insufficiency, inconveniency, or want of repair of the gaol, may contract for the building, repairing, or enlarging the same: or for erecting any new gaol upon any site within two miles from that of the old gaol; and in that case for the selling the old gaol, and the site thereof, and the materials and land belonging thereto. In certain cases also Justices may build a new gaol in any part of the county; which is always to be divided into separate apartments with divers conveniences for the benefit of the health and morals of the prisoners, which are enforced by stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 46.

II. Justices of peace may not commit felons, and other criminals to the counters in London, or other prisons, but the common gaols, for legally they cannot imprison any where but in the common gaol. Co. Lit. 9, 119. But the house of correction, and the counters of the sheriffs of London, are the common prisons for offenders for the breach of the peace, &c.

By stat. 5 H. 4. cap. 10, it is enacted, "That none shall be imprisoned by any justice of the peace, but only in the common gaol, saving to lords and others, who have gaols, their franchise in this case."—This statute is only declaratory of the common law. 2 Inst. 43.

But the court of King's Bench may commit to any prison in the kingdom which they shall think most proper, and the offender so committed or condemned to imprisonment cannot be removed or bailed by any other court. Mon 666 pl. 913; 1 Sid. 145. See stat. 31 C. 2. c. 2. § 12.

And as prisoners ought to be committed at first to the proper prison, so ought they not to be removed from thence, except in some special cases. To which purpose, by the said stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. sect. 9, it is enacted, "That if any Subject of this realm shall be committed to any prison, or in custody of any officer, for any criminal or supposed criminal matter, he shall not be removed into the custody of any other; unless it be by a habeas corpus, or other legal writ; or where the prisoner is delivered to the constable, &c. to be carried to some common gaol; or where any person is sent by order of any judge of assize, or justice of the peace, to any common work-house, or house of correction; or where the prisoner is removed from one prison to another within the same county, in order to a trial or discharge by due course of law; or in case of sudden fire or infection, or other necessity; upon pain that he who makes out, signs, or countersigns, or obeys, or executes such warrant, shall forfeit to the party grieved one hundred pounds for the first offence, two hundred pounds for the second, &c." See stat. 19 Car. 2. cap. 4, for empowering justices of the peace to remove prisoners in case of infection.

By stat. 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 10, All murderers and felons shall be imprisoned in the common gaol, and the sheriffs shall have the keeping of the gaol.

Offenders committed to prison, are to bear the charges of their conveying to gaol; or, on refusal, their goods shall be sold for that purpose, by virtue of a justice of peace's warrant; and if they have no goods, a tax is to be made by constables, &c. on the inhabitants of the parish where the offenders were apprehended. Stat. 3 Jac.

1. cap. 10. And by stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 3, The expence of conveying poor offenders to gaol, or the house of correction, shall be paid by the treasurer of the county, except in Middlesex.

For the Relief of Prisoners in gaols, justices of peace in sessions have power to tax every parish in the county, not exceeding 6s. 8d. per week, leviable by constables, and distributed by collectors, &c. 14 Eliz. cap. 5. See also stat. 12 C. 2. c. 29. And by stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 46, the Justices in sessions may order such sums as they shall think necessary to be paid out of the county-rate towards assisting such prisoners as are not able to work, or being able, cannot procure employment sufficient to maintain themselves in food and raiment, and not otherwise provided for by law.

Various provisions have been, from time to time, made for the relief of poor prisoners, and setting them to work. By stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 20, It is enacted, "That all sheriffs, gaolers, &c. shall permit their prisoners to send for necessary food where they please; nor demand any greater fee for their commitment or discharge, than what is allowable." Also it is thereby directed, that an inquiry be made into all charities given for the benefit of poor prisoners.

By stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 67, Every gaoler is, on forfeiture (of 50l. if a county gaoler, and 20l. if another;) to deliver in at the Misbehaviour sessions yearly, a certificate stating how far the provisions made by various statutes for the benefit of prisoners, are observed in his gaol.—The following are the statutes to be particularized in such Certificate:

"The stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 20, enacts, that felons and debtors shall be kept separate.—Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 40, enacts, That no gaoler shall sell, lend, use, give away, or suffer any spirituous liquors within any gaol; and that a copy of the clauses prohibiting thereof shall be hung up in the gaol.—Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28, enacts, The clerk of the peace shall cause a list of the fees payable by debtors, and the rules and orders for the government of gaols and prisons, to be hung up in the court where the assizes or sessions are held, and send another copy to the gaoler, who shall cause the same to be hung up in a conspicuous part of the gaol.—Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 58, enacts that clergymen may be provided to officiate in gaols.—Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 20, enacts that persons acquitted, or discharged on proclamation for want of prosecution shall be discharged immediately in open court and without fee.—Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 59, enacts that the walls and ceilings of cells in gaols shall be scraped and white-washed, at least once a year: that the cells shall be kept clean and supplied with fresh air by ventilators, &c.—that there shall be two rooms set apart, for the sick—that a warm and cold bath or bathing tubs shall be provided—that a Surgeon or Apothecary shall be appointed with a salary—that this act shall be hung up in the gaol." And by stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 45, Prisoners discharged may, on application, be conveyed to their settlement by a vagrant pais, See title Vagrant.

Thus humane have the Legislature continually shewn themselves, in repeatedly interfering for the health and comfort of those who are considered generally as the mere out-casts of Society; to employ them also in useful industry, and thus turn their minds to good from evil, has been another attempt no less praise-worthy than the former.

GAOL. III.

The Justices in general sessions may provide a convenient stock of materials for setting poor prisoners to work, to be paid for by the treasurer out of the general county-rate; and may pay and provide fit persons to oversee and set such prisoners on work; and make the orders needful as to regulating the accounts, for punishing neglects and abuses, and for bestowing the profits of their labour for the relief of the prisoners. Stats. 19 C. 2. c. 4. § 1: 12 Geo. 2. c. 29: 31 Geo. 3. c. 46.

As to other matters relative to the ease, or to prevent the oppression, of Prisoners, see this Dict. title Habeas Corpus: Transportation: Arrest: and Burn's f. tit. Gaol.

III. The offence of Prison-breaking by the common law, was no less than felony; and this whether the party were committed in a criminal, or civil case, or whether he were actually within the walls of the prison, or only in the stocks, or in the custody of any person who had lawfully arrested him, or whether he were in the King's prison, or one belonging to a lord, or franchise. 2 Inst. 589: Staundf. P. C. 31: Cro. Car. 210.

But now, by the statute 1 Ed. 2. stat. 2. de frangentibus prisonam, "None from henceforth that breaketh prison shall have judgment of life, or member, for breaking of prison only, except the cause for which he was taken and imprisoned did require such judgment, if he had been convicted thereupon according to the law and custom of the realm; albeit in times past it hath been used otherwise." So that to break prison and escape, when one is lawfully committed for any treason or felony, remains still felony, as at the common law: and to break prison, (whether it be the county gaol, the stocks, or other usual place of security,) when lawfully confined upon any other inferior charge is still punishable as a high misdemeanor by fine and imprisonment. 4 Comm. c. 10: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 18.

Any place whatsoever, wherein a person under a lawful arrest for a supposed capital offence is restrained from his liberty, whether in the stocks or street, or in the common gaol, or the house of a constable, or private person, or the prison of the Ordinary, is a prison within the statute. 2 Inst. 589: Dyer. 99. pl. 60: Crom. 38: Cro. Car. 210: Hale's P. C. 107.

There must be an actual breaking, for the words felonice fregit prisonam, which are necessary in every indictment for this offence, cannot be satisfied without some actual force or violence; and therefore if the prisoner, without the use of any violent means, go out of the prison doors, which he finds open by the negligence or consent of the gaoler, or if he escape through a breach made by others without his privity, he is guilty of a misdemeanor only, and not of felony. 2 Inst. 589: Hale's P. C. 108: Staundf. P. C. 31.

Nor will the breaking of prison, which is necessitated by any accident, happening without any default of the prisoner, as where the prison is fired by lightning, or otherwise, without his privity, and he breaks out to save his life, come within the statute. Plowd. 136: 2 Inst. 590: Hale's P. C. 108. Nor is it felony to break a prison, unless the prisoner escape. Keilw. 87. a.

If the imprisonment be for any offence made capital by a subsequent statute, the breach of prison is as much within the act of 1 Ed. 2. stat. 2, as if the offence had always been felony; but if the offence, for which a man is committed, were but a trespass at the time when he breaks the prison, and afterwards become felony by a subsequent matter; as where one committed for having dangerously wounded a man, who afterwards dies, breaks the prison before he dies, the felon of law, (which to many purposes makes the offence a felony ab initio;) shall not be carried so far as to make the prison-breach also a felony, which, at the time when it was committed, was but a misdemeanor. Hale's P. C. 108: 2 Inst. 591: Plowd. 258.

It seems the better opinion, that if the offence, for which the party was committed, be in truth but a trespass, the breaking of the prison in the mittimus, will not make the breaking of the gaol amount to felony; and that on the other side, if the offence were in truth a capital one, the calling it a trespass in the mittimus will not bring it within the statute; for the cause of imprisonment is what the statute regards; and that is the offence, which can neither be lessened, nor increased by a mistake in the mittimus. But for this, see 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 18.

The offence of breaking prison is but felony, whatsoever the crime were for which the party was committed, unless his intent were to favour the escape of others who were committed for treason, for that will make him a principal in the treason. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 18.

The felony of breach of prison is within clergy, though the offence for which the party was committed be excluded clergy. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 612.

He that breaks prison may be proceeded against for such crime before he be convicted of the crime for which he is committed, because the breach of prison is a distinct independent offence; but the sheriff's return of a breach of prison is not a sufficient ground to arraign a man, without an indictment. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 18.

It is not sufficient to indict a man generally, for having feloniously broken prison; but the case must be set forth specially, that it may appear he was lawfully in prison, and for a capital offence. Hale's P. C. 109: 2 Inst. 591.

If A. arrest B. for suspicion and carry him to the common gaol, and there deliver him; if he breaks prison and be indicted on it, there must be the following averments in the indictment: that there was a felony done, and that A. having probable cause to suspect B. had arrested and committed him, and that he broke the prison; all which must be proved on the trial. But where a felon is taken by capias and committed, and breaks prison, there needs no such averment, &c. because all appears by matter of record. 2 Inst. 590: Hal. Hist. P. C. 10.

For further matter relative to Gaols and Prisoners, see this Dict. titles Arrest: Commitment: Debtor: Escape: Execution: False Imprisonment: Insolvent: Marshalsea: 2 Hawk. P. C. and the title (Gaoler) immediately following.

GAOLER. The master of a prison; one that hath the custody of the place where prisoners are kept. Sheriffs must make such gaolers for which they will answer. But if there is a default in the gaoler, action lies against him for an escape, &c. 2 Inst. 592. In common cases, the sheriff, or gaoler, is chargeable at the discretion of the party; though the sheriff is most usually charged. He who hath the custody of the gaol wrongfully, or of right, shall be charged with the escape of prisoners; and if he that hath the actual possession be not sufficient, his superior shall answer. 2 Hawk. P. C.

It is said that for his own security a gaoler may hamper a felon with irons to prevent his escape. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 601: Dalt. c. 170: and that a gaoler is no way punishable for keeping even a debtor in irons. 2 Hawk. P. C.

But

But it has been observed that this proceeding, even in the case of a felon, (much more in that of a debtor,) can only be intended where the officer has just reason to fear an escape; as where the prisoner is unruly, or makes any attempt to that purpose; but otherwise notwithstanding the too common practice of gaolers, it seems altogether unwarrantable, and contrary to the mildness and humanity of the laws of England, by which gaolers are forbidden to put their prisoners to any pain or torment: and Lord Coke, 2 Inst. 381, is express, that by the common law it might not be done. 1 H. H. 601. And if the gaoler keep the prisoner more strictly than he ought of right, whereof the prisoner dieth, this is felony in the gaoler by the common law. And this is the cause that if a prisoner die in gaol the coroner ought to sit upon him: and if the death was owing to cruel and oppressive usage on the part of the gaoler, or any officer of his, it will be deemed wilful murder in the person guilty of such excess. 3 Inst. 91: Fest. 321, 2. But if a criminal endeavouring to break the gaol, assault his gaoler, he may be lawfully killed by him in the affray. 1 Hawk. P. C.: 1 H. H. 496. See ante Gaol III. and this Dict. title Escape: Murder.

A person in execution in the King's Bench prison was put in irons by the Marshal: and the Court ordered the Marshal to keep his prisoner according to law: and in this case they said the gaoler might justify putting him in irons if he feared an escape; or if the prisoner was unruly. 7 Mod. 52. In the second year of Geo. II, Sir William Rich being laid in irons in the Fleet prison, had his irons taken off by order of the House of Commons; who thereupon began an inquiry into the conduct of Gaolers, which produced some of the wholesome laws mentioned hereafter, and under title Gaol.

By Stat. 14 Ed. 3. cap. 10, "If any keeper of a prison, or under-keeper, by too great excess, of imprisonment, and by pain, make any prisoner that he hath in his ward to become an appellant against his will, he is guilty of felony." See title Accessory.

By Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 10, It is enacted, that the Sheriffs and gaolers shall receive, and safely keep in prison, from henceforth such thieves and felons, by the delivery of the constables and townships, without taking any thing for the receipt; and the justices to deliver the gaol, shall have power to hear their complaints, that will complain against the Sheriffs and Gaolers in such case, and moreover to punish the Sheriffs and Gaolers, if they be found guilty.

By Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 3, The Sheriff and every other person, having authority or power of keeping of gaol, or of prisoners for felony, shall certify the names of all prisoners in his custody to the justices of gaol-delivery.

If any person assault a gaoler, for keeping a prisoner in safe custody, he may be fined and imprisoned. 1 Hawk. P. C. Where a Gaol is broken by thieves, the Gaoler is answerable; not if it be broken by enemies. 3 Inst. 52.

It seems clearly agreed, that a Gaoler by suffering voluntary escapes, by abusing his prisoners, by extorting unreasonable fees from them, or by detaining them in gaol, after they have been legally discharged, and paid their just fees, forfeits his office; for that in the grant of every office it is implied; that the grantee execute it faithfully and diligently. Co. Lit. 233: 9 Co. 5: 3 Mod. 143.

By Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27, The Marshal of the King's Bench, the Warden of the Fleet taking any reward for prisoners' escape, shall forfeit 500*l.* and shall and be rendered for ever after incapable of executing any such office.

It hath been resolved, that a forfeiture by a Gaoler who hath but a particular interest, as of him who hath custody of a gaol for life, or years, does not affect him in remainder, or reversion, who hath the inheritance, but that upon such forfeiture his title shall accrue, and not go to the King. Poph. 119: 2 Lev. 71: Raym. 216: 3 Lev. 288.

By Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27, It is enacted, That the office of Marshal of the King's Bench, and Warden of the Fleet, shall be executed by those who have the inheritance of the said prisons, or their deputies, &c. and the profits of their office may be sequestered on motion to the Court of B. R. to satisfy a judgment had against them for escape.

By Stat. 3 Geo. 1. cap. 15, None shall purchase the office of Gaoler, or any other office pertaining to the high sheriff, under pain of 500*l.*

By Stat. 24 Geo. 3. A. 2. c. 54, a Gaoler shall not directly or indirectly sell liquors to the prisoners, or keep, or be concerned in, or benefited by any tap-house, tap-room, tap, or license for that purpose, on pain of 10*l.* for each offence: The Justices in sessions may make allowance to Gaolers in lieu of profits formerly derived to them from the sale of liquors.

By Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 46. § 8, Gaolers are, on the first day of every assizes to make a return of the size and condition of Gaols, the number of prisoners, &c. therein. See further title Gaol.

GAOL DELIVERY. The administration of justice being originally in the crown, in former times our Kings in person rode through the realm once in seven years, to judge of and determine crimes and offences; afterwards Justices in eyre were appointed; and since Justices of Assize and gaol delivery, &c. A commission of a gaol delivery is a patent in nature of a letter from the King to certain persons, appointing them his justices, or two, or three, of them, and authorizing them to deliver his gaol, at such a place, of the prisoners in it; for which purpose, it commands them to meet at such a place, at the time they themselves shall appoint; and informs them that for the same purpose the king hath commanded his sheriff of the same county to bring all the prisoners of the gaol, and their attachments before them, at the day appointed. Crompt. Jurisd. 125: 4 Inst. 168.

By Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 3, Those that have the custody of gaols must certify the names of all the prisoners to the justices of gaol-delivery in order to their trial or discharge, on pain of 5*l.*

Justices of gaol-delivery are empowered by the Common law, to proceed upon indictments of felony, trespass, &c. and to order execution or reprieve: And they have power to discharge such prisoners, as upon their trials shall be acquitted; also all such against whom, upon proclamation made, no evidence appears to indict them; which Justices of oyer and terminer, &c. may not do. 2 Hawk. P. C. But these justices have nothing to do with any person not in custody of the prison, except in some special cases; as if some of the accomplices to a felony be in such prison, prison, and some of them out of it, the justices may receive an appeal against those who are out of the prison, as well as those who are in it; which appeal, after the trial of such prisoners, shall be removed into B. R. and process issue from thence against the rest. Fitz. Coron. 77: S. P. C. 64. Such justices have no more to do with one let to mainprise, than if he were at large; for such person cannot be said to be a prisoner, since it is not in the power of his sureties to detain him in their custody: And where any person is bailed there he is in the custody of his sureties, and they may detain him where they please. 2 H. P. C. 25. Though per Holt, Ch. J. If a person be let to bail, yet he is in law in prison, and his bail are his keepers; and therefore the justices of gaol delivery may take an indictment against him, as well as if he was actually in gaol. And they may take indictments not only of felony, but also of high treason, if the offenders are in prison, and try and give judgment upon them, like unto commissioners of oyer and terminer; though it has been formerly held otherwise. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 35. Justices of gaol delivery may punish those who unduly bail prisoners; as being guilty of a negligent escape, S. P. C. 77: 25 Ed. 3. 39. They are also to punish sheriffs and gaolers, refusing to take felons into their custody from constables, &c. Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 10; and have authority to punish many particular offences by statute.

The granting a new commission of gaol delivery, or of the peace, in a town corporate, shall not avoid the former commission. 2 & 3 Pb. & Mar. c. 18. Justices of gaol delivery may act in their counties. 12 Geo. 2. c. 27.—See titles Affise: Circuits: Judges: Justices.

To GARNISH, To warn; to garnish the heir, signifies in law to warn the heir. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 3.

GARNISHMENT, Fr. Garnement, from Garnir, i. e. instruere.] In a legal sense intends a warning given to one for his appearance, for the information of the Court and explaining a cause. For example; one is sued for the detinue of certain writings delivered; and the defendant alledging that they were delivered to him by the plaintiff, and another person, upon condition, prays that the other person may be warned to plead with the plaintiff, whether the condition be performed or not; in this petition he is said to pray Garnishment; which may be interpreted either a warning of that other, or a furnishing the court with all parties to the action, whereby it may thoroughly determine the cause; and until he appears and joins, the defendant is as it were out of the court. Crompt. Juris. 211: F. N. B. 106. A writ of scire facias is to go forth against the other person to appear and plead with the plaintiff; and when he comes and thus pleads, it is called enterpleader: If the garnishes be returned scire feci, and make default, judgment will be had to recover the writings, and for their delivery, against the defendant; and if the Garnishee appears and pleads, if the plaintiff recovers, he shall have damages. Rast. 213: 1 Brownl. 147.

Garnishment is generally used for a warning; as garnisher le court is to warn the court; and reasonable Garnishment, is where a person hath reasonable warning. Kitch. 6. In the Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 3, we read, upon a Garnishment or two nibils returned, &c. And further, some contracts are naked, sans garnement, and some furnished, &c.—See title Interpleader.

GARNISHEE; Such third person or party in whose hands money is attached within the liberties of the city of London, by process out of the sheriff's court; so called, because he hath had Garnishment or warning, not to pay the money to the defendant, but to appear and answer to the plaintiff creditor's suit. Vide Attachment Foreign.

GARNISTURE, A furnishing or providing. Pat. 17 Ed. 3. Vide Garnestura.

GARSUMMUNE, Gersuma, or Gersoma, A Fine or amercement. Domesday: Selm. Gloss.

GARTER, Garterium, Fr. Jartier, i. e. Periscelis, Fascia poplitaria.] Signifies in divers statutes, and elsewhere a special garter, being the ensign of a noble order of knights, instituted by King Ed. III. anno Dom. 1344, called Knights of the Garter: It is also taken for the principal King at arms, among our English heralds, attending upon the Knights thereof; created by King Hen. V.

The first dignity after that of nobility, is that of a Knight of the Order of Saint George, or of the Garter. Indeed many Sovereign Princes have been proud of the order.

GART

order, and considered themselves as highly honoured by our Sovereign's conferring it on them. See titles Knights: Precedency.

GARTH, A little back-side or close in the North of England; being an ancient British word; gardd in that language signifying garden, and pronounced and writ garth; also a dam or wear, &c.

GARTHMAN. As there are fishgarths or weirs for catching of fish, so there are Garthmen; for by statute 17 R. 2. c. 9, it is ordained, that no fisher nor Garthman shall use any nets or engines to destroy the fry of fish, &c. This word is supposed to be derived from the Scottish gart, which signifieth enforced, or compelled; the fish being forced by the wear to pass in at a loop where they are taken.

GASTALDUS, A governor of the country, whose office was only temporary, and who had jurisdiction over the common people. Blount.

GATE, At the end of the names of places, signifies a way or path, from the Sax. geat, i. e. porta, the custody of the gates of the city of London, is granted to the Lord Mayor, &c. by Chart. King Hen. 4. See London.

GAVEL, Sax. gafel.] Tribute, toll, custom or yearly revenue; of which we had in old time several kinds. See title Gabel.

GAVELET, gaveletum.] An ancient and special kind of cessavit used in Kent, where the custom of gavel kind continues, whereby a tenant, if he with-holds his rents and services due to the lord, shall forfeit his land: it was intended where no distress could be found on the premises, so that the lord might seize the land itself in the nature of a distress, and keep it a year and a day; within which time, if the tenant came and paid his rent, he was admitted to his tenement to hold it as before; but if not, the lord might enter and enjoy the same. The lord was to seek by the award of his court, from three weeks to three weeks, to find some distress upon the land or tenement, until the fourth court; and if in that time he could find none, at the fourth court it was awarded that the tenement should be seized as a distress, and kept in the lord's hands a year and a day without manuring; and if the tenant did not in that time redeem it, by paying the rent and making amends to the lord, the lord having pronounced his process by witnesses at the next county court, was awarded by his court to enter and manure the tenement as his own; and if the tenant would afterwards have it again, he was to make agreement with the lord. Fitz. Cess. 60: Terms de Ley.

Gaveletum is as much as to say to cease, or to let to pay the rent; and consuetudo de gavelet was not a rent or service, but a rent or service with-held, denied or detained, causing the forfeiture of the tenement. Dist.

The word gavelet in its original signification imported rent; but it means also a process for the recovery of rent peculiar to Kent, and London.—The gavelet thus prevailing by the custom of Kent may be used whether there is a sufficient distress on the land or not; but is restricted to gavelkind tenure. Robins. on Gavelk. 243. To London this writ was given for rent-service generally by Stat. 10 E. 2; which is therefore called the statute of Gavelet. But by the words of the statute this latter gavelet only lies where the lord cannot obtain payment by distress. See Spelm voc. Gaveletum; Wright's Ten. 197.

GAVELKIND.

This remedy of gavelet as well as that of cessavit is now fallen wholly into disuse; nor, whilst they continued in use, were they applicable, except where the tenure was in fee. Booth on Real Act. 133. See 1 Inst. 142. n. 2. and this Dict. titles Cessavit: Distress: Tenure.

GAVELET IN LONDON, breve de gaveleto in London, pro redditu ibidem, quia tenementa fuerunt indistinguishibilia.] The writ used in the hustings of London; where the parties, tenant and demandant, appear by seire facia; to shew cause why the one should not have his tenement again on payment of his rent, or the other recover the lands, on default thereof.

GAVELGELD, Payment of tribute or toll. Mon. Ang. tom 3.

GAVELKIND.

A Tenure or Custom, annexed and belonging to lands in Kent, whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons; or the land of the brother among all the brethren, if he have no issue of his own. Lit. 210. See title Tenures III. 12.

All the lands in England, it is said were of the nature of Gavelkind before the year 1066, and descended to all the issue equally; but after the Conquest (as it is called), when knight-service was introduced, the descent was restrained to the eldest son for the preservation of the tenure. Lamb. 167: 3 Salk. 129. Except in Kent, for the supposed reason of which see Blount in v. Gavelkind, who relates the story of the Kentish men surrounding Will. I. with a moving wood of boughs, and thus obtaining a confirmation of their ancient rights.

In the reign of Hen. VI. there were not above thirty or forty persons in all Kent that held by any other tenure than this of Gavelkind; which was afterwards altered upon the petition of divers Kentish gentlemen, in much of the land of that county, so as to be descendible to the eldest son, according to the course of the Common-law, by the Stat. 31 H. 8. cap. 3. Though the custom to devise Gavelkind land, and the other qualities and customs remain. Co. Lit. 140. By the Stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. cap. 26. all Gavelkind lands in Wales were made descendible to the heir, according to the Common-law; whereby it appears, that the tenure of Gavelkind was likewise in that Principality.

Blackstone relies on the nature of tenure in Gavelkind as a pregnant proof that tenure in free socage was a remnant of Saxon Liberty. It is universally known what struggles the Kentish men made to preserve their ancient liberties, and the success with which those struggles were attended. And as it is principally here that we meet with the custom of Gavelkind, we may fairly conclude that this was a part of those liberties; agreeable to Mr. Selden's opinion that Gavelkind, before the Norman Conquest was the general custom of the realm.—The distinguishing properties of this tenure are various. Some of the principal are; that the tenant is of sufficient age to alien his estate, by feoffment, at the age of fifteen.—That the estate does not escheat in case of an attainer and execution for felony.—That in most places the tenant had power of devising lands by will before the statute for that purpose was made. Fitz. N. B. 198: Cro. Car. 501.—The descent of the lands, as above-stated; which was indeed anciently the most usual course of descent all over England. Glanvil, l. 7. c. 3. though in particular cases particular customs prevailed.

These.

These among other properties distinguished this tenure in a more remarkable manner; and yet it is said to be only a species of a socage tenure, modified by the custom of the country; the lands, being holden by suit of court and fealty, which is a service in its nature certain. Wright 211. See this Dict. title Tenures III. 12. Wherefore by a charter of King John, Hubert Arch-bishop of Canterbury was authorized to exchange the Gavel-kind tenures holden of the See of Canterbury into tenures by Knight's service: and by the above mentioned statute of 31 Hen. 8. c. 3. for disgavelling lands in Kent, they are directed to be descendible, for the future, like other lands which were never holden by service of socage. Now the immunities which the tenants in Gavelkind enjoyed were such as cannot be conceived should be conferred on mere plowmen and peasants: from all which the learned Commentator conceives it to be sufficiently clear that tenures in free socage are in general of a nobler original than is assigned by Littleton, or after him by the bulk of common lawyers. 2 comm. 84, 5. c. 6.

A father having Gavelkind lands, had three sons, one of whom died in the life-time of his father, leaving issue a daughter; and it was held that the daughter shall inherit the part of her father jure representationis, and yet she is not within the words of the custom of dividing the land between the heirs male, for she is the daughter of a male and heir by representation. 1 Salk. 243. The heir at the age of fifteen years, it is said, may give and sell his lands in Gavelkind, and shall inherit. Co. Lit. 111. The custom of Gavelkind, is not altered, though a fine be levied of the lands at Common-law; because it is a custom that runs with the land. 6 E. 6.

Land in Gavelkind was devised to the husband and wife for life, remainder to the next heir male of their bodies, &c. They had three sons, and it was adjudged that the eldest son should not have the whole. Dyer 133. A donee in tail, of Gavelkind lands had issue four sons; and it was held, that all should inherit: but if a lease for life is made of Gavelkind, remainder to the right heirs of A. B. who hath issue four sons, in this case the eldest son shall inherit the remainder, because, in case of purchase, there can be but one right heir. 1 Rp. 102. If Gavelkind lands come to the crown, and are regranted to hold in capite, &c. the land shall descend to all the heirs male as Gavelkind. Nelf. Abr. 895.

A wife shall be endowed of Gavelkind land, of a moiety of the land whereof her husband died seised, during her widowhood. Co. Lit. 111. And it has been adjudged, that the widow cannot have election to demand her thirds or dower at Common-law, so as to avoid the custom, by which she shall lose her dower, if she marry a second husband. Moor 260. But see 1 Leon. 62. See title Dower.

The husband shall be tenant by the curtesy of half the Gavelkind lands of the wife, during the time he continues unmarried, without having any issue by his wife; but if he marry, he shall forfeit his tenancy by the curtesy. Co. Lit. 111. If the husband had issue by his wife, and she die, he shall be tenant by the curtesy of the whole land; and though he marry, he shall not forfeit his tenancy. Mich. 21 Car. B. R.: 1 Lil. Abr. 649.

It was formerly supposed that although a father was attainted of treason or felony, the heir of Gavelkind land should inherit, for the custom, as said, was, 'the father to the bough and the son to the plough.' Doct. & Stud. c. 10. But, it has been held, that, in matters of treason, which strike at the foundations of policy and government, even Gavelkind lands are forfeitable, and always were. See title Forfeiture.

A rent in fee granted out of Gavelkind land, shall descend in Gavelkind to all the heirs male, as the lands would have done; it being of the same nature with the land itself. 2 Lev. 138: 1 Mod. 97.

All lands in Kent shall be taken to be Gavelkind, except those which are disgavelled by particular statutes. 1 Mod. 98. If lands are alleged to be in Kent, it shall be intended that they are Gavelkind; if the contrary doth not appear. 2 Sid. 153. By Hale Ch. J. Gavelkind law, is the law of Kent, and is never pleaded, but presumed; and it has been held, that the superior courts may take notice of Gavelkind generally without pleading: though not of the special custom of devising it, which ought to be pleaded specially. 1 Mod. 98: Cro. Car. 465: Lutw. 236, 754.

The Gavelkind descent of lands in Ireland was an incident to the custom of Tanistry: and as such fell to the ground with its Principal, in consequence of a solemn judgment against the latter in a case Ann. 5 Jac. 1. See Dav. Rep. 28. But in the reign of Queen Ann the policy of weakening the Roman-Catholic interest in Ireland was the cause of an Irish statute to make the lands of Papists descendible according to the gavelkind custom unless the heir conformed within a limited time. See Rob. on Gavelk. c. 17. However now by an Irish statute of the present reign (17 & 18 Geo. 3. c. 49.) the descent of the lands of Papists is again reduced to the course of the Common law. 1 Infl. 176. n. 1.

GAVELMAN, A tenant liable to tribute.—Somner of Gavelkind, pag. 33. And hence Gavelkind has been thought to be land in its nature taxable. Flount. See Tenures III. 12.

GAVELMED, The duty or work of mowing grass, or cutting of meadow land, required by the lord from his customary tenants; Consecutio falcandi quæ vocatur gavelmed. Somn.

GAVELCESTER, Sax. Sextarius Vestigalis.] A certain measure of rent-ale: and among the articles to be charged on the stewards and bailiffs of the manors belonging to the church of Canterbury in Kent, according to which they were to be accountable, this of old was one; de gavelceller cujuslibet braci ni braciati infra libertatem maneriorum, viz. unam lagenam & dimidiam cervise. This duty elsewhere occurs under the name of tolsester; in lieu whereof the Abbot of Abingdon was wont of custom to receive the penny mentioned by Selden in his Dissertation annexed to Fleta, cap. 8. Nor does it differ from what is called wak-gavel in the Glossary at the end of Hen. 1. Law's Sax. Dict.

GAVELWERK, Sax.] Was either manu opera, by the hands and person of the tenant, or carropera, by his carts or carriages. Philips of Purvey.

GAUGEIUM, A gauge or gauging, done by the gauger; and the true English gauge is mentioned, in Rot. Parl. 32 Ed. 1.

GAUGER,

GAUGER, Gaugator, Fr. gauchir, i. e. in gyrum torquere.] An officer appointed by the King, to examine all tuns, pipes, hogheads, barrels and terces of wine, oil, honey, &c. and to give them a mark of allowance, as containing lawful measure, before they are sold in any place: and because his mark is a circle made with an iron instrument for that purpose, it seems to have its name from thence. Of this officer and his office, there are many statutes; as by Stat. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 8, all wines, &c. imported, are to be gauged by the King's gaugers, or their deputies. By Stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 5, Selling wine before gauged, incurs forfeiture of the value. And by Stat. 23 Hen. 6. cap. 15, the gaugage-penny is to be paid gaugers, on gauging wines. The Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 8, ordained, that beer, &c. imported, shall be gauged by the Master and Wardens of the Coopers' company. See Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 4.

The wardens of the Coopers, shall attend to gauge vessels upon request, 23 Hen. 8. c. 4. Gaugers may take samples not exceeding half a pint, 32 Geo. 2. c. 29. See titles Brewers: Excise.

GEASPECIA. In a charter of the privileges of Newcastle upon Tyne, renewed anno 30 Eliz. we find sturgiones, porpicias, (i. e. porpoises) delphinor, geaspecia, viz. grampeis, &c.

GEBURSCIP, Geburfsipa] Neighbourhood or adjoining district. Leg. Edw. Confess. cap. 1.

GEBURUS, A country inhabitant of the same geburscip, or village; from the Sax. gebure, a carl ploughman, or farmer. Cowel.

GELD, Geldum, Mulctā; compensatio delicti & pretium rei] Hence, in our ancient laws, wergeld or werreild was used for the value or price of a man slain; and orfgeld of a beast: likewise money or tribute; for it is said, Et sint quieti de geldis, danegeldis, borngeldis, blodwita, &c. Chart. Rich. 2. Priorat. de H. in Devon. Pat. 5 E. 4. Angeld is the single value of a thing, twigeld, double value, &c.

GELDABLE, Geldabilis.] That is liable to pay tax or tribute. Camden, dividing huffok into three parts, calls the first geldable, because subject to taxes; from which the other two parts were exempt, as being ecclesiæ donate. The word is mentioned in the Stat. 27 Hen. 8. cap. 26. But in an old MS. it is expounded to be that land, or lordship, which is sub distributione curæ vicariorum. 2 Inst. 701.

GEMOTE, Sax. i. e. conventus] An assembly. Leg. Edw. Conf. cap. 35. See Alderman: Ealdorman: Folk mote: Mote: Wittena gemote: Parliament.

GENEATH, Villanus; Regis Geneath, is the King's villain. LL. Ince, MS. cap. 19.

GENERAL ISSUE, Is a plea to the fact of Not Guilty, in criminal cases, in order to trial by the country, or by peers, &c. H. P. C. 254. In civil suits, there are various pleas, which are general issues, according to the species of the action, as in Trespass, Not Guilty, in Case on promises, non assumpsit, &c. See title Pleading.

GENERATIO. When an old abbey, or religious house had spread itself into many colonies, or depending cells, that issue or offspring of the mother monastery was called generatio; quasi proles & joboles matris domus. Annal. Waverl. 1232.

GENERALE. The single commons, or ordinary provision of the religious, were termed generale, as their general allowance, distinguished from their pretantiae, or pittances; which on extraordinary occasions were thrown in as over commons. These are described amongst other customs. Curialar. Glasfow. MS. fol. 10.

GENERALS OF ORDERS, Chiefs of the several orders of monks, friars, and other religious societies.

GENEVA, A strong water or spirit. Vide Distillers.

GENTLEMAN, Generosus.] Is compounded of two languages, from the Fr. gentil, i. e. honestus, vel honesto loco natus, and the Sax. mun, a man; thus meaning a man well born. The Italians call those gentil homini whom we style gentleman; the French (ben quantum mutati!) under their ancient monarchy, distinguished such by the name of gentilhomme: and the Spaniards keep up to the meaning of the word, calling him hidalgo or hijo d' alga, who is the son of a man of account; so that gentlemen are such whom their blood or race doth make known.

Under the denomination of Gentlemen, are comprised all above yeomen: whereby noblemen are truly called Gentlemen. Smith de Rep. Ang. lib. 1. cc. 20, 21. A Gentleman is generally defined to be one, who, without any title, bears a coat of arms, or whose ancestors have been freemen; and by the coat that a Gentleman giveth, he is known to be, or not to be, descended from those of his name, that lived many hundred years since.

There is said to be a Gentleman by office, and in reputation, as well as those that are born such. 2 Inst. 668. And we read that J. Kingston was made a Gentleman by King Rich. II. Pat. 13 R. 2. par. 1. Gentilis homo for a Gentleman, was adjudged a good addition. Hil. 27 Ed. 3. But the addition of esquire, or Gentleman, was rare before 1 Hen. 5. tho' that of knight is very ancient. 2 Inst. 595, 667. See title Precedency.

GENTLEWOMAN, generosa.] Is a good addition for the estate and degree of a woman, as generosa is for that of a man; and if a Gentlewoman be named spinster in any original writ, appeal, &c. it hath been held that she may abate and quash the same. 2 Inst. 668. But it seems that Spinster is in general, a good addition, for an unmarried woman, as single woman is, for one who being unmarried hath had a bastard.

GENTILITY, gentilitas] Is lost by attainder of treason, or felony, by which persons become base and ignoble, &c.

GENU. A generation.—Succesit Ethelbaldo Offa quinta Genu. Malmf. lib. 1. c. 4.

GENUS, Lat.] The general flock, extraction, &c. as the word office in law is the genus, or general; but the Sheriff, &c. is the species of it, or particular. 2 Litt. Abr. 528.

Genus, among metaphysicians and logicians, denotes a number of beings, which agree in certain general properties, common to them all; so that a genus is, in fact, only an abstract idea, expressed by some general name or term; or rather a general name or term, to signify what is called an abstract idea.

GLWITNESSA, The giving of evidence. Leg. Ethel. cap. 1. apud Brompton.

GIFT, donum, donatio] A conveyance, which passeth either lands or goods. A Gift is of a larger extent than a Grant, being applied to things moveable and immoveable; yet as to things immoveable, when strictly taken, it is applicable only to lands and tenements given in tail; but gifts and grants are said to be alike in nature and often confounded. Wood's Inst. 260.

The conveyance of lands by Gift is properly applied to the creation of an estate-tail, as Feoffment is to that of an estate in fee, and Lease to that of an estate for life or years. It differs in nothing from a feoffment but in the nature of the estate passing by it: for the operative words of conveyance in this case are Do, or De di—I give, or Have given; and Gifts in tail are equally imperfect without livery of seisin as feoffments in fee simple. Lit. § 59. And this is the only distinction that Littleton seems to take when he says, "it is to be understood that there is feoffor and feoffee; donor and donee; lessor and lessee." Litt. § 57; viz. feoffor is applied to a feoffment in fee-simple; donor to a Gift in tail, and lessor to a lease for life or years or at will. In common acceptance Gifts are frequently confounded with Grants. See title Grant. 2 Comm. 316. c. 20.

Gifts or Grants for the transferring of personal property are thus to be distinguished from each other: that Gifts are always gratuitous; Grants are upon some consideration or equivalent: and they may be divided with regard to their subject matter into Gifts or grants of chattels real, and Gifts or grants of chattels personal. Under the former head may be included all leases for years of land, assignments and surrenders of these leases; and all the other methods of conveying an estate less than freehold. See this Dict. titles Deed; Conveyance; Estate. These however very seldom carry the outward appearance of a Gift, however freely bestowed: being usually expressed to be made in consideration of blood, or natural affection; or of 5*s.* or 10*s.* nominally paid to the Grantor: and in case of leases, always reserving a rent, though it be but a pepper corn; any of which considerations will in the eye of the law convert the gift, if executed, into a grant: if not executed, into a contract. 2 Comm. 440 c. 30.

Grants or Gifts of chattels-personal are the act of transferring the right and the possession of them, whereby one man renounces, and another immediately acquires, all title and interest therein: which may be done either in writing or by word of mouth, attested by sufficient evidence, of which the delivery of possession is the strongest and most essential. But this conveyance, when merely voluntary, is somewhat suspicious: and is usually construed to be fraudulent, if creditors or others become sufferers thereby; and particularly, by Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 4. all deeds of gift of goods, made in trust to the use of the donor shall be void, because otherwise persons might be tempted to commit treason or felony without danger of forfeiture: and the creditors of the donor might also be defrauded. And by Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. every grant or gift of chattels as well as lands with an intent to defraud creditors or others, shall be void as against such persons to whom such fraud would be prejudicial, but as against the grantor or giver himself shall stand good and effectual: and all persons, partakers in, or privy to such fraudulent grants, shall forfeit the whole value of the goods, one moiety to the King, and the other to the party grieved; and also on conviction suffer half a year's imprisonment. See 3 Rep. 82: and this Dict. title Fraud.

A true and proper Gift or Grant is always accompanied with delivery of possession, and takes effect immediately: as if A. gives to B. 100*l.* or a flock of sheep, and puts him in possession of them directly, it is then a gift executed in the donee; and it is not in the donor's power to retract it, though he did it without any consideration or recompence; Jenk. 109; unless it be prejudicial to creditors, or the donor were under any legal incapacity, as infancy, coverture, duress, or the like: or if he were drawn in, circumvented, or imposed upon, by false pretences, ebriety, or surprise. But if the Gift does not take effect by delivery of immediate possession, it is then not properly a Gift but a contract; and this a man cannot be compelled to perform, but upon good and sufficient consideration. 2 Comm. 441. c. 30. See this Dict. title Assumpsit: Consideration. Contract.

A Gift may be by deed, in word, or in law: all goods and chattels personal may be given without deed, except in some special cases; and a free Gift is good without a consideration. Perk. 57.

Whenever any Gift shall be made, in satisfaction of a debt, it is proper to make it in a public manner before neighbours, that the goods and chattels be appraised to the full value, and the Gift expressly made in satisfaction of the debt; and that on the Gift, the donee take possession of them, &c. Hob. 230. See title Fraud.

If a man intending to give a jewel to another, say to him, Here I give you my ring with the ruby in it, &c. and with his own hand delivers it to the party, this will be a good gift; notwithstanding the ring bear any other jewel, being delivered by the party himself, to the person to whom given. And if a person give a horse to another, being present, and bid him take the horse, though he call the man by a wrong name, it will be a good Gift; but it would be otherwise, if the horse were delivered for the use of another person, being absent: there a mistake of the name would alter the case. Bac. Max. 87. A Gift must be certain; therefore to give or grant another his horses or cows, that may be spared, will be void; though if one give to A. B. his horse, or his cow, he may take which he will. Bro. Dine 90.

As to Gifts in law, when a man is married to a woman, all her goods and chattels by gift in law become the husband's; but then he is liable for her debts: so if a man is made executor, the law gives him all the goods and chattels of the testator, subject to his debts. 1 Inst. 351. See titles Baron and Feme: Executor.

If a person make a suit of cloaths for another, and put it upon him to use and wear, this will be a gift or grant in law of the apparel made. Co. Lit. 351. This must mean if there was not any employment, and if the taylor, therefore, meant to give the cloaths.

A man by deed did give and grant, bargain and sell, alien, enfeoff and confirm to his daughter certain lands: but no consideration of money was mentioned, nor was the deed enrolled; there was likewise no consideration of natural affection expressed, (other than what was implied implied in naming the grantee his daughter,) and there was no livery indorsed, or any found to have been made; nor was the daughter in possession at the time of the deed made: and in B. R. it was adjudged by the court that the deed was good, and carried the estate to the daughter by way of covenant to stand seised, 3 Mod. 157.

The words give and grant, in deeds of Gift, &c. of things which lie in grant, will amount unto a grant, a feoffment, a Gift, release, confirmation or surrender, at the election of the party, and may be pleaded as a Gift, or grant, release, &c. at his election Co. Lit. 301. And words shall be marshalled so in Gifts and grants, that where they cannot take effect according to the letter, the law will make such construction as that the Gift by possibility may take effect: benigne sunt interpretationes charitatum propter simplicitatem laicorum. Co. Lit. 183. If a person gives or grants land, and does not say in what parish or county it lies; yet if there be any other thing to describe it, as lately belonging to such a person, &c. or other circumstantial matter, it may be averred where the land lieth, and so the Gift be good. B. R. Grant 53; 9 Rep 47. All corporeal and immoveable things that lie in livery, such as manors, messuages, cottages, lands, woods, and the like, may be given and granted in fee, for life, or years at first; and be assignable over after, from man to man in infinitum. 1 Rol. Abr. 44. And where a man gives and grants wood to another on his lands, or 20 s. for it to be received out of the same lands, &c. here the wood passes by the Gift presently, with power to choose to have the money. 1 Rol. Abr. 47. A deed of Gift of lands or goods may be made upon condition; and on a Gift or sale of goods, the delivery of 6 d. or a spoon, &c. is a good seisin of the whole. Wood's Inst. 234. See titles Conveyance; Fraud; Deed; Grant; Estate; Limitation, &c.

GIGMILLS, A kind of fulling mills for fulling and burling of woollen cloth, prohibited by Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 22.

GILD, A fraternity, or company, &c. See Guild.

GILDA MERCATORIA, A mercantile meeting or assembly. If the King grants to a set of men to have gildam mercatoriam, this is alone sufficient to incorporate and establish them for ever. 10 Rep. 30; 1 Ro. Ab. 513. See titles Corporation; Guild.

GILDING METALS. By certain ancient statutes, now obsolete, the gilding any metal but silver, and church ornaments; or silversing any thing except the apparel of peers, &c. and metal for knights' spurs, is liable to forfeiture of ten times the value, and a year's imprisonment. None shall gild rings or other things made of copper or latten, on pain to forfeit 5 l. to the King, and damages to the party deceived. For gilding silver wares, no person may take above 4 s. 8 d. for a pound of troy weight, under penalties. Stats. 5 H. 4. c. 13; 2 H. 5. c. 4; 8 H. 5. c. 3. See titles Gold Lace; Goldsmiths.

GISARMS, or GUI SARMS, An halbert or hand-ax, from the Lat. his arma, because it wounds on both sides. Skene—Spelm. It is mentioned in the statute 13 Ed. 1. c. 6.

GIST OF ACTION, From the Fr. gist, is the cause for which the action lieth; the ground and foundation thereof, without which it is not maintainable. 3 Mod. 305. See title Action.

GLADIOLUM, A little sword or dagger; also a kind of sedge. Mutt. Paris. 1206.

GLADIUS. Jus gladii, is mentioned in our Latin authors, and the Norman laws; it signifies a supreme jurisdiction. Cambd. And it is said that from hence, at the creation of an earl, he is gladius succinctus; to signify that he had a jurisdiction over the county of which he was made earl. See Plas of the Sword.

GLAIRE, Fr.] A sword, lance, or horseman's staff. Gleye was one of the weapons allowed the contending parties in a trial by combat. Orig. Jurist. 79.

GLASS, Certain duties granted on all glass ware, &c. by Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3; which duties were continued for ever by a subsequent act; But were afterwards taken off, by Stat. 10 and 11 W. 3. cap. 18. By Stat. 19 Geo. 2. cap. 12, An excise duty is laid upon glass of 8 d. per pound, upon all crown, plate, and flint glass imported; 2 d. per pound on green glass imported, and 2 s. per dozen on flasks and bottles imported; and on all materials or metal used in making crown, plate or flint glass 9 s. 4 d. per hoghead; and for making common bottles, or green glass 2 s. 4 d. per hoghead; and higher duties by subsequent acts.

GLASS-MEN, Are reckoned amongst wandering rogues and vagabonds, by the old statutes, 39 Eliz. c. 17; 1 Jac. 1. c. 7.

GLAVERA, An hand dart. Blount.

GLEANNING, LEASING OR LESING, From Fr. Glainer, quasi graner; colligere grana—Leuson. Abrislen, ex ahr, spha, & lesen, colligere.—Minshew in v. Glean.] It hath been said, that by the Common law and custom of England, the poor are allowed to enter and glean upon another's ground, after the harvest, without being guilty of trespass; which humane provision seems borrowed from the Mosaic law. 3 Comm. 212, 213; Trials per pais c. 15. p. 438, 534.

But it is now positively settled by a solemn judgment of the Court of Common Pleas that a right to glean in the harvest-field cannot be claimed by any person at Common-law. Neither have the poor of a parish, legally settled, such right. Gould J. dissented from this opinion, quoting the passages in the Mosaic law, (Levit. c. 19. vv. 9, 10; c. 23. v. 22. and See Deut. c. 24. v. 19.) and 4 Burr. 197, together with the recognition of the custom or privilege in a private act of parliament for an inclosure in Basingstoke parish. The other Judges however were of opinion that it would be dangerous and impolitic to admit Gleaning to be a right, and in fact would be prejudicial to the poor themselves, now provided for under various positive statutes. They also remarked that the custom of Gleaning or Leasing was various in various places, and was in many places restricted to particular corn, and could not therefore be set up as an universal Common-law right; that it would be opening a tempting door, to fraud and idleness, and had never been specifically recognized by any judicial determination. 1 H. Black. Rep. 51—63.

GLEBE, gleba.] Church-land; most commonly taken for the land belonging to a parish church, besides the tithes. If any parson, vicar, &c. hath caused any of his Glebe-land to be manured and sown at his own costs, with any corn or grain, the incumbents may devise all the profits and corn growing upon the said Glebe by will, under Stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 11. And if a parson sows his Glebe and dies, the executors shall have the corn sown by the testator. But if the Glebe be in the hands of a tenant, and the parson dies after severance of the corn, and before his rent due; it is said, neither the parson's executors, nor the successor, can claim the rent, but the tenant may retain it, and also the crop, unless there be a special covenant for the payment to the parson's executors proportionably, &c. Wool's Inst. 163. See qu; If this case would not come within the equity of Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. s. 15, which gives right of action to the representative of tenant for life, for any portion of rent in arrear at the time of his death?

Exchange of Glebe land, will not bind the successor. Noy 5.

* Prohibition was moved for to a parson for digging new coal-mines in his Glebe, and also for felling trees; for it was waste, and prohibited by the statute de non profuerend' a. bores, &c. The court held it lay not for the mines; for then no mines in Glebe could ever be opened. Lev. 107.

By the said Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 11, Every successor, on a month's warning, after induction, shall have the mansion-house and the Glebe belonging thereto, not sown at the time of the predecessor's death. He that is instituted may enter into the Glebe-land before induction, and has right to have it against any stranger; per Coke Ch. J. Roll. R. 192.

There is a writ grounded on the Stat. articuli cleri, cap. 6; where a parson is distrained in his Glebe-lands by sheriffs, or other officers; against whom attachment shall issue. New Nat. Br. 386, 387. See titles Parson; Vicar; Church; Tithes, &c.

GLEBARIÆ, Turfs dug out of the ground.—In Sylvis, Campis, S. mitis, Moris, Glebariis, &c.

GLISCYWA, An old Saxon word for a Fraternity. Leg. Athelstan. cap. 12.

GLOMERELLS, Commissaries appointed to determine differences between scholars of a School or University, and the townsmen of the place: in the edict of the bishop of Ely, anno 1276, there is mention of the Master of the Glomerells.

GLOVE-SILVER. Money customarily given to servants to buy them gloves, as an encouragement for their labours.—Glove money has been also applied to extraordinary rewards given to officers of courts, &c. It is now given on the circuits, by the barristers, to the judges' crier.

GLOVES. The Stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 19, restrains the importation and sale of foreign Gloves and mitts: and one session of the Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 55, also restrains the importation of foreign leather not completely made into Gloves, but cut into shapes, or trunks.—By this latter act a stamp duty was imposed on Gloves sold, which is now repealed.

GLYN, A valley; according to the book of Domesday.

GO. This word is sometimes used in a judicial signification, as to go without day, is to be dismissed the court; so in old phrase, to go to God. Bicke Kitch. 150.

GOATS, No man may common goats within the forest without especial warrant. Nota, Capriolus non est lesia venationis forestæ. Mauwood's Forest Laws, cap. 25. manib. 3. See title Common.

GOLD

GOD-BOTE, Sax] An ecclesiastical or church fine, paid for crimes and offences committed against God.

GOD GILD, That which is offered to God, or his service. Sax.

GOD AND RELIGION, Offences against. Apostacy is an offence against God and religion. It was formerly the object only of the Ecclesiastical courts, which corrected the offender pro salute an. m. r. But now, by Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 32. If any person educated in, or having made profession of, the Christian religion, shall by writing, printing, teaching, or advised speaking, deny the Christian religion to be true, or the Holy Scriptures to be of divine authority, he shall upon the first offence be rendered incapable to hold any office or place of trust; and for the second, be rendered incapable of bringing any action, being guardian, executor, legatee, or purchaser of lands, and shall suffer three years' imprisonment without bail. To give room however for repentance, if within four months after the first conviction the delinquent will in open court publicly renounce his error, he is discharged for that once, from all disabilities.

Heresy is another offence, for which the offender is subject only to ecclesiastical censure, by Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 9. See 4 Comm 42, 65. As to Reviling of the ordinances, Non-conformity, Blasphemy, Swearing and Cursing, Witchcraft, Religious Imposters, Simony, Sabbath-breaking, Drunkenness and Lewdness; and this Dict. under those several titles.

GOLDA, A mine, according to Blount. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 610.

GOLD AND SILVER LACE and Thread. Persons that sell orrice lace, mixed with other metal or materials than gold, silver, silk and vellum, shall forfeit 2s. 6d. for every ounce: and there shall be allowed at least six ounces of gold and silver prepared and reduced into plate, to cover four ounces of silk, except large twist, frize, &c. And laying the same on greater proportions of the silk, or in any other manner than directed, incurs the like forfeiture of 2s. 6d. the ounce. Copper, and lace inferior to silver, is to be spun upon thread, yarn or incle, and not on silk; but this does not extend to Tinsel apparel, used in theatres. No gold or silver lace, thread, fringe or wire, &c. may be imported, on pain of being forfeited and burnt, and 100*l.* penalty. Stat. 15 Geo. 2. c. 20. See 28 Geo. 3. c. 7. The importation and making up of gold and silver lace, embroidery, brocade, &c. is prohibited, by Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 36. See further titles Wire-Drawers; Embroidery; Navigation Acts.

GOLDSMITHS. Gold and silver manufactures are to be assayed by the warden of the Goldsmiths' Company in London, and marked; and gold is to be of a certain touch. Stat. 23 E. 1. c. 20. By Stat. 37 E. 3. c. 7, Goldsmiths were to have their own marks on plate, after the surveyors have made their assay; and false metal was to be seized and forfeited to the King. Work of silver made by Goldsmiths, &c. is to be as fine as Sterling, except the solder necessary; and marking other work, incurs a forfeiture of double value. Stat. 2 H. 6. c. 14.

Goldsmiths, shall not take above 1*s.* the ounce of gold beside the fashion, more than the buyer may be allowed for it at the King's exchange; and if the work of any Goldsmith be marked and allowed by the master and wardens of the mystery, and afterwards found faulty; the wardens and and corporation shall forfeit the value of the thing so sold or exchanged. Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 15.

Molten silver is not to be transported by Goldsmiths before it is marked at Goldsmiths' Hall, and a certificate made thereof on oath; and officers of the Customs may seize silver shipped otherwise. Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17. The cities of York, Exeter, Bristol, Chester, Norwich, and town of Newcastle, are also appointed places for assaying and marking wrought plate of Goldsmiths, &c. Stats. 12 W. 3. c. 4; 1 Ann. c. 9.

A duty is granted on silver plate of 6 d. per ounce; and Goldsmiths are to make entries thereof with the weight, on pain of 100 l. &c. And Goldsmiths must work their plate according to the old standard; which is to be touched, assayed and marked before exposed to sale. Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 11.

Gold plate made by Goldsmiths shall contain 22 carrrats of fine gold: and silver plate 11 ounces and two penny-weight of silver, in every pound troy, or they forfeit 10 l. And no Goldsmith shall sell any such plate, until marked with the first letters of the maker's christian and surname, the marks of the city of London being the leopard's head, lion passant, &c. and those made use of by the assayers at York, Exeter, &c. All persons making plate, are to enter their marks, names and places of abode in the assay-office; they are likewise to send with the plate required to be marked, a particular account thereof, in order to be entered, &c. or forfeit 5 l. The Assayers determine what folder is necessary about plate, and judge of the workmanship, and for good cause may refuse to assay it; and if any parcel be discovered of a coarser alloy than the standard, it may be broke and defaced; also the fees for assaying and marking are particularly limited, &c. Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 26. See further title Wine-drawers.

GOLDWIT, or GOLDWICH, Perhaps a golden mullet; in the records of the Tor. n., there is mention of consuetudo vocata, Goldwith vel Goldwich.

GOLIARDUS, A jester or buffoon. Mat. Paris. 1229.

GOOD ABEARING, Bonus Gestus.] Signifies an exact carriage or behaviour of a subject towards the King and the people; whereunto some persons, upon their misbehaviour are bound; and he that is bound to this, is said to be more strictly bound than to the peace; because where the peace is not broken, the surety de bono gestu may be forfeited by the number of a man's company, or by their weapons. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 2. c. 2: See Stat. 34 Ed. 3. c. 1.

GOOD BEHAVIOUR, Surety for the Good behaviour is surety for the peace, and differs very little from Good abearing. A Justice of peace may demand it ex officio, according to his discretion, when he sees cause; or at the request of any other under the King's protection: his warrant also is to be issued when he is commanded to do it by writ of supplicavit out of Chancery or B. R. See further titles Justices of Peace and Surety of the Peace; at large.

GOODS AND CHATTELS, Bona & cattalia, See Chattels.

GOOLE, Fr. Goulet.] A breach in a sea-bank or wall; or a passage worn by the flux and reflux of the sea. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 11.

GORCE, From Fr. Gort.] A wear: by Sat. 25 E. 3. & 4. c. 4. it is ordained, that all Gorces, mills, wears, &c.

GOVERNMENT.

levied and set up, whereby the King's ships and boats are disturbed and cannot pass in any river, shall be utterly pulled down, without being renewed. Sir Edward Coke derives this word from Gorges, a deep pit of water, and calls it a Gors, or Gulf; but this seems to be a mistake, for in Domesday it is called Gourt and Cort, the Ficuch word for a wear, Co. Lit. 5.

GORE, A narrow slip of ground. Paroch. Antiq. 393.

GOTE, Sax. Grotan, i. e. Funterr.] A ditch, sluice or gutter, mentioned in Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 5.

GOVERNMENT.

By this word, in common speech, is understood the Constitution of our country as exercised, according to the principles of Limited Monarchy, under the Legislature of King, Lords and Commons. For the principles of this Government and Constitution, and its peculiar excellencies in preference to all others, see this Dict. passim; and particularly under titles King; Parliament; Treason; Tenure; Habeas Corpus; Liberties; Jury; and other apposite titles.

When Civil Society is once formed. Government at the same time results of course, as necessary to preserve and to keep that society in order. Unless some Superior be constituted, whose commands and decisions all the members are bound to obey, they would still remain as in a state of nature without any judge upon earth to define their rights and redress their wrongs. But as all the members which compose this society were naturally equal, it may be asked, in whose hands are the reins of Government to be entrusted? To this the general answer is easy; but the application of it to particular cases has occasioned one half of those mischiefs, which are apt to proceed from misguided political zeal. In general, all mankind will agree that Government should be reposed in such persons, in whom those qualities are most likely to be found, the perfection of which is among the attributes of him who is emphatically styled The Supreme Being; the three grand requisites of wisdom, of goodness and of power: wisdom to discern the real interest of the community; goodness to endeavour always to pursue that real interest: and strength or power, to carry this knowledge and intention into action. These are the natural foundations of Sovereignty, and these are the requisites that ought to be found in every well constituted frame of Government.

How the several forms of Government we now see in the world at first actually began, is matter of great uncertainty, and has occasioned infinite disputes. However they began, or by what right soever they subsist, there is and must be in all of them a Supreme, irresistible, absolute, uncontrolled authority, in which the jura summi imperii, or the rights of Sovereignty reside. And this authority is placed in those hands wherein, (according to the opinion of the founders of such respective States, either expressly given or collected, from their tacit approbation,) the qualities requisite for supremacy, wisdom, goodness, and power, are the most likely to be found.

The political writers of antiquity will not allow more than three regular forms of government. The first when the Sovereign Power is lodged in an aggregate assembly consisting of all the free-members of a community, which is called a Democracy; the second when it is lodged in a council, composed of select members, and then it is filed an Aristocracy; the last when it is entrusted in the hands of a single person, and then it takes the name of a Monarchy. All other species of Government, they say are either corruptions of, or reducible to, these three.

By the Sovereign Power, is meant the power of making laws; for wherever that power resides, all others must conform to, and be directed by it, whatever appearance the outward form and administration of the Government may put on. For it is at any time at the option of the Legislature to alter that form and administration by a new edict or rule, and to put the execution of the laws into whatever hands it pleases; by constituting one or a few, or many executive magistrates: and all the other powers of the State must obey the legislative power in the discharge of their several functions, or else the Constitution is at an end.

In a Democracy, where the right of making laws resides in the People at large, public virtue, or goodness of intention is more likely to be found, than either of the other qualities of Government. Popular assemblies are frequently foolish in their contrivance, and weak in their execution; but generally mean to do the thing that is right and just, and have always a degree of patriotism or public spirit. In Aristocracies there is more wisdom to be found, than in the other frames of Government; being composed, or intended to be composed, of the most experienced citizens. But there is less honesty than in a Republic, and less strength than in a Monarchy. A Monarchy is indeed the most powerful of any; for by the entire conjunction of the legislative and executive powers all the sinews of Government are knit together, and united in the hand of the Prince; but then [in absolute Monarchies] there is imminent danger of his employing that strength to improvident or oppressive purposes.

Thus these three species of Government have, all of them, their several perfections and imperfections. Democracies are usually the best calculated to direct the end of a law, Aristocracies to invent the means by which that end shall be obtained; and Monarchies to carry those means into execution. The ancients, had in general no idea of any other permanent form of Government but these three: for though Cicero declares himself of opinion, "esse optimè constitutam rempublicam, quæ ex tribus generibus illis, regali, optimo, et populari, sit modicè confusa," yet Tacitus treats this notion of a mixed Government, formed out of them all, and partaking of the advantages of each, as a visionary whim, and one that, if effected, could never be lasting or secure.

But, happily for us of this Island, THE BRITISH CONSTITUTION has long remained, and it is to be hoped will long continue, a standing exception to the truth of this observation. For, as with us, the Executive Power of the laws is lodged in a single person, they have all the advantages of strength and dispatch, that are to be found in the most absolute Monarchy: and as the Legislature of this kingdom is intrusted to three distinct powers, entirely independent of each other; first the King; secondly the Lords spiritual and temporal, which is an Aristocratical assembly of persons selected for their piety, their birth, their wisdom, their valour, or their property; and thirdly, the House of Commons, freely chosen by the People from among themselves, which makes it a kind of Democracy; as this aggregate body, actuated by different springs, and attentive to different interests, composes the British Parliament, and has the supreme disposal of every thing; there can be no inconvenience attempted by either of the three branches, but which will be withstood by one of the other two; each branch being armed with a negative power, sufficient to repel any innovation which it shall think inexpedient or dangerous.

Here then is lodged the Sovereignty of the British Constitution; and lodged as beneficially as is possible for Society. For in no other shape could we be so certain of finding the three great qualities of Government so well and so happily united. If the supreme power were lodged in any of the three branches separately, we must be exposed to the inconveniences, of either Absolute Monarchy, Aristocracy, or Democracy, and so want two of the three principal ingredients of good policy, either virtue wisdom, or power. If it were lodged in any two of the branches; for instance in the King and house of Lords, our laws might be providentially made, and well executed, but they might not have always the good of the people in view: If lodged in the King and Commons, we should want that circumspection and mediatory caution which the wisdom of the Peers is to afford: if the supreme rights of Legislature were lodged in the two houses only, and the King had no negative upon their proceeding, they might be tempted to encroach upon the royal prerogative, or perhaps to abolish the kingly office, and thereby weaken (if not totally destroy) the strength of the Executive Power. But the constitutional Government of this Island is so admirably tempered and compounded, that nothing can endanger or hurt it, but destroying the equilibrium of power between one branch of the Legislature and the rest. For if ever it should happen that the independence of any one of the three should be lost, or that it should become subservient to the views of either of the other two, there would soon be an end of our Constitution. 1 Comm. 48,—52. Intro.

The effect of so dire a change, or the means of judging whether in any supposable event, it may or may not have taken place, is a theme that may serve to agitate politicians, but which it would not be proper to discuss in this place. Revolutions in Government are subject to no fixed previous laws; and the dreadful experience of France at this moment, (October 1794) will teach every true lover of the British Constitution to be cautious of violating its principles, either through too fond an attachment to the person or privileges of the Monarch, or too ardent and dangerous a zeal for the Liberties of the People. These, in our Constitution are not opposed to, but dependent on, each other, and an exaggeration of either would inevitably lead to the ruin of both.

Contempts and misprisions against the King's person and Government, may be by speaking or writing against them; cursing or wishing him ill, giving out scandalous stories concerning him, or doing any thing that may tend to lessen him in the esteem of his subjects, may weaken his government, or may raise jealousies between him and his people. It has also been held an offence of this species to drink to the pious memory of a traitor; or for a clergyman to absolve persons at the gallows, who there persist in the treasons for which they die; these being acts which impliedly encourage rebellion. And for this species of contempt, a man may not only be fined and imprisoned, but suffer the pillory, or other infamous corporal punishment. 1 Hawk. P. C.: 4 Comm. 13. c. 9.

In cases of conspiracy or meditated treason against the King and Government, it is not unusual to vest a power in the King of apprehending and detaining suspected persons without bail or mainprise; which as to them operates as a suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act. For this purpose the Stats. 1 W. & M. c. 2: 6 Anne c. 15: 1 Geo. 1. cc. 8, 39, and divers others have been from time to time passed: The last of this kind was Stat. 34 Geo. 3. c.—when, after the example of France, several conspiracies were carrying on to establish a Democracy in these kingdoms to the overthrow of that Constitution; which is the deserved subject of panegyrick by the learned Commentator, from whom the preceding extracts on this subject are submitted to the attention of the Student.

GRAND CAPE, A writ on plea of land, where the tenant makes default in appearance at the day given, for the King to take the land into his hands, &c. Reg. Jud. 1. See Cape Magnum.

GRAND DAYS, Those days in the Terms which are solemnly kept in the Inns of Court and Chancery, i. e. Candlemas Day in Hilary term, Ascension Day in Easter term, St. John the Baptist's Day in Trinity term, and All Saints Day in Michaelmas term; which days are Dies non Juridici, or no days in court.

GRAND DISTRESS, is a writ so called, not for the quantity of it, for it is very short, but for its quality; for the extent thereof is very great, being to all the goods and chattels of the party distrained within the county: it lies in two cases, either when the tenant or defendant is attached, and appears not, but makes default; or where the tenant hath once appeared, and after makes default, then this writ is had by the Common law in lieu of a Peccat Cape. Stats. West. 1. cap. 44: 52 H. 3. c. 9.

GRAND JURY, The jury that find bills of indictment before justices of peace, and gaol-delivery or of Oyer & Terminer, &c. They ought only to hear witnesses for the King; and to find a bill on probable evidence; because it is but an accusation, and the party is to be put upon his trial afterwards. But if the bill be against A. for murder, and the Grand Jury, on the evidence before them, be satisfied it was se defendendo, &c. and so return it specially; the court may remand them to consider better thereof, or hear the evidence at the bar, and accordingly direct the Grand Jury. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 157, 158. Where a Grand Jury refuses to present things, within their charge, &c. a new Grand inquest may be impanelled, to inquire of the concealment of the former; on whose defaults presented, they shall be amerced. 2 Hale's P. C. 155. A Grand Juror disclosing to any one indicted, the evidence that appeared against him, is guilty of a high misprision, and liable to be fined and imprisoned. 4 Comm. 126. See at large titles Indictment; Jury.

GRAND SERJEANTY, An ancient tenure, by military service. See titles Chivalry; Tenure; Serjeanty.

GRANGE, Grangia.] A house or farm where corn is laid up in barns, granaries, &c. and provided with stables for horses, stalls for oxen, and other things necessary for husbandry. This definition is agreeable to Spelman. According to Mr. Warton, Grange is strictly and properly the farm of a monastery, where the religious reposit their corn. Grangia Lat. from Granum. But in Lincolnshire, and other Northern counties, they call every lone house, or farm, which stands solitary, a Grange. Steevens's Shakspear.

Dr. Johnson in his dictionary derives the word from Grange, French, and defines it, a farm, generally: a farm with a house, at a distance from neighbours.

GRANGEARIUS, Is the person who has the care of such a place, for corn and husbandry: and there was anciently a granger, or grange-keeper belonging to religious houses, who was to look after their granges, or farms in their own hands. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 8: Cartular. St. Edmund. MS. 323.

GRANT.

DONATIO; CONCESSIO In the Common-law, a conveyance in writing of incorporeal things, not lying in livery and which cannot pass by word only; as of reversion, advowsons in gross, tithes, rents, services, common in gross, &c. It has also been taken generally, for every gift and Grant of any thing whatsoever. Co. Litt. 172: 3 Rep. 63. Grants are made by such persons as cannot give but by deed: he that granteth is termed the Grantor, he to whom the Grant is made is the Grantee: West. Symb. 234.

Grant is the regular method, by the Common-law, of transferring the property of incorporeal hereditaments or such things whereof no livery can be had. Co. Litt. 9. For which reason all corporeal hereditaments as lands and houses are said to lie in livery, and the others as advowsons, commons, rents, reversion, &c. to lie in Grant. Ib. 172. And the reason is given by Bracton, "Traditio, [livery] nihil aliud est quam rei corporalis, de personâ in personam, de manu in manu translatio, aut in possessionem inductio: sed res incorporales quæ sunt ipsum jus rei vel corpori inhærens, traditionem non patiuntur." Bract. l. 2. c. 18. Incorporeal hereditaments therefore pass merely by delivery of the deed. And in seignories or reversion of lands, such Grant, together with the attornment of the tenant, tenant, (while attainments were requisite) were held to be of equal notoriety with, and therefore equivalent to, a feoffment and livery of lands in immediate possession. It therefore differs but little from a feoffment, except in its subject-matter, for the operative words therein commonly used are Dedi et concessi; Have given and granted; a Comm. 316. c. 20. See further this Dict. titles Conveyance; Deed; Gift.

I. What Things and Interests may be granted; by what Description; and how Grants shall be construed.

II. Who may make Grants; and who may take by Grant.

I. A Man cannot grant that which he hath not, or more than he hath: though he may covenant to purchase an estate, and levy a fine to uses, which will be good. A person may grant a reversion, as well as a possession; but the law will not allow Grants of titles only, or imperfect interests, or of such interests as are merely future. Bac. Max. 58. A bare possibility of an interest, which is uncertain; a right of entry, or thing in action, cause of suit, &c. may not be granted over to a stranger. Perk. Sect. 65: 2 Inst. 214: 4 Rep. 66.

It was formerly held, that by a Grant of all a man's goods and chattels, bonds would pass; now it is held the contrary, that the words Goods and Chattels do not extend to bonds, deeds or specialties, being things in action, unless in special cases. 8 Rep. 33: Co. Lit. 152: The stat. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 25, was found necessary to make the dealing such bonds, &c. felony, as in case of other goods and chattels.

In Grants there must be a foundation of interest, or they will not be binding: If a person grants a rent-charge out of lands, when he hath nothing in the land, the grant will be void. Perk. 15. Though it is said, if a man grant an annual rent out of land, wherein he hath no kind of interest, yet it may be good to charge the person of the grantor. Owen Rep. 3. A man may grant an annuity for him, and his heirs, to commence after his death, and it shall charge the heir. Bac. Max. 58. And after the Grant of an annuity, &c. is determined, debt lies for the arrears; and the person of the tenant will be charged. 7 Rep. 39. If a common person grants a rent, or other thing that lies in Grant, without limitation of any estate, by the delivery of the deed, a freehold passes: but if the King make such a Grant of a rent, &c. it is void for uncertainty. Darv. Rep. 45 a.

A Grant to a man, with a blank for his christian name is void, except to an officer known by his office, when it must be averied: and it is the same where the grantee's christian name is mistaken. Cro. Eliz. 328.

Grants may be void by uncertainty, impossibility, being against law, on a wrong title, to defraud creditors, &c. Co. Lit. 183. Such things as lie in Grant, may not be granted or held without deed: and if any thing not grantable, is granted with other things, the Grant will be void for all. 2 Edw. Abr. 269, 271, 273. Trusts and confidences are personal things, and may not be granted over to others in most cases; as offices of trust, and the like: but all kinds of chattels real and personal, are grantable, Perk. § 93: Plowd. 141, 379.

If one grant any thing that lies in livery, or Grant, and that is in esse at the time of the Grant, in fee, or for life, and the estate is to begin at a day to come; this for the most part will be void: but a lease or Grant for years, may be good in futuro; and may be to one for term of years, or years determinable on lives, and after to another, to begin at the end of that estate. 5 Rep. 1: Dyer 58. Where a man hath a reversion after an estate for life of land, and he grants a rent out of it; the Grant is good, and will taken upon the land after the estate of the tenant for life is ended: and if a person grant rents, &c. and a stranger take them at that time; in this case the Grant will be good, for one may not be out of possession of these things but at his pleasure. Perk. 92, 98. If a man grants that to one, that he hath granted before to another, for the like term, &c. the second Grant will be void. Dyer 23: Perk. § 102. Grants are usually made by these words, viz. Have Given, Granted and Confirmed, &c. And words in Grants shall be construed according to a reasonable sense, and not be strained to what is unlikely. Hob. 304. Also it hath been adjudged, that Grants shall be expounded according to the substance of the deed, not the strict grammatical sense; and agreeable to the intention of the parties. Co. Lit. 146, 313.

To every good Grant the following things are requisite:

1. That there be a person able to grant. 2. A person capable of the thing granted. 3. That there be a thing grantable. 4. That it be granted in such manner as the law requires. 5. That there be an agreement to, and acceptance of, the thing granted, by him to whom made. And 6. There ought to be an attainment where needful. Co. Lit. 73. But Grants and conveyances are good without attainment of tenants, notice being given them of the Grants, by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 9. Grants are taken most strongly against the grantor in favour of the grantee: the grantee himself is to take by the Grant immediately, and not a stranger, or any in futuro; and if a Grant be made to a man and his heirs, he may assign at his pleasure, though the word Assign be not expressed. Lit. 1: Saund. 322. The use of any thing being granted, all is granted necessary to enjoy such use: and in the Grant of a thing, what is requisite for the obtaining thereof is included. Co. Lit. 56. So that if timber trees are granted, the grantee may come upon the grantor's ground to cut and carry them away. 2 Lift. 309: Plowd. 15.

Where the principal thing is granted, the incident shall pass; but the principal will not pass by the Grant of the incident. Co. Lit. 152. A lord of a manor cannot grant the same, and receive the Court Baron, it being inseparably incident. Co. Lit. 313. A Grant of a manor, without the word cum pertinentiis, will pass all things belonging to, the manor: the Grant of a farm will also pass all lands belonging to it; but a Grant of a messuage passes only the house, out-houses and gardens. Owen's Rep. 51. Tot' il' maner' de A. may be taken in the singular, or plural number; and dashes and abbreviations in Grants shall be so taken that the Grant be not void. 9 Rep. 48. When lands are granted by deed, the houses which stand thereon will pass; houses and mills pass by the Grant of all lands, because that is the most durable thing on which they are built. 4 Rep. 86: 2 And. 123. By Grant of all the lands, the woods will pass: and if a man grant all his trees in a certain place, this passeth the soil; though an exception of wood extends to the trees only, not the soil. 1 Roll. Rep. 33. Dyer 19: 5 Rep. 11.

Trees in boxes will not pass by the grant of the land, &c. as they are separate from the freehold. Mod. Cases, 170. A man grants all his wood that shall grow in time to come; it is a void grant, not being in esse. 3 Leon. 37. A grant de usufructu terre passeth not the freehold; therefore the grantee hath no authority to dig in it by virtue of such a grant. Ow. 37. By the grant of lands in the possession of another, it is good if such other be in possession, let the possession be by right, or wrong. 1 Rel. Rep. 23. If a grant is general, and the lands granted restrained to a certain vill, the grantees shall have no lands out of the vill. 2 Rep. 33. It has been held, that where a grant is made of lands and tenements in D. copyhold lands will not pass; for they cannot pass otherwise than by surrender. Owen, 37.

Where lands are certainly described in a Grant, with a recital as granted to A. B. &c. though they were not thus granted, it has been adjudged, that the grant was good. 10 Rep. 30. If a first description of lands in a grant is false, notwithstanding the second be true, nothing will pass by it; though if the first be true, and the second false, the grant may be good. 3 Rep. 10. The word grant, where it is placed among other words of demise, &c. shall not enure to pass a property in the thing demised; but the grantee shall have it by way of demise. Dyer, 56.

Of grants some charge the grantor with something he was not charged with before; others discharge the grantee of something wherewith he was before charged, or chargeable. If a man grant to me a rent-charge; and after I grant to him, that he shall not be sued for this rent; this is good to bar me of bringing an action, though I may still distrain for the rent: And if one grants to his lessee for life or years, that he shall not be impeached for waste; it will be a good discharge, and may be pleaded 7 H. 6. 43: Bro. Grant, 145: Keilw. 88. See 1 Rep. 147: 10 Rep. 48. and this Dict. tit. Condition.

II. Any Natural Person, or Corporate Body, (not prohibited by law, as infants, feme covert, monks, &c.) may make a grant of lands, and be a grantor; and an infant, or woman covert, may be a grantee. Though the infant at his full age may disagree to the grant, and the husband disagree to the grant to his wife. Perk. 3, 4, 43. See titles Infant: Baron and Feme, &c.

But herein the law distinguishes between such grants as are void, and only voidable; the first of which are all such gifts, grants or deeds, made by an infant, which do not take effect by delivery of his hand; as if an infant give a horse, and no delivery of the horse with his hand, and the donee take the horse by force of the gift, the infant shall have an action of trespass, for the grant was merely void. But if an infant enters into an obligation, makes a feoffment, levies a fine, or suffers a recovery, these are not void, only voidable. Perk. §§ 12, 13, 19. See title Infant.

A grant by a feme covert is void, for no act of her's can transfer that interest which the inter-marriage has veiled in the husband. See 2 New Abr. 648: Perk. §6. See title Baron and Feme.

Grants made by persons non sane memorie, are good against themselves; but they are voidable by their heirs, &c. A man that is born dumb, or dumb and deaf, if he have understanding, by making signs, he may grant his land to another; not one who is born deaf, dumb, and blind also. Co. Lit. 2. See title Idiot. A person attainted of treason, or felony, may make a deed of gift, or grant, and it shall be good against all persons, except the King, and the lord of whom the lands are held; and for relief in prison, they may be good against them likewise. Co. Lit. 2: Perk. § 26, 31.

The grants of persons under duress are void; that is, if they were made under an apprehension of some bodily hurt, or if the grantor were imprisoned without cause, and the grantee refused to release or discharge him, unless he made such grant. 2 Inst. 483. But menacing to burn houses, or spoil or carry away the party's goods, are not sufficient to avoid the grant; for if he should suffer what he is threatened, he may sue and recover damages in proportion to the injury done him. 4 Inst. 485: Perk. § 18. See title Duress.

If there be father and son of the same name, and the father grants an annuity by his name, without any addition, it shall be intended the grant of the father; and if the son being of the same name with his father grant an annuity without any addition; yet the grant is good, for he cannot deny his deed. Perk. § 37.

There are but few (if any) persons excluded from being grantees, therefore a man attainted of felony, murder, or treason, may be a grantee; so the King's villain, an alien, one outlawed in a personal action, or a bastard, may be grantees. Perk. § 48. A bastard who is known to be the son of such a one, may purchase, or be a grantee by such reputed name; for all surnames were originally acquired by reputation. Co. Lit. 3. 2 Rel. Abr. 43, 4.

A feme covert may be a grantee, therefore if a rent-charge be granted to a feme covert, and the deed is delivered to her without the privity of her husband, and the husband dies before any disagreement made by him, and before any day of payment, the grant is good, and shall not be avoided, by saying, that the husband did not agree, &c. but the disagreement of the husband ought to be shewn. Perk. § 43. See title Baron and Feme.

Although aggregate Corporations are invisible, and exist only in supposition of law, yet they are capable of taking by grant, for the benefit of the members of the corporation. Co. Lit. 9: 1 Saund. 344.

GRANTS OF THE KING.—The King's grants are matters of public record: for the King's excellency is so high in the law, that no freehold may be given to, nor derived from him, but by matter of record. Doct. and Stud. 6. 1. 2. 8.—To this end a variety of offices are erected, communicating in a regular subordination one with another, through which all the King's grants must pass, and be transcribed and enrolled; that the same may be narrowly inspected by his officers, who will inform him if any thing contained therein is improper, or unlawful to be granted. These grants whether of lands, honors, liberties, franchises, or aught besides are contained in charters or letters patent; that is open letters, literæ patentes; so called because they are not sealed up, but exposed to open view, with the great seal pendant at the bottom: and are usually directed or addressed by the King to all his subjects at large. And therein they differ from certain other letters of the King, sealed also with his great seal, but directed to particular persons and for particular purposes: which which therefore not being designed for public inspection are closed up and sealed on the outside, and are thereupon called writs close, litera clausa; and are recorded in the close-rolls, in the same manner as the others are in the patent rolls. 2 Comm. 346. c. 21.

Grants or letters-patent must first pass by h.l.; which is prepared by the Attorney and Solicitor-General, in consequence of a warrant from the crown: and is there signed, that is subscribed at top, with the King's own sign manual, and sealed with his privy signet, which is always in the custody of the principal Secretary of State: and then sometimes it immediately passes under the great seal, in which case the patent is subscribed in these words, per ipsum regem, By the King himself.—Otherwise the course is to carry an extract of the bill to the keeper of the privy seal who makes out a writ or warrant thereupon to the Chancery, so that the sign manual is the warrant to the privy seal, and the privy seal is the warrant to the great seal: and in this last case the patent is subscribed, per breve de privato sigillo; By writ of privy seal. But there are some grants which only pass through certain offices, as the Admiralty or Treasury, in consequence of a sign manual, without the confirmation of either the signet, the great, or the privy seal. 2 Comm. c. 21. See 9 Rep. 18: 2 Inst. 555.

The manner of granting by the King does not more differ from that by a Subject, than the construction of his grants when made. A grant made by the King at the suit of the grantee, shall be taken most beneficially for the King, and against the party; whereas the grant of a Subject is construed most strongly against the grantor. Wherefore it is usual to insert in the King's grants, that they are made, not at the suit of the grantee, but ex speciali gratia, certa scientia, et mero motu regis; of the King's special favour, certain knowledge, and mere motion, and then they have a more liberal construction. Finch L. 100: 10 Rep. 112.

A Subject's grant shall be construed to include many things besides what are expressed, if necessary for the operation of the grant. Therefore, in a private grant of the profits of land for one year, free ingress, egress and regress to cut and carry away those profits are also inclusively granted; and if a feoffment of land was made by a lord to his vassal, this operated as a manumission, for he was otherwise unable to hold it. Co. Litt. 56: Litt. § 206. But the King's grant shall not enure to any other intent, than that which is precisely expressed in the grant. As if he grants land to an alien, it operates nothing; for such grant shall not also enure to make him a denizen, that so he may be capable of taking by grant. Bro. Ab. Patent, 62: Finch L. 110.

When it appears from the face of the grant that the King is mistaken, or deceived, either in matter of fact or of law, as in case of false suggestion, misinformation, or misrecital of former grants; or if his own title to the thing granted be different from what he supposes; or if the grant be informal; or if he grants an estate contrary to the rules of law, in any of those cases the grant is absolutely void. Freem. 172. For instance, if the King grants lands to one and his heirs-male, this is merely void: for it shall not be an estate-tail, because there want words of procreation, to ascertain the body out of which the heirs shall issue: neither is it a fee-simple, as in common grants it would be, because it may reasonably be supposed that the King meant to give no more than an estate-tail: the grantee is therefore, if any thing, nothing more than tenant at will. Finch, 101, 2: Bro. Ab. Estates, 34: Patents, 104: Dy. 270: Dav. 45: 5 Rep. 94: Moor 293.

To prevent deceits of the King with regard to the value of estates granted, it is particularly provided by stat. 1 H. 4. c. 6, that no grant of his shall be good, unless in the grantee's petition for them, express mention be made of the real value of the lands. Other statutes have also been passed relative to this subject. The King's grantee shall not forfeit for non-payment of rent, where the rent has been answered before process issued. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 25. Grants of felons' goods how to be enrolled.—Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 22. § 1. The Crown restrained from granting lands, except for thirty-one years, &c. Forfeited estates excepted. Stat. 1 Ann. stat. 1. c. 7. §§ 5, 8. See title Forfeiture.

Before the statute de privativa Regis, dower, advowsons, and other things, have passed by the general grant of the King; but by that statute they are to be granted in express words. 1 Rep. 50.

The King's grant is good for himself and successors, though his successors are not named. Telv. 13.

The King may not grant away an estate tail in the Crown, &c. And the law takes care to preserve the inheritance of the King for the benefit of the successor. 2 And. 154: Style 263: See Jenk. Cent. 307. A grant may not be made by the King which tends to a monopoly, against the interest and liberty of the Subject: Nor can the King make a grant non obstante any statute made, or to be made; if he doth, any subsequent statute prohibiting what is granted, will be a revocation of the grant. 11 Rep. 87: Dyer 52. Where the King is restrained by the Common law to make a grant, if he makes a grant non obstante the Common law, it will not make the grant good: but when he may lawfully make a grant, and the law requires he should be fully apprised of what he grants, and not be deceived, a non obstante supplies it, and makes the grant good: If the words are not sufficient to pass the thing granted, a non obstante will not help. 4 Rep. 35: Nels. Abr. 904. If a grant is made by the King, and a former grant is in being of the same thing, if it be not recited, the grant will be void: And reciting a void grant, when there is another good, may make the King's grant void. Dyer 77: Cro. Car. 143. And there may be a non obstante to a former grant. 5 Rep. 94: Moor, 293.

The King's grants may be void, by reason of uncertainty; as if debts and duties are granted, without saying in particular what duties, &c. 12 Rep. 46. But where there is a particular certainty preceding they shall not be destroyed by any uncertainty or mistake which follows: and there is a distinction where a mistake of title is prejudicial to the King, and when it is in some description of the thing which is supplemental only, and not-material or issuable, 1 Mod. 195. The King grants the manor of D. which he has by the attainder of a certain person, &c. and in fact the King hath it not so; this grant is void. 10 Rep. 109.

If the King grants a messuage of the value of 5*l.* a year to A. B. and it be of the yearly value of 10*l.* the value being in the same sentence with the grant, will make it void: Though if it be mentioned in another sentence it may be good. Jenk. Cent. 261. The grant of the GROOM.

GROOM-PORTER, An officer or superintendant over the royal gaming-tables; in Latin he is styled Aule Regie Janitor Primarius.

GROSS, Grossus.] In gross, absolute, intire, not depending on another; as anciently a villain in gross was such a servile person as was not appendant or annexed to the Lord, or manor, nor to go along with the tenure as appurtenant to it; but was like the other personal goods and chattels of his lord, at his lord's pleasure and disposal: so also advowson in gross differs from advowson appendant, being distinct from the manor. Co. Lit. 120. See 2 Comm. 22.

GROSSE BOIS, Fr. Gros bois, i. e. great wood.] Signifies such wood as by the common law or custom is reputed timber. 2 Inst. 642.

GROSS, (COMMON IN, or Common at large.) is such as is neither appendant nor appurtenant, to land, but is annexed to a man's person; being granted to him and his heirs by deed: or it may be claimed by prescriptive right, as by parson of a church, or the like corporation sole. This is a separate inheritance, entirely distinct from any landed property. See tit. Commons.

GROSS-WEIGHT, The whole weight of goods or merchandise, dunt and dross mixed with them, and of the chest, bag, &c. out of which tare and tret are allowed. Merchant's Dict.

GROT, Fr.] A den, cave, or hollow place in the ground; also a shady woody place, with springs of water. L. Fr. Dict.

GROUNDAGE, A custom or tribute paid for the standing of a ship in a port.

GROUSE, The red and black beast game, for preserving of which, no heath, furze or fern shall be burnt on any heaths, moors or other wastes, between the 2d of February and 24th of June. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. See title Game.

GROWME. An engine to stretch woollen cloth after it is woven; See the ancient Stat. 43 Ed. 3. c. 10.

GROWTH-HALFPENNY, A rate so called; and paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle. Clayton's Rep. 92.

GRUARI, From the Fr. Gruyer.] The principal officers of the forest in general.

GUARD, Fr. Garde, Lat. Custodia.] A custody or care of defence. And sometimes it is used for those that attend upon the safety of the Prince, called the life guard, &c. sometimes such as have the education and guardianship of infants; sometimes for a writ touching wardship, us droit de garde, ejectione de gard, and ravissement de gard. F. N. B. 139. See title Guardian.

GUARDIAN.

Fr. Gardein, Lat. Custos, Guardianus.] One who hath the charge or custody of any person or thing; but commonly he who hath the custody and education of such persons as are not of sufficient discretion to guide themselves and their own affairs, as children and idiots; (usually the former); being as largely extended in the common law as Tutor and Curator among the civilians. Blount.

III. Of the Infant's remedy against the Guardian, and of obliging him to Account.

I. A Guardian is either legitimus, testamentarius, datus, or custumarius: he that is a legitimate or lawful Guardian is so jure communi, or jure naturali; the first as Guardian in chivalry, in fact; or in right; the other de jure naturali, as father or mother: A testamentary Guardian was allowed even by the common law; the body of the minor was to remain with him who was appointed, till the age of fourteen; and as for his goods it might be longer, or as long as the testator appointed; Guardianus datus, was one appointed by the father in his life-time, or by the Lord Chancellor after the death of the father; and where there is a Guardianship by the common law, the Lord Chancellor can order and intermeddle; but where by statute, he cannot remove either the child, or the Guardian: Guardianship by custom, is of orphans by the custom of London, and other cities and boroughs; and in copyhold manors, by the custom it may belong to the lord of the manor to be guardian himself, or to appoint one. 3 Salk. Rep. 176, 177.

The Guardianships by the common law, were Guardians in chivalry; Guardians by nature, such as the father or mother; Guardians in socage, who are the next of blood, to whom the inheritance cannot descend, if the father does not order it otherwise; and Guardian because of nurture, when the father by will appoints one to be Guardian of his child. Co. Lit. 18: 2 Inst. 305: 3 Rep. 37.

The several Guardians now in use, may be thus enumerated: 1. By Nature; 2. For Nurture; 3. In Socage; 4. By Statute; 5. By Custom of London and other cities and boroughs; (which however, from particular exceptions, do not fall under the general law.) 6. By Election of the Infant; 7. By appointment of the Chancellor; 8. Ad litem; 9. By appointment of the Ecclesiastical Court.

1. The Father and (in some cases) the Mother of the child are Guardians by nature. For if an estate be left to an infant, the father is by common law the Guardian, and must account to his child for the profits. 1 Inst. 88. But an executor may not pay to a father a legacy left to an infant; 1 P. Wms. 285. See titles Executor: Legacy. And with regard to daughters it seems by construction of Stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8, that the father might by deed or will assign a Guardian to any woman child under the age of 16; and if none be so assigned, the mother shall in this case be Guardian. 3 Rep. 39.

The said Stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. provides, under severe penalties, as fine and imprisonment for years, "That nobody shall take away any maid or woman child unmarried, being within the age of sixteen years, out of or from the possession, custody or governance, and against the will of the father of such maid or woman child, or of such person or persons to whom the father of such maid, or woman child by his last will and testament, or by any other act in his life-time, hath [appointed] or shall appoint, assign, bequeath, give or grant, the order, keeping, education and governance of such maid or woman child." See this Dict. titles Marriage: Rape.

The

The direct object of the above statute, was to prevent the taking away or marrying maidens under 16, against the consent of their parents. But the statute has prohibited it in terms which imply that the custody and education of such females should belong to the father and mother, or the person appointed by the former. It is observable on this statute that though the title is confined to maidens being inheritors, and the preamble speaks only of such as be heirs apparent, or have real or personal estate, yet the enacting part mentions maidens under 16 generally. See 1 Inst. 88 b. n. 14. For determinations on this statute see Kitchiff's Ca.; 3 Co. 57; Poph. 204; Cro. Car. 465; 1 Sid. 362; 2 Mod. 128; 3 Mod. 84, 168.

Many books, especially some of modern date, are very indiscriminate when they mention Guardianship by nature. Sometimes the Father is styled Guardian by nature, of his heir apparent, for the time, in general terms; such as at first appear to intimate that no other ancestor except the father, not even the mother, is entitled to the Guardianship in that right: and accordingly Comyns makes this inference from the language of the books; though perhaps too hastily. See Com Dig. tit. Guardian, (C) 3 Co. 38. a. 6 Co. 22 b.; there cited. In other cases it appears that the father being dead, the mother may have a writ of trespass quare consanguineum et heredem cepit; which imports that she may also be Guardian by nature of her heir apparent. The silence in one book as to other ancestors, and the express exclusion of the grandfather in another book, without the necessary explanation, tend to an opinion that all ancestors, except the father and mother, are really excluded. See 1 Inst. 84 b.; 6 Co. 22 b. However in another place it appears that the grandfather and other ancestors may be Guardians by nature of their heirs apparent, as well as the father and mother; though being liable to be postponed to others, where the father is not, both they and the mother have a title distinguishable from his, in point of inferiority. 3 Co. 38 a. Further, some modern books do not confine Guardianship by nature to heirs apparent, but denominate the father and mother the natural Guardians of all their children: and sometimes even the parents of illegitimate issue, seem to have been treated as their natural Guardians. 1 Fern. 158 2 Atk. 15, 70; 9 Mod. 117. Sometimes also the Guardianship of female children under 16, as impliedly given to the father and mother, by the above mentioned stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8, is said to be jure nature. See the stat. & 3 Co. 38 b.

On the whole it seems, that not only the Father but also the Mother and every other ancestor may be Guardians by nature, though with considerable differences, such as denote the superiority of the father's claim. The father hath the first title to Guardianship by nature, the mother the second: as to other ancestors, if the same infant happens to be heir-apparent to two, perhaps priority of the possession of the person of the infant might probably be allowed to decide the question. While the tenure by Knight's service continued there was another difference, which more strongly marked the superiority of the father's claim: for he was intitled to the custody of the infant's person even against the Lord in chivalry; a preference not allowed to the mother or other relations, and this diversity appears to reconcile the determinations in the old books, which apply only to cases in which the right to the infant's person was in contest with the Lord in chivalry. 3 Co. 38 b. Ratcliffe's Ca. According to the first language of our law, only an heir apparent can be the subject of Guardianship by nature: which restriction is so true that it hath even been doubted, whether such Guardianship can be of a daughter whose heirship, though denominated apparent, yet being liable to be superseded by the birth of a son, is in effect rather of the presumptive kind. 3 Co. 38 b.; 1 Inst. 84 a. Therefore when the term of Guardianship by nature is extended to children in general, or to any besides such as are heirs apparent, it is not conformable to its legal sense, but must be understood to have reference to some rule independent of the common law; as the dictates of nature, and the principles of general reason. Yet we must not however conclude that parents have not a right to the custody of their other children, for the law gives them this custody till the age of 14 by the Guardianship for nurture, next mentioned, which though it differs from that by nature, not only in name, but also in duration, and some other particulars, is founded on a like conformity to the order of nature. 1 Inst. 88 b. n. 12.

This Guardianship by nature continues till the infant attains the age of 21; it extends no further than the custody of the infant's person. Carth. 386; 1 Inst. 84. It yields, as to the custody of the person, to Guardianship in socage, where the title to both Guardianships concur in the same individuals. 1 Inst. 88 b. (See post 3.) but Guardianship in socage ending at 14, it seems that after that age the father, or other ancestor having a like title to both Guardianships becomes Guardian by nature till the infant's age of 21. See Carth. 384. Lastly the father may disappoint the mother and other ancestors of the Guardianship by nature, by appointing a testamentary Guardian under the stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 12 Car. 2. See post 4.

2. Guardians for nurture are of course the Father or Mother till the infant attains the age of 14 years. Moor. 738; 3 Rep. 38. In default of father or mother the Ordinary usually assigns some discreet person to take care of the infant's personal estate, and to provide for his maintenance and education. 2 Jones, 90; 2 Lev. 163. See post 9. This Guardianship by nurture, only occurs where the infant is without any other Guardian; and it has been said that none can have it except the father or mother. 8 B. 4. 7 b. Bro. Gard. 70; 3 Co. 38. It extends no further than the custody and government of the infant's person; and determines at 14 in the case both of males and females. ibid. Comyns refers to Fluta, as if according to that ancient book, grandfathers and great grandfathers might be Guardians by nurture. But the statute cited by him doth not point at this species of Guardian, it describing the patria potestas in general, and being apparently borrowed from the text of the Roman Law; nor will it bear the least application to Guardianship as our own law regulates it. 1 Inst. 88 b. in n. 13. ad fin.

3. Guardians in Socage, are also called Guardians by the common law. Wardship is incident to tenure in socage, but of a nature very different from that which was formerly incident to knight-service. For if the inheritance descend to an infant under 14, the wardship of him does not, nor ever did, belong to the lord of the fee: because in this tenure no military or other personal service being required, there was no occasion for the lord to take the profits in order to provide a proper substitute for his infant tenant. See this Dict. title Tenure.

This kind of Guardianship takes place only when the minor is entitled to some estate in lands; and then by the common law the Guardianship devolves upon his Next-of-kin, to whom the inheritance cannot possibly descend; as where the estate descended from his father, in this case his uncle by the mother's side cannot possibly inherit this estate, and therefore shall be the Guardian. Litt. § 123. For the law judges it improper to trust the person of an infant in his hands, who may by possibility become heir to him; that there may be no temptation, nor even suspicion of temptation, for him to abuse his trust. 1 Comm. c. 17. And though this provision has been considered as arising from harsh and barbarous principles, experience shews that it is founded in sound policy and humanity. See 2 P. Wms. 262: 1 Inst. 88.

Guardianship in socage, like that in chivalry, springs wholly out of tenure. It is for this reason that the title to it cannot arise, unless the infant is seized of lands, or other hereditaments, lying in tenure, holden by socage. 1 Inst. 87 b. Like Guardianship in chivalry, it is deemed to take place on a descent only, though the contrary has been argued. 2 Mut. 176. The title to this Guardianship is without any distinction between the whole and the half blood. If there are two or more disinterested relations in equal degree, he who first gains possession of the heir shall have the custody of him; except where they happen to be brothers or sisters, or to be the infant's lineal ancestors, the law preferring the eldest in the former case, and the father or other male ancestor in the latter. But if the infant derives lands both by descent ex parte paternâ and ex parte maternâ, in which case it may be possible not to find any next of kin incapable of inheriting to the infant, the next of kin on either side first seizing the infant is entitled to the custody of his person; and the custody of the lands coming ex parte paternâ goes to the maternal heir, and vice versa. Should, however, the infant derive lands by descent in such a way, as lets in both the paternal and maternal blood successively to the inheritance, but with a preference of the former, it seems unsettled who shall have the Guardianship. If the person entitled to be Guardian in socage is himself under custody of a Guardian, the latter is entitled to the custody of both, to the former in his own right, and to the latter per cause de Ward, that is, in right of his wardship of the former; A species of Guardianship distinct from all others above enumerated. And it seems that only Guardian in chivalry and in socage could be Guardian per cause de Ward. See 2 Ro. Ab. 35, 40: Vaugb. 184.

Guardianship in socage, being wholly for the infant's benefit and not in any respect for the Guardian's profit, is not a subject either of alienation, forfeiture or succession, as Wardship in chivalry was; and consequently if the Guardian in socage becomes incapable or dies, the Wardship devolves on the person next in degree of kindred to the infant, not being inheritable to him. Some ancient cases seem to shew that under certain circumstances Guardianship in socage might be assignable. See F. N. B. 143. P.: Fitz. Ab. Garde 161. But according to the doctrine and practice of later times, the acknowledged qualities of Guardianship in socage being, that it is a personal trust wholly for the infant's benefit, and neither transmissible by succession nor devisable, they are not consistent with its being assignable; and there is Lord Chief Justice Vaugb.'s authority for saying, that even in his time common experience proved the contrary. See Plowd. 293: Vaugb. 181: Gill. Rep. Eq. 177.

This Guardianship extends not only to the person and socage-estates of the infant, but also to his hereditaments not lying in tenure; and even to his copyhold estates, unless there is a special custom for the Lord's appointing a Guardian of them. 1 Inst. 87 b: 2 Ro. Ab. 40: Egleston's Ca. Hutt. 17: 2 Lutw. 1181. But whether the Guardian in socage is intitled to take into his custody the infant's personal estate, is not ascertained by any express authority. It seems however that personalty is included except where by the custom of a particular place it happens to be liable to a different custody: and this opinion is founded on the idea that the custody of an infant's person draws after it the custody of every species of property for which the law hath not otherwise provided: which receives some countenance from the instances of copyholds, and hereditaments not lying in tenure: for including which it will be difficult to account by any other reason than that above given for including personalty. It is also strongly confirmed by the manner in which the Stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24, regulates the power of the Guardian, which it enables a father to appoint: after authorising such Guardian to take the custody of the infant's personal estate, as well as of his lands, tenements, and hereditaments, it provides that he may bring such action or actions in relation thereunto, as by law a Guardian in common socage might do; words almost necessarily importing that the personal estate is equally an object of the custody of Guardian in socage with the infant's real property; though a contrary opinion is hinted by Vaugb. C. J. See Vaugb. 186.

Guardianship in socage is superseded both as to the body and lands, if the father exercises his power, of appointing a testamentary or other Guardian according to Stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24. (See post. 4.) And regularly it ends, when the infant whether male or female, attains 14: though some say that this must be understood only where another Guardian, either by election of the infant or otherwise, is ready to succeed; and that the Guardianship in socage continues in the mean time. Andr. 313. At that age however it seems the heir may oust the Guardian in socage and call him to account for the rents and profits. Litt. § 123: Co. Litt. 89. It was in this particular of Wardship as also in that of marriage, and in the certainty of the render or service, that the socage tenures had so much the advantage of the military ones. See tit. Tenure. But as the Wardship ceased at 14, this disadvantage attended it; that young heirs being left at so tender an age to choose their own Guardians till 21, might make an improvident choice. Therefore when almost all the lands in the kingdom were turned into socage tenures, by the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, that statute, gave the power of appointing the testamentary Guardian next mentioned. If no such appointment be made, the Court of Chancery will frequently interpose, and name a Guardian, to prevent an infant heir from improvidently exposing himself to ruin. 2 Comm. 88. c. 6. See post. 7.

4. The Statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24, considering the imbecility of judgment in children of the age of 14, and the abolition of Guardianship in chivalry; (which lasted till 21. See post. 11;) enacts, that any Father, under age or of full age, may by deed or will attested by two witnesses, dispose dispose of the custody of his child, either born or unborn, to any person, except a popish recusant, either in possession or reversion till such child attains the age of 21. These are called Guardians by statute; or Testamentary Guardians.

The substance of this Parliamentary regulation is, that the father shall have the power, though under 21.—That he shall have it as to all his children under 21, and unmarried at his decease, or born after.—That he may appoint any person except popish recusants.—That the appointment may be either in possession or remainder.—That he may appoint the Guardianship to last till 21; or any less time.—That the appointment shall be effectual against all claiming as Guardians in socage or otherwise.—That the Guardian so appointed shall have ravishment of ward or trespass, and recover damages for the Ward's benefit.—That the Guardian shall have the custody of the infant's estate both real and personal, and have the same actions in relation to them as a Guardian in socage.—Finally, that the statute shall not prejudice the custom of London, or any other city or corporate town. For cases on the construction of this statute, See Vin. Ab. and Com. Dig. tit. Guardian. The nature of this new kind of Guardianship, which the statute professedly models after that in socage, except as to duration, is particularly discussed in the case of Bedell v. Constable; Vauqb. 177; and in Lord Skeffsbury's Case, 2 P. Wms. 102; Gilb. 172.

A father cannot appoint Guardians under this statute to a natural child; but where he has named Guardians by his will to an illegitimate child, the Court of Chancery will appoint the same persons Guardians without any reference to a master for his approbation. 2 Bro. C. R. 383.

Though there is no decided case that Guardians can be appointed for a child, by a Stranger, during the life of the parent, yet the law will take care that the child shall be educated according to his expectations; in cases where the child is benefited by the will, &c. of such stranger. See Powell v. Clever, 2 Bro. C. R. 500.

A grandfather cannot appoint Guardians to his grandson under this statute: but he may give his estate to him on condition that certain persons be his Guardians; and if the father of the legatee do not submit to the will, the Chancery will make the father's opposition work a forfeiture of his son's estate. Ambl. 306.

5. We may here just mention that there is another species of customary Guardianship besides that in London and certain cities and boroughs; where by the special custom of a manor the Lord names, or is himself the Guardian of an infant copyholder. See Com. Dig. tit. Copyhold. (K. 5).—The nature of this Guardianship, depends wholly on the custom of the particular manor; and though it is not expressly saved by the Stat. 12 Car. 2; yet it has been held that the father's appointment of the custody of his child under that statute, will not extend to copyhold estates. 2 Lutw. 1181; 3 Lev. 395; Comb. 253.

6. The right of electing a Guardian by an infant, arises only when from a defect in the law, (or rather in the execution of it,) the infant finds himself wholly unprovided with a Guardian. This may happen either before 14, when the infant has no such property as attracts a Guardianship by tenure, and the father is dead without having executed his power of appointment, and there is no mother; or after 14, when the custody of the Guardian in socage terminates, and there is no appointment by the father under the Stat. 12 Car. 2. Lord Coke only takes notice of such election where the infant is under 14; and as to this omits to state how, and before whom it should be made; see 1 Inst. 87 b; nor does this defect seem supplied by any prior or cotemporary writer. As to a Guardian after 14, it appears from the ending of Guardianship in socage, at that age, as if the common law deemed a Guardian afterwards unnecessary. However since the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, it has been usual in defect of an appointment under the statute, to allow the infant to elect one for himself; and this practice appears to have prevailed even in some degree before the Restoration. Such election is said to be frequently made before a Judge on the circuit. 1 Ves. 475. But this form does not seem essential. The late Lord Baltimore, when he was turned of 18, having no Testamentary Guardian, and being under the necessity of having one for some special purposes relative to his proprietary government of Maryland, named a Guardian by deed; a mode adopted by the advice of Counsel.—It seems in fact as if there was no prescribed form of an infant's electing a Guardian after 14, any more than there is before, and therefore election by parol, though unsolemn, might be legally sufficient. The deficiency in precedents on this occasion is easily accounted for; this kind of Guardianship being of very late origin, unnoticed as it seems by any writer before Coke except Swinburn; (Testam. edit. 1590 97 b;) and there being yet no cases in print to explain the powers incident to it, or whether the infant may change a Guardian so constituted by himself. Coke, though professing to enumerate the different sorts of Guardianship, omits this in one place; whence perhaps it may be conjectured that in his time it was in strictness scarcely recognised as legal. 1 Inst. 88 b. in n.

7. As to Guardian by appointment of the Lord Chancellor; it is not easy to state how this jurisdiction was acquired: It is certainly of no very ancient date, though now indisputable. The first instance of such a Guardian, appointed on petition without bill, was in the year 1696, in the case of one Hampden. But since that time the Court of Chancery has exercised this power, without its being once called in question; therefore in the case of Lady Teynham v. Leonard, in Dom. Proc. An. 1724, the Counsel for the respondent stated it as a thing fixed, that the Lord Chancellor was entrusted with that part of the Crown's prerogative, which concerned the Guardianship of infants. Bro. P. C. Under the same idea too, the marriage Act, Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33. (§ 11), refers to the Chancellor for the appointment of a Guardian, to consent to marriage, where the infant is without a Guardian and the mother is not living. 1 Inst. 88 b. in n. See also 1 Bro. C. R. 356. The Court never appoints a Guardian to a woman after marriage. 1 Ves. 157.

8. All Courts of Justice have a power to assign a Guardian to an infant to sue, or defend actions, if the infant comes into court and desires it: or a Judge at his chambers, at the desire of the infant, may assign a person named by him to be his Guardian; but this last is no record until entered and filed by the clerk of the rules; F. N. B. 27. L: 1 Inst. 88 b. n. (16): 135 b. n. (1): 1 Lil. 656: 2 Lpm. 238. And this is called a Guardian ad litem. See title Equity.

Guardian by appointment of the Ecclesiastical Court seems now perfectly insignificant, and merely on a par with other Guardians ad litem. The right of appointment is however claimed by that Court, as to personal estate; and, if there is no other Guardian by tenure or otherwise, for the person also; but the following detail will show with how little effect.

Seivburne takes notice of such a Guardian; but confines his observations on the appointment, and his extent of power, to the custom within the province of York. Tessam. 1st ed. c. 9 b. In a case in the court of K. B. Lord Hale admitted the right of the Ecclesiastical Court to appoint a Curator of the personal estate; and after that Judge's death the Court inclined to the same opinion. 2 Lev. 162: 7. Jo. 90. In another case, soon after, the same court allowed the right as to the infant's portion but denied it over the person. 3 Keble. 384. In the next case, the question as to the right was largely debated on a plea in prohibition. This alleged that by the common law, used and approved in England, if any person by his will devises any goods to his children, the Ordinary before whom the will is proved hath used to commit the custody of the sons and their portions till 14, and of the daughters and their portions till 12, except where they are in the custody of any other by reason of tenure, or by the father's appointment: and if any person detained such infants, or their portions, the Ordinary hath also used to compel the delivery of them by Ecclesiastical censures. 2 Lev. 217. But on a demurrer this plea was over-ruled, and the prohibition ordered to stand, the latter being founded on the libel in the suit in the Ecclesiastical Court, which had stated the right in a more extensive way, viz. that by the Ecclesiastical Law, every person having the tuition of any infant under age, by the will of the father, or per judicem competentem, ought to have the custody of the infant and suit in the Ecclesiastical Court for the detainer. After this case nothing appears in the books on the subject for a long time, but a cursory notice by Lee, J. of the Ecclesiastical Court's appointment without objection, saying the course of that court is, that if the infant is under seven years of age, they choose a Curator, but if he is seven, he chooses. Fitzgib. 164. By a loose note of a later case it appears that Lord Hardwicke said, that only Guardians ad litem can be appointed by the Ecclesiastical Court. 14 Fin. Abr. 176. pl. 7. in n. In another case however, reported more at length, the same Judge reprobated it as a presumption in the Ecclesiastical Court to appoint a Guardian of the person and estate, and declared their appointment except when a suit was depending to be an interference with his power as Chancellor; and even recommended to the Attorney General to consider whether a quo warranto would not lie in such a case against the Ecclesiastical Court. 3 Atk. 631. In a subsequent case in B. R. (Miss Cutler's) the power of appointment in the Ecclesiastical Courts was considered as confined to Guardians ad litem, and therefore perfectly insignificant. 3 Ent. 1436. See 1 Inst. 88 b. in n.

The above recapitulation, as to Guardians, is exclusive of any thing relative to the Royal family. See the arguments in the case on the King's right, in respect to the education and marriage of his grand-children, which was referred to the Judges in the reign of Geo. I. Forr. 401. See also the Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 11; and this Dict. tit. King.

The following miscellaneous observations may serve further to illustrate the above propositions:

Guardianship is a thing cognisable by the temporal courts, where a devise is made of it, which courts are to judge whether the devise be pursuant to the statute. 1 Vent. 207.

The husband of a woman under age cannot disavow a Guardian made by the court for his wife. 1 Kent. 185. An infant, it is said, cannot revoke the authority of the Guardian: but the court may discharge one Guardian, and assign another at their discretion; and the justices of Nisi prius, &c. may assign a new Guardian. Palm. 252: Style 456: Noy. 49: 1 Danv. Abr. 604.

The eldest son of the half blood shall be Guardian in socage, to a son by a second yenter; and when the minor attains the age of fourteen years, he may chuse his Guardian before a judge, at his chambers, or in court, or in the Chancery. Cro. Jac. 219. Though a father is Guardian by nature, yet a man may be Guardian to an infant against his father, for prevention of waste; which is a forfeiture of Guardianship. Hard. 96.

If a woman hath issue a son by a former husband, and marries a second husband, seized of socage lands, by whom she has issue another son, and the husband and wife die, leaving the second son under fourteen, his brother of the half blood shall be Guardian in socage; as next of kin, to whom the inheritance cannot descend. Cro. Eliz. 825: 2 And. 171: Moor 635: 2 Jon. 17.

An infant, idiot, lunatick, non compos, one blind and dumb, deaf and dumb, or leper removed, cannot be Guardian in socage. Co. Lit. 88 b.

It is clearly agreed, That the King, as pater patriæ, is universal Guardian of all infants, idiots and lunaticks, who cannot take care of themselves; and as this care cannot be exercised otherwise than by appointing them proper curators or committees, it seems also agreed, that the King may, as he has done, delegate the authority to his Chancellor; therefore at this day, the court of Chancery is the only proper court which hath jurisdiction in appointing and removing Guardians, and in preventing them and others from abusing their persons or estates. 2 Inst. 14: 4 Co. 126: Staundf. Præ. 37. See title Idiots and Lunaticks, and ante 7.

And as the Court of Chancery is now invested with this authority, hence in every day's practice we find that court determining, as to the right of Guardianship, who is the next of kin, and who the most proper Guardian; as also orders are made by that court on petition, or motion, for the provision of infants during any dispute herein; as likewise Guardians removed or compelled to give security; they and others punished for abuses committed on infants, and effectual care taken to prevent any abuses intended them in their persons or estates; all such wrongs and injuries being reckoned a contempt of that court, it having by an established jurisdiction, the protection of all persons under natural disabilities. 2 Mod. 177.

II. THOUGH Guardianship in Chivalry is now abolished by Stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24, already so often mentioned; it may be useful as well as curious to consider the following summary concerning it. See 1 Inst. 88 b; n. 11.

This guardianship could only be where the estate vested in the infant by descent.—All males under 21 at the ancestor's death were liable to it; but not females unless they were under 14.—It extended not only to the the person of the infant, but also to all such of his lands and tenements as were within the Guardian's feignory; and if the King was Guardian in respect of a tenure in capite, then to the whole of the infant's estate of whomsoever holden, whatever the tenure; and whether lying in tenure or not.—If the infant heir held lands by knight's service of several lords, each had the wardship of the land within his feignory; and as to the body, the wardship of it belonged to that lord of whom the tenure was most ancient, he being styled the lord by priority, and the others lords by posteriority: but if any lands of the infant were holden of the King by knight's service in capite, he was intitled to the wardship both of the infant's body and all his lands so held of the crown or of others by knight's service.

This guardianship continued over males till 21, over females till 16 or marriage, when it determined; if the tenure were of a Subject, the heir might enter on the lord immediately; but if the King had the wardship, then the heir was not entitled to take possession of the land without suing for livery to the Crown, which was a process both nice and expensive. See 1 Inst. 77 a.—I. had a preference with respect to the custody of the infant's body over every other species of wardship, except only that of the father where the infant was his heir apparent; even the mother being excluded.—It entitled the lord to make sale of the marriage of the infant, subject only to the restriction of not disparaging; and if the infant refused the marriage tendered by the lord, or married after such a tender and against the lord's consent; in the former case the infant was liable to the payment of a sum equal to the value of the marriage, that is to the profit which the lord might have made by the sale of it; in the latter case, the heir female paid the same sum as for a refusal, but the heir male was charged the double value, which was called a forfeiture of marriage.—The Guardian in chivalry was not accountable for the profits made of the infant's land during the wardship, but received them for his own private emolument, subject only to the bare maintenance of the infant.—Lastly, Guardianship in chivalry being deemed more an interest for the profit of the Guardian, than a trust for the benefit of the Ward, was saleable and transferrable like the ordinary subjects of property, to the best bidder; and if not disposed of was transmissible to the lord's personal representatives.

The above general explication of the nature of wardship in chivalry may well excite a strong idea of the evils necessarily incident to it: and it is natural to wonder how this species of Guardianship should be patiently endured for several centuries after the conquest, and even remain unaltered by any effectual checks to soften its rigour till it was wholly taken away at the Restoration; the true period when Britons gained more real liberty, than any other that can be named in history; by no means even excepting the Revolution: and of this proposition the Habeas-corpus-act and the statute for abolishing tenures are most pregnant proofs; statutes both made in the reign of Car. II. and as far preferable to the vaunted Bill of rights, as practical liberty is to theoretical doctrines.

Perhaps the facility of evading this Guardianship in chivalry, which could only be on a descent, may account both for its being so long submitted to, and for its producing consequences less extensively pernicious than seem almost necessarily incident to it. Various modes of preventing the descent were practised. One was enfeoffing the heir in the ancestor's life-time: another, the enfeoffing strangers on condition to pay a sum, far exceeding the value of the land, at a time so fixed as to correspond with the heir's coming of age, who might then enter for breach of the condition. See Stat. Mulebridge, 52 H. 3 c. 6; 2 Inst. 109. When these modes were declared to be fraudulent, and therefore checked by the said statute, a third more fit to attain the same end succeeded; for uses and trusts being invented, and Guardianship in chivalry being only of legal estates, it became the fashion to make trustments to uses, as well for preventing wardship, as for avoiding reliefs and forfeitures, and indirectly exercising the power of devising; and thus the heir taking only the use of the land on a descent, instead of becoming the legal tenant, he of course escaped being in wardship. This evasion continued in practice till 4 Hen. VII, when the Legislature thought proper once more to interfere, in favour of the lord, and made the heir of cestui que use liable to wardship in chivalry. See Stat. 4 Hen. 7. c. 17; 1 Inst. 84 b; 2 Inst. 110. For some time after this there seems to have been no other means of preventing wardship in chivalry than the ancestor's making a lease for life, with remainder to his heir apparent in fee; but this protection of wardship in chivalry was soon followed by a great diminution of its profits, for in the succeeding reign the statutes of Wills gave the power of devising, so as to deprive the lord of the wardship of two thirds of the land holden by knight's service: in which contracted state this odious species of Guardianship was suffered to languish, till it was entirely abolished, with the other oppressive appendages of military tenures, by the famous statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24.—See 2 Inst. 110, 111: Smith's Rep. Angl. (English edit.) b. 3 c. 5; Staunf. P. C. 4 Inst. 188: Crompt. Jurisd. 112 a.—125: Mad. Exch. 221: Ley on Wards, and Liv. 1 Inst. lib. 2. c. 4: and the abridgments tit. Garde and Gardian.

Guardian in Socage shall make no waste, nor sale of the inheritance, but keep it safely for the heir: and where there hath been some doubt of the sufficiency of a Guardian in socage, the Chancery hath obliged him to give security. 2 Mod. 177. Also a Guardian may be ordered to enter into security by recognisance, nor to suffer a female infant to marry whilst in his custody; and to permit other relations to visit her, &c. 2 Lev. 128. And the court of Chancery will make such Guardian give security not to marry the infant without the court is first acquainted with it. 2 Chan. Rep. 237.

Before the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. Tenant in socage might have disposed of his land, in trust for the benefit of the heir; but it is said he could not devise or dispose of the Guardianship or custody of the heir from the next of kin to whom the land could not descend, because the law gave the Guardianship to such next of kin. Kirke. 186. But now tenant in socage may nominate whom he pleases to have the custody of the heir; and the land shall follow the Guardianship, as an incident given by law to attend the custody; and such special Guardian cannot assign the custody by any act, the trust being personal; nor shall it go to the executor or administrator of the Guardian, but determines by his death. Taugh. 180: Dyer. 189.

As the law hath invested Guardians not with a bare authority only, but also with an interest till the Guardianship ceases; so it hath provided several remedies for Guardians against those who violate that interest: at Common-law there were remedies both droiturel and possessory, to recover the Guardianship. 2 Inst. 90: 9 Co. 71.

A Guardianship of a minor is an interest in the body and lands, &c. of one within age. Guardians to infants, appointed by the court to sue, may acknowledge satisfaction upon the record, for a debt recovered at law for the infant. Trin. 23 Car. 2. B. R. A Guardian in socage may keep courts, in the infant's manors, in his own name, grant copies, &c. He is dominus pro tempore, and hath an interest in the lands. Cro. Jac. 91. Such Guardian may let the land for years, and avow in his own name and right; and his lessee for years may maintain ejectment: but he cannot present to an advowson, for which he may not lawfully account; and the infant must present of whatsoever age. Cro. Jac. 98, 99. Though it is said, if the infant be within the age of discretion, his Guardian may present. 8 E. 2. 10. See 1 Inst. 89 a; and this Dict. tit. Advocat.

In another place Lord Coke extends the doctrine so far as to say that the infant shall present whatsoever his age may be. 3 Inst. 136. But some suppose the Guardian to have the right of presenting in the name of the infant, in general; others admit the right of the infant; but add that if he be of such tender years as not to have any discretion, then the Guardian should present for him. Fin. Abr. tit. Guardian 2 pl. 2. But the law seems now settled in the full extent of Lord Coke's opinion; by a determination of Lord Chancellor King. An advowson was conveyed to trustees on trust to present such person as the grantor his heirs and assigns should by deed appoint: and, on the principle that an infant of any age may present, the Chancellor confirmed an appointment by an infant heir, though it appeared that the child was not a year old, and that the Guardian guided the child's hand in making his mark and putting his seal. 2 Eq. Ab.; Infant B pl. 3: Fin. Abr.; Collat. An. A. pl. 10. and see 3 Aik. 710. It still remains however undecided whether the want of discretion might not induce a court of equity to controul the exercise of this right by an infant, in case a presentation should be obtained without the concurrence of his Guardian. 1 Inst. 89 a. in n. 1.

A Guardian for nurture of the minor, appointed by will, hath power to make leases at will only. Co. Eliz. 678, 734. A testamentary Guardian cannot make a lease of the infant's lands; but such lease is absolutely void. 2 Willf. 129, 135. Guardians are to take the profits of the minor's lands, &c. to the use of the minor, and account for the same: they ought to sell all moveables in a reasonable time, and turn them into land or money, except the minor is near of age, and may want such goods himself: and they shall pay interest for money in their hands, which might have been put out at interest; in which case it shall be presumed the Guardians made use of it themselves. 3 Salk. 177.

III. THE POWER and reciprocal duty of a Guardian and Ward are the same pro tempore as that of a parent and child; but the Guardian when the Ward comes of age is bound to give him an account of all that he has transacted on his behalf, and must answer for all losses by his wilful default or negligence. In order therefore to prevent disagreeable contents with young gentlemen, it has become a practice for many Guardians, of large estates especially, to indemnify themselves by applying to the Court of Chancery, acting under its direction and accounting annually before the officers of that court. And that court in case any Guardian abuses his trust will check and punish him, and sometimes proceed to the removal of him and appoint another in his stead. 1 Sid. 424: 1 P. Wms. 703. See 1 Comm. 463. c. 17, and ante I. 7.

At Common-law, both a prohibition of waste, and an action of waste, lay against a guardian in chivalry and a guardian in socage, for voluntary, but not for permissive waste, or waste done by a stranger: 2 Inst. 305.

By the Common-law, guardians in socage are accountable to the infant, either when he comes to the age of fourteen years, or at any time after, as he thinks fit. Co. Lit. 87. And so is one who is Guardian by nature after the infant's age of 21. See ante I. 1; and 1 Inst. 886. n. 9. But the Guardian on his account, shall have allowance of all reasonable expences; and if he is robbed of the rents and profits of the land, without his default or negligence, he shall be discharged thereof upon his account; for he is in the nature of a bailiff or servant to the infant, and undertakes no otherwise than for his diligence and fidelity. Co. Lit. 89 a.

But against a testamentary or other Guardian, whose authority doth not determine till the infant is 21, or being a female attains that age or marries, the infant cannot have action of account before; for the rule of the Common-law is that account shall not lie while the Guardianship continues. But in equity the infant may by prochein amis sue his Guardian for an account during the minority. 2 Vern. 348: 2 P. Wms. 119: 1 Vez. 91: 3 Aik. 621.

A Guardian cannot be charged in account as a receiver: because then he would lose his costs and expences: these it is said being in general allowed only to Guardians and bailiffs and not to receivers. See 1 Inst. 89 a: n. 2; 172 a.

If a Guardian takes a bond for the arrears of rent, he thereby makes it his own debt, and shall be charged with it. 2 Chan. Rep. 97. If a man during a person's infancy receives the profits of an infant's estate, and continues to do so for several years after the infant comes of age, before any entry is made on him; yet he shall account for the profits throughout, and not during the infancy only. 1 Eq. Abr. 280. A receiver to the Guardian of an infant, who has had his account allowed him by the Guardian, shall not be obliged to account over again to the infant when he comes of age. Preced. Chan. 535.

A Guardian shall answer for what is lost by his fraud, negligence or omission; but not for any casual events, as where the thing had been well but for such an accident. Litt. 123. By statute Mag. Cart. 9 H. 3. c. 3, Guardians were to retain the lands till the heir comes of age, and then restore the same as fully stocked, &c. as received, By stat. 6 An. c. 18, Persons who are Guardians or trustees for infants holding over, without the consent of the person next intitled, shall be adjudged trespassers, and be accountable for profits, &c. By stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 27, Action of account may be brought against the executors or administrators of a Guardian, &c.

FORM of ELECTION of a GUARDIAN by a MINOR.

K NOW all Men by these presents, That I A. B. of and heir, of, &c. deceased, being now about the age of eighteen years, have elected and chosen, and by these presents do elect and chuse C. D. of &c. to be Guardian of my person and estate, until I shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and I do hereby promise to be ruled and governed by him in all things touching my welfare; and I do authorise and empower the said C. D. to enter upon and take possession of all and every my messuages, lands, tenements, hereditaments and promises whatsoever, situate, lying and being in, &c. in the county of, &c. or elsewhere, whereunto I have or may have any right or title, and to let and set the same, and receive and take the rents, issues and profits thereof, for my use and benefit, during the term aforesaid; giving and hereby granting unto the said C. D. my full power in the said premises; and whatsoever he shall lawfully do or cause to be done in the premises, by virtue hereof, I do hereby promise to ratify and confirm. In witness, &c.

As to Orphans under the custom of London, See that title.

GUARDIAN DE L' ESTEMARY, The Guardian or warden of the Stannaries, or mines in the county of Cornwall, &c. See title Stannaries.

GUARDIANS DE L' EGLISE, Churchwardens. See that title.

GUARDIANS OF THE PEACE, Those that have the keeping of the peace; wardens or conservators thereof. Lamb. Eiven. lib. 1. c. 3. See title Justices of the Peace.

GUARDIAN (OR WARDEN) OF THE CINQUE PORTS. A Magistrate that hath the jurisdiction of the ports or havens, which are commonly called the Cinque Ports, who has there all the authority and jurisdiction the Admiral of England has in places not exempt: and Camden believes this Warden of the Cinque Ports was first erected among us in imitation of the Roman policy, to strengthen the sea coasts against enemies, &c. Camd. Br. 238. See title Cinque Ports.

GUARDIAN OF THE SPIRITUALTIES, The person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed, during the vacancy of the see, is called by this name. See stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 21. and also stat. 3 E. 1. c. 21, in which the word Guardian seems applicable to this officer. The Archbishop is Guardian of the Spiritualties on the vacancy of any see within his province; but when the archiepiscopal see is vacant, the dean and chapter of the archbishop's diocese are Guardians of the Spiritualties, viz. the spiritual jurisdiction of his province and diocese is committed to them. 2 Rol. Abr. 22, 223. The Guardian of the Spiritualties it is said may be either Guardian in law, jure magistratus, as the archbishop is of any diocese in his province; or Guardian by delegation, being he whom the archbishop or vicar general doth for the time appoint. The Guardian of the Spiritualties hath all manner of ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the courts, power of granting licences and dispensations, probate of wills, &c. during the vacancy, and of admitting and instituting clerks presented; but such Guardians cannot, as such, consecrate or ordain, or present to any benefices. See stat. 13 Elix. c. 12: Wood's Inst. 25, 27.

GUARDIAN OF THE TEMPORALTIES. [Temporarium.] The person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the King.—Who as steward of the goods and profits was to give an account to the escheator, and he unto the Exchequer.—His trust continued till the vacancy was supplied, and the successor obtained the King's writ de restitutione temporarium, which was usually after consecration. Dist.

GUEST, Sax. Gest, Fr. Gist. a stage of rest in a journey. A lodger or stranger in an inn, &c. See titles Inns and Innkeepers.

GUIDAGE, Guidagium.] An old legal word, signifying that which is given for safe conduct through a strange land, or unknown country. Est guidagium quod datur alicui, ut tuto conducatur per terram alienius. Consuetud. Burgund. p. 119: 2 Inst. 526.

GUILD, from Sax. Gildan, to pay.] A fraternity or company, because every one was gildare, i. e. to pay something toward the charge and support of the company. The original of these guilds and fraternities is said to be from the old Saxon law, by which neighbours entered into an association and became bound for each other, to bring forth him who committed any crime, or make satisfaction to the party injured, for which purpose they raised a sum of money among themselves, and put into a common stock, whereout a pecuniary compensation was made according to the quality of the offence committed. From hence came our fraternities and guilds; and they were in use in this kingdom long before any formal licences were granted for them: though at this day they are a company combined together, with orders and laws made by themselves, by the prince's licence. Camd.

Gilda Mercatoria, or the Merchants' Guild, is a liberty or privilege granted to merchants, whereby they are enabled to hold certain pleas of land, &c. within their own precinct. 37 Ed. 3: 15 R. 2. King Ed. III. in the 14th year of his reign, granted licence to the men of Cowert to erect a Merchants' Guild, and also a fraternity of brethren and sisters, with a master or warden, and that they might make chantries, bestow alms, do other works of piety, and constitute ordinances touching the same, &c. And King Hen. IV. in the 4th year of his reign gave licence to found a Guild of the Holy Cross at Stratford upon Avon. Antiq. Warwicksh. 119, 522. Guild, or Gild, is also used for a tribute, or tax, an amercement, &c. 27 Ed. 3: 11 H. 6: 15 Car. 2. See Geld; and more fully title Corporation: Londn.

GUILD HALL, The chief hall of the city of London, for the Meeting of the Lord Mayor and Commonalty of the city, making laws and ordinances, holding of courts, &c. Gildarum nomine continentur non solum minores fraternitates, sed ipse etiam civitatum communitates. Spelm. It also signifies the chief hall of other cities and corporate towns; the Sessions-hall in King-Street, Westminster, is called the Guild-hall.

GUILDHEDA TEUTONICORUM. The fraternity of Easterling merchants in London, called the Still-yard. See Stat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 8.

GUILD-RENTS, Rents payable to the crown, by any guild or fraternity; or such rents as formerly belonged to religious Guilds, and came to the crown at the general dissolution of monasteries, being ordered to be sold by the Stat. 22 Car. 2. cap. 6.

GUILDER, A Foreign coin: the German guilder is 3 s. 8 d. and the golden one in some parts of Germany 4 s. 9 d. In Portugal it passes for 5 s. but the Poland and Holland guilder is but 2 s. In Holland, merchants keep their accounts in Guilders, &c.

GULE or AUGUST, Gula Augusti, Goule d' Aout.] The day of St. Peter ad Vincula, which is celebrated on the 1st of August, and called the Gule of August, from the Lat. Gula a throat; for this reason, (as pretended) that one Quirinus, a tribune, having a daughter that had a disease in her throat, went to Pope Alexander, (the sixth from St. Peter,) and desired of him to see the chains that St. Peter was chained with under Nero, which request being granted, she the said daughter kissing the chains, was cured of her disease; whereupon the Pope instituted this feast in honour of St. Peter; and, as before, this day was termed only the calends of August, it was on this occasion called indifferently either St. Peter's day ad Vincula, from what wrought the miracle, or the Gule of August, from that part of the virgin whereon it was wrought. Durand's Rationale Divinorum, lib. 7. cap. 19. It is mentioned F. N. B. 62: Plowd. 316: Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 30.

GUNS. See titles Arms: Game.

GUNPOWDER. It is lawful for all persons, as well strangers as natural born subjects, to import any quantities of Gunpowder or salt-petre, brimstone, and other materials for the making thereof, and to make and sell Gunpowder, &c. Stat. 16 Car. 1. cap. 21.

To obtain an exclusive patent for the sole making or importation of gunpowder or arms, or to hinder others from importing them, incurs the penalties of præmunire by Stats. 16 Car. 1. c. 21: 1 Jac. 2. c. 8.

The Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 61, reduces into one and repeals all former acts relative to the making, keeping, and carrying of Gunpowder.

By this act it is provided, that no person shall make gunpowder but in the regular manufactories, established at the time of making the statute, or licensed by the Sessions pursuant to the provisions in § 13, &c. on forfeiture of the Gunpowder and 2 s. per pound, § 1.—Pestle mills not to be used; on the like penalty, § 2.—Only 40 pounds of powder to be made at one time under one pair of stones; except battle-powder a fine sowing powder so called, made at Battel and elsewhere in Suffex, §§ 3. 5.—Not more than 40 hundred weight to be dried at one time in one stove. § 6.—only the quantity absolutely necessary for immediate use to be kept in or near the place of making, except in brick or stone magazines 50 yards at least from the mill, § 7. All Gunpowder makers to have a brick or stone magazine near the Thames below Blackwall to keep the Gunpowder when made, on penalty of 25 l. per month; and 5 l. a day for not removing it when made; with all possible diligence. § 8. Charcoal not to be kept within 20 yards of the mill, § 10.—No dealer to keep more than 200 pounds of powder, nor any person not a dealer more than 50 pounds, in the cities of London and Westminster or within 3 miles thereof; or within any other city, borough or market town or one mile thereof; or within two miles of the King's palaces or magazines, or half a mile of any parish church; on pain of forfeiture and 2 s. per pound; except in licensed mills; or to the amount of 300 pounds for the use of collieries within 200 yards of them. § 12.—§§ 13, 14, 15, 16, contain provisions respecting the licensing mills, building magazines, &c.—Not more than 25 barrels to be carried in any land carriage, nor more than 200 barrels by water (unless going beyond sea or coastwise;) each barrel to contain not more than 100 pounds.—Various means are directed for the safe conveyance, in both cases, and to prevent all danger and delay, § 18.—22. Justices of peace may search mills, houses, carriages, &c. § 23.—Outward bound ships to take in, and homeward bound to discharge their gunpowder at or below Blackwall; and be searched by the officers of the Trinity house. § 24, 5. Penalties to be recovered before two justices; and prosecutions to be within 14 days, § 26, 7.—General exceptions are made as to his majesty's mills, storehouses and magazines; and as to powder sent with the army or militia; and exported or carried coastwise below Blackwall § 29, 30.

It seems that erecting powder mills, or keeping magazines near a town is a nuisance at Common-law, punishable by indictment or information. Sira. 1169: And see § 15, of the above mentioned statute.

HABEAS CORPUS,

THE SUBJECT'S WRIT OF RIGHT, in cases where he is aggrieved by illegal imprisonment: Founded on the Common law, and secured by various statutes; of which the last and most powerful, the stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. is emphatically styled THE HABEAS CORPUS ACT; and is at least next in importance, if not indeed as relates to modern times, superior in its beneficial effect, to Magna Charta. See 2 Inst 55, 615: 4 Inst. 182: Cro Jac. 543: 2 Ro Ab. 69: Com. Journ. April 1st, 1628.

Next to Personal Security the law of England regards, asserts, and preserves, the personal Liberty of individuals against all imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law.—This is a right strictly natural, and the laws of England have never abridged it without sufficient cause; nor can it ever be abridged in this kingdom at the mere discretion of the magistrate, without the explicit permission of the laws.—The language of the Great Charter is, that no freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, but by the lawful judgment of his equals, or by the law of the land. Mag C c. 29 And many subsequent old statutes expressly direct that no man shall be taken or imprisoned by suggestion or petition to the King or his Council, unless it be by legal indictment, or the process of the Common law. See Stats. 5 E. 3. c. 9: 25 E. 3. R. 5. c. 4: 28 Ed. 3. c. 3. By the Petition of Right, 3 Car. 1. it is enacted that no freeman shall be imprisoned or detained without cause shewn, to which he may make answer according to law.—By stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10, if any person be restrained of his liberty, by order or decree of any illegal court, or by command of the King's Majesty in person, or by warrant of the council board, or of any of the privy council, he shall upon demand of his counsel have a writ of Habeas Corpus, to bring his body before the court of King's Bench or Common Pleas; who shall within three court days determine whether the cause of his commitment be just, and thereupon do as to justice shall appertain. And by the Habeas Corpus Act, stat. 31 C. 2. c. 2. the methods of obtaining this writ are so plainly pointed out and enforced, that so long as this statute remains unimpeached, no Subject of England can be long detained in prison, except in those cases in which the law requires and justifies such detainer: And lest this act should be evaded by demanding unreasonable Bail or sureties for the prisoner's appearance, it is declared by stat. 1 W & M R. 2. c. 2. that excessive bail ought not to be required. 1 Comm. 135. c. 1.

Of great importance to the Public is the preservation of this personal liberty: for if once it were left in the power of any, the highest, Magistrate to imprison arbitrarily, whenever he or his officers thought proper, there would soon be an end of all other rights and immunities.

And yet sometimes when the State is in real danger, even this measure may be necessary. But the happiness of our Constitution is, that it is not left to the Executive Power to determine when the danger of the State is so great as to render this measure expedient; for it is the Parliament only, or Legislative Power, consisting of King, Lords and Commons, that, wherever it sees proper, can authorize one branch of it, the Crown, by suspending the Habeas Corpus Act for a short and limited time, and in certain specified particulars, to imprison suspected persons without giving any reason for so doing. An experiment which ought only to be tried, and which we believe has never been tried, but in cases of extreme emergency: and in these the nation parts with a portion of its liberty for a while in order to preserve the whole for ever. See 1 Comm. c. 1: 136,—and this Dict. title Government; ad fin.

Having said thus much in general we may pursue our enquiries under the following heads.

- I. The Nature, various kinds, and Effects of this Writ.
- II. Further, by whom, and in what cases, it is grantable.
- III. What shall be a Proper return of such Writ.

I. THE WRIT of Habeas Corpus is the most celebrated writ in the English law. Various kinds of it are made use of by the courts at Westminster for removing prisoners from one court into another for the more easy administration of justice.

One of those is the Habeas corpus ad respondendum, when a man hath a cause of action against one, who is confined by the process of some inferior court; in order to remove the Prisoner and charge him with this new action in the court above, 2 Mol. 198. For inferior courts being tied down to causes arising within their own jurisdiction, the party would be without remedy, unless allowed to sue in another court; but it seems, that regularly a person confined in B. R. cannot be removed to C. B. by this writ, nor vice versa; for in these cases there can be no defect of justice, as these courts have consueance as well of local, as transitory actions. Dyer 197 a: 249. pl. 84; 296, 307: 1 Med. 235: Styl. Prae. Reg. 330.

The Habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum, is used when a Prisoner hath had judgment against him in an action, and the plaintiff is desirous to bring him up to some superior court to charge him with process of execution. 2 Lill. Prae. Reg. 4.

HABEAS CORPUS. I.

*On this writ the attorney for the plaintiff must endorse the number roll of the judgment on the back of the writ. Style Regis. 331.

Habeas Corpus upon a cepi, where the party is taken in execution in the court below—So upon an attachment out of Chancery, and a cepi corpus returned by the sheriff, the next step is a Habeas Corpus; for the sheriff having executed the command of the writ of attachment by taking the body, he cannot carry him out of the county without the King's writ. Dist.

Of the same nature are writs of Habeas Corpus ad prosequendum, ad faciendum, deliberandum, &c. which issue when it is necessary to remove a prisoner, in order to prosecute, or bear testimony in any court, or to be tried in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. See Sty. Reg. 331, 119, 126, 230: Comb. 17, 48.

Lastly, as relates to writs of Habeas Corpus for these confined purposes, may be mentioned the common writ ad faciendum et recipiendum; which issues only in civil cases out of any of the courts in Westminster Hall, when a person is sued in some inferior jurisdiction, and is desirous to remove the action into the superior court; commanding the inferior judges to produce the body of the defendant, together with the day and cause of his caption and detainer; whence this writ is frequently denominated an Habeas Corpus cum causa; to do what recipere whatsoever the King's court shall consider in that behalf.—In this case the body is to be removed by Habeas Corpus; but the proceedings, by certiorari. 3 Bac. Abr. This is a writ grantable of common right without any motion in court; and instantly supercedes all proceedings in the court below. 2 Mod. 306. But in order to prevent the surreptitious discharge of prisoners, it is ordained by Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13, that no Habeas Corpus shall issue to remove any prisoner out of any gaol, unless signed by some Judge of the Court out of which it is awarded. And to avoid vexatious delays by removal of frivolous causes, it is enacted by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 23, that where the Judge of an inferior court of record is a barrister of three years' standing, no cause shall be removed from thence by Habeas Corpus or other writ, after issue or demurrer deliberately joined—That no cause, if once remanded to the inferior court by writ of procedendo or otherwise, shall ever afterwards be again removed; and that no cause shall be removed at all, if the debt or damages laid in the declaration do not amount to the sum of 5*l.*—But an expedient having been found out to elude the latter branch of the statute, by procuring a nominal plaintiff to bring another action for 5*l.* or upwards; (when by the course of the Court the Habeas Corpus removed both actions together;) it is therefore enacted by stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29, that the inferior court may proceed in such actions as are under the value of 5*l.* notwithstanding other actions may be brought against the same defendant to a greater amount. And by stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70, no cause under the value of 10*l.* shall be removed by Habeas Corpus, or otherwise, into any superior court unless the defendant so removing the same shall give special bail for payment of the debt and costs. See 3 Comm. c. 8.

No writ of Habeas Corpus, or other writ to remove a cause out of an inferior court, shall be allowed, except delivered to the Judge of the court, before the jury to try the cause have appeared, and before any of them are sworn. Stat. 3 Eliz. cap. 5.

See further, Impey's Practice in K. B. as to the mode of suing out a Habeas Corpus for the purpose of removing a Debtor to the King's Bench prison.

But the Great and efficacious Writ in all manner of illegal confinement, is that of HABEAS CORPUS AD SUBJICIENDUM: directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, ad faciendum, subjiciendum et recipiendum; to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the Judge or court awarding such writ shall consider in that behalf. 8 St. Tr. 142.

This is a high prerogative writ, and therefore, by the Common law, issuing out of the court of King's Bench, not only in term time, but also during the vacation, by a fiat from the Chief Justice or any other of the Judges; and running into all parts of the King's dominions: for the King is at all times entitled to have an account why the liberty of any of his Subjects is restrained, whenever that restraint may be inflicted. Cra. Jac. 543. If it issues in vacation, it is usually returnable before the Judge himself who awarded it, and he proceeds by himself thereon, unless the term should intervene, and then it may be returned in Court. Burr. 856, 460, 542, 606.

If the party were privileged in the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer, as being, or supposed to be, an officer or suitor of the Court, this Habeas Corpus ad subjiciendum might also by Common-law have been awarded from thence. 2 Inst. 55: 4 Inst. 290: 2 Hal. P. C. 144: 2 Vent. 22. And if the cause of imprisonment were palpably illegal, they might have discharged him. Vaugb. 155. But if he were committed for any criminal matter, they could only have remanded him or taken bail for his appearance in the Court of K. B. which occasioned the Common Pleas for some-time to discountenance such applications. Carter 221: 2 Jon. 13. But since the Stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 10, above recited, expressly mentioned the Courts of K. B. and C. P. as co-ordinate in this jurisdiction, it hath been holden that every Subject of the kingdom is equally entitled to the benefit of the Common law writ in either of those courts at his option. 2 Mod. 198. It hath also been said that the like Habeas Corpus may issue out of the Court of Chancery in vacation; but upon the famous application to Lord Nottingham by Jenks, notwithstanding the most diligent searches, no precedent could be found where the chancellor had issued such a writ in vacation, and therefore his Lordship refused it. See 4 Inst. 182: 2 Hal. P. C. 147: 3 Comm. 132. c. 8.

In the King's Bench and Common Pleas it is necessary to apply for it by motion to the Court, as in the case of all other prerogative writs; (as Certiorari, Prohibition, Mandamus, &c;) which do not issue as of mere course, without shewing some probable cause why the extraordinary power of the crown is called in to the party's assistance. 2 Mod. 306: 1 Lev. 1. For, as was argued, by Lord Chief Justice Vaughan, "it is granted on motion because it cannot be had of course; and there is therefore no necessity to grant it: for the Court ought to be satisfied that the party hath a probable cause to be delivered." 2 Jon. 13. And this seems the more reasonable, because, when once granted, the person to whom it is directed can return no satisfactory excuse for not bringing up the body of the prisoner. Cra. Jac. 543. So that if it issued of mere course, without shewing to the court or Judge some reasonable ground for awarding it, a traitor or felon under sentence of death, a soldier or mariner in the the King's service, a wife, a child, a relation, or a domestick confined for insanity or other prudential reasons might obtain a temporary enlargement by suing out an Habeas Corpus, tho' sure to be remanded as soon as brought up to the Court. And therefore Coke when Chief Justice did not scruple to deny a Habeas Corpus to one confined, by the Court of Admiralty, for piracy; there appearing on his own shewing sufficient grounds to confine him. 3 Bullst. 27; and see 2 Ro. Rep. 138. On the other hand if a probable ground be shewn, that the party is imprisoned without just cause, and therefore hath a right to be delivered, the writ of Habeas Corpus is then a Writ of Right which "may not be denied, but ought to be granted to every man that is committed, or detained in prison, or otherwise restrained tho' it be by command of the King, the privy council, or any other." Com. Journ. Ap. 1, 1628. See 2 Inst. 615.

The personal liberty of the Subject, as has been already observed, is a natural inherent right which cannot be surrendered or forfeited, unless by the commission of some great and atrocious crime; and which ought not to be abridged in any case without the special permission of law. To assert an absolute exemption from imprisonment in all cases is inconsistent with every idea of law and political society; and in the end would destroy all civil liberty, by rendering it's protection impossible: but the glory of the English law consists in clearly defining the times, the causes, and the extent, when, wherefore, and in what degree, the imprisonment of the Subject may be lawful. 'Tis it is which induces the absolute necessity of expressing upon every commitment the reason for which it is made; that the Court upon an Habeas Corpus may examine into its validity; and according to the circumstances of the case may discharge, admit to bail, or remand the prisoner.—Yet early in the reign of Charles I. the Court of K. B. determined that they could not upon an Habeas Corpus either bail or deliver a prisoner, tho' committed without any cause assigned, in case he was committed by the special command of the King, or by the Lords of the privy council. 7 St. Tr. 156. This drew on a parliamentary enquiry, and produced the Petition of Right 3 Car. I. already mentioned; which recites this illegal judgment, and enacts that no freeman hereafter shall be so imprisoned or detained. Some evasions however of this statute, in favour of the Crown, gave rise to the stat. 16 Car. I. c. 10. already stated; and even after this some shifts and devices, not very creditable to the Judges of that time, were made use of to the same unpopular end. See 3 Comm. 134, 5; § 8.

Other abuses had also crept into daily practice, which had in some measure defeated the benefit of this great constitutional remedy. The party imprisoning was at liberty to delay his obedience to the first writ, and might wait till a second and a third, called an alias and a pluries, were issued, before he produced the party; and many other vexatious shifts were practised to detain State Prisoners in custody. But whoever will attentively consider the English History may observe, that the flagrant abuse of any power, by the Crown or its ministers, has always been productive of a struggle which either discovers the exercise of that power to be contrary to law, or (if legal) restrains it for the future. This was the case in the present instance. The oppression of an obscure individual gave birth to the famous HABEAS CORPUS ACT, 31 Car. 2. c. 2; which is frequently considered as another Magna Charta of the kingdom; and by consequence and analogy has also in subsequent times reduced the general method of proceeding on these writs, (though not within the reach of that statute, but issuing merely at the common law,) to the true standard of Law and Liberty.

The Statute itself enacts, 1. That on complaint and request in writing by or on behalf of any person committed and charged with any crime; (unless committed for Treason or felony expressed in the warrant; or as accessory, or on suspicion of being accessory, before the fact, to any petit treason or felony, plainly expressed in the warrant; or unless he is convicted or charged in execution by legal process;) the Lord Chancellor or any of the twelve Judges, in vacation, upon viewing a copy of the warrant, or affidavit that a copy is denied, shall (unless the party has neglected for two terms to apply to any court for his enlargement,) award a Habeas Corpus for such prisoner, returnable immediately before himself, or any of the Judges; and upon the return made, shall, within two days, discharge the party, if bailable, upon giving security to appear and answer to the accusation in the proper court of Judicature.—2. That such writs shall be indorsed, as granted in pursuance of this act, and signed by the person awarding them.—3. That the writ shall be returned, and the prisoner brought up within a limited time, according to the distance, not exceeding in any case twenty days; upon tender of the charges not exceeding 1s. per mile, and security by his own bond to pay the charges of his return, if remanded, and not to escape.—4. That any officer or keeper neglecting to make due returns, or not delivering to the prisoner or his agent, within six hours after demand, a copy of the warrant of commitment, or shifting the custody of a prisoner from one to another, without sufficient reason on authority (specified in the act) shall for the first offence forfeit 100*l.* and for the second offence 200*l.* to the party grieved, and be disabled to hold his office.—5. That no person once delivered by Habeas Corpus, shall be recommitted for the same offence on penalty of 500*l.*—6. That every person committed for Treason or Felony shall, if he requires it, the first week of the next term, or the first day of the next session of Oyer and Terminer, be indicted in that term or session, or else admitted to bail; unless the King's witnesses cannot be produced at that time: and if acquitted, or if not indicted and tried in the second term or session, he shall be discharged from his imprisonment for such imputed offence: but that no person after the assizes shall be opened for the county, in which he is detained, shall be removed by Habeas Corpus, till after the assizes are ended; but shall be left to the justice of the Judges of assize.—7. That any such prisoner may move for and obtain his Habeas Corpus, as well out of the Chancery or Exchequer, as out of the King's Bench or Common Pleas; and the Lord Chancellor or Judges denying the same, on sight of the warrant, or oath that the same is refused, shall forfeit severally to the party grieved, the sum of 500*l.*—8. That this writ of Habeas Corpus shall run into the counties Palatine, Cinque-ports, and other privileged places, and the islands of Jersey and Guernsey.—9. That no inhabitant of England (except persons contracting, or convicted praying, to be transported; or persons having committed some capital offence in the place to which they are sent to be tried;) shall be sent prisoner to Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, or any places beyond the seas, within or without the King's dominions: on pain that the party committing, his advisers, aiders, and assistants, shall forfeit to the party grieved, a sum not less than 500*l.* to be recovered with treble costs; shall be disabled to bear any office of trust or profit; shall incur the penalties of perjury; and shall be incapable of the King's pardon.

This is the substance of that great and important statute, which extends (we may observe) only to the case of commitments for such criminal charge, as can produce no inconvenience to public justice by a temporary enlargement of the prisoner: all other cases of unjust imprisonment being left to the Habeas Corpus at common law. But even upon writs at the common law it is now expected by the Court, agreeable to ancient precedents, and the spirit of the act of Parliament, that this writ should be immediately obeyed, without waiting for any alias or pluries; otherwise an attachment will issue. 4 Burr. 8.6.

By all these admirable regulations, judicial as well as parliamentary, the remedy is now complete for removing the injury of unjust and illegal confinement. A remedy the more necessary, because the oppression does not always arise from the ill-nature, but sometimes from the mere inattention, of Government. For it frequently happens in foreign countries, (and has happened in England during temporary suspensions of the statute,) that persons apprehended upon suspicion have suffered a long imprisonment, merely because they were forgotten. 3 Comm. 135, 8; c. 8.

II. IT IS CLEAR, that both by the Common law, as also by the statute, the Courts of Chancery and King's Bench have jurisdiction of awarding this writ of Habeas Corpus, and that without any privilege in the person for whom it is awarded; but it seems, that by the common law the court of King's Bench could only have awarded it in term time, but that the Chancery might have done it as well out of as in term, because that court is always open. 2 Inst. 55: 4 Inst. 290: 2 And. 297: 2 J. n. 13, 14, 17. Any of the courts at Westminster may award it. See Vaugh. 155; and the Habeas Corpus Act; Ante I.

If the Habeas Corpus issues out of Chancery, and on the return thereof the Lord Chancellor finds that the party was illegally restrained of his liberty, he may discharge him, or if he finds it doubtful, he may bail him; but then it must be to appear in the court of King's Bench, for the Chancellor hath no power in criminal causes; or the Chancellor may commit the party to the Fleet, and in term time may proprio manibus deliver the record into the King's Bench, together with the body; and thereupon the court of King's Bench may proceed to bail, discharge, or commit the prisoner. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 247: 2 Harw. P. C. 114, 115.

No Habeas Corpus lies for an enemy, prisoner of war, however ill used or deceived. 2 Black. Rep. 1324. Nor for a prisoner of war, the subject of a Neutral Power, taken in the enemy's service, into which he was forced, when taken prisoner by them in an English ship. 2 Burr. 765.

If sailors on board a ship are to be produced as witnesses, and have been served with a subpoena, and say they will not attend; a Habeas Corpus ad testificandum may be applied for to the Chief Justice, on affidavit of that fact, and that they are material witnesses; but without which no Habeas Corpus can issue. Cowp. 672.

The Court thought there could be no Habeas Corpus to bring up a prisoner at war to be a witness. Lord Mansfield said the presence of witnesses who are prisoners of war, was generally obtained by an order from the Secretary of State; and an application was made for a Habeas Corpus to bring up such a prisoner, but without success. Afterwards a rule was granted to shew cause why the defendant should not consent either to admit of the fact of the capture, or that the prisoner should be examined upon interrogatories. Dougl. 420. (403) Furley v. Newham.

Besides the efficacy of the writ of Habeas Corpus in liberating the Subject from illegal confinement in a public prison, it also extends its influence to remove every unjust restraint of personal freedom in private life, though imposed by a husband, or a father; but when women or infants are brought before the Court by a Habeas Corpus, the court will only set them free from an unmerited or unreasonable confinement, and will not determine the validity of a marriage, or the right to the guardianship, but will leave them at liberty to chuse where they will go; and if there be any reason to apprehend they will be seized in returning from the court, they will be sent home under the protection of an officer. But if a child is too young to have any discretion of its own, then the court will deliver it into the custody of its parent, or the person who appears to be its legal guardian. See 2 Burr. 1434; where all the prior cases are considered by Lord Mansfield. See also 1 Black. Rep. 386: Str. 982: 2 Lord Raym. 1354: 4 Burr. 1391.

If a party be imprisoned against law, though he is intitled to a Habeas Corpus, yet he may have an action of false imprisonment, in which he shall recover damages in proportion to the injury done him. Fitz. Corpus cum Causa 2: 9 H. 6. 44*a*: 2 Inst. 55: 10 H. 7. 17: 5 Co. 64: 11 Co. 98, 99.

If a person be in custody, and also indicted for some offence in the inferior court, there must, besides the Habeas Corpus to remove the body, be a certiorari to remove the record; for as the certiorari alone removes not the body, so the Habeas Corpus alone removes not the record itself, but only the prisoner with the cause of his commitment; therefore, although upon the Habeas Corpus, and the return thereof, the court can judge of the sufficiency or insufficiency of the return and commitment; and bail or discharge, or remand the prisoner, as the case appears upon the return; yet they cannot upon the bare return of the Habeas Corpus give any judgment, without the record itself be removed by certiorari: but the same stands in the same force it did, though the return should be adjudged insufficient, and the party discharged thereupon of his imprisonment; and the court below may issue new process upon the indictment. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 210, 211: 1 Salk. 352: Comb. 2.

If the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, commit one to the Marshall by his warrant, he ought not to be brought to the bar by rule, but by Habeas Corpus. 1 Salk. 349.

III. In extrajudicial commitments, the warrant of commitment ought to be returned in hæc verba on a Habeas Corpus: but when a man is committed by a court of record, it is in the nature of an execution for a contempt, and in such case the warrant is never returned,

HABEAS CORPUS IV.

5 Mod. 156. The cause of imprisonment must be particularly set forth in the return of the Habeas Corpus, or it will not be good, for by this the court may judge of it; and with a paratum habeo, that they may either discharge, bail, or remand the prisoner. 2 Nels. Abr. 915: Cro. Jac. 543. If a commitment is without cause, or no cause is shewn, a prisoner may be delivered by Habeas Corpus. 1 Salk. 348.

It has been adjudged, that on a commitment by the House of Commons, of persons for contempt and breach of privilege, no court can deliver on a Habeas Corpus: but Holt Ch. J. was of a contrary opinion. 2 Salk. 404, 503. See this Dict. tit. Bail II: Commitment — A writ of error may be allowed by the King in such a case, &c. and it is not to be denied ex debito justitiæ; though it has been a doubt, whether any writ of error lay upon a judgment given on a Habeas Corpus. 2 Silk 404, 503. A man may not be delivered from the commitment of a court of Oyer and Terminer, by Habeas Corpus, without writ of error: and where there appears to be good cause, and a defect only in the form of the commitment, he ought not to be discharged. 1 Salk. 348.

For a false return there is regularly no other remedy against the officer, than an action on the case at the suit of the party grieved, and an information or indictment at the suit of the King. 6 Mod. 90: 1 Salk. 349. But no action lies until the return be filed. 1 Salk. 352.

As upon the return of the writ the court is to judge, whether the cause of the commitment and detainer be according to law, or against it; so the officer or party in whose custody the prisoner is, must, according to the command of the writ, certify on the return thereof, the day, cause of caption, and detainer. Vaugb. 137.

Where a man is committed for any crime either at common law or by act of Parliament, for which he is punishable by indictment, a return that he was committed, et discharged by due course of law, is good. But if the commitment be in pursuance of a special authority, the terms of the commitment must be special and exactly pursue that authority; and therefore if it do not appear on the return to have been according to that authority, the return will be bad. 2 Black Rep. 806, 7.

It seems to be agreed, that no one can in any case controvert the truth of the return to a Habeas Corpus, or plead or suggest any matter repugnant to it; yet it hath been holden, that a man may confess and avoid such a return by admitting the truth of the matters contained in it, and suggesting others not repugnant, which take off the effect of them. Cro. Eliz. 821: 5 Co. 71 b. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 78.

It seems, that, before the return filed, any defect in form, or the want of an averment of a matter of fact, may be amended; but this must be at the peril of the officer, in the same manner as if the return were originally what it is after the amendment. 1 Mou. 102, 103.

But after the return is filed, it becomes a record of the court, and cannot be amended. 1 Mod. 102, 103.

IV. UPON THE RETURN of the Habeas Corpus the prisoner is regularly to be discharged, bailed or remanded; but if it be doubtful which the Court ought to do, it is said that the prisoner may be bailed to appear de die in diem till the matter is determined. 5 Mod. 22: Style 16.

By the Petition of Right, 16 Car. 1. cap. 10, already mentioned, the court must within three days after the return of the Habeas Corpus, either discharge, bail or remand the prisoner. But it seems that a commitment by the court of King's Bench to the Marshalsea, is a remanding, being an imprisonment within the statute. 5 Mod. 22.

Also it hath been ruled, that the court of King's Bench, may, after the return of the Habeas Corpus is filed, remand the prisoner to the same gaol from whence he came, and order him to be brought up from time to time, till they shall have determined whether it is proper to bail, discharge, or remand him absolutely. 1 Vint. 330.

And though in doubtful cases the court is to bail, or discharge the party on the return of the Habeas Corpus, yet if a person be convicted, and the conviction on the return of the Habeas Corpus appears only defective in point of form, it is at the election of the court either to discharge the party, or oblige him to bring his writ of error. 1 Salk. 348: 5 Mod. 19, 20.

If a person be committed by the Admiralty in execution, he is not removable by Habeas Corpus into B. R. to answer an action brought against him there; but it might be otherwise if an action had been before depending. 1 Salk. 351. Where there is an action in B. R. precedent to the King's suit, on which the party is out on bail, Habeas Corpus may be brought by the bail, &c. and the prisoner turned over; though this was greatly opposed in favour of the King's execution. Ibid. 353.

If the Steward of an inferior court proceeds, after an Habeas Corpus delivered and allowed, the proceedings are void; and the court of B. R. will award a superfedeas; and grant an attachment against the steward for the contempt. Cro. Car. 79, 296. An Habeas Corpus suspends the power of the court below, so that if they proceed, it is void, and coram non judice. And on a Habeas Corpus, if the record be filed, no procedendo can go to the court below; but where a record below is not filed, or not returned, it may be granted. 1 Salk. 352.

A Habeas Corpus cum causâ removes the body of the party for whom granted, and all the causes depending against him; (but see stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. ante I.); and if upon the return thereof the officer doth not return all the causes, &c. it is an escape in him. 2 Lil. Abr. 2. A judge will not grant a Habeas Corpus in the vacation, for a prisoner to follow his suits; but the court may grant a special Habeas Corpus for a prisoner to be at his trial in the vacation-time. Ibid. 3. And the court may grant a Habeas Corpus to bring a prisoner, not in prison on execution, out of prison, to be a witness at a trial; though it is at the peril of the party suing out the writ, that the prisoner do not escape. Style 119. And where there is no collusion, even a prisoner in execution may be brought up as a witness. 3 Burr. 1440. But no person ought to take out a Habeas Corpus for any one in prison, without his consent; except it be to turn him over to B. R. or charge him with an action in court. 2 Lil. A man brought into B. R. by Habeas Corpus, shall not be removed thence till he has answered there; he shall be detained until then, and after he may be removed. 1 Salk. 350.

A person is in custody upon a criminal, and also on a civil, matter; if he would move himself by Habeas Corpus, there

There ought to be but one Habeas Corpus on the crown side or plea side, and both causes are to be returned. Mod. Cas. 133. If there be judgment against a defendant in the court of B. R. and another in C. B. on which he is in execution in the Fleet, he may have an Habeas Corpus to remove himself into B. R. where he shall be in custody of the Marshal for both debts. Dyer, 132.

Where an action is founded on the custom of London, for a thing actionable there, and not elsewhere; if it be removed by Habeas Corpus, a procedendo shall be granted: but the declaration itself ought to be returned upon the Habeas Corpus, and then the court will see what was the cause, &c. For the special matter and all the proceedings are to be in the return in this case; as well as in an action on a by-law, to take notice thereof. Cartb. 75, 76. Before a Habeas Corpus is returned and filed, it may be amended; but not afterwards. 2 Lil. Abr. 2.

A feme covert was arrested in London, as a sole-trader, and discharged, by a judge of B. R. on Habeas Corpus, bail being put in to appear in B. R. The next term, on motion, the court granted a procedendo, affidavit of plaintiff's cause of action, &c. being made; for plaintiff could only proceed in London. See Lavinia v. Phillips; 3 Bur. 1776; wherein the reason of the procedendo being granted, is fully discussed and determined.

HABENDUM. See title Dead II. 4.

In a lease or grant to two persons, if the habendum be to one for life, and the remainder to the other for life, this alters the general implication of the jointenancy, which would pass by the premises, if the habendum were not. 2 Rep. 55. And where things which lie in grant are conveyed, to take effect barely on delivery of the deed of grant, without other ceremony; in such case, if the habendum be for a less estate than in the premises, or be repugnant to it, the habendum is void: but when any ceremony is requisite to the perfection of an estate granted, and not a bare delivery only of the deed; and to the estate limited by the habendum, nothing is required to perfect it; there, though the habendum is of a less estate than the premises, the habendum shall stand good, and qualify the estate granted in the premises. 2 Rep. 23.

An habendum may not only qualify what is granted in the premises; but may also enlarge what it thus granted, or explain the premises: though the habendum shall never introduce one who is a stranger to the premises. 1 Jones 4; 3 Leon. 60. If a bargain and sale be made without expressing to whom, although it were habendum to A. B. who is a party to the deed, it is not good; because the habendum is only to limit an estate, and not to give any thing. Co. Eliz. 585 903; 2 Ed. 8: If one thing be granted in the premises of a deed, habendum with another thing, which is not appendant, &c. this other thing shall not pass. H.b. 161, 172. None can take by any deed, who is not named in the premises; but though an estate limited by the habendum to a man that is no party, is void by way of estate, it may be good in remainder. H.b. 313; Godb. 51.

HABENTIA, Riches: In some ancient charters, habentes homines is taken for rich men; and we read, Nec Rex suum pastum requirat, vel habentes homines quas nos dictimus seallung men. Mon. Angl. tom. 1 p. 100.

HABERDASHERS. If any persons work bats with foreign wool, and not having served an apprenticeship to the trade, &c. they shall forfeit the goods and 5*l.*

And no person may dye any caps with bark, &c. but only with copperas and gall, or woad and madder. Stat. 8 Eliz. cap. 7. None shall make bats or felts, that hath not served seven years in felt-making; nor retain any but journeymen who have lawfully served; or have above two apprentices at once, and those not for less than seven years time, &c. on pain of 5*l.* a month: but bat-makers may employ their own children in the trade.— And the masters and wardens of Haberdashers in London, calling to them one of the company of Cappers, and another of the Hat-makers, and mayors, &c. of towns and corporations, may search all batters and punish them that offend, by fines. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 17. To prevent the exportation of bats out of the plantations abroad, which may be seized, and offenders are liable to 500*l.* penalty; and for regulating the trade of bat-making there; &c. See Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 28, and this Dict. title Navigation Acts.

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM, A judicial writ that lies where one hath recovered a term for years in action of ejectione firme, to put him into possession. F. N. B. 167. And one may have a new writ, if a former be not well executed. Mich. 21 Car. 1. B. R. A sheriff delivered possession in the morning, by virtue of an habere facias possessionem, and some time in the same day, after he was gone, the defendant turned the plaintiff out of possession; it was held, that if he had been turned out immediately, or whilst the sheriff or his officers were there, an attachment might be granted against the defendant; for this had been a disturbance in contempt of the execution; but it being several hours after the plaintiff was in possession, the court doubted, but agreed to grant a new habere facias, &c. 2 Salk. 321.

If the sheriff deliver possession of more than is contained in the writ of habere facias possessionem, an action on the case will lie against him, or an assize for the lands. Style 238. The sheriff cannot return upon this writ that another is tenant of the land by right, but must execute the writ, for that will not come in issue between the demandant and him. 6 Rep. 52. See this Dict. titles Ejectionment: Execution.

HABERE FACIAS SEISINAM. A writ directed to the sheriff, to give seisin of a freehold estate recovered in the King's courts, by ejectione firme, or other action. Old Nat. B. 154. The sheriff may raise the posse com tatus in his assistance, to execute these writs: and where a house is recovered in a real action, or by ejectment, the sheriff may break open the doors to deliver possession and seisin thereof; but he ought to signify the cause of his coming, and request that the doors may be opened. 5 Rep. 91. This writ also issues sometimes out of the records of a fine, to give the cognisee seisin of the land whereof the fine is levied. West. Symb. par. 2. And there is a writ called Libere Facias Seisnam, ubi Rex habuit annum, diem & noctem; for the delivery of lands to the Lord of the fee, after the King hath had the year, day, and waste in the lands of a person convicted of felony. Reg. Orig. 156. See title Execution.

HABERE FACIAS VISUM, A writ that lies in divers cases in real actions, as in formadon, &c. where a view is required to be taken of the lands in controversy. Reg. Jud. 20, 28, &c. F. N. B. See title Jury.

HABERGEON, From Germ. Hals, Collar, & Bergen, to gird. An helmet which covered the head and shoulders. Blount.

HABERJECTS,

HABERJECTS, Habergates.] A sort of cloth of a mixed colour, mentioned in Magna Charta cap. 26.

HABILIMENTS or WAR, Armour, utensils, or provisions for the maintaining of war. 3 Edw. cap. 4.

HABLE, Fr.] A sea-port town; this word is used in Stat. 27 H. 6. cap. 3.

HACHIA, A hack, pick, or instrument for digging. Placit. 2 Ed. 3.

HACKNEY COACHES AND CHAIRS. See Coach.

HADBOTE, Sax.] A recompence or amends for violence offered to persons in holy orders. Sax. Dist.

HADE or LAND, Hada terræ.] Is a small quantity of land, thus expressed:—Sursum reddidit in manus domini duas acras terræ continentes decem seliones Et duas Hadas, Anglica ten ridges, and two hades, &c. Rot. Cur. Maner. de Oileton, Anno 16 Jac.

HADERUNGA, Respect or distinction of persons; from the Sax. Hud, Persona, and Arung, honoured and admired. Leg. Ethelred.

HADGONEL, Sax.] Seems to be a tax or mulct.—Mon. Ang. par. 1. fol. 302.

HÆREDE PRODUCTO, A writ that anciently lay for the Lord, who having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not come by his body, the same being carried away by another person. Old Nat. Br. 93.

HÆREDE DELIBERANDO ALTERI, QUI HABET CUSTODIAM TERRÆ, A writ directed to the sheriff to require one that had the body of him who was ward to another, to deliver him to the person whose ward he was, by reason of his land. Reg. Orig. 161.

HÆREDE RAPTO, Also a writ; see Ravishment of Guard. Reg. Orig. 163.

HÆREDIPETA, The next heir to lands.—Leg. H. 1. cap. 70.

HÆRETICO COMBURENDO, A writ that lay against an Hæretick, who having been convicted of heresy by the bishop, and abjured it, afterwards fell into the same again, or some other, and was thereupon delivered over to the secular power. F. N. B. 69. By this writ, grantable out of Chancery, upon a certificate of such conviction, Hæreticks were burnt; and so were likewise witches, forcerers, &c. But the writ de hæretico comburendo lies not at this day. 12 Rep. 93. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 9. See title Heresy.

HAFNE, Danish, A haven or port.] Hafne Courts are granted inter alia, by letters patent of Rich. duke of Glouc. admiral of England. 14 Aug. Anno. 5 Edw. 4.

HAGA, Sax. Manſio.] A house in a city or borough. Domesday. An ancient anonymous author, expounds haga to be a house and shop, domus cum shopa; and in a book which belonged to the Abby of St. Austin in Canterbury, mention is made of bagan monachus, &c. See Co. Lit. 56.

HAGIA, Sax. Hæg, melted into hay, whence haia.] A hedge Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. p. 273.

HAI, An hedge: sometimes taken for a park, &c. enclosed. Bract. Lib. 2. c. 40. And baieiment is used for a hedge-fence. Rot. inq. 36 Ed. 3.

HAIL-SHOT. The Stat. 3 Ed. 6. against shooting of Hail-Shot, or more pellets than one, by any person under the degree of a Lord, &c. is repealed. Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 13.

HAIR-POWDER, Not to be mixed with lime, alabaster, &c. under penalties, by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 14. Vide Starch-powder.

Vol. I.

HAKE, A sort of fish dried and salted; hence the proverb obtains in Kent, As dry as a Hakes' Parch. Bract. 575; Specul.

HAKEON, A military coat of defence. Walf. in Ed. 3.

HALF-BLOOD, Is no impediment to descents of fee-simple lands of the crown, or to dignities, or in descent of estates tail; but in other cases it is an impediment. Administration is grantable to the Half Blood of the deceased, as well as to the whole blood; and Half Blood shall come in for a share of an intestate's personal estate, equally with the whole blood, they being next of kin, in equal degree. Style 74: 1 Vent. 307: Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 10. See titles Descent: Executor.

HALFENDEAL, The moiety, or one half of a thing; as fadingdeal is a quarter, or fourth part of an acre of land, &c.

HALF-MARK, Dimidia Markæ.] A noble, or six shillings and eight-pence in money. If a writ of right is brought, and the seisin of the plaintiff, or his ancestor, be alledged, the seisin is not traversable by the defendant, but he must render the Half Mark for the inquiry of the seisin: which is as much as to say, that though the defendant shall not be admitted to deny, that the plaintiff or his ancestors were seised of the land in question, and to prove his denial; yet he may be allowed to tender half a mark in money, to have an inquiry made, whether the plaintiff, &c. were so seised, or not. F. N. B. 5: Old Nat. Br. 26. But in a writ of advowson brought by the King, the defendant may be permitted to traverse the seisin, by licence, obtained from the King's serjeant; so that the defendant shall not be obliged to proffer the Half Mark, &c. F. N. B. 31.

HALF-SEAL, Is what is used in the Chancery, for sealing of commissions to delegates, upon any appeal to the court of delegates, either in ecclesiastical or marine causes. Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 5.

HALF-TONGUE. See Medietas Linguae, as to pleas and trials of foreigners, and titles Jury: Trial.

HALKE, From Sax. Heall, i. e. Angulus.] An hole; seeking in every Halke, &c.

HALL, Lat. Halla, Sax. Heall.] Was anciently taken for a mansion-house or habitation, being mentioned as such in Domesday, and other records; and this word is retained in many counties of England, especially in the county palatine of Chester, where almost every gentleman of quality's seat is called a Hall.

HALL, or COMMON-HALL. There is a Common-Hall for electing a mayor, sheriffs, and other officers of the city of London, assembled at Guild-Hall by the Lord-Mayor. Ord. 7 W. 3—See titles Incorporation: London.

HALLAGE. Toll paid for goods or merchandize vended in a hall; and particularly applied to a fee or toll due for cloth, brought for sale to Blackwell-Hall in London: Lords of fairs or markets, are entitled to this fee. 6 Rep. 62.

HALLAMAS, The day of All Hallows or All Saints, viz. November 1. and one of the cross quarters of the year was computed in ancient writings from Hallamas to Candlemas. Cowel.

HALLAMSHIRE, A part of the county of York, anciently so called in which the town of Sheffield stands. See Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 23.

HALLMOTE or HALLIMOTE, Sax Hcall, i. e. Aula, & Gemote, Conventus.] That court among the Saxons, which we now call a court baron; and the etymology is from the meeting of the tenants of one hall or manor. The name is still kept up in several places in Hertfordshire; and in the records of Hertford, this court is entered as follows, viz. Hertford Palatium, ad Halimot ibidem tenet 11 Die Octob. Ann. Regis Regi. Hen. 6, &c. It hath been sometimes taken for a convention of citizens in their public hall, where they held their courts, which was also called Folkmoete and Halmote. But the word Halimote is rather the lord's court held within the manor, in which the differences between the tenants were determined. See Leg. Hen. 1 cap. 10.

HALYMOTE, Is properly an holy or ecclesiastical court; but there is a court in London, formerly held on the Sunday next before St. Thomas's day, called the halymote or holy court, Curia Sanctimotus, for regulating the bakers of the city, &c. Blount See title London.

HALYWERC FOLK, Helywercfolk, or people who enjoyed lands by the service of repairing or defending a church or sepulchre; for which pious labours they were exempt from all feudal and military services. It did signify such of the province of Durham in particular, as held their lands to defend the corpse of St. Cuthbert; and who claimed the privilege not to be forced to go out of the bishoprick, either by the King or Bishop. Hist. Durclm. apud Warton Ang. Sax. par. 1. p. 749. Mon. Angl. 1, 512. Blount.

HAM, A Saxon word, used for a place of dwelling; a village or town. hence the termination of some of our towns, as Nottingham, Buckingham, &c. Also a home close, or little narrow meadow is called ham. Blount.

HAMBLING or HAMELING or DOGS, The ancient term used by foresters for expeditating. Manwood.

HAMBURGH COMPANY. This, the oldest of our Trading Companies and heretofore more usually called Merchants Adventurers, took warning from the repeated complaints made of their monopoly (the last of which was in 1661) and facilitated the admission by private regulations made by themselves. Add to this, it was, like the Hulstons Bay Company without any parliamentary sanction, and had not been able even during the reigns of Charles II. and James II. to protect its exclusive privileges against the separate adventurers. See Reeves's Law of Shipping and Navigation.

HAMESECKEN Burglary or nocturnal house breaking, was by our antient law called Hameficken, as it is in Scotland to this day. 4 Comm 223. See tit. Burglary.

HAMFARE, Breach of the peace in a house. Brompton in Leicb. H. 1 c. 80. See Hamsoken.

HAMELI; HEMEL; HAMPSEL, From the Sax. Ham, i. e. Domus, and Gem. Lit. Membrum.] A little village, or part of a village or parish; of which three words, hamlet is now only used; though Kitchin mentions the other two, Hamel and Hampfel. By Spelman there is a difference between villam integram, villam dimidiam, and hamletam; a hamlet being quæ mediocritatem friborgi non obstat, hoc est, ubi 5 capitales plegii non deprehensi sunt. Stowe expounds it to be the seat of a freeholder. Several country towns have hamlets, as there may be several hamlets in a parish; and some particular places may be out of a town or hamlet, though not out of the county. Wood. 3

HAMSOCA or HAMSOKEN. See Hamsoken.

HANAPER OFFICE. One of the offices so called, belonging to the Court of Chancery. Writs relating to the business of the Subject and their returns, were, according to the simplicity of ancient times, originally kept in an hamper, in hanaperio; and the others, relating to such matters wherein the Crown is immediately, or mediately concerned, were preserved in a little sack or bag, in parva baga; and thence hath arisen the distinction, of the Hanaper Office, and petty-bag office, which both belong to the Common-law Court in Chancery. 3 Comm. 49. See title Chancery.

HANDEBOROW, A surety or manual pledge, i. e. an inferior undertaker; for headborow is the superior or chief. Spelm.

HAND IN AND OUT, Is the name of an unlawful Game now disused, and prohibited by statute 17 Ed. 4. c. 2.

HANDFUL, In measuring, is four inches by the standard. Anno 33 H. 8. c. 5.

HANDGRITH, From Sax. Hond, manus, and Grith, Pax.] Peace or protection given by the King, with his own hand — Leg. Hen. 1.

HAND-GUN, An engine to destroy game. Stat. 33 Hen. 8 See title Game.

HAND-HABEND, A thief caught in the very fact, having the goods stolen, in his hand. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 59: Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 8, 32 & 35: Fleta lib. 1. c. 38. See Backbitinde.

HAND-WRITING. See Similitude; Evidence.

HANDY-WARP, A kind of cloth. Stat. 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 5.

HANGWITE alias HANGWIT, From Sax. Hangan, i. e. suspendere, & wite, multa.] A liberty granted to a person, whereby he is quit of a felon or thief hanged without judgment, or escaped out of custody. Rastal. We read it interpreted to be quit de laron pendu sans serjeans le Roy, i. e. without legal trial: and elsewhere, multa pro latrone præter jussu exigentiam suspensio vel claspso. And it may signify a liberty, whereby a lord challenges the forfeiture for him who hangs himself within the lord's fee. Domesday.

HANIG, A term for customary labour to be done and performed. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 264.

HANPER or HANAPER, Hanperium.] The Hanaper of the Chancery; it seems to be the same as Fiscus originally in the Latin. 10 R. 2. c. 1. See Hanaper.

HANSE, An old Gothick word.] A Society of Merchants, for the good usage and safe passage of merchandise from one kingdom to another. The Hanse or mercatorum societas, was and in part yet is endowed with many large privileges by Princes within their territories; and had four principal seats or Staples, where the Almain, or German and Dutch merchants, being the founders of this society, had an especial house: one of which was here in London, called the Steel Yard. Ortelius's Index ad Theat. vno bo Asiatici.

HANSTOWNS, Probably from the German Hansa, i. e. Societas.

Towards the middle of the thirteenth century, the nations around the Baltick were extremely barbarous, and infested that sea with their piracies: this obliged the cities of Lubeck and Hamburg, soon after they began to open some trade with these people, to enter into a league of of mutual defence. They derived such advantages from this union, that other towns acceded to their confederacy, and in a short time eight of the most considerable cities scattered through these vast countries, which stretch from the bottom of the Sallick, to Cologne, on the Rhine, joined in the famous Hanseatic league, which became so formidable, that its alliance was courted, and its enmity dreaded by the greatest monarchs. The members of this powerful association formed the first systematic plan of commerce, known in the middle ages, and conducted it by common laws enacted in their general assemblies. Robertson's Hist. Emp. Char. V. 1 P. 79, 80. See Id. fo. 336.

HANTELODE, An arrest, from the Germ. Hant, an hand, and loed, i. e. laid; manus immissio: As arrests are made by laying hold on the debtor, &c.

HAP, Fr. Mapper, i. e. Rapre, to catch. Is of the same signification with us as in the French; as to hap the rent, is where partition being made between two parceners, and more land allowed to one than the other, she that has most of the land charges it to the other, and she *happ*s the rent, whereon assise is brought, &c. This word is used by Littleton, where a person happeth the possession of a deed poll. Lit. § 8.

HAQUE, A little hand-gun, prohibited to be used by stats. 33 H. 8. c. 6: 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 14. There is the half haque or demy haque, within those acts. See titles Arms: Game.

HAQUEBUT, A bigger sort of hand-gun than the haque, from the Teuton, hack butse; it is otherwise called an arquebuse, vulgarly a bagbut. See stats. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 14 & 5 P. & M. c. 2. and titles Arms: Game.

HARATUM, From the Fr. Haras.] A race of horses and mares, kept for breed; in some parts of England termed a stud of mares. &c. Spelm. Gloss.

HARBINGER, An officer of the King's house, &c.

HARBOURS AND HAVENS. Upon the principles of our constitution which places the Executive Power in the hands of the Monarch, the King has the prerogative of appointing Ports and Havens or such places only, for persons and merchandise to pass into and out of the realm, as he in his wisdom seems proper. By the feudal law all navigable rivers and havens were computed among the regalia and were subject to the Sovereign of the State. And in England it hath always been holden, that the King is lord of the whole shore, and particularly is the guardian of the ports and havens, which are the inlets and gates of the realm. F. N. B. 113: Dac. 9, 56. Therefore as early as the reign of King John, we find ships seized by the King's officers for putting in at a place that was not a legal port. Madex Hist. Exb. 530. These legal ports were undoubtedly at first assigned by the crown, since to each of them a court of portmote is incident, the jurisdiction of which must flow from the royal authority. 4 Inst. 148. The great ports of the sea are also referred to, as well known and established by stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 20, which prohibits the landing elsewhere under pain of confiscation: and the Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 11, recites that the franchise of lading and discharging had been frequently granted by the crown.

But though the King had a power of granting the franchise of havens and ports, yet he had not the power of resumption or of narrowing and confining their limits when once established; but any person had a right to lade or discharge his merchandise in any part of the haven: whereby the revenue of the customs was much impaired and diminished, by fraudulent landings in obscure and private corners. This occasioned the Stats. 1 Eliz. c. 11: 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. § 14; which enabled the Crown by commission to ascertain the limits of all Ports, and to assign proper Wharfs and Quays in each port, for the exclusive landing and lading of merchandise. 1 Comm. 264. c. 7. See further this Dict. tit. Navigation Acts.

By the Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 22, If any master of a ship shall cast out of any ship, riding in any haven, &c. any ballast, &c. but only on land, where the tide never flows or runs, he may be fined by the justices, not more than 5*l.* nor less than 50*s.* As soon as any ship shall be sunk, stranded, or run on shore in any harbour, &c. or be brought or drove in, or be there in a ruinous condition, and there be suffered to remain, and the owner shall begin to carry away the rigging; on summons of the owner, or commander, a justice may seize the ship, &c. and by sale thereof raise money to clear the harbour.

Many other acts of parliament have been made for repairing and improving particular harbours and havens of this kingdom; such as stats. 23 Hen. 8. cap. 7: 27 H. 8. c. 23; relating to the havens and ports of Plymouth, Portsmouth, Falmouth, &c. in Devonshire and Cornwall; and none shall labour in tin works, near rivers of those havens, but shall prevent the fall of stones and gravel therein.—Casting and unloading ballast, rubbish, &c. in any harbour, haven, or road, incurred a penalty of 5*l.* by stat. 34 Hen. 8. cap. 9.—The Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 1, was for repairing Oxford haven in Suffolk; and Stats. 13 & 14 Car. 2: 4 Geo. 1. c. 13, &c. for the reparation of Dorset harbour, &c. And duties are granted by these statutes, towards effecting thereof. Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 14, was made for opening Southwold haven in Suffolk. Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 18, was made for improving Sunderland harbour in Durham. See Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 8, for improving and enlarging the harbour of Leith.

HARDWIC, Mentioned in Domesday, and by Spelman. See Hardwick.

HARES See title Game.

HARLOTS. If any vintner, alehouse keeper, &c. in London, shall permit any harlots, or common women to come into their houses to eat, or drink, or otherwise to be conversant or abide there; they shall be liable to imprisonment, and also the women and harlots. Stat. 1 Hen. 6. c. 23. See title London.

HARNESS, Fr. Harnejs] Signifies all warlike instruments. Hoved. p. 725. Matt. Paris. The tackle or furniture of a ship, was also called harness or harnesum. Pl. Parl. 22 Ed. 1.

HARO, HARRON, An outcry after felons and malefactors, and the original of this clamour de haro comes from the Normans. Custom. de Norman. l. p. 104.

HARPING-IRONS, Are iron instruments for the striking and taking of Whales: And those that strike the fish with them are called Harpners or Harpners. Merch. Dict. See titles Fish, Fisheries and Fishing.

HARRIERS, Harcas cant.] Small hounds, for hunting the hare: Anciently several persons held lands of the King, by the tenure and service of keeping a pack of beagles and harriers. Cart. 12 Ed. 1.

HART, A stag, or male deer of the forest five years old compleat; and if the King or Queen do hunt any such, and he escape alive, then he is called an Hart Royal: And where by the hunting he is chased out of the forest, proclamation is usually made in the adjacent places, that in regard of the diversion the beast hath afforded the King or Queen, none shall hurt or hinder him from returning to the forest; and then he is called a Hart Royal proclaimed. Manwood's Forest Laws, par. 2. cap. 4.

HARVEST WORKMEN, May be licensed by justices of peace to go into other counties to work, &c. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. See title Labourers: Poor & Vagrants.

HASTA PORCI, A shield of brawn.—Paroch. Antiq. 450.

HATCHES, Certain dams made of clay and earth, to prevent the water issuing from the works and tin washes in Cornwall, from running into the fresh rivers: And the tenants of several manors there, are bound to do certain days works ad le batches, or hacches. Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 23. And from a laich, gate, or door, some houses situate on the highway, near a common gate, are called Hatches.

HATS. See title Manufactures.—By Stat. 24 Geo. 3. stat. 2. c. 51, certain duties (from 3 d. to 2 s.) are imposed on hats sold by retail, and dealers in hats are to be annually licensed. See tit. Stamps.—The stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, regulates the importation and exportation of hats, and hare and coney skins and goats wool.—See title Hatterdusters.

HAUR, From the Fr. Hair.] Hatred. Leg. W. 1. c. 16.

HAUTHONER, Homo Loricator] A man armed with a coat of mail.—Charta Galfredi de Dutton, temp. H. 3.

HAW, A small parcel of land so called in Kent; as a Hempshaw or Beanshaw, lying near the house, and inclosed for those uses. Sax. Dict. But Sir Edward Coke, in an ancient plea concerning Feresham in Kent, says Hawes are houses. Co. Lit. 5. See Haga, Hala.

HAWGH or HOWGH, A green plot in a valley; a word used in the North of England. Camd.

HAWBERK alias HAWBERT, Fr. i. e. Lorica.] He who held lands in France by finding a coat or shirt of mail, and to be ready with it when he shall be called, was said to have hauberticum feudum, Fief de Haubert: and Hawberk, with our ancestors, had the same signification, and so it seems to be used in the stat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 6.

HAWKS. The stealing of an hawk, or concealing it, after proclamation made by the sheriff, is felony with clergy. But this extends only to long-winged Hawks, of the kind of falcons; and not to goshawks or sparrowhawks. Stat. 34 Ed. 3. c. 22: 37 Ed. 3. c. 19: 3 Inst. 97. None shall kill, or scare away, any hawks from the coverts where they use to breed, on pain of 10 l. to be recovered before justices of the peace, and divided between the King and prosecutor. Stat. 11 Hen. 7. cap. 17. A Hawk taken up, must be delivered to the sheriff, if taken up by a mean person to be proclaimed in the towns of the county, &c. An action of trover and conversion lies for an Hawk reclaimed, and which may be known by her vervets, bells, &c. See further title Game.

HAWKERS. Those deceitful fellows who went from place to place, buying and selling brass, pewter, and other goods and merchandize, which ought to be uttered in open market, were of old so called; and the appellation seems to grow from their uncertain wandering, like persons that with Hawks seek their game where they can find it. They are mentioned in Stat. 23 Hen. 8. cap. 4.

HAWKERS, PEDLARS and CHAPMEN, are such persons as travel from town to town with goods and merchandize, and are under the control of Commissioners who are to licence them for that purpose under stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 25: 24 Geo. 3. c. 26.

Traders in the linen and woollen manufactures, sending their goods to markets and fairs, and selling them by wholesale; makers of goods, selling those of their own making; and makers and sellers of English bone-lace, going from house to house, &c. are excepted out of the acts, and not to be taken as Hawkers. Stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 4: 4 Geo. 1. c. 6.—and see stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 26. § 20.

Hawkers of news-papers, pamphlets, &c. are expressly excepted in the statutes from the provisions and regulations applied to other hawkers.—See titles News-papers, Stamps, &c. The stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 26, directs that Hawkers, Pedlars, &c. shall pay a duty of 4 l. per year for a licence for themselves and 4 l. more for every beast employed by them.—Before obtaining this licence each of them is to produce a certificate signed by a clergyman and two reputable inhabitants in his place of residence of his good behaviour. §§ 3, 5, 6, 7.

Selling one parcel of silk handkerchiefs, shall not make a man a hawker or pedlar. Burr. 609.

The said Stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 26; also provides that such hawkers shall not sell their things by auction; that the words Licensed Hawker shall be marked on all packs, boxes, waggons, shops, and handbills used by such hawkers on penalty of 10 l. a like penalty is imposed on unlicensed hawkers for marking their packs, &c. §§ 8, 9.—Hawkers selling smuggled goods shall forfeit their license and be incapable of having another granted them. § 10.—The Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 43, prohibiting hawkers to carry foreign cambric or lawn is repealed by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. § 23: c. 32. § 19. See title Cambric.

Trading without a licence, or refusing to shew it, incurs a penalty of 12 l. half to the informer, and half to the poor; or on non-payment to suffer as a vagrant. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 27. § 3: 3 & 4 Ann. c. 4. § 4.—Under Stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 26. § 11, the penalty is 10 l. half to the King and half to the informer.—Hawkers refusing to produce their licences, or lending or borrowing licences, to forfeit 40 l. And they may be detained till they produce their licences. Stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 26. §§ 13, 14.—Counterfeiting licences 50 l. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 27. § 5.—100 l. Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 5.

Hawkers not to sell in cities or market towns where they do not reside, except on fairs or market days. §§ 16, 17. See 2 Term Rep. 273.

If Hawkers and pedlars, offer any tea, or spirituous liquors to sale, though they have permits, the same may be seized as forfeited; By Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35.

HAY, Haya, Fr. Hays.] A hedge or inclosure; also a net to take game, See Hala.

HAY-BOTE, A liberty to take thorns and other wood, to make and repair hedges, gates, fences, &c. either by tenant for life or years: it is also said to be wood, for the making of rakes and forks, with which men make hay. See Co. Litt. 41; and title Bots.

HAY AND STRAW, AND HAY-MARKET. Carts of Hay, which stand to be sold in the Hay-Market, are to pay 3 d. and straw 1 d. per load; and shall not stand longer with Hay after three o'clock in the afternoon, &c. on pain of forfeiting 12 s. Hay sold in London, &c. between the first of June and the last of August, being new Hay is to weigh 56 pounds a truck; and old Hay the rest of the year offered to sale, &c. See further as to Hay and Straw, Stats. 2 W. & M. R. 2. c. 8. § 16, 17: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 17. § 1: 31 Geo. 2. c. 40.—Whitechapel Hay-Market under Stat. 11 Geo. 3. c. 35, is to be held from 7 in the morning to 1 in the afternoon, from Lady-day to Michaelmas, and from 8 to 12 during the other half-year.

HAYWARD, From the Fr. Hays, seier, & Garde, Custodia.] One who keeps a common herd of cattle of a town; and the reason of his being called Hayward may be, because one part of his office is to see that they neither break nor crop the hedges of inclosed grounds, or for that he keeps the graze from hurt and destruction. He is an officer appointed in the Lord's Court; And is to look to the fields, and impound cattle that do trespass therein; to inspect that no pound breaches be made, and if any be, to present them at the leet, &c. Kitch. 46. There may be a custom in a manor, to have a surveyor of the fields or Hayward, and for him to distrain cattle damage-feasant. See Agillarius.

HAZARD, An unlawful game at dice: and those who play at it are called Hazarders; Plac. Trin. 2 Hen. 4. Suffex 10. See title Gaming.

HEADBOROW, OR HEADBOROUGH, From Sax. Heads, caput, & Borge, sivejussor.] Signifies him who is head of the frank-pledge in boroughs; and who had a principal government within his own pledge: as he was called Headborough, so he was also styled boroughhead, borholder, thrid borough, titlingman, &c. according to the usage and diversity of speech in several places. Lamb. These Headboroughs were the chief of the ten pledges; the other nine being denominated handborrows, or inferior pledges: Headborrows are now a kind of constables. See this Dict. titles Constable: Titling.

HEADLAND, The upper part of ground left for the turning of the plough; whence the headway. Paroch. Antiq. 587.

HEAD-PENCE, Was an exaction of a certain sum heretofore collected by the sheriff of Northumberland of the inhabitants of that county, without any account therefore to be made to the King; which was abolished by Stat. 23 H. 6. c. 7.

HEAD-SILVER, Paid to lords of leets. See Common Fine.

HEALFANG OR HALSFANG, From Sax. Hals, Collum, and Fang, capere.] That punishment, quæ alicui collum fringatur. Collifrigium. The Pillory. Sometimes it is taken for a pecuniary mulct, to commute for standing in the pillory; payable to the King or Chief Lord. Leg. H. 1. cap. 11.

HEALTH, Injuries to.] Injuries affecting a man's health, are whereby any unwholesome practices of another a man sustains any apparent damage in his vigor or constitution. As by selling him bad provisions or wine; 1 Rol. Abr. 90; by the exercise of a noisome trade, which infects the air in his neighbourhood; 9 Rep. 57: Har. 135; or by the neglect, or unskillful management of his physician, surgeon or apothecary. For it hath been solemnly resolved, that male praxis is a great misdemeanor and offence at Common-law, whether it be for an experiment, or by neglect; because it breaks the trust which the party had placed in his physician, and tends to his destruction. Id. Rayn. 214. These are wrongs or injuries unaccompanied by force, for which there is a remedy in damages, by special action of trespass on the case. 3 Comm. 122.

As to offences against the public health of the nation, there are various provisions, as with respect to the plague. Stats. 1 Jac. 1. c. 31: 26 Geo. 2. c. 6: 29 Geo. 2. c. 8. See title Plague. As to unwholesome provisions, 51 Hen. 3. Rast. 6: Ord. pro Pifar. c. 7: 12 Car. c. 25. See titles Butchers: Bakers: Wines: Cattle, &c.

HEARTH-MONEY, A tax formerly levied, but now abolished. Vid Chimney-Money.

HEBBER-MEN, Fishermen, or poachers below London Bridge, who fish for whittings, smelts, &c. commonly at ebbing water; mentioned in one of the articles of the Thomas Jury, at the court of Conservancy of the river Thames, printed anno 1632. And those persons are punishable by Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 15. See title London.

HEBBING-WEARS, Are wears or engines made or laid at ebbing water. Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 5. See title Sewers.

HEBDOMAS, Lat.] A week. See Week.

HEBDOMADIUS, The week's man, canon or prebendary in the cathedral church, who hath the care of the choir, and the officers belonging to it, for his own week. Reg. Episc. Hereford. MS. See Hebdomadarius.

HECK, An engine to take fish in the river Ouse, Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 18.

HECCAGIUM, Is supposed to be rent paid to the lord of the fee for liberty to use the engines called Hacks.

HEDA, A small haven, wharf, or landing place. Domesd. See Hith.

HEDAGIUM, Toll or customary duties paid at the hith or wharf, for the landing goods, &c. from which exemption was granted by the King to some particular persons and societies. Cartular. Abbat. de Radings, MS. f. 7.

HEDGE-BOTE, Is necessary stuff to make hedges, which the lessee for years, &c. may of common right take in his ground leased. See Hay-bote: Bote.

HEDGE-BREAKERS. By the Stat. 43 Elin. cap. 7. Hedge-breakers, &c. shall pay such damages as a justice of peace shall think fit; and if not able to pay the damages, shall be committed to the constable to be whipped. And by Stat. 15 C. 2. c. 2, constables, and others, may apprehend persons suspected of Hedge-stealing, and carry them before a justice; where not giving a good account how they came by wood, &c. they are not only to make such recompence as the justice of peace shall adjudge, but pay a sum not exceeding 10 s. for the use of the poor, or be sent to the house of correction for a month; persons convicted of buying stolen wood, shall forfeit treble value to him from whom taken. See title Woods.

HEIR.

HEIRE; AS HEIREDAIRE.] Is One ex jussu nuptie procreatus, who succeeds by descent to lands, tenements and hereditaments, being an estate of inheritance. The estate must be Fee, because nothing passeth jure hereditatis but Fee; and by the Common-law a man cannot be Heir to goods goods and chattels: Tho^t the ecclesiastics call him barrolem, qui ex testamento succedit in universum jus testatoris.

Heirs, are included in the word assigns in grants, &c. If a woman keeps lands from the Heir, on pretence of being big with child by the Heir's ancestor, her deceased husband, the writ de ventre inspiciendo is to be granted to search her, &c. that the heir be not defrauded. F. N. B. 227.

Heirs may have divers writs, as writ of Mortdancestor, Entre ad communem legem, In casu provisio, and consimili casu, quod permittat, &c. The Heir may bring an ejectment of copyhold lands before admittance. 2 Wils. 14.

- II. Who may be Heirs, what Persons are excluded from being Heirs; and of the Effect of the Word Heirs in Limitations.
- III. 1. Where the Heir shall take Advantage of Conditions, Covenants, &c. entered into to his Ancestor.—2. Where he shall be liable to his Ancestor's Debts and Contracts.—3. What shall go to the Heir as Fixtures, &c.—4. Of Suits by and against an Heir, and herein of the Regulations by Statute.—5. As to Affets in the Hands of an Heir.

See further as connected with this subject, this Dict. titles Agreements; Affets; Condition; Covenant; Executor; Fraud; Limitation, &c.

1. SOME Writers have made a distinction of Hæres sanguinis, & hæreditatis; a man may be hæres sanguinis to a father or ancestor, and yet upon displeasure, be defeated of his inheritance: And there is an ultimus hæres, being he to whom lands come by escheat, for want of lawful heir, &c. i. e. The Lord of whom the lands are held, or the King. Bract. lib. 7. cap. 17. See title Escheat: Tenure. But the most usual division is, that of Heir apparent; Heir presumptive; (as to both which see title Descent. Canon I;) Heir general; Heir special; Heir by custom; and Heir by devise, called Hæres factus.

Bonds and bargains with an Heir apparent, &c. to have double or treble the money lent, after his father's death, &c. are set aside in equity; but it is by paying what was lent bona fide, with interest, if the obligor applies for relief; though in case the obligee sues, he shall not recover what was really lent; for that would be to assist fraud. 1 Vern. 141, 359. Where young Heirs enter into any bond, Chancery relieves against it, without evidence of actual imposition; because there is a supposed distress, and presumption of a liability to be imposed on. Barnardist. 481. See Treat. Eq.

A devisee under a will defectively executed represented the will as duly executed, and for a small sum gained a release from the Heir; the release was set aside. 1 P. Wms. 239.—So where a son, who on his father's death was remainder-man in tail, sold his remainder at an under rate, the Court of Chancery set aside the conveyance. Id. 310.

The rule upon which Courts of Equity in these cases proceed, is not merely in respect of the age of the Heir contracting. 3 P. Wms. 131. In Wiseman v. Beake, Mr. Wiseman was nearly 40 years of age, and a Proctor in the Commons: In Curwyn v. Milner the Heir was about 27 years of age; and in Gwynne v. Heaton the plaintiff was 23 years old; which tho' not an advanced age, is beyond that which the law recognises as the age of discretion. But the real object which the rule proposes is, to restrain the anticipation of expectancies, which must from its very nature furnish to designing men an opportunity to practise upon the inexperience or passions of a dissipated man. And this being the object of the rule, its operation is not confined to Heirs, but extends to all persons, the pressure of whose wants may be considered as obstructing the exercise of that judgment which might otherwise regulate their dealings. 2 Vern. 346: Forrest. 111: 2 Atk. 34. and see 2 Vex. 281. 516: 1 Wils. 229; and this Dict. titles Fraud: Agreement.

It has been said that if the Heir has no maintenance from the father, but is turned out upon unreasonable displeasure, there perhaps, the bargain, if not excessively beyond the proportion of such assurances shall stand; because it is not to supply the luxury and prodigality of the Heir, but to keep him from starving. Treat. Eq. c. 2. § 12. But in Gwynne v. Heaton, Thurlow, C. was of opinion, that this circumstance was intitled to no weight whatever: nor does there appear to be any case in which such difference has been proceeded upon by the Court of Chancery; and there are several cases where it has been entirely disregarded. See 2 Ch. Ca. 120: 1 P. Wms. 310: 1 Wils. 320.

Heir general. The Heir general or Heir at Common-law is he who after his father or ancestor's death hath a right to, and is introduced into, all his lands, tenements and hereditaments. But he must be of the whole blood, not a bastard, alien, &c.

None but the Heir general, according to the course of the Common-law, can be Heir to a warranty, or sue an appeal of the death of his ancestor. Co. Lit. 14 a; Cro. Jac. 217, 218.

If a condition be annexed to Borough-English or Gavelkind lands, and the condition is broken, the Heir at common law shall enter; for the condition is a thing of new creation, and collateral to the land: But when the eldest son enters, the Heir or Heirs by custom, shall enjoy the land; for by breach of the condition they are restored to their ancient estates. Cro. Eliz. 204: Plow. 28: Co. Lit. 11, 12.

Special Heir. Is the issue in tail claiming per formam donis; and as the statute de donis preserves the estate to him, his ancestor cannot grant or alien, nor make any right-ful estate of freehold to another, but for term of his own life. Lit. § 613.

Heir by custom. A custom in particular places varying the rules of descent at Common-law is good; such as the custom of Gavelkind, by which all the sons shall inherit and make but one Heir to their ancestor; but the general custom of Gavelkind lands extends to sons only, but a special custom, that if one brother dies without issue, all his brothers may inherit, is good. Co. Lit. 140.

Heir by devise, or Hæres factus, is only a devisee of lands, being made so by the will of the testator, and has no other right or interest than the will gives him. 3 Co. 42. a.

It has been held in Chancery, that such an Heir shall have the aid of the personal estate in discharging the debts of the testator. 1 Vern. 36, 7. But this must be understood of an hæres factus of the whole estate, who shall have the benefit of the personal estate, but a devisee of particular lands shall not. Preced. Chanc. See title Executor V. 6; Affets.

HEIR II.

II. THE ELDEST SON, after the death of his father, is at Common-law his heir, &c. And if there be grandfather, father, and son, and the father die before the grandfather, and after the grandfather die seised; the land shall go to the son or daughter of the father, and not to any other children of the grandfather. Bro. 303. And this heir is called heir jure representationis, because he doth represent his father's person: but if, in this case, the father die without any child; his next eldest brother shall have the land as heir, or, for want of a brother, it descends to the sisters of the father. Ibid. A man having issue only a daughter, dies, leaving his wife with child of a son, which is afterwards born; here the son after his birth is heir to the land, but till then the daughter is to have it. 9 H. 6. 23: Perk. 521. See at large title Descent.

There are some persons who cannot be heir; as a bastard born out of lawful wedlock; an alien, born out of the King's allegiance, though in wedlock; a man attainted of treason or felony, whose blood is corrupted; these last cannot be heirs propter delictum; and an alien cannot be heir, propter defectum subjectionis; nor may one made denizen by letters patent; though it is otherwise of a person naturalized by act of parliament. Co. Lit. 8: 2 Darv. Abr. 552. A bastard by continuance, may be heir against a stranger; and an hermaphrodite may be heir, and take according to that sex which is most prevalent; but a monster, who hath not human shape cannot be heir, although a person deformed may. Co. Lit. 7. Idiots and Lunatics, persons excommunicate, attainted in premunire, outlaws in debt, &c. may be heirs: 2 Darv. 553.

The word heir is not a good description of a person in the life-time of the ancestor; and an eldest son shall not take by the name of heir in the life-time of his father. 2 Leon. 70. A man cannot raise a fee-simple estate to his right heirs, by the name of heirs, as a word of purchase by conveyance or otherwise; but in such case the son shall be in by descent: Fortier & potentior est dispositio leges quam hominis. Hob. 30: 2 Lill. Abr. 11.

By the law of England, no person can take to himself an inheritance in fee-simple by deed, without the word heirs; but he may by devise, tho' in cases where the word heir is wanting, it has been adjudged that if there were other words equivalent, and the interest in the thing granted passeth by the consideration only, without any further ceremony in the law, an estate in fee may pass. 2 Nels. Abr. 928. In a devise by will, or exchange, &c. the word heirs is not necessary: but estates of inheritance which are otherwise conveyed, require it. Jenk. Cent. 196. See this Dict. titles Deed; Devise; Limitation.

The word Heir is nomen collectivum, and extends unto all Heirs: and under heirs, the heirs of heirs are comprehended in infinitum; if lands are given to a man and his heirs, all his heirs are so totally in him, that he may give his lands to whom he will. Trin. 23 Jac. 1: Noy. 56.

The Heir is favoured by the Common-law; and the ancestor could not give away his lands by will from his heir at law, without the consent of the heir, till the statute 32 H. 8. c. 11: 2 Lill. 11. Dubious words in a will shall be construed for the benefit of the Heir; and not to disinherit him: and the Heir at law is preferred in Chancery in a doubtful case. Noy 185: Chanc. Rep. 7. Where lands were devised to the heirs of J. S. then living; it was held that his eldest son should have them, though in strictness he was not heir during his father's life, but heir apparent: But this was by reason of the words then living, which make it a description of the person. Preced. Chanc. 57.

As a limitation to the Heirs of the body of A. then living, shall be good as a designatio personæ, notwithstanding the rule non est hæres viventis; so a limitation to the Heirs of the body of A. then begotten shall prevail. See 1 P. Wms. 229: 1 Bro. P. C. 489: 2 Black. Rep. 1010.

The cases in which it has been held that the person described as an Heir special need not answer both parts of the description, by being actually Heir, as well as that species of Heir denoted by the description, seem to have materially broken in upon the doctrine of Lord Coke on the subject. See 1 Inst. 24 b. and which doctrine has been pursued in many cases exclusive of those on which Lord Coke relied: particularly in Couden v. Clarke, Hob. 29: Southcot v. Stonewell, 1 Freem. 216: Lord Ossington's case, 3 Salt. 336: and Davies v. Fevers, 2 P. Wms. 1: Starling v. Ettrick, Pre. Ch. 54. Mr. Hargrave has very ably attempted to vindicate the propriety of Lord Coke's doctrine, observing that it may be doubted whether there is a passage in all his works more capable of standing the severest test of modern criticism; and having examined the circumstances of the cases supposed to have weakened its authority concludes his note, (p. 32 a.) with remarking that Lord Cowper's judgment in Newcomen v. Barkham, which was materially shaken in its principle by what fell from Lord Hardwicke, in decreeing upon the bill of review, is the only direct authority against Lord Coke.—In a following note however, (p. 164 a.) Mr. Hargrave candidly admits that since his writing his former note, a case has been published in which the court of King's Bench, after three arguments, decided against applying the above rule to a Will; Wills v. Palmer, 5 Burr. 2615. and that in another, which was also three times argued, the Court of Exchequer had refused to apply the rule to a Marriage-settlement. Evans d. Burrenshaw v. Weston, M. 1774, or H. 1775.—This concurrence of authority, the result of so much deliberation, for both Courts appear to have weighed the subject with the most anxious attention, seems to have given a weight to the decree in Newcomen v. Barkham, beyond that to which Lord Hardwicke thought the principle entitled. It is however well worth the Student's while to consult Mr. Hargrave's observations in support of Lord Coke's doctrine, that to take as a purchaser by description of a special heir, every part of the description must unite in the claimant. See also Fearne on Cont. Rem. 4th edit. p. 319. and 2 Willf. p. 20.

III. 1. CONDITIONS and Covenants—real, or such as are annexed to estates, shall descend to the Heir, and he alone shall take advantage of them. 43 Ed. 3. c. 4: 1 And. 55.

And this is not only where there are express words, but also where there are none; for the law by implication reserves the condition to the Heir of the feoffor, &c; for being prejudiced by the disposition, it is but reasonable that he should take the same advantage that his ancestor whom he represents might. 1 Rol. Abr. 407, 472.

If a man seised of lands in right of his wife, makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, and dies, and after the condition is broken, the Heir of the husband shall enter; for though no right descended to him, yet the title of entry by force of the condition which was created upon the feoffment, and referred to the feoffor and his Heirs, descended. 8 Co. 43: Co. Lit. 202 a: 336 b.

by

The Heir shall take advantage of a nomine penae; for being incident to the rent, it shall descend to the Heir, being a security or penalty to engage the payment of the rent; therefore whoever has a right to the rent, ought in reason to have the penalty, which is to oblige the tenant to pay it. Co. Lit. 162 b.

If a man leases for years, and the lessee covenants with the lessor, his executors and administrators, to repair and leave it in good repair at the end of the term, and the lessor dies, &c. his Heir may have an action upon this covenant; for this is a covenant which runs with the land, and shall go to the Heir, though he is not named: and it appears that it was intended to continue after the death of the lessor, inasmuch as his executors, &c. are named. 3 Lev. 92: Skw. 305.

If A. enfeoff B. upon condition that if the Heir of A. pays to B. &c. 20s. then he and his Heirs may re-enter; this is a good condition, of which the Heir of A. may take advantage, and yet A. himself never can. Co. Lit. 214 b.

III. 2. As the Heir-at-law is the proper and only person, who can take advantage of conditions, &c. annexed to the real estate; so he shall be bound by all such conditions, &c. which run with the land, whether such conditions were annexed to the estate by the original feoffor, grantor, or immediate ancestor. 1 Rol. Abr. 421.

If a gift be made in tail on condition, that the donee should not discontinue, and the donee hath issue two daughters, and one of them discontinues, the donor shall enter and evict them both; because it was the original condition annexed to the whole estate, that no part of it should be discontinued. Co. Lit. 165.

But note, that neither tenant in tail, nor his issue can be restrained from aliening by fine and recovery; though they may be restrained from aliening by feoffment, or other tortious act, which amounts to a discontinuance.

So where one devised lands to A. and the Heirs male of his body, provided, that if he does attempt to alien, that then immediately his estate shall cease, and B. shall enter, and A. makes a feoffment in fee, and thereupon B. enters; and it was adjudged against B. and that the condition was void, because non constat what shall be adjudged an attempt, and how it shall be tried. 1 Vent. 321: 3 Keb. 787, Piers and Winn.

Also where a condition is annexed to the estate given to the Heir, and which goes in abridgment and restraint thereof, the same shall in some cases be construed a limitation; for if it were a condition, nobody could take advantage of it but the Heir. Dyer 316: 10 Co. 41: 1 Vent. 299. As if a copyholder in Borough English surrender to the use of his will, and after devises to his wife for life, remainder to his eldest son, paying 40s. to each of his brothers and sisters within two years after the death of his wife, &c. this is a limitation, and not a condition; for if it should be a condition, it would extinguish in the Heir, and there would be no remedy for the money. Cro. Eliz. 204: 3 Co. 20 b: 2 Leon 114. S. C. Vide farther as to the doctrine of the Heir being bound, &c. Vaughan. 271: 2 Mod. 26. S. C. Cro. Eliz. 833. 919: Mon 644. pl. 894: Noy 51.

But whatever the ancestor makes a conveyance or disposition on condition, which goes in restraint and abridgment of the estate of the Heir, he must have notice of it; for having a good title by descent, he is not obliged to take notice of such condition at his death, or others must do. 8 Co. Francis's case.

If the person of the ancestor be bound in respect of his land, which descends to the Heir, he shall be charged: as, if by a subsidy to be assessed upon every one having 20s. per annum, A. be charged and die; his Heir shall pay it, for it runs with the land. R. Mo. 17.

Heir is non collectivum; and therefore, if a condition be, that if his Heir does not pay such a rent-charge, the estate shall go to B. if the Heir of the Heir does not pay, the condition is broken. R. Cro. Jac. 145.

It has been held, that the Heir is never chargeable without an express lien and assets; and even then, no longer than he hath assets, for he is not obliged to keep them till he is charged: But if he has assets, he ought to plead truly, and confess them; otherwise judgment shall be given against him de terris propriis, for it is then his debt. Jones 88: 3 Salk. 179. When a man recovers against an Heir, by default or verdict, on pleading riens per descent, a special judgment de terris descensitis, may be entered against the Heir, and the plaintiff, (praying it) shall have all the lands by descent in execution: though if the judgment be general against the Heir, without praying such special judgment he can only have a moiety of the lands by eligut. Plowd. 439: 2 Leon. 16. Here the plaintiff may surmise, that the Heir hath such land by descent, and pray to have execution of all his land. Dyer 149: Rol. 72. The judgment and execution shall be general, unless the Heir acknowledge the action, and shews that he hath so much by descent; but if he will not shew what he hath by descent, he loses the benefit of the law. Cro. Eliz. 692.

If the Heir, in case where the ancestor hath bound himself and his Heirs, have never so much land come to him by gift in tail, or conveyance of the father, and not by descent, he is not chargeable at all: and so it is for any estate but what is in fee simple; as where lands are granted to J. S. and his Heirs during the life of another, &c. the Heir shall not be charged for this, no more than for the land entailed. 10 Rep. 98. See post. 4. No lands can be charged but fee-simple; therefore, in a suit against the Heir, the judgment is only for the land descended, and not for other lands, &c. but where it is by his own fault, as by a false plea, or the like. Co. Lit. 102, 376.

A man binds himself and his Heirs in an obligation, and hath lands and Heirs on the part of the father, and the part of the mother; the Heirs and lands of both, and not of one alone, must be charged in debt: and the plaintiff shall have several actions; and the execution shall stay, till it may be had against both of them. 2 Rep. 25: Hob. 25. Also if one bind himself and his Heirs, and leave land at Common-law, and lands in gavelkind; the obligee must sue all the Heirs. Hob. 25. An Heir sued on a specialty, shall have his age; and if one of the Heirs be within age, the parol shall be stayed for all. Moor cap. 203.

A collateral Heir is chargeable for the debt of his ancestor: but the declaration must be special, and he is to be charged as collateral Heir, not as immediate Heir; and if a son happens between, who dies, he must be said uncle uncle and Heir of the son, who was Heir of the debtor, &c. Co. Car. 131. And a child born, though he lives but an hour, has the fee of lands vested in him as Heir. Hill. 134. Is a writ a man need not show how he is Heir; but he must in a declaration, &c. though it is only for form to set forth how a person is Heir, because it is not traversable; and Heir, or an Heir, is issuable. Moor 885. If an Heir ought to confess the debt on action brought against him, and the debt be not denied; it must be admitted. 1 Lutw. 442.

Debt against the Heir, upon the bond of his ancestor, is to be brought in the debet and detinet, because the Heir himself is bound; and not in the detinet only, though that is cured by verdict. Sid. 342: 1 Lev. 224. An Heir is not bound by the bond of the ancestor, unless he is expressly bound: and if in a bond a man bind his Heirs, but not himself, the bond is void. 2 Saund. 136: Cro. Jac. 570. Also a man shall never bind his Heir to warranty, where he himself was not bound: if he make a feoffment in fee, and bind his Heirs only to warranty, the feoffment is void, for the Heir shall be bound to warranty in such cases only, where the ancestor was bound, without which it cannot descend upon him. Co. Lit. 386. And warranties and estoppels shall descend upon the Heir general, and not upon any special Heir, &c. So that if a man convey land with warranty against him and his Heirs, his Heir on the mother's part shall not be vouched by this, so long as there is an Heir on the father's part, &c. Hob. 24.

A grant of an annuity, must be for a man and his Heirs, to bind the Heir, although there be assets; and when he is named, the Heir shall not be bound except there be assets. Co. Litt. 144. Where a person covenants with another to perform any act, if his Heir be not named, he is not bound by it: but in covenants of others, that concern the inheritance, the Heir shall have the benefit of them, though not named. 5 Rep. 8: 1 Roll. Abr. 520. An Heir may enter for a condition broken, when the condition is annexed to lands, and take advantage of it; because if there had been no condition, the land would have descended to him. And an Heir may perform a condition, to save the land. 2 Nels. Abr. 929.

The Heir must be expressly named, otherwise he is not chargeable, and the reason why the heir is not chargeable in this case, as the executor in case of a bond entered into by the testator, without being named, is this; by the Common-law only the goods and chattels of the debtor, and the annual profits of the land as they arose, and not the land itself, were liable to execution for debt or damages, because these being the security the creditor depended upon, they were liable in the hands of his representative or executor, as well as in the hands of the debtor himself; hence it was, that the executor was bound by the debt of the testator, so far as he had chattels or assets, though he was not named in the contract; but the land was not liable to execution, because it was preserved from the personal contracts and engagements of the tenant, that he might be the better able to answer the feudal duties to the lord, which were the life and support of government; therefore the land not being originally liable to the demand in the hands of the obligor, must be much less liable in the hands of the Heir, who was not comprehended in the contract. 2 Lutw. 19: Flow. 440: Hob. 60.

But if a man had granted, for him and his Heirs, to a third his Heir, such a rent out of his lands, in this case the Heirs being comprehended in the contract, are bound to make good the grant, so far as they have assets by descent from the grantor; and this was allowed at Common-law, because the grantor of the rent had the land originally in view for his security; and by the grant itself having it in his power to distrain the land for the rent, it was equal to the Heir, whether the land answer the rent by distress, or by an execution upon a judgment in a writ of annuity. 1 Roll. Abr. 126: Popham 37: Hob. 58: Dyer 344 b: Co. Lit. 144 b.

If the ancestor bind himself in a statute, recognizance, &c. the Heir is liable, not only as tenant, but also as Heir, otherwise he could not have his age; and cannot oblige a purchaser, whether for valuable consideration, or without, to contribute, but one Heir may oblige another to contribute; as if a man seised of two acres, the one descendible, according to the course of the Common-law, the other in Borough English, acknowledge a statute, &c. the Heir at Common-law shall oblige the Borough English Heir to contribute: so one coparcener shall oblige the other to contribute; or if the ancestor had lands, some descendible to the Heirs of the father, and some descendible on the Heirs of the mother, the Heir on the part of the father shall compel the Heir on the part of the mother to contribute; & sic vice versa. 3 Co. 12. Sir William Herbert's case. See post. 4.

III. 3. Not only land, but rent not due at the death of the ancestor lessor, shall go to the Heir; so corn sown by a tenant for years, where his term expires before the corn is ripe; every thing fastened to the freehold, timber-trees, deeds belonging to the inheritance; deer, conies, pigeons, fish, &c. 2 Nels. Abr. 927. An Heir shall enforce the administrator to pay debts with personal estate, to preserve the inheritance. Chan. Rep. 280, 293. If an executor hath assets, he is compellable in equity to redeem a mortgage, for the benefit of the Heir; and it is the same where the Heir is charged in debt. Hard. 511. For the personal estate received the benefit. When the Heir is sued for the debt of his ancestor, and pays it, he shall be reimbursed by the executor of the obligor, who hath personal assets. 1 Chan. Rep. 74. But in action of debt brought upon a bond against an Heir, it is no good plea for the Heir to say, that the executors have assets in their hands. Dyer 204. For a creditor may sue either Heir or executor, and Heirs and executors are both chargeable upon specialties. If an Heir hath assets, and the executor also, it is at the election of the obligee to have action of debt against the one, or the other; but he shall not charge them doubly, 2 Plowd. 433. See title Executor. Whether the Heir hath land by descent shall be tried and enquired of, with the value, by a jury, to make the Heir answerable. 5 Moul. 122.

The Heir shall not have money due on mortgages in fee, if he be not particularly named, but the executor; and if the day be past, although the Heir be named, the executor shall have it. Co. Lit. 230: 1 Fentr. 348. See title Executor, V: 6: Mortgage.

The following is a specification of what goods and chattels go to the Heir.

Goods and chattels annexed to the freehold go to the Heir, and not to the executor, or administrator. as, the

So a term for years to attend the inheritance does not go to the executor, but to the heir. R. 2 Ch. Ca. 156, 160. So deer in a park, conies in a warren, and doves in a dove-house, go with the inheritance to the Heir. So, fish in a pond, or piscary. Co. Lit. 8. a.; R. Owen 20; 1 Rel. 916. l. 45, 50. So, apples, and other fruits growing at the death of the ancestor. Off. Ex' 84. So roots, &c. within the soil. Id. 89. So a coat-armour, pennons, tombstone, and monuments in a church, in honour of the ancestor. Co. Lit. 18 b. So charters, deeds, and evidences of lands, with the chests in which they are preserved. See Com. Dig. tit. Bicus (B); Charters; 1 Bull. 18 b.—An ancient horn where the tenure is by corvage. 1 Vern. 273.

If a nobleman, knight, esquire, &c. be buried in a church, and have his coat of arms, and pennons with his arms, and such other emblems of honour as belong to his degree, set up in the church, or if a grave-stone or tomb be laid or made, &c. for a monument of him; in this case, albeit the freehold of the church be in the parson, and that these be annexed to the freehold, yet cannot the parson, or any, take them, or deface them, but he is subject to the Heir, and his heirs, in the honour and memory of whose ancestor they were set up. Co. Lit. 18 b. And see 1 Rel. Abr. 625; Noy. 104; Godbolt 200; Cro. Jac. 367; 2 Bull. 151.

Where money is covenanted to be laid out in a purchase of land to be settled on A. in fee; on A.'s dying before the money is laid out, his Heir, and not his executor shall have it. 1 P. Wms. 483. So where, though by a voluntary contract, money is agreed to be laid out in land, the Court will execute such agreement in favour of the Heir. 2 P. Wms. 171. On the same principle where one is obliged to buy land and died; his executor shall have the money, but his Heir shall have the lands. Id. 615. And in all cases where it is a measuring call between an executor and an Heir, the latter shall in equity have the preference. Id. 176.

A younger brother beyond sea having contracted to buy a real estate of his elder brother, made his will charging his estate with great legacies, but his will was attested by only two witnesses. Afterwards the testator died without issue, leaving his elder brother his executor and Heir the Heir may retain out of the assets the whole purchase money, though intitled to the land again as Heir. 2 P. Wms. 291.

III. 4. It is clear, that the Heir may bring any real action de iudiciali, in right of his ancestor, but cannot regularly bring any personal action, because he has nothing to do with the assets, or personal contracts of his ancestor. Co. Lit. 164. If an erroneous judgment be given against the ancestor, by which he loseth the lands, the Heir may bring a writ of error 1 Rel. Abr. 747; Dyer 904; Godb.

337. And if one hath inherited the part of his mother, and loseth by erroneous judgment, and dies, the Heir of the part of the mother shall have the writ of error. 1 Leon. 261; 2 Sid. 56. So the younger son, when intitled to the land by the custom of Benth English, shall bring the writ of error, and not the Heir at Common-law, for this remedy descends with the land. Owen 68; 1 Leon. 261; 4 Leon. 5. and see Bridges. 71. So if there be an erroneous judgment against tenant in tail female, the issue female, and not the son, shall bring a writ of error. Dyn 90; 1 Leon. 261; 1 Rel. Abr. 747. See further Dyer 89; Cro. Elze. 469; 3 Lev. 36; and title Error. I. 1.

If J. S. binds himself and his Heirs, in a bond, and thereupon judgment is obtained against J. S. and J. S. makes his will, and his Heir at law executor, and dies, leaving lands which descended to his Heir, yet he shall not have a writ of error as Heir, for he is not privy to the judgment; and when an extent is made upon him, it is as tertenant; but after the lands are taken in execution, he may have a writ of error. Because he is prejudiced by the judgment, and by the reversal will receive benefit. Sey. 38, 9.

The Heir at law may, in right of his ancestor, maintain an action of debt for rent reserved on a lease, made by his ancestor, (accrued after the death of the ancestor) for the rent is part of the lands, and incident to the reversion; but for arrears of rent incurred in the life-time of the ancestor, neither the Heir, nor the executor, could by the Common-law maintain an action; for as to the Heir, they were considered as part of the personal estate, and as to the executor, he could not represent his testator as to any contracts relating to the freehold and inheritance. 21 H. 6. 15; 19 H. 6. 41; Co. Lit. 162 a. But now, by Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 37. an executor may maintain an action of debt for such arrears; for which see tit. Debt.

Where the ancestor binds himself, and his heirs, in an obligation, the obligee may sue the Heir, or executor, or the administrator of the executor, at his election, and may have execution of the land descended to the Heir; for the Common-law having allowed the action of debt against the Heir, he could have no benefit by the action, unless he were permitted to have execution of the lands which descended to the Heir. Flouard. 441; 3 Co. 12 a; Cro. Jac. 450; 1 And. 7.

But the body of the Heir is protected, for it would be most unreasonable to subject the Heir to the payment of his ancestor's debts, any farther than to the value of the assets descended. Dyer 81. pl. 62; 207. pl. 15; Moor pl. 203; Co. Lit. 103, 296.

By the common law, if the heir before an action brought against him had aliened the assets, the obligee was without any remedy; but if he only aliened, pending the writ, the lands, which he had by descent at the time of the original purchase, had been liable. Co. Lit. 102.

In consequence of this doctrine, that the lien shall have relation to the time of the original purchase, it hath been adjudged, that if there had been two creditors to J. S. whose Heir is bound, viz. A. and B. and A. files an original in C. B. and hath judgment thereon. Trin. Term, a Jac. 2. by default, and thereupon a general elegit issues against all the lands of the Heir, and a moiety thereof the death, and he cannot plead that the heir of him who is dead has assets by descent, and demand judgment if he ought to be charged alone: for, at common law, the charge upon a judgment, being personal, survived, and the statute of Westm. 2., that gives the elegit, does not take away the remedy of the plaintiff at common law, therefore the party may take out his execution which way he pleases; for the words of the statute are fit in electione: but if he should, after the allowance of the writ, and revival of the judgment, take out an elegit to charge the land, the party may have remedy by suggestion, or else by audita querela. 1 Lev. 30: Ra. m. 26: 1 Keb. 92.

As to a sequestration, and to shew that a devise shall have the same authority to bind the personal assets, as a judgment at law, and therefore shall go pari passu to be paid off and discharged. Vide 1 Vern. 143: 3 Lev. 355: 2 Vern. 37, 88-9. and this Dict. title Executor, V. 6.

III. 5. Where the ancestor binds himself and his Heirs, all his lands of freehold, and which descend in fee simple, are assets by descent, and shall be liable, as far as they extend, to answer the ancestor's obligations. See Bro. tit. Assets: Fit. tit. Assets: 1 Kol. Abr. 269. tit. Assets. A reversion after a lease for years made by the ancestor is present assets, so that the heir cannot plead non prodijsent in delay of execution of the rent and reversion, though the plaintiff cannot have benefit of the reversion till the lease be determined. 1 Salk. 354-5: 7 Mod. 42: 2 Mod. 50, 51. Hen's Plead. 320.

So a reversion expectant upon the determination of an estate for life is quasi assets, and ought to be pleaded specially by the Heir, and the plaintiff in such case may take judgment of it cum accident. Carth. 129. But a reversion in fee expectant upon an estate tail is not assets, because it lies in the will of the tenant in tail to dock and bar it at his pleasure. 6 Co. 58: 1 Roll. Abr. 269.

If A. hath issue B. and C. and conveys lands to the use of himself for life, the remainder to B. in tail male, the remainder to his own right Heirs, and A. dies, and the reversion descends to his son, who dies without issue, so that the tail is spent, and C. enters, these lands shall be assets to answer the debt of his father. Carth. 127: 3 Lev. 286: 3 Mod. 223. S. C.

The lands (as hath been observed) must descend to the Heir; and therefore it was formerly held, that if he took by purchase, as if the testator devised them to him, paying so much, or if he devised lands to one of the two, and his Heirs at law jointly, that those lands were not assets; but if he devised one part to A., another to B. and another to his Heir at law, this third part was assets. Cro. Eliz. 431: 2 Mod. 286.

By the statute of frauds and perjuries, (29 Car. 2. c. 3.) it is enacted, That if land come to the Heir by reason of a special occupancy, they shall be chargeable in his hands as assets by descent, as in cases of lands in fee simple, and in case there be no special occupant thereof, it shall go to the executors or administrators of the party that had the estate thereof by virtue of the grant, and shall be assets in their hands. Also by the said statute, §§ 10, 11. where lands are settled in trust, and descend in fee to the Heir of cestuy que trust; the same shall be assets in the same manner as lands in possession, but he shall not by reason of any plea or other matter be chargeable to pay the condemnation out of his own estate.—See 2 Vern. 248. and this Dict. tit. Fraud.

An equity of redemption of an inheritance is assets, for the Heir having a right in equity, that ought in equity to satisfy a bond debt. 4 Chanc. Caf. 148. Tenant in tail suffers a recovery to let in a mortgage of 500 years, then limits the land to the old uses, and makes his will, and devises all his lands for the payment of his debts; the redemption was limited to him, his Heirs and assigns; and the court thought that the equity of redemption of this mortgage, should be assets to satisfy creditors, or a subsequent grantee of an annuity. Preced. Chanc. 39. A right without any estate in possession, reversion or remainder, is not assets till it be recovered and reduced into possession. 6 Co. 58.

For more learning on this subject, see 14 Im. Abr. and 2 New Abr. title Heir; and this Dict. tit. Assets.

HEIRESS, The female heir to to a man, having an estate of inheritance in lands; and where there are several joint heirs, they are called Co heirs or Co-heiresses. As to stealing an heiress, and marrying her against her will; See Forcible Marriage.

HEIR-LOOME, From the Sax. Heir, i. e. Heret, & Loom, Membrum.] Comprehends divers implements of household, such as the first best bed and other things, which by the custom of some countries have belonged to a house for certain descents, and are never inventoried after the decease of the owner as chattels, nor do they go to the executor, but accrue to the Heir with the house itself by custom, and not by the Common-law: these are not devisable by testament; for the law prefers the custom before a devise, which takes not effect till after the death of the testator, and then they are vested in the Heir by the custom. Co. Lit. 18, 185. But sale in a man's life-time might make it otherwise. The ancient jewels of the Crown are Heir-looms, and shall descend to the next successor; and are not devisable by will. 1 Inst. 185. And Heir-looms in general are said to extend to all large household implements not easily moved. See Spelman.

It is said, that the word by time hath obtained a more general signification than at first it did bear, comprehending all implements of household, as tables, presses, cupboards, bedsteads, wainscot, and such like: which, by the custom of some countries, have belonged to a house during certain descents, as before-mentioned.

Per Holt Ch. J. goods in gross cannot be an Heir-loom, but they must be things fixed to the freehold, as old benches, tables, &c. 12 Mod. 519, 520. Also on this subject, vide 12 Co. 104, 105. Corwen's case. and ante title Heir. III. 3.

HEGIRA, The Mahometan Æra, or computation of time; beginning from the flight of Mahomet from Mecca, 16 July, anno 622. As the years of the Hegira consist of only 354 days, they are reduced to the Julian calendar by multiplying the year of the Hegira by 354, dividing the product by 365, subtracting the intercalary days, or as many times as there are four years in the quotient, and adding 622 to the remainder.

HELSING, A brass coin among the Saxons, equivalent to our halfpenny.

HELM, Thatch or straw. Cowell. Sometimes called Halm.—Helm, is also a Saxon word, signifying a covering for the head in war. Also, that part of a coat of arms, which bears the crest.—The steege, or rudder in a ship, or other vessel.

HELOWE-WALL,

HELOWE-WALL, the bell-wall or end wall, that covers and defends the rest of the building. From Saxon belan, to cover or heal; whence a thatcher, slater or tiler, who covers the roof of a house, is in the Western parts called a belligr.—Paroch. Antiq. p. 573: See Kenner's Glossary.

HEMP AND FLAX. By Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 17, None may water hemp or flax in any river, running water, stream, brook, or common pond, where beasts are used to be watered, but only in their several ponds, &c. for that purpose, on pain of 20 s. By Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 15, Any persons may in any place or corporate town privileged, or unprivileged, set up manufactures of Hemp or Flax, and persons coming from abroad, using the trade of Hemp or flax dressing, and of making thread, weaving cloth made of Hemp or Flax, or making tapestry hangings, twine or nets for fishery, cordage, &c. after three years, shall have the privileges of natural-born subjects.

HEORDFESTE, The same with buscassne or busfestum, i. e. the Master of a family: From the Saxon hearthfæst, i. e. fixed to the house or hearth: Leges Canoni. cap. 40 See Harderfeld.

HEORDPENNY, Olim Romefot & postea Peterpence from the Saxon hearth, focus; and pening, denarius. See Peterpence and Romefot.—Leges Edgar. Reg. s. cap. 5. apud Bractonum.

HEPTARCHY, The Kingdom of England was formerly, under the Saxons, divided into an Heptarchy, consisting of seven independent kingdoms, peopled and governed by different clans and colonies; These were all reduced into one kingdom by Egbert King of the West Saxons in the year 827 or 828.—Egbert is therefore stiled the first King of England. See 4 Can. n. c. 33.

HERALD, HERALT, or HEROLD, Ital. heraldo, Fr. herault, quasi herus altus.] An officer at arms. Vesfegian thinks it may be derived from two Dutch words, win. Here, exercitus et Healt, pugil magnanimus; as if he should be called the Champion of the Army: and the Romans called Heralds, feciales. Polydore, lib. 19, describes them thus: Habent insuper apparitores ministros, quos Heraldos dicunt, quorum præfectus Armorum Rex vocatur; hii belli et pacis Nuntii; Ducibus, Comitibusque a Rege factis insignia aptant, ac eorum funera curant. The function of these officers, as now exercised with us, is to denounce war, proclaim peace, and to be employed by the King in martial messages: they are examiners and judges of gentilemens coat of arms, and conservators of genealogies; and they marshal the solemnities at the coronations, and funerals of princes, and other great men.

The three chief Heralds, are called Kings at Arms; of which Garter is the principal, instituted by King Henry V. whose office is to attend the Knights of the Garter at their solemnities, and to marshal the funerals of the nobility: and King Edward IV. granted the office of *King of Herald*s to one Garter, cum feudis et possessionibus antiquis, &c. The next is Clarencieux or Clarentius, ordained by Edward IV. who attaining the dukedom of Clarence by the death of George his brother, (whom he beheaded for aspiring to the crown,) made the Herald who belonged to that dukedom a King at arms, and called him Clarencieux; his proper office is to marshal and dispose the funerals of all the lesser nobility, knights and esquires, thro' the realm, on the South side of the Trent. The third is Norroy, quasi North Roy, whose office and business is the same on the North side of Trent, as Clarentius on the South, which is intimated by his name, signifying the Northern King, or King at Arms of the North parts. These three officers are distinguished as follows, viz. Garter Rex Armorum Anglicorum; insinuat; Clarencieux, Rex Armorum partium Australium; Norroy, Rex Armorum partium Borealiū.

Besides the Kings at Arms, there are six inferior Heralds, according to their original, as they were created to attend Dukes and great Lords, in martial expeditions, i. e. York, Lancaster, Chester, Windsor, Richmond and Somerset; the four former instituted by King Edward III. and the two latter by Edward IV. and Henry VIII. To these, upon the coming of King George to the crown, on account of his Hanoverian dominions, a new Herald was made, called Hanover Herald; and another stiled Gloucester, King at Arms. Anno 11 Geo. 1. And lastly, to the superior and inferior Heralds, are added four others, called Marshals; or Pursuivants at Arms, who commonly succeed in the places of such Heralds as die, or are preferred; and they are Blue-mantle, Rouge-croix, Rouge-dragon, and Percutilli: all equipped with proper enligas, badges and distinctions.

The ancient Heralds have been made a corporation or college under the Earl Marshall of England, with certain privileges by the Kings of this realm: Conc. 1^{um} J. R. Heraldus Armorum, et omnes alii Heraldus, prosequentes sine Pursuivandi armorum, qui pro tempore fuerint, imperpetuum, sint unum corpus incorporatum, in re, facta, et non e; habebantque successionem perpetuam, nec non quædam privilegia commune, &c. Dat. &c. Spelm. Gloss. Herald's Court of Honour. See titles Honor-Courts. COURT of Chivalry.

HERBAGE, Herbagium.] The green pasture and fruit of the earth, provided by nature for the bite or food of cattle: it is also used for a liberty that a person hath to feed his cattle in the ground of another person, or in the forest, &c. Crompt. Jurist 197.

He that hath Herbage of a forest by patent may have trespass for the grass, but not for trees or the fruit of them; and he may take beasts damage feisant, and have quare clausum fregit, and by such grant may inclose the forest. Yet grantee of Herbage may inclose, and may have action of trespass quare clausum fregit. But though he that hath Herbage may inclose, yet he that hath reasonable Herbage cannot. Dv. 295. and see 2 Ro. Rep. 356.

Grantee of Herbage of a park cannot dispark it. Godb. 413. A lease was made of a manor with all gardens, orchards, yards, &c. and with all the profits of a wood, excepting to lessor forty acres, to take at his pleasure; per Dyer. The wood is not comprized within the lease, but the lessee shall only have the profits, as pannage, herbage, &c. 4 Leon. 8. See titles Trespass. Lease, &c.

HERBERY or HERBURY, An Inn. Cowell.

HERBENGER or HERBINGER, from the French herberger, that is hospitio accipere.] An officer in the King's house, who goes before and allots the noblemen, and those of the household their lodgings. Kitchin, fol. 176. It is also used for an innkeeper.

HERBERGAGIUM, Lodgings to receive guests in the way of hospitality. Cowell.

HERBERGATUS, Spent in an inn. Cowell.

HERBIGARE, To harbour, to entertain, from beribergum, beriburga, Saxon berie berg, a house of entertainment. — Sommer's Antiq. p. 248. Hence our berberges or herbinger, who provides harbour or house-room, &c.

HERCE, HERCIA, an harrow. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 77 — It signifies also a candlestick set up in churches, made in the form of an harrow, in which many candles were placed at the head of a canonaph.

HERCIARE, from the French hercer, to harrow. See 4 Inst. fol. 200.

HERDEWICH, or HERDEWIC. Herdewich.] A grange or place for cattle and husbandry. Mon. Angl. 3. part.

HERDWERCH, HEORDWERCH. Herdsman's work, or customary labours done by the shepherds, herdsman, and other inferior tenants at the will of their lord. Cowell, edit. 1727: Regist. Eccl. Christi Cant. MS.

HEREBANNUM, Sax. Here, exercitus, & Ban, edictum, multa] A mulct, for not going armed into the field, when called forth Spelm. Under the feudal policy, every free man, was under an obligation to serve the State. If, upon being summoned into the field, any free-man refused to obey, a full herabannum, i. e. a fine of sixty crowns, was to be exacted from him, according to the law of the Franks. This fine was levied with such rigor, that if any person was insolvent, he was reduced to servitude, and continued in that state until such time as his labours should amount to the value of the herabannum. The Emperor Lotharius rendered the penalty more severe, by confiscating the goods of the person refusing, and banishing him. Robertson's Char. V. 1 V. 216, 217.

HERBOTF, From the Sax. Here, and Bode a messenger.] The King's edict commanding his subjects into the field; from the Saxon bare, exercitus, and bode a messenger. Cowell.

HEREDITAMENTS, Hereditamenta.] All such immoveable things, whether corporeal or incorporeal, which a man may have to him and his heirs by way of inheritance; and which, if they are not otherwise devised, descend to him that is next heir, and fall not to the executor as chattels do. See stat 32 H. 8 cap. 2. It is a word of very great extent, comprehending whatever may be inherited or come to the Heir; be it real, personal or mixed, and though it is not holden, or lieth not in tenure. Co. Lit. 6 16. And by the grant of hereditaments in conveyances, manors, houses, and lands of all sorts, rent, services, advowsons, &c. pass. Ind. Hereditamentum est omni quod jure hereditario ad heredem transit.

Hereditaments are of two kinds, corporeal and incorporeal. Corporeal consist of such as affect the senses; such as may be seen and handled by the body: Incorporeal are not the object of sensation, can neither be seen nor handled, are creatures of the mind, and exist only in contemplation.

Corporeal Hereditaments consist wholly of substantial and permanent objects, all which may be comprehended under the general denomination of land only. For law says Coke, comprehendeth in its legal signification any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever, as arable, meadows, pastures, woods, moors, waters, marshes, furzes, and heath. 1 Inst. 4. It legally includes also all castles, houses, and other buildings; for they consist, saith he, of two things; land which is the foundation; and the structure thereupon so that if I convey the land or ground, the structure or building passeth therewith. It is observable that water is here mentioned as a species of land which may seem a kind of solecism; but such is the language of the law. and therefore one cannot bring an action to recover possession of a pool, or other piece of water, by the name of water only; either by calculating its capacity, as for so many cubical yards; or, by superficial measure, for twenty acres of water, or by general description, as for a pond, a water course, or a rivulet: but he must bring his action for the land that lies at the bottom, and must call it twenty acres of land covered with water. Brownl. 142. For water is a moveable wandering thing, and must of necessity continue common by the law of nature: so that there can only be a temporary, transient, usufructuary property therein: wherefore, if a body of water runs out of A.'s pond into B.'s. A. has no right to reclaim it. But the land, which the water covers, is permanent, fixed, and immoveable. and therefore in this there may be a certain substantial property; of which the law will take notice, and not of the other.

Land hath also in its legal signification, an indefinite extent, upwards as well as downwards. Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad caelum, is the maxim of the law; upwards, therefore, no man may erect any building, or the like, to overhang another's land: and downwards, whatever is in a direct line, between the surface of any land and the center of the earth belongs to the owner of the surface; as is every day's experience in the mining countries. So that the word land includes not only the face of the earth, but every thing under it or over it. And therefore if a man grants all his lands, he grants thereby all his mines of metal and other fossils, his woods, his waters, and his houses, as well as his fields and meadows. Not but the particular names of the things are equally sufficient to pass them, except in the instance of water; by a grant of which nothing passes but a right of fishing. Co. Lit. 4. Put the capital distinction is this; that by the name of a castle, messuages, toft, croft, or the like, nothing else will pass, except what falls with the utmost propriety under the term made use of; but by the name of Land, which is nomen generalissimum, every thing terrestrial will pass. 1 Inst. 4, 5, 6. By the name of a Castle, one or more manors may be conveyed; and conveyed by the name of a manor, a castle may pass. 1 Inst. 5; 2 Inst. 31. See 2 Comm. 17, 19.

An Incorporeal Hereditament is a right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal) or concerning, or annexed to, or exercisable within the same. Co. Lit. 19, 20. It is not the thing corporate itself, but something collateral thereto; as a rent issuing out of lands, &c. or an office belonging to jewels, &c. Or, according to logicians, Corporeal Hereditaments are the substance which may be always seen, always handled; Incorporeal Hereditaments are but a sort of accidents, which inhere in, and are supported by that substance; and may belong or not belong to it, without any visible alteration therein. Their existence is merely in idea, and abstract contemplation, though their effects and profits, which are totally distinct, may be frequently objects of our bodily senses. 2 Comm. 20. These Incorporeal Hereditaments are stated in the Commentaries to be principally of ten sorts; Advowsons; Tithes; Commons; Ways; Offices; Dignities; Franchises; Corodies, or Pensions; Annuities, and Rents. HERESY, Hæresis.] Among Protestants, is said to be a false opinion repugnant to some point of doctrine clearly revealed in scripture, and either absolutely essential to the Christian faith, or at least of most high importance. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 2. § 1.

HERESY.

Anciently, under the general name of Heresy there have been comprehended three sorts of crimes; 1. Apostasy, when a Christian apostatizes to Paganism. 2. Witchcraft, 3. Formal Heresy, which seems to be an apostasy from the established religion; for which, and the several ways of determining, punishing, and the difference between the Civil and Imperial laws, Popish canons, and the laws of England concerning heresy, see a large account in 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 33;—410.

It seems difficult precisely to determine what error shall amount to Heresy, and what not; but the statute 1 Edw. cap. 1. which erected the High Commission court, having restrained it to such as are either determined by scripture, or by one of the four first general councils, or by some other council, by express words of scripture, or by parliament, with the assent of the convocation; these rules are at present generally thought the best directions concerning this matter. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 2. § 2.

By the Common-law, one convicted of Heresy, and refusing to abjure it, or falling into it again after he abjured it, might be burnt, by force of the writ of hæretico comburendo, which issued out of Chancery upon a certificate of such conviction; but he forfeited neither lands nor goods, because the proceedings against him were only pro salute animæ. F. N. B. 269; 3 Inst. 43; Doctor and Student, lib. 2. cap. 29; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 2. § 10.

This writ de Hæretico comburendo is thought by some to be as ancient as the Common-law itself. However it appears from thence that the conviction of Heresy by the Common-law was not in any petty ecclesiastical court, but before the Archbishop himself in a Provincial Synod; and that the delinquent was delivered over to the King to do as he should please with him: so that the Crown had a controul over the Spiritual Power, and might pardon the convict by issuing no process against him; the writ de hæretico comburendo being not a writ of course, but issuing only by the special direction of the King in council. F. N. B. 269; 1 Hal. P. C. 395.

But in the Reign of Henry IV, when the eyes of the christian world began to be open, and the seeds of the protestant religion (though under the opprobrious name of Lollardy) took root in this kingdom; the Clergy taking advantage, from the King's dubious title, to demand an increase of their own power obtained an act of parliament, (stat. 2 H. 4. c. 15,) which sharpened the edge of persecution to its utmost keenness. For by that statute the Diocesan alone, without the intervention of a Synod, might convict of heretical tenets; and unless the convict abjured his opinions, or if after abjuration he relapsed, the sheriff was bound ex officio, if required by the bishop, to commit the unhappy victim to the flames without waiting for the consent of the Crown. By stat. 3 H. 5. c. 7, Lollardy was also made a temporal offence, and indictable in the King's courts; which did not thereby gain an exclusive, but only a concurrent jurisdiction, with the bishop's consistory.

Afterwards when the final reformation of religion began to advance, the power of the ecclesiastics was somewhat moderated; for though what Heresy is, was not then precisely defined, yet we are told in some points what it is not. The stat. 25 H. 8. c. 14, Declaring, that offences against the see of Rome are not Heresy; and the Ordinary being thereby restrained from proceeding in any case upon mere suspicion; that is, unless the party be re-caused by two credible witnesses, or an indictment for Heresy be first previously found in the King's courts of Common law. And yet the spirit of persecution was not then abated, but only diverted into a lay channel. For in six years afterwards by Stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 14, the bloody law of the Six Articles was made; which established the six most contested points of popery; transubstantiation, communion in one kind, the celibacy of the clergy, monastic vows, the sacrifice of the mass, and auricular confession; which points were "determined and resolved by the most godly study, pain, and travail of his majesty: for which his most humble and obedient Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and temporal and the Commons, in parliament assembled, did not only render and give unto his highness their most high and hearty thanks," but did also enact and declare all opposers of the first to be Hereticks, and to be burnt with fire; and of the five last to be felons, and to suffer death. The same statute established a new and mixed jurisdiction of Clergy and Laity for the trial and conviction of Hereticks; the reigning prince being then equally intent on destroying the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, and establishing all other Romish corruptions of the christian religion.

It would be unnecessary to perplex this detail with the various repeals and revivals of the sanguinary laws in the two succeeding reigns; we may therefore proceed directly to the reign of Queen Elizabeth; when the Reformation was finally established. By Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1, all former statutes relating to Heresy are repealed, which leaves the jurisdiction of Heresy as it stood at Common-law; viz. as to the infliction of common censures, in the Ecclesiastical Courts; and in case of burning the Heretic in the Provincial Synod only. 5 Rep. 23: 12 Rep. 56, 92. Sir Matthew Hale indeed is of a different opinion, and holds that such power resides in the Diocesan also, tho' he agrees that in either case the writ de hæretico comburendo was not demandable of common right, but grantable or otherwise merely at the King's discretion. 1 Hal. P. C. 405. But the principal point now gained was, that by this statute a boundary is for the first time set to what shall be accounted Heresy; nothing for the future being so to be determined, but only such tenets, which have been heretofore so declared. 1. By the words of the canonical scriptures. 2. By the first four General Councils or such others as have only used the words of the Holy Scriptures; or, 3. which shall be hereafter so declared by the parliament, with the assent of the Clergy in Convocation. Thus was Heresy reduced to a greater certainty than before; though it might not have been the worse to have defined it in terms still more precise and particular, as a man continued still liable to be burnt for what perhaps he did not understand to be Heresy, till the ecclesiastical judge so interpreted the words of the canonical scriptures.

For the writ de Hæretico comburendo remained still in force, and there are instances of its being put in execution upon two Anabaptists in the seventeenth of Elizabeth, and two Arians in the ninth of James I. But it was totally abolished, and Heresy again subjected only to ecclesiastical correction pro salute animæ by virtue of Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 9; for in one and the same reign our lands were delivered from the slavery of military tenures; our bodies from arbitrary imprisonment by the Habeas Corpus act; and our minds from the tyranny of superstitious bigotry, by demolishing this last badge of persecution in the English law. 4 Comm 46—9.

The following determinations will further explain the history and progress of proceedings in Heresy; and those relative to the temporal courts seem to be yet undisputed law, as far as they are now applicable.

By the Common-law with us, the Convocation of the clergy or Provincial Synod, might and frequently did proceed to the sentencing of Hereticks, and, when convicted left them to the secular power, whereupon the writ of hæretico comburendo might issue. Bro. tit. Heresy: 2 Rol. Abr. 226.

It is also agreed, that every Bishop may convict persons of Heresy within his own diocese, and proceed by church censures against those who shall be convicted; but it is said, that no spiritual judge, who is not a bishop, hath this power; and it hath been questioned, whether a conviction before the Ordinary were a sufficient foundation whereon to ground the writ de hæretico comburendo, as it is agreed that a conviction before the Convocation was. F. N. B. 269: 12 Co. 56, 57: 3 Inst. 40: Gibf. Codex 401: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 2. § 4: State Trials, Vol. 2. 275.

It seems agreed, that regularly the Temporal Courts have no cognisance of Heresy, either to determine what it is, or to punish the Heretic as such, but only as a disturber of the public peace; that therefore, if a man be proceeded against as an Heretic in the spiritual court, pro salute animæ, and think himself aggrieved, his proper remedy is to bring his appeal to a higher ecclesiastical court, and not to move for a prohibition, from a temporal one. 27 H. 8. 14 b. 5 Co. 58: Hob. 236.

Yet a Temporal Judge may incidentally take knowledge whether a tenet be heretical or not; as where one was committed by force of Stat. 2 H. 4. c. 15, for saying, that he was not bound by the law of God to pay tithes to the curate; another for saying, that tho' he was excommunicated before men, yet he was not so before God; the temporal courts on an habeas corpus in the first case, and in an action of false imprisonment in the other, adjudged neither of the points to be Heresy within that statute, for the King's courts will examine all things which are ordained by statute. 3 Inst. 42: 1 Rol. Rep. 110: 2 Bufl. 300.

In quare impedit if the bishop plead that he refused the clerk for Heresy, it seems that he must set forth the particular point, that it may appear to be heretical to the court wherein the action is brought. 5 Co. 58: 1 Aud. 191: 3 Leon. 199: 3 Lev. 314. See title Quare Impedit.

HERETUM,

HERIOTUM, Sax. heriot; heriot, heriot, from here, exercitus, an army, and geat, geat, geat. Signified originally a tribute given to the lord of a manor for his better preparation for war. By the laws of Canutus, at the death of the great men of this realm, so many horses and arms were to be paid as they were in their respective life-times obliged to keep for the King's service. Spelm. Sir Edw. Coke makes Heriot, or heriot, (from herus lord) the lord's beast: And it is now taken for the best beast, whether it be horse, ox, or cow, that the tenant dies possessed of, due and payable to the lord of the manor: and in some manors, the best goods, piece of plate, &c. Kitch. 133.

There is this difference between Heriot and Relief; Heriot has been generally a personal, and Relief always a predial service.

It appears not only from Spelman's conjectures, but likewise from the laws themselves of King Canutus, that the Danes were the first inventors of Heriots, and that it was a political institution of theirs, whereby the Danish tenants were to hold by military service, and their arms and horses, at their deaths, to revert to the Public; by that means putting the whole strength and defence of the kingdom into their hands; committing only the affairs of agriculture, and the improvement of the nation to the English, though they thereby enjoyed greater freedom and immunities in their tenures than the Danish tenants. Spelm. 287.

As to the several kinds of Heriots, some are due by custom, some by tenure, and some by reservation on deeds executed within time of memory; those due by custom, are the most frequent, and arose by the contract or agreement of the lord and tenant, in consideration of some benefit or advantage accruing to the tenant; and for which an Heriot, as the best beast, best piece of household furniture, &c. became due, and belonged to the lord, either on the death or alienation of the tenant, and which the lord may seize, either within the manor or without, at his election. Dyer 199 b: Bro. title Heriot 2, 3.

Heriots are therefore now to be considered as usually divided into two sorts; Heriot-service and Heriot-custom. The former, being such as are due upon a special reservation in a grant or lease of lands, therefore amount to little more than a mere rent. 2 Saund. 166. The latter arise upon no special reservation whatsoever, but depend merely upon immemorial usage and custom. Co. Cop. § 24. The latter, of which we are here principally to speak, are defined to be "a customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the Lord of the fee, on the decease of the owner of the land." 2 Comm. c. 28.

Upon the plan of the Danish establishment, already noticed, did William the Conqueror fashion his law of-reliefs, when he ascertained the precise relief to be taken of every tenant in chivalry; and, contrary to the feudal custom and the usage of his own duchy of Normandy, required arms and implements of war to be paid instead of arms and implements of war. But this custom was not universal, and sometimes the relief was paid in money, as in the case of the Double Rent payable at the death of the tenant, which now continues among us, and is a custom of the same nature, but of Saxon parentage, and at first to have been merely discretionary. London, Parambly. 108.

There are now for the most part assigned to Copyhold Tenures and are due by custom only, which is the life of all estates by copy, and perhaps are the only instance where custom has favoured the Lord. For this payment was originally a voluntary donation or gratuitous legacy of the tenant; perhaps in acknowledgement of his having been raised a degree above villeinage, when all his goods and chattels were quite at the mercy of the Lord: and custom which has on the one hand confirmed the tenant's interest in exclusion of the Lord's will, has on the other hand established this discretionary piece of gratitude into a permanent duty. An Heriot may also appertain to free land, that is held by service and suit of court; in which case it is most commonly a copyhold enfranchised, where upon the Heriot is still due by custom. Bracton speaks of Heriots as frequently due on the death of both species of tenants, which he observes, magis sit de gratia quam de jure; in which Fleta and Britton agree: thereby plainly intimating the original of this custom to have been merely voluntary, as a legacy from the tenant, though now the immemorial usage has established it as of right in the Lord. Bract. l. 2. c. 36. § 9: Fleta l. 3. c. 18: Britton, c. 69.

This Heriot is, as has been said, sometimes the best live beast, or aurum, which the tenant dies possessed of, which is particularly denominated the villein's relief, in the 29th law of King William the Conqueror; sometimes the best inanimate 'good, under which a jewel or piece of plate may be included: but it is always a personal chattel, which immediately on the death of the tenant who was the owner of it, being ascertained by the option of the Lord, becomes vested in him as his property; and is no charge upon the lands, but merely on the goods and chattels. Hob. 60. The tenant must be the owner of it, else it cannot be due; and therefore on the death of a feme-covert no Heriot can be taken: for she can have no ownership in things personal. Kalu. 4 Leon. 239. In some places there is a customary composition in money, as 10s. or 20s. in lieu of a Heriot, by which the lord and tenant are both bound, if it be an indisputable antient custom; but a new composition of this sort, will not bind the representatives of either party; for that amounts to the creation of a new custom, which is now impossible. Co. Cop. § 31: See 2 Comm. 422—4. c. 28.

The following extracts will further elucidate this subject.—Heriot-service is payable on the death of Tenant in fee-simple; and Heriot-custom upon the death of Tenant for life: Co. Lit. 185.

If an Heriot is reserved upon a lease, it is Heriot-service, and incident to the reversion. Lutw. 1366, 7. For a Heriot goes with the reversion, as well as rent; and the grantee of the reversion shall have it. 2 Saund. 166.

Although an Heriot reserved upon a lease is called an Heriot-service; yet it is not like the case where a man holds land by the service of paying an Heriot, &c. because where a Heriot is reserved on lease, the proper remedy is either a distress, or action of covenant grounded on the contract, for the lessor cannot seize, as the lord of a manor may do, the beast of his tenant who holds of him by Heriot-service. Kirkw. 82, 84. See Post.

There may be a covenant in leases for lives, &c. to render the best beast, or so much money for an Heriot, at the election of the lessor; in which case the lessor must give notice which he will accept, before action may be brought for it, or a distress taken. 2 Lill. Abr. 19.

For Heriot-service, the lord may distress any beast belonging to the tenant on the land: Also it has been held, that the lord may distress any man's beasts which are upon the land, and retain them until an Heriot is satisfied. Co. Litt. 185; Litt. Rep. 33; Co. Car. 260. And if the tenant deviseth away all his goods, &c. yet the lord shall have his Heriot on the death of the tenant. Stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 5.

When a Heriot is to be paid by a certain life holder of his own goods, an assignee is not liable to pay the Heriot; his goods not being the goods of such life. Co. Car. 313; 2 Nelf. 532. If the lord purchase part of the tenancy, Heriot-service is extinguished; but it is not so of Heriot-custum. 8 Rep. 105.

It hath been solemnly adjudged, that for an Heriot service, or for a Heriot reserved by way of tenure, the lord may either seize or distress; for when the tenant agrees that the lord shall on his death have the best beast, &c. the lord hath his election which beast he will take, and by seizing thereof reduces that to his possession, wherein he had a property at the death of the tenant, without the concurring act of any other person; and it is not like the case where the lessor reserves 20 s. or a robe; for there the lessee has his election which he will pay, and being to do the first act the lord cannot seize, but must distress. Plow. 96. adjudged. Cro. Eliz. 589.

So it hath been ruled, that for a Heriot-custum or service the lord may seize as well in the manor as out; but if he distress, it must be in the manor. See 1 Salk. 356; 1 Show. 81. S. P. 3 Mod. 231. But it is now stated as positive law, that for Heriot-custum, which Coke says, Co. Cap. 6 25, lies only in prender, and not in render, the lord may seize the identical thing itself, but cannot distress any other chattel for it. Cro. Eliz. 590; Cro. Car. 260; 3 Com. 15. c. 1. And this is confirmed by the following authorities.

For Heriot custum, the lord is to seize, not distress; and he may seize the best beast, &c. though out of the manor, or in the King's highway, because he claims it as his proper goods, by the death of the tenant, which he may seize in any place where he finds it. Kitch. 267; 2 Inst. 132; 2 Nelf. Abr. 931; Plow. 96. Kirkw. 82, 4; 1 Salk. 356; Bro. tit. Heriot, 2, 3.

And it is said, that this liberty must be understood to be annexed to ancient tenures, on which the lords had many privileges, and not to be extended to those which are created within time of memory, upon particular reservations. HIBERNAGIUM, See Hibernagium.

HIDAGE, hidagium.] An extraordinary tax formerly payable to the King for every hide of land. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 6. This taxation was levied, not only in money, but provision of armour, &c. And when the Danes landed at Sandwich, in the year 994, King Ethelred taxed all his lands by hides, so that every 310 hides found one ship furnished; and every 8 hides found one jack and one saddle, to arm for the defence of the Kingdom, &c. Sometimes the word hidage was used for the being quired that tax; which was also called hidgild, and interpreted from the Saxon, a price or ransom paid to save one's skin or hide from beating." Sax. Dict. See title Taxes.

HIDEGILD. Vide Hidgild.

HIDES, See Leather and Skins.

HIDE AND GAIN, Did anciently signify arable land. Coke Lit. 85 b. For of old, to gain the land was as much as to till it. See Gainage.

HIGHWAY:

VIA REGIA.] A publick passage for the King's people; for which reason it is called the King's Highway

Under this title are comprehended Bridges repaired by the parish or township. As to County Bridges, See this Dict. title Bridges.

The law relating to Turnpike-roads as well as that concerning Highways, being in a great measure, regulated by statutes, the provisions of which are in some degree implicated with, and frequently refer to each other, the whole is here digested and abridged according to the following divisions.

HIGHWAYS.

1. Of the various Sorts of Highway, &c.

II. Of the Right to the claiming, and changing and altering of Highway.

III. Of Reports of Confirmed Cases.

IV. Of Musco, at Common Law, in Highway.

V. Of proceedings relative to repairing Highways, Nuisances in them, &c.

* VI. Regulation of { (A) HIGHWAYS
(B) TURNPIKE-ROADS } in Statute.

"I. It seems, that anciently there were but four High ways in England, which were free and common to all the King's subjects, and through which they might pass without any toll, unless there was a particular consideration for it; all others, which we have at this day, are supposed to have been made through the grounds of private persons, on writs of ad quod damnum, &c. which being an injury to the owner of the soil, it is said that they may prescribe for toll without any special consideration: 3 New Abr. 54: 1 Mod. 231: 2 Mod. 143:

There are (says Lord Coke) three kinds of ways: 1. A foot-way, called in Latin iter. 2. A pack and prime way, which is both a horse and foot-way, called in Latin actus. 3. A cart-way, called in Latin via or aditus, which contains the other two, and also a cart way; and is called via regia, if it be common to all men; and communis fructuaria, if it belong only to some town or private person. Co. Lit. c6 a.

But, notwithstanding these distinctions, it seems, that any of the said ways which is common to all the King's subjects, whether it lead directly to a market-town or only from town to town, may properly be called a Highway; that any such cart-way may be called the King's Highway; that a river common to all men may also so called a Highway; and that distances in any of the said ways are punishable by indictment: otherwise they would not be punished at all: for they are not actionable unless they cause a special damage to some particular persons, because, if such action would lie, a multiplicity of suits would ensue. See 2 Term Rep. — But it seems, that a way to a parish church, or to the common fields of a town, or to a village, which terminate there, may be called a private way, because it belongs, not to all the King's subjects, but only to the particular inhabitants of such parish, house or village, each of which, as it seems, may have an action for a nuisance therein. Palm 389: Cra. Elix 63. 664: 1 Vent 189, 208: 3 Keb. 28: Cy. Lit. 56: 6 Mod 255: 1 Harw. P. C. c. 76. § 1.

A street built upon a person's own ground is a dedication of the Highway so far only as the publick has occasion for it, viz. for a right of passage, not as to the absolute possession of the soil Sua 1004.

If passengers have used time out of mind, when the roads are bad, to go by outlets on the land adjoining to a Highway in an open field, such outlets are parcel of the Highway; and therefore if they are sown with corn, and the tract sounderous, the King's subjects may go upon the corn. 1 Rep. Abr. 39b: Cro. Ca. 366 S C: 1 Hawt. P. C. c. 76 § 2. But it is not a good justification in trespass that the defendant has a specific right of way over the plaintiff's land, and that he had gone upon the adjoining land, because the way was impassable by being overflowed by a river. Taylor v Whitehead Doug 745-9.

HIGHWAYS, II. III.

Though every Highway is said to be the King's, yet this must be understood to be that in every Highway the King and his Subjects may pass and repass at their pleasure. But the freehold, and all the profits, as trees, &c. belong to the lord of the soil, or to the owner of the lands on both sides of the way. Also the lord or owner of the soil shall have an action of trespass for digging the ground. But the lord of a rape, within which there are ten hundreds, may prescribe to have all the trees growing within an Highway within this rape, though the manor or soil adjoining belongs to another: for usage to take the trees is a good mark of ownership. 1 Rel. Abr. 394: 1 Burr. 43: Kilw. 141.

II. A Man may have a way either by prescription or grant, by reservation, by implication, or by cowlty of partition, and shall not in a cuius claudunt be obliged to shew which way he claims it; but it will be sufficient for him to alledge debet et silet, &c. but in a bar or replication, he must shew his title precisely. 1 Pent. 274: 2 Lev. 148: 3 Keb. 548, 531. But he who prescribes for a way, must shew in certain whether it is a foot, horse, or cart way. Yel. 163.

But it seems, that if a man has a way for carriages from D, to Blackacre over my close, and after he purchases land adjoining to Blackacre, he cannot use the said way with carriages to the land adjoining, for then it may be very prejudicial to my close; but it seems, if I will help myself, I must shew the special matter, and that he used it for the land adjoining. 1 Rel. Abr. 391.

A way must not be claimed as appendant or appurtenant to a house, because it is only an easement, and no interest. Yelv. 159. But it may be quasi appendant thereto, and as such pass by grant thereof. Cro. Jac. 190.

A man may prescribe for a way from his house through a certain close, &c. to church, though he himself has lands next adjoining to his said house, through which of necessity he must first pass; for the general prescription shall be applied only to the lands of others. Ralm. 387, 388: 2 Rel. Rep. 397.

An ancient Highway cannot be changed without an injunction found on a writ of ad quod dampnum, that such change will be no prejudice to the Public; and it is said, that if one change a Highway without such authority, he may stop the new way whenever he pleases; neither can the King's subjects, in an action brought against them for going over such new way, justify generally as in a common Highway, but ought to shew specially, by way of excuse, how the old way was obstructed, and a new one set out; neither are the inhabitants bound to keep watch in such new way, or repair it, or to make amends for a robbery committed in it. Cro. Car. 266: Vaugh. 341: Yelv. 141: 1 Burr. 465: 1 Hawk. P. C. 2, 76, 53.

But it hath been holden, that if a water, which hath been an ancient Highway, by degrees changes its course, and goes over different ground from that whereon it used to run, yet the Highway continues in the new channel in the same manner as in the old. 22 Aff. 93: 1 Rel. Abr. 390.

An owner of land, over which there is an open road may inclose it by his own authority, but he is bound to leave sufficient space and room for the road, and he is obliged to repair it till he throws up the inclosure. But if he alter or change the road by the legal course of a writ of ad quod dampnum, he is not obliged to repair the new road, unless the jury impose such a condition on him; for otherwise it stands just as it did before, even though it was at first open and should be directed by the jury to be inclosed. And a private act of parliament for inclosing lands which vests a power in commissioners to set out new roads by their awards, is equally strong as to these consequences as a writ of ad quod dampnum. See 1 Burr. 456.

As to the regulation by statute, See post. VI. (A) 9.

III. Of Common rights, the general charge of repairing Highways lies on the occupiers of lands in the parish wherein they lie; but it is said that the tenants of the lands adjoining are bound to scour their ditches. 1 Rel. Abr. 39: March 26: 1 Kent. 90: 181: 2 Hen. 7. 5.

If a parish is partly in one county, and part in another, and the Highways in one county are out of repair, the whole parish shall contribute to the repair; but there may be an agreement between the inhabitants, that the one shall repair one part, and the other the other; and such agreement is good between themselves, and for breach, the one may have an action upon the case against the other; but in indictment they shall take no advantage of these agreements, for as to the King they are equally liable. 1 Mod. 112: 1 Yelv. 256: 3 Keb. 301.

A Highway lying within a parish, the whole parish is of common right bound to repair it; except it appears that it ought to be repaired by some particular person either ratiōe tenuræ, or by prescription. 1 Vent. 183. Style 163.

If a parish lie in two distinct counties, an indictment may be brought against that part of the parish in which the ruinous road lies. 4 Burr. 2511. But it must appear upon the face of the indictment by what right the charge is laid upon the particular division of any parish, which is in one county only. 5 Burr. 2700, 2: As that they have repaired time out of mind. Andr. 276: Hardw. 256; and see 2 Tenn. Rep. 513.

But though the parish be obliged of common right to repair the Highways in it, yet it is certain, that particular persons may be bound to repair the Highway, by reason of inclosure or prescription; as where the owner of lands not inclosed, next adjoining to the Highway, incloses his lands on both sides of it; in which case he is bound to make a perfect good way, and shall not be excused by making it good as it was before the inclosure, if it were then any way defective, because by the inclosure he takes from the people the liberty of going over the lands adjoining to the common track. 1 Rel. Abr. 390: Cro. Car. 366: 1 Sid. 464.

Also it is said, that if one inclose land on one side, which hath anciently been inclosed on the other side, he ought to repair all the way; but that if there be no such ancient inclosure on the other side, he ought to repair but half the way. 1 Sid. 464.

Therefore, if there be an old hedge time out of mind belonging to A. on the one side of the way, and B. having land lying on the other side, makes a new hedge, there B. shall be charged with the whole repair. 1 Sid. 464: 2 Keb. 665: 2 Saund. 157. But if A. makes a hedge on the one side of the way, and B. on the other, they shall be chargeable by moieties. 1 Sid. 464: 2 Keb.

66g. Nor it seems clear, that whosoever a person makes himself liable to repair a Highway, by reason of his own fault by throwing of it upon the road, he thereby binds himself from the burden of any future reparation. 1 Comm. 160; See ante II.

In a writ of ad quod damnum and inquisitio found thereupon, after the person hath once made the road, (and N. B. it is not necessary the whole new road should go through his own soil;) the parishioners ought to keep it in repair: because being discharged from repairing the old road, no new burthen is laid upon them; their labour is only transferred from one place to another. But if the new road lies in another parish, the parishioners who sued out the writ, and his heirs, ought to keep it in repair, because the inhabitants of the other parish gaining no benefit from the old road being taken away, it would be imposing a new charge upon them for which they enjoyed no compensation. 3 Aff. 772.

Particular persons may be bound to repair a Highway, by prescription, or in respect of interest of the land wherein the road lies; and it is said, that a corporation aggregate may be charged by a general prescription; that it ought and hath used to do it, without shewing any consideration in respect whereof they had used to do it, because such a corporation never dies, neither is it any plea, that they have done it out of charity; but it is said, that such a general prescription is not sufficient to charge a private person, because no man is bound to do a thing which his ancestors have done, unless it be for some special reason; as having lands descended to him holden by such service, &c. but it seems, that an indictment charging a tenant of lands in fee with having used of right to repair such a way ratione tenore terræ sue, without adding that his ancestors, or those whose estate he hath, have so done, is sufficient, for it is implied. 27 Aff. 51: 27 Ed. 4. 38 Bio. Prescription 49, 70: M. v. 52 at Lamb. 206: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 5—8.

And it seems certain in all those cases, whether a private person be bound to repair a Highway by inclosure or prescription, that the parish cannot take advantage of it on the general issue, but must plead it specially; that therefore, if to an indictment against the parish, for not repairing a Highway, they plead Not-guilty, this shall be intended only that the ways are in repair, but does not go to the right of reparation. 1 Mod. 112: 3 Keb. 301: 1 Vent. 256.

At Common law it is said, that all the county ought to make good the reparations of a Highway, where no particular persons are bound to do it, by reason the whole county have their ease and passage by the said way. Co. Rep. 13. By the ancient Common-law, villages are to repair their Highways, and may be punished for their delay; and if any do injury of straighten the Highway, he is punishable in the King's Bench, or before justices of the peace in the Court-Leet, &c. 27 Aff. 63: Crompt. Jurisd. 76: See post V.

As to Private ways.—If one grants a way, and afterwards digs trenches in it to my hindrance, I may fill them up again. But if a way which a man has, becomes not passable, or becomes very bad, by the owner of the land tearing it up with his carts, so that the land be filled with water, yet he who has the way cannot dig the ground to let out the water, for he has no interest in the soil. Godb. 52, 3. But in such case he may bring his action against the owner of the land for spoiling the way, or he may sue to go out of the way, upon the land of the wrong doer, or alter to the bad way as he can. But where a private way is spoiled by those who have a right to pass through, and through the default of the owner of the land, it seems, that they who have the use and benefit of the way, ought to repair it, and not the owner of the soil, unless he is bound thereto by custom or special agreement. 2 Burr. 482.

In an action on the case for not repairing a private road leading through the defendant's close, it is sufficient to allege, that the defendant as owner of the close is bound to repair. 3 Term Rep. 765.

For further matter as to repairs of Highways, See post VI. (A). 2, 3, 6.

It is clearly agreed to be a Nuisance to dig a ditch, or make a hedge across the Highway, or to erect a new gate, or to lay logs of timber in it, or generally to do any other act which will render it less commodious. Kitch. 34: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 48. Also it is a Nuisance for any person (and for which he may be indicted,) to continue an incroachment, or other nuisance to a Highway begun by his ancestor, because such continuance thereof amounts, in the judgment of law, to a new nuisance. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 61. Also it is agreed, that it is no excuse for him who lays logs in the Highway, that he laid them only here and there so that the people might have a passage through them by windings and turnings. 2 Roll. Abr. 137: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 49.

It is a nuisance to suffer the Highway to be incommoded by reason of the foulness, &c. of the adjoining ditches, or by boughs of trees hanging over it, &c. And it is said, that the owner of land next adjoining to the Highway, ought of common right to clear his ditches; but that the owner of land next adjoining to such land, is not bound by the Common-law to do without a special prescription; also it is said, that the owner of trees hanging over an Highway, to the annoyance of travellers, is bound by the Common-law to lop them; and it is clear that any other person may lop them, so far as to avoid the nuisance, 8 II. 7. 5 a: Kitch. 34: Dalt. cap. 26: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 52.

But it is no nuisance for an inhabitant of a town to unlade billets, &c. in the street before his house, by reason of the necessity of the case, unless he suffer them to continue there an unreasonable time. 2 Roll. Abr. 137, 265.

Any one may justify pulling down, or otherwise destroying a common nuisance, as a new gate or house erected in a Highway; and it hath been holden, that there is no need, in pleading such justification to shew that as little damage was done as might be. 2 Roll. Abr. 144: Cro. Car. 184: 1 Jam. 221: 2 Salk. 458.

Though all nuisances are punishable by indictment with fine and imprisonment, it is said, that one convicted of a nuisance to the Highway, may be commanded by the judgment to remove it at his own costs, &c. 2 Roll. Abr. 84: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 44. See 2 Sira. 686.

A gate erected in a Highway is a common nuisance, because it interrupts the people in that free and open passage, which they before enjoyed and were lawfully entitled to; but where such a gate has continued time out of mind, it shall be intended that it was set up at first by consent, on a composition with the owner of the land on the

the laying out the road, in which case the people had never any right to a freer passage than what they still enjoy. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 9. If one has a private way without a gate, and a gate is hung up, an action on the case lies, for the party hath not his way as he had before. Litt. R. p. 267.

V. As to the general doctrine with respect to Indictments, &c. upon this subject, Mr. Serjeant Hawkins has laid down the following rules:

First, That it is safe in every such indictment to shew both the place from which, and also the place to which, the way supposed to be out of repair doth lead; yet exceptions, for want of such certainty, have sometimes been disallowed: (See 4 Burr. 2091: Lucas 383.) However it seems certain, That there is no necessity to shew that a Highway leads to a market town, because every Highway leads from town to town. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 86.

An indictment against the parish of B. for not repairing a road leading from A. to B. is exclusive of B. and therefore bad: and it is not aided by a subsequent allegation that a certain part of the same Highway, situate in B. is in decay, &c. 3 Term Rep. 513.—See 1 H. Black. Rep. 351; that in pleading a publick Highway it is not necessary to state any termini. So in an indictment for a nuisance in a Highway, it is not necessary to mention the termini. Stra. 44.

2dly, That it is necessary in every such indictment expressly to shew in what place the nuisance complained of was done; for which cause an indictment for stopping a way at D. leading from D. to C. is not good; for it is impossible that a way leading from D. should be in D. and no other place is alledged. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 87.

So also in a presentment the Highway must be alledged to lie in the parish, otherwise the parish is not bound to repair. Cowp. 111; Stra. 181.—But if there be two villis in a parish, it is not necessary, in an indictment for a nuisance, to shew in which vill the nuisance lies. Say. 119.

3dly, That every such indictment ought also certainly to shew to what part of the Highway the nuisance did extend, as by shewing how many feet in length, and how many feet in breadth it contained; or otherwise the defendant will neither know of the certainty of the charge, against which he is to make his defence, neither will the court be able from the record to judge of the greatness of the offence, in order to assess a fine answerable therunto; and upon this ground it hath been adjudged, that an indictment for stopping a certain part of the King's Highway at K. is bad, for the uncertainty thereof. Also it hath been resolved, that the place wherein such a nuisance is alledged, is not sufficiently ascertained in such an indictment, by shewing that it contained so many feet in length, and so many in breadth, by estimation. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 88.

An indictment for a nuisance in laying soil in a Highway is not bad for want of the length and breadth of the nuisance being set out. Say 98.—Nor for a nuisance in digging two grips or ditches in a common footway. Say. 197.—Nor for a nuisance, that a certain Highway and bridge are in a ruinous condition. Say. 301.

4thly, That every such indictment must shew, that the way wherein a nuisance is alledged, is a common Highway; for which cause it hath been resolved, That an indictment for a nuisance to a highway, without adding that it was a Highway, is bad; and upon the same ground it seemeth also, that an indictment for a nuisance to a common footway to the church of D. for all the parishioners of D. is not good; yet it seems, that if those last words, viz. for all the parishioners of D. had been omitted, such an indictment might be maintained. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 89.

5thly, That it is not safe in an indictment against a common person for not repairing a Highway, which he ought to have done in respect of the tenure of certain lands, barely to say that he was bound to repair it ratione tenuræ terræ, without adding suæ. Also it is said, that in an indictment against a bishop, &c. for not repairing a Highway, in respect to certain lands, it ought to be shewn in what capacity he ought to repair it, because otherwise it cannot be known in what capacity the process is to be awarded against him. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 90.

If a man be charged to repair ratione tenuræ, he may throw it upon the parish by the general issue. Stra. 184.—And it hath been held upon consideration that ratione tenuræ is sufficient without suæ. Stra. 187. Hawkins positively states that the defendant ought not to plead quod non debuit reparare without shewing who ought. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 94; cites 1 Sid. 140: Carth. 213: 11 Mod. 273: 12 Mod. 13.

6thly, That in every such indictment the fact alledged against the defendant must be expressed in such proper terms, that it may clearly appear to the court to have been a nuisance; and for this cause it hath been resolved, That a presentment for diverting a Highway is not good, because a Highway cannot be diverted, but must always continue in the same place where it was, howsoever it be obstructed, and a new way made in another place. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 91.

It hath been resolved, That an indictment against a man for stopping a Highway in his own land, is good, without laying the offence done vi et armis. Also it is said, That a presentment that a Highway in such a place is decayed by the default of the inhabitants of such a town, is good, without naming any person in certainty. But it hath been adjudged, that an indictment against particular persons must specially charge them every one; for which cause it hath been resolved, that an indictment against several for not repairing their streets, that they, & eorum uterque, did not repair them, is not good. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 92.

Upon an indictment for not repairing a Highway, if the defendant produce a certificate before trial, that the way is repaired, he shall be admitted to a fine: but after verdict, the certificate is too late, for then he must have a consent to the sheriff, who ought to return that the way is repaired, because the verdict, which is a record, must be answered by a record. Raym. 215. And where the defendants, indicted for not repairing a common footway, confessed the indictment, and submitted to a fine; it was held, that the matter was not ended by their being fined; but that writs of distingas shall be awarded in infinitum till the court of B. R. is certified that the way is repaired, as it was when it was at best; but the defendants are not bound to put it in better repair than it has been time out of

of mind. 1 Salk. 358; 6 Mod. 163. If a defendant has made a Highway as good as it is capable of being made, it was said, in an extraordinary case, that he shall not be charged him, on an information against him, though it may be a mitigation of his fine. 1 Salk. 358; 1 Alfo. 119. It is no excuse for the inhabitants of a parish indicted at Common-law, for not repairing the Highways, that they have done the work required by statute; for the Statutes are made in aid of the Common-law: and when the statute work is not sufficient, rates and assessments are to be made. Dalt. c. 26.

It is said, that if the right or title to repair such ways come in question, upon suggestion and affidavit made thereof, a certiorari may be had to remove the indictment into B. R.

A person may be indicted for not repairing a house standing upon a Highway which is ruinous, and like to fall down, to the danger of travellers, whatever be his tenure, which in such case is not material. 1 Salk. 357.

If there be a common foot-way through a close by prescription, and the owner of the close ploughs up the way, and sows it, and lays thorns at the side of it, passengers may go over another foot-way in the same close, without being trespassers. Tylor. 142. And if a Highway is not sufficient, any passenger may break down the inclosure of it, and go over the land, and justify it till a sufficient way is made. 3 Salk. 182.

Erecting a gate across a Highway, though not locked, but opening and shutting at pleasure, is esteemed a nuisance; for it is not so free and easy a passage, as if there had been no gate; and the usual way of redressing nuisances of this kind, is by indictment; but every person may remove the nuisance, by cutting or throwing it down, if there be occasion so to do; and it hath been held, that though there are many gates across Highways, they must be anciently set up, and it shall be intended by licence from the King upon the writ of ad quod damnum. Gro. Car. 184. See ante IV.

VI. (A) Of HIGHWAYS.

1. The Statute duty.
2. Assessment of Rates and other funds for the Repair of Highways.
3. Of the Appointment of the Surveyor, and his duty.
4. Of Nuisances by Statute.
5. The Number of Horses in Carriages.
6. Of presenting Highways.
7. Of levying Assessments, Penalties and Forfeitures; and other general provisions to enforce the Execution of the Act.
8. Of Defendants in Actions on the Statutes, &c.
9. Of Changing and Enlarging Highways.

1. By stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 34, which repeals and consolidates the provisions of all former statutes on this subject, Occupiers of 50 l. a year keeping a team of three horses shall send the same and two men to do statute-duty for six days in every year.—And so for another six days in every year for every further 50 l. a year.—So also every person who shall occupy 50 l. in any other parish than where he resides.—Every person occupying 50 l. a year, but not keeping a team, shall send a team; a person not keeping a team, but occupying under 50 l. a year either where he does or does not reside, to pay the surveyor in lieu of duty for every 20 s. a year 1 d. for every day's duty.—A person keeping a team and not occupying 30 l. a year shall send one man with the team.

Labourers, who are not kept, neither occupied or let, are liable to the performance of the duty; to be satisfied by their Owner. Falm. 389.

The living of the clergy are liable as other estates, W. 1st. 40; 1 Inq. 784.

Whoever shall keep a cart and horse, and not a team, shall send the same, and one labourer, or pay the composition at the option of the surveyor.—Persons above 18 and under 60 not occupying 4 l. a year, not being apprentices or menial servants, if they have not otherwise performed or commuted shall, by themselves or deputy, perform the six days' duty.—A person keeping a coach or carriage and no team, and not occupying 50 l. a year shall pay 1 s. a day for each horse or the composition before mentioned at the option of the surveyor.—If the carriages required are not necessary, the owners shall send 3 men or pay 4 s. 6 d.—The labourers shall furnish themselves with proper instruments for the statute-labour; and shall with the teams, &c. work 8 hours a day.—If persons do not send a sufficient labourer besides the driver, or if the labourers disobey the surveyor, he may discharge them and recover the forfeiture against the master, as he might in case none had been sent at all. § 35.

A stand-cart and one horse to be reckoned half a team; a cart and two horses as two-thirds.—And if the duty require it, the surveyor may order it to be performed with a waggon. § 36.

The surveyor shall give four days' notice to the occupiers, &c. of the statute-duty required, and the days when. (See Ld. Raym. 858.) Persons making default in sending the team and men, to forfeit 10 s.—in sending cart, horse and man 3 s.—in sending cart, horse and two men 5 s.—in sending a labourer 1 s. 6 d.—The forfeitures to be applied to the highways; the surveyor to be impartial. § 37.

The statute duty may be compounded for, as the justices shall direct, at the rate of 4 s. 6 d. for a team; 2 s. for a cart and horse; 3 s. for a cart and 2 horses; and 4 d. for a day's personal labour, § 38.

Justices of cities, corporations, &c. are to execute this act within their jurisdictions. § 54.

If a necessity should arise in any particular place, the Justices may supersede the liberty of compounding, and order the statute-duty to be performed in kind; and lots shall be drawn which of the inhabitants shall so perform it. § 39.

The Justices may mitigate the composition, where part of the land occupied lies in another parish. § 40.

Section 41, Settles the manner in which the surveyors shall give notice of the time and place for compounding, and how such compositions shall be paid.

Where a draught or plough is kept and no carriage, 1 s. shall be paid for every horse or pair of oxen. § 42.

The Inhabitants may appoint 3 separate months in the year for seed-time, hay, and corn-harvest in which no Statute-duty shall be performed. § 43.

The Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 58, empowers the Justices in special sessions in certain cases to apply the funds of Turnpike roads in aid of the statute-duty on Highways.

By Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 25. § 23, Persons serving in the militia are exempted from statute-duty during their service.

The

The performance of this duty is an inducement to an indictment for not repairing. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 2.

The inhabitants of a parish into which a road is opened by Turnpike-trustees are not bound to do any work thereon. 1 Black. 603.

2. The Sessions may order a rate not exceeding 6 d. in the pound to defray the expenses of procuring materials, &c. for the repairs. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 2.

If the funds are exhausted, and they and the labour appointed by the act, are insufficient to keep the Highways in sufficient repair, the Sessions may cause an equal assessment for that purpose; provided the said rate of 6 d. and this assessment do not exceed 9 d. per pound. §§ 45, 46.

Peoffees or trustees of lands granted for the repair of Highways shall let them to the best advantage, and the Sessions may enquire into the management thereof. § 52.

3. Of the Appointment of the Surveyor. By the said Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78 § 1. The officers and Parishioners shall assemble yearly on 22d of September at 11 in the morning, when the majority shall make a list of ten parishioners each possessing a real estate of 10 l. a year or renting 30 l. or worth 100 l. personally.—If a sufficient number of this description cannot be found, the deficiency shall be supplied by the most able inhabitants.—Within three days after, the constable shall send a copy of the list to the Justice of the division, and the original list to the special Sessions after Michaelmas session; and give notice to the persons named, to appear at the Session and accept the office of surveyor (if appointed) or shew cause to the contrary.—The Justices, at such special Sessions shall appoint one, two or more surveyors from the said list, preferring such as are qualified; which shall be notified to the persons chosen who shall be surveyors for the next year.—If any named in the list refuse to serve, they shall forfeit 5 l.—And the Justices may appoint inhabitants of the county living within three miles of the parish; who on refusal shall forfeit 50 s.—A surveyor serving one year shall be exempt for the three following.—If no list is returned, or the person appointed refuses to serve, two Justices at special Session may appoint a surveyor with a salary to be paid from the forfeitures, but not to exceed $\frac{1}{3}$ of the 6 d. rate.—The Justices may order the collector to return an account of the said assessment.—Officers neglecting their duty to forfeit 40 s.

It seems that the presence of the parish officers is not absolutely essential to the legality of the meeting, provided it is in other respects fair and regular. 4 Burr. 2454.—More Surveyors than one are comprehended under, and understood by the word surveyor in this act. See Sect. 5. of the act.—If the list has been improperly procured, the Justices may reject it. 4 Burr. 2454.

Where a surveyor with a salary is appointed, the justices shall also appoint an assistant, who shall forfeit 50 s. on refusal to serve, and another be appointed, liable also to 50 s. for refusing, and they may then appoint one with a salary.—An assistant serving one year shall not be appointed again for three years, without his own consent. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 2.

The Surveyor shall give security by bond, if required. § 3.

By § 5. It is provided that two parts in three of the parishioners assembled may recommend a Surveyor with a salary to the Justices.—And if the Surveyor dies or becomes incapable during the interval of the Sessions, the Justices may appoint another, and the same shall be done if he dies or becomes incapable.

The Surveyor shall be bound to execute the duties of his office, and to keep the Highways in repair, and to give notice to the Justices of the state of the Highways, and to the persons chargeable with the repairs, and to the persons who may neglect to repair, not more than 14 days after the date of the declaration of the Justices.—The Surveyor is to draw on the assistant for sums of 40 s. or upwards.

Surveyors shall view the Highways, and give notice to remove obstructions or encroachments by hedges, &c. and if not remedied within twenty days the Surveyor may do it at the charge of the party offending, who shall also forfeit 1 d. per foot. § 12. and See post. 4.

The Surveyor shall upon oath inform two Justices of all Highways, bridges, &c. repairable by tenure which are out of repair.—And if they are not repaired on notice to the persons chargeable they shall be presented at the Sessions. § 23. See 1 Black. 602. and post. 6.

Justices at special Sessions may order which of the Highways shall be first repaired. § 25.

Sect. 26. directs how, where, and in what manner the surveyor shall erect direction posts in cross roads, &c.

Sects. 27 & 28. State where and in what manner the Surveyor may get materials for the repairs; and § 29, how materials shall be obtained where there are not sufficient within the parish.—As to this latter, See 1 Burr. 382.—The Surveyor enabled to contract. § 50.

The Surveyor is to fence off all pits and holes made in digging materials, on forfeiture of 10 s. and on neglect after notice from 40 s. to 10 l. § 31.—Materials dug for the use of a different parish than that in which they lie, shall be removed only between the 1st of April and 1st of November or in a hard frost. § 32.

The penalty for damaging bridges, mills, &c. between 20 s. and 5 l. at the discretion of the Justices. § 33.

Sect. 48. Directs in what manner the Surveyor or his executors, &c. shall keep his accounts; which are to be examined at a vestry, afterwards by a Justice, and further if necessary at a special Sessions.—See 2 Burr. 746.

Surveyors neglecting their duty shall forfeit between 10 s. and 5 l. at the discretion of the Justices. § 51.

If the Surveyor receives money due to the turnpike roads he shall pay it to the treasurer, and how it is to be applied. § 44.

4. By the said Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 7. The Surveyor shall give ten days' notice to the landholders next adjoining the road to cut and prune their hedges, and upon default the Justices may order the same to be done, and if such order is not complied with, in ten days, the Surveyor shall cut and prune at the expense of the owner of the land, who shall pay over and above 2 s. for every 24 feet of hedge, and 2 s. for every tree; and see § 12 of this act mentioned under the last head.

The landholder shall make proper ditches and drains, and keep them properly covered and in repair on pain of 10 s. § 8.—And where the old ditches are not sufficient, the Surveyor shall order new ones to be made § 14.

No small tree or bush whereby a man may lurk, shall stand within 200 feet of a Highway.—See Stat. Winchester (13 Ed 1 A. 2.) c. 5. which was repealed by 7 Geo. 3. c. 42. but revived by 8 Geo. 3. c. 5. § 3.

Sect.

HIGHWAYS VR (A), 5-7.

Sect. 13, of the said act, 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. directs the season in which hedges shall be pruned and trees felled.

No tree, bush or shrub shall grow within 15 feet from the centre of any Highway, unless for ornament, &c. § 6.

Whoever shall lay any stone, timber, &c. in a Highway for five days so as to obstruct or injure the same, shall forfeit 10s. § 9.—And if not removed within five days after notice by the surveyor, it shall be sold. § 10.—Obstructions by carriages, unless for a reasonable time to unload, forfeit 10s. § 11.

Penalty for incroaching upon Highways 40s. and the incroachment may be taken down by the surveyor. § 64.

No ale-houses suffered on bridges where tolls are kept, on penalty of 5 l. § 63.

Penalty for damaging banks, causeways, mile-stones, &c. from 10 s. to 5 l. or commitment to the house of correction § 53. [The same provisions are made as to turnpike roads by 13 Geo. 3. c. 84.]

5. The number of horses in the several carts and wagons with wheels of various breadths is settled by § 56, of the said Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78; and the time of prosecution for penalties is so limited by § 57, as to render it necessary for an informer to be pretty diligent.

Justices at sessions may licence an additional number, and stop proceedings for the forfeiture. §§ 58, 59. See 4 Burr. 2260.

The owner's name, &c. to be painted on all carriages on forfeiture of from 20s. to 5 l. § 59.

Penalty for negligent or impertinent behaviour of drivers not more than 20s. if owners of carriages, or 10s. if not, who may be apprehended with or without warrant by a person seeing the offence committed: § 60.

This statute does not restrain the Subject, who receives any injury by a driver, &c. of any carriage, from suing the owner thereof at Common law, or from punishing the driver for wilful offence, by indictment, as the nature of the case may require. But then the party prosecuting must waive the benefit of proceeding, under this statute, in the summary way thereby prescribed. J. M.

The forms to be observed in proceedings are settled in the schedule annexed to the act—Abstracts of the act are to be given to the surveyor. §§ 70, 71.

6 Under the said Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 24, (and see § 81,) Justices of assize upon view, and justices of peace upon view, or on information on oath by the surveyor, may present at the assizes, great sessions of Wales, or quarter sessions, any Highway, causeway or bridge out of repair, within the jurisdiction and county where they lie—And no such presentment nor any indictment shall be removed by certiorari [on the part of the defendant (a)] until traverse and judgment—But if the right to repair is in question, the defendant may remove the proceedings—And every such presentment shall have equal force as if it had been found by a jury.—Saving the right of traverse as to the fact of non-repair, as well as to the right of repairing—The justices may order the prosecution to be at the expence of the limit, and on conviction may fine the offender

(a) On the part of the prosecution a presentment may be removed before traverse and judgment; for the restriction was to prevent delay by defendants. Coup. 78. And if the Quarter Sessions exceed their authority; as to order a surveyor to make out his account before a special sessions, such proceedings may be removed by a certiorari and quashed; for their power in such case is not original but appellate. Leprie's Harpkins i. c. 76. § 80, and the authorities there cited: and see 2 Str. 1209

Justices are compellable by mandamus to receive a general traverse. Burr. 1532: 1 Black 468.

[Since compiling the above abstract, the Stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 74, was passed repealing §§ 34, 35 & 39 of the Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78; and re-enacting them in all particulars, except as relates to poor and indigent persons; whom two Justices, in special or petty sessions, may as they see fit, on their application, excuse and exempt from performing any personal labour, and from paying any composition in lieu thereof.]

7. Assessments may be levied by distress, and the surveyor shall be a competent witness. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. §§ 68, 69.

Forfeitures, &c. to be levied by distress. §§ 73, 74.

Convictions shall be made on confession, the oath of one witness, or view of the justice—Inhabitants competent witnesses. § 77.

The prosecutor may proceed for a forfeiture above 40s. either as directed by the act, or by action of debt, in a court of record, and recovering shall have double costs. § 75.

It may not be improper to observe, that there are very good opinions, against the general method of declaring in debt, directed by the act, and that a declaration, thus framed could not be supported, on demurrer; for, the act creating a variety of offences, where the forfeiture is a pecuniary one, the defendant cannot be prepared to defend the charge, not knowing what may be given in evidence on the trial, &c. what kind of offence may then be alleged against him, but such declaration being directed by an act of parliament, it is a very doubtful point. J. M.

Ten days notice before action commenced and none to be brought after a month [See post § 82,] has expired. § 76.

No distress unlawful, or the party to be deemed a trespasser for want of form. § 79.

The court may award costs to either party, according to the circumstances. § 65.

A defendant indicted for not repairing rat one tenus shall on submission pay costs 1 Black 602.

All forfeitures shall be paid into the hands of such persons as the court insisting them shall direct for the benefit of the Highways; on penalty, for the misapplication, of double the sum received—And if any forfeiture is levied upon a particular inhabitant for the default, or on account of the parish, the sessions may cause a rate to be levied within one month by the surveyor for reimbursing him. § 47.

The court will also grant a mandamus for a rate to reimburse a particular district for a fine paid on the conviction of another district in the same parish, both bound to repair; but such mandamus must be special. Doug. 422: Str. 211.

The parishioners may agree to bear the charges of any prosecution or defence. § 66—But public notice shall be given of every meeting of the parish § 67.

Forfeiture for opposing the execution of the act, and on officers neglecting to execute warrants; from 40s. to 10 l. or imprisonment till paid § 72.

HIGHWAYS VI. (A). 7—VI. (B).

Justices are empowered to administer oaths for the purposes of the act. § 78.—And on giving fit notice they may hold a special sessions. § 62.

8 Persons aggrieved may appeal to the Quarter sessions, giving notice thereof within 6 days after the cause arose, and entering into a recognisance with one surety within 4 days after notice; and on notice of such appeal all proceedings to be returned to the sessions on pain of 5*l*.—The sessions shall hear the appeal in a summary way, and decide finally, and award costs as the decision shall be. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 81.

Limitation of actions 3 months, and treble costs to defendant. § 82.

9. By the said Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 15, Every public cartway shall be 20 feet wide, and every horse-way 8 feet wide.

Two justices, upon view, may order Highways to be widened or diverted; so as not to exceed 30 feet in breadth, and so as not to pull down any building, or incroach on any garden, court, or yard.—The surveyor shall make satisfaction to the owners for the ground which shall be necessary for such purposes.—If the owners refuse to treat, or cannot be found, or will not accept the satisfaction offered by the surveyor, the sessions upon certificate shall impanel a jury who shall assess the value, not exceeding 40 years purchase; and upon tender thereof, or leaving the same with the clerk of the peace, the ground shall be for ever divided and become a public Highway.—But all subterranean property of value which can be acquired without injuring the surface of the Highway is saved to the owners of the land.—And all timber and wood thereon shall be felled within a month, and laid upon the adjoining land for the benefit of the owner; and the sessions may order a rate, not exceeding 6*l*. in the pound yearly, to pay for such purchase. § 16.

The old Highway to be sold, in which a preference is to be given to the occupiers of the adjoining lands; and if it lead to any land, house or place, the sale shall be subject to such right of passage.—And upon tender or payment of the money, the land shall vest in the purchaser, saving the right of all subterranean property to those who would otherwise have been entitled. § 17.

If the jury shall assess a greater sum than what the surveyor offered, the costs shall be paid from the surveyor's fund; if a less sum, by the owners of the land. § 18.

Two justices may divert any Highway, not in the situation before described, if the owners of the land through which the new road is to pass will consent; and may purchase, stop up and sell, as in roads to be widened or diverted.—Persons aggrieved by any such proceedings, or by any writ of ad quod damnum for this purpose may appeal to the next sessions [See Leach's Hawkins. i. c. 76. § 31. in the notes.]—No old way shall be stopped up before the new way is completed.—New Highways which have been acquired in for 12 months shall become incontrovertible. § 19. See Doug. 749; 2 Show. 28; Lev. 1234; W. Jon. 296; Lit. Raym. 725; 3 Comm. 36.

No common land lying between the fences of any old Highway shall be inclosed.—And land between the fences not being common, exceeding 30 and not extending to 50 feet in breadth shall not be stopped till satisfaction is made to the owners for all the land exceeding 30 feet.—And if the old road shall have pass through common land, or if the space between the fences, the land not being common, shall exceed 50 feet in breadth, the respective owners of such land shall hold and enjoy the old Highway, making satisfaction for the same. § 20.

Where a footway is diverted through a different part of the same lands, no satisfaction shall be made, except the new road shall be longer, or that part of the land of greater value.—If the footway shall not go through the same person's lands, satisfaction shall be made to the owner of the new land by the award of two persons and an umpire. § 21.

Two justices, upon view, may stop up and sell, or may divert all Highways which are useless and burdensome to the parish. § 22.—But this is not a general power; but tied up to a particular case; and is given only where there is a new road to be set out. Page v. Howard, Cuth. Ca. 228.

It often happening that a Highway is in two parishes (See ante III,) and even frequently that the boundaries of parishes pass through the middle of Highways, the Stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 64, provides, that on complaint or application by a surveyor, two justices may determine what parts of Highways lying in two parishes shall be repaired by each; for which purpose they may order boundary stones to be erected, and annex a plan of the Highway and the division of it to their order, which plan is to be filed by the Clerk of the peace; the costs of such order to be paid by both parishes.

(B) Of Turnpike roads.—

The Turnpike Roads of England are placed under the management and direction of certain trustees, who are usually appointed by the respective acts of parliament occasionally passed for the making and repairing particular roads. But the powers of these acts being confined to separate and distinct objects, it was thought expedient to pass some general laws which should apply in common to all trustees and turnpike roads in general throughout the kingdom.—Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 70. A. 6.

The last general turnpike act, and that now in force, is the Stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 54, and this act by 21 Geo. 3. c. 20 is extended to all acts of parliament made before it, or to be made hereafter for the purpose of regulating particular turnpikes.

In analyzing and abbreviating this act the editor will follow nearly the plan of the last ingenious editor of Hawkins, referring to his book for fuller information. Considering

1. The Trustees; their Qualification, Powers and Duty.
2. Weighing Engines.
3. Carriages; and their Tolls.
4. Exemptions from Toll.
5. Statute Duty and Repairs.
6. Nuisances.
7. Subscribers and Mortgagees.
8. Officers, their Duty and Responsibility.
9. Of adopting the Powers of the Highway Act, and enforcing this Act.
10. Of destroying Turnpike-Gates, &c.

1. A Trustee must possess realty of 40*l*. a year, or 800*l*. personalty, or be heir apparent to realty of 80*l*. a year.—And take an oath of such qualification before two Justices; on penalty of 50*l.* and in an action it is incumbent on the trustee to prove his qualification, Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 44.

HIGHWAYS VI. (B). 1-4.

No Publican shall be a Trustee, or act under them as Collector of tolls, &c. but he may farm the tolls, if he employs a person to collect them. § 46.

Acting as a Trustee is evidence of being one. § 64.

Where the first or any other day of meeting has elapsed, any 5 Trustees may appoint a meeting of the whole body, on giving 20 days notice. § 49. [explained and amended by Stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 63 § 1.]

No meeting shall be adjourned longer than 3 months; and all business is to be done between 10 A.M. & 2 P.M. § 50.

If Trustees exceed their power in erecting gates, the justices may order them to be removed. § 51.

Trustees may administer oaths necessary under the act. § 84.

Seven Trustees may farm out the tolls by auction upon one month's notice, describing the particular tolls to be let, and specifying their produce the preceding year. § 31.—The same section directs the method in which the bidding at such auction shall be conducted, and that farmers of the tolls shall not take more than the regular rates on penalty of 5*l.* on them, or 40*s.* on the gate-keepers. § 31.

Seven Trustees on a month's notice may reduce or advance the tolls as they see convenient; but if the toll is mortgaged, they must have the consent of four fifths of the creditors. § 29.

Five Trustees may erect prosecution for nuisances at the expense of the trust, provided they can prove the fact by one witness. § 47.

Two Trustees may supply the vacancy of toll keeper, till a general meeting. § 54.

The Trustees may agree for proportion of repairs with those who are bound to repair by reason of tenure, inclosure, &c. § 62.

They shall hang up at the toll gates tables of the rates of toll and of the different weights and number of horses allowed to carriages, § 66.

They shall erect mile-stones, direction posts, flood-gates, &c. § 41. [And see Highways VI. (A) 4]

2 live trustees may order Weighing-engines to be erected at such gates, within their jurisdiction, as they see proper. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 1. [See 1 Burr. 377.]

No toll gate to be erected, unless on order of nine trustees (and a majority present) on 21 days notice; and no toll to be paid for passing only 100 yards through the same, unless over some expensive bridge. § 34.

The different burdens which carriages are allowed are settled at large by § 1. and the additional toll to be paid for extra weight, is determined by Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 82 § 2—And by § 3 of the said act 13 Geo 3. c. 84, carriages employed in husbandry or in carrying manure are exempted from being weighed.

Any trustee, officer or creditor may cause carriages not passed above 300 yards through any gate to return and be weighed on rendering the driver 1*s.* which shall be refunded if the weight is found excessive. § 3.

If the toll-keeper neglects to weigh suspected carriages, or to receive the additional toll, he shall forfeit 5*l.* § 2.

The trustees shall make places within 300 yards of every gate, for carriages to turn.—A list of the trustees and officers, shall be hung in the house of every gate where there is a Weighing-engine.—A driver refusing to return shall forfeit 40*s.* and any peace officer may drive the carriage back to be weighed. § 4.

The quarter sessions upon complaint may order Weighing-engines to be erected, § 7. and where two roads meet the trustees may erect one Weighing engine for both. § 8.

No composition to be made for tolls, unless the carriages have fellies 6 inches broad. § 9.

The penalty for endeavouring to evade the tolls by unloading goods, &c. before the carriage arrives at the Weighing-engine 5*l.*—and the driver may be committed to the house of correction for a month. § 10.—Penalty on endeavouring to avoid the Weighing-engine; on the owner of a carriage from 20*s.* to 5*l.*—the driver from 10*s.* to 50*s.* § 11.

Toll gates ought not to be erected in the middle of great towns, so as to obstruct the necessary intercourse. 1 Burr. 377.

3 Sect 13, of the Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. explains at large the number of horses allowed to carriages according to the breadth of their fellies, and the penalties on transgression 5*l.* on owners, and 20*s.* on drivers.

Two oxen equal to one horse. § 67.

Carriages to have names and descriptions. § 68. [Vide Burr. 2258.]

Carriages going on 16 inch rollers may be drawn with any number of horses. § 14. [and by Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 82 § 5. shall only pay half-tolls]

On prosecution for penalties, information to be made of the offence within 3 days, and action commenced within one month. § 15.

Penalty for taking off horses and altering the distance of the wheels to avoid the toll. 5*l.* § 17.

Penalty on persons passing through gates without paying tolls, or assaulting collectors, relieving cattle, &c. between 40*s.* and 10*l.* § 75.

Trustees may allow a sufficient number of horses up hills, rising more than 4 inches in a yard. And one justice may stop prosecution for penalties in drawing with a greater number of horses than allowed; if it appear necessary from deep snows, &c. § 18. [See Highway act § 59]

No carriages with less than 9 inch fellies, shall be drawn by horses in pairs, except such as having 6 inch fellies, shall be permitted by 7 trustees, and except carriages drawn by 2 horses only. § 20.

Justices in Wales may licence an increased number of horses. § 59.

Any person may apprehend the driver of a carriage not marked, or drawn by too many horses, &c. § 21.

Extraordinary high tolls for particular roads may be reduced by 5 trustees. § 22.

4. As to certain exemptions from toll,—See under the head immediately preceding, as to carriages moving on rollers; and under Div 3 as to carriages employed in husbandry; and as to the former see also § 26 of the act.

No exemption from tolls shall be taken by carriages carrying any particular kind of goods, unless they have 6 inch fellies (except by carriages employed in husbandry.) Stat. 13 Geo 3. c. 84. § 24.

And no exemption shall be taken by carriages with 6 inch fellies, unless the tire of such fellies lie flat, or do not deviate more than one inch from a flat surface. § 25.

No chaise-marine, coach, landau, berlin, chaise, chair, calash, or hearse, nor any royal artillery or ammunition carriage; nor any cart drawn by one horse or two oxen; nor any carriage of 9 inch fellies, carrying one block of stone and piece of timber, &c.—shall be subject to the tolls of this act. § 27.

No toll shall be taken for carriages working on the repair of highways or turnpike roads. § 60.

No toll shall be taken for any horses of soldiers or officers on their march or on duty, nor for any baggage-waggons; nor shall such carriages be weighed at any engine. 18 Geo. 3. c. 63.

The mail-coaches are exempted from toll by Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 57.

Persons taking fraudulent advantage of any exemptions, shall forfeit between 40 s. and 5 l. 13 G. 3. c. 84. § 28.

5. The Surveyors shall see that the duty required by the several particular Turnpike acts is done, and that the compositions arising therefrom are applied to the repair of the respective roads; on penalty of 40 s.—And when two trust-roads lie in the same parish, and the duty shall exceed three days, the justices shall apportion the duty between each road. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 32.

No Surveyor shall gather stones without the consent of the owners of the land, or licence from a justice, after the owner shall have been summoned and refuse to appear. § 61.

Satisfaction shall be made for materials, § 71, in the same manner as directed by the Highway act, § 29. And by § 36, materials may be contracted for (but no surveyor shall have any share therein, under forfeiture of 10 l. and being incapacitated). See Highway act § 50.

The inhabitants or persons who were liable to repair any old road, shall continue liable to repair any new road which may be made in lieu of the old one—And if the parties cannot agree in what proportion they are liable to repair it, it shall be settled by two justices: for which proportion, a gross or annual sum may be fixed to be paid, with the consent of the parties at a Vestry for that purpose. § 63.

But this does not extend to the repair of walls or fences on the sides of such new roads, only to the surface of the roads. 2 Term Rep. 232.

Where Turnpike roads are indicted, the Court may proportion the fine and costs between the inhabitants and the Trustees; but so as not to endanger the security of the creditors. § 33.

6. If the Overseer of any Turnpike road shall suffer any nuisance, (such as heaps of stones, rubbish, &c.) to remain for 4 days, within 10 feet on either side the middle of such road, he shall forfeit 40 s. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 37.

As to nuisances by encroachments of other persons within 30 feet of the road, &c. a penalty of 40 s. is imposed, in the same manner as by § 64, of the Highway act. § 38.

7. Subscribers who shall sign any writing to advance money, shall be bound by their subscription, and on 21 days default, the Treasurer may sue for the same. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 35.

Mortgages of tolls, having possession of them, shall account, on oath, for all the monies which shall so come to their hands, after 14 days notice from 5 Trustees, or forfeit 10 l. § 52.

Penalty for a mortgagee holding over after his money is paid—Double the money received, and treble costs. § 53.

8. If a discharged gate keeper refuses to deliver up the toll-house, &c. within four days after notice of a new appointment, any justice may order him to be removed, and put the new toll-keeper in possession. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 54.

Gate-keepers and toll-gatherers on notice from 5 Trustees, shall account for money received by them, on penalty of 5 l. § 55.

No person residing in a toll house, shall be removable as a pauper, unless chargeable; nor shall he thereby gain a settlement, or be assessed to any publick or parochial levy. § 56.

Gate-keepers permitting horses or carriages not allowed by the act, to pass the gates shall forfeit 40 s. § 57.

All officers, their executors and administrators, shall within 10 days, after notice by 5 trustees, deliver up all books, &c. on penalty of 20 l. § 45.

Treasurers and Surveyors shall give bond for the discharge of their duty. § 65. [which bond by Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 18, § 15, must be on stamps.]

Officers of parishes and of the trust neglecting to put the act into execution, shall forfeit 10 l. § 73.

Justices may act notwithstanding they are creditors. § 74.

9. When the powers for providing materials, enlarging and turning Turnpike roads, &c. and calling forth the statute duty, are ineffectual, and when more ample powers are given by the Highway act; the Surveyor of the Turnpike roads, with the approbation of the Trustees, may execute and enforce these powers, for the benefit of the Turnpike roads, under the restrictions in the Highway act. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 70.

The Highway and Turnpike acts are similar in the following particulars, viz. § 72 of the Turnpike act answers to § 70 of the Highway act—§ 74 to 77 & 78.—§ 79, to 73—§ 77 to 74.—§ 78 & 79 to § 76 [except the former, giving full, the latter double costs.] § 80 to 79—§ 81 to 80.—§ 82 & 83 to 81.—§ 85 to 82. For all which sections of the Highway act, see before VI. (A).

10. By Stat. 1 Geo. 2. c. 19, To destroy any publick Turnpike gate, or the rails or fences thereto belonging, subjects the offender to hard labour for 3 months, and to be publicly whipped.

By Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 33, On conviction at the assizes, the offender may be transported for 7 years—and on a second offence, or on demolishing any Turnpike house, he shall be guilty of felony and transported for 7 years.

In both these cases the prosecution must be within 6 months, and on the convict's returning from transportation he shall suffer death.

By Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 20, Persons guilty of the above offences, or destroying any chain, &c. placed to prevent persons from passing without paying toll, or rescuing any offender, shall suffer death without benefit of clergy.

The two last mentioned acts are made perpetual by Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 16.

By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84, if any person shall commit any of the offences aforesaid, or shall destroy any crane or machine for weighing carriages, &c. he shall be transported for seven years, or committed to prison not exceeding three years at the discretion of the Court.

By the last mentioned act it is provided, that unless the offender is convicted within twelve months, the hundred shall make satisfaction for the damages.

HIGHWAYMEN. A reward of 40*l.* is given for the apprehending and taking of a Highwayman; to be paid within a month after conviction, by the sheriff of the county, Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8 See titles Robbery; Reward.

HOGSHEAD, A vessel of wine, or oil, &c. containing in measure 63 gallons; i. e. half a pipe, and the fourth part of a ton. See Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 13.

HOGGUS, HOGIETUS, A hog or swine, beyond the growth of a pig. Cbut. Antiq.

HOGS, The keeping of hogs in any city or market town is indictable as a public nuisance. Salk. 460. Indeed it seems the keeping hogs in any neighbourhood (if they stink much, so as to be troublesome) is indictable. See title Nuisance: London, and the stat 2 W. & M. R. 2. c. 8. § 20—see as to hogs and hogs flesh, tit Cattle.

HOKEDAY, Called otherwise Hock Tuesday, dies Martis, quam quindenam Paschæ vocant.] Was a day for remarkable in ancient times, that rents were returned payable thereon: and in the accounts of Merton College in Oxford, there is a yearly allowance pro rueribus hockantibus, in some manors of theirs in Hamshire, where the men hock the women on Monday, & cent on Tuesday; the meaning of it is, that on that day the women in merriment stop the way with ropes, and pull passing to them, desiring something to be laid out in pious uses. See Hock Tuesday-Money.

HOL

HOLDES, Bailiffs of a town or city, from the Sax. hold, i. e. summus præpositus. Others are of opinion that it signifies a general; for hold in Saxon doth also signify summus imperator. Leges Alfred. de Wregildis.

HOLDING OVER A TERM, &c. Lands were devised to A. till 800 l. raised. Resolved, that if the Heir at law, or he in reversion or remainder, in case of lease or limitation for life, enters upon A. or on him to whom the lands are devised or limited, and expels him, it is in the election of him so expelled, either to bring his action and recover the meane profits which shall be accounted parcel of the sum, or he may re-enter and hold over till he shall levy the entire sum, not accounting the time of his expulsion. But otherwise, if the expulsion was by a stranger. 4 Rep. 82: See titles, Term: Limitation: Estate.

The expression hath also another sense, i. e. Where a term is expired, and premises are held by the tenant or person in possession, afterwards, against the will of the landlord, or person claiming the estate and possession. By Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. In case any tenant for years, &c. or other person claiming under or by collusion with such tenant, shall wilfully hold over after the determination of such term, and demand made in writing for recovering possession of the premises, he shall pay, for the time he continues, at the rate of double the yearly value. See titles Ejectment: Distress: Rent.

HOLM, Sax. hulmus, insula arctica] An isle or fenny ground, according to Bede; or a river island. And where any place is called by that name, or this syllable is joined with any other in the names of places, it signifies a place surrounded with water; as the Flatholmes and Skepholmes in the Severn near Bristol: but if the situation of the place is not near the water; it may then signify a hilly place; Holm in Saxon being also a hill or cliff, — Cum duobus Holmis in campis de Wedone.—Mou. Angl. Tom. 2. p. 262.

HOLT, Sax.] A wood: wherefore the names of towns beginning or ending with holt, as Buckholt, &c. denote that formerly there was great plenty of wood at those places.

See this Dict. title Sunday.

HOLYHEAD, Rock salt may be used in its salt-works, 6 Ann. c. 12. f. 2. See title Navigatio &c.

HOMAGE, (Homa homi.) Is a French word derived from homo, because, when the tenant does his service to the Lord, he says, U homo vir man. Co. Lit. 61.

The Stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24, which was made to free the Subject from the burthen of Knight's service, and the oppressive consequences of tenures in capite, amongst other provisions, wholly discharges all tenures from the incident of Homage; not because Homage itself was any grievance, but because, though not wholly, yet it was more properly an incident to Knight's service, which that statute abolished. But, while Homage continued, it was far from being a mere ceremony; for the performance of it, where due, materially concerned both lord and tenant in point of interest and advantage. See 1 Inst. 67 b. in n. at length, as also 65 a: 67 a: 68 a: in the notes, and this Dict. title Tenures.

Notwithstanding the law on this subject is thus become obsolete, the curious reader may not be displeased with the following short extracts relative thereto.

In the original grants of lands and tenements by way of fee, the Lord did not only oblige his tenants to certain services; but also took a submission with promise and oath, to be true to him as their lord and benefactor; and this submission, which is the most honourable, being from a freehold tenant, is called Homage. Stat. 17 E. 2. f. 2. The Lord of the fee for which Homage is due, takes Homage of every tenant, as he comes to the land or fee: but women perform not Homage but by their husbands, as Homage especially relates to service in war; and a corporation cannot do Homage, which is personal, and they cannot appear but by attorney: also a bishop or religious man, may not do Homage, only fealty; but the archbishop of Canterbury does Homage on his knees to our Kings at their coronation; and it is said the bishop of the Isle of Man did Homage to the Earl of Derby; though Fulbee reconciles this, when he says that a religious man may do Homage, but may not say to his Lord, Ego devenio homo vester, I become your man, because he has professed himself to be God's man, but he may say, I do unto you Homage, and to you swear to be faithful and loyal. Britton, cap. 68.

Homage, say the ancient authors, is either, by ligeance; or reason of tenure: or Homage ancestral.

Homage by ligeance is inherent and inseparable to every Subject, See titles Allegiance: Oaths.—Homage by tenure is a service made by tenants to their Lords according to their estate; and Homage ancestral, is where a man and his ancestors have time out of mind held their land of the lord by Homage; and such service draws to it warranty from the Lord, and acquittal of all other services to other Lords, &c. Boet. lib. 3: F. N. B. 267: Lit. S. 9. 85. But, according to Sir Edw. Coke, there must be a double prescription for Homage ancestral, both in the blood of the Lord and of the tenant; so that the same tenant, and his ancestors, whose heir he is, is to hold the same land of the same Lord and his ancestors, whose heir the Lord is, time out of memory, by Homage, &c. and therefore there was but little land holden by Homage ancestral. Co. Lit. 100 b. Though in the manor of Wharby in Hertfordshire, there was one Wess who held lands by this tenure. D. H.

When Sovereign Princes did Homage to each other for lands held under their respective sovereignties, a distinction was always made between simple Homage, which was only an acknowledgment of tenure (7 Rep. 7;) and liege homage, which included fealty, and the services consequent upon it.—Thus when Edward III. in 1329 did Homage to Phillip VI. of France, for his ducal dominions on that Continent, it was warmly disputed of what species the Homage was to be, whether liege or simple homage. 1 Comm. 367. c. 10.

HOMISOKEN, HOMOKEN, OR HAMSOKEN, AND HAMSOCA, From the Sax. ham, i. e. domus, habitatio; and soken, libertas, immunitas.] The privilege or freedom which every man hath in his house; and he who invades that freedom is properly said facere homisoken. This we take to be what we now call burglary, a crime of a very heinous nature, because it is not only a breach of the King's peace, but a breach of that liberty which a man hath in his house, which should be his castle, and therefore ought not to be invaded See *Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 23: Du Cange: Ll. It is also taken for an impunity to those who commit this crime. W. Thorn, p. 2030.

HOMICIDE;

HOMICIDIUM.] The killing of any Human Creature: This is of three kinds; justifiable, excusable, and felonious. The first has no share of guilt at all, the second very little; but the third is the highest crime against the law of nature that a man is capable of committing. 4 Comm. c. 14; from whence the plan of this title, and much of the subsequent matter is extracted.

HOMICIDE.

Offences against the life of a man come under the general name of Homicide, which in our law signifies the killing of a man, by a man. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. § 2: Bracton, lib. 3. c. 4.

I. Of Justifiable Homicide.

1. By unavoidable Necessity, under command of the Law.
2. By permission of Law; For advancement of Publick Justice.
3. ————— For prevention of Crimes, in themselves Capital.

II. Of Excusable Homicide,

Per infortunium; or Misadventure Se Defendendo.

1. Wherein these are distinct.
2. Wherein they agree.

III. Of Felonious Homicide.

1. Self Murder; or Felo de se.
 2. Manslaughter
 3. Murder
 4. Petit Treason.
- } Which two should be carefully compared with each other.

I. 1. JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE may be owing to some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or desire, and without any inadvertence or negligence in the party killing, and therefore without any shadow of blame; it is either of a publick or private nature.

That of a publick nature is such as is occasioned by the due execution or advancement of publick justice. That of a private nature is such as happens in the just defence of a man's person, house or goods. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 3.—The first of these may happen by virtue of such an office as obliges one, in the execution of public justice, to put a malefactor to death, who has forfeited his life by the laws and verdict of his country. This is an act of necessity, and even of civil duty; and therefore not only justifiable; but commendable, where the law requires it. But the law must require it, otherwise it is not justifiable: therefore wantonly to kill the greatest of malefactors, a felon, or a traitor, attainted or outlawed, deliberately, uncompelled, and extrajudicially, is murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 497: Bract. fol. 120.

There must be no malice coloured under pretence of necessity, for wherever a person who kills another, acts in truth upon malice, and takes occasion from the appearance of necessity to execute his revenge, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 2: 2 Rol. Rep. 120, 121; Kilnyne 28: Bract. lib. 3. cap. 4.

Farther, if judgment of death be given by a judge not authorised by lawful commission, and execution is done accordingly, the judge is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28: § 4: 1 Hal. P. C. 497. And upon this account Sir Matthew Hale himself, though he accepted the place of a Judge of the Common Pleas under Cromwell's government, (since it is necessary to decide the disputes of civil property in the worst of times,) yet declined to sit on the crown side at the Assizes, and try prisoners; having very strong objections to the legality of the Usurper's commission; a distinction perhaps rather too refined, since the punishment of crimes is at least as necessary to Society, as maintaining the boundaries of property.

The judgment, by virtue whereof any person is put to death, must be given by one who has jurisdiction in the cause; for otherwise both Judge and officer may be guilty guilty of felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28: Dalt. cap. 98: 10 Co. 76: 22 Ed. 4. 33 a: H. P. C. 35—And therefore if the Court of Common Pleas give a judgment on an appeal of death, or Justices of Peace on an indictment for treason, and award execution, which is executed, both the judge who gives, and the officers who execute, the sentence are guilty of felony; because the courts having no more jurisdiction over these crimes than mere private persons, their proceedings thereon are merely void, and without foundation.—But if the Justices of Peace, on an indictment for trespass, arraign a man of felony, and condemn him, and he be executed, the justices only are guilty of felony, and not the officers who execute their sentence: for the Justices had a jurisdiction over the offence, and their proceedings were irregular and erroneous only, but not void. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. §§ 5, 6, and the authorities there cited.—Also such judgment, when legal, must be executed by the proper officer, or his appointed deputy; for no one else is required by law to do it, which requisition it is, that justifies the Homicide. If another person does it of his own head, it is held to be murder: even though it be the judge himself. 1 Hal. P. C. 501: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28: Dalt. Just. c. 150. It was formerly held that any one might as lawfully kill a person attainted of treason or felony, as a wolf or other wild beast; and anciently a person condemned in appeal of death, was delivered to the relations of the deceased, in order to be executed by them. 1 Inst. 128 b: 2 Aff. pl. 3: S. P. C. 13 a: 11 H. 4. 12 a: Plowd. Com. 306 b: 3 Inst. 131. But at this day, it seems agreed, if the judge, who gives the sentence of death, and a fortiori if any private person execute the same, or if the proper officer himself do it without lawful command, they are guilty of felony. 27 Aff. 41: Bro. Appeal 69: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 8, 9. This judgment must also be executed, servato juris ordine; it must pursue the sentence of the court. If an officer beheads one who is adjudged to be hanged, or vice versa, it is murder: for he is merely ministerial, and therefore only justified when he acts under the authority and compulsion of the law; but if a sheriff changes one kind of death to another, he then acts by his own authority, which extends not to the commission of Homicide; and besides, this licence might occasion a very gross abuse of his power. Finch L. 31: 3 Inst. 52: 1 Hal. P. C. 501. The King indeed may remit part of a sentence; as in the case of treason, all but the beheading; but this is no change, no introduction of a new punishment, and in the case of felony, where the judgment is to be hanged, the King (it hath been said) cannot legally order, even a peer, to be beheaded. 3 Inst. 52, 212: See Folt 267; where it is said that if the officer varieth from the judgment, of his own head, and without warrant or the colour of authority, he is guilty of felony at least, if not of murder; but not if he is authorised by custom or warrant from the crown. For although the King cannot by his prerogative vary the execution, so as to aggravate the punishment beyond the intention of the law; yet it doth not follow, that he who may remit part of the judgment, or wholly pardon the offender, cannot mitigate his punishment with regard to the pain or infamy of it. But this doctrine is more fully considered in another place. See titles Pardon: Execution (Criminal): Judgment (Criminal).

2. Homicides, committed for the advancement of public justice, are;—Where an officer, in the execution of his office, either in a civil or criminal case, kills a person that assaults and resists him. 1 Hal. P. C. 494: 1 Hawk. P. C.—If an Officer, or any private person, attempts to take a man charged with felony, and is resisted; and in the endeavour to take him, kills him. 1 Hal. P. C. 494.—In case of a riot, or rebellious assembly, the officers endeavouring to disperse the mob are justifiable in killing them, both at Common-law, and by the Riot act, Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 5: 1 Hal. P. C. 495: 1 Hawk. P. C. 161. And in case a stranger interposes to part the combatants in an affray, giving notice to them of that intention, and they assault him; if in the struggle he should chance to kill, this would be justifiable Homicide; for it is every man's duty to interpose for the preservation of the public peace, and for the prevention of mischief. Fost. 272.—Where the prisoners in a gaol, or going to gaol, assault the gaoler or officer, and he in his defence kills any of them, it is justifiable, for the sake of preventing an escape. 1 Hal. P. C. 496.—If trespassers in forests, parks, chases, or warrens, will not surrender themselves to the keepers, they may be slain, by virtue of the Stat. 21 E. 1. §. 2. de malefactoribus in parvis; and 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10.—If a person having actually committed felony will not suffer himself to be arrested, but stand on his own defence, or fly, so that he cannot possibly be apprehended alive by those who pursue, whether private persons or public officers, with or without a warrant from a magistrate, he may be lawfully slain by them. So if even an innocent person be intended of a felony, where no felony was committed, yet if he will not suffer himself to be arrested by an officer who has a warrant, he may be lawfully killed, for there is a charge against him on record, to which he is bound at his peril to answer. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. §§ 11, 12: 22 Aff. 55: Bro. Cor. 87, 89. S. P. C. 13: 2 Inst. 221: Dalt. cap. 98: H. P. C. 36: Crom. 70.—Where a sheriff, &c. attempting to make a lawful arrest in a civil action, or to retake one who has been arrested and made his escape, is resisted by the party, and unavoidably kills him in the affray. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 17: 1 Rol. Rep. 189: H. P. C. 37: 3 Inst. 50: Crom. 24 a: Dalt. cap. 98. And in such case the officer is not bound to give back, but may stand his ground and attack the party, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 18: H. P. C. 31. But no private person of his own authority can arrest a man for a civil matter, as he may for felony, &c. 1 Hawk. c. 28. § 19: Crom. 30 b. Neither can the sheriff himself lawfully kill those who barrel fly from the execution of any civil process. 1 Hawk. c. 28. § 20: H. P. C. 37.

And in all these cases, there must be an apparent necessity on the officer's side, viz. that the party could not be arrested or apprehended, the riot could not be suppressed, the prisoners could not be kept in hold, the deer-stealers could not but escape, unless such Homicide were committed; otherwise without such absolute necessity, it is not justifiable.

Lastly, If the champions in a trial by battle, killed either of them the other, such Homicide was justifiable, and was imputed to the just judgment of God, who was thereby presumed to have decided in favour of the truth. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71. See title Battel.

HOMICIDE I. 3: II. 1.

3. Such Homicide as is committed for the prevention of any forcible and atrocious crime, is justifiable by the law of nature; and also by the law of England, as it stood so early as the time of Bracon, and as it is since expressly declared by Stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 5. See Bracon. fol. 155. If any person attempts a robbery or murder of another, or attempts to break open a house in the night time, (which extends also to an attempt to burn it,) and shall be killed in such attempt, the slayer shall be acquitted and discharged. 1 Hal. P. C. 488. And not only the matter of a house, but a lodger or a sojourner who kills an assailant intending to commit murder or robbery, is within the protection of the law. Cro. Car. 544. This reaches not to any crime unaccompanied with force, as picking of pockets, or to the breaking open of any house in the day time, unless it carries with it an attempt of robbery also. 4 Comm. c. 14.

Justifiable Homicide of a private nature, in the just defence of a man's person, house or goods, may happen either by the killing of a wrong-doer, or an innocent person. And first, the killing of a wrong-doer in the making of such defence, may be justified in many cases; as where a man kills one who assaults him in the highway to rob or murder him; or the owner of a house, or any of his servants, or lodgers, &c. kill one who attempts to burn it, or to commit therein murder, robbery, or other felony; or a woman kills one who attempts to ravish her; or a servant coming suddenly and finding his master robbed and slain, falls upon the murderer immediately and kills him; for he does it in the height of his surprise, and under just apprehensions of the like attempt upon himself; but in other circumstances, he could not have justified the killing of such an one, but ought to have apprehended him, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 21: 24 H. 8. cap. 5: Dalt. cap. 98.

Neither shall a man in any case justify the killing another by a pretence of necessity, unless he were himself wholly without fault in bringing that necessity upon himself; for if a man, in defence of an injury done by himself, kill any person whatsoever, he is guilty of manslaughter at least; as where divers rioters wrongfully withhold a house by force, and kill those who attack it from without, and endeavour to burn it. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 22: Crom. 27 b: H. P. C. 56.

Neither can a man justify the killing another in defence of his house or goods, or even of his person, from a bare private trespass; and therefore he that kills another, who, claiming a title to his house, attempts to enter it by force and shoots at it, or that breaks open his windows in order to arrest him, or that persists in breaking his hedges after he is forbidden, is guilty of manslaughter; and he, who in his own defence kills another that assaults him in his house in the day-time, and plainly appears to intend to beat him only, is guilty of Homicide se defendendo, for which he forfeits his goods, but is pardoned of course; yet it seems, that a private person, and, a fortiori, an officer of justice, who happens unavoidably to kill another endeavouring to defend himself from, or suppress dangerous rioters, may justify the fact, inasmuch as he only does his duty in aid of public justice. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 23: H. P. C. 40. 57: Cro. Car. 538: Dalt. cap. 98.

According to the opinion of Mr. Serjeant Hawkins, A person who without provocation is assaulted by another in any place whatsoever, in such a manner as plainly shews an intent to murder him, as by discharging a pistol, or pushing at him with a drawn sword, &c. may justify killing such an assailant, as much as if he had attempted to rob him. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 24: 57: N. Lendo 47: 1 And. 41: Crom. 27 b. 28 b: Dalt. cap. 98: S. P. C. 15. 3 Inst. 57: Faxon 33. For other cases, vide Cro. Car. 338: March 5.

The Roman Law also justifies Homicide, when committed in defence of the chastity either of one's self or relations: The English Law also justifies a woman killing one who attempts to ravish her: Bac. Elem. 34: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 21; and so too, the husband or father may justify killing a man, who attempts a rape upon his wife or daughter; but not if he takes them in adultery by consent, for the one is forcible and felonious, but not the other. 1 Hal. P. C. 485, 6. And there seems no doubt but the forcibly attempting a crime of a still more detestable nature, may be equally resisted by the death of the unnatural aggressor. For the one uniform principle that runs through our own, and all other laws, seems to be this; that where a crime, in itself capital, is endeavoured to be committed by force, it is lawful to repel that force by the death of the party attempting. 4 Comm. c. 14.

In these instances of justifiable Homicide, it may be observed, that the Slayer is in no kind of fault whatsoever, not even in the minutest degree; and is therefore to be totally acquitted and discharged, with commendation rather than blame. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 3.

But that is not quite the case in excusable Homicide, the very name whereof imports some fault, some error, or omission; so trivial however, that the law excuses it from the guilt of felony, though in strictness it judges it deserving of some little degree of punishment. See the next Division.

II. 1. HOMICIDE per infelicitatem; or MISADVENTURE, is where a man doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another: as where a man is at work with a hatchet, and the head thereof flies off and kills a stander by; or where a person qualified to keep a gun, is shooting at a mark, and undesignedly kills a man: for the act is lawful, and the effect is merely accidental. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. So where a person is moderately correcting his child, a master his apprentice or scholar, or an officer punishing a criminal, (as by whipping,) and happens to occasion his death, it is only misadventure; for the act of correction was lawful: but if he exceeds the bounds of moderation, either in the manner, the instrument, or the quantity of punishment, and death ensues, it is Manslaughter at least; and in some cases (according to the circumstances) murder; for the act of immoderate correction is unlawful. 1 Hal. P. C. 473, 4.—Where an officer of the impress service in the navy, fires at a boat in order to bring her to, and kills a man, it is impossible that the offender should be made guilty of more than manslaughter, especially if he fires in the manner usual upon such occasions. Cowp. 832. per Ld. Mansfield.

A tilt or a tournament, the martial diversion of our ancestors, was however an unlawful act; and so are boxing and sword-playing, the succeeding amusements of their posterity: and therefore if a knight in the former case, or a gladiator in the latter, be killed, such

HOMICIDE II. 1.

Killing is felony of manslaughter. But, if the King command, or permit such diversion, it is said only to be misadventure; for then the act is lawful. 1 Hal. P. C. 473: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 8. Likewise to whip another's horse whereby he runs over a child and kills him, is held to be accidental death in the rider, for he has done nothing unlawful: but it is manslaughter in the person who whipped him; for the act was a trespass, and at best a piece of idleness of inevitably dangerous consequence. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 3.

Where one lawfully using an innocent diversion, as shooting at butts, or at a bird, &c. by the glancing of an arrow, or such-like accident, kills another, this is only Homicide by misadventure. Keilw. 108: Bro. Cor. 148, See Kelynge 41.—So where a person happens to kill another in playing a match of foot-ball, wrestling, or such like sports which are attended with no apparent danger of life, and intended only for the trial, exercise and improvement of the strength, courage and activity of the parties. Keilw. 108, 136: Crom. 29 a: 11 H. 7. 23 a: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. §§ 6, 7, b.

In general, if death ensues in consequence of an idle, dangerous, and unlawful sport, the slayer is guilty of manslaughter, and not misadventure only, for these are unlawful acts. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 9: 1 Hal. P. C. 472: Fost. 261. Thus, If a man kills another by shooting at a deer, &c. in a third person's park, in the doing whereof he is a trespasser; or by shooting of a gun, or throwing stones in a city or highway, or other place where men usually resort, by throwing stones at another wantonly in play, which is a dangerous sport, and has not the least appearance of any good intent; or by doing any other such idle action as cannot but endanger the bodily hurt of some one or other; or by tilting or playing at hand-sword without the King's command; or by parrying with naked swords, covered with buttons at the points, or with swords in the scabbards, or such like rash sports, which cannot be used without the manifest hazard of life, he is guilty of manslaughter. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 9: H. P. C. 31, 32, 58: H.b. 134. But see post III.

Where the defendant came to town in a chaise, and before he got out of it, fired his pistols, which by accident killed a woman, King, Ch. J. ruled it to be manslaughter. Str. 481.

Homicide, in self-defence, or se defendendo, upon a sudden affray, is also excusable, rather than justifiable, by the English law. This species of self-defence must be distinguished from that already mentioned, ante I. 3, as calculated to hinder the perpetration of a capital crime; which is not only a matter of excuse, but of justification. But the self-defence, which we are now speaking of, is that whereby a man may protect himself from an assault or the like, in the course of a sudden brawl or quarrel, by killing him who assaults him. And this is what the law expresses by the word chance-medley, or (as some rather choose to write it) chaud-medley; the former of which in its etymology signifies a casual affray, the latter an affray in the heat of blood or passion, both of them of pretty much the same import; but the former is in common speech too often erroneously applied to any manner of Homicide by misadventure; whereas it appears by the Stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 5, and our ancient books (Stann. P. C. 16), that it is properly applied to such killing as happens in self-defence, upon a sudden rencounter. 3 Inst. 55, 7: Fost. 275, 6.

This right of natural defence does not imply a right of attacking: for, instead of attacking one another for injuries past or impending, men need only have recourse to the proper tribunals of justice: they cannot therefore legally exercise this right of preventive defence, except in sudden and violent cases, when certain and immediate suffering would be the consequence of waiting for the assistance of the law. Wherefore to excuse Homicide, by the plea of self-defence, it must appear that the slayer had no other possible (or, at least, probable) means of escaping from his assailant.

It is frequently difficult to distinguish this species of Homicide (upon chance-medley, in self-defence,) from that of man-slaughter, in the proper legal sense of the word. 3 Inst. 55. But the true criterion between them seems to be this: when both parties are actually combating at the time when the mortal stroke is given, the slayer is then guilty of man-slaughter: but if the slayer hath not begun to fight, or (having begun) endeavours to decline any farther struggle, and afterwards being closely pressed by his antagonist, kills him to avoid his own destruction, this is Homicide excusable by self-defence, Fost. 277. For which reason the law requires, that the person who kills another in his own defence, should have retreated as far as he conveniently or safely can, to avoid the violence of the assault, before he turns upon his assailant; and that not fictitiously, or in order to watch his opportunity, but from a real tenderness of shedding his brother's blood. And though it may be cowardice, in time of war between two independent nations, to flee from an enemy; yet between two fellow-subjects, the law countenances no such point of honour: because the King and his Courts are the vindices injuriarum, and will give to the party wronged all the satisfaction he deserves. 1 Hal. P. C. 481, 3. The party assaulted must therefore flee as far as he conveniently can, either by reason of some wall, ditch, or other impediment, or as far as the fierceness of the assault will permit him, for it may be so fierce as not to allow him to yield a step, without manifest danger of his life, or enormous bodily harm; and then, in his defence, he may kill his assailant instantly. 1 Hal. P. C. 483. And as the manner of the defence, so is also the time to be considered: for if the person assaulted does not fall upon the aggressor till the affray is over, or when he is running away, this is revenge and not defence. Neither under the colour of self-defence, will the law permit a man to screen himself from the guilt of deliberate murder: for if two persons A. and B. agree to fight a duel, and A. gives the first onset, and B. retreats as far as he safely can, and then kills A. this is murder; because of the previous malice and concerted design. 1 Hal. P. C. 479. But if A. upon a sudden quarrel assaults B. first, and upon B.'s returning the assault, A. really and bonâ fide flees, and being driven to the wall, turns again upon B. and kills him; this may be se defendendo, according to some of our writers. 1 Hal. P. C. 482: Though others have thought this opinion too favourable; inasmuch as the necessity, to which he is at last reduced, originally arose from his own fault. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 17.

And it is now agreed, that if a man strike another upon malice prepense, and then fly to the wall, and there kill him in his own defence, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 17: S. P. C. 15 a: Crom. 28 a: Dak. cap. 98: Kelynge 58: H. P. C. 42. See post. III. 3.

Under

HOMICIDE II. 2.

Under this excuse, of self-defence, the principal civil and natural Relations are comprehended; therefore master and servant, parent and child, husband and wife, killing an assailant in the necessary defence of each other respectively, are excused; the act of the Relation assisting being construed the same as the act of the party himself. 1 Hal. P. C. 484.

Homicide, se defendendo, or by self-defence, says Hawkins, seems to be, where one who has no other possible means of preserving his life from one who combats with him on a sudden quarrel, or of defending his person from one who attempts to beat him, (especially if such attempts be made upon him in his own house) kills the person by whom he is reduced to such an inevitable necessity. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 13, &c. H. P. C. 40: S. P. C. 15.

And not only he who on an assault retreats to a wall, or some such streight, beyond which he can go no further before he kills the other, is adjudged by the law to act upon unavoidable necessity: but also he who being assaulted in such a manner, and in such a place, that he cannot go back without manifestly endangering his life, kills the other without retreating at all. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 14: Bro. Coro. 125: 43 Aff. 31: 3 Inst. 56: H. P. C. 41.

And notwithstanding a person, who retreats from an assault to the wall, give the other divers wounds in his retreat, yet if he give him no mortal one till he get thither, and then kill him, he is guilty of Homicide se defendendo only. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 15: H. P. C. 41: Crom. 28: S. P. C. 15 a.

And an officer who kills one that resists him in the execution of his office, and even a private person that kills one who feloniously assaults him in the highway, may justify the fact without ever giving back at all. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 16: H. P. C. 41: 3 Inst. 56: Crom. 28 a.

There is one species of Homicide se defendendo, where the party slain is equally innocent as he who occasions his death: and yet this Homicide is also excusable from the great universal principle of self-preservation, which prompts every man to save his own life preferable to that of another, where one of them must inevitably perish. As, among others, in that case mentioned by Lord Bacon, where two persons being shipwrecked, and getting on the same plank, but finding it not able to save them both, one of them thrusts the other from it, whereby he is drowned. He who thus preserves his own life at the expence of another man's, is excusable, through unavoidable necessity, and the principle of self-defence; since their both remaining on the same weak plank is a mutual, though innocent, attempt upon, and endangering of each other's life. See Bac. Elem. c. 5: 4 Comm. c. 14.

2. The circumstances wherein these two species of Homicide, by misadventure and self-defence, agree, are in the blame and punishment. For the law sets so high a value upon the life of a man, that it always intends some misbehaviour in the person who takes it away, unless by the command or express permission of the law. In the case of misadventure, it presumes negligence, or at least a want of sufficient caution in him who was so unfortunate as to commit it; who is therefore not altogether faultless. And as to the necessity which excuses a man who kills another se defendendo, Lord Bacon entitles it necessitas culpabilis, and thereby distinguishes it from the former necessity of killing a thief or a malefactor. Bac. Elem. c. 5. For the law intends that the quarrel or assault arose from some unknown wrong, or some provocation, either in word or deed: and since, in quarrels, both parties may be, and usually are, in some fault, and it scarcely can be tried who was originally in the wrong, the law will not hold the survivor entirely guiltless. But it is clear, in the other case, that where I kill a thief that breaks into my house, the original fault can never be upon my side. The law besides may have a farther view, to make the crime of Homicide more odious, and to caution men how they venture to kill another upon their own private judgment, by ordaining that he who slays his neighbour, without an express warrant from the law so to do, shall in no case be absolutely free from guilt.

The Penalty inflicted by our laws in these cases is said, by Sir Edward Coke to have been antiently no less than death; 2 Inst. 248, 315; which however is with reason denied by later and more accurate writers. 1 Hal. P. C. 425: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 20: Fost. 282. &c. It seems rather to have consisted in a forfeiture, some say of all the goods and chattels, others of only part of them, by way of fine or weregild: which was probably disposed of, in pios usus, according to the humane superstition of the times, for the benefit of his soul, who was thus suddenly sent to his account, 'with all his imperfections on his head.' Fost. 287. But that reason having long ceased, and the penalty (especially of a total forfeiture) growing more severe than was intended, in proportion as personal property has become more considerable, the delinquent has now, and has had as early as our records will reach, a pardon, and a writ of restitution of his goods as a matter of course and right, only paying for suing out the same. Fost. 283: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 2. And indeed to prevent this expence, in cases where the death has notoriously happened by misadventure or in self-defence, the Judges will usually permit, (if not direct) a general verdict of acquittal. Fost. 283.

It seems clear that neither of these Homicides, by misadventure or se defendendo, are felonious, because they are not accompanied with a felonious intent, which is necessary in every felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 19: 3 Inst. 56: 2 Inst. 149.

And from hence it seems plainly to follow, that they were never punishable with loss of life: And the same also farther appears from the writ De odio & atia, by virtue whereof, if any person committed for killing another, were found guilty of either of these Homicides, and no other crime, he might be bailed; and indeed it seems to be against natural justice to condemn a man to death, for what is owing rather to his misfortune than his fault. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 20.

It is true indeed, that some of our best authors have argued from the statute of Mansbridge, cb. 26, which enacts, that murdrum de cetero non adjudicetur, ubi injur-tunium tantummodo adjudicatum est, &c. that, before this statute, homicides by misadventure, or se defendendo, were adjudged murder, and consequently punished by death. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 21: 2 Inst. 56: S. P. C. 16.

But to this it may be answered, that murder in those days signified only the private killing of a man, by one who was neither seen nor heard by any witness; for which the offender, if found, was to be tried by ordeal, and if he could not be found, the town in which the fact was done, was to be amerced sixty-six marks, unless it could be proved that the person killed was an Englismen: otherwise it was presumed he was a Dane or Norman, who in those days were often privately made away with by the Englsh. And it being a doubt whether Homicide by misadventure, &c. were to be esteemed murder in this sense, it seems to have been the chief intent of the makers of this statute to settle this question. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 22: Bract. 134 b; 135 a: Kilnyng 121.

However it is certain, that notwithstanding neither of these offences be felonies, yet a person guilty of them is not bailable by Justices of peace, but must be committed till the next coming of the Justices of eyre or gaol-delivery. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 23. H. P. C. 98, 99: 2 Inft. 315: Dalt. cap. 98. But such offender may be brought up by habeas corpus, before any of the twelve judges, and bailed.

Indeed, anciently a person committed for the death of a man, might sue out the writ de odio et atia, which by Magna Charta c. 16, is grantable without fee; and if thereon, by an inquest taken by the sheriff, he were found to have done the fact by misadventure, or se defendendo, he might be mainprised by twelve men, upon the writ deponendo in ballium. But such writs and enquiries were taken away by the statute of Gloucester, c. 9. and St. 28 Ed. 3. c. 9. and though perhaps they were again revived by St. 42 Ed. 3. c. 1. which makes all statutes contrary to Magna Charta void, yet at this day they seem to be obsolete, and, indeed, useless; inasmuch as the party may probably be sooner delivered in the usual course, by the coming of the Justices of gaol-delivery. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 24: S. P. C. 77 g: 2 Inft. 43, 315: 9 Co. 56: Co. Bail and Mainprize, c. 10.

It is also agreed, that no one can excuse the killing another, by setting forth in a special plea, that he did it by misadventure, or se defendendo, but that he must plead 'Not guilty', and give the special matter in evidence. And that whenever a person is found guilty of such Homicide, either by a special indictment for the same, or by a verdict setting forth the circumstances of the case on a general indictment of murder or Homicide, he shall be discharged out of prison upon bail, and forfeit his goods: But, that upon removing the record by certiorari into Chancery, he shall have his pardon of course, without staying for any warrant from the King to that purpose. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 25: 4 H. 7. 2 a: Keilw. 53 a; 108 l: 2 Inft. 310: S. P. C. 15 b; 16 b: Dalt. cap. 96, 98. F. N. B. 246. C. H.

III. FELONIOUS HOMICIDE, is an act of a very different nature from the former, being the killing of a human creature, of any age or sex, without justification or excuse. This may be done either by killing one's self or another person.

I. SELF-MURDER, is ranked among the highest crimes, being a peculiar species of felony; a felony committed on one's self. The party must be of years of discretion, and in his senses, else it is no crime. But this excuse ought not be strained to that length, to which our Coroners' Juries are too apt to carry it, viz. that the very act of suicide is an evidence of insanity; as if every man, who acts contrary to reason, had no reason at all: for the same argument would prove every other criminal non compos, as well as the self-murderer. The law very rationally judges, that every melancholy or hypochondriac it does not deprive a man of the capacity of discerning right from wrong, and therefore if a real lunatic kills himself in a lucid interval, he is felo de se as much as another man. 1 Hal. P. C. 412.

As to the punishment which human laws inflict on this crime; they can only act upon what he has left behind him, his reputation and fortune: on the former, by an ignominious burial in the highway, with a stake driven through his body; on the latter, by the forfeiture of all his goods and chattels to the King.

In this, as well as all other felonies, the offender must be of the age of discretion, and compos mentis; and therefore, an infant killing himself under the age of discretion, or a lunatic during his lunacy, cannot be a felo de se. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 1: Crom. 30 a, b; 31 a: H. P. C. 28: Dalt. cap. 92: 3 Inft. 54.

Our laws have always had such an abhorrence of this crime, that not only he who kills himself with a deliberate and direct purpose of so doing, but also in some cases he who maliciously attempts to kill another, and in pursuance of such an attempt unwillingly kills himself, shall be adjudged in the eye of the law a felo de se; for wherever death is caused by any act done with a murderous intent, it makes the offender a murderer; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 4: Dalt. cap. 92, 144: 44 E. 3. 44: 44 aff. 55: Bro. Cor. 12, 14: S. P. C. 16: H. P. C. 28, 29: Dalt. 119 b: Crom. 28.

He who kills another upon his desire or command, is in the judgment of the law as much a murderer, as if he had done it merely of his own head; and the person killed is not looked upon as a felo de se, inasmuch as his act was merely void, being against the law of God and man. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 6: Keilw. 136: Moor 54.

Further as to what a Felo de se shall forfeit, it seems clear, that he shall forfeit all chattels real or personal which he hath in his own right; and also all chattels real whereof he is possessed either jointly with his wife, or in her right; and also all bonds and other personal things in action, belonging solely to himself; and also all personal things in action, and, as some say, entire chattels in possession to which he was intitled jointly with another, on any account, except that of merchandize. But it is said, that he shall forfeit a moiety only of such joint chattels as may be severed, and nothing at all of what he was possessed of as executor or administrator. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 7. However the blood of a felo de se is not corrupted, nor his lands of inheritance forfeited, nor his wife barred of her dower. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 8: Plowd. Com. 261 b: 262 a: 1 Hal. P. C. 413.

Not any part of the personal estate is vested in the King, before the self-murder is found by some inquisition; and consequently the forfeiture thereof, is saved by a pardon of the offence before such finding. 5 Co. 110 b: 3 Inft. 54: 1 Saund. 362: 1 Sid. 150, 162. But if there be no such pardon, the whole is forfeited immediately after such inquisition, from the time such mortal wound was given, and all intermediate alienations are avoided. Plowd. Com. 260: H. P. C. 29: 5 Co. 110. And such inquisitions ought to be by the Coroner super visum corporis, if the body can be found; and an inquisition so taken, as some say, cannot be traversed. H. P. C. 29: 3 Inft. 55. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 9, 10, 11.

HOMICIDE III. 2.

But if the body cannot be found, so that the coroners who has authority only super visum corporis, cannot proceed, the inquiry may be by Justices of peace; (who by their commission have a general power to inquire of all felonies;) or in the King's Bench, if the felony were committed in the county where that court sits; and such inquisitions are traversable by the executor, See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 12: 3 Inst. 55: H. P. C. 29: 2 Lev. 141.

Also all inquisitions of this offence being in the nature of indictments, ought particularly and certainly to set forth the circumstances of the fact; and in the conclusion add, that the party in such manner murdered himself. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 13: 3 Lev. 140: 3 Mod. 100: 2 Lev. 152. Yet if it be full in substance, the coroner may be served with a rule to amend a defect in form. 1 Stil. 225, 259: 3 Mod. 101: 1 Keb. 907: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 15.

By the rubrick in the Common Prayer, before the burial office, (confirmed by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4.) persons who have laid violent hands upon themselves, shall not have that office used at their interment.—See further on this subject this Dict. tit. Felo de se.

The other species of criminal Homicide is that of killing another man. But in this there are also degrees of guilt, which divide the offence into Manslaughter, and Murder. The difference between which may be partly collected from what has been incidentally mentioned in the preceding articles; and principally consists in this, that Manslaughter (when voluntary) arises from the sudden heat of the passions; Murder from the wickedness of the heart.

2. MANSLAUGHTER is therefore thus defined; The unlawful killing of another, without malice, either express or implied: which may be either voluntarily, upon a sudden heat; or involuntarily, but in the commission of some unlawful act. 1 Hal. P. C. 466. And hence it follows, that in Manslaughter there can be no accessories before the fact; because it must be done without premeditation.

As to the first, or voluntary branch: if upon a sudden quarrel two persons fight, and one of them kills the other, this is Manslaughter: and so it is, if they, upon such an occasion go out and fight in a field; for this is one continued act of passion, and the law pays that regard to human frailty, as not to put a hasty and deliberate act upon the same footing with regard to guilt. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. §§ 29, 30. So also if a man be greatly provoked, as by pulling his nose, or other great indignity, and immediately kills the aggressor, though this is not excusable se defendendo, since there is no absolute necessity for doing it, to preserve himself; yet neither is it murder, for there is no previous malice; but it is Manslaughter. Hyde. 135. But in this, and in every other case of Manslaughter, upon provocation, if there be a sufficient cooling-time for passion to subside and reason to interpolate, and the person so provoked afterwards kills the other, this is deliberate revenge, and not heat of blood, and accordingly amounts to murder. East. 256. So if a man takes another in the act of adultery with his wife, and kills him directly upon the spot; this is not absolutely ranked in the class of justifiable Homicide, as in case of a forcible rape, but it is Manslaughter. 1 Hal. P. C. 486. It is however the lowest degree of it, and therefore in such a case, the court directed the burning in the hand to be gently inflicted, because there could not be a greater provocation. Ramm. 212. Manslaughter therefore on sudden provocation differs from Excusable Homicide se defendendo in this: that in one case there is an apparent necessity, for self-preservation, to kill the aggressor; in the other no necessity at all, being only a sudden act of revenge. 4 Comm. c. 14.

The second branch, or involuntary Manslaughter differs also from Homicide excusable by misadventure, in this; that misadventure always happens in consequence of a lawful act, but this species of manslaughter in consequence of an unlawful one. As if two persons play at sword and buckler, unless by the King's command, and one of them kills the other, this is manslaughter, because the original act was unlawful; but it is not murder, for the one had no intent to do the other any personal mischief. 3 Inst. 56. So where a person does an act, lawful in itself, but in an unlawful manner, and without due caution and circumspection: as when a workman flings down a stone or piece of timber into the street, and kills a man; this may be either misadventure, manslaughter, or murder, according to the circumstance under which the original act was done; if it were in a country village where few passers are, and he calls out to all people to have a care, it is misadventure only; but if it were in London, or other populous town, where people are continually passing, it is manslaughter, though he gives loud warning; and if he knows of their passing, and gives no warning at all, for then it is malice against all mankind. Ad. 43: 3 Inst. And, in general when an involuntary killing happens in consequence of an unlawful act, it will be either murder or manslaughter according to the nature of the act which occasioned it. If it be in prosecution of a felonious intent, or in it's consequences naturally tended to bloodshed, it will be murder; but if no more was intended than a mere civil trespass, it will only amount to manslaughter. 4 Comm. c. 14. See post. 3. more at large.

Our statute law has severely animadverted on one species of criminal negligence, whereby the death of a man is occasioned. For by Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 31. if any Waterman between Graveland and Windsor receives into his boat or barge a greater number of persons than the act allows, and any passenger shall then be drowned, such waterman is guilty (not of manslaughter, but) of felony; and shall be transported as a felon.

Next as to the Punishment of this degree of Homicide: the crime of manslaughter amounts to felony, but within the benefit of clergy; and the offender shall be burnt in the hand, and forfeit all his goods and chattels.

But there is one species of manslaughter, which is punished as murder, the benefit of clergy being taken away from it by statute; namely, the offence of mortally slaying another, though done upon sudden provocation. For by stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 8. when one thrusts or stabs another, who has not then a weapon drawn, or who hath not then first stricken the party slaying, so that he dies thereof within six months after, the offender shall not have the benefit of clergy, though he did it not of malice aforethought. This statute was made on account of the frequent quarrels, and slaying with short daggers, between the Scotch and the English, at the accession of James the First; and, being therefore of a temporary nature, ought perhaps to have expired with the manner which

which it meant to remedy. 1 Lord Raym. 140. It was however continued indefinitely by St. 3 Car. 1. c. 4.: and by stat. 16 (or 17) C. 1. c. 4., till some other act shall be made touching the continuance or discontinuance thereof.—It seems that in point of solid and substantial justice, it cannot be said that the mode of killing, whether by stabbing, strangling, or shooting, can either extenuate or enhance the guilt; unless where, as in the case of poisoning, it carries with it an internal evidence of cool and deliberate malice. But the benignity of the law hath construed the statute so favourably in behalf of the Subject, and so strictly when against him, that the offence of stabbing now stands almost upon the same footing, as it did at the Common-law. Foff. 299, 300. Thus, (not to repeat the cases before mentioned, of stabbing an adulteress, &c. which are barely manslaughter, as at Common-law) in the construction of the statute it hath been doubted, whether if the deceased had struck at all before the mortal blow given, this does not take it out of the statute, though in the preceding quarrel the stabber had given the first blow; and it seems to be the better opinion, that this is not within the statute. Foff. 301: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 6. Altho it hath been resolved, that the killing a man by throwing a hammer or other blunt weapon is not within the statute; and whether a shot with a pistol be so or not, is doubted. 1 Hal. P. C. 470. And if the party slain had a cudgel in his hand, or had thrown a pot or a bottle, or discharged a pistol at the party stabbing, this is a sufficient having a weapon drawn on his side within the words of the statute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 8.

It is generally holden, that this statute is but declarative of the Common law, and in the construction thereof, the following points have been also resolved. 1 Bulst. 87: Kelynge 55.

That he who actually gives the stroke, and not any of those who may be said to do it by construction of law, as being present, and aiding and abetting the fact, are within the statute; from whence it follows, That it cannot be proved by whom the stroke was given, none can be found guilty within the statute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 7: H. P. C. 58: Aleyn 44.

That there is no need to lay the conclusion of the indictment contra formam statuti, because the statute makes no new offence, but only takes away the privilege of clergy from an old one, and leaves it to the judgment of the Common-law; from whence it follows, that a person indicted on the statute, may be found guilty of manslaughter generally. Altho from the same ground it hath been resolved, That if an indictment lay, and a verdict also find, a fact to be contra formam statuti, which cannot possibly be so, as that A. and B. aided and abetted C. contra formam statuti, yet neither such indictment nor verdict are void; but A. and B. shall be dealt with in the same manner as they should have been, if these words contra formam statuti had been wholly omitted, because the substance of the indictment being found, they may be rejected as senseless and superfluous: And, a fortiori, therefore it is certain, that they shall do no hurt to an indictment or verdict containing a fact which may be within the statute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 9: H. P. C. 58, 266: Allen 47: Cro. Jac. 283.

That, as these words, contra formam statuti, do not vitiate an indictment which would be good without them; so also, they will not supply a defect in a vitious one, which does not specially pursue the statute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 10: H. P. C. 58.

A prisoner whose case may be brought within this statute, is commonly arraigned upon two indictments, one at Common-law for murder, and the other upon the statute. Foff. 299.—But the same circumstances which at Common-law will serve to justify, excuse or alleviate a charge of murder, have always had their due weight in prosecutions, grounded on this statute. Foff. 298.—As where a husband stabs an adulterer whom he seizes in the act. 1 Vent. 158: Raym. 212.—Or where a man is assaulted by thieves in his house, the thieves having no weapon drawn, nor having struck him; and he stabs one of them. Stra. 469. Or where an officer entering violently into the chamber of a gentleman to arrest him, but without announcing the purpose for which he came, is rabbed by the gentleman with his sword. Kel. 136: 1 Hale 470: Sy. 467.—Or where upon an outcry of thieves a person who had innocently hidden himself in a closet, was mistaken for the thief and stabbed in the dark. See 1 Hale 42, 474: Cro. Car. 538: W. Jon. 429: Kely. 136; and many other instances of this kind which were held not to be within the statute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. in n.

3. The term of MURDER (as a crime) was antiently applied only to the secret killing of another; Dial. de Scacc. l. 1. c. 10; which the word merda signifies in the Teutonic language; and it was defined, "homicidium quod, nullo vidente, nullo sciente, clam perpetratur." Glarv. lib. 14. c. 3: for which the vill wherein it was committed, or (if that were too poor) the whole hundred, was liable to a heavy amercement; which amercement itself was also denominated murdrum. Bract. l. 3. tr. 2. c. 15. § 7: Stat. Marl. c. 26: Foff. 281. The word murdrum in our old statutes also signified any kind of concealment or stifling: So in the stat. of Exeter, 14 E. 1. "je riens ne celerai ne suffirai ne celé ne murdré." which is thus translated in Flota, l. 1. c. 18. § 4. "Nullum veritatem celabo, nec celari permittam, nec murdari." And the words "pur mur he le doit" in the articles of that statute, are rendered in Flota, ibid. § 8 "pro jure alicujus murdandi." The word murdrum, (by some derived from the Sax. morþ, whence, (as it is said) comes the barbarous Latin Mordrum, & Murdum, in French Murme; though the word Murdrum, evidently comes from the Latin Mortidum), was a word in use long before the reign of King Canutus, which some would have to signify a violent death; and sometimes the Saxons expressed it by morþedil & morþ secere, a deadly work. But the Sax. morþ relates generally to mois.

The usage of fining the vill or the hundred was common among the antient Goths, in Sweden and Denmark, who supposed the neighbourhood, unless they produced the murderer to have perpetrated, or at least connived at, the murder: and, according to Bracton, it was introduced into this kingdom by King Canute to prevent his countrymen the Danes from being privily murdered by the English; and was afterwards continued by William the Conqueror, for the like security of his own Normans. Bract. l. 3. tr. 2. c. 15: 1 Hal. P. C. 447. And therefore if, upon inquisition had, it appeared that the person slain was an Englishman, (the presentment whereof was denominated Englesberic) the county seems to have been excused from this burthen. Bract. ubi supra. See this Dict. tit. Englucery.

HOMICIDE III. 3.

Engleccery. But, this difference being totally abolished by Stat. 14 E. 3. c. 4, we must define murder in quite another manner; without regarding whether the party slain was killed openly or secretly, or whether he was of English or foreign extraction. See Staunf. P. C. l. 1. c. 10, as also Hawk. P. C. c. 31; where it is said that in the ancient times above alluded to, the open killing of a man through anger or malice was not called murder; but voluntary Homicide. Bract. 121 a; 134 b; 135 a; Kel. 121.

The law concerning Engleccerie having been abolished by Stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 4, the killing of an Englishman or foreigner through malice prepense, whether committed openly or secretly, was by degrees called murder; and Stat. 13 Rich. 2. c. 1, which restrains the King's pardon in certain cases, does in the preamble, under the general name of murder, include all such Homicide as shall not be pardoned without special words; and, in the body of the act, expresses the same by murder, or killing by await, assault, or malice prepense. And doubtless the makers of Stat. 23 H. 8. cap. 1, which excluded all wilful murder of malice prepense from the benefit of clergy, intended to include open, as well as private Homicide, within the word murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 2; S. P. C. 18 b; 19 a.

By Murder, therefore, says Hawkins at this day we understand, the wilful killing of any Subject whomsoever, through malice forethought, whether the person slain be an Englishman or foreigner. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 3.

Murder is thus defined, or rather described, by Sir Edward Coke; "When a person of sound memory and discretion, unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the King's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied." 3 Inst. 47. The best way of examining the nature of this crime will be by considering the several branches of this definition.

First, murder must be committed by a person of sound memory and discretion: for lunaticks or infants, as was formerly observed, are incapable of committing any crime; unless in such cases where they shew a consciousness of doing wrong, and of course a discretion, or discernment, between good and evil.

One under the age of discretion, or non compos mentis, cannot be guilty of murder; though if it appears by circumstances, that the infant did hide the body, &c. it is felony. H. P. C. 43; 3 Inst. 46. 54.

If an infant under twelve years old, hath an extraordinary wit, that it may be presumed he knows what he does, and he kill another, it may be felony and murder; otherwise it shall not. 3 H. 7. 13; Plowd. 191.

See the case of William York, at Bury, Summer assizes in 1748. Foster's Rep. 70. and this Dict. tit. Infant I.

Next, murder happens when a person of such sound discretion unlawfully killeth. The unlawfulness arises from the killing without warrant or excuse: and there must also be an actual killing to constitute murder; for a bare assault, with intent to kill, is only a great misdemeanor, though formerly it was held to be murder. See 1 Hal. P. C. 425.

A person indicted for intending to murder the Master of the Rolls, Term Mich. 16 Car. 2; and for offering a sum of money to another person to do it, saying at the same time, that "if he would not perpetrate the crime, he would do it himself;" upon his conviction, the court declared that this was a heinous offence, and not only indictable, but fineable; and the offender was fined one thousand marks, committed to prison for three months, and ordered to find sureties for his good behaviour during life. 1 Lev. 146.

The killing may be by poisoning, striking, starving, drowning, and a thousand other forms of death, by which human nature may be overcome. And if a person be indicted for one species of killing, as by poisoning, he cannot be convicted by evidence of a totally different species of death, as by shooting with a pistol, or starving. But where they only differ in circumstances, as if a wound be alleged to be given by a sword, and it proves to have arisen from a staff, an ax, or a hatchet, this difference is immaterial. 3 Inst. 319; 2 Hal. P. C. 185. Of all species of deaths, the most detestable is that of poison; because it can of all others be the least prevented either by manhood or forethought. 3 Inst. 48. And therefore by the Stat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 9, it was made treason, and a more grievous and lingering kind of death was insisted on it than the Common law allowed; namely, boiling to death: but this act did not live long, being repealed by Stat. 1 El. 6. c. 12; which declares that all wilful killing by poisoning of any person shall be adjudged wilful murder, of malice prepensed.

There was also, by the ancient Common-law, one species of killing held to be murder which may be dubious at this day, as there hath not been an instance wherein it has been held to be murder, for many ages past; namely by bearing false witness against another, with an express, premeditated design to take away his life, so as the innocent person be condemned and executed. Murder c. 1. § 9, 19; Brit. c. 52; Bracton l. 3. c. 4. There is no doubt but this is equally murder in foro conscientie as killing with a sword; though the modern law (to avoid the danger of deterring witnesses from giving evidence upon capital prosecutions, if it must be at the perils of their own lives,) has not yet punished it as such. See 3 Inst. 48; Fost. 131. and this Dict. tit. Perjury.

A gaoler knowing a prisoner to be infected with an epidemic distemper, confines another prisoner against his will, in the same room with him, by which he catches the infection, of which the gaoler had notice, and the prisoner dies; this is a felonious killing. Str. 856; 9 St. Tr. 146. So to confine a prisoner in a low, damp, unwholesome room, not allowing him the common conveniences, which the decencies of nature require, by which the habits of his constitution are so affected as to produce a distemper of which he dies; this is also a felonious Homicide. Str. 884; Ld. Raym. 1578.—For although the law invests gaolers with all necessary powers, for the interest of the common-wealth, they are not to behave with the least degree of wanton cruelty to their prisoners, O. B. 1784, p. 1177.—And those were deliberate acts of cruelty, and enormous violations of the trust the law reposed in it's ministers of justice. Fost. 322.

In some cases a man shall be said, in the judgment of the law, to kill one who is in truth actually killed by another, or by himself; as where one by dures of imprisonment compels a man to accuse an innocent person, who, on his evidence, is condemned and executed; or where one incites a madman to kill himself or another: or where one lays poison with an intent to kill one man, which is afterwards accidentally taken by another who dies thereof. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 7; S. P. C. 36; 3 Inst. 91; Dalt. cap. 93; Plowd. Com. 474.

HOMICIDE III. 3.

If a man however does such an act, of which the probable consequence may be, and eventually is death, such killing may be murder although no stroke be struck by himself, and tho' no killing may be primarily intended; as was the case of the unnatural son, who exposed his sick father to the air, against his will, by reason whereof he died. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 5; of the harlot, who hid her child under leaves in an orchard, where a kite struck it and killed it. 1 Hal. P. C. 432; and of the parish officers, who shifted a child from parish to parish, till it died for want of care and sustenance. Palm. 545. So also, in general any one who, assuming to take care of another, relieves them necessary subsistence, or by any other severity, though not of a nature to produce immediate death, as by putting the party in such a situation as may possibly be dangerous to life or health, it death actually and clearly ensues in consequence of it, it is murder.—And this mode of killing is of the most aggravated kind, because a long time must unavoidably intervene before the death can happen, and also many opportunities of deliberation and reflection. O. B. 1784 p. 455: R. v. S. S. J. O. B. 1781. 4th S. J. 1776.

If a man hath a beast that is used to do mischief; and he, knowing it, suffers it to go abroad, and it kills a man, even this is manslaughter in the owner: but if he had purposely tuned it loose, though barely to frighten people and make what is called sport, it is as much murder, as if he had incited a bear or dog to worry them. See 1 Hal. P. C. 431.

Pocock says, that he who wilfully neglects to prevent a mischief, which he may and ought to provide against, is, a se, bene fact, in judgment of the law, the actual cause of the damage which ensues; and therefore if a man have an ox or horse, which he knows to be mischievous, by being used to gore or strike at those who came near them, and do not tie them up, but leave them to their liberty, and they afterwards kill a man, according to some opinions, the owner may be indicted, as having himself killed him; and this is agreeable to the Mosaic law. However, it is agreed by all, such a person is guilty of a very gross misdemeanor. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 1: F. 12. Coven 311: S. P. C. 17 a: Crom. 24 b: Dalb. cap. 93: F. 1. 122 b: H. P. C. 53: Exodus, c. 2. v. 29.

If a physician or surgeon gives his patient a potion or plaster to cure him, which contrary to expectation kills him, this is neither murder, nor manslaughter, but misadventure; and he shall not be punished criminally, however liable he might formerly have been to a civil action, for neglect or ignorance. Marr c. 4. § 10. But it hath been holden, that if he is not a regular physician or surgeon, who administers the medicine, or performs the operation, it is manslaughter at the least. Brow. c. 5: 4 b. 251. Yet Sir Matthew Hale very justly questions the law of this determination. 1 Hal. P. C. 430.

In order also to make the killing murder, it is requisite that the party die within a year and a day after the stroke received, or cause of death administered; in the computation of which, the whole day upon which the hurt was done shall be reckoned the first. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 9.

But if a person hurt by another, die thereof within a year and a day, it is no excuse for the other, that he might have recovered, if he had not neglected to take care of himself. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 10: 3 Inst. 53: Kerog 26: 1 K. b. 17.

If one dies within a year and a day, through disorderly living, it shall be no excuse, the wound will be judged the principal cause of his death; but if one wounded die after that time, the law will presume he died a natural death. 3 Inst. 53: H. P. C. 55: K. b. 26. If a man receive a wound that is not mortal; but either for want of help, or by neglect, it turns to a fever, &c. which causes the party's death, it is murder: so it is, where a man has some disease, which possibly would terminate his life in half a year, and another wounds him, that it hastens his end, &c. But if, by ill applications of the party, or those about him, of unwholesome medicines, the wounded person dies; if this plainly appears, it is not murder: by Hale; Hist. P. C. 428.

As to the place where such killing is within the consequence of the law; it seems that the killing of one who is both wounded and dies out of the realm, or wounded out of the realm and dies here, cannot be determined at Common law, because it cannot be tried by a jury of the neighbourhood where the fact was done. But it is agreed, that the death of one who is both wounded and dies beyond sea, and it is said by some, that the death of him who dies here of a wound given there, may be heard and determined before the Constable and Marshal, according to the Civil law, if the King please to appoint a Constable. And it seemeth also to be clear, that such a fact being examined by the privy council, may by force of St. 33 H. 8. cap. 23, be tried (in relation to the principal offenders, but not as to the accessaries) before commissioners appointed by the King, in any county of England. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 11: 3 Inst. 48: 2 Inst. 51: Co. Lit. 75: S. P. C. 65 a: Bro. Appeal 153: Co. Car. 247: 1 And. 195. A commission was issued, against Captain Roche for killing Mr. Ferguson, at the cape of Good Hope.

A murder at sea was anciently cognisable only by the Civil law; but now by force of Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 4: 28 H. 8. c. 15, it may be tried and determined before the King's Commissioners in any county of England, according to the course of the Common-law; yet the death of one who is at land, of a wound received at sea, is neither determinable at Common-law, nor by force of either of these statutes: but it seems, that it may be tried by the Constable and Marshal, or before the commissioners appointed in pursuance of the aforesaid statute of 33 H. 8. c. 23: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 12: 3 Inst. 48, 49: 1 Leon. 270: H. P. C. 54: 3 Inst. 48.

The Commissioners to be appointed under Stat. 27 & 28 H. 8, are the Admiral, or his deputy, and three or four more (among whom two Common law judges are constantly appointed, who in effect try all prisoners); the indictment being first found by a Grand Jury of 12 men, and afterwards tried by another jury. This is now the only method of trying marine felonies in the Court of Admiralty. The Judge of the Admiralty still presiding therein, just as the Lord Mayor presides at the Sessions in London. 4 Comm. 269. See this Dict. tit. Admiralty.

And it is said by some, that the death of one who died in one county, of a wound given in another, is not indictable at all at Common-law, because the offence was not complete in either county, and the jury could enquire only of what happened in their own county. But it hath been holden by others, That if the corpse were carried into the county where the stroke was given, the whole might be enquired of by a jury of the same county. And it is agreed, that an appeal might be brought in either county, and

and the fact tried by a jury returned jointly from each. And at this day, by force of St. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24, the whole is triable by a jury of the county wherein the death shall happen, on an indictment found, or appeal brought, in the same county. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 13; 3 Inst. 48, 49; Bro. Coro. 140, 141, 143; Indictm. 3; S. P. C. 90. c: 6 H. 7. 10 a: Finch Law 411; S. P. C. 182; Bro. Appeal 3. 80. 83. 85. 149.

Also by force of St. 26 H. 8. cap. 6, a murder in Wales may be enquired of in an adjoining English county, but appeals must still be brought in the proper county. 1 Hawk. P. C. Cro. Car. 247; 1 Jon. 255; 1 Lev. 118; Latch 12. 118; Wilf. 320.

By Stat. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 21, it is enacted that where any person shall be feloniously stricken or poisoned upon the sea, or at any place out of England, and shall die of the same in England; or where any person shall be feloniously stricken or poisoned within England, and shall die of such stroke or poisoning upon the sea, or out of England, an indictment thereof found by jurors of the county in England, in which such death, stroke or poisoning shall happen, whether it be found before any coroner upon view of such dead body, or before justices of peace, or other justices who shall have authority to inquire of murders, shall be as effectual, as well against the principals as the accessories, as if such stroke or poisoning and death, and the offence of such accessories, had happened in the same county; and every such offender shall have the like defences (except challenges for the hundred) as if such stroke or poisoning and death, and the like offence of such accessories, had happened in the same county where such indictment shall be found. See title Indictment II.

Further; the person killed must be "a reasonable creature in being, and under the King's peace," at the time of the killing; therefore to kill an alien, a Jew, or an outlaw, who, are all under the King's peace and protection, is as much murder as to kill the most regular born Englishman, except he be an alien enemy in time of war. 3 Inst. 50; 1 Hal. P. C. 433. To kill a child in it's mother's womb, is now no murder, but a great misprision: but if the child be born alive, and dieth by reason of the potion or bruises it received in the womb, it seems by the better opinion to be murder in such as administered or gave them. 3 Inst. 50; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 16. But see 1 Hal. P. C. 433.

It seems also agreed, that where one counsels a woman to kill her child when it shall be born, who afterwards kills it in pursuance of such advice, he is an accessory to the murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 17; Dyer 186; 3 Inst. 51.

But, as there is one case where it is difficult to prove the child's being born alive, namely, in the case of the murder of bastard children by the unnatural mother, it is enacted by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 27, "that if a woman be delivered of a child, which if born alive, should by law be a bastard; and endeavours privately to conceal it's death, by burying the child or the like; the mother so offending shall suffer death as in the case of murder, unless she can prove by one witness at least that the child was actually born dead." See title Bastard II. 2.

Lastly, the killing must be committed with malice aforethought, to make it the crime of murder. This is the grand criterion which now distinguishes murder from other killing, and this malice presense, malicia præ- cogitata, is not so properly spite or malevolence to the deceased in particular, as any evil design in general: the dictate of a wicked, depraved and malignant heart. Forst. 256: un dessein à faire un male chose 2 Rel. Rep. 461. and it may be either express, or implied in law. Express is, when one with a sedate, deliberate mind, and formed design, doth kill another; which formed design is evidenced by external circumstances, discovering that inward intention; as lying in wait, antecedent menace, former grudges, and concerted schemes to do him some bodily harm. 1 Hal. P. C. 451. This takes in the case of deliberate duelling, where both parties meet avowedly, with an intent to murder; thinking it their duty, as gentlemen, and claiming it as their right, to warrant with their own lives and those of their fellow creatures; without any warrant or authority from any power, either divine or human, but in direct contradiction to the laws both of God and man; and therefore the law has justly fixed the crime and punishment of murder, on them, and on their seconds also. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 21. & seq.

As to the first instance of this kind, it seems agreed, that wherever two persons in cold blood meet and fight, on a precedent quarrel, and one of them is killed, the other is guilty of murder, and cannot help himself by alledging that he was first struck by the deceased; or that he had often declined to meet him, and was prevailed upon to do it by his importunity; or that it was his only intent to vindicate his reputation, or that he meant not to kill, but only to disarm his adversary: For since he deliberately engaged in an act in defiance of the laws, he must at his peril abide the consequences thereof. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 21; 1 Bullst. 86, 7; 2 Bullst. 147; Crom. 22 b; 1 Rel. Rep. 360; 3 Bullst. 171; H. P. C. 48.

From hence it clearly follows, that if two persons quarrel over night, and appoint to fight the next day, or quarrel in the morning, and agree to fight in the afternoon, or such a considerable time after, by which, in common intendment, it must be presumed that the blood was cooled, and then they meet and fight, and one kill the other, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 22; 3 Inst. 51; H. P. C. 48; Kelynge 56; 1 Lev. 180.

And wherever it appears, from the whole circumstances of the case, that he who kills another on a sudden quarrel was master of his temper at the time, he is guilty of murder: as if after the quarrel he fall into other discourse, and talk calmly thereon: or perhaps if he has so much consideration as to say, that the place wherein the quarrel happens, is not convenient for fighting; or that if he should fight at present, he should have the disadvantage by reason of the height of his shoes, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 23; Kelynge 56; 1 Sid. 177; 1 Lev. 180.

If A. on a quarrel with B. tells him that he will not strike him, but that he will give B. a pot of ale to strike him, and thereupon B. strike, and A. kills him, he is guilty of murder; for he shall not elude the justice of the law by such pretence to cover his malice. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 24; H. P. C. 48.

In like manner, if B. challenge A. and A. refuse to meet him; but in order to evade the law, tells B. that he shall go the next day to such a town about his business, and accordingly B. meet him the next day in the road to the same town, and assault him, whereupon they fight, and A. kills B. he is, in the opinion of Hawkins, guilty of murder, unless it appear by the whole circumstances that he gave B. such information accidentally, and not with a design to give him an opportunity of fighting. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 25; Crom. 22 b; H. P. C. 48.

And at this day it seems to be settled, That if a man assaults another with malice prepense, and after be driven by him to the wall, and kill him there in his own defence, he is guilty of murder in respect of his first intent. Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 26; Crom. 22 b; Dalt. cap. 93; H. P. C. 47; Kelynge 58. Margridge's case.

And it hath been adjudged, that even upon a sudden quarrel, if a man be so far provoked by any bare words or gestures of another, as to make a pull at him with a sword, or to strike at him with any other such weapon as manifestly endangers his life, before the other's sword is drawn, and thereupon a fight ensue, and he who made such assault kill the other, he is guilty of murder; because that by assaulting the other in such an outrageous manner, without giving him an opportunity to defend himself, he shewed that he intended not to fight with him, but to kill him, which violent revenge is no more excused by such a slight provocation, than if there had been none at all. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 27; Crom. 23 a. b; Dalt. cap. 93; Kelynge 61. Margridge's case.

But it is said, that if he who draws upon another in a sudden quarrel, make no pass at him till his sword is drawn, and then fight with him, he is guilty of manslaughter only; because that by neglecting the opportunity of killing the other, he was on his guard, and in a condition to defend himself, with like hazard to both, he shewed that his intent was not so much to kill, as to contend with the other; in compliance with those common notions of honour, which prevailing over reason, during the time that a man is under the transports of a sudden passion, so far mitigate his offence in fighting, that it shall not be adjudged to be of malice prepense. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 28; Kelynge 55, 61, 131; 2 Roll. Rep. 491.

And if two happen to fall out upon a sudden, and presently agree to fight, and each of them fetch a weapon, and go into the field, and there one kills the other, he is guilty of manslaughter only, because he did it in the heat of blood, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 29; H. P. C. 48; 3 Id. 51.

And such an indulgence is shewn to the frailties of human nature, that where two persons, who have formerly fought on malice, are afterwards to all appearance reconciled, and fight again on a fresh quarrel, it shall not be presumed that they were moved by the old grudge, unless it appear by the whole circumstances of the fact. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 30; Crom. 23 a; Dalt. cap. 93; H. P. C. 49; 1 Roll. Rep. 360.

But the law so far abhors all duelling in cold blood, that not only the principal who actually kills the other, but also his seconds are guilty of murder, whether they fought or not; and some have gone so far as to hold, that the seconds of the persons killed are also equally guilty, in respect of that countenance which they give to their principals in the execution of their purpose, by accompanying them therein, and being ready to bear a part with them: but perhaps the contrary opinion is the more plausible; for it seems too severe a construction to make a man by such reasoning the murderer of his friend, to whom he was so far from intending any mischief, that he was ready to hazard his own life in his quarrel. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 32; H. P. C. 51; Dalt. cap. 93.

Any formed design of doing mischief may be called malice; and therefore not only such killing as proceeds from premeditated hatred or revenge against the person killed, but also in many other cases, such as is accompanied with those circumstances that shew the heart to be perversely wicked, is adjudged to be of malice prepense or aforethought, and consequently murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 18; Kelynge 127; Stran. 766.

If a man happen to kill another in the execution of a malicious and deliberate purpose to do him a personal hurt, by wounding or beating him; or in the wilful commission of any unlawful act, which necessarily tends to raise tumults and quarrels, and consequently cannot but be attended with the danger of personal hurt to some one or other; he shall be adjudged guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 10; H. P. C. 52, 57; Kelynge 117.

A fortiori, He shall come under the same construction, who, in the pursuance of a deliberate intention to commit a felony, chances to kill a man, as by shooting at game fowl with an intent to steal them, &c. for such persons are by no means favoured, and they must at their peril take care of the consequence of their actions; and it is a general rule, that wherever a man intending to commit one felony, happens to commit another, he is as much guilty as if he had intended the felony which he actually commits. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 11; 3 Inst. 56; Kelynge 117; H. P. C. 52.

If any one shoot at any wild fowl upon a tree, and the arrow killeth any reasonable creature afar off, without any evil intent in him, this is misadventure; for it was not unlawful to shoot at the wild fowl: But if he had shot at a cock or hen, or any tame fowl of another man's, and the arrow by mischance had killed a man; if his intention was to steal the poultry (which must be collected from circumstances) it will be murder by reason of that felonious intent: but if it was done wantonly, and without that intention, it will be barely manslaughter. Fest. 253, 9.

The rule before laid down supposeth, that the act from which death ensued, was malum in se. For if it was barely malum prohibitum, as shooting at game by a person not qualified by statute-law to keep or use a gun for that purpose, the case of a person offending, will fall under the same rule as that of a qualified man. For the statutes prohibiting the destruction of the game under certain penalties, will not, in a question of this kind, enhance the accident beyond its intrinsic moment. Fest. 259.

If upon a sudden provocation one beats another in a cruel and unusual manner, so that he dies, though he did not intend his death, yet he is guilty of murder by express malice; that is, by an express act doli, the genuine sense of malitia. As when a park-keeper tied a boy, that was stealing wood, to a horse's tail, and dragged him along the park; when a master corrected his servant with an iron bar, and a schoolmaster stamped on his scholar's belly; so that each of the sufferers died; these were justly held to be murders, because the correction being excessive, and such as could not proceed but from a bad heart, it was equivalent to a deliberate act of slaughter. 1 Hal. P. C. 454, 473, 474. Neither shall He be guilty of a less crime, who kills another in consequence of such a wilful act, as shews him to be an enemy to all mankind in general; as going deliberately, and with an intent to do mischief, upon a horse used to strike, or coolly discharging a gun among a multitude of people. Ld. Raym. 143: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 12.

And it is no excuse that he intended no harm to any one in particular, or that he meant to do it only for sport, or to frighten the people, &c. H. P. C. 32, 44: 3 Inst. 57: Dalt. cap. 93, 97: 11 H. 7. 23 a: Bro. Cons. 229.

So if a man resolves to kill the next man he meets, and does kill him, it is murder, although he knew him not; for this is universal malice. And, if two or more come together to do an unlawful act against the King's peace, of which the probable consequence might be bloodshed, as to beat a man; to commit a riot, or to rob a park: and one of them kill a man, it is murder in them all, because of the unlawful act, the malitia præcogitata, or evil intended beforehand. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 46.

Murder occasioned through an express purpose to do some personal injury to him who is slain, is properly said to be of express malice: Such as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, principally intended for some other purpose, and not expressed in its nature to do a personal injury to him in particular that is killed, is most properly malice implied. Kel. 129, 130.

In many cases where no malice is expressed, the law will imply it: as, where a man wilfully poisons another, in such a deliberate act the law presumes malice, though no particular enmity can be proved. 1 Hal. P. C. 455. And if a man kills another suddenly, without any, or without a considerable provocation, the law implies malice; for no person, unless of an abandoned heart, would be guilty of such an act, upon a slight or no apparent cause. No affront, by words or gesture only, is a sufficient provocation, so as to excuse or extenuate such acts of violence as manifestly endanger the life of another. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 33: 1 Hal. P. C. 455, 6. But if the person so provoked had unfortunately killed the other, by beating him in such a manner as shewed only an intent to chastise and not to kill him, the law so far considers the provocation of contumelious behaviour as to judge it only manslaughter, and not murder. Foss. 291.

In like manner if one kills an officer of justice, either civil or criminal, in the execution of his duty, or any of his assistants endeavouring to conserve the peace, or any private person endeavouring to suppress an affray; or apprehends a felon, knowing his authority, or the intention with which he interposes; the law will imply malice; and the killer shall be guilty of murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 457: Foss. 308, &c. And if one intends to do another felony, and undesignedly kill a man, this is also murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 465. Thus if one shoots at A. and misses him, but kills B. this is murder; because of the previous felonious intent, which the law transfers from one to the other. The same is the case where one lays poison for A; and B, against whom the prisoner had no malicious intent, takes it, and it kills him; this is likewise murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 466. So also if one gives a woman with child a medicine to procure abortion, and it operates so violently as to kill the woman, this is murder in the person who gave it. 1 Hal. P. C. 429.

As to such murder as happens in killing another without any provocation, or but upon a slight one: it is to be observed, that wherever it appears that a man killed another, it shall be intended prima facie that he did it maliciously, unless he can make out the contrary, by shewing that he did it on a sudden provocation, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 32: Kelynge 27.

Also it seems to be agreed, that no breach of a man's word or promise, no trespass either to lands or goods, no affront by bare words or gestures, however false or malicious it may be, and aggravated with the most provoking circumstances, will excuse him from being guilty of murder, who is so far transported thereby, as immediately to attack the person who offends him, in such a manner as manifestly endangers his life, without giving him time to put himself upon his guard, if he kills him in pursuance of such assault, whether the person slain did at all fight in his defence or not: for so base and cruel a revenge cannot have too severe a construction. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 33: Kelynge 131, 135: 2 Rob. Rep. 460, 461: Dalt. cap. 93: Cro. Eliz. 779: Noy 171: 1 Sid. 277: 1 Levinz 180: Hob. 121. con: 1 Jos. 432 a.

But if a person so provoked had beaten the other only in such a manner, that it might plainly appear that he meant not to kill, but only chastise him; or if he had restrained himself till the other had put himself on his guard, and then in fighting with him had killed him, he had been guilty of manslaughter only. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 34: Kelynge 55, 61, 131.

And of the like offence shall he be adjudged guilty, who seeing two persons fighting together on a private quarrel, whether sudden or malicious, takes part with one of them, and kills the other. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 35: Kelynge 61, 136: Cro. Jac. 295: 12 Co. 87.

If two having malice fight, and the servant of one of them, not knowing of the malice, killeth the other, this is murder in the master, and manslaughter in the servant: Though if there be a conspiracy to kill a man, but no malice against his servant; if the servant be slain, the malice against the master shall be construed to extend to his servant: and the killing the servant is murder. Dyer 128.

He cannot be thought guilty of a greater crime, than manslaughter, who finding a man in bed with his wife, or being actually struck by him, or pulled by the nose, or slipped upon the forehead, immediately kills him; or who happens to kill another in a contention for the wall; or in the defence of his person from an unlawful arrest; or in the defence of his house from those who, claiming a title to it, attempt forcibly to enter it, and so that purpose shoot at it, &c. or in the defence of his possession of a room in a public house, from those who attempt to turn him out of it, and thereupon draw their swords upon him; in which case the killing the assailant hath been holden by some to be justifiable; but it is certain, that it can amount to no more than manslaughter. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 36: H. P. C. 57: 3 Inst. 57: Kelynge 51, 137: Crom. 27 a.

Nor was he judged criminal in a higher degree, who seeing his son's nose bloody, and being told by him, that he had been beaten by such a boy, ran three quarters of a mile, and having found the boy, beat him with a small cudgel, cudgel, whereof he afterwards died. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 48: Cro. Jac. 296: 12 Co. 87.

HOMICIDE III. 3.

Nor was he thought more criminal, who duped and encouraged by a concourse of people, threw a pick-pocket into a pond adjoining to the road, in order to avenge the theft, by ducking him, but without any apparent intention to take away his life, and the pick-pocket was drowned; for although this mode of punishment is highly unjustifiable and illegal, yet the law respects the infirmities and imbecilities of human nature, where certain provocations are given: O. B. 85, N^o. 751.—So also where three Scotch soldiers were drinking together in a public house, one of them struck some strangers that were drinking in another box, with a small rattan; they having used several opprobrious epithets, reviling the character of the Scotch nation: an altercation ensued, and one of the strangers laid hold of the soldier who had stricken, and threw him against a settle.—The altercation increased, and when the soldiers had paid the reckoning the strangers again shoved him from the room into the passage; upon this, the soldier exclaimed, that “he did not mind killing an English man, nor eating a mess of crowdy;” the stranger, assisted by another person, then violently pushed the soldier out of the house, whereupon the soldier instantly turned round, drew his sword, and stabbed the stranger to the heart. This was adjudged Manslaughter. 5 Burr. 2799.—But in every case of Homicide, upon provocation, how great soever it be, if there is sufficient time for passion to subside, and for reason to interpose, such Homicide will be murder. Fost. 273, 296: 1 Hal. 486: 1 Vent. 158: Kaym. 212: Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 31. § 37. in n.

When one executes his revenge, upon a sudden provocation, in such a cruel manner, with a dangerous weapon, as shews a malicious intention to do mischief; and death ensues, it is express malice and murder from the nature of the fact. Kel. 55, 61, 65, 130. A man chided his servant, and upon some cross answer given, he having a hot iron in his hand ran it into the servant's belly, of which he died, this was adjudged murder. Kel. 64.

If a person is trespassing upon another, by breaking his hedges, &c. and the owner upon sight thereof take up a hedge-stake, and give him a stroke on the head, whereof he dies, this is murder, because it is a violent act beyond the proportion of the provocation. H. P. C. And where a boy was upon a tree in a park cutting of wood, and the keeper bids him come down, which he did; and then the keeper struck him several blows with a cudgel, and afterwards with a rope tied him to his horse's tail, and the horse ran away with him and killed him; this was held to be murder out of malice, the boy having come down at the keeper's command. Cro. Car. 139: H. P. C.

As to such murder as happens in killing one whom the person killing intended to hurt in a less degree; it is to be observed, that wherever a person in cool blood by way of revenge, unlawfully and deliberately beats another in such a manner that he afterwards dies thereof, he is guilty of murder, however unwilling he might have been to have gone so far. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 38: Kelyne 119. Mawgrudge's case: H. P. C. 49, 50, 51, 52.

Also it seems, that he who upon a sudden provocation executeth his revenge in such a cruel manner, as shews a cool and deliberate intent to do mischief, is guilty of murder, if death ensue; as where the keeper of a park finding a boy stealing wood, tied him to a horse's tail and beat him, whereupon the horse ran away with him and killed him. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 39: Cro. Car. 131: 1 Jon. 198: Palm. 545: H. P. C. 49.

As to the cases where such killing shall be adjudged murder, which happen in the execution of an unlawful action, principally intended for some other purpose, and not to do a personal injury to him in particular who happens to be slain, they are as follow. And first, Such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereof the principal intention was to commit another felony; it seems agreed, that wherever a man happens to kill another in the execution of a deliberate purpose to commit any felony, he is guilty of murder; as where a person shooting at tame fowl, with an intent to steal them, accidentally kills a man; or where one sets upon a man to rob him, and kills him in making resistance; or where a person shooting at, or fighting with one man with a design to murder him, misses him, and kills another. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 40, 41: Kelyne 117: H. P. C. 46, 50: Dalt. cap. 93: Moore 87.

And not only in such cases, where the very act of a person having such a felonious intent, is the immediate cause of a third person's death, but also where it any way occasionally causes such a misfortune, it makes him guilty of murder; and such was the case of the husband, who gave a poisoned apple to his wife, who eat not enough of it to kill her, but innocently, and against the husband's will and persuasion, gave part of it to a child who died thereof; such also was the case of the wife who mixed raisbane in a potion sent by an apothecary to her husband, which did not kill him, but afterwards killed the apothecary, who to vindicate his reputation tasted it himself, having first stirred it about. Neither is it material in this case, that the stirring of the potion might make the operation of the poison more forcible than otherwise it would have been; for inasmuch as such a murderous intention, which of itself perhaps in strictness might justly be made punishable with death, proves now in the event the cause of the King's losing a Subject, it shall be as severely punished as if it had had the intended effect, the missing whereof is not owing to any want of malice, but of power. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 42: Plow. Com. 474: 9 Co. 91.

But if one happened to be poisoned by raisbane laid in order to destroy vermine, the person by whom he is so killed, is guilty of Homicide per infortunium only, because his intentions were wholly innocent. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 43.

Also if a third person accidentally happen to be killed by one engaged in a combat with another upon a sudden quarrel, it seems that he who kills him is guilty of manslaughter only; but it hath been adjudged, that if a justice of peace, constable or watchman, or even a private person be killed in the endeavouring to part those whom he sees fighting, the person by whom he is killed, is guilty of murder; and that he cannot excuse himself by alledging that what he did was in a sudden affray in the heat of blood, and through the violence of passion; for he who carries his resentment so high as not only to execute his revenge against those who have affronted him, but even against such as have no otherwise offended him but by doing their duty, and endeavouring to restrain him from breaking through his, shews such an obstinate contempt contempt of the law, that he is no more to be favoured than if he had acted in cool blood. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 44; H. P. C. 45, 50; 3 Inst. 52; Dalt. cap. 93; Savil 67; Kelynge 66; 22 Aff. 71; 4 Co. 40 b; 9 Co. 68; Crom. 25 a. b.

Yet it hath been resolved, that if the third person slain in such a sudden affray, do not give notice for what purpose he comes, by commanding the parties in the King's name to keep the peace, or otherwise manifestly shewing his intention to be not to take part in the quarrel, but to appease it, he who kills him is guilty of manslaughter only, for he might suspect that he came to side with his adversary. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 45; Kelynge 66. If the officer be within his proper district, and known, or but generally acknowledged to have the office he assumeth, the law will presume that the party killed had due notice of his intent, especially if it be in the day time. Fost. 135, 311.

As to such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, where the principal design is to commit a bare breach of the peace, not intended against the person of him who happens to be slain; it seems clear that where divers persons resolve generally to resist all opposers in the commission of any such breach of the peace, and to execute it in such a manner as naturally tends to raise tumults and affrays; as by committing a violent disseisin with great numbers of people, hunting in a park, &c. and in so doing happen to kill a man, they are all guilty of murder; for they must at their peril abide the event of their actions, who wilfully engage in such bold disturbances of the public peace, in open opposition to, and defiance of, the justice of the nation. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 46; Savil 67; Moore 86; Palm. 35; Crom. 24 b. 25 a; H. P. C. 47; 5 Mod. 285; Dyer 128. pl. 60; S. P. C. 17 b.

The fact however must appear to have been committed strictly in prosecution of the purpose for which the party was assembled. Prin. P. L. 234:—Therefore if divers persons be engaged in an unlawful act, and one of them with malice prepened against one of his companions, finding an opportunity, kills him, the rest are not concerned in the guilt of that act. Kely. 112: because it hath no connection with the crime in contemplation. Prin. P. L. 235.—So where two men were beating another man in the street, a stranger made some observations upon the cruelty of the act, upon which one of the two men gave him a mortal stab with a knife. Both the men were indicted as principals in the murder, yet although both were doing an unlawful act in beating the man, as the death of the stranger did not ensue upon that act, and it appearing that only one of them intended any injury to the person killed, the judges were of opinion that he could not be guilty either as principal or accessory: and upon the case of R. v. Thompson, Kely. 66, 7, he was acquitted. 8 Mod. 164; 12 Mod. 629; Yet see 12 Mod. 256:—Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 31. § 46, in n.

Where divers rioters, having forcible possession of a house, afterwards killed the person whom they had ejected, as he was endeavouring in the night forcibly to regain the possession, and to fire the house, they were adjudged guilty of manslaughter only, notwithstanding they did the fact in maintenance of a deliberate injury; perhaps for this reason, because the person slain was so much in fault himself. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 47; Crom. 28 b; H. P. C. 56.

But if in such, or any other quarrel, whether it were sudden or premeditated, a justice of peace, constable or watchman, or even a private person, be slain in endeavouring to keep the peace, and suppress the affray, he who kills him is guilty of murder; for notwithstanding it was not his primary intention to commit a felony, yet inasmuch as he persists in a less offence with so much obstinacy as to go on in it to the hazard of the lives of those who no otherwise offend him, but by doing their duty in maintenance of the law, which therefore affords them its more immediate protection, he seems to be in this respect equally criminal, as if his intention had been to commit a felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 48; H. P. C. 45; Dalt. cap. 93; 3 Inst. 52; Kelynge 66; 22 Aff. 71; 4 Co. 40 b; 9 Co. 68; Crom. 25. See supra.

If one attack another to rob him, and by the resistance of the party kills him, this is murder. 3 Inst. 52; Dalt. 344. A person stands by and encourages or commands another to murder a man; or if he come with others on purpose to kill him, and stand by while the other persons commit the fact: It will be murder in them all. Plowd. 98; 11 Rep. 5. And if two or more persons come together to do an unlawful act, as to beat a man, rob a park, &c. and one of them kills a person, this is murder in all present, aiding or assisting, or that were ready to aid and assist: All will be said to intend the murder. 3 Inst. 56; Dalt. 347; H. P. C. 31. And such persons will be judged to be present who are in the same house, though in another room, or in the same park, although half a mile off, &c. H. P. C. 47; Kel. 87, 116, 127. See tit. Necessary.

Several persons having conspired to enter the King's park, and to hunt and carry away deer, with design of killing any one that should oppose them; though the keeper's servant began the assault, and required them first to stand, whereupon they fled, and one of the keeper's men discharged a piece at them, and they continued their flight until he laid violent hands upon one of the offenders, and then, and not before, they killed one of the keeper's servants, this was held to be murder; as they were doing an unlawful act, the law implies malice, and they ought not to have fled, but to have surrendered themselves. Roll. Rep. 20.

As to such killing, as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, the principal motive whereof was to assist a third person; it seems clear, that if a master maliciously intending to kill another take his servants with him, without acquainting them with his purpose, and meet his adversary and fight with him, and the servants seeing their master engaged take part with him, and kill the other, they are guilty of manslaughter only, but the master of murder. Pl. Com. 100, 101 a; Crom. 23; Dalt. cap. 93; H. P. C. 51, 52; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 49.—Though if the master have malice, and he tells his servants of it, and that his intention is to kill the party, and they go with the master, if they kill another, it is murder both in master and servant. Dy. 26; 9 Rep. 66; Plowd. 100.

And therefore it follows a fortiori, that if a man's servant or friend, or even a stranger, coming suddenly, see him fighting with another and side with him, and kill the other; or seeing his sword broken lend him another, wherewith he kills the other, he is guilty of manslaughter only. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 50; Crom. 26 b; H. P. C. 57; Dalt. cap. 94; 1 Roll. Rep. 407, 408; 3 Bulst. 206; H. P. C. 52.

HOMICIDE III.

Yet in this very case, if the person killed were a bailiff, or other officer of justice, resisted by the master, &c. in due execution of his duty, such friend or servant, &c. are guilty of murder, whether they knew the person slain were an officer or not. Keynge 67, 86, 87. But perhaps it may be objected, that in this last case there seems to be no more malice than in the former; and such third person being wholly ignorant that the party killed was an officer, seems to be no more in fault than if he had been a private person. To this it may be answered, that all fighting is highly unlawful, and that he who on a sudden seeing persons engaged in it, is so far from endeavouring to part them, as every good Subject ought, that he takes part with one side, and fights in the quarrel, without knowing the cause of it, shews a high contempt of the laws, and a readiness to break through them on a small occasion, and must at his peril take heed what he does; and consequently might perhaps in strict justice be adjudged in the foregoing cases to act with malice, which does not always signify a particular ill-will against the person killed, as appears by many of the above mentioned cases; and tho' such persons be favoured in respect of the suddenness of the occasion where both the quarrel and the persons are private, yet he must not expect such indulgence, where the fight, in which he so rashly engages, was begun in opposition to the justice of the nation, and a person happens to be killed thereby who engaged in maintenance thereof, and on that account is under its more particular care; and it may be justly challenged, that his opposers be made examples to deter others from joining in such unwarrantable quarrels. 1 Sid. 160: Noy 50. Plow. Com. 100.—See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 51-53.

But if a man seeing another arrested, and restrained from his liberty, under colour of a 'prels-warrant or civil process, &c. by those who in truth have no such authority, happen to kill such trespassers' in resisting the person oppressed, he shall be adjudged guilty of manslaughter only, notwithstanding the injured person submitted to them, and endeavoured not to rescue himself; and the person who rescued him, did not know that he was illegally arrested; for since in the event it appears, that the persons slain were trespassers, covering their violence with a shew of justice, he who kills them is indulged by the law, which in these cases judges by the event, which those who engage in such unlawful actions must abide at their peril. Keynge 66, 137: Com. 27 a, Dent's case: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 54.—But the principles upon which this case was determined, are very elegantly and warmly controverted by Mr. Justice Fryer, p. 315—318.

There were two men in an inner chamber, quarrelling, and together by the ears; a brother of one of them standing at the door, that could not get in, cried to his brother to make him sure, and presently after he gave the other a mortal wound; this was held manslaughter in him that stood at the door. Ship. Abr. 493.

As to such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereof the direct design was to escape from an arrest, it seems to be agreed that whoever kills a sheriff, or any of his officers, in the lawful execution of civil process, as on arresting a person upon a capias, is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 55: Dalt. 427. 93: H. P. C. 25: Com. 24 a.

Nor is it any excuse to such a person, that the process was erroneous, (for it is not void by bill 2 (1), or that the arrest was in the night, or that the officer did not tell him for what cause he arrested him, and out of what court, (which is not necessary when prevented by the party's resistance): or that the officer did not shew his warrant, which he is not bound to do at all, if he be a bailiff commonly known, nor without a demand, if he be a special one. 9 Co. 66, 68: Co. Jac. 280, 486: 6 Co. 68 b: 60 a: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 56.

Yet the killing of an officer in some cases will be manslaughter only; as, where the warrant by which he acts gives him no authority to arrest the party; as where a bailiff arrests J. S. a baronet, who never was knighted; by force of a warrant to arrest J. S. knight. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 57: Co. Car. 372: 1 Jon. 346: 12 Co. 49. So where a good warrant is executed in an unlawful manner; as if a bailiff be killed in breaking open a door or window to arrest a man; or perhaps if he arrest one on a Sunday since stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 7, by which all such arrests are made unlawful. H. P. C. 46: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 58.

If a bailiff is killed in executing a lawful warrant, &c. it is murder: Nor is it any excuse to the person, that the process was erroneous; or that the arrest was in the night; that the officer did not tell him for what cause he arrested him; or that he did not shew his warrant, &c. being a bailiff commonly known. 9 Rep. 68, 69: Co. Jac. 280, 486. But if a bailiff who is not executing his office is killed, it is not murder; for he ought to be duly executing his office, by serving the process of the law, wherein he is assisted cum potestate Regis & Legis. Co. Car. 537: 2 Lill. Abr. 212. Therefore where the warrant by which he acts gives him no authority to arrest the party; as where a bailiff arrests a wrong person, or J. S. a baronet, by force of a warrant to arrest J. S. knight; or if a good warrant is executed in an unlawful manner; as if a bailiff be killed in breaking open a door, or window, to arrest a man; or perhaps if he arrest one on a Sunday; since the stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7, by which all such arrests are made unlawful, and he is slain; malice shall not be implied to make it murder, but it shall be manslaughter only. H. P. C. 46: Co. Car. 372: 12 Rep. 49: 1 Hawk. c. 31. § 58. If bailiffs come to a house to arrest a person, and the house being locked they attempt to break in, whereupon the son of the person intended to be arrested, shoots and kills one of them, it is not murder. Jones 429: See Foster's Rep. 135, 138, 270, 308, 312, 318, 321.

A person was arrested, and another not knowing the cause of the struggle, but seeing swords drawn, and to prevent mischief, came and defended the party arrested, and in the scuffle the bailiff was killed; it was resolved to be no murder in the person doing it, but that all that were present and assisting, knowing of the arrest, were principal murderers. Kel. 86. Though it has been held in such a case, that the person offending is guilty of murder, whether he knew that the person slain were an officer or not; for all fighting is unlawful, and he who, seeing persons engaged in it, takes part with one side, and fights in the quarrel without knowing the cause of it, especially where the fight is begun in opposition to the justice of the nation, shews a readiness to break through the laws on a small occasion, and must at his peril take heed what he doth. 1 Sid. 160: Noy 50. See ante.

As to such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereof the principal purpose was to usurp an illegit.

HOMICIDE III. 4.

illegal authority; it seems clear, that if persons take upon them to put others to death, either by virtue of a new commission wholly unknown to our laws, or by virtue of an unknown jurisdiction, which clearly extends not to cases of this nature; as if the court of Common Pleas cause a man to be executed for treason or felony; or the Court Martial, in time of peace, put a man to death by the martial law, both the judges and officers are guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 59: H. P. C. 49.

But where persons act by virtue of a commission, which if it were strictly regular, would undoubtedly give them full authority, but which happens to be defective only in some point of form, it seems that they are no way criminal. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 60.

As to such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, where no mischief was intended at all, it is said, that if a person happen to occasion the death of another, in doing any idle wanton action, which cannot but be attended with the manifest danger of some other; as by riding with a horse known to be used to kick among a multitude of people, by which he means no more than to divert himself by putting them in a fright, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. 87.

It has been already mentioned to have been anciently holden, that if a person not duly authorized to be a physician or surgeon, undertake a cure, and the patient die under his hand, he is guilty of felony; but in as much as the books wherein this opinion is holden were written before the statute of 23 H. 8. c. 1, which first excluded such felonious killing, as may be called wilful murder or malice prepense, from the benefit of clergy, it may be well questioned, whether such killing shall be said to be of malice prepense, within the intent of that statute; however, it is certainly highly rash and presumptuous for unskilful persons to undertake matters of this nature; and indeed the law cannot be well too severe in this case, in order to deter ignorant people from endeavouring to get a livelihood by such practice, which cannot be followed without the manifest hazard of the lives of those who have to do with them: but surely the charitable endeavours of those gentlemen who study to qualify themselves to give advice of this kind, in order to assist their poor neighbours, can by no means deserve so severe a construction from their happening to fall into some mistakes in their prescriptions, from which the most learned and experienced cannot always be secure. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 62: S. P. C. 16 b: Pult. 32 b: Crom. 27: 43 Ed. 3. 33 b: Fitz. Coron. 163: See Dalt. cap. 93.

It were endless to go through all the cases of Homicide which have been adjudged either expressly or impliedly, malicious: the above therefore may suffice as a pretty ample specimen: and we may take it for a general rule that all Homicide is malicious, and of course amounts to murder, unless where, 1. justified by the command or permission of the law; 2. excused on the account of accident or self-preservation; or 3. alleviated into manslaughter, by being either the involuntary consequence of some act, not strictly lawful, or (if voluntary) occasioned by some sudden and sufficiently violent provocation. And all these circumstances of justification, excuse, or alleviation, it is incumbent upon the prisoner to make out, to the satisfaction of the court and jury: the latter of whom are to decide whether the circumstances alleged are proved to have actually existed; the former, how far they extend to take away or mitigate the guilt. For all Homicide is presumed to be malicious, until the contrary appeareth upon evidence. Foet. 275.

The punishment of murder, and that of manslaughter were formerly one and the same; both having the benefit of clergy: so that none but unlearned persons, who least knew the guilt of it, were put to death for this enormous crime. 1 Hal. P. C. 450. But by several statutes the benefit of clergy is taken away from murderers through malice prepense, their abettors, procurers, and counsellors. See Stats. 23 Hen. 8. c. 12: 1 Ed. 6. c. 12: 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4. And tit. Clergy, Benefit of.

The Principal in murder is therefore now ousted of clergy in all cases, and the Accessary before is also ousted of clergy in all cases, but the Accessary after is in no case ousted of clergy. 2 Hob. H. 314.

In atrocious cases, it was frequently usual for the court to direct the murderer, after execution to be hung upon a gibbet in chains near the place where the fact was committed: but this was no part of the legal judgment; and the like is still sometimes practised in the case of notorious thieves. But now in England, it is enacted by Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37. that the Judge before whom any person is found guilty of wilful murder, shall pronounce sentence immediately after conviction, unless he sees cause to postpone it; and shall in passing sentence direct him to be executed on the next day but one (unless the same shall be Sunday, and then on the Monday following) and that his body be delivered to the surgeons to be dissected and anatomized; and that the Judge may direct his body to be afterwards hung in chains, but in no wise to be buried without dissection. See Foet. 107. And during the short but awful interval between sentence and execution the prisoner shall be kept alone, and sustained only with bread and water. But a power is allowed to the Judge upon good and sufficient cause to respite the execution and relax the other restraints of the act. See tit. Execution of Criminals.

At a meeting of the Judges to consider of this act there was some doubt whether hanging in chains might ever be made part of the sentence; but on debate it was agreed by nine judges, that in all cases within the act, the judgment for dissecting and anatomizing only should be part of the sentence, and if it should be thought advisable, the judge might afterwards direct the hanging in chains by special order to the sheriff, pursuant to the power given by the act. Foet. 107.

4. By the Roman law Parricide, or the murder of one's parents or children, was punished in a much severer manner than any other kind of Homicide. But the English laws treat it no otherwise than as simple murder, unless the child was also the servant of his parent; probably under the idea of the impossibility of committing to enormous a crime.

But though the breach of natural relation is unobserved, yet the breach of civil or ecclesiastical connections, when coupled with murder denominates it a new offence, no less than a species of treason, called parricidium, or Parricide: which is however nothing else but an aggravated degree of murder; although, on account of the violation of private allegiance, it is stigmatized as an inferior species of treason. And thus, in the ancient Gothic constitution, we find the breach both of natural and civil relations ranked in the same class with crimes against the State and Sovereign.

PETIT TREASON, according to the stat. 25 E. 3. c. 2, may happen three ways: by a servant killing his master, a wife her husband, or an ecclesiastical person (either secular or regular,) his superior, to whom he owes faith and obedience. A servant who kills his master whom he has left upon a grudge conceived against him during his service, is guilty of petit treason, for the traitorous intention was hatched while the relation subsisted between them, and this is only an execution of that intention. 1 Hawk. P. C. 89: 1 Hal. P. C. 380. So if a wife be divorced à mensa et thoro, still the vinculum matrimonii subsists; and if she kills such divorced husband, she is a traitress. 1 Hal. P. C. 381.

A wife divorced causâ adulterii vel fornicationis, is still within this law, because the bond of matrimony is not thereby dissolved, and she may again lawfully cohabit with her husband. But a divorce causâ consanguinitatis vel pre-con-sensu, entirely dissolves the nuptial tie, and annihilates the very character of wife.—Therefore a wife de facto only, and not de jure cannot commit this crime, for she has no lawful lord to whom she owes subjection and obedience.—Neither can a husband be guilty of this crime by killing his wife de jure, for there is no reciprocity of obedience and subjection.—Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 32. § 7.

A clergyman is understood to owe canonical obedience to the bishop who ordained him, to him in whose diocese he is beneficed, and also to the metropolitan of such suffragan or diocesan bishop; and therefore to kill any of these is petit treason. 1 Hal. P. C. 381. As to the rest, whatever has been said, or remains to be observed, with respect to wilful murder, is also applicable to the crime of petit treason, which is no other than murder in it's most odious degree: except that the trial shall be as in cases of high treason, before the improvements therein made by the statutes of William 3. Foß. 337. But a person indicted of petit treason may be acquitted thereof, and found guilty of manslaughter or murder. Foß. 106: 1 Hal. P. C. 378: 2 Hal. P. C. 184; and in such case it should seem that two witnesses are not necessary, as in case of petit treason they are. Which crime is also distinguished from murder in it's punishment. 4 Comm. c. 14.

An appeal of death will lie, and ante factum acquit or attaint in murder is a good bar, in petit treason; and à converso. 2 Hal. 246, 253: 3 Inst. 213. It is included in a pardon under the name of murder. 1 Hal. 378. And the offender may be indicted either for petit treason, murder or manslaughter, and tried and found guilty on such indictment, of either of those crimes respectively, according as the case may appear upon the evidence. 1 Hal. 378: Foß. 326.—But if the prosecutor be apprised of the real case, he ought to adapt the bill to the truth of the fact. Foß. 104, 326. For though the offences are to most purposes considered as substantially the same, yet there is, as we have seen, some difference with regard to the judgment; and also a very material one with regard to the trial. Foß. 327.—On the trial the prisoner is entitled to a peremptory challenge of thirty five. Foß. 327.—Two witnesses, it is also positively stated, by Foß., are required both on the indictment and at the trial. Foß. 337: See stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12: And the stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11, by general words extending to all treasons, requireth that the witnesses, if living, shall be examined in person upon the trial in open court. Depositions therefore taken before the coroner, or informations taken by a justice of the peace, are not evidence whereon to ground a conviction of petty treason, if the party be living, though unable to travel, or kept out of the way by the prisoner, or his procurement. Foß. 337. cites stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13: 1 Hale 305: 2 Hale 284.

The punishment of petit treason, in a man, is to be drawn and hanged, and in a woman as formerly to be drawn and burned, but which latter sentence is now changed to hanging by stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 48. See title Judgment in criminal cases. Persons guilty of petit treason were first debarred the benefit of clergy by stat. 12 H. 7. c. 7, which has been since extended to their aiders, abettors, and counsellors, by stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 1: 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4. See title Clergy Benefit of.

HOMINATIO. Domesday, tit. Northampton Sockmanni de Risdan.—The mustering of men; also the doing of homage. Cravell edit. 1727.

HOMINE CAPTO IN WITHERNAMUM. A writ to take him that hath taken any bondman or woman, and led him or her out of the country, so that he or she cannot be replevied according to law. Reg. Orig. fol. 79. See this Dist. tit. Withernam.

HOMINE ELIGENDO AD CUSTODIENDAM PECIAM SIGILLI PRO MERCATORIBUS EDITI. A writ directed to a corporation, for the choice of a new person to keep one part of the seal appointed for Statutes merchant, when a former is dead, according to the statute of Edm-Bur-nel. Reg. Orig. 178.

HOMINE REPLEGIANDO. A writ to bail a man out of prison: F. N. B. fol. 6: Reg. Orig. fol. 77.

This writ lies where a person is in prison, (not by special commandment of the King, or his Judges, or for any crime or cause irrepleviable,) directed to the sheriff to cause him to be replevied: in the same manner that charters taken in distress may be replevied; and if the person be conveyed out of the sheriff's jurisdiction, he may return, that the defendant hath efforced the plaintiff's body, so that he cannot deliver him; then the plaintiff shall have a capias in withernam to take the defendant's body, and keep him without bail or mainprize till he produces the party. 3 Comm. 129. c. 8. And if the sheriff return non est inventus in that writ against the body, the plaintiff shall have a capias against the defendant's goods, &c. F. N. B. 66: New Nat. Br. 151, 152.

Where one takes away secretly, or keeps in his custody another man against his will, upon oath made thereof, and a petition to the Lord Chancellor, he will grant a writ of replegiari facias, with an alias and pluries, upon which the sheriff returns an elongatus, and the coupon issues out a capias in withernam: and when the party is taken, the sheriff cannot take bail for him; but the court where the writ is returnable may, if they think fit, grant a habeas corpus to the sheriff to bring him into court and bail him. 2 Lill. 23.

In a Homine replegiando it hath been adjudged, that it doth not differ from a common replevin, on which the sheriff must return a deliberari feci, or an excuse why he doth not: that where he cannot make deliverance, if he return an elongatus, the defendant is not concluded by that return return to plead non cepit: and after the return of an elungatus, and a capias in withernam, if the defendant pleads this plea, he shall be bailed, for the withernam is no execution: and after a defendant is bailed upon the capias in withernam, there may be a new withernam against him. And it was held, that in a homine replegiando after an elungatus returned, if the defendant comes in gratis, and calls for a declaration, and pleads non cepit, he shall not be obliged to give bail, but if he come in upon the return of the capias, he must give bail, and shall not be admitted to it till he call for a declaration, and plead non cepit. 2 Salk. 381.

The sheriff returned an elungavit in a homine replegiando, and then a capias in withernam went forth; afterwards the defendant, having entered an appearance, moved for a superfedeas to the withernam, and offered to plead non cepit; which was opposed, unless he would give bail to deliver the person, in case the issue was found against him: though it was ruled, that if any property had been pleaded in the party then the defendant ought to give bail to deliver him; but he says he hath not the person, and therefore non cepit is a proper plea, and he shall put in bail to appear de die in diem. In this case the defendant shall not be compelled to gage deliverance; and a superfedeas was granted to the withernam. See 4 Mod. 183.

A homine replegiando cannot be brought either by the wife herself, or by her prochein amy against her husband; and the nature and proceedings in the writ shew it to be so. Ch. Prec. 492.

This writ is now seldom used to deliver a person out of custody, being superseded by the more beneficial effects of the writ of Habeas Corpus. See that title.

HOMINES; A term applied to a sort of feudatory tenants, who claimed a privilege of having their causes and persons tried only in the court of their lord: and when Gerard de Camvil, Anno 5 R. 1, was charged with treason and other misdemeanors, he pleaded that he was Homo comitis Johannis, &c. and would stand to the law and justice of his court. Paroch. Antiq. 152.

HOMIPLAGIUM; Is used in the laws of Hen. 1. cap. 80, for the maiming a man. Si quis in domo vel curia Regis fecerit homicidium vel homi plagium.

HOMO. This Latin word includes both man and woman, in a large or general understanding. 2 Inst. 45.

HOMSTALE. A home-stall, or mansion-house. As in a charter granted about the 5 Ed. I. Corvill.

HOND-HABEND, See Hand habend. It also signifies the right which the lord hath of determining the offence in his court.

HONEY. All vessels of honey are to be marked with the name of the owner, and be of a certain content, under penalties; and if any honey sold, be corrupted with any deceitful mixture, the seller shall forfeit the honey, &c. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 8.

HONOUR, Is, besides the general signification, used especially for the more noble sort of Seigniories, on which other inferior Lordships or Manors depend, by performance of some customs or services to those who are lords of them; (though anciently honore and baronia signified the same thing.) See Skelman, in v. Honor. The manner of creating these Honours by act of parliament, may in part be collected out of the statute of 33 Hen. 8. cc. 37, 38.

In the early times of our legal constitution, the King's greater barons, who had a large extent of territory held under the crown, granted out frequently smaller manors to inferior persons to be holden of themselves; which do now therefore continue to be holden under a superior lord, who is called in such cases the lord paramount over all these manors: and his seignory is frequently termed an Honour, not a manor; especially if it hath belonged to an ancient feudal baron, or hath at any time been in the hands of the crown. 2 Comm. 91. c. 6. See title Tenure.

An Honour ought to consist of lands, liberties, and franchises. 1 Bulst. 197: 2 Rel. 72. l. 48. And it is the most noble seignory. Co. Lit. 108 a. One or more manors may be parcel of an Honour. 2 Rel. 72. l. 45. So a forest may be appendant to it. 2 Rel. 73. l. 3.

An Honour originally shall be created by the King. Co. Lit. 108 a. Every Honour must be holden of the King. R. 1 Bul. 195. And if it be assigned, or granted over to another, it shall not be holden of a Subject. For it may be granted by the King to a Subject. A man may claim an Honour by grant, or by prescription. But the King at this day cannot make an Honour by grant, without an act of parliament. R. 1 Bul. 195, 196: Co. Lit. 108 a. See Corvill title Honour.

The following is a list of Honours within the realm, viz. Amptill, (by Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 37.) Aquila, (formerly Pevensy) Arundel, (See post) Abergavenny, Boloine, Berkehamstead, Beaulieu, Barnard's Castle, Bullingbroke, Earsfable, Bononia, Brecknock, Bromber, Bulford, Clare, Crevecur, Clun, Christchurch, Cockenmouth, Cormyl, Candicut, Carisbrook, Clifford Castle, Chester, Carmarthen, and Cardigan, Donnington Castle, (by stat. 37 H. 8. c. 18.)—Dudley, and Dover Castle, Eys, and Egremond.

The Honour of East and West Greenwich, Glamorgan, Gloucester, Greatmeash, Gorwer, Grafton, (by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 38.)—Haganet, Hampton Court, (by stat. 31 H. 8. c. 5.)—Huntingdon, (in Herefordshire) Hovingham, Harwenden Castle, Hertford, and Hatton, Lancaster, Lincoln, Leicester, Lovetot, Hinckley, Kingston upon Hull, (by stat. 37 H. 8. c. 18.)—Kington, and Falkingham.

The Honour of Montgomery, Morvray, Middleham, and Maidstone, Nottingham, Newelton or Newelme, Oakhampton, St. Osib, (by stat. 37 H. 8. c. 18.)—Oxford.

The Honour of Plimpton, Peverel, Pickering, Raleigh, Richard's Castle, Skipton, Stafford, Snigul, Tickhill, Tienanton, Totmisi, Theenay, Tamworth.

The Honour of Wigmore, Wallingford, Westminster (by stat. 37 H. 8. c. 18.)—Wimbor, Wormgay, Whirwellton, (in Yorkshire) Werk, Wichechurch, and Warwick, Wibly, and Tutbury.

The King granted to a Subject a great manor, called an Honour, and passed it by the name of an Honour, and well. Jenk. 277. pl. 99.

It is illegal to purchase honour (as a dukedom) for money. Vern. 5. See title Pens.

At this day the Earl of Arundel only hath his Earldom by prescription, the beginning of which is not within the memory of any one; so that his Earldom is the most ancient in the realm. 1 Bulst. 196—See title Pens.

HONOUR-COURTS, Are courts held within the honours, or manors last noticed, mentioned in the stat. 33 Hen. 8. cap. 37. There is also a Court of Honour of the Earl Marshal of England, &c. which determines disputes concerning precedency and points of Honour. 2 Hawk. P. C. This court of Honour, which is also exercised to do justice to Heralds, is a court by prescription, and has a prison belonging to it, called the White Lion in Sustbawark. 2 Nelf. 935. See title Court of Chivalry.

HON

HONOURARY (or HONORARY) FEUDS, Are titles of nobility, descendible to the eldest son in exclusion of all the rest. See title Tenures.

HONOURARY SERVICES, Are those that are incident to the tenure of Grand Sergeanty, and commonly annexed to some honour. Stat. 12 Car. 2. 29.

HONTFONGENETHEF. Cum omnibus aliis libertatibus tantummodo hontfongenethef mihi retento.—Charta Wil. Comitis Matfeldensis. In Mon. Angl. 1 par. fo. 724.

This should have been written hontfangenethef, and signifies a thief, taken with bondhabend, i. e. having the thing stolen in his hand. Cowell.—See Backberind.

HOPCON, Signifies a valley, in Domesday Book; so do hope, hawgh and bough. Cowell. edit. 1727.

HOPS AND HOP-BINDS. Penalty on importing or using corrupt hops, stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 18.—No bitter to be used in brewing but hops, Stat. 9 Ann. c. 12. § 24.—No hops to be imported into Ireland from other parts but Great Britain, Stat. 5 G. 2. c. 9.—Landing foreign hops before duty paid, hops to be burnt, and ship forfeited, Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 19.—Penalty on sophisticating hops, 7 Geo. 2. c. 19. sect. 2.—Cutting hop-bines, 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. sect. 4.—By Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 37. sect. 6. Unlawfully and maliciously cutting hop-binds is made felony without benefit of clergy.—The duty upon hops is a branch of the Excise and regulated by many stats. made for the purpose.

HORA AURORÆ, The morning bell, or what we now call the four o'clock bell, was anciently called Hora Auroræ; as our eight o'clock bell, or the bell in the evening, was called Ignitegium or Corcorfeu. Cowell.

HORDERA, from the Sax. Horil, Thesaurus.] A treasurer: and hence we have the word Hord or Hoard, as used for treasuring or laying up a thing. Leg. Adelfran. cap. 2.

HORDERIUM, A hoard; a treasury, or repository. L. Canuti, c. 104.

HORDEUM PALMALE. Beer-barley, which in Norfolk is called sprat-barley, and battledore-barley; and in the marches of Wales cymridge, it being broader in the ear, and more like a band than the common barley, which in old deeds is called Hordeum quadragesmale. Cowell.

HORNE-BEAME POLIENGERS. Trees so called, that have been usually lopped, and are about twenty years growth, and therefore not tithable. Plowden, fol. 407: Schy's case.

HORNEGELD, from the Saxon word born, cornu, and geld, solutio] A tax within a forest, to be paid for horned beasts. Crompt. Jurist. 197. And to be free thereof is a privilege granted by the King unto such as he thinketh good. Cowell. edit. 1727.

HORN WITH HORN, or HORN UNDER HORN. The promiscuous feeding of bulls and cows, or all horned beasts, that are allowed to run together upon the same common. Spelman. To which may be added, that the commoning of cattle horn with horn, was properly when the inhabitants of several parishes let their common herds run upon the same open spacious common, that lay within the bounds of several parishes, and therefore, that there might be no dispute upon the right of tithes, the bishop ordains, that the cows should pay all profit to the minister of the parish where the owner lived, &c. Cowell.

HORSES.

HORNAGIUM. Horngeld; See that title.

HORNERS. No stranger was to buy any English horns gathered or growing in London, or within twenty-four miles thereof, by the Stat. 4 Ed. 4. c. 8. And none may sell English horns unwrought to any stranger, or send them beyond sea, on pain of forfeiting double value: the wardens of Horners in London may search all wares, &c. Stat. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 14. See title London.

HORS DE SON FEE, Fr. i. e. out of his fee.] An exception to avoid an action brought for rent or services, &c. issuing out of land, by him that pretends to be the lord; for if the defendant can prove that the land is without the compass of his fee, the action falls. Brooke. In an avowry, a stranger may plead generally hors de son fee; and so may tenant for years: and such stranger to the avowry, being made a party, is at liberty to plead any matter in abatement of it. 9 Rep. 30: 2 Mod. 104. A tenant in fee-simple ought either to disclaim, or plead Hors de son fee. 1 Davy. Abr. 655: Vide 9 Rep; Bucknall's case, 22 Hen. 6. 2, 3: Keilw. 73, 14: Aff. pl. 13: Co. Lit. 1 b: 2 Mod. 103, 104: & 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Hors de son fee. See title Pleading.

HORSE-BREAD, Inn-keepers shall not make horse-bread. Stats. 13 Ric. 2. stat. 1. c. 8: 4 Hen. 4. c. 25. Permitted to bake horse-bread, Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 41.

H O R S E S.

Were not to be conveyed out of the realm, without the King's licence, &c. on pain of forfeiture, by an ancient statute, 11 H. 7. c. 13. Persons having lands of inheritance in parks, &c. were ordered to keep two mares apt to bear foals thirteen hands high, for the increase of the breed of horses, on pain of 40 s. for every month they are wanting; and not suffer them to be leaped by stoned horses under fourteen hands, on a certain penalty by stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 6. And for the preservation of a strong breed of Horses, stone-horses above two years old are directed to be fifteen hands high, or they shall not be put into forests or commons, where mares are kept, upon pain of forfeiture; and scabbed or infected Horses shall not be put into common fields, under the penalty of 10 s. leviable by the Lord of the leet. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 13; still in force.

Stealing of any horse, gelding, or mare, is felony without benefit of clergy; but accessories to this offence are not excluded clergy. Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12: 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 33. The first made stealing horses geldings or mares felony; a doubt was entertained whether this extended to the stealing one horse, &c. on which the latter act was passed. And if any Horse that is stolen be not sold according to the statute 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 7; the owner may take the Horse again wherever he finds him, or have action of detinue, &c. To prevent Horses being stolen and sold in private places, this stat. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 7, provides, that owners of fairs and markets shall appoint toll-takers or book-keepers, who are to enter the names of buyers and sellers of Horses, &c. And to alter the property, the Horses must be rid or stand in the open fair one hour; and all the parties to the contract must be present with the Horse.—And by stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 12, sellers of Horses are to procure vouchers of the sale to them; and the names of the buyer, seller and voucher, and price of the Horse are to be entered in the toll taker's book, and a note thereof delivered to the buyer; and if any person shall shall sell a Horse without being known to the book-keeper, or bringing a voucher; or if any one shall vouch without knowing the seller: or the book-keeper shall make an entry without knowing either, in either of these cases the sale is void, and a forfeiture is incurred of 5 l. and the said statute provides that a Horse stolen, though sold according to the direction of the act, may be redeemed and taken by the owner within six months, repaying the buyer what he shall swear he gave for the same.

By stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 7. Any person maliciously killing or destroying any horses in the night shall be guilty of felony, punishable by transportation for seven years.—Maliciously hurting or wounding horses in the night, to forfeit treble damages to the owner.

Duties are imposed by stats. 24 Geo. 3. ft. 2. c. 31: 25 Geo. 3. c. 47: 29 Geo. 3. c. 49. or persons keeping Horses to ride or draw in a carriage.—These are now 10 s. for one horse;—5 s. additional (i. e. in the whole 15 s.) for a second horse;—7 s. 6 d. additional (i. e. 17 s. 6 d.) each for a third, fourth and fifth horse; and where six or more are kept 20 s. for each except the first.—The stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 79. excepts Horses bona fide used in husbandry, trade, and on particular occasions only; such as going to church, or market, or election for a member of parliament, &c. The said stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 31. allows horse dealers to be exempted from the tax on taking out an annual licence paying 10 l. in London, &c. and 5 l. elsewhere.—As to post boxes and the duty on them, See title Post.—As to Horses in Hackney Coaches. See title Coach.

Horse-stealing having got to a great pitch, and many of those useful animals having been stolen, merely for the purpose of selling them as dogs meat, and for their hides, the following statute was made to put a stop to this iniquitous traffick.

By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 71. No person shall keep any place for slaughtering any horse or other cattle, not killed, for butcher's meat, without taking out a licence at the general quarter sessions, to be granted upon a certificate of the minister and churchwardens that the person applying is proper to be trusted with the carrying on such business. § 1.

Such licence to be signed by the Justices at sessions, and a copy entered in a book to be kept for that purpose by the clerk of the peace, and all persons so licensed shall cause to be painted over their gates, their name and the words "licensed for slaughtering Horses pursuant to an act passed in the 26th year of his Majesty King George III." § 2.

Every occupier of such licensed slaughter-house shall, six hours previous to the slaughtering any live horse, or to the slaying any horse brought dead to the slaughtering house, give notice in writing to the after-mentioned inspector, who is to take an exact account of the height, age, colour and particular marks of every horse, &c. and keep the same in a book. [see act. 5.] And no such Horse shall be slaughtered or slay'd but between 8 in the morning and 4 in the evening, from October to March, both inclusive, and between 6 in the morning and 8 in the evening from April to September both inclusive. § 3.

Every person so licensed shall at the time any horse, &c. shall be brought, make an entry in a book of the name and abode, and profession of the owner, and also of the person who shall bring the same to be slaughtered or slayed and the reason why the same is so brought; which book shall, at all times be open for the examination of the inspector, and produced before any justice, when required. § 4.

The parishioners in vestry shall annually or oftner appoint one or more persons to be inspectors of such slaughtering house: And in case such inspector shall upon examination of any Horse, &c. intended to be slaughtered believe that such Horse, &c. is free from disease, and in a sound and serviceable state, or that the same has been stolen, he shall prohibit the slaughtering such Horse, &c. for not exceeding 8 days; and in the mean time shall cause an advertisement to be inserted in some public newspaper twice or oftner (unless the owner of such Horse shall sooner claim the same) at the expence of the occupier of such slaughtering house; who on refusal to pay the same, shall forfeit double the amount, to be raised by distress. § 5.

Every inspector may at all times in the day or night, but if in the night, then in the presence of a constable, enter into and inspect any place kept for slaughtering horses by licensed persons, and take an account of the Horses, &c. there. § 6.

In case any person offering to sale or bringing any Horse, &c. to be slaughtered or slayed shall refuse to give an account of himself, or of the means the same came into his possession, or if there be reason to suspect that such Horse, &c. is stolen; such person shall be carried before a justice of peace, who shall commit him for not more than 6 days to be further examined, and if such justice shall be satisfied that such Horse, &c. is stolen, the person bringing the same is to be committed to gaol to be dealt with according to law. § 7.

Any person keeping such slaughtering house transgressing the rules before laid down by the act, shall be guilty of felony and punished by fine and imprisonment, and such corporal punishment by whipping, or shall be transported for not more than 7 years, as the court shall direct. § 8.

Any such person destroying or defacing with lime, or burying the hide or skin of any horse, &c. or being guilty of any offence against this act for which no punishment or penalty is provided shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by fine and imprisonment and such corporal punishment by whipping, as the court shall direct. § 9.

Making false entries subjects the party to a forfeiture not exceeding 20 l. nor less than 10 l. to be levied by distress; half to the informer and half to the poor; and in case the offender shall not have effects to the amount of the penalty, he may be committed to hard labour in the house of correction for not more than 3 months, nor less than one. § 10.

The book of the inspector shall be produced at every general quarter sessions. § 12.

If any person shall occasionally lend any barn or place for slaughtering any horse, &c. without taking out such licence he shall forfeit not more than 20 l. nor less than 10 l. half to the informer and half to the poor; or be committed to gaol for not more than 3 months nor less than 1, unless the penalty is sooner paid. § 13.

This act does not extend to carriers, &c. nor to farriers, nor persons killing Horses, &c. to feed their own dogs. § 14.

HORSES.

If any currier, tanner, &c. shall under colour of their trades, knowingly kill any sound horse, or boil the flesh thereof to sell, such tradesman becomes an offender under the act, and shall forfeit not more than 20*l.* nor less than 10*l.* § 15.

[The forms of the several convictions are specified in the act.]

HORSES HIRED, Action of trespass on the case lies for abusing a horse hired, by immoderate riding, &c. And a difference has been made in our law between hiring a horse, and borrowing one to go a journey: for in the first case the party may set his servant, &c. upon the horse, but not in the second. 1 Mol. 210. See title Bailment.

HORSES FOR THE KING'S SERVICE. None shall take the Horse of any person to serve the King without the owner's consent, or sufficient warrant, on pain of imprisonment, &c. Stat. 20 R. 2. c. 5.

HORSE-RACES, For small sums, having encouraged idleness, and impoverished the meaner sort of people; it is enacted, that no person shall run any horse at a race, unless it be his own, nor enter more than one horse for the same plate, upon pain of forfeiting the baks; and no plate is to be run for under 50*l.* on the penalty of 500*l.* Also every horse race must be begun and ended in the same day, &c. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 13.

Horses at races to be entered by the owners, 13 Geo. 2. c. 19. Horse racing with horses carrying small weights, prohibited. 1*b.* Horses may run for the value of 50*l.* with any weight and at any place, 18 Geo. 2. c. 34 sect. 11.

A plaintiff shall not be allowed to recover a wager on such an horse race, as is illegal within the statute. 4 Term Rep. 1. A match for 25*l.* a side is a match for 50*l.* See this Dict. tit. Gaming.

The stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 31, imposes an annual duty of 2 guineas on Race-Horses.

HORSTILERS, Fr. Hofstellers.] Is used for Inn-keepers: and in some old books the word hostlers is taken in the same sense. stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 2. The executors of Hostlers are not chargeable, for their faults. 1 Kib. 682.

HOSPES GENERALIS, A great chamberlain.—Vocamus, quantum ad hospitium pertinet, omnes indifferenter nostro hospitali generali obediant, &c. Du Cange.

HOSPITALLERS, Hospitalarii.] Were the knights of a religious order, so called because they built an hospital at Jerusalem, wherein pilgrims were received. To these Pope Clement transferred the Templars, which order, by a council held at Vienne in France, he suppressed for their many and great offences. The institution of their order was first allowed by Pope Gelasius the Second anno 1118; and confirmed in this kingdom by Parliament, and had many privileges granted them, as immunities from payment of tithes, &c. Their privileges were reserved to them by Magna Charta cap. 37; and the right of the King's Subjects vindicated from the usurpation of their jurisdiction, by the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 43. Their chief abode is now in Malta, an island given them by the Emperor Charles V. after they were driven from Rhodes by Soliman the Magnificent, Emperor of the Turks; and for that they are now called Knights of Malta. All the lands and goods of these knights here in England were given to the King, by 32 Hen. 8. c. 34: See Men. Angl. 2 par. fol. 489: The Walsingham, in Hist. E. II: Stowe's Ann. 16. See title Knights Templars.

HOSPITALS

Are either Aggregate, in which the master or warden and his brethren have the estate of inheritance; or Sole, in which the master, &c. only has the estate in him, and the brethren, or sisters, having college, and common seal in them, must consent, or the master alone has the estate not having college, or common seal. So Hospitals are eligible, donative, or presentative. 1 Inst. 342. a.

The Master of the Hospital, who has college, and common seal, may have a writ of right; for the right, and inheritance is in him. If he has no college, or common seal, he may have a juris utrum. Co. Lit. 341 b: 342 a.

Any person seized of an estate in fee-simple may by deed inrolled in Chancery erect and found an Hospital for the sustenance and relief of the poor, to continue for ever; and place such heads, &c. therein as he shall think fit: and such Hospital shall be incorporated, and subject to such visitors, &c. as the Founder shall nominate; also such corporations have power to take and purchase lands not exceeding 200*l.* per annum, so as the same be not holden of the King, &c. and to make leases for twenty one years, reserving the accustomed yearly rent: but no Hospital is to be erected unless upon the foundation it be endowed with lands or hereditaments of the clear yearly value of 10*l.* per annum. Stat. 39 Eliz. cap. 5; made perpetual by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. § 1.

It has been adjudged upon this statute, that if lands given to an Hospital be at the time of the foundation or endowment of the yearly value of 200*l.* or under, and afterwards they become of greater value by good husbandry, accidents, &c. they shall continue good to be enjoyed by the Hospital, although they be above the yearly value of 200*l.* And goods and chattels (real or personal) may be taken of what value soever. 2 Inst. 722. And if one give his land then worth 10*l.* a year to maintain poor, &c. and the land after comes to be worth 100*l.* a year, it must all of it be employed to increase their maintenance, and none of it may be converted to private use. 8 Rep. 130.

If a devise be to the poor people maintained in the Hospital of St. Lawrence in Reading, &c. (where the mayor and burgesses capable to take in mortmain, do govern the Hospital) albeit the poor, not being a corporation, are not capable by that name to take; yet the devise is good; and commissioners appointed to enquire into lands given to Hospitals, &c. may order him that hath the land to assure it to the mayor and burgesses for the maintenance of the Hospital. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. See titles Charitable Uses, Mortmain.

A gift must be to the poor, and not to the aged or impotent of such a parish, without expressing their poverty; for poverty is the principal circumstance to bring the gift within the stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. Although at Common-law a corporation may be of an Hospital, that is in possession of certain persons to be governors of the Hospital and not of the persons placed therein: the safest way upon the stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5, is first to prepare the Hospital, and to place the poor therein, and to incorporate the persons therein placed; and after the incorporation, to convey the lands, tenements, &c. to the said corporation, by bargain and sale, or otherwise, between the Founder of the one part, and the master and brethren, &c. of the other part, in consideration of 5*s.* in hand paid by the master of the said Hospital, &c. 2 Inst. 724, 725. And the Founder Founder cannot erect an Hospital for years, lives, or any other limited time, but it must be for ever, according to the Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5. See 10 Rep. 17, 31.

The Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4, under which Commissions may be awarded to certain persons to enquire of lands or goods given to Hospitals; and the Lord Chancellor is empowered to issue commissions to commissioners for enquiring by a jury, of all grants, abuses, breaches of trust, &c. of lands given to charitable uses, does not extend to lands given to any college or hall in the Universities, &c. nor to any hospital over which special governors are appointed by the founders; and it shall not be prejudicial to the jurisdiction of the bishop or ordinary, as to his power of inquiry into and reforming abuses of Hospitals, by virtue of the Stat. 2 Hen. 5. R. 1. c. 1. &c. See this Dict. tit. Charitable Uses.

These commissioners may order houses to be repaired, by those who receive the rents; see that the lands be let at the utmost rent; and on any tenant's committing waste, by cutting down and sale of timber, they may accede satisfaction, and that the lease shall be void. Ibid. 11 Car. Where money is kept back, and not paid, or paid where it should not, they have power to order the payment of it to the right use: and if money is detained in the hands of executors, &c. any great length of time, they may decree the money to be paid, with damage, for detaining it. Duke Read. 123. See 4 Rep. 104.

The Hospital of St. Cross near Winchester, and several other large hospitals, were anciently founded by particular statutes, or acts of parliament. And King Charles 1. granted to the Mayor and commonalty of London the keeping of Bethlem Hospital, and the manors and lands belonging to it. Also there is now an Hospital in London for Foundling Children, under the care of governors and guardians, who may purchase lands or tenements to the value of 4000*l.* a year: and they are to receive as many such children, as they think fit, which may be brought to the Hospital and shall there be bred up and employed, or placed apprentice to any trade, or the sea service, the males till the age of twenty-four, and the females till twenty-one. They may likewise be let out or hired, &c. See Stats. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 29; 29 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 13; 30 Geo. 2. c. 26. § 14.—See also Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 82, regulating Lying-in Hospitals, and ordering them to be licensed. and further in general this Dict. titles Mortmain; Corporation &c.

HOSTIÆ, host bread, or consecrated wafers in the Holy Eucharist: and from this word hostia, Somner derives the Sax. byst, used for the Lord's supper, and bystan to administer the sacrament; which were kept long in our old Englsh, under boufel, and to boufal. Paroch. Antiq. 270.

Shakespeare uses the term unhosted, &c. in Hamlet; meaning that his father gave up the ghost, without having the holy bread, or sacrament, administered to him. See Fabian's Chron. edit. 1516. 10. 14.

HOSTILARIUS, An hospitaller.

HOSTILARIA, HOSPITALARIA, A place or room in religious houses, allotted to the use of receiving guests, and strangers; for the care of which there was a peculiar officer appointed, called Hostillarius, and Hospitalarius. Cart. Feod. Ely MSS.

HOSTRICUS, Austricus, from the Lat. astr.] a goshawk. Paroch. Antiquities, p. 569.

HOTCHPOT, In partem positio.] A word brought from the Fr. hotchpot, used as a confused mingling of divers things together, and among the Dutch it signifies flesh cut into pieces, and sodden with herbs or roots; but by a metaphor it is Allowing or mixing of lands given in marriage, with other lands in fee falling by descent: as if a man seised of thirty acres of land in fee, hath issue only two daughters, and he gives with one of them ten acres in marriage to the man that marries her; and dies seised of the other twenty acres: now she that is thus married, to gain her share of the rest of the land, must put her part given in marriage, into Hotchpot, i. e. she must refuse to take the sole profits thereof, and cause her land to be mingled with the other; so that an equal division may be made of the whole between her and her sister, as if none had been given to her; and thus for her ten acres she shall have fifteen, otherwise her sister will have the twenty acres of which her father died seised. E. 1. 55: Co. Lit. lib. 3. cap. 12.

This seems to be a right of waiving a provision, made for a child in a man's life-time, at his death, though as it depends upon frank marriage, and gifts of lands therein, it now seldom happens. See this Dict. tit. Parceners.

But there a bringing of money into Hotchpot, upon the clauses and within the intent of the statute for distribution of intestates' estates, Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. Where a certain sum is to be raised, and paid to a daughter for her portion, by a marriage settlement, this has been decreed to be an advancement by the father in his life-time, within the meaning of the statute, though future and contingent; and if the daughter would have any further share of her father's personal estate, she must bring this money into Hotchpot; and shall not have both the one and the other. 1 Eq. Ab. 253; See 2 Vern. 638. and this Dict. tit. Executor, V. S.

By the custom of London, there is likewise a term of Hotchpot, where the children of a freeman are to have an equal share of one third part of his personal estate, after his death. Preced. Canc. 3. See title London: & title Executor, V. 9.

There is also in the Civil law collatio bonorum answerable to this, whereby if a child advanced by the father, do after his father's decease challenge a child's part with the rest he must cast in all that he had formerly received, and then take out an equal share with the others. Cowell. See farther Britton, c. 72: Lit. f. 267, 268: 2 Comm. 190. 517.

HOUNSLOW

HOUNSLOW HEATH, A large heath containing 4293 acres of ground and extending into several parishes; so much thereof as is in the King's inheritance, and fit for pasture, meadow, or other several grounds, shall be of the nature of copyhold lands; or the steward of the manor may let it for twenty-one years, &c. and the lessees may improve the same. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 2.

HOUR, Hora. Is a certain space of time of sixty-minutes, twenty-four of which make the natural day. It is not material at what hour of the day one is born. Co. Lit. 135. See titles Age; Fraction; Time.

HOUSAGE, A fee paid for housing goods by a carrier, or at a wharf or key, &c. Shep. Epit. 1725.

HOUSE, Domus. A place of dwelling or habitation; also a family or household. Every man has a right to air and light, in his own house; and therefore if any thing of infectious smell be laid near the house of another, or his lights be stopped up and darkened by buildings, &c. they are nuisances punishable by our laws. 3 Inft. 231: 1 Danv. Abr. 173. But for a prospect, which is only matter of delight, no action will lie for its being stopped. 9 Rep. 58. See title Nuisance.

The dwelling house of every man, is as his castle; therefore if thieves come to a man's house to rob or kill him, and the owner or his servant kill the thieves in defending him and his house, that is not felony, nor shall he forfeit any thing. 2 Lit. 316. See title Homicide. A man ought to use his own house, so as not to damnify his neighbour: and one may compel another to repair his house, in several cases, by the writ de domo reparanda. 1 Salk. Rep. 360. Doors of a house may not be broke open on arrests, unless it be for treason, or felony, &c. H. P. C. 137: Plowd. 5: 5 Rep. 91. See tit. Arrest.

Several things have been resolved on the subject, as to the protection a man's house affords him, as, 1. That every man's house is as his castle, as well to defend him against injuries as for his repose. 2. Upon recovery in any real action or ejectment, the sheriff may break the house and deliver seisin, &c. to the plaintiff, the writ being habere facias seisinam or possessionem; and after judgment it is not the house of the defendant in right and judgment of law. 3. In all cases, where the King is party, the sheriff (if no door be open) may break the party's house to take him, or to execute other process of the King, if he cannot otherwise enter; but he ought first to signify the cause of his coming, and request the door to be opened; and this appears by the Stat. Wilm. 1. c. 17, which is only in affirmance of the Common-law; and without default in the owner, the law will not suffer a house to be broken. 4. In all cases, when the door is open, the sheriff may enter and make execution at the suit of any Subject, either of body or goods; but otherwise where the door is shut, there he cannot break it to execute process at the suit of a Subject. 5. Though a house is a castle for the owner himself and his family and his own goods, &c. yet it is no protection for a stranger flying thither, or the goods of such an one, to prevent lawful execution; and therefore in such case, after request to enter, and denial, the sheriff may break the house. 5 Rep. 91 a to 93 a.

From the particular and tender regard which the law of England has to a man's house arises in part the animadversion of the law upon eaves-droppers, nuisancers and incendiaries: and to this principle it must be assigned that a man may assemble people together lawfully (at least if they do not exceed eleven) without danger of raising a riot, rout, or unlawful assembly, in order to protect and defend his house, which he is not permitted to do in any other case. 4 Comm. c. 19. p. 223 cites 1 Hal. P. C. 547.

HOUSEBOTE, A compound of house and bote, i. e. compensatio; signifies estovers, or an allowance of necessary timber out of the lord's wood, for the repairing and support of a house or tenement. And this belongs of common right to any lessee for years or for life: but if he take more than is needful, he may be punished by an action of waste. Housebote, says Co. on Lit. fo. 41, is twofold, viz. Estoveriam edificandi & ardendi. Corwell. HOUSE OF CORRECTION. In every county of England there shall be a House of correction built at the charge of the county, with conveniences for the setting of people to work, or every justice of peace shall forfeit 5 l. and the justices in sessions are to appoint governors or masters of such Houses of correction, and their salaries, &c. which are to be paid quarterly by the treasurer out of the county stock: These governors are to set the persons sent on work, and moderately correct them, by whipping, &c. and to yield a true account every quarter-sessions of persons committed to their custody; and if they suffer any to escape or neglect their duty, the justices may fine them. See Stats. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4: 14 Geo. 2. c. 33.

The House of correction is chiefly for the punishing of idle and disorderly persons; parents of bastard children, beggars, servants running away; trespassers, rogues, vagabonds, &c. Poor persons refusing to work are to be there whipped, and set to work and labour: and any person who lives extravagantly, having no visible estate to support him, may be sent to the House of correction, and set at work there, and may be continued there until he gives the justice satisfaction in respect to his living; but not be whipped. A person ought to be convicted of vagrancy, &c. before he is ordered to be whipped. 2 Bulst. 351: Sid. 281. Br. dewell is a prison for correction in London, and one may be sent thither. Style 57.

By Stats. 14 Geo. 2. c. 33: 17 Geo. 2. c. 5, upon presentment of the Grand Jury, or under Stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 64, on presentment of any one justice, on view, the justices at Sessions may build, or purchase land for building, or enlarge, buy or hire fit Houses of correction. And the justices are to take care that the House of correction be provided with proper materials for relieving, employing and correcting persons sent to the same: And two justices shall visit the same twice or oftener in a year, and examine examine into the estate and management thereof, and report the same at the Sessions. The governor or master of a House of correction misbehaving himself, may be fined or turned out, at the discretion of the justices. Offenders liable to be sent to the House of correction, where the time and manner of their punishment is not expressly limited by law, may be committed until the next Sessions, or until discharged by due course of law.

By the said Stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 64. § 1, and the Stat. 24 Geo. 3. § 1, the Quarter Sessions may appoint certain justices to be visitors and inspectors of such houses.—The Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 46, regulates the appointment and conduct of the governor and other officers of such houses; as also the appointment of the visiting justices.—The above statutes contain also many other regulations as to such Houses of correction, a schedule of Rules and Orders for their government, as to employing and feeding the persons therein; and which rules and orders are to be fixed up in every House of Correction. See further titles Poor; Transportation; Vagrants.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.—An exclusive trade to a part of America, was granted in 1670, by Charles II, to the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudfon's Bay: They were to have the sole trade and commerce of and to all the seas, bays, straits, creeks, lakes, rivers and sounds in whatsoever latitude, that lie within the entrance of the Streight commonly called Hudfon's Streights; together with all the lands, countries and territories upon the coasts of such seas, bays and streights, which were then possessed by any English Subject, or the Subjects of any other Christian State; together with the fishing of all sorts of fish, of whales, sturgeon and all other royal fish, together with the royalty of the sea. But this extensive charter has not received any parliamentary confirmation or sanction. Reeves's Law of Shipping. See this Dict. title Navigation Acts.

HUE - AND - CRY,

HUTESIUM BY CLAMOR; from two French words Huer and Crier, both signifying to shout or cry aloud.] Manwood in his Forest Law, cap. 19. num. 11, saith, that Hue in Latin, est vox dolentis, as signifying the complaint of the party, and Cry is the pursuit of the felon upon the highway upon that complaint; for if the party robbed, or any in the company of one robbed or murdered, come to the constable of the next town, and desire him to raise the Hue and Cry, that is, make the complaint known, and follow the pursuit after the offender, describing the party, and shewing as near as he can which way he went; the constable ought forthwith to call upon the parish for aid in seeking the felon, and if he be not found there, then to give the next constable notice, and the next, until the offender be apprehended, or at least until he be thus pursued unto the sea side. Of this See Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 5: Smith de Rep. Anglor. lib. 2. cap. 20, and the Stat. of Winchester, 13 Edw. 1: Stats. 28 Ed. 3. 11: 27 Eliz. 13.

HUE - AND - CRY.

tumary, cap. 54. And it may probably be derived from barrior, flagitare. Hue is used alone in Stat. 4 Ed. 1. § 2. In the ancient records this is called Hutesium & clamor. See 2 Inst. fol. 172.

But the clamor de baro was not a pursuit after offenders, but a challenge of any thing to be his own after this manner, viz. He who demanded the thing did with a loud voice, before many witnesses, affirm it to be his proper goods, and demanded restitution. This the Scots call hutesium; and Skene saith, it is reduced from the French oyer, i. e. audire, (or rather oyez,) being a Cry used before a proclamation; the manner of their Hue and Cry he thus describeth; If a robbery be done, a horn is blown, and an out-cry made, after which, if the party flee away, and doth not yield himself to the King's bailiff, he may lawfully be slain, and hanged upon the next gallows. See Skene in v. Hutesium.

In Rot. Claus. 30 H. 3. m. 5, we find a command to the King's treasurer, to take the city of London into the King's hands, because the citizens did not, secundum legem & consuetudinem Regni, raise the Hue and Cry for the death of Guido de Arette and others who were slain. Cowell.

Hue and Cry, is also defined the pursuit of an offender from town to town till he be taken; which all that are present when a felony is committed, or a dangerous wound given, are by the Common-law, as well as by the statute, bound to raise against the offenders who escape, on pain of fine and imprisonment. 3 Inst. 116, 117: 2 Inst. 172: Dalt. Justice, cap. 28, 109: Fitz. Coron. 395: Cro. Eliz. 654.

The raising of Hue and Cry is enjoined by the Common law, which may be called a raising of it at the suit of the King; as well as by several acts of parliament, which may be called a raising of it at the suit of a private person. 3 New Abr. 61.

HUE AND CRY, says Blackstone, is the old Common-law process, of pursuing with horn and with voice, all felons, and such as have dangerously wounded another. Bract. l. 3. tr. 2. c. 1. § 1: Mirr. c. 2. § 6. It is also mentioned in Stat. Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 9, and 4 E. 1. de officio coronatoris. But the principal statute relative to this matter, is that of Winchester 13 E. 1. cc. 1, 4, which directs, that from henceforth every county shall be so well kept, that immediately upon robberies and felonies committed, fresh suit shall be made from town to town, and from county to county; and that Hue and Cry shall be raised upon the felons, and they that keep the town shall follow with Hue and Cry, with all the town and the towns near; and so Hue and Cry shall be made from town to town, until they be taken and delivered to the sheriff. And, that such Hue and Cry may more effectually be made, the Hundred is bound by the same statute c. 3, to answer for all robberies therein committed, unless they take the felon; which is the foundation of an action against the Hundred in case of any loss by robbery. By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13, no Hue and Cry is sufficient, unless made with both horsemen and footmen. And by Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16, the constable or like officer refusing or neglecting to make Hue and Cry, forfeits 5 l. half to the King and half to the prosecutor, with full costs; and the whole vill or district is still in strictness liable to be amerced, according to the law of Alfred, if any felony be committed therein, and the felon escapes. Hue and Cry may be raised either by precept of a Justice of the peace, or by a peace officer, or by any private man that knows of a felony. 2 Hal. P. C. 100, 104. The party raising it must acquaint the Constable of the vill with all the circumstances which he knows of the felony, and the person of the felon; and thereupon the Constable is to search his own town, and raise all the neighbouring vills, and make pursuit with horse and foot; and in the prosecution of such Hue and Cry the Constable and his attendants have the same powers, protection, and indemnification, as if acting under the warrant of a Justice of peace. But if a man wantonly or maliciously raises an Hue and Cry, without cause, he shall be severely punished as a disturber of the public peace. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. § 5.

As to Hue and Cry at Common-law, it seems to be clearly agreed, that a private person who hath been robbed, or who knows that a felony hath been committed, is not only authorized to levy Hue and Cry, but is also bound to do it under pain of fine and imprisonment. 2 Inft. 172: 3 Inst. 116: 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 404.

From hence it follows, that although it is a good course, as Lord Hale says, to have a precept or warrant from a justice of peace for raising Hue and Cry, yet it is neither of absolute necessity, nor sometimes convenient, for the felons may escape before the justice can be found; also Hue and Cry was part of the law before the Stat. 1 Ed. 3. cap. 16, which first instituted justices of the peace. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 99.

It is incumbent upon constables to pursue Hue and Cry when called upon, and they are severely punishable if they neglect it: and it prevents many inconveniencies if they be there; for it gives a greater authority to their pursuit, and enables the pursuant, in his assistance, to plead the general issue upon the statutes 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 12; without being driven to special pleading: therefore, to prevent inconveniencies which may happen by unruliness, it is most advisable that the constable be called: yet upon a robbery, or other felony committed, Hue and Cry may be raised by the country in the absence of the constable; and in this there is no inconveniency, for if Hue and Cry be raised without cause, they that raise it are punishable by fine and imprisonment. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 99, 100.

The regular method of levying Hue and Cry is for the party to go to the constable of the next town, and declare the fact, and describe the offender, and the way he is gone; whereupon the constable ought immediately, whether it be night or day, to raise his own town, and make search for the offender; and upon the not finding him, to send the like notice, with the utmost expedition to the constables of all the neighbouring towns, who ought in like manner to search for the offender, and also to give notice to their neighbouring constables, and then to the next, till the offender be found. 3 Inft. 116: Delt. p. r. c. c. 28: Comp. de Pace 178: 2 Hawk. P. C. 75.

The constable is not only to make search in his own vill, but also to raise all the neighbouring vills, who are all to pursue the Hue and Cry with horsemen, as well as footmen until the offender be taken. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 101. In case of Hue and Cry once raised and levied upon supposal of a felony committed, though in truth there was no felony committed; yet these who pursue Hue and Cry may arrest, and proceed as if a felony had been really committed. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 101: 5 H. 5. a. 21 H. 7. 28 a. 10 R. de. 2 Ed. 4. 8 & 9: 29 Ed. 3. 39: 2 Inft. 173: 2 Lanc. Hist. P. C. 102.

If Hue and Cry be raised against a person certain for felony, though possibly he is innocent, yet the constables, and those that follow the Hue and Cry, may arrest and imprison him in the common gaol, or carry him to a justice of the peace. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 102.

If the person pursued by Hue and Cry be in a house and the doors are shut, and refused to be opened upon demand of the constable, and notice given of his business, he may break open the doors; and this he may do in any case where he may arrest, tho' it be only on suspicion of felony, for it is for the King and Commonwealth, and therefore a virtual non omittas is in the case; and the same law is upon a dangerous wound given, and a Hue and Cry levied upon the offender. 7 Ed. 3. 16 b.: 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 102. See title Constable.

It seems in this case, that if he cannot be otherwise taken, he may be killed, and the necessity excuseth the constable. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 102. See title Homicide.

Upon Hue and Cry levied against any person, or where any Hue and Cry comes to a constable, whether the person be certain or uncertain, the constable may search in suspected places within his vill, for the apprehending of the felons. Delt. cap. 28: 2 Ed. 4. 8 b.: Comp. de Pace 178: 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 103. See title Constable.

But though he may search suspected places or houses, yet his entry must be by open doors, for he cannot break open doors barely to search, unless the person against whom the Hue and Cry is levied be there, and then it is true he may; therefore, in case of such a search, the breaking open the door is at his peril, viz. justifiable if he be there; but it must be always remembered, that in case of breaking open a door, there must be first a notice given to them within, of his business, and a demand of entrance, and a refusal, before doors can be broken. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 103. See title Constable.

If the Hue and Cry be not against a person certain, but by the description of his stature, person, clothes, horse, &c. the Hue and Cry doth justify the constable, or other person, following it, in apprehending the person so described, whether innocent or guilty, for that is his warrant; it is a kind of process that the law allows, (not usual in other cases) viz. to arrest a person by description. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 103.

But if the Hue and Cry be upon a robbery, burglary, manslaughter or other felony committed, but the person that did the fact is neither known nor described by person, clothes or the like; yet such a Hue and Cry is good as hath been said, and must be pursued, though no person certain be named or described. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 103.

And therefore in this case, all that can be done is, for those who pursue the Hue and Cry, to take such persons as they have probable cause to suspect; as for instance, such persons as are vagrants, that cannot give an account where they live, whence they are, or such suspicious persons as come late into their inn or lodgings, and give no reasonable account where they had been, and the like. 2 Ed. 4. 8 b.: 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 103.

There can be no doubt but that both by the Common-law, as also by the several statutes which injoin the levying of Hue and Cry, they who neglect to levy one, (whether officers of justice or others) or who neglect to pursue it when rightly levied, are punishable by indictment, and may be fined and imprisoned for such neglect, 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 104.

HUE AND CRY. 1.

We shall proceed to enquire more particularly, 1. On what robbery Hue and Cry may be raised, and how it ought to be pursued: 2. Of bringing the Action; at what Time; and the Evidence necessary; and what shall excuse the Hundred: 3. Of levying the Money.

1. The levying of Hue and Cry is enjoined by several acts of parliament, and to this purpose it is enacted by Stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 9, "That all be ready and appalled at the summons of the sheriff, to pursue and arrest felons."

Though some imagined that Hue and Cry was grounded on this statute; yet Lord Coke says, That it was used long before, as appears even by this statute, which, instead of introducing a new law, enforces obedience to that which was founded on the ancient laws of the realm. 2 Inst. 171.

By the statute of 4 Ed. 1. De officio coronatoris, Hue and Cry shall be levied for all murders, burglaries, men slain, or in peril to be slain, as elsewhere is used in England; and all shall follow the Hue and steps as near as they can.

Next came the Stat. of Winchester, the effect of which has been already stated.

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 2, it is enacted, "That the inhabitants and residents of every hundred (with the franchises within the precinct thereof) wherein negligence, fault or defect of pursuit and fresh suit after Hue and Cry made shall happen to be, shall answer and satisfy the one moiety of all such money and damages as shall be recovered against the hundred, with the franchises therein, in which any robbery or felony shall be committed, to be recovered by action of debt, &c. by and in the name of the clerk of the peace for the time being, or of in every such county, and recovery by the party or parties robbed shall be, without naming the christian name or surname of the said clerk of the peace; which moiety so recovered shall be to the use of the inhabitants of the hundred where any such robbery, &c. shall be committed."

It seems to be admitted, that no kind of robbery will make the hundred liable, but that which is done openly, and with force and violence; and that therefore the private stealing, or taking any thing from the party, does not come within the statutes which make the hundred liable, because the hundred is not liable for not preventing the robbery, but because they did not apprehend the robbers, which in private felonies, and of which they had no notice, it would be difficult, if not impossible, for them to do. 7 Co. 6, 7: 2 Salk. 614.

Also it hath been adjudged, and is admitted in all the books which speak of this matter, that a robbery in a house, whether it be by day or by night, does not make the hundred liable: The reasons whereof are, that every man's house is in law esteemed his castle, which he himself is obliged to defend, and into which no man can enter, to see what is doing there, without his leave; also being done in a house, the inhabitants of the hundred cannot be presumed to have notice of it, so as to be able to apprehend the offenders. 7 Co. 6 a. Sendil's case.

But if a person be assaulted in the highway, and carried into a house, and there robbed, it seems the hundred shall be liable; for otherwise the provision made by the statute would be eluded. 1 Sid. 263. and see 1 Salk. 614:

Vol. I.

7 Mod. 159. Also it does not seem necessary, that the robbery should be committed in the highway, nor alleged to have been so by the plaintiff in his declaration.

7 Mod. 159. It may be in a private way, or be in a coppice; and in both cases the hundred shall be chargeable. 2 Salk. 614. and vide Carib. 71: 1 Mod. 221: 3 Mod. 258: 1 Show. 60: Comb. 150. S. C.

It is clearly agreed that for a robbery committed in the night the hundred is not chargeable, because they cannot be presumed to have notice thereof, so as to be able to apprehend the robbers. 7 Co. 6 b: 2 Inst. 569: 3 Leon. 350.

But yet it is not necessary that the robbery should be committed after sun-rise, and before sun-set, for if there be as much day-light at the time, that a man's countenance may be discerned thereby, though it be before sun-rise or after sun-set, the hundred shall be liable. 7 Co. 6 a: Cro. Jac. 106: 1 And. 158: 1 Leon. 57: Savil 53: vide Carib. 71: Comb. 150: 3 Mod. 258: 1 Show. 60. S. P.

It hath been held, that if robbers drive or oblige the waggoner to drive his waggon from the highway by day, but do not rob or take any thing till night, that yet this is a robbery in the day-time so as to charge the hundred. 1 Sid. 263: 7 Mod. 159: Hutton 125.

If he that is robbed, after Hue and Cry, make no further pursuit after the robbers, action lies against the hundred. 4 Leon. 180. The party robbed is not bound to pursue the robbers himself, or to lend his horse for that purpose; but still has his remedy against the hundred, if they are not taken: tho' if any of them are taken, either within forty days after the robbery, or before the plaintiff recovers, the hundred is discharged. Sid. 11. When a man is robbed on a Sunday, on which day persons are supposed to be at church, and none ought to travel, the hundred is not liable. See stat. 27 El. c. 13. But where a robbery is done on a Sunday, tho' the hundred is not chargeable, Hue and Cry shall be made by Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7: And if a person be robbed going to church in a country town or village, on a Sunday, which is a religious duty required by law, it has been held an action lies against the hundred; but not if one be robbed on that day in other travelling for pleasure, &c. which is prohibited by statute.—6 Geo. 1. C. B. per King, chief justice.

And it was formerly ruled by three judges on the Stat. of Winton, where a man was robbed on a Sunday, in time of divine service, and made Hue and Cry, that the hundred should be charged; for many persons are necessitated to travel on that day; as physicians, &c. 2 Cro. 496: 2 Rol. 59: Godb. 280: See 2 Nels. Abr. 937, 938. A robbery must be an open robbery, that the country may take notice of it, to make the hundred answerable. 7 Rep. 6.

A man is set upon and assaulted by robbers in one hundred, and carried into a wood, &c. in another hundred, near the highway, and there robbed; the action shall be brought against the hundred where the robbery was done as particularly expressed in the statute, and not the hundred where the man was taken or assaulted; because the assault is not the efficient cause of the robbery, as a stroke is the cause of murder. 2 Salk. 614: 7 Mod. 157.

But where goods are taken from a man in one hundred, and opened in another; where they are first taken or seized,

HUE AND CRY. 2.

seized, they are stolen; and the robbery is committed. 2 Lill. Abr. 27.

By the Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16, no process for appearance is to be served against the hundred, &c. for a robbery committed, but on the high constable, who shall give notice of it in one of the principal market-towns, &c. and then enter an appearance, and defend the action. By Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 24, No person shall recover on any of the statutes of Hue and Cry, above 200*l.* unless the person or persons so robbed shall at the time of such robbery be together in company, and be in number two at the least, to attest the truth of his or their being so robbed.

And by Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 3. § 116, and 4 Geo. 3. c. 2. § 118, no receiver general of the land-tax, or his agents, can sue the hundred for a robbery, unless the persons carrying the money be three in company.

2. The general doctrine as to actions is as follows. Where a robbery is done on the highway, in the day-time, of any day except Sunday, the hundred where committed is answerable for it: but notice is to be given of it, with convenient speed, to some of the inhabitants of the next village, to the intent that they may make Hue and Cry for the apprehending of the robbers, or no action will lie against the hundred: and if any of the robbers are taken within forty days, and convicted, the hundred shall be excused.

In 3 Lev. 320, it is said, that upon search of the parliament roll it appears, that the statute of Winton gives only forty days to the county, and that the statute 28 Ed. 3. c. 11, is but a confirmation thereof; and accordingly it was adjudged good, where the plaintiff brought an action on the statute of Winton, and declared that he was robbed, and none of the robbers taken within forty days, according to the said statute, and with this the modern precedents agree, as Rast. Ent. 406: Co. Ent. 351: Hern. 215: Tbif. Brev. 141: 2 Salk. 376.

If a servant be robbed in the absence of his master, of his master's money, it is clear that the master may maintain an action for it against the hundred, but then the servant must make oath that he knew not any of the robbers. Cro. Car. 37. Also the servant being robbed in his master's absence, may himself maintain an action against the hundred, and may declare that he was possessed ut de bonis suis propriis, &c. And though the jury find that he was robbed of his master's money, yet shall he recover; for the servant is possessed ut de bonis suis propriis, against all, and in respect of all, but him that hath the very right. 2 Salk. 613-4: 4 Mod. 303: Comb. 263: 1 Sid. 45.

If a servant be robbed in the presence of the master, the master must sue; and the oath of the master is sufficient. 2 Salk. 613: Carth. 147.

There must be an oath, vide Carth. 145: 2 Salk. 613: 1 Shrow. 94: 3 Mod. 287.

Where a servant is robbed, he must be examined and sworn; but if the master be present, it is a robbery of him. Shrow 241: 1 Leon. 323. If a quaker be robbed, or a man's servant being a quaker, and either refuse to take an oath of the robbery, and that he did not know any of the robbers, the hundred is not answerable; for the Stat. of 27 Eliz. c. 13, was made to prevent combination between persons robbed and the robbers. 2 Salk. 613.

But the master's oath where the servant is a quaker, or otherwise, and being robbed in his presence, will maintain the action in his own name. Carth. 146. And a plaintiff had judgment on his oath, though his servant that was robbed with him knew one of the robbers. When a carrier is robbed of another man's goods, he or the owner may sue the hundred; but the carrier is to give notice, and make oath, &c. though the owner of the goods brings the action. 2 Saund. 380.

If A. and B. travelling together are robbed of a sum of money, to which they are both jointly intitled, they may both join in an action against the hundred; but otherwise if they had separate and distinct interests. Dyer 370 a. pl. 59.

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 11, it is enacted, That no person that shall happen to be robbed shall maintain any action, or take any benefit of the statutes which make the hundred liable, except the person so robbed shall, with as much convenient speed as may be, give notice of the robbery so committed unto some of the inhabitants of some town, village or hamlet, near unto the place where any such robbery shall be committed.

In the construction of this clause of the statute it hath been holden, That if a person be robbed in a highway in divisi hundredorum, he need not give notice to the inhabitants of each hundred, but notice to either of them is sufficient. Cro. Jac. 675, See Cro. Car. 41, 379: 1 Shrow. 94.

It hath been resolved, that though the notice given be five miles from the place where the robbery was committed, that it is sufficient; the reason whereof is, because that the party, who is a stranger to the country, cannot have conuizance of the nearest place or town. March. 11: and see 2 Leon. 82.

Also if the party robbed give notice with as much convenient speed as may be, though he be otherwise remiss in not pursuing the robbers, or refuses to lend his horse for that purpose, yet he shall not lose his action for this, nor the hundred be excused. March. 11: 2 Leon. 82.

Now by Stat. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. § 1, it is further enacted, "That no person shall maintain any action against the hundred, unless he shall, (besides the notice already required by the Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13.) with as much convenient speed as may be, after any robbery committed, give notice thereof to one of the constables of the hundred, or to some constable, borougher, headborough or tithingman of some town, parish, village, hamlet or tithing near unto the place where such robbery shall happen, or shall leave notice in writing of such robbery at the dwelling house of such constable, &c. describing, so far as the nature and circumstances of the case will admit, the felon, and the time and place of the robbery, and also shall, within the space of twenty days next after the robbery committed, cause public notice to be given thereof in the London Gazette, therein likewise describing, so far as the nature and circumstances of the case will admit, the felon, and the time and place of such robbery, together with the goods and effect whereof he was robbed."

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 11, it is enacted, "That the party robbed shall not have any action, except he shall first, within twenty days next before such action to be brought, be examined upon his corporal oath, before some justice of the peace of the county where the robbery was committed, whether he knows the parties that committed mitted the robbery, or any of them; and if, upon examination, it be confessed, that he knows the parties, or any of them, that then he shall, before the action be commenced, enter into sufficient bond by recognizance before the said justice, effectually to prosecute the same person and persons."

In the construction of this clause of the statute, the following points have been holden;

That if the party does not know the robbers at the time of the robbery committed, tho' he happens to know them afterward, it is not material. March 11.

It hath been adjudged, that the oath may be taken before a justice of the county, though not in the county at the time of administering it. 1 Jones 239.

As to giving bond for payment of costs, by Stat. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. it is enacted, "That, before any action commenced, the party shall go before the chief clerk, or secondary, or the filazer of the county wherein such robbery shall happen, or the clerk of the pleas of that court wherein such action is intended to be brought, or their respective deputies, or before the sheriff of the county wherein the robbery shall happen, and enter into a bond to the high constable, or high constables of the hundred in which the robbery shall be committed, in the penal sum of one hundred pounds with two sufficient sureties to be approved of by such chief clerk, &c. with condition for securing to such high constable or high constables, the due payment of his or their costs, after the same shall be taxed by the proper officer, in case the plaintiff in such action shall happen to be nonsuited, or shall discontinue the action, or in case judgment shall be given on demurrer, or a verdict against him."

Costs are always given in actions on the statutes of Hue and Cry, where damages are recovered. 1 Term Rep. 72.

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 9. The action is to be brought within one year after the robbery committed.

In the construction of this statute it hath been holden; That if a person be robbed the 9th of October 13 Jac. and so laid that the teste of the writ be the 9th October 14 Jac. that this is not pursuant to the statute; and that in this action, which is penal against the hundred, there is no reason to exclude the day on which the fact was done, nor to make such construction as is done in protections and the enrolment of deeds, which have always received a benign interpretation. Hob. 139. 140: Moor 878. pl. 1233: 1 Brownl. 156. S. C. Vide 1 Sid. 139: 1 Keb. 495.

An action was brought by the master, on the statute of Winton, for a robbery committed on his servant, in which he declared of an assault and battery done to himself, (though then 50 miles from the place), also that he made oath that he did not know any of the persons; the issue was entered of record, and the jury appeared at the bar ready to try it; but being for other business adjourned to another day, the plaintiff observing his mistake moved to amend, by declaring of a robbery on his servant, &c. and it appearing that the year in which the action must be brought was expired, and consequently the action must be lost if not allowed, the court, after long debate and consideration of former precedents, admitted him to amend. 3 Lev. 347.

It seems that, from the necessity of the case, the party himself that was robbed is to be admitted as a witness, but then his testimony must be corroborated by collateral proof and circumstances, and such as may induce a jury to believe that a robbery was actually committed, and that the party lost what he declared for. 2 Leon. 12.

By Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. it is enacted, "That in any action against any hundred, any person inhabiting within the hundred, or any franchise thereof, shall be admitted as witness for or on behalf of the hundred."

If an action against the hundred be discontinued, on a new action brought, there must be a new oath taken within forty days before the last action brought. Sid. 139. In action upon the statute of Hue and Cry, the declaration is good, though the plaintiff doth not say, that the justice of peace who took the oath lived prope locum where the robbery was committed. And oath was made before a justice of peace of the county where the robbery was done, in a place of another neighbouring county; and it was held good. Cro. Car. 211.

If a justice of peace refuse to examine a person robbed, and to take his oath, action on the statute lies against the justice. 1 Leon. 323. It is safe to say the plaintiff gave notice at such a place, near the place where the robbery was done; and though that place where notice is given be in another hundred or county, yet it is good enough; for a stranger may not know the confines of the hundred or county. Cro. Car. 41, 379: 3 Salk. 184.

If there be a mistake of the parish in the declaration where the robbery was, if it be laid in the right hundred it is well enough. 2 Leon. 212. And though the party puts more in his declaration than he can prove, for so much as he can prove it shall be good. Cro. Jac. 348.

Upon a trial in these cases, the party must file his original, and be sure to have a true copy thereof, and witnesses to prove it; and he must also have the affidavit or oath, and a witness to prove the taking it. 2 Lill. Abr. 25.

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 8. it is enacted, "That where any robbery is committed by two, or a greater number of malefactors, and that it happen any one of the said offenders to be apprehended by pursuit, to be made according to the statutes, that then, no hundred or franchise shall in any wise incur the penalty loss or forfeiture mentioned in the statutes, although the residue of the malefactors shall happen to escape." See 1 Vent. 118, 325: Raym. 221: 2 Lev. 4.

If Hue and Cry be made towards one part of the county, and an inhabitant of the hundred apprehends one of the robbers within another, this is a taking within the statute. 1 Vent. 118, 119.

By the Stat. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. it is enacted, "That no hundred, or franchise therein, shall be chargeable by virtue of any of the statutes, if any one or more of the felons, by whom such robbery shall be committed, be apprehended within the space of forty days next after public notice given in the London Gazette, as by the statute is provided."

3. By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 14. it is enacted, "That after execution of damages by the party or parties so robbed had, it shall be lawful (upon complaint made by the party charged) to and for two justices of the peace (whereof one to be of the quorum) of the same county, inhabiting within the hundred, or near unto the same where any such execution shall be had, to assess and tax rateably and proportionably, according to their discretions, all and every the towns, parishes, villages and hamlets, as well of the said hundred where any such robbery shall be committed, committed, as of the liberties within the said hundred, and toward an equal contribution, to be had and made for the relief of the inhabitants, against whom the party or parties robbed before that time had execution."

The constables, &c. are to levy the money and pay it over to the justices, and they are to deliver it over to the inhabitants, for whose use it was collected.

The same taxation is to be in cases where there is default or negligence of pursuit and fresh suit, for the benefit of inhabitants having damages or money levied on them, (See ante 1.)

By the Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16, already referred to, after judgment against the hundred, no process shall be served on the high constable or any inhabitant: but the sheriff on receipt of the writ of execution shall shew it gratis to two justices of the peace in or near the hundred, who shall speedily cause an assessment to be levied pursuant to the Stat. 27 El. c. 13 and also for the necessary expences of the high constable above the costs and damages recovered, of which, on notice from the two justices, he shall give an account and proof on oath to their satisfaction, having first caused his attorney's bill to be taxed. § 4.

The sheriff shall pay the money levied to the parties without fee, and indorse the day of receiving the writ of execution, and not be called upon for a return till sixty days after. And See Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. § 34.

And the like assessment shall be in case the plaintiff be nonsuit, discontinue, or have a verdict or judgment on demurrer against him, if by insolvency of the plaintiff or his sureties, he cannot be reimbursed on the bond of 100*l.* penalty; and the money levied shall be paid to the justices for the high constable in ten days after it is levied. § 7 8. of said Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16.

And the justices may limit a time not exceeding thirty days for levying such assessment; and the officer appointed refusing or neglecting to levy and pay the money, &c. in such time, forfeits double the sum. § 9, 10.

If there be judgment against the hundred, it may be levied against the inhabitants of the same hundred by fiat facias. So it may be levied upon any one, who has lands in his possession within the hundred, though he has no house nor lodging there; for he is an inhabitant. R. 2 Sav. 423.—Upon a lessee, or purchaser after the robbery committed R. Noy 155.—So it may be levied upon one or two of the inhabitants. But if a man come to inhabit in an hundred after a robbery done, he shall not be charged, R. Hutt. 125; Cont. per Buckley, Mar. pl. 28.

HUISSERIUM, A ship used to transport horses; derived, as some will have it, from the Fr. buis, i. e. a door; because, when the horses are put on shipboard, the doors or hatches are shut upon them, to keep out the water. Brompton Anno 1190.—These ships have been termed Ufers.

HUISSIER, An usher of a court, or in the King's palace, &c. See Usher.

HULKA, A hulk or small vessel. Walsing. 394.

HULKS, for felons; See title Transportation.

HUNDREDUM, Centuria.] A part or division of a Shire; so called, either because of old each hundred found 100 fidejussors of the King's peace, or a hundred able men for his wars. But more probably it is so called, because it was composed of an hundred families. It is true, Brompton tells us, that an hundred contains centum villas; and Giraldus Cambrensis writes, that the Isle of Man hath 343 villas. But in these places the word villa must be taken for a country family; for it cannot mean a village, because there are not above 40 villages in that island. So where Lambard says, that an hundred is so called, à numero centum hominum, it must be understood of an hundred men, who are heads or chiefs of so many families.

These were first ordained by King Alfred, the 29th King of the West Saxons: Lambard verbo Centuria. This dividing counties into hundreds, for better government, King Alfred brought from Germany: For there centa, or centena, is a jurisdiction over an hundred towns. See 1 Comm. 115: Introd. § 4.

In ancient times, it was ordained for the more sure keeping of the Peace, that all free-born men should cast themselves into several companies by 10 in each company. and that every of these ten men should be surety and pledge for the forth-coming of his fellows. For which cause these companies in some places were called tithings and as ten times ten makes an 100, so because it was also appointed that ten of these tithings should at certain times meet together for matters of greater weight, therefore that general assembly was called an hundred.—Lamb. Conf.

The hundred is governed by an high constable or bailiff; and formerly there was regularly held in it the hundred-court for the trial of causes though now fallen into disuse. In some of the more Northern counties these hundreds are called wapentakes. 1 Comm. Introd. § 4. p. 115: and See 4 Comm. c. 33.

This is the original of hundreds, which still retain the name, but the jurisdiction is devolved to the county-court, some few excepted, which have been by privilege annexed to the crown, or granted to some great Subject, and so remain still in the nature of a franchise. This has been ever since the Stat. 14 Ed. 3. f. 1. cap. 9, whereby these hundred-courts, formerly farmed out by the Sheriff to other men, were all, or the most part reduced to the County court, and so remain at present.

But now, by hundred-courts we understand several franchises, wherein the sheriff has nothing to do by his ordinary authority, except they of the hundred refuse to do their office. See West part 1: Symbol, lib. 2. sec. 228. Ad hundredum post Pascha, Et ad proximum hundredum post festum St. Mich.—Mon. Angl. 2 par. f. 293*a.*

An hundred is to have jurisdiction or power to administer justice in 100 vill, or of 100 men, or of 100 parishes. Br. Court Baron, pl. 8. cites 8 H. 7. 3. per Rede.

Every ward in London is an hundred in a county, and every parish in London is a vill in an hundred: 9 Rep. 66*b.*

HUNDRED.

Hundreds were either parcel of the counties, and there the sheriffs did constitute bailiffs, (viz. those hundreds which were anciently parcel of the farm of the sheriffs, that the statute 2 Ed. 3. c. 12, speaks of); or else they were such as were granted out, which the lord of the hundred sometimes held at farm, and sometimes in fee, called hundreds in fee, liberties of hundreds, franchises of hundreds. Vent. 405.

In the time of King Alfred the kingdom was in gross, and then divided into counties and hundreds, and all persons then came within one hundred or other; and then the King's relations had the government of them, and therefore they were called Confranguinei; (cousins) and so are the Earls, (Comites) Lord-lieutenants, styled at this day; but when the office became troublesome, there were ordained Vicecomites, (Sheriffs) which name remains to this day, and the others continue to be called Confranguinei, but have no power in the county, having only the honorary name of Earls or Comites of such or such a county, &c. For the better government of these counties, the Vicecomites had two courts; but out of those the King granted petty leets and courts-baron; but the tourn of the sheriff had yet a superintendant power, they being derived out of the sheriff's tourn. See Dyer 13.

The King afterwards granted away some hundreds in fee-simple, and some franchises, and the last excluded the King utterly, but the hundreds granted in fee were not wholly exempt. On this arose some contention, and the parliament hereon took notice, that the execution of justice was by this much interrupted, and therefore came the statute of Linc. 9 Ed. 2. st. 2; That sheriffs should be sufficient persons, and have lands in the county, and so be able to answer both the King and county, and that bailiffs and farmers of hundreds should be sufficient men. And at this time hundreds were grantable for years.

Then came the statute of 2 Ed. 3. cc. 4, 5; That sheriffs should continue but for one year. But this took not away the whole inconvenience: for the Crown still granted away bailiwicks and hundreds, for lives, at rents at such excessive dear rates, that made them endeavour to make up their money by unlawful means; and therefore came the statutes 2 Ed. 3. cap. 12: 14 Ed. 3. cap. 9. By the first it was enacted, That all hundreds and wapentakes granted by the King shall be annexed to the county, and not severed. And by the other statute, that all should be annexed, and the sheriff should have power to put in bailiffs, for which he will answer, and no more should be granted for the future; and one reason of this was, because the King granted away hundreds, and abated not the sheriff's farm. Ang. 2 Stow. 98, 99.

Hundreds are liable to penalty on exportation of wool, 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 28. § 8.—Liable to damages sustained by riotously pulling down buildings, 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 5. § 6.—By killing cattle, cutting down trees, burning houses, &c. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. § 7: 29 Geo. 2. c. 36. § 9. By destroying turnpikes, or works on navigable rivers, 8 Geo. 2. c. 20. § 6.—By cutting hop-binds; 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. § 4.—By destroying corn to prevent exportation, 11 Geo. 2. c. 22. § 5.—By wounding officers of the customs, 19 Geo. 2. c. 34. § 6.—Or by destroying woods, &c. 29 Geo. 2. c. 36. § 9.—So in cases of robbery. See title Hue and Cry.—So for the destruction of mines or pits of coal. Burn's J. title Hundred. See this Dict. under the several titles.

HUR

Inhabitants within the hundred may be witnesses for the hundred, 8 Geo. 2. c. 16.

The word hundredum is sometimes taken for an immunity or privilege, whereby a man is quit of money or customs due to the hundreds. Cowell.

HUNDRED COURT, Is only a larger court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred instead of a manor. The free suitors are here the judges, and the steward the registrar, as in the case of a court-baron. It is not a Court of record, and it resembles a court-baron in all points, except that in point of territory it is of a greater jurisdiction.

According to Blackstone, its institution was probably coeval with that of hundreds themselves, introduced, though not invented, by Alfred, being derived from the polity of the ancient Germans. See 1 Comm. Introd. § 4. and this Dict. titles County Court; Court Baron; Court Lieet; Constable, Hundred, &c.

HUNDREDORS, hundredarii.] Persons serving on juries, or fit to be impanelled thereon for trials, dwelling within the hundred where the land in question lies. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 6. And default of Hundredors was a challenge or exception to panels of sheriffs, by our law, till the Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16. ordained, that, to prevent delays by reason of challenges to panels of jurors for default of Hundredors, &c. writs of venire facias for trial of any action in the courts at Westminster, shall be awarded of the body of the proper county where the issue is triable. See title Jury I. II.

Hundredor also signifies him that hath the jurisdiction of the hundred, and is in some places applied to the bailiff of an hundred. See Stats. 13 Ed. 1. c. 38: 9 Ed. 2: 2 Ed. 3: Horn's Mirror, lib. 1.

HUNDRED-LAGH, from the Sax. laga, lex.] Is in Saxon the hundred court. Manwood, par. 1. pag. 1.

HUNDRED PENNY. Was collected by the sheriff or lord of the hundred, in oneris sui subsidium. Camd. and see Spelm. Gloss. Pence of the hundred is mentioned in Domesday. And it is elsewhere called, hundredfeh. Chart. K. Job. Egilii Episc. Heref.

HUNDRED-SETENA. Dwellers or inhabitants of a Hundred. Charta Edgar. Reg. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 16.

HUNGER. According to the present doctrine, Hunger will not justify stealing food, to relieve a present necessity. 1 Hal. P. C. 54. And the doctrine seems just, as (on conviction) a judge may respite and a King pardon, an advantage which is wanting in many States; particularly those which are democratical. The ancient doctrine, (that it would justify) if now in force, might open a door to many villanies. And, in this commercial state, those who can labour need not fear starving. Those that cannot, and who are poor, the laws have made a provision for. See 4 Comm. 31.

HUNTING. By stat. 1 Hen. 7. c. 7. unlawful hunting, in any legal forest, park or warren, not being the King's property, by night, or with painted faces declared to be single felony. And by Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, Appearing armed with faces blacked, or disguised, to hunt, wound, kill, or steal deer, to rob a warren, or steal fish, is felony, without benefit of clergy See titles Deer Stealers: Game: Black Act.

HURDLE, A sledge or Hurdle used to draw traitors to execution. See title Execution (Criminal).

HURDEREFERST,

HUR

HURDERFERST, A Domestick or one of the family, from the Sax. hyred, familia, and fæst, firms. Leg. H. 1. c. 8.

HURRERS, The cappers and hat-makers of London were formerly one division of the Haberdaßers, called by this name. Stow's Surv. Lond. 312.

HURST, HYRSI, HERST, from the Sax. Hyrst, i. e. a wood or grove of trees.] There are many places in Kent, Suffex and Hampshire, which begin and end with this syllable; and the reason may be, because the great wood called Andreswold extended through those counties. Cowell.

HURST CASTLE, Is so called, because situated near the woods. So Hurst is a woody place; and probably from thence is derived Hurstley, now, Hurley, a village in Bedfordshire. Cowell.

HURTARDUS, HURTUS, A ram or wether, a sheep. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. pag. 666.

HUS AND HANT, Words used in ancient pleadings.—*Henricus P. captus per querimoniam mercatorum Flandrie & imprisonatus, offert Domino Regi Hus & Hant in plegio ad standum recto, & ad respondendum prædictis mercatoribus & omnibus aliis, qui verius cum loqui voluerint: et dicitur si veniunt qui mancipiant quod dicitur Hen. HUSBAND AND WIFE, Are made so by marriage, and being thus joined, are accounted but one person in law. Lit. 168. See this Dict. title Baron and Feme.

HUSBANDRY AND HUSBANDMAN, There having been great decay of Husbandry and hospitality, it was enacted by stat. 39 Eliz. c. 1, now obsolete, that one half of the houses decayed should be erected, and forty acres of arable land laid to them, by the person, his heir, executor, &c. who suffered the decay: and they were to keep the houses and lands in repair.

The decaying of houses of husbandry prohibited, stats. 4 H. 7. c. 19: 6 H. 8. c. 5: 7 H. 8. c. 1: 27 H. 8. c. 22: 2 & 3 Ph. & Ma. cc. 1, 2: 39 El. c. 1. All now apparently expired or obsolete.—Wood not to be turned to tillage or pasture. stat. 35 H. 8. c. 17. § 3. Land to be re-converted to tillage, 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 5: 5 El. c. 2. repealed by stat. 35 El. c. 7. § 20. Who may be compelled to serve in husbandry, 5 El. c. 4. § 7.—How Husbandmen shall take apprentices. 5 El. c. 4. § 25. See titles Labourers: Apprentices. Arable land not to be converted to pasture, 39 El. c. 2: but not to extend to Northumberland 43 El. c. 9. § 32.—Obsolete.

HUSBRECE, from Sax. hus, a house and brice, a breaking.] Was that offence formerly which we now call Burglary. Blount. See title Burglary.

HUSCARLE, A menial servant: It signifies properly a stout man, or a domestic; also the domestical gatherers of the Danes tributes were anciently called huscarles. The word is often found in Domesday, where it is said the town of Dorchester paid to the use of huscarles or housecarles, one mark of silver. Domesday.

HYTH.

HUSCANS, Fr. hausrau.] A sort of boot, or buskin made of coarse cloth, and worn over the stockings, mentioned in the ancient Stat. 4 Ed. 4. c. 7.

HUSFASTNE, Sax. hus, i. e. domus & fæst, fixus.] He that holdeth house and land.—Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 10. See Heordfeste.

HUSGABLE, husgabulum.] House-rent, or some tax or tribute laid upon houses. Mon. Ang. tom. 3. p. 254.

HUSSELING-PEOPLE, Communicants; from the Sax. husel or hussel, which signifies the holy sacrament: See title Hofie.

HUSTINGS, hustlingum, from the Sax. hustinge, i. e. concilium, or curia.] A court held before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, and is the principal and supreme court of the city: and of the great antiquity of this court, we find honourable mention made in the laws of King Edward the Confessor: Debet etiam in London, quæ est caput Regni & Legum, semper Curia Domini Regis singulis septimanis die lune hussings sedere & teneri; fundata enim erat olim & ædificata ad instar, & ad modum & in memoriam veteris Magnæ Trojæ, & usque in hodiernum diem leges & jura & dignitates, & libertates regiasque consuetudines antiquæ magnæ Trojæ, in se continet: et consuetudines suas una semper inviolabilitate conservat, &c. Other cities and towns have also had a Court of the same name; as Winchester, York, Lincoln, &c. Flota lib. 2. c. 55: 4 Inst. 247: Stat. 10 Ed. 2. c. 1. See this Dict. titles Court of Hustings: London.
